HAGERTY: However, all of the doctors tell me that I should say, and I could say, that it would be wrong to use the word "critical" in connection with the President's condition. Now, that's as far as I can answer your questions at this time. As I say, they would prefer to wait on the upcoming examination and I would have a better idea and a better answer when I see you again this evening.

SPEAKER: Well, we can't say in the meantime that it's not serious?

HAGERTY: No! They just said that it would not be right to use the word critical in connection with it.

SPEAKER: At this time?

HAGERTY: At this time! On the question of surgery, I think I answered that myself at this last conference that I had when I said that the surgeons that were invited here as consultants on a precautionary basis (inaudible) surgeons and I think I've also said that there was a possibility but that's as far as anybody can go at this time.

DOWNS: Messages of sympathy have been arriving from all over the world and the country, wishing the Chief Executive a speedy recovery, and since the President's health is vital to the political life of this nation Democrats and Republicans also were following the developments closely. Last March, you remember, Mr. Eisenhower said he would not be in the White House job if he felt at any time that his health was not equal to the task, but he specified that he did not want to be pinned down on this statement by a minor illness such as a touch offlu or an upset. As to the seriousness of the present illness, we await the doctors' decision. As to what this present illness means to the President,'s personal and political future, only Dwight Eisenhower can answer that after his recovery.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower entered Walter Reed Hospital today for treatment of in intestinal disorder. For the latest on the President's condition we switch now to Washington and Bill Downs.

DOWNS: President Eisenhower tonight faces the possibility of major surgery to correct a partial blockage of the intestine. His doctors now are in consultation and the decision on whether or not to operate may come later tonight or in the morning. The latest word is that Mr. Eisenhower is resting comfortably in Walter Reed Hospital. As we both saw at the White House photographer's dinner last night, Ed, the President was having a whale of a time and he looked great. Comedian, Bob Hope, kidded him about his golf and he drew the biggest laugh when Hope quipped that Kefuuver is traveling so much that you can't tell whether he wants to be President or Secretary of State. Mr. Eisenhower gave a hearty wave when he left the dinner at about 11:00 p.m., but an hour-and-a-half later, Mrs. Eisenhower called Dr. Howard Snyder and said that her husband felt stomach discomfort. Thinking it indigestion, Mr. Eisenhower has suffered before. Dr. Snyder prescribed milk of magnesia. Some forty-five minutes later Mr. Eisenhower called the doctor again and the physician immediately went to the White House to stay by the Chief Executive's bedside.

Without drugs or pain-killers, Mr. Eisenhower catnapped during the rest of the night. He was given an intravesous injection of a sugar sulution to give him extra strength without taxing his digestive system. There was some pain and vomiting. White House news secretary James Hagerty announced at eight o'clock o'clock this morning that the President had suffered an upset stomach and a headache and was cancelling his appointments for the rest of the day.

Hagerty added that it had nothing to do with the President's heart. Then came another series of bulletins and the doctors' decision to take Mr. Eisenhower to the hospital as a precautionary measure. CBS News correspondent George Herman saw the President at one-forty this afternoon as he was carried into Walter Reed Hospital and said that he looked like a sick man and it is to be recalled that "old soldier" Eisenhower abhors stretchers and ambulances, but both were used today.

The Seriousness of the President's condition became evident when Major John Eisenhower left his post at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, some twenty five miles south of Washington, to join his mother at the hospital. The President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, also arrived from Pennsylvania State University. Then began the series of tests....electrocardiographs and X-rays. The diagnosis was eleitis, an inflammation of the intestine, suffered by the President before. The X-rays showed a partial blockage of theintestine, a condition often corrected by surgery. The most cheering news was that the President's heart was not affected, although the condition of the heart will have to be considered in event surgery is necessary. News secretary Hagerty later in the afternoon admitted that the President may have to be operated on. This decision will be made by some of the nation's top surgeons. They are: Dr. John Lyons, of Washington; Dr. Brian Blades, Professor of Surgery at the Geroge Washington University here, and Dr. Isador Ravdin, Professor of Surgery at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School in Philadelphia. Also summoned in the consultation is Dr. Paul Duldley White, Mr. Eisenhower's heart specialist, and here by recording is news secretary Jim Hagerty, reporting on the President's condition this afternoon.

HAGERTY: However, all of the doctors tell me that I should say, and I could say, that it would be wrong to use the word "critical" in connection with the President's condition. Now, that's as far as I can answer your questions at this time. As I say, they would prefer to wait on the upcoming examination and I would have a better idea and a better answer when I see you again this evening.

SPEAKER: Well. we can't say in the meantime that it's not serious?

HAGERTY: No! They just said that it would not be right to use the word critical in connection with it.

SPEAKER: At this time?

HAGERTY: At this time! On the question of surgery I think I answered that myself at this last conference that I had when I said that the surgeons that were invited here as consultants on a precautionary basis (inaudible) surgeons and I think I've also said that there is a possibility but that's just as far as anybody can to at this time.

DOWNS: Messages of sympathy have been arriving from oll over the world and the country, wishing the Chief Executive a speedy recovery, and since the President's health is vital to the political life of this nation, Democrats and Republicans also were following the developments closely. Last March, you rmemeber, Mr. Eisenhower said he would not be in the White House job if he felt at any time that his health was not equal to the task, but he specified that he did not want to be pinned down on this statement by a minor illness such as a touch of flu or an upset. As to the seriousness of the present illness, we await the doctor's decision. As to what this present illness means to the President's personal and political future, only Dwight Eisenhower can answer after his recovery.

And now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Here in New York, the Stock Market reacted with a selling wave that drove prices down 2 to 7 dollars a share. A rally marked the last half-hour of trading.

In London, word of the President's illness swept domestic news stories off the front pages of the evening newspapers.

In Paris, former President Truman said, "I am very sorry to hear this news. I do not want anything to happen to the President."

The text of the letter Soviet Premier Bulganin sent to President Eisenhower earlier this week was broadcast tonight by the Moscow radio. As predicted, the letter calls on the United States to match Russia's move in cutting its armed forces. Bulganin said that in demobilizing 63 divisions and separate brigades, including three air divisions, Russia would be disbanding 30-thousand troops in East Germany. He said that if American, British and French forces in Germany were also reduced, it would "unquestionably prepare the ground for more decisive steps -- for one thing, an agreement on the evacuation of foreign armed forces from the territory of Germany." The Bulganin letter states that, in accordance with the recent Russian decision to demobilize a million, 200-thousand men, the Soviet Union will also make comparable reductions in military spending and armaments. Bulganin said, "It is hard to count on the talks in the United Nations leading in the near future to any concrete results in the sphere of disarmament." However, Bulganin said, if every state should take concrete measures to reduce armaments, such steps "would unquestionably facilitate a further lessening of international tensions."

He argued that this, in turn, "would lead to the establishment of more favorable conditions for putting through an all-embracing disarmament program." In this respect, Bulganin said, "the example of the great powers would be of decisive significance." It became known today that messages.. similar to this one to President Eisenhower..have also been delivered to Great Britain, West Germany, Italy and France.

The House voted today to leave the question of continuing American aid to Yugoslavia up to the President. In his foreign aid program, Mr. Eisenhower asked for 30-million dollars in economic aid to Yugoslavia, plus a larger, undisclosed amount for military assistance. The House Foreign Affairs Committee has already cut the 30-million for economic aid in half. Representative Edna Kelly of New York offered an amendment today to cut off all aid to Yugoslavia, in view of Marshal Tito's reconciliation with Russia. On a vote of 123 to 95, the amendment was changed to aid can be continued, if the President feels that Yugoslavia is still an "independent" state not under Soviet control. The amendment was then approved in its new form, 183 to 3. Yesterday, the House refused to restore any of the billion, 109-million-dollar cut voted by the Foreign Affairs Committee in the over-all foreign aid program. Final House action on the measure is expected on Monday.

The House Veterans Committee approved a bill today to increase veterans benefits. One provision would give all needy veterans, 65 or older, a general pension of 105 dollars a month. Another provision would increase all compensation payments for death or service - connected disability by 10 to 18 percent. It was estimated that if the bill becomes law, the additional cost to the government in the first year would be in the neighborhood of 1-billion, 400-million dollars. After the first year, the cost would increase.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson said today that soil bank payments will be made this year on basic crop acreages damaged by drought or natural causes.

The White House last night made one of its rare corrections of a statement by the President. It was called "a clarification" of what the President had said Wednesday in discussing neutrals. In the news conference the President had gone out of his way to speak understandingly of neutralism. This is a fairly recent feature in Administration policy, and is a phase in our adjustment to the new direction of Soviet diplomacy.

The "clarification" did not retreat from the position Mr. Eisenhower took up on nuetrals. But he had said something about non-neutrals, about members of alliances. And this shook up the embassies of countries with whom we have security pacts. "If a nation has announced its military association with another country" the President said, "things could happen to it - difficulties along its border - and people would say: 'Good enough for it - they asked for it'."

This sounded like an admission that a country making a military alliance with us increased, rather than reduced, its danger. That set White House telephones ringing with disturbed inquiries as to what the President meant. The "clarification" was the result. It closed with the statement that the President "does not believe that association for mutual security with the United States will involve any country in added danger, but, on the contrary, will provide added security." It added that some great powers - not the United States - have shown agressive dispositions, and that military associations with them would lead to difficulties. In other words, the President was represented as meaning that while our military allies are safer because of their alliance with us, the Allies of the Soviet Union and Red China are not. But the significant thing about the correction is that it left what Mr. Eisenhower said about neutrality in full effect.

We are troubled in trying to understand neutralism by what Tito of Yugoslavia is doing in Moscow. He has gone a long way toward a full accord with the Kremlin. If we and our allies cut off our aid altogether, he will inevitably be pushed the rest of the way, and will be lost to neutralism altogether. We don't really know how much of the way the rest of the way really is. The House today gave the President a directive, he is to decide whether Tito has lost his independence. If he has, the aid is to end. That is reasonable.

We also don't know just what hs happening to Nasser of Egypt, who also is edging closer to the Kremlin. But if both Tito and Nasser should be abandoned to Moscow, the West stands to lose its leading role in the Middle East, which could be very costly indeed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is a matter of point of view in understanding countries that want to be neutral. In 1915, when the United States was disinclined to take sides, Woodrow Wilson could go so far as to say, "The basis of neutrality is not indifference. It is not self-interest. The basis of neutrality is sympathy for mankind. It is impartiality of spirit."

Goodnight and good luck!

June 11, 1956

Edward R. Murrow

[redacted]

This is the news:

President Eisenhower continues to make satisfactory progress, following his operation on Friday. The latest medical bulletin was issued at Walter Reed Hospital at 6 p.m., Eastern Daylight Time. It says: "The President's progress continues to be satisfactory. His pulse, blood pressure, temperature and respiration remain stable and essentially normal. He has slept a good portion of the day. He required little sedation." The bulletin goes on to say that in the afternoon Mr. Eisenhower again took a short walk... 20 feet to an easy chair and then, after a 15-minute rest, back to his bed. It was the President's second walk today. He walked the same distance this morning, at his own request. Tonight's medical bulletin ends with these words: "The doctors are satisfied with the day."

(more)

12

[redacted]

[redacted]

Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, set up a temporary headquarters at the hospital today, near the room occupied by Mr. Eisenhower. In the morning, Adams conferred briefly with the President on several matters, including an informal Russian invitation for the entire Joint Chiefs of Staff to visit Moscow for the Aviation Day ceremonies on June 24. The Air Force chief of staff... General Twining... already has accepted an invitation to attend the ceremonies. [redacted] Shortly after noon, Secretary Hagerty said that in conferring with Adams, Mr. Eisenhower had decided to turn down the infitation for the other Joint Chiefs. [redacted] Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower had concluded such a visit by all the Joint Chiefs of Staff would be impracticable at this time. The door was left open for acceptance of an invitation to them at a later date. Hagerty said the answer "at some subsequent time" would depend on prevailing circumstances and on what General Twining had to say on his return. The Russian Embassy, he said, has been informed that it is "not likely" more than two members of the joint chiefs of staff would accept for any given date. [redacted] He said, any acceptance would be with the understanding that the Joint Chiefs would be allowed to travel outside Moscow "for visits to those activities of special interest to their own services."

(more) 24

Hagerty emphasized that today's decision was made personally by the President, and that he was announcing it with the authorization of the President. He had said at the morning briefing that he would think it was right to say Mr. Eisenhower had "resumed his job".

36

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Washington today with Lester Pearson, the Canadian minister for external affairs. Possible steps for strengthening the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were discussed.

Tomorrow, Mr. Dulles will confer with West German Chancellor Adenauer. Adenauer received an honorary doctor of laws degree today at Yale University and... in a speech... warned the West not to be deceived by the new Soviet tactics. "There are no signs," he said, "to indicate that the disavowal of Stalinism means the acceptance of those spiritual principles which are the foundation of the free world." He charged the new Soviet leadership with pursuing the old goal---world domination.

(more) 46

In Congress today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a foreign aid program that gives President Eisenhower a billion, 100-million dollars less than he requested. It also denies the President the authority he wanted for long-term economic assistance. The final [redacted] roll-call vote was 273 to 122. [redacted] The [redacted] in the [redacted] Committee says he will [redacted] But other senators [redacted] not deep enough. The measure passed today merely [redacted] will have to be [redacted] expenditures. [redacted]

General Lemay asked a Senate appropriations committee today for an additional 3-billion, 800-million dollars for his Strategic Air Command. Senator Chavez [redacted] of New Mexico said that most of the increase [redacted] recommended by Lemay would be for stepped-up production [redacted] of aircraft, especially the B-52 all-jet bomber. General Lemay gave his testimony behind closed doors. The additional money would be spent over the next four or five years.

(more)

62

The Supreme Court wound up its current term today by handing down an unusual number of decisions. It ruled... in a 6-to-3 decision... that civilian dependents, who accompany military personnel overseas, are subject to military trial for crimes committed while out of the country. Also... 6 to 3... it decided that the Administration's employe security program does not apply to persons holding non-sensitive jobs. In other action, the Supreme Court made null and void a restraining order... issued by a Louisiana state court... to block the leasing of submerged oil lands in the Gulf of Mexico. And it rejected a Government complaint that Dupont has an illegal monopoly in the cellophane market.

(more)

72

[redacted]

In Paris, the newspaper France Soir today quoted Communist Party Boss Khrushchev as saying that Stalin murdered his second wife and was guilty of perversion. This is the same French newspaper [redacted] which first published excerpts of KHRUSHCHEV's speech before the Twentieth Party Congress denouncing Stalin.

An official Egyptian source said today that "new units for the Egyptian navy have arrived in Alexandria harbor." The brief statement did not [redacted] classify the naval reinforcements, nor give their origin. The warships, however, [redacted] are believed to have been purchased from the Soviet bloc. Two destroyers flying the Polish flag were reported recently in the English Channel. There was speculation at that time that they might be headed for an Egyptian port.

[redacted]

87

Swing June 11

¶ President Eisenhower's heart attack last September forced the country to pay belated attention to the gap in the constitution on what to do when a president is disabled. The House Judiciary committee held hearings on it this spring, the Senate Judiciary committee informally discussed it, and the Department of Justice studied the kind of legislation the Administration might recommend. Then by common consent, it seems, everybody dropped the issue, as being too political to handle till after the election. The President had satisfactorily recovered and it was feared that a debate on the disbility issue might be construed as a suggestion that he hadn't, and wasn't physically fit to run.

¶ Now once more the President's medical advisers--this time he surgeons--are giving the same assurance that the President will be well enough to serve a second term. So it remains to be seen whether Congress and the Justice Department will repeat the previous pattern, and again decide that the constitutional gap can't be closed without casting doubts on President Eisenhower's recovery,

¶ The validity of his recovery, of course, is not the issue. Any President is a health risk at any time, somewhat more so than the average man. If President Eisenhower should get over his abdominal operation in six weeks, and be playing golf by convention time. He still would be a risk, leaving his heart and ~~his~~ ileum altogether out of account. Twice before in our history, a President was unable to perform his duties for an extended time--Wilson because of a stroke, Garfield b because of an assassin's bullet--and policy-making on major issues had to stand still. This should not happen again.

¶ The constitutional gap should have been closed long ago. Had it been done at a time when the President was well, nobody would have said it was an unwise time to do it. Why should it become more unwise when a President, after recoverin g from a heart attack, has had to undergo an emergency abdominal operation?

¶ It is well to point out that the success with which the Administration kept an even keel a ter Mr. Eisenhower's September illness is not a guarantee that it always can be done. Last September Congress was not in session, and a heavy legislative program was not at stake. Foreign affairs were temporarily in hand, and no high-level talks were scheduled. Today the crisis over the legislative program is at its crest, with no one able to replace the President as an influence on Congress. Today the development of modern weapons has so changed military thinking that the three defense services are rocking the Pentagon with their differing views. Here the commander-in-chief alone has the authority to maintain equilibrium. What is even more serious, foreign policy is undergoing a basic revision due to the shifts in the power balance, and the new look in Kremlin policy. The revision cannot be made or applied without the President's full control. Meetings with Chancellor Adenauer, Prime Minister Nehru, Foreign Ministers Pearson and Pinaud, all are scheduled for Washington and require Presidential participation and oversight . Then there is an early meeting of Western Hemisphere presidents in Panama.

¶ I am not spelling out these presidential ~~heavy~~ responsibilities ~~weighing on the President~~ to suggest that Mr. Eisenhower should not bear them. He alone, of his team, is credited with the ability, prestige and personality to do so. I mention the obligations simply to show that the Presidency is an office that should not be left uninsured.

It is well to state over and over precisely what it is that the constitution omits in dealing with a president's disability. Most important, it does not specify who is authorized to decide when a President is disabled. It does not say that the office of the President becomes vacant if he is disabled. While it does say that the duties and powers of the office pass to the vice-president if the President dies, resigns or is unable to discharge his duties, it does not make clear that the office itself--as well as its duties and powers--go with it. The laws of the land have never satisfactorily decided what should be done if a Presidential candidate dies just before the election or if he dies just after election and before the electoral college meets. But obviously the key question is who is to decide a President's disability. Congressman Emanuel Celler, of the House Judiciary committee, is quoted as favoring a simple act of Congress that authorizes the vice president to decide by himself when a president is disabled. This presumes that the vice-president will NEVER be a rival or enemy of the President, and would never succumb to the temptation of abusing his authority. It is no reflection on any or all our vice presidents to say that Mr. Celler's proposals gives the vice president a frightening power. Other solutions suggested would let a committee of the Congress or a committee of Supreme Court justices decide ~~when~~ if a President is disabled. It seems that a full public discussion should produce a solution without undue hazards. And events ~~[illegible]~~ of ~~the last~~ recent months ~~and days~~ ~~sound false~~ (again, the last days can be construed as warnings against putting off the discussion.

~~Monitor Today~~

The Constitution neglects to say who shall determine the disability of a President. This is a point which should be discussed and clarified as soon as possible. For as Benjamin Franklin said, "Tis easy to see, hard to foresee." Homer said, "After the event, even the fool is wise." But by then it may be too late. Goodnight and good luck.

Bliss

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower continues to make satisfactory progress, following his operation on Friday. The latest medical bulletin was issued at Walter Reed Hospital at 6 p.m., Easter Daylight Time. It says: "The President's progress continues to be satisfactory. His pulse, blood pressure, temperature, and respiration remain stable and essentially normal. He has slept a good portion of the day. He required little sedation." The Bulletin goes on to say that in the afternoon Mr. Eisenhower again took a short walk....20 feet to an easy chair and then, after a 15-minute rest, back to his bed. It was the President's second walk today. He walked the same distance this morning, at his own request. Tonight's medical bulletin ends with these words: "The doctors are satisfied with the day."

Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, set up a temporary headquarters at the hospital today near the room occupied by Mr. Eisenhower. In the morning, Adams conferred briefly with the President on several matters, including an informal Russian invitation for the entire Joint Chiefs of Staff to visit Moscow for the Aviation Day ceremonies on June 24. The Air Force chief of staff..General Twining..already has accepted an invitation to attend the ceremonies. Shortly after noon, Secretary Hagerty said that in conferring with Adams, Mr. Eisenhower had decided to turn down the invitation for the other Joint Chiefs. Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower had concluded such a visit by all the Joint Chiefs of Staff would be impracticable at this time. The door was left open for acceptance of an invitation to them at a later date. Hagerty said the answer "at some subsequent time" would depend on prevailing circumstances and on what General Twining had to say in his return. The Russian Embassy, he said, has been informed that it is "not likely" more than two members of the joint chiefs of staff would accept for any given date. He said any acceptance would be with the understanding that the Joint Chiefs would be allowed to travel outside Moscow "for visits to those activities of special interest to their own services."

Hagerty emphasized that today's decision was made personally by the President , and that he was announcing it with the authorization of the President. He had said at the morning briefing that he would think it was right to say Mr. Eisenhower had "resumed his job".

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Washington today with Lester Pearson, the Canadian minister for external affairs. Possible steps for strengthening the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were discussed.

Tomorrow, Mr. Dulles will confer with West German Chancellor Adenauer. Adenauer received an honorary doctor of laws degree today at Yale University and..in a speech..warned the West not to be deceived by the new Soviet tactics. "There are no signs, he said, "to indicate that the disavowal of Stalinism means the acceptance of those spiritual principles which are the foundation of the free world." He charged the new Soviet leadership with pursuing the old goal--world domination.

In Congress today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a foreign aid program that gives President Eisenhower a billion, 100-million dollars less than he requested. It also denies the President the authority he wanted for long - term economic assistance. The final roll-call vote was 273 to 122.

General Lemay asked a Senate appropriations committee today for an additional 3-billion, 800 - million dollars for his Strategic Air Command. Senator Chavez of New Mexico said hhat most of the increase recommended by Lemay would be for stepped-up production of aircraft, especially the B-52 all-jet bomber. General Lemay gave his testimony behind closed doors. The additional money would be spent over the next four or five years.

The Supreme Court wound up its current term today by handing down an unusual number of decisions. It ruled...in a 6 - to - 3 decision that civilian dependents, who accompany military personnel overseas, are subject to military trial for crimes committed while out of the country. Also...6 to 3.. it decided that the Administration's employee security program does not apply to persons holding non-sensitive jobs. In other action, the Supreme Court made null and void a restraning order..issued by a Louisiana state court... to block the leasing of submerged oil lands in the Gulf of Mexico. And it rejected a Government complaint that Dupont has an illegal monopoly in the cellophane market.

In Paris, the newspaper France Soir today quoted Communist Party Boss Khrushchev as saying that Stalin murdered his second wife and was guilty of perversion. This is the same French newspaper which first published excerpts of Khrushchev's speech before the Twentieth Party Congress denouncing Stalin.

An official Egyptian source said today that "new units for the Egyptian navy have arrived in Alexandria harbor." The brief statement did not classify the naval reinforcements, nor give their origin. The warships, however, are believed to have been purchased from the Soviet bloc. Two destroyers flying the Polish flag were reported recently in the English Channel. There was speculation at that time that they might be headed for an Egyptian port.

President Eisenhower's heart attack last September forced the country to pay belated attention to the gap in the constitution on what to do when a president is disabled. The House Judiciary committee held hearings on it this spring. The Senate Judiciary committee informally discussed it, and the Department of Justice studied the kind of legislation the Administration might recommend. Then by common consent, it seems, everybody dropped the issue, as being too political to handle till after the election. The President had satisfactorily recovered and it was feared that a debate on the disability issue might be construed as a suggestion that he hadn't and wasn't physically fit to run.

Now once more the President's medical advisers -- this time the surgeons ---are giving the same assurance that the President will be well enough to serve a second term. So it remains to be seen whether Congress and the Justice Department will repeat the previous pattern, and again decide that the constitutional gap can't be closed without casting doubts on President Eisenhower's recovery.

The validity of his recovery, of course, is not the issue. Any President is a health risk at any time, somewhat more so than the average man. If President Eisenhower should get over his abdominal operation in six weeks, and be playing golf by convention time, he still would be a risk, leaving his heart and ilycum altogether out of account. Twice before in our history, a President was unable to perform his duties for an extended time --Wilson because of a stroke, Gerfield because of an assassin's bullet -- and policy-making on major issues had to stand still. This should not happen again.

The constitutional gap should have been closed long ago. Had it been done at a time when the President was well, nobody would have said it was an unwise time to do it. Why should it become more unwise when a President, after recovering from a heart attack, has had to undergo an emergency abdominal operation?

It is well to point out that the success with which the Administration kept an even keel after Mr. Eisenhower's September illness in not a guarantee that it always can be done. Last September Congress was not in session, and a heavy legislative program was not at stake. Foreign affairs were temporarily in hand, and no high-level talks were scheduled. Today the crisis over the legislative program is at its crest, with no one able to replace the President as an influence on Congress. Today the development of modern weapons has so changed military thinking that the three defense services are rocking the Pentogon with their differing views. Here the commander - in - chief alone has the authority to maintain equalibrium. What is even more serious, foreign policy is undergoing a basic revision due to the shifts in the power balance, and the new look in Kremlin policy. The revision cannot be made or applied without the President's full control. Meetings with Chancellor Adenauer, Prime Minister Nehru, Foreign Ministers Pearson and Pinaud, all are scheduled for Washington and require presidential participation and oversight. Then there is an early meeting of Western Hemisphere presidents in Panama.

I am not spelling out these presidential responsibilities to suggest that Mr. Eisenhower should not bear them. He alone, of his team, is credited with this ability, prestige and personality to do so. I mention the obligations simply to show that the Presidency is an office that should not be left uninsured.

It is well to state over and over precisely what it is that the constitution omits in dealing with a president's disability. Most important, it does not specify who is authorized to decide when a President is disabled. It also does not say that the office of the President becomes vacant if he is disabled. While it does say that the duties and powers of the office pass to the vice-president if the President dies, resigns or is unable to discharge his duties, it does not make clear that the office itself -- as well as its duties and powers -- go with it. The laws of the land have never satisfactorily decided what should be done if a Presidential candidate dies just before an election or if he dies just after election and before the electoral college meets. But obviously the key question is who is to decide a President's disability. Congressman Emanuel Celler, of the House Judiciary committee, is quoted as favoring a simple act of Congress that authorizes the vice president to decide by himself when a president is disabled. This presumes that the vice president will never be a rival or enemy of the President, and would never succumb to the temptation of abusing his authority. It is no reflection on any or all our vice presidents to say that Mr. Celler's proposal gives the vice president a frightening power. Other solutions suggested would let a committee of the Congress or a committee of Supreme Court justices decide if a President is disabled.

It seems that a full public discussion should produce a solution without undue hazards. And events of recent months and again of the last days can be construed as warnings against putting off the discussion.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Constitution neglects to say who shall determine the disability of a President. This a a point which should be discussed and clarified as soon as possible. For as Benjamin Franklin said, "Tis easy to see, hard to foresee." Homer said, "After the event, even the fool is wise." But by then it may be too late. Goodnight and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 12, 1956

This is the news:

The latest bulletin on the condition of President Eisenhower says, "The President's condition continues to be satisfactory."

Mr. Eisenhower walked about his hospital room again today and signed a number of government papers. He also received a first-hand report from presidential assistant Sherman Adams on the White House conference this morning with Senate leaders. Through Mr. Adams, the President asked Republican and Democratic leaders to try to restore the cuts which the House voted in his foreign aid program. The House cuts... mostly in military assistance... totaled a billion, 100-million dollars. Mr. Eisenhower wants at least 600-million dollars of this restored when the measure comes up for Senate action. Adams quoted the President as saying the reductions... if allowed to stand... would undercut the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. After the meeting, Senate

Democratic Leader Johnson said, "No commitments were asked for, and none was given." Johnson said that he and Republican Leader Knowland had agreed to give the matter full consideration. Democratic Senator George, who also attended the meeting, indicated he would work to have at least part of the money restored.

White House News Secretary Hagerty said tonight that President Eisenhower will be unable to attend the inter-American meeting in Panama, scheduled to start on June 25th. Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower would be "very happy" to consider a proposal to postpone the meeting, but... at the moment... could not suggest any exact date. The President of Panama has suggested that the conference be delayed three weeks.

~~Democratic Leader Johnson said, "No commitments were asked for, and none was given." Johnson said that he and Republican Leader Martin had agreed to give the matter full consideration. Democratic Senator George, who also attended the meeting, indicated he would work to have at least part of the money restored.~~

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters today that the latest message from Soviet Premier Bulganin to President Eisenhower is being studied by the appropriate Government agencies and will be discussed with our allies. Among other things, the message proposed a reduction of forces in East and West Germany. West German Chancellor Adenauer is in Washington, and doubtless this question... along with the question of German unification... is being discussed. Mr. Dulles said he had an "extremely useful" meeting yesterday with Lester Pearson, the foreign minister of Canada. But he emphasized that their talk was of a preliminary nature. Dulles told his news conference there is no difference of opinion between him and President Eisenhower on the question of neutral nations. (I should like to discuss this matter of neutrality further in a few minutes).

Representative Walter of Pennsylvania introduced a bill today to upset yesterday's Supreme Court ruling that the security program for federal employes does not apply to persons holding non-sensitive jobs. Walter's measure would make the Internal Security Act of 1950 applicable to all government activities.

The House Un-American Activities Committee... of which Rep. Walter is chairman... recommended today that singer Paul Robeson be cited for contempt. Robeson had been subpoenaed to testify concerning his passport difficulties. He told the committee he refused to sign an anti-Communist affidavit because that would be a "contradiction" of American rights. Later, in a heated exchange, he called members of the committee "bad Americans" who ought to be ashamed of themselves. The vote to recommend citation for contempt followed.

Frank Stanton, president of CBS, told the Senate Commerce Committee today that legislation to curtail the television networks would be "a colossal backward step". Senator Bricker of Ohio has charged that CBS and NBC have a "stranglehold" on the television industry. Stanton denied the charge... and urged the committee to measure every proposal for changing network practices in terms of effect on the public. It is only through "healthy and vigorous" networks, he said, that live television has been able to supply such a variety of information and entertainment. He cited the coverage to be given the national political conventions as a prime example.

→

The Democratic national chairman... Paul Butler... charged today that the White House has handled the reports on President Eisenhower's illness "in terms of propaganda". Butler told a news conference that in their medical reports, Mr. Eisenhower's doctors "are trying to make people believe that a man who has had a heart attack and been afflicted with Crohn's disease is a better man." White House News Secretary Hagerty said he would not "dignify" Butler's remarks by making a reply. Hagerty said he believes the American people are convinced that the medical reports have been "honest and completely factual."

Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey said today that auto sales... and employment in the auto industry... should be on the rise "in a relatively short time." Humphrey made the statement in testifying before a joint economic committee of the Senate and House.

Today... at United Nations headquarters... 13 of the 23 Asian-African countries voted, to bring the Algerian question before a special meeting of the Security Council. There is some doubt, however, that this will be done. Seven of the 11 council members will have to approve the move.

The British Home Office announced today that it had deported the Cypriot head of the Greek Orthodox Church in London "in the public interest." Greece has protested the action.

The deportation took place as a leader of the Greek Cypriot movement was arriving in London at the invitation of the Labour Party. The Cypriot leader told a news conference that "the first and only essential step" toward a resumption of talks on the future of Cyprus is the return of Archbishop Makarios. Makarios was exiled by the British in March.

On Cyprus tonight, a mine exploded under a truck carrying British troops. Three of the soldiers died. Seven others were wounded.

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables from London that the British are "visibly worried" by the news that the new Soviet foreign minister... Dimitri Shepilov... will visit Athens later this month. The British, Kendrick says, remember that it was Shepilov who engineered the Czech arms deal with Egypt... and they fear that his visit in Athens may spell new trouble for them on Cyprus. He points out that a Soviet deal to help the union-with-Greece movement would be in keeping with Russia's new penetration policy in the Middle East.

→

Red China has again proposed... and the United States again rejected... a meeting between Secretary of State Dulles and Communist Premier Chou En-lai. The United States accused Communist China of refusing to make a "meaningful" renunciation of force in the Formosa area. American and Chinese Communist representatives have been conferring, off and on, in Geneva ever since last summer. One of the subjects under discussion has been this matter of use of force. The United States has also been trying to get the release of American civilians still held by the Chinese Reds.

Edward R. Murrow: June 12, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

When a national policy is changing, a certain amount of "wobble" is to be expected. This, and this alone, would seem to explain the back-and-forth pronouncements of President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles on neutrality. The policy on neutrality is changing. We used to look down on any and all neutralism. Now that the threat of major military aggression by the Soviet Union appears to be lessening, we no longer do. That, in effect, is what the President was saying in his news conference last week. It happens that the President himself wobbled. He said more than he intended, and seemed to be throwing doubt on the safety of our allies, in joining defense pacts with us. This was corrected in a White House "clarification". But the policy toward neutralism, as the President left it, is to show respect for neutrality, so long as it does not mean indifference to right and wrong.

Then Secretary Dulles had his say, and he sounded quite different. Our treaties with forty-two allies, he said, "abolish between the parties, the principle of neutrality, which pretends that a nation can best gain safety for itself, by being indifferent to the fate of others. This", he went on, "has increasingly become an obsolete conception and, except under very exceptional circumstances, it is an immoral and short-sighted conception."

At his news conference today Mr. Dulles was confronted with the difference between his words and those of the President. The usually voluble Secretary took refuge in uninformative brevity. There was no difference, he said. He had talked with the President, and his and the President's views were the same. He declined to explain how they were the same, or to supply details about his talk with the President.

The President's statement on Wednesday had set White House phones ringing with calls from some of our allies asking what the President meant. (Which is what produced the White House clarification.) Mr. Dulles's speech, in its turn, has agitated neutral diplomats in Washington. They want to know what American policy really is. Ambassador Mehta of India was making formal inquiry about it at the State Department this afternoon.

It hardly needs saying that President Eisenhower believes in collective security and the United Nations. It also hardly needs saying that a nation that accepts the United Nations charter is pledged not to be indifferent to issues of right and wrong, or to the fate of other nations. So what the President and the Secretary said obviously starts with this agreement. But having started with it, it needed an exceptional gift for misjudging the effect of one's words for Mr. Dulles to sound at odds with the President. The discrepancy rang around the world. Europe and Asia had rejoiced in the President's statement, they were frightened or dismayed by the Secretary's address.

It may be, as I suggest, that there is no basic difference between Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles, but there is a whale of a difference in their art in showing sympathy for the views of others, an art which Mr. Eisenhower possesses to a marked degree. After all, the neutrals whom Mr. Dulles appeared to be excoriating number, in Europe, countries like Sweden, Switzerland, Ireland, Austria and Finland; in the East, India, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia; and all Arab states other than Iraq, not to mention some doubtful countries in Latin America. All of them have reason to feel troubled by Mr. Dulles' version of our policy.

Since other basic United States policies are changing, more wobbling is to be expected. This may have been the observation of Canada's foreign secretary Lester Pearson, after talking with Mr. Dulles about strengthening NATO. Mr. Dulles is sparking a move within NATO to turn the military alliance into an effective consultative body, covering a wide political field. Mr. Pearson is one of the three "wise men" assigned to study how NATO might be strengthened and expanded. He himself is sympathetic to the idea of an Atlantic community. He must have been asking Mr. Dulles some searching questions, though no report of them, or the answers, has been made.

If NATO is to become political as well as military, there would have to be unprecedented co-ordination between the foreign policies of all its partners. There might even have to be an abridgement of national sovereignty. One can imagine Mr. Dulles saying over and over again: "You can't ask us to commit ourselves on that in an election year."

Mr. Pearson, having heard Mr. Dulles at the last NATO council meeting, may think such an answer is a kind of a wobble. But Mr. Pearson would not be surprised by it. He knows this country as well as any foreign secretary living, and he knows how an election can paralyze the executive in a democracy. And being one of NATO's wise men he has to know how to wait, even if he is not sure that there is much time.

George Bryan-

Word for Today

Mr. Lester Pearson may have to wait until after November for an American commitment on expanding the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The old English proverb says, "Everything comes to him who waits." But there is also a French proverb, and it says, "People count up the faults of those who keep them waiting."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The latest bulletin on the condition of President Eisenhower says, "The President's condition continues to be satisfactory."

Mr. Eisenhower walked about his hospital room again today and signed a number of government papers. He also received a first hand report from presidential assistant Sherman Adams on the White House conference this morning with Senate leaders. Through Mr. Adams, the President asked Republican and Democratic leaders to try to restore the cuts which the House voted in his foreign aid program. The House cuts..mostly in military assistance...totaled a billion, 100-million dollars. Mr. Eisenhower wants at least 600-million dollars of thi restored when the measure comes up for Senate action. Adams quoted the President as saying the reductions..if allowed to stand..would undercut the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. After the meeting, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said, "No commitments were asked for, and none was given." Johnson said that he and Republican Leader Knowland had agreee to give the matter full consideration. Democratic Senator George, who also attended the meeting, indicated he would work to have at least part of the money restored.

White House News Secretary Hagerty said tonight that President Eisenhower will be unable to attend the inter-American meeting in Panama, scheduled to start on June 25th. Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower would be "very happy" to consider a proposal to postpone the meeting, but..at the moment...could now suggest any exact date. The President of Panama has suggested that the conference be delayed three weeks.

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters today that the latest message from Soviet Premier Bulganin to President Eisenhower is being studied by the appropriate Government agencies and will be discussed with our allies. Among other things, the message proposed a reduction of forces in East and West Germany. West German Chancellor Adenauer is in Washington, and doubtless this question...along with the question of German unification..is being discussed. Mr. Dulles said he had an "extremely useful" meeting yesterday with Lester Pearson, the Foreign minister of Canada. But he emphasized that their talk was of a preliminary nature. Dulles told his news conference there is no difference of opinion between him and President Eisenhower on the question of neutral nations. (I should like to discuss this matter of neutrality further in a few minutes.)

The House Un-American Activities Committee..of which Representative Walter is chairman...recommended today that Singer Paul Robeson be cited for contempt. Robeson had been subpoenaed to testify concerning his passport difficulties. He told the committee he refused to sign an anti-Communist affidavit because that would be a "contradiction" of American rights. Later, in a heated exchange, he called members of the committee "bad Americans " who ought to be ashamed of themselves. The vote to recommend citation for contempt followed.

Frank Stanton, president of CBS, told the Senate Commerce Committee today that legislation to curtail the television networks would be "a collossal backward step". Senator Bricker of Ohio has charged that CBS and NBC have a "stranglehold" on the television industry. Stanton denied the charge..and ueged the committee to measure every proposal for changing network practices in terms of effect on the public. It is only through "healthy and vigorous" networks, he said, that live television has been able to supply such a variety of information and entertainment. He cited the coverage to be given to the national political conventions as a prime example.

The Democratic national chairman...Paul Butler..charged today that the White House has charged the reports on President Eisenhower's illness "in terms of propaganda". Butler told a news donference that in their medical reports, Mr. Eisenhower's doctors "are trying to make people believe that a man who has had a heart attack and been afflicted with Crohn's disease is a better man." White House News Secretary Hagerty said he would not "dignity" Butler's remarks by making a reply. Hagerty said he believes the American people are convinced that he medical reports have been "honest and completely factual."

Today, at United Nations headquarters....13 of the 23 Asian-African countries voted, to bring the Algerian question before a special meeting of the Security Council. There is some doubt, however, that this will be done. Seven of the 11 council members will have to approve the move.

The British Home Office announced today that it had deported the Cypriot head of the Greek Orthodox Church in London "in the public interest". Greece has protested this action.

On Cyprus tonight, a mine exploded under a truck carrying British troops. Three of the soldiers died. Seven others were wounded.

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables from London that the British are "visibly worried" by the news thet the new Soviet foreign minister.. Dimitri Shepilov..will visit Athens later this month. The British, Kendrick says, remember that it was Shepilov who engineered the Czech arms deal with Egypt.. and they fear that his visit tn Athens may spell new trouble for them on Cyprus. He points out that a Soviet de l to help the union-with-Greece movement would be in keeping with Russia's new penetration policy in the Middle East.

When a national poli y is changing, a certain amount of "wobble" is to be expected. This, and this alone. would seem to explain the back and forth pronouncements of President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles on neutrality. The policy on neutrality is changing. We used to look down on any and all neutralism. Now that the threat of major military aggression by the Soviet Union appears to be lessening, we no longer do. That, in effect, is what the President was saying in his news conference last week. It happens that the President himself wobbled. He said more than he intended, and seemed to be throwing doubt on the safety of our allies in joining defense pacts to be throwing doubt on the safety of our allies in joining defense pacts with us. This was corrected in a White House "clarification". But the policy toward neutralism, as the President left it, is to show respect for neutrality so long as it does not mean indifference to right and wrong.

Then Secretary Dulles had his say, and he sounded quite different. Our treaties with forty-two allies, he said, "abolish between the parties, the principle of neutrality, which pretends that a nation can best gain safety for itself by being indifferent to the fate of others. "This", he went on, "has increasingly become an obsolete conception and, except under very exceptional circumstances, it is an immoral and short-sighted conception."

At his news conference today Mr. Dulles was confronted with the differences between his words and those of the President. The usually voluble Secretary took refuge in uninformative brevity. There was no difference, he said. He had talked with the President, and his and the President's views were the same. He declined to explain how they were the same, or to supply details about his talk with the President.

The President's statement on Wednesday had set White House phones ringing with calls from some or our allies asking what the President meant. (Which is what produced the White House clarification.) Mr. Dulles's speech, in its turn, has agitated neutral diplomats in Washington. They want to know what American policy really is. Ambassador Mehta of India was making formal inquiry about it at the State Department this afternoon.

It hardly needs saying that President Eisenhower believes in collective security and the United Nations. It also hardly needs saying that a nation that accepts the United Nations charter is pledged not to be indifferent to issues of right and wrong, or to the fate of other nations. So what the President and Secretary said obviously starts with this agreement. But having started with it, it needed an exceptional gift for misjudging the effect of one's words for Mr. Dulles to sound at odds with the President. The discrepancy rang around the world. Europe and Asia had rejoiced in the President's statement, they were frightened or dismayed by the Secretary's address.

It may be, as I suggest, that there is no basic difference between Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles, but there is a whale of a difference in their art in showing sympathy for the views of others, an art whihh Mr. Eisenhower possesses to a marked degree. After all, the neutrals whom Mr. Dulles appeared to be excoriating, number, in Europe, countries like Sweden, Switzerland, Ireland, Austria and Finalnd; in the East, India, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia; and all Arab states other than Iraq, not to mention some doubtful countries in Latin America. All of them have reason to feel troubled by Mr. Dulles's version of our policy.

Since other basic United States policies are changing, more wobbling is to be expected. This may have been the observation of Canada's foreign secretary Lester Pearson, after talking with Mr. Dulles about strengthening NATO. Mr. Dulles is sparking a move within NATO to turn the military alliance into an effective consultive body, covering a wide political field. Mr. Pearson is one of the three "wise men" assigned to study how NATO might be strengthened and expanded. He himself is sympathetic to the idea of an Atlantic Community. He must have been asking Mr. Dulles some searching questions, though no report of them, or the answers, has been made.

If NATO is to become politcaal as well as military, there would have to be unprecedented co-ordination between the foreign policies of all its partners There might hven have to be an abridgement of national sovereignty. One can imagine Mr. Dulles saying over and over again: "You can't ask us to commit ourselves on that in an election year."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Lester Pearson may have to wait until after November for an American commitment on expanding the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The old English proberb says, "Everything comes to him who waits." But there is also a French proverb, and it says, "People count up the faults of those who keep them waiting."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 13, 1956

This is the news:

A joint communique has been issued, summing up the talks between West German Chancellor Adenauer and Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. The communique notes that Soviet Russia has professed a desire to find a basis for peaceful coexistence with the free world. # It says Russia can demonstrate the sincerity of this profession by respecting its international obligations and by not trying "to impose its system upon other peoples." The communique recalls that last summer... at the summit conference... Russia and the western powers recognized a common responsibility for uniting Germany through free elections. It adds, "Until the Soviet government has taken action to discharge that responsibility, and to put an end to the brutal and unnatural division which it has imposed on Germany, it will be difficult to place credence in promises and pledges of the Soviet government."

→

The communique then reaffirmed the desire of the West to work out with Russia arrangements for insuring European security along with German reunification. Dulles and Adenauer also agreed on the need "for developing further the relations among members of the North Atlantic alliance and for harmonizing their policies and actions."

President Eisenhower's condition "continues to be satisfactory," and the doctors have given him permission to confer with Chancellor Adenauer tomorrow in his hospital room. The latest medical bulletin says the uncomfortable draining tube... running through his nose down into the stomach... was removed throughout the afternoon. He drank a small amount of broth. But he is also being fed intravenously. The President met for half an hour today with members of the White House staff. News Secretary Hagerty said "quite a lot of work" was accomplished. He said politics was not discussed.

The Air Force today announced the arrangements for Air Force Chief Twining's visit to Moscow. The Air Force said that Twining, and nine other officers, will arrive in Moscow on June 23rd to attend the Soviet air show the following day. Six of the officers accompanying Twining hold general rank. And one of them will be Lieutenant General Thomas S. Power, head of the Air Research and Development Command. The trip... at the invitation of the Soviet government... will be made in an aircraft which is the military version of the ordinary DC6-A, a four-engine propellor job, carrying an eight-man crew. The announcement said when they return will depend on the schedule arranged for them by the Russians.

Great Britain ended its occupation of the Suez Canal Zone today, under terms of the 1954 Anglo-Egyptian Treaty. The last garrison troops... 11 officers and 68 enlisted men... sailed for Cyprus on board an L.S.T. They left five days early. The deadline for their departure, under the treaty, is June 18th.

The deportation of a Greek Orthodox priest from England was debated today in the British House of Commons. The home secretary, Major Gwilym Lloyd-George, said the priest's church in London had been used as a center for spreading anti-British propaganda. The British colonial secretary, Alan Lennox-Boyd, said he questioned the value of reopening talks on the future of Cyprus with Archbishop Makarios, whom the British exiled in March.

On Cyprus today, British security forces raided a Greek Orthodox seminary... and took the rector and five students into custody. Another British soldier was shot and killed during the night.

And Greece filed a note at the United Nations today, asking the world organization to use its "political and moral strength" to help bring about a solution to the Cyprus problem. The note accused Britain of turning Cyprus into "a huge concentration camp" and of refusing to recognize the right of the Cypriot people to self-determination. The British delegate called the accusation "a further example of the world-wide Greek campaign of defamatory propaganda" against Britain.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee took up President Eisenhower's foreign aid program today behind closed doors. At the first meeting, no important changes were made in the measure passed by the House on Monday. The House cut the program by more than a billion dollars. Senate Majority Leader Johnson told reporters today that the Administration "is going to have to make a case", if it wants any substantial part of the cut restored. Republican Senator Knowland disagreed. He said the Administration is making a case. Ten other Republican Senators issued a statement challenging the wisdom of the House action in cutting down on foreign aid funds. "However heavy the expense may seem," they said, "it is nonetheless infinitely cheaper than the cost of waging war. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee... George of Georgia... has come out for increasing the House figure by 500-million dollars.

Former Senator Cain... of Washington State... testified again today on the government's loyalty program. Cain, who is a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board, told a Senate committee that in its present form the program allows innocent persons to be labeled security risks without ever knowing why, or having a real opportunity to defend themselves. He said President Eisenhower did not seem to know... until he talked to him last week...that, under the present system, a spy and an alcoholic are counted the same in the over-all tabulation of persons fired as security risks. "The President," he said, "evidenced deep concern."

A contempt indictment against Wendell Furry, associate professor of physics at Harvard University, has been dismissed. Dr. Furry had been indicted for refusing to answer questions put to him by Senator McCarthy. He admitted having once been a member of the Communist Party. The indictment was dropped on grounds that acquittal in a similar case leaves the government with insufficient evidence. The evidence in the two cases was essentially the same.

The nation's three biggest steel producers... U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic... today offered the United Steelworkers a package increase "approaching" 15 cents an hour. / The "package" would also include some form of guaranteed annual wage. / No reaction yet from the union.

Edward R. Murrow: June 13, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The atomic age can also be called the age of radiation, and we have plunged into it without knowing more than a few first things about the effect of radiation on the human race. A report issued by the National Academy of Sciences emphasizes the known dangers, but it also outlines the limited range of knowledge and what needs to be studied. It is the first comprehensive report by American scientists on the effects of radiation. And it comes up with some new concepts.

Probably the most striking of these is that the damage done by radiation to human beings is not confined to the individual exposed to radiation. He may be affected hardly at all. The damage is to the next and succeeding generations. And the arresting assertion is made that once this damage is done to the individual it cannot be undone for the next and succeeding generations - not until the affected descendants die out. In other words, the report is not a sensational warning simply about H and A bombs and fall-out. It is a first chapter in public education on the principles of genetics, the science of heredity, which the age of radiation elevates to a new importance.

From time to time horrifying statements have made headlines about the dangers of atomic radiation to future generations, and these have been countered by seemingly authoritative denials. The genetics committee - one of the six committees making this report - is unreservedly on the side of danger. But it denies that the chief danger is from mutations that result in monstrosities, as sometimes stated. The chief danger is from subtler deteriorations that bring shortened life and decreased ability to have children. Mutations may not show up in the damaged person at all. They may be hardly noticeable in the next generation. But what seems like inexorable law is that the danger is cumulative, not immediate; it is not danger to ~~XXXXXX~~ one individual, but to uncounted numbers of individuals.

Another surprise for laymen in the report is that the dangers of radiation do not originate solely in the new uses of atomic energy. For example, the damage done by fall-out from the new H-bomb is stated to be relatively small. Leaving new weapons out of account, we receive a certain amount of radiation from outer space, and can do nothing whatever to reduce it. Then we receive radiation from medical treatments - the X-rays of examination and therapy.

~~The measure of radiation is called the roentgen. The committee~~ recommends that the average person should not receive more than ten roentgens affecting his reproductive cells in thirty years. He gets nearly half this total from outer space, four-point-seven roentgens, and another three roentgens from medical uses. So the committee recommends that medical use be limited. It condemns, for example, the use of X-rays for non-essentials like fitting shoes. The ten roentgen quota is the minimum, and the committee sets a maximum, which is never to be more than fifty roentgens for a person up to thirty years of age, and another fifty roentgens up to forty years of age. These ages are chosen because most children are born to parents under forty. The committee proposes that all work that entails exposure to radiation in larger quantities should be restricted to older persons not likely to have children.

The dangers from radiation can become much worse when more atomic reactors are installed, and waste products accumulate from making atomic fuels for them. At present, the disposal of these waste products is a fairly small problem. The A.E.C. is dumping them in containers into the ~~deeps~~ depths of the sea. This sounds safe, for it should take a hundred years for the products to reach the surface, and by that time the radio-activity will have vanished. But we know too little about circulation in the ocean and just what deep places make really safe depositories. So this is one of the studies the committee says must be made as quickly as possible. It is important to be doing it now, because by the time we have many atomic reactors, the disposal of waste products can become a critical problem.

It is unexpected to learn that H and A bombs are not the chief radiation danger. The ~~measure of radiation from the tests so far made~~ is at the ~~rate of not much~~ more than ~~half a roentgen in thirty years~~. Yet the committee speaks of "the possibility that increased and prolonged radiation might so raise the death rate and so lower the birth rate that the population, considered as a whole, would decline and eventually perish." It stresses the known fact that radiation causes mutations in the hereditary units in human cells - the genes - and that practically every mutation caused by radiation, whose effects can be detected, is harmful.

Among the committee's recommendations is that records should be kept for every individual, showing his total accumulated lifetime exposure to radiation. Today that sounds only novel. ~~It is even amusing to think of keeping~~ tabs on ~~one's roentgens~~. But as the atomic age develops, individuals will be less amused as they grow aware that, quite aside from their moral conduct, they have a vivid biological responsibility to the whole human race.

Word for Today

The scientists have given us fair warning of the danger atomic radiation holds for the future of the human race. To cope with the danger, Man will need all his knowledge, wisdom and common sense. Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "Science is a first-rate piece of furniture for a man's upper chamber, if he has common sense on the ground floor."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 14, 1956

This is the news:

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted today to restore more than half of the billion, 100-million dollars the House cut out of President Eisenhower's foreign aid program. The committee... headed by Democratic Senator George of Georgia... voted 9 to 5 to restore 600-million dollars of the cut. Then, on a voice vote, it added another 15-million dollars. The full Senate is expected to take up the measure next week.

A special Senate committee resumed its public hearings today on lobbying practices. The lead-off witness was Leonard McCollum, of Houston, Texas... who, besides being president of the Continental Oil Company, is chairman of the Natural Gas and Oil Resources Committee. McCollum testified that his committee spent a million, 700-thousand dollars "to make the public realize the harmful results" that would come from federal regulation of natural gas producers. But not one cent of the money, he said, went for campaign contributions.

→

He said most of the money went for advertisements and printing. McCollum said his own company... Continental Oil... contributed 57-thousand dollars to the information committee, and charged it off as a general business expense.

House Democratic Leader McCormack said today, he has no intention of scheduling the Administration's postal rate bill "for action now, or in the foreseeable future." The measure would raise postal rates, to help take the Post Office Department out of the red.

The House Rules Committee has voted to act next Thursday, on President Eisenhower's civil rights program. The committee overrode the opposition of its chairman, Representative Howard Smith of Virginia, by a vote of 6 to 4. Smith wanted action on the controversial measure postponed. The committee also voted.... 7 to 3... to resume hearings next week on the school construction bill.

Robert Sarnoff, president of NBC, testified today before the Senate subcommittee investigating network practices. Sarnoff said licensing of the networks... as proposed by Senator Bricker of Ohio... would raise "the most serious problems, not only for television, but for the American enterprise system." It would result, he said,

~~in putting the government into the broadcasting business.~~

President Eisenhower talked with West German Chancellor Adenauer for 10 minutes today, through an interpreter. / The conference took place in Mr. Eisenhower's room at Walter Reed Hospital. / The President sat up in a chair, during the visit, and Adenauer told reporters afterward, that Mr. Eisenhower's recovery seemed a miracle. / Secretary of State Dulles was also present. / The President, he said, expressed his "very great hope" that action can be taken to promote German reunification.

Mr. Eisenhower's condition "continues to progress satisfactorily." The latest medical bulletin says: "During the afternoon, the President had small amounts of liquid by mouth, as well as intravenous feedings. He has had a comfortable day, and his spirits and morale remain high." Earlier in the day, a reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty if he (Hagerty) would consider submitting a question to the President, as to whether he deems it necessary to reconsider his decision to run again. Hagerty said he "most certainly would not submit that question", so long as Mr. Eisenhower is in the hospital.

The State Department announced today that the United States has signed an agreement with Great Britain for an exchange of information on atomic engines used for military purposes. The agreement refers specifically to reactors "for the propulsion of naval vessels, aircraft and land vehicles." It also calls for exchange of information regarding materials utilized in the atomic energy programs of the two countries. There was immediate speculation that, under the agreement, Britain will acquire hitherto secret data concerning the atomic submarine Nautilus.

In Berlin, the commander of Soviet forces in East Germany today invited Western correspondents to witness the scheduled withdrawal of 30-thousand Russian troops. Their departure from East Germany would apparently be part of the demobilization announced recently by Moscow.

The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the firing of John Stewart Service from the State Department in 1951. At the same time, it ordered a finding of "doubtful loyalty" against Service expunged from the record. Thus... on both counts... the Court of Appeals concurred with a decision handed down last year by a lower court. The ~~lower court held that the finding of "doubtful loyalty"... by a loyalty review board... was illegal, in light of the fact that the veteran career officer had previously been cleared by two loyalty boards under the Department of State.~~

A federal jury... in St. Louis... today convicted Matthew J. Connelly and T. Lemar Caudle on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government in an income-tax case. Connelly served as appointments secretary to former President Truman, and Caudle was once head of the tax division of the Justice Department. ~~Specifically, they have convicted of defrauding the government of their services in trying to sidetrack the prosecution of Irving Sachs, a St. Louis shoe manufacturer accused of income tax evasion. A Kansas City attorney... Harry Schwimmer... was a defendant in the case until he suffered a heart attack. (He may be tried later).~~ Both Connelly and Caudle face a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a 10-thousand-dollar fine. Their attorneys say the verdict will be appealed.

Here in New York City, the entire subway system has been hit by a wildcat strike of subway motormen. The walkout began early in the afternoon and quickly spread, so that by the rush-hour, hundreds of thousands of persons were stranded. Many commuters... living in Brooklyn... walked home across the Brooklyn Bridge. Others... by the thousands... walked across the Queensboro Bridge to their homes in Queens. Taxis are almost impossible to find. Sightseeing buses have been taken over to supplement the regular bus facilities. And it was the hottest day of the year---96 point 1 degrees. The latest word is that a few subway trains are running, but completely off schedule. Many of the subway stations have been closed by police as a safety precaution. And the entire New York fire department has gone on an emergency alert.

→

French Foreign Minister Pineau is flying to Washington, for a series of talks with Secretary of State Dulles. Shortly before Mr. Pineau left Paris, my colleague David Schoenbrun obtained an exclusive interview, in which the foreign minister tells what he hopes to accomplish in his mission. Here, by recording, is David Schoenbrun.

tape runs 5:41, ends on cue: "Bon voyage, Monsieur le Presdient."

You have been listening to an exclusive recorded interview between David Schoenbrun and the French foreign minister, Christian Pineau.

George Bryan

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 14, 1956
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... French Foreign Minister Pineau is flying to Washington for a series of talks with Secretary of State Dulles. Shortly before Mr. Pineau left Paris my colleague, David Schoenbrun, obtained an exclusive interview, in the course of which the Foreign Minister tells what he hopes to accomplish during his mission to Washington and his conversations there. Here, by recording, is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Foreign Minister, could you tell me, please, what is the purpose of your visit to Washington? Is this a mission? Are you going to my country to ask for something or simply to talk about something?

PINEAU: I want really to talk about something. We have some very important problems to explain to the American Government. We ... it is necessary for us to have in our questions the solidarity of the American Government, but the solidarity is not yet, is not yet, for I can tell in Algeria it is necessary for us toh a ve the solidarity of all our friends, but we don't want to live over the experience ... the experience of Indochina.

SCHOENBRUN: By that, Mr. Foreign Minister, do you mean you're not going to ask for help? You're not going to ask for a special aid program, of money, you're simply going to talk about coordination of policies and to ask for an understanding of French policies?

PINEAU: Only the coordination of policy, no question of help or of money. I don't want to speak of help or money during all my .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, if it is problems, rather than money, that you're going to talk about will you tell us what are the main problems that you're going to discuss in Washington?

PINEAU: The most important problem, except Algeria, is the problem of relationships between west and east.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, you've just come from Moscow .....

PINEAU: Yes!

SCHOENBRUN: Will you be telling Mr. Dulles and your American allies about your conversations in Moscow and your impression of the present meaning of Soviet policy?

PINEAU: It is my intention. I want to explain to Mr. Dulles the reasons of our trip and all my meetings with Mr. Khrushchev, Bulganin and Molotov will be repeated. We have no secret.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, do you find from your reent trip to Russia ... are you now convinced that there is a real chnge in Soviet international policy?

PINEAU: We must appreciate the change (unintelligible) but it is real, it is a real change, and I ... I hope that it will be possible for the United States to understand the new problems of relations between east and west. If we have not a common policy on this problem it will be very dangerous for the west's solidarity.

SCHOENBRUN: One more question, if I may, Mr. Foreign Minister. At the last meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization you put forward a new plan for developing relations with the neutral countries and with some of the underdeveloped countries of the world and you also put through ... you had some remarks to make about the necessity for reviving North Atlantic policies. Could you tell us specifically about this plan of yours and will you discuss it in Washington? And, secondly, how would you revive the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

PINEAU: Mr. Dulles knows perfectly well the characteristics of my plan. The main ideas of this plan are, the first - it is absolutely necessary to separate the problems of .... military problems, political problems or the problems of aid and I don't like very much the word "neutral" about some countries of the world. In my opinion if a country is not with us it is necessarily against us. I prefer to say, or the countries ... we are not against us, are with us.-(sentence sic)

SCHOENBRUN: Then, you believe that economic aid should be developed to countries even if they are not members of treaties or pacts?

PINEAUP It's my opinion.

SCHOENBRUN: Whatabout the extension, however, Mr. Pineau, of NATO's activities inside the NATO area and the revision of NATO itself?

PINEAU: You are right to say "inside the NATO." I think it will ... it would be possible to create some economical organizations or to realize some very important works like, for example, a general (unintelligible) .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, do you think there's still any chance that you might see President Eisenhower during your trip in Washington?

PINEAU: I hope to see the President Eisenhower. We are so sorry of his illness. All the French people were very shocked by his illness and I wmt to present to the President all my best wishes for his health.

SCHOENBRUN: Thank you very much, Mr. Pineau, and I hope that your mission to Washington will be a great success. Bon voyage (faded out) .....

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 14, 1956
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... French Foreign Minister Pineau is flying to Washington for a series of talks with Secretary of State Dulles. Shortly before Mr. Pineau left Paris my colleague, David Schoenbrun, obtained an exclusive interview, in the course of which the Foreign Minister tells what he hopes to accomplish during his mission to Washington and his conversations there. Here, by recording, is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Foreign Minister, could you tell me, please, what is the purpose of your visit to Washington? Is this a mission? Are you going to my country to ask for something or simply to talk about something?

PINEAU: I want really to talk about something. We have some very important problems to explain to the American Government. We ... it is necessary for us to have in our questions the solidarity of the American Government, but the solidarity is not yet, is not yet, for I can tell in Algeria it is necessary for us toh a ve the solidarity of all our friends, but we don't want to live over the experience ... the experience of Indochina.

SCHOENBRUN: By that, Mr. Foreign Minister, do you mean you're not going to ask for help? You're not going to ask for a special aid program, of money, you're simply going to talk about coordination of policies and to ask for an understanding of French policies?

PINEAU: Only the coordination of policy, no question of help or of money. I don't want to speak of help or money during all my .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, if it is problems, rather than money, that you're going to talk about will you tell us what are the main problems that you're going to discuss in Washington?

PINEAU: The most important problem, except Algeria, is the problem of relationships between west and east.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, you've just come from Moscow .....

PINEAU: Yes!

SCHOENBRUN: Will you be telling Mr. Dulles and your American allies about your conversations in Moscow and your impression of the present meaning of Soviet policy?

PINEAU: It is my intention. I want to explain to Mr. Dulles the reasons of our trip and all my meetings with Mr. Khrushchev, Bulganin and Molotov will be repeated. We have no secret.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, do you find from your recent trip to Russia ... are you now convinced that there is a real change in Soviet international policy?

PINEAU: We must appreciate the change (unintelligible) but it is real, it is a real change, and I ... I hope that it will be possible for the United States to understand the new problems of relations between east and west. If we have not a common policy on this problem it will be very dangerous for the west's solidarity.

SCHOENBRUN: One more question, if I may, Mr. Foreign Minister. At the last meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization you put forward a new plan for developing relations with the neutral countries and with some of the underdeveloped countries of the world and you also put through ... you had some remarks to make about the necessity for reviving North Atlantic policies. Could you tell us specifically about this plan of yours and will you discuss it in Washington? And, secondly, how would you revive the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

PINEAU: Mr. Dulles knows perfectly well the characteristics of my plan. The main ideas of this plan are, the first - it is absolutely necessary to separate the problems of .... military problems, political problems or the problems of aid and I don't like very much the word "neutral" about some countries of the world. In my opinion if a country is not with us it is necessarily against us. I prefer to say, or the countries ... we are not against us, are with us.-(sentence sic)

SCHOENBRUN: Then, you believe that economic aid should be developed to countries even if they are not members of treaties or pacts?

PINEAU: It's my opinion.

SCHOENBRUN: Whatabout the extension, however, Mr. Pineau, of NATO's

activities inside the NATO area and the revision of NATO itself?

PINEAU: You are right to say "inside the NATO." I think it will ... it would be possible to create some economical organizations or to realize some very important works like, for example, a general (unintelligible) .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, do you think there's still any chance that you might see President Eisenhower during your trip in Washington?

PINEAU: I hope to see the President Eisenhower. We are so sorry of his illness. All the French people were very shocked by his illness and I wat to present to the President all my best wishes for his health.

SCHOENBRUN: Thank you very much, Mr. Pineau, and I hope that your mission to Washington will be a great success. Bon voyage (faded out) .....

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 14, 1956
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... French Foreign Minister Pineau is flying to Washington for a series of talks with Secretary of State Dulles. Shortly before Mr. Pineau left Paris my colleague, David Schoenbrun, obtained an exclusive interview, in the course of which the Foreign Minister tells what he hopes to accomplish during his mission to Washington and his conversations there. Here, by recording, is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Foreign Minister, could you tell me, please, what is the purpose of your visit to Washington? Is this a mission? Are you going to my country to ask for something or simply to talk about something?

PINEAU: I want really to talk about something. We have some very important problems to explain to the American Government. We ... it is necessary for us to have in ~~mmmmm~~our questions the solidarity of the American Government, but the solidarity is not yet, is not yet, for I can tell in Algeria it is necessary for us toh a ve the solidarity of all our friends, but we don't want to live over the experience ... the experience of Indochina.

SCHOENBRUN: By that, Mr. Foreign Minister, do you mean you're not going to ask for help? You're not going to ask for a special aid program, of money, you're simply going to talk about coordination of policies and to ask for an understanding of French policies?

PINEAU: Only the coordinatinn of policy, no question of help or of money. I don't want to speak of help or money during all my .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, if it is problems, rather than money, that you're going to talk about will you tell us what are the main problems that you're going to discuss in Washington?

PINEAU: The most important problem, except Algeria, is the problem of relationships between west and east.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, you've just come from Moscow .....

PINEAU: Yes!

SCHOENBRUN: Will you be telling Mr. Dulles and your American allies about your conversations in Moscow and your impression of the present meaning of Soviet policy?

PINEAU: It is my intention. I want to explain to Mr. Dulles the reasons of our trip and all my meetings with Mr. Khrushchev, Bulganin and Molotov will be repeated. We have no secret.

SCHOENBRUN: Mr. Pineau, do you find from your reent trip to Russia ... are you now convinced that there is a real chnge in Soviet international policy?

PINEAUL We must appreciate the change (unintelligible) but it is real, it is a real change, and I ... I hope that it will be possible for the United States to understand the new problems of relations between east and west. If we have not a common policy on this problem it will be very dangerous for the west's solidarity.

SCHOENBRUN: One more question, if I may, Mr. Foreign Minister. At the last meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization you put forward a new plan for developing relations with the neutral countries and with some of the underdeveloped countries of the world and you also put through ... you had some remarks to make about the necessity for reviving North Atlantic policies. Could you tell us specifically about this plan of yours and will you discuss it in Washington? And, secondly, how would you revive the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

PINEAU: Mr. Dulles knows perfectly well the characteristics of my plan. The main ideas of this plan are, the first - it is absolutely necessary to separate the problems of .... military problems, political problems or the problems of aid and I don't like very much the word "neutral" about some countries of the world. In my opinion if a country is not with us it is necessarily against us. I prefer to say, or the countries ... we are not against us, are with us.-(sentence sic)

SCHOENBRUN: Then, you believe that economic aid should be developed to countries even if they are not members of treaties or pacts?

PINEAUP It's my opinion.

SCHOENBRUN: Whatabout the extension, however, Mr. Pineau, of NATO's

activities inside the NATO area and the revision of NATO itself?

PINEAU: You are right to say "inside the NATO." I think it will ... it would be possible to create some economical organizations or to realize some very important works like, for example, a general (unintelligible) .....

SCHOENBRUN: M. Pineau, do you think there's still any chance that you might see President Eisenhower during your trip in Washington?

PINEAU: I hope to see the President Eisenhower. We are so sorry of his illness. All the French people were very shocked by his illness and I wmt to present to the President all my best wishes for his health.

SCHOENBRUN: Thank you very much, Mr. Pineau, and I hope that your mission to Washington will be a great success. Bon voyage (faded out) .....

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

Word for Today

Foreign Minister Pineau is coming to Washington to promote Western solidarity. And he knows that, first, various approaches to common policy will have to be explored. In this, Pineau would agree with Abraham Lincoln, who said: "If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could then judge better what to do."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 15, 1956

This is the news:

The United Steelworkers today rejected the contract proposals of the "Big Three" steel companies, as "totally inadequate". / The union charged that the companies.... U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic... had offered what would amount, in the first year, to a take-home pay increase, of only five cents an hour. / The companies said, their offer amounted to an immediate raise, per employe, of nearly 18 cents an hour. / They argued that to grant the union demands would touch off "another ruinous round of inflation." / The present contract expires on June 30th. And the possibility of a strike has been raised, though contract talks will continue.

Subway service returned to normal, here in New York today, following yesterday's wildcat strike. / Twenty-seven subway motormen who took part in the walkout, have been suspended.

Attorney General Brownell complied today with the recent Supreme Court decision that the [redacted] security program does not apply to persons engaged in non-sensitive work. Brownell ordered all federal employes in that category... under suspension in pending security proceedings... restored to their jobs.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Mr. Brownell's brother... Samuel Brownell... as commissioner of the Office of Education.

Mr. Eisenhower's doctors announced today that "normal physiological activity of his intestinal tract has been restored." It was just a week ago that the President was admitted to Walter Reed Hospital for major abdominal surgery. News Secretary Hagerty says [redacted] that Mr. Eisenhower has not been fed intravenously since last evening. Since that time, he has been getting all his nourishment, in liquid form, through the mouth. Hagerty told reporters that ~~the President's illness has not slowed down operations of the executive branch of the government.~~

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted today to add another 100-million dollars to President Eisenhower's foreign aid program. (then took out 12-million. The 88-million dollars [redacted] restored today (for economic development in Asia) brings to

→

703-million ~~715-million~~ dollars, the amount of money restored to the foreign aid program. The House cut the program by a billion, 100-million dollars. The full Senate has yet to act.

Secretary of Defense Wilson said in a speech today that merger of the Army, Navy and Air Force would not end inter-service differences. He said, "It would only force differences of opinion to appear in other forms."

My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, reported from Tokyo today that all B-57 jet bombers (popularly known as the Camberra) had been grounded since sometime in May. The CBS News bureau in Washington checked the Pentagon, and tonight the Air Force confirmed Pierpoint's story. It said all B-57's had been grounded since May 24th, ~~until "suspected horizontal stabilizer actuator problems" can be permanently corrected.~~ Pierpoint "broke" the story and here, by recording, is how he reported it earlier today from Japan.

(tape runs 3:30, ends on cue, "--back (to Edward R. Murrow in New York.#

That ~~is~~ was Pierpoint's exclusive story, now substantially confirmed by the Air Force in Washington.

The chess game over German reunification continues to occupy Western diplomacy, and quite a good move was made this week in the communique on the Adenauer-Dulles talks. This was to reproach the Russians for not keeping the promise they made at the summit meeting to proceed with German reunification on the basis of free elections.

~~It was a particularly safe move, because Khrushchev recently told French Premier Mollet he would rather have seventeen million dependable East Germans than a united Germany, even if a united Germany was unarmed. And that was an admission that Khurshchev believes a united Germany, even if unarmed, would be pro-Western.~~

But clever moves on the diplomatic chess board aren't going to strengthen the West's position in Europe substantially at this time. NATO itself is undergoing a weakening for reasons that aren't to be blamed on Khrushchev and that chess moves aren't going to change. One of them is the withdrawal of France's NATO divisions to fight in Algeria, and the heavy cost of that war to France. One of them is the development of new weapons which are making some concepts of NATO planning obsolete. A third one is now looming up -- inflation in Britain. This can have an effect on NATO because it may lead to the withdrawal of the five British divisions stationed in Germany. It would be done to relieve the British economy, but if British forces quit the continent, NATO would be seriously damaged.

It is the possibility of this withdrawal that lay behind a speech by Prime Minister Eden this week on the H-bomb and its effect as a deterrent against all-out war. The British now know how to make the H-bomb and will test their first one next year. Sir Anthony was saying that a conflict between the nuclear powers was unthinkable because it would be suicide on a world scale. Then he went on to say that where an ultimate deterrent is present, large forces confronting each other, with all the panoply of guns, tanks and supporting arms, have not the significance they once had. No one, he said, should drop his guard, and there must be effective defensive arrangements, but he called the deterrent the determining factor.

This language is not so newsworthy as the economic facts that inspired it. Britain has been in the grip of inflationary forces for some time, and its leaders have been watching the symptoms with growing alarm. To put the situation statistically, British wages are rising seven percent a year and productivity is going up less than four percent. This gap is pure inflation, and it has to be closed.

The British aren't suffering from unemployment, as so often in the past, but from its opposite, an acute labor shortage. Three demands are made on the British work force: to supply domestic consumers, to supply the export market, and to maintain the military establishment. This pressure has to be lessened. Obviously, it cannot be lessened easily by reducing domestic consumption or exports. If savings are to be rung up it must be in the defense system. If the five British divisions on the continent are brought home and disbanded, the labor market will get some relief, and factories working on supplies and weapons for these divisions can serve the home and foreign trade.

Britain is watching its dollar reserves shrink, and knows it must take drastic steps if another devaluation of the pound is to be avoided. But drastic steps are hard to take. Labor is too strong to stand for a wage cut. Home consumers are ~~the~~ too strong to tolerate further curtailment of consumption, already hobbled by heavy purchase taxes. So the government has to turn to defense costs. It knows it mustn't sacrifice security, which is why Sir Anthony Eden talks about the H-bomb as a deterrent. He really is saying Britain will be secure even if it demobilizes the five divisions in Germany.

All the European partners of NATO carry relatively heavy financial burdens, in all of them inflation is a danger, and in all of them cuts in defense spending are politically the easiest to make.

It is a commonplace to say that the chief objective of the Kremlin is to break up the Western alliance, and that the new look in Soviet policy was designed for that end. Consequently, the Western publics are being exhorted to hang together lest they hang separately, and warned not to take Soviet reforms at their face value. But, I repeat, the elements I have mentioned as weakening NATO can't be blamed on the Russians. They are the result of changing conditions. And it isn't going to help Britain to build up dollar reserves, or France to end the war in Algeria, or the NATO generals to plan their defense strategy anew to do no more ~~than harp on the Soviet menace~~. The Russian Threat ~~It~~ may be quite as menacing as it ever was. But Western strength has to be increased first of all by dealing with the causes of Western weakness.

Word for Today

Not all the problems faced by the West are of Russia's making. It might be simpler if they were. There is, rather, as Shakespeare said, "a sea of troubles", ranging from Britain's economic difficulties to the Algerian revolt. There is no single, simple problem. Indeed, we can say with Ovid, "Simplicity is most rare in our age."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, June 15, 1956
7:45 - 7:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, reported today from Tokyo that all B-57 jet bombers, generally known as the Canberra, had been grounded since some time in May. The CBS News Bureau in Washington checked the Pentagon, and tonight the Air Force confirmed Pierpoint's story. It said all B-57s had been grounded since May 24. Pierpoint broke the story and here, by recording, is how he reported it earlier today - from Japan.

PIERPOINT: One of America's first-line air weapons, the B-57 Canberra jet bomber, is grounded by the Air Force. The Canberra, a twin-jet with a normal two-man crew, has been completely out of action all over the world for almost one month. This is the story as learned by CBS News today through extremely reliable American Air Force sources here in Japan. The B-57, a plane first designed and produced in England, has been giving the U.S. Air Force trouble almost since the day it was bought from the British several years ago. During the past year, a number of American crew men - perhaps twenty or more - have been killed in mysterious B-57 crashes. Two of these fatal accidents have occurred within the past couple of months, finally forcing the Air Force to ground all B-57 Canberras until the trouble can be determined and corrected. But pilots believe they already know what the trouble is. They say that during high speed low-level flight the Canberra develops control difficulties in the horizontal stabilizer. They call it "runaway trim." All that sounds pretty complicated. But what it means is this: The Canberra is a plane now being used almost exclusively for fast low altitude bombing, much of it at night. It's been assigned the important job of carrying small tactical atom bombs and delivering those bombs against enemy targets just behind the battle-line, targets such as big masses of troops or depots filled with enemy supplies and ammunition. The flying is done at speeds of from 350-up-to-500-miles an hour, down the valleys and over the mountain ridges at just a few hundred feet off the ground. But there's apparently something wrong with the steering mechanism of the Canberra. Quite often while doing just this sort of dangerous flying, the B-57 suddenly goes completely out of control and plunges into the ground. At that altitude the pilot and his navigator-bombardier never even have a chance to bail out.

The American Air Force has spent more than five years and many millions of dollars in trying to develop the B-57 Canberra into a reliable aircraft. It was originally bought from the British, partly to let England earn precious dollars - but it's now also manufactured in the United States. American pilots complain that the Canberra hs never performed well. They talk of slippages in the B-57 program which have several times postponed putting the Canberra into action. Although the B-57 should have been ready for use late in the Korean war, the first squadron of Canberras did not arrive here in the Far East until January of this year. Then came the series of crashes this Spring and finally, in mid-May the Air Force once again had to ground its B-57 Canberras. The B-57 crews are very upset. For weeks now they've been idly sitting around, losing valuable flying hours and waiting for the Air Force to find out what's wrong with their aeroplane.

The Air Force thinks it has found the trouble now. But either isn't quite sure or isn't saying yet. Meantime, no one here seems to know when the B-58, one of America's most important nuclear warfare weapons, will be back in action. This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo - and now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Pierpoint's exclusive story, now substantially confirmed by the Air Force in Washington.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United Steelworkers today rejected the contract proposals of the "Big Three" steel companies as "totally inadequate". The union charged that the companies ...U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic..had offered what would amount, in the first year, to a take-home pay increase of only five cents an hour. The companies said their offer ammounted to an immediate raise, per employe, of nearly 18 cents an hour. They argued that to grant the union demands would touch off "another runinous round of inflation." The present contract expires on June 30th. And the possibility of a strike had been raised, though contract talks will continue.

Subway service returned to normal here in New York today, following yesterday's wildcat strike. Twenty-seven subway motormen who took part in the walkout have been suspended.

Attorney General Brownell complies today with the recent Supreme Court decision that the security program does not apply to persons engaged in non-sensetive work. Brownell ordered all federal employes in that category..under suspension in pending security proceedings restored to their jobs.

President Eisenhower's doctors announced today that "normal physiological activity of his intestinal tract has bec restored." It was just a week ago that the President was admitted to alter Reed Hospital for major abdominal surgery. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower has not been fed intravously since last evening. Since that time, he has been getting all his nourishment, in licquid form, through the mouth.

The Senate Foreign RelationsCommittee voted today to add another 100-million dollars to President Eisenhower's foreign aid program, then took out 12-million. The 88-million dollars restored today (for economic development in Asia) brings to 703-million dollars, the amount of money restored to the foreign aid program. The House cut the program by a billion, 100-million dollars. The full Senate has yet to act.

Secretary of Defense Wilson said in a speech today that merger of the Army, Navy and Air Force would not end inter-service differences. Te said, "'t would only force differences of opinion to appear in other forms. "

My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, reported from Tokyo today that all B-57 jet bombers (popularly known as the Camberra) had been grounded since sometime in May. The CBS News bureau in Washington checked the Pentagon, and tonight the Air Force confiremed Pierpoint's story. It said all B-57's had been grounded since May 24th. Pierpoint "broke" the story and here, by recording, is how he reported it earlier today from Japan.

PIERPOINT: One of America's first-line air weapons, the B-57 Camberra jet bomber, is grounded by the Air Force. The Camberra , a twin-jet with a normal two-man crew, has been completely out of action all over the world for almost a month. This is the story as learned by CBS News today through extremely reliable American Air Force sources here in Japan.. The B-57, a plane first designed and produced in England, has been giving the U.S. Air Force trouble almost since the day it was brought from the British several years ago. During the past year, a number of American crew men - perhaps twenty or more - have been killed in mysterious B-57 crashes. Two of these fatal accidents have occurred within the past couple of months, finally forcing the Air Force to ground all B-57 Camberras until the trouble can be determined and corrected. But pilots believe they already know what the trouble is. They say that during high speeds low-level flight the Camberra develops control difficulties in the horizontal stabilizer. They call it "runaway trim." All that sounds pretty complicated.

But what is means is this: The Camberra is a plane now being used almost exclusivley for fast low altitude bombing, much of it at night. It's been assigned the important job of carrying small tactical atom bombs and delivering those bombs against enemy targets just behind the battle-line, targets such as big masses of troops or depots filled with enemy supplies and ammunition. The flying is done at speeds of from 350-up to 500 miles an hour, down the valleys and over the mountain ridges as just a few hundred feet off the ground. But there's apparently something wrong with the steering mechanism of the Camberra. Quite often while doing just this sort of dangerous flying, the B-57 suddenly goes completely out of control and plunges into the ground. At that altitude the pilot and his navigator -bombadier never even have a chance to bail out.

The American Air Force has spent more than five years and many millions of dollars in trying to develop the B-57 Camberra into a reliable aircraft. It was originally brought from the British, partly to let England earn precious dollars - but it's now also manufactured in the United States. American pilots complain that the Camberra has never performed well. They talk of slippages in the B-57 program which have several times postponed putting the Canberra into action. Although the B-57 Camberras did not arrive here in the Far East until January of this year. Then came a series of crashes this Spring and finally, in Mid-May the Air Force once again had to ground its B-57 Camberras. The B-57 crews are very upset. For weeks the've been idly sitting around, losing valuable flying hours and waiting for the Air Force to find out what's wrong with their aeroplane.

The Air Force thinks it has found the trouble now. But either isn't quite sure or isn't saying yet. Meantime, no one here seems to know when the B-57 one of America's most important nuclear warfare weapons, will be back in action. This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo -and now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Pierpoint's exclusive story, now substantially confirmed by the Air Force in Washington.

The chess game over German reunification continues to occupy estern diplomacy, and quite a good move was made this week in the communique on the Adenauer-Dulles talks. This was to reproach the Russians for not keeping the promise they made at the summit meeting to proceed with German reunification on the basis of free elections.

But clever moves on the diplomatic chess board aren't going to strengthen the West's position in Europe substantially at this time. Nato itself is undergoing a wakening for reasons that aren't to be blamed on Khrushchev and that chess moves aren't going to change. One of them is the withdrawal of France's NATO divisions to fight in Algeria, and the heavy cost of that war to France. One of them is the development of new weapons which are making some concepts of NATO planning obsolete. A third one is now looming up -- inflation in Britain. This can have an effect on NATO because it may lead to withdrawal of the British divisions stationed in Germany. It would be done to relieve the British economy, but if British forces quit the continent, NATO would be seriously damaged.

It is the possibility of this withdrawal that lay behind a speech by Prime Minister Eden this week on the H-bomb and its effect as a deterrent against all-out war. The British now know how to make the H-bomb and will test their first one next year. Sir Anthony was saying that a conflict between the nuclear powers was unthinkable because it would be suicide on a world scale. Then he went on to say that where an ultimate deterrent is present, large forces confronting each other with all the panoply of guns, tanks and supporting arms, have not the significance they once had. No one, he said, should drop his guard, and there must be effective defensive arrangement , but he called the deterrent the determining factor.

This language is not so newsworthy as the economic facts that inspired it. Britain has been in the grip of inflationary forces for some time, and its leaders have beenwatching the symptoms with growing alarm. To put the situation statisiically, British wates are rising seven percent a year and productivity is going up less than four percent. This gap is pure inflation and it has to be closed.

The British aren't suffering from unemployment, as so often in the past, but from its opposite, an acute labor shortage. Three demands are made on the British work force; to supply domestic consumers, to supply the export market, and to maintain the military establishment. This pressure has to be lessened. Obviously, it cannot be lessened easily by reducing domestic consumption or exports. If savings are to be rung up it must be in the defense system. If the five British divisions on the continent are brought home and disbanded, the labor market will get some relief, and factories working an supplies and weapons for these divisions can serve the home and foreign trade.

Britain is watching its dollar reserves shrink, and knows it must take drastic steps if another devaluation of the pound is to be avoided. But drastic steps are hard to take. Labor is too strong to stand for a wage cut. Home consumers are toostrong to tolerate further curtailment of consumption, already hobbled by heavy purchase taxes. So the government has to turn to defense costs. It knows it mustn't sacrifice security, which is why Sir Anthony Eden talks about the H-bomb as a deterrent. He is really saying Britain will be secure if it demobilizes the five divisions in Germany.

All the European partners of NATO carry relatively heavy fiancial burdens, in all of them inflation is a danger, andin all of them, cuts in defense spending are politically the easiest to make

The Russian threat may be quite as menacing as it ever was. But Western strength has to be increased first of all by dealing with the causes of Western weakness.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Not all the problems faced by the West are of Russia's making. It might be simpler if they were. There is, rather, as Shakespeare said, "A sea of troubles", ranging from Britain's economic difficulties to the Algerian revolt. There is no single, simple problem. Indeed, we can say with Ovid, "Simplicity is most rare in our age."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon. June 18, 1956

This is the news:

The Soviet foreign minister... Dimitri Shepilov... said in Cairo today that Russia wants to improve its relations with all countries, including the United States. But Russia, he said, will not seek this improvement "at the expense of our good relations with the Arab states." Shepilov said, "We will do our best to achieve relaxation of tension in this area of the world." He then proceeded to call Russia the "natural ally" of countries seeking to free themselves from colonialism and derided the Baghdad Pact. It was Shepilov's first major speech since becoming foreign minister. He came to Egypt at the invitation of the Nasser government, to witness today's raising of the Egyptian flag over the Suez Canal Zone after 73 years of British rule. Premier Nasser said in a broadcast it marked the start of a new era for Egypt as an independent state.

Premier Ben Gurion of Israel today formally announced the resignation of Moshe Sharett as foreign minister. /The labor minister... Mrs. Golda Myerson... was named to succeed Sharett, who has advocated a more moderate policy than Ben Gurion, toward the Arab states. /The change was opposed by some members of the coalition government.

The Libyan prime minister began a series of talks in London today, on the 1953 treaty, which gives Britain the right to base troops in Libya. Libya reportedly asked for more economic aid.

The State Department today denounced the violence, that led Saturday, to the death of an American vice-consul on the island of Cyprus. /The department said the fatal injury of William Boteler, due to a bomb explosion, was "a tragic reminder, that violence is a blind and senseless course, in the settlement of international problems."

In Moscow today, Marshal Tito continued his talks with Soviet leaders. And a Yugoslav spokesman, said they agreed on means of strengthening ties between the Communist parties of Russia and Yugoslavia. Tito said at a reception tonight that nothing has been done that will alter his relations with the West.

~~West German Chancellor Adenauer said today that... despite recent Soviet declarations... he still hopes Russia will restore German unity. Adenauer said he is preparing to send a note to the "Big Four" powers on the unification question. He would not reveal the contents of the note.~~

French Foreign Minister Pineau talked with Secretary of State Dulles for more than two hours today at the State Department. Pineau said afterward that they discussed his plan for channeling foreign aid through the United Nations. He declined to report Mr. Dulles' reaction... but emphasized it is not his intention to have all (or even most) American aid distributed through the U.N. The subject of Algeria did not come up at today's meeting. Pineau said that problem, and the problem of the Middle East, probably will be taken up tomorrow. The talks will continue through Wednesday.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee completed action on the foreign aid bill today... and sent it to the Senate floor. Chairman George said he expects the full Senate to start debating the measure on Wednesday. The Foreign Relations Committee approved a bill that restores 702-million of the 1-billion, 100-million dollars cut out of the program by the House. The committee vote was 13 to 2, with Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota and Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana casting the dissenting votes.

→

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State said in a Senate speech that the basic concepts of the foreign aid program should be reviewed. He called it, at present, "a clumsy patchwork." The Foreign Relations Committee then proposed that 300-thousand dollars be spent for such a study. The committee would conduct the investigation, with a view to making recommendations by next February 15th. What it learns would be used in helping to determine future aid programs.

The Senate Appropriations Committee approved an extra billion, 160-million dollars today for the Air Force. The vote was 13 to 12 and cut across party lines. Of the additional money, 800-million dollars would be used to step up production of strategic aircraft, including the B-52 intercontinental bomber.

President Eisenhower talked with Vice President Nixon for fifteen minutes today... and also had a brief conference with Secretary of State

Dulles and members of the White House staff. News Secretary Hagerty quoted the President as saying he hoped Congress would approve "a major portion" of his foreign aid program. Reporters asked Mr. Nixon if there was any discussion of politics, while he was with the President. Nixon said, "The answer is no." He added that he had every confidence Mr. Eisenhower would make "the proper decision", with regard to seeking a second term.

The wage policy committee of the United Steelworkers Union has authorized its negotiators to call a strike, if agreement on a new contract is not reached by June 30th, the date the present contract expires. The wage policy committee accused the three largest steel producers---U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic--- of having offered a five-year contract on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis. It claimed this constituted a refusal to bargain in good faith. The union has broken off joint talks with the "Big Three" steel producers. Separate negotiations with some of the other companies are scheduled for tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow: June 18, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The visit of the new Soviet Foreign Minister, Shepilov, to Egypt, and of French Foreign Minister Pineau to Washington, were not timed to coincide. Nevertheless they are part of the same large picture. Mr. Shepilov, who engineered the Czech arms deal with Egypt before he became Foreign Minister, is now in the Middle East to collect dividends from this policy. He wants closer ties with the Arab countries. Monsieur Pineau, whose socialist-led government is waging costly war with Algerian rebels, hopes to get the support, or at least the encouragement of Washington for that conflict. That is, he wants us to favor the French cause, which would mean that we didn't favor the Arab cause.

Mr. Shepilov's objective, of course, isn't to win Arabs as Arabs. It is to establish Soviet power in the Mediterranean where it has been excluded for so long. And it is to break the Western monopoly of Middle Eastern oil. The Arabs are the means to those ends. And Monsieur Pineau's objective isn't to defeat the Algerian Arabs as arabs, but to save French power and prestige at home and abroad. The chief trouble with Monsieur Pineau's mission at this time is that Secretary Dulles, however much he may sympathize with the French, can't openly take sides against the Algerian rebels without offending all Arabs. And that would play into the hands of Mr. Shepilov. Mr. Dulles must be unhappy in this position, certainly Monsieur Pineau is. All they can talk about without embarrassment is making NATO over, and the best way to channel an aid program.

But Mr. Shepilov is having a thoroughly good time. His policy of arming Egypt has paid sensational dividends. Russia by now must be counted a de facto power in the Mediterranean. And the policy can pay still more. All Mr. Shepilov needs to do is to combine two offers. One is to submit better terms for building the upper Nile dam than the West, the other is to espouse the case of the Arab states against Israel in the United Nations. That would mean going back to the boundaries assigned to Israel before that country's war with the Arab States.

To say that Mr. Shepilov is having a good time is not to say that he can make both these offers with complete safety. A bid to build the Nile dam can be made without putting the cold war into a higher gear. Russia might even share construction costs with the West, which would be a big Kremlin victory, but which could be called a test of peaceful co-operation. But if the Kremlin sides openly against Israel, the consequences could be grave to all concerned. For Israel would refuse to accept a drastically reduced territory, and hostilities might result, with a big local war probable, and an extension of that war possible.

The Russians nowadays weigh the risks quite carefully. After the Hammarskjold mission to Palestine, they suddenly turned off the pro-Arab faucet, and began to play up to Israel. That made a unanimous resolution in the U.N. on the mission possible. But now Mr. Shepilov is guest of Egypt, at one of the most significant moments in its recent history, being invited to celebrate the British withdrawal from Suez. Certainly the Egyptians expect him to turn on the Arab faucet again, and shut off the good will to Israel. They have some reason to expect something. The Kremlin is doing a job of exchanges and propaganda in the Middle East, that makes the Western effort look puny in comparison. Not so long ago Arab leaders were so fearful that communist penetration might lead to their downfall, that they rejected all Kremlin advances. But since the Egyptian arms deal, the dread of communism has declined. And the Kremlin seems to have tuned down its infiltration campaign, and is stressing Soviet helpfulness, culture and love of peace. The result is, that the Russians are liked, not feared, whereas the West - the United States included - is generally disliked.

To look at Monsieur Pineau's mission again for a moment, it is fair to point out that the present French government has gone further to recognize and placate Algerian nationalism, than any of its predecessors. Its policy is to put down the revolt first, and then negotiate. It promises to negotiate with duly elected Algerians, which means the Nationalists are sure of big concessions. It has given up its claim that Algeria is part of metropolitan France and must so remain. It has said that the status of Algeria can be somewhere between a French province and an independent country. But these promises have not won friends, while the war on the rebels is multiplying enemies at an ~~astonishing~~ alarming rate. Before the 350,000 French soldiers descended on Algeria, the revolt was ill-led and localized, and without much open support from Algerian moderates. The more the troops came, the more the revolt spread. Today it has the open backing of virtually all Algerian moderates, and of all Arab neighbors, including Tunisia and Morocco who so recently won their independence from France. This is not a case of too little and too late, for it isn't too little. But it is certainly proving to be too late.

Word for Today

The Russians have noted the tide of nationalism... and are using it, wherever possible, for their own gain. Chester Bowles once said, "As long as ideas influence the minds of men, and as long as men and their aspirations are a major component of power, ideas---good and bad--- will continue to upset nations, defy armies and write history."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 18, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Soviet foreign minister...Dimitri Shepilov..said in Cairo today that Russia wants to improve its relations with all countries, including the United States. But Russia, he said, will not seek this improvement "at the expense of our good relations with the Arab states." Shepilov said, "We will do our best to achieve relaxation of tension in this area of the world." He then proceeded to call Russia the "natural ally" of countries seeking to free themselves from colonialism and derided the Baghdad Pact. It was Shepilov's first major speech since becoming foreign minister. He came to Egypt at the invitation of the Nasser government to witness today's raising of the Egyptian flag over the Suez Canal Zone after 73 years of British rule. Premier Nasser said in a broadcast it marked the start of a new era for Egypt as an independent state.

Premier Ben Gurion of Israel today formally announced the resignation of Moshe Sharett as foreign minister. The labor minister...Mrs. Golda Myerson... was named to succeed Sharett, who has advotated a more moderate policy than Ben Gurion toward the Arab states. The change was opposed by some members of the coalition government.

The Libyan prime minister began a series of talks in London today on the 1953 treaty which gives Britain the right to base troops in Libya. Libya reportedly asked for economic aid.

The State Department today denounced the violance that led Saturday to the death of an American vice-consul on the island of Cyprus. The department said the fatal injury of William Boteler, due to a bomb explosion, was "a tragic reminder that violence is a blind and senseless course in the settlement of international problems."

In Moscow today, Marshal Tito continued his talks with Soviet leaders. And a Yugoslav spokesman said they agreed on means of strengthening ties between the Communist parties of Russia and Yugoslavia. Tito said at a reception tonight that nothing has been done that will alter his relations with the West.

French Foreign Minister Pineau talked with Secretary of State Dulles for more than two hours today at the State Department. Pineau said afterward that they discussed his plan for channeling foreign aid through the United Nations. He declined to report Mr. Dulles' reaction..but emphasized it is not his intention to have all (or even most) American aid distributed through the U.N. The subject of Algeria did not come up at today's meeting. Pineau said that problem, and the problem of the Middle East, probably will be taken up tomorrow. The talks will continue through Wednesday.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee completed action on the foreign aid bill today...and sent it to the Senate floor. Chairman George said he expects the full Senate to start debating the measure on Wednesday. The Foreign Relations Committee approved a bill that restores 702-million of the 1-billion, 100-million dollars cut out of the program by the House. The committee vote was 13 to 2, with Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota and Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana casting the dissenting votes.

Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State said in a Senate speech that the basic concepts of the foreign aid program should be reviewed. He called it, at present, "a clumsy patchwork". The Foreign Relations Committee then proposed that 300-thousand dollars be spent for such a study. The committee would conduct the investigation, with a view to making recommendations by next Freruary 15th. That it laarns would be used in helping to determine future aid programs.

The Senate Appropriations Committee approved an extra billion, 160-million dollars today for the Air Force. The vote was 13 to 12 and cut across party lines. Of the additional money, 800-million dollars would be used to step up production of strategic aircraft, including the B-52 intercontinental bomber.

President Eisenhower talked with Vice President Nixon for fifteen minutes today...and also had a brief conference with Secretary of State Dulles and members of the White House staff. News Secretary Hagerty quoted the President as saying he hoped Congress would approve "a major portion" of his foreign aid program. Reporters asked Mr. Nixon if there was any discussion of politics, while he was with the President. Nixon said, "The answer is no." He added that he had every confidence Mr. Eisenhower would make "the proper decision" with regard to seeking a second term.

The wage policy committee of the United Steelworkers Union has authroized its negotiators to call a strike, if agreement on a new contract is not reached by June 30th, the date the present contract expires. The wage policy committee accused the three largest steel producers -- U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic--of having offered a five year contract on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis. It calimed this constituted a refusal to bargain in good faith. The union has broken off joint talks with the "Big Three" steel producers. Spearate negotiations with some of the other companies are scheduled for tomorrow.

The visit of the new Soviet Foreign Minister, Shepilov, to Egypt, and of French Foreign Minister Pineau to Washington, were not timed to coincide. Nevertheless they are part of the same large picture. Mr. Shepilov, who engineered the Czech Arms deal with Egypt before he became Foreign Minister, is not in the Middle East to collect dividends from this policy. He wants closer ties with the Arab countries. Monsieur Pineau, whose socialist-led government is waging costly war with Algerian rebels, hopes to get the support or at least the encouragement of Washington for that conflict. That is, he wants us to favor the French cause, which would mean that we didn't favor the Arab cause.

Mr. Shepilov's objective, of course, isn't to win Arabs as Arabs. It is to establish Soviet power in the Mediterranean where it has been excluded for so long. And it is to break the Western monopoly of Middle Eastern oil. The Arabs are the means to those ends. And Monsieur Pineau's objective isn't to defeat the Algerian Arabs as Arabs, but to save French power and prestige at home and abroad. The chief trouble with Monsieur Pineau's mission at this time is that Secretary Dulles, however much he may sympathize with the French, can't openly take sides against the Algerian rebels without offending all Arabs. And that would play into the hands of Mr. Shepilov. Mr. Dulles must be unhappy in this position, certainly Monsieur Pineau is. All they can talk about without embarrassment is making NATO over, and the best way to channel an aid program.

Mut Mr. Shepilov is having a thoroughly good time. His policy of arming Egypt has paid sensational dividends. Russia by now must be counted a de facto power in the mediterranean. And the policy can pay still more. All Mr. Shepilov needs to do is to combine two offers. One is to submit better terms for building the upper Nile dam than the West, the other is to espouse the cause of the Arab states against Israel in the United Nations. That would mean going back to the boundaries assigned to Israel before that country's war with the Arab states.

To say that Mr. Shepilov is having a good time is not to say that he can make both these offers with complete safety. A bid to build the Nile dam can be made without putting the cold war into a higher gear. Russia might even share construction costs with the West, which would be a big Kremlin victory, but which could be called a test of peaceful cooperation. But if the Kremlin sides openly against Israel, the consequences could ge grave to all concerned.

For Israel would refuse to accept a drastically reduced territory, and hostilities might result, with a big local war probable, and an extension of that war possible.

The Russians nowadays weigh the risks quite carefully. Afte the Hammarskjold mission to Palestine, they suddenly turned off the pro-Arab faucet, and began to play up to Israel. That made a unanimous resolution in the U.N. on the mission possible. But now Mr. Shepilov is guest of Egypt at one of the most significant moments in its recent history, being invited to celebrate the British withdrawal from Suez. Certainly the Egyptians expect him to turn on the Arab faucet again, and shut off the good will to Israel. They have some reason to expect something. The Kremlin is going a job of exchanges and propaganda on the Middle East that makes the estern effort look puny in comparison. Not so long ago Arab leaders were so fearful that communist penetration might lead to their downfall, that they rejected all Kremlin advances. But since the Egyptian arms deal, the dread of communism has declined. And the Kremlin seems to have toned down its infiltration campaign, and is stressing Soviet helpfulness, culture and dove of peace. The result is that the Russians are liked, not feared, whereas the West - the United States included - is generally disliked.

To look at Monsieur Pineau's mission again for a moment, it is fair to point out that the present French government has gone further to recognize and placate Algerian nationalism, than any of its predecessors. Its policy is to put down the revolt first, and then negotiate. It promises to negotiate with duly elected Algerians, which means the Nationalists of sure of big concessions. It has given up its claim that Algeria is part of metropolitan France and must so remain. It has been said, that the status of Algeria can be somewhere between a French province and an independent country. But these promises have not won friends, while the war on the rebels is multiplying enemies at an alarming rate. Before the 350,000 French soldiers descended on Algeria, the revolt was ill-led and localized, and without much open support from Algerian moderates. The more the troops came, the more the revolt spread. Today it has the open backing of virtually all Algerian moderates, and of all Arab neighbors, including Tunisia and Morocco who so recently won their independence from France. This is not a case of too little and too late, for it isn't too little. But it is certainly proving to be too late.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians have noted the tide of nationalism..and are using it, wherever possible, for their own gain. Chester Bowles once said, "As long as ideas influence the minds of men, and as long as men and their aspirations are a major component of power, ideas ---good and bad--will continue to upset nations, defy armies and write history."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 19, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will remain in Walter Reed Hospital until at least the middle of next week. Earlier reports had indicated that Mr. Eisenhower might go home from the hospital on Sunday or Monday. News Secretary Hagerty says the fact that the President will stay in the hospital a little longer than expected does not reflect any change for the worse in Mr. Eisenhower's condition. The latest medical bulletin says the President's condition "continues to progress very satisfactorily."

Reporters asked Hagerty again today about the apparent conflict between Mr. Eisenhower's doctors and other medical experts as to the likelihood of the recurrence of ileitis, the disease with which the President was stricken. Doctors attending the President have taken the position that ileitis seldom recurs in persons that are Mr. Eisenhower's age. Today, Hagerty took the matter up with the attending medical men and then issued a statement saying: "The President's doctors have no intention of engaging in controversy with other doctors who have no personal knowledge of the case. Each case," the statement said, "is a law unto itself." One of the attending surgeons... Dr. Isidor Ravdin... told reporters today that he personally had "never" seen a recurrence of ileitis, after successful surgery in a man of Eisenhower's age.

The State Department has rejected a proposal that Russia's chief delegate at the United Nations be made to leave the United States. The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee recommended last month that the Soviet delegate be expelled because, the subcommittee said, his staff has used "coercion and duress" to bring about the re-defection of five Russian sailors, who had been granted asylum in this country. The State Department says action already taken... including the expulsion of two members of the delegate's staff... is deemed sufficient to prevent the recurrence of such incidents.

The United Nations announced today that the Security Council will meet on Thursday to discuss the Algerian question. The meeting was scheduled at the request of 13 countries of the African-Asian bloc. France has insisted that Algeria is an internal question, not proper for U.N. debate.

→

The French sent two rebels to the guillotine today in Algiers. The executions are the first since the start of the revolt in November, 1954.

On Cyprus today, a bomb was thrown into a car, carrying the bodies of three of the 19 British servicemen who died in a forest fire on Sunday. The British chaplain accompanying the bodies escaped injury. But three passersby were hurt.

London sources say that Britain may soon make the Cypriots a new offer of local self-government, in an effort to end the violence. The offer is said to be coupled with a promise of a plebiscite... at some later date... on the issue of union with Greece. Until the plebiscite, which might not be for another ten years, Britain would retain control of defense and foreign affairs.

Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia has concluded his talks with Soviet leaders in Moscow... but their joint communique, which was scheduled to be issued tonight, will not be signed until tomorrow. Both Communist Party Boss Khrushchev and Marshal Tito made speeches today. Khrushchev proclaimed "great success" in solidifying relations with Yugoslavia... and said, "No power on earth is capable of dividing the socialist countries." Tito's speech was slightly different in tone. My colleague, Dan Schorr, reports from Moscow that Tito seemed to make a point of saying that his visit to Russia was simply "a logical continuation of our policy of improving relations with all states on an equal basis."

In Cairo, an Egyptian source said today that Russia has offered to lend Egypt a billion, 120-million dollars, so it can build the Aswan Dam. The offer is said to have been made by Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, who is currently visiting Egypt. The source said the matter is being "carefully studied".

Premier Nasser proclaimed the end of martial law in Egypt today. The announcement climaxed a celebration of the evacuation of the Suez Canal Zone by British troops.

The United States today joined Britain and France in accepting a Russian invitation, to witness the withdrawal of 30-thousand Russian troops from East Germany on Wednesday.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles continued his talks with French Foreign Minister Pineau./ The discussion touched today on Algeria, and Pineau said afterward, that he is "satisfied" with the American position./ Tomorrow, they will issue a joint communique.

Secretary Dulles told the Senate Appropriations Committee today, that this is no time to cut down on foreign aid. Mr. Dulles noted "encouraging signs" in the Soviet bloc and said, "To relax our efforts would lead our allies to relax their efforts, and weaken the entire structure of free world alliances." This, he said, is a time "when resoluteness offers bright prospects, of achieving solid results."

The House Ways and Means Committee voted today to fix the national debt limit... temporarily... at 278-billion dollars./ That's 3-billion dollars more than the permanent legal ceiling, but 3-million less than the "temporary" ceiling, in effect since August, 1954. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey told the committee, a lower temporary ceiling is possible, because of the budget surplus, which will be used to reduce the national debt. He warned Congress against cutting taxes this year.

The Senate Interior Committee has approved the Hell's Canyon project, for federal construction of a dam on the Snake River, in the Pacific Northwest.

And the House Rules Committee has agreed to vote tomorrow on whether to send the controversial school construction bill to the House floor.

Democratic members of a House subcommittee charged today that contracts for expanding a government-owned nickel plant in Cuba were obtained through political influence. They also accuse the Justice Department of withholding evidence "which might well point to further irregularities in the expansion program." The Democratic charges are based on hearings the subcommittee held last winter. Republican members of the subcommittee want further hearings. They say the findings of the Democratic majority "have not been properly substantiated."

Edward R. Murrow: June 19, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

It is obvious that international communism is going through a change — certainly a change in tactics. President Tito of Yugoslavia, who is still in Moscow, has restored relations between his Communist party, and the mother party in the Soviet Union. This is a significant step. At the same time the Italian Communists under Togliatti, and the French Communists under Thorez, are criticizing the campaign in the Soviet Union to downgrade Stalin and blame everything on him.

It probably only has "just happened" that Togliatti and Thorez are in agreement on the anti-Stalin campaign. Thorez is an outright Stalinist, not a revisionist. Togliatti is a revisionist and not a Stalinist. And it is superficially puzzling how they should agree at the very moment that Tito, the greatest rebel against Communist Party domination, has dropped his rebellion. It almost looks as though Tito were now qualified to be the missionary for Khrushchev to all communist parties who might feel like going into revolt as he did. That is, he could try to persuade Thorez and Togliatti, not to mention British and American communists, not to press their criticism of Khrushchev too far.

But this superficial view may not be sound. For one thing, Tito doesn't think he has been swallowed up again by the Soviet Party. He thinks he is more independent than ever. He thinks what has happened is that the mother party apologized to him and he accepted the apology, without giving up any of his independence. Tito is an arch-revisionist, and he conferred with Togliatti, another arch-revisionist, before he went to Moscow. Both of them want local parties to have more control over their own affairs. Thorez, on the other hand, really belongs to the old guard of Russian communism. He naturally would side with Molotov and Kaganovich against Khrushchev. He isn't interested so much in freeing the French Party from Moscow control, as he is in defending Stalin. And he isn't the only Stalinist in the communist movement outside Russia. The Czech leaders are not revisionist. To side against Stalin would mean rehabilitating Slansky, who was executed for Tito-ism, among other things. That would be a sickening undertaking for Czech leaders. Hungary cannot be listed as revisionist so long as Rakozy remains in power. Only Poland, of the satellites, is overwhelmingly on the revisionist side.

It is, of course, possible that the revisionists outside the Soviet Union are being put up to fight for independence by the Khrushchev leadership itself. That is, it would be useful to the Kremlin to have communist parties abroad appear to be independent, or even be independent. That would make it easier for popular fronts to be set up. The Kremlin firmly believes that popular fronts would be the most effective force to shatter the Western alliances.

If it looks like a risky gamble to grant independence to the communist parties abroad, there is an element of safety that is only now coming to be known. In a recent meeting of the Soviet and satellite leaders in East Germany, it was decided to mold into a master program all the five-year plans of all the satellites and the Soviet Union. The aim is to provide a complete division of labor within the Communist bloc. This would set up such economic interdependence as to make any economic autonomy impossible. And if economic independence is impossible, a little political independence would be relatively harmless.

It is much too early to say how things will turn out for communism either inside or outside the Soviet Union. The changes going on may be quite far-reaching. It appears now that the revisionists inside the Soviet Union will win out. The recent ouster of Molotov and Kaganovich from their ministeries was a staggering defeat for the Stalinist old guard. But it was a defeat in the leadership bracket, and it still remains to be seen how rank and file communists are going to take the debasement of Stalin.

But assuming the revisionists come through unscathed, that does not mean that elementary communist doctrine is going to be revised. A. I. Sobilev, assistant editor of Kommunist, said last month that social progress without the class struggle was a revisionist concept that all Marxists must reject. And he laid down the following principle, which is worth noting closely: "Depending on circumstances, the working classes" he said, "will use either peaceful means or force in the struggle for power."

That, rather than the phrase "peaceful co-existence" can still be accepted as the credo of the present Kremlin leadership.

Stewart Metz.

Word for Today

The Russians have debunked Stalin, just as George Orwell predicted. And Orwell said, "I should not regard this as an advance. Nothing is gained by teaching a parrot a new word." The change, however, has required not a little adapting. Surely these are times when many Communists are saying with Marc Connolly, "Everything nailed down is comin' loose."

Goodnight anf good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will remain in Walter Reed Hospital until at least the middle of next week. Earlier reports had indicated that Mr. Eisenhower might go home from the hospital on Sunday or Monday. News Secretary Hagerty says the fact that the President will stay in the hospital a little longer than expected does not reflect any change for the worse in Mr. Eisenhower's condition. The latest medical bulletin says the President's condition "continues to progress very satisfactorily."

Reporters asked Hagerty again today about the apparent conflict between Mr. Eisenhower's doctors and other medical experts as to the likelihood of the recurrence of ileitis, the disease with which the President was stricken. Doctors attending the President have taken the position that ileitis seldom recurs in persons that are Mr. Eisenhower's age. Today, Hagerty took the matter up with the attending medical men and then issued a statement saying: "The President's doctors have no intention of engaging in controversy with other doctors who have no personal knowledge of the case. Each case, " the statement said, "is a law unto itself." One of the attending surgeons...Dr. Isidor Ravdin..told reporters today that he personally had "never" seen a recurrence of Ileitis, after successful surgery in a man of Eisenhower's age.

The State Department has rejected a proposal that Russia's chief delegate at the United Nations be made to leave the United States. The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee recommended last month that the Soviet delegate be expelled because, the subcommittee said, his staff has used "coercion and duress" to bring about the re-defecation of fove Russian sailors, who had been granted asylum in this country. The State Department says action already taken..including the expulsion of two members of the delegate's staff...is deemed sufficient to present the recurrence of such incidence.

The United Nations announced today that the Security Council will meet on Thursday to discuss the Algerian question. The meeting was scheduled at the request of 13 countries of the African-Asian bloc. France has insisted that Algeria is an internal question, not proper for U.N. debate.

The French sent two rebels to the guillotine today in Agliers. The executions are the first since the start of the revolt in November, 1954.

On Cyprus today, a bomb was thrown into a car carrying the bodies of three of the 19 British servicemen who dies in a forest fire on Sunday. The British chaplain accompanying the bodies escaped injury. But three passersby were hurt.

London sources say that Britain may soon make the Cypriots a new offer of local self-government in an effort to end the violence. The offer is said to be coupled with a promise of a plebiscite..at some later date..on the issue of union with Greece. Until the plebiscite, which might not be for another ten years, Britain would retain control of defense and foreign affairs.

Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia has concluded his talks with Soviet leaders in Moscow...but their joint communique, which was scheduled to be issued tonight, will not be signed until tomorrow. Both Communist Party Boss Khrushchev and Marshal Tito make speeches today. Khrushchev proclaimed "great success" in solidifying relations with Yugoslavia..and said, "No power on earth is capable of dividing the socialist countries." Tito's speech was slightly different in tone. My colleague, Dan Schorr, reports from Moscow that Tito seemed to make a point of sayin that his visit to Russia was simply "a logical continuation of our policy of improving relations with all states on an equal basis."

In Cairo, an Egyptian source said today that Russia has offered to lend Egypt a billion, 120-million dollars, so it can build the Aswan Dam. The offer is said to have been made by Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, who is currently visiting Egypt. The source said the matter is being "carefully studied."

Premier Nasser proclaimed the end of martial law in Egypt today. The announcement climaxed a celebration of the evacuation of the Suez Canal Zone by British troops.

The United Stated today joined Britain and France in accepting a Russian invitation to witness the withdrawal of 30-thousand Russian troops from East Germany on Wednesday.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles continued his talks with French Foreign Minister Pineau. The discussion touched today on Algeria, and Pineau said afterward that he is "satisfied" with the American position. Tomorrow, they will issue a joint communique.

Secretary Dulles told the Senato Appropriations Committee today that this is no time to cut down on foreign aid. Mr. Dulles noted "encouraging signs" in the Soviet bloc and said, "To relax our efforts would lead our allies to relax their efforts and weaken the entire structure of free world alliances." This, he said, is a time "when resoluteness offers bright prospects of achieving solid results."

The House Ways and Means Committee voted today to fix the national debt limit..temporarily..at 278 - billion dollars. That's 3-billion dollars more than the permaent legal ceiling, but 3-million less than the "temporary" leiling in effect since August 1954. Secertary of the Treasury Humphrey told the committee a lower temporary ceiling is possible because of the budget surplus, which will be used to reduce the national debt. He warned Congress against cutting taxes this year.

The Senate Interior Committee has approved the Hell's Canyon project for federal construction of a dam on the Snake River in the Pacific Northwest.

And the House Rules Committee has agreed to vote tomorrow on whether to send the controversial school construction bill to the House floor.

It is obvious that international communism is going through a change - certainly a change in tactics. President Tito of Yugoslavia, who is still in Moscow, has restored relations between his Communist party, and the mother party in the Soviet Union. This is a significant step. At the same time the Italian Communists under Togliatti, and the French Communists under Thorez, are criticizing the campaign in the Soviet Union to downgrade Stalin and blame everything on him.

It probably only has "just happened" that Togliatti and Thorez are in agreement on the anti-Stalin campaign. Thorez is an outright Stalinist, not a revisionist. Togliatti is a revisionist, and not a Stalinist. And it is superficially puzzling how they should agree at the very moment that Tito, the greatest rebel against Communist Prrty domination, has dropped his rebellion.. It almost looks as though Tito were now qualified to be the missionary for Khrushchev to all communist parties who might feel like going into revolt as he did. That is, he could try to persuade Thorez and Togliatti, not to mention British and American communists, not to press their criticism of Khrushchev too far.

But this superficial view may not be sound. For one thing, Tito doesn't think he has been swallowed up again by the Soviet Party. He thinks he is more independent than ever. He thinks that has happened is that the other party apologized to him and he accepted the apology, without giving up any of his independence. Tito is an arch-revisionist, and he conferred with Togliatti, another arch-revisionist, before he went to Moscow. Both of them want local parties to have more control over their own affairs.

Thorez, on the other hand, really belongs to the old guard of Russian communism. He naturally would side with Molotov and Kaganovich against Khrushchev. He isn't interested so much in freeing the French Party from Moscow control, as he is in defending Stalin. And he isn't the only Stalinist in the communist movement outside Russia. The Czech leaders are not revisionist. To side against Stalin would mean rehabilitating Slansky, who was executed for Tito-ism, among other things. That would be a sickening undertaking for Czech leaders. Hungary cannot be listed as revisionist so long as Rakozy remains in power. Only Poland, of the satellites, is overwhelmingly on the revisionist side.

It is, of course, possible that the revisionists outside the Soviet Union are being put up to fight for independence by the Khrushchev leadership itself. That is, it would be useful to the Kremlin to have communist parties abroad appear to be independent, or even be independent. That would make it easier for popular fronts to be set up. The Kremlin firmly believes that popular fronts would be the most effective force th shatter the Western alliances.

If it looks like a risky gamble to grant independence to the communist parties abroad, there is an element of safety that is only now coming to be known. In a recent meeting of the Soviet and satellite leaders in East Germany, it was decided to mold into a master program all the five-year plans all the satellites and the Soviet Union. The aim is to provide a complete division of labor within the Communist bloc. This would set up such economic interdependence as to make any economic autonomy impossible. And if economic independence is impossible, a little political independence would be relatively harmless.

But assuming the revisionists come through unscathed, that does not mean that elementary communist doctrine is going to be revised. A.I. Sobilev, assistant editor of "Kommunist", said last month that social progress without class struggle was a revisionist concept that all Marxists must reject. And he laid down the following principle, which is worth noting closely: "Depending on circumstances, the working classes" he said, "will use either peaceful means or force in the struggle for power."

That, rather than the phrase "peaceful co-existence" can still be accepted as the credo of the present Kremlin leadership.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Stewart Metz.

METZ: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians have debunked Stalin, just as George Orwell predicted. And Orwell said, "I should not regard this as an advance. Nothing is gained by teaching a parrot a new word." The change, however, has required not a littl adapting. Surely these are times, when many Communists are saying with Marc Connolly, "Everything nailed down is coming loose."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 20, 1956

This is the news:

Russia and Yugoslavia signed agreements today, strengthening ties between the two countries./ One agreement, signed by Marshal Tito and Soviet Premier Bulganin, dealt with foreign policy./ With regard to German reunification, it called for direct negotiations between East and West Germany. The Formosa problem, it said, should be solved in accordance with the "rights" of Communist China./ The agreement praised Russia's action in demobilizing a million, 100-thousand men, but made no mention of international control over disarmament./ And it called for an end to the Western embargo on shipment of strategic goods to the Soviet bloc./ Tito also signed a separate agreement with Communist Party Boss Khrushchev, defining the future relationship of the Communist parties in Russia and Yugoslavia./ This agreement said it was "indispensable" that the existing contacts between the parties should continue and develop. But it was stated, at the same time, that this cooperation "should be based on complete freedom of will and equality."

→

In a ceremony following the release of these agreements, or communiques, Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov made a speech. Zhukov said, in the course of that speech, that Russia and Yugoslavia would fight "shoulder to shoulder" in any future war. (I should like to discuss this speech, and other matters attending the Tito visit, in a few minutes).

It was announced tonight that President Voroshilov of Russia has accepted an invitation to visit Yugoslavia in the near future. The ~~minum~~ exact date has not been fixed.

French Foreign Minister Pineau... and Secretary of State Dulles... ended their talks today in Washington. In a final communique, the two Western leaders advocated world disarmament "through an effective system of control." Such an agreement on disarmament, they said, should be reached through the framework of the United Nations. And real security, they said, requires a program dealing with atomic weapons. Pineau and Dulles also agreed, in their joint communique, that NATO must be strengthened by an improvement of cooperation, politically and economically. Middle East problems, they said, should be settled through the United Nations. And

Mr. Dulles expressed hope that France will be able to find "a liberal and just solution" to the Algerian question. They both expressed "strong interest" in helping the underdeveloped countries, but there was no endorsement of Monsieur Pineau's plan for channeling a part of that aid through the U.N.

After the issuance of the joint communique, Pineau spoke before the National Press Club,,. and urged the United States to have more dealings with the Communist countries. The only possible result of "international immobilism", he said, is the continuation of "mistrust, distress and want."

Foreign Minister Pineau also conferred with President Eisenhower at Walter Reed Hospital. They talked for about 10 minutes, and Algeria was one of the subjects discussed. Pineau said he was sure the President looks for "a prompt solution" of the Algerian problem.

The United Nations Security Council has put off its debate on Algeria until next Tuesday. The meeting had originally been scheduled for tomorrow. The Soviet delegate asked for the delay, so he could receive new instructions.

In Paris today, the French cabinet approved a number of steps, preliminary to granting the Moslem population of Algeria more local self-government.

Arab nationalists staged a commando raid today in downtown Algiers, in possible retaliation for the execution of two Arab rebels yesterday. Two Europeans were killed in the raid... and 13 others injured.

The Russians began their publicized withdrawal of 33-thousand troops from East Germany today. American, British and French officers witnessed the start of the withdrawal, at the invitation of the Soviet authorities. A considerable number of Russian troops will remain in East Germany, in addition to the armed forces of the East German regime.

Czechoslovakia has sent a note to the United States, demanding 773-thousand dollars compensation in the crash... last January... of a Czech airliner in which 22 persons died. Czechoslovakia insists the aircraft hit a balloon carrying American propaganda leaflets. The United States has denied responsibility in the accident.

No survivors have been found in the crash... early this morning... of a Venezuelan airliner in the Atlantic Ocean, less than 50 miles off the New Jersey coast. The plane, which had developed propellor trouble and was returning to Idlewild Airport, was carrying 64 passengers and a crew of 10. Witnesses said the airplane crashed into the ocean in flames.

In Congress today, the House Rules Committee approved the controversial school aid bill. The vote was 8 to 3. Southern Democrats have opposed the measure on grounds it might lead to a fight over segregation in the public schools. Representative Powell of New York has said he will offer an amendment, denying federal money to states whose schools are segregated. The House is expected to act on the measure next week.

The Senate passed a bill today, authorizing construction of an atomic-powered merchant ship. President Eisenhower has urged construction of such a vessel, to cost in the neighborhood of 37-million dollars. ~~A similar authorization measure was passed last year by the House. And the matter now goes to a conference committee.~~

House-Senate conferees agreed today on a compromise highway construction bill. The highway program... costing nearly 33-billion dollars... would be largely paid for by increased taxes on gasoline, buses, tires and trucks.

Edward R. Murrow: June 20, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

This country is now re-appraising its attitude toward Marshal Tito. He has long contended that his is an independent Communist government; that he doesn't want to be embraced too closely by either Russia or the West. We started supporting Tito in 1948, when the Russians under Stalin flung him out of the Communist club. When Bulganin and Khrushchev took over in Russia, they immediately made it clear that one of their primary purposes was to re-establish good relations with Yugoslavia. Tito has now concluded a prolonged visit to the Soviet Union, where he walked on red carpets and received many spontaneous ovations from the Russian people.

Today's communique indicates that the Russian and Yugoslav comrades are again in a pretty close embrace. The Communist parties of Russia and Yugoslavia will co-operate directly. Governmental relations between the two nations will be the closest possible. Tito favors the admission of Red China to the U.N. He is against the re-unification of Germany, and he opposes making disarmament dependent upon German re-unification. There is nothing to indicate that Tito has made a military alliance with Russia, nothing in the published statement, at least. He continues to insist that he is fully independent. He is due to get about sixty-five million dollars in aid from the United States this year. In most essentials his [redacted] policies parallel those of the Soviet Union.

Dan Schorr cables me from Moscow that the Yugoslav delegation made certain efforts to avoid too close an embrace by the men of the Kremlin. For example Marshal Zhukov said in the event of war, "We will be together shoulder to shoulder as in the last war." When Schorr asked the Yugoslav Foreign Minister whether he agreed with this statement, he received the pained reply that he hoped there would be no future war. Yugoslavia wanted to co-operate with everyone.

There have been marked differences of emphasis in Tito's speeches and those of the Soviet leaders. For example, yesterday Tito said his visit to Russia was a logical consequence of striving for co-operation on equal terms with all nations. But Khrushchev talked about the monolithic unity and cohesion of all Communist countries."

It is obvious that Tito is trying to improve his relations with the Soviet Union, while at the same time preserving his relations with the West. He has been trying to avoid the impression that he is returning to the international Communist fold. But the utterances of the Russian leaders have created precisely that impression. Both countries have their own purpose in presenting the outcome of these talks in different ways. The Russians are saying, in effect, that they made some errors which drove Tito from his natural home in the Communist house, and that they have now allowed him to come home. Tito is saying that he returned a full-grown man, sturdy and independent, and still a Communist. As to which version is closer to the truth - only time can tell. Tito cast himself as being in the driver's seat, coming to encourage liberalization and de-Stalinization in Russia - the symbol of the new Communism. But the Russian leaders have re-established their ideological tie with Tito. They have, in a sense, "de-magnetized" him as a pole of attraction for East European countries. Today's declaration laid the groundwork for a new style association to replace the old Cominform. It is an attempt to weld together what is called Socialist and other progressive movements into a common front.

Today's document, with its emphasis on freedom of action, free exchange of experience, and voluntary participation, is vague enough. But it is nevertheless momentous in its significance. It may establish a new pattern of relations among Communist countries. And it indicates that Communist Parties in the Western nations will try even more desperately to develop a working relationship with other Left Wing groups.

On the surface this relaxation of central control by Moscow would appear to be a victory for Marshal Tito. He has demonstrated that it is possible to be both a Nationalist and a Communist, and to survive. In fact, to be welcomed back into the Big House. His example may encourage and indeed strengthen the Communists in such countries as France and Italy. It may encourage a degree of independence on the part of the Communist leaders in such countries as Poland and Czechoslovakia. But it does nothing to reduce the strength or the threat of the Soviet Union. It brings freedom no nearer to those who are enslaved; it reduces not at all the burdens or the duties imposed upon those who would remain free.

Marshal Tito has survived, due largely to American aid - he has returned. He appears to be in basic agreement with current Russian doctrine. He is trying to play the role of a neutral, independent Communist, which in orthodox Communist doctrine involves him in at least two contradictions.

Word for Today

It has become trite to say that we are living in difficult times. Ralph Waldo Emerson had a partial explanation for our problems when he said, "Nature, when she adds brain, adds difficulty." Henry Clay spoke words of assurance. "With stout hearts and strong arms," he said, "we can surmount all difficulties." ~~It is the story — So we should not despair.~~

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Russia and Yugoslavia signed agreements today, strengthening ties between the two countries. One agreement, signed by Marshal Tito and Soviet Premier Bulganin, dealt with foreign policy. With regard to German reunification, it called for direct negotiations between East and West Germany. The Formosa problem, it said, should be solved in accordance with the "rights" of Communist China. The agreement praised Russia's action in demobilizing a million, 100-thousand men, but made no mention of international control over disarmament. And it called for an end to the Western embargo on shipment of strategic goods to the Soviet bloc. Tito also signed a separate agreement with Communist Party Boss Khrushchev, defining the future relationship of the Communist parties in Russia and Yugoslavia. This agreement said it was "indispensable" that the existing contacts between the parties should continue and develop. But it was stated, at the same time, that this cooperation "should be based on complete freedom of will and equality."

French Foreign Minister Pineau..and Secretary of State Dulles..ended their talks today in Washington. In a final communique, the two Western leaders advocated world disarmament "through an effectice system of control." Such an agreement on disarmament, they said, should be reached through the framework of the United Nations. And real security, they said, requires a program dealing with atomic weapons. Pinea and Dulles also agreed, in their joint communique, that NATO must be strengthened by an improvement of cooperation politically and economically. Middle East problems, they said, should be settled through the United Nations. And Mr. Dulles expressed hope that France will be able to find a "liberal and just solution" to the Algerian question. They both expressed "strong interest" in helping the underdeveloped countries, but there was no endorsement of Monsieur Pineau's plan for channeling a part of that aid through the U.N.

After the issuance of the joint communique, Pineau spoke before the National Press Club..and urged the United States to have more dealings with the Communist countries. The only possible result of "international immobilism", he said, is the continuation of "mistrust, distress and want."

Foreign Minister Pineau also conferred with President Eisenhower at Walter Reed Hospital. They talked for about 10 minutes, and Algeria was ont of the subjects discussed. Pineau said he was sure the President looks for "a prompt solution" of the Algerian problem.

The United Nations Security Council has put off its debate on Algeria until next Tuesday. The meeting had originally been scheduled for tomorrow. The Soviet delegate asked for the delay, so he could receive new instructions.

In Paris today, the French cabinet approved a number of steps, preliminary to granting the Moslem population of Algeria more local self-government.

Arab nationalists staged a commando raid today in downtown Algiers, in possible retaliation for the execution of two Arab rebels yesterday. Two Europeans were killed in the raid....and 13 others injured.

The Russians began their publicized withdrawal of 33-thousand troops from East Germany today. American, British and French officers witnessed the start of the withdrawal, at the invitation of the Soviet authorities. A sonsiderable number of Russian troops will remain in East Germany, in addition to the armed forces of the East German regime.

Czechoslovakia has sent a note to the United States, demanding 773-thousand dollrs compenaation in the crash..last January..of a Czech airliner in which 22 persons died. Czechoslovakia insists the aircraft it a balloon carrying American propaganda leaflets. The United States has denied responsibility in the accident.

No survivors have been found in the crash..early this morning..of a Venezuelan airliner in the Atlantic Ocean, less than 50 miles off the New Jersey coast. The plane, which had developed propellor trouble and was returning to Idlewild Airport, was carrying 64 passengers and a crew of 10. Witnesses said the airplane crashed into the ocean in flames.

In Congress today, the House Rules Committee approved the controversial school aid bill. The vote was 8 to 3. Southern Democrats have opposed the measure on grounds it might lead to a fight over segregation in the public schools. Representative Powell of New York said he will offer an amendment, denying federal money to states whose schools are segregated. The House is expected to act on the measure next week.

The Senate passed a bill today authorizing construction of an atomic-powered merchant ship. President Eisenhower has urged construction of such a vessel, to cost in the neighborhood of 37-million dollars.

House-Senate conferees agreed today on a compromise highway construction bill. The highway program...costing nearly 33 - billion dollars...would be largely paid for by increased taxes on gasoline, buses, tires and trucks.

This country is nor re-appraising its attitude toward Marshal Tito. He has long contended that his is an independent Communist government; that he doesn't want to be embraced too closely by either Russia or the West. We started supporting Tito in 1948, when the Russians under Stalin flung him out of the Communist club. When Bulganin and Khrushchev took over in Russia, they immediately made it clear that one of their primary purposes was to reestablish good relations with Yugoslavia. Tito has now concluded a prolonged visit to the Soviet Union, where he walked on red carpets and received many spontaneous ovations from the Russian people.

Today's communique indicated that the Russian and Yugoslav comrades are again in a pretty close embrace. The Communist parties of Russian and Yugoslavia will cooperate directly. Governmental relations between the two nations will be the closest possible. Tito favors the admission of Red China to the U.N. He is against the reunification of Germany, and he opposes making disarmament dependent upon German re-unification. There is nothing to indicate that Tito has made a military alliance with Russia, nothing in the published statement, at least. He continues to insist that he is fully independent. He is due to get about sixty-five million dollars in aid from the United States this year. In most essentials his policies parallel those of the Soviet Union.

Dan Schorr cables me from Moscow that the Yugoslav delegation made certain erforts to avoid too close an embrace by the men of the Kremlin. For example Marshal Zhukov said in the event of war, "we will be together shoulder to shoulder as in the last war." When Shcorr asked the Yugoslav Foreign Minister whether he agreed with this statement, he received the pained reply that he hopes there would be no future war. Yugoslavia wanted to co-operate with everyone.

There have been marked differences of emphasis in Tito's speeches and those of the Soviet leaders. For example, yesterday Tito said his visit to Russia was a logical consequence of striving for co-operation on equal terms with all nations. But Khrushchev talked about the "monolithic unity and cohesion of all Communist countries."

It is obvious that Tito is trying to improve his relations with the Soviet Union, while at the same time preserving his relations with the West. He has been trying to avoid the impression that he is returning to the international Communist fold. But the utterances of the Russian leaders have created precisely that impression. Both countries have their own purpose in presenting the outcome of these talks in different ways. The Russians are saying, in effect, that they made some errors which drove Tito from his natural home in the Communist house, and that they have now allowed him to come home. Tito is saying that he returned a full-grown man, sturdy and independent, and still a communist. As to which version is closer to the truth - only time can tell. Tito cast humself as being in the driver's seat, coming to encourage liberalization and de-Stalinization in Russia - the symbol of new Communism. But the Russian leaders have re-established their ideological tie with Tito. They have, in a sense, "de-magnetized" him as a pole of attraction for East European countries. Today's declaration laid the groundwork for a new style association to replace the old Cominform. It is an attempt to weld together what is called Socialist and other progressive movements into a common front.

Today's document, with its emphasis on freedom of action, free exchance of experience, and voluntary participation is vague enough. But it is nevertheless momentous in its significance. It may establish a new pattern of relations among Communist countries. And it indicated that Communist Parties in the Western nations will try even more desperately to develop a working relationship with other Left Wing groups.

On the surface this relaxation of central control by Moscow would appear to be a victory for Marshal Tito. He has demonstrated that it is possible to be both a Nationaist and a Communist and to survive. In fact, to be welcomed back into the Big House. His example may encourage and indeed strengthen the Communists in such countries as France and Italy. It may encourage a degree of independence on the part of the Communist leaders in such countries as Poland and Czechoslovakia. But it does nothing to reduce the strength of the threat of the Soviet Union. It brings freedom no nearer to those who are enslaved; it reduces not at all the burdens of the duties imposed upon those who would remain free.

Marshal Tito has survived, due largely to American aid - he has returned. He appears to be in basic agreement with current Russian doctrine. He is trying to play the role of a neutral, independent Communist which in orthodox Communist doctrine involves him in at least two contradictions.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It has become trite to say that we are living in difficult times. Ralph Waldo Emerson had a partial explanation for our problems when he said "Nature, when she adds brain, adds difficulty." Henry Clay spoke words of assurance. "With stout hearts and strong arms," he said, "we can surmount all difficulties ."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thur., June 21, 1956

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that until free elections are allowed in Russia, the world has the right to presume something is basically wrong. Dulles called Communist Party Boss Khrushchev's speech denouncing Stalin "the most damning indictment of despotism ever made by a despot." And he accused Red China's leaders of "trying to outdo Stalin in brutality." Dulles spoke at a Kiwanis meeting in San Francisco.

French Foreign Minister Pineau flies back to Paris tonight, after his series of talks with Secretary Dulles in Washington. Pineau told reporters today that the talks were cordial. "But," he said, "we were not always of the same opinion." (I should like to discuss these differences of opinion in a few minutes).

Former President Truman spoke tonight at a banquet in London... and said, "You and we, and all our friends and associates, should not get careless about our strength or our unity." The common danger, he said, has rarely been greater, though it has often been more spectacular."

→

The foreign minister of Iceland said tonight that his country is determined not to be used any longer as an American base. He said Iceland's stand on this question will not be affected by Sunday's parliamentary elections. In other respects, he said, Iceland will abide by its obligations under the North Atlantic Pact.

The commander of NATO forces... General Gruenther... warned Congress today that any sizeable cut in the foreign aid program would have "a direct, unfavorable impact" on American defense. Gruenther told the Senate Appropriations Committee that the program would provide NATO with new advanced weapons. And a free Europe, he said, "is indispensible to our own security."

The Air Force chief of staff, General Twining, left today to attend the Soviet air show in Moscow on Sunday. Twining told reporters the Russians had arranged an "interesting" itinerary for him outside Moscow. The Associated Press says he will be taken on a tour of secret air installations.

The East German communist leader, Walter Ulbricht, said today that the present rulers of Russia must share, with Stalin, the responsibility for development of the "personality cult". Ulbricht said the central committee of the East German communist party was also to blame for not denouncing the cult of personality while Stalin was still alive. The Italian communist leader, Palmiro Togliatti, made the same kind of announcement last week.

The communist government of East Germany said today that it has released another 691 political prisoners. It said more than 3-thousand "war criminals" had been freed from prison... and that an additional 15-thousand prisoners in other categories were soon to be released.

And the communist government of North Vietnam said it is cutting its army by 80-thousand men... 50-thousand of whom already have been demobilized since the Indo-China War.

The prime minister of Jordan said today that his new government will never make peace with Israel. He referred to Israel as "the usurped part of the Arab world." Only yesterday the Israeli foreign ministry accused Syria and Jordan of issuing threats in violation of the general armistice agreement.

President Eisenhower walked outside his hospital room today for the first time since the operation on June 9th. Mr. Eisenhower strolled into the corridor, where he sat in a chair and chatted with members of the hospital staff. Then he walked back to his bed---altogether, a distance of about 80 feet.

News Secretary Hagerty denied a report that word has been passed to White House officials that Mr. Eisenhower is holding to his decision to seek another term. Hagerty said the question has not been discussed with the President.

~~President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Robert McLeaish as head of the Farmers Home Administration.~~

A special Senate committee resumed its public hearings today on lobbying practices. The witness was John Heyke, president of the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, who is also chairman of a group that opposed the natural gas bill... later vetoed by the President. Heyke said he discussed the measure with presidential assistant Sherman Adams, but that his appointment with Adams had no apparent results. He said he wanted to know if rumors that the Administration was supporting the bill were true... and told the committee ~~that~~ he would not regard asking Adams such a question as "lobbying". He testified that members of his group, registered under the Federal Lobbying Act, did contact a number of senators. But he denied they had done anything improper.

The House today approved a new legal ceiling of 278-billion dollars on the national debt. The measure now goes to the Senate.

~~Governor Chandler of Kentucky has named his highway commissioner, Robert Humphreys, to the Senate... to serve out the unexpired term of the late Senator Barkley. On Monday, Chandler appointed a close political associate, Joseph F. Leary, to serve until November. But Leary declined in the interest of party harmony.~~

Playwright Arthur Miller told the House committee on un-American activities today that he "wpuld't deny" having supported Communist front organizations in the late 40's... that he had made "mistakes". But Miller denied he had ever been "under the discipline" of the Communist Party. (During a recess in the hearing he told reporters it is true; he and Marilyn Monroe plan to get married by the 13th of July).

The blinded labor columnist... Victor Riesel... submitted written testimony today to a Senate subcommittee investigating Communist activities on the New York waterfront. Riesel said the leftist labor leader, Harry Bridges, had tried, unsuccessfully, to gain control over the New Orleans waterfront, as well as the port of New York.

The United Steelworkers resumed joint negotiations today with the nation's three biggest steel companies. A management spokesman said after today's meeting, "We are still miles apart."

Edward R. Murrow: June 21, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

It is not the invention of a new device in diplomacy, for Secretary Dulles and French Foreign Secretary Pineau, in connection with a joint communique - one that almost reeked with harmony - to advertise to the high heavens that they disagree about the changes in Soviet policy.

Monsieur Pineau in a talk yesterday to Washington newsmen virtually called the United States policy toward the Soviet Union "immobilism" and made a studied appeal to the West to give the new Soviet line a thorough trial. The West, he said, had denounced the Iron Curtain for years, and now that the Kremlin was lifting it, the West could not take the blame of keeping it down. Mr. Dulles within a day launched a scathing attack on the new leaders in the Kremlin, calling them close collaborators of Stalin and beneficiaries of his sadistic purges. He did not rule out a test of their new policies, but the only one he was ready to apply was the unification of Germany. This is something that doesn't greatly interest Monsieur Pineau, though he pays lip service to it. In fact he told Mr. Dulles that he learned on his recent trip to Moscow that the present Kremlin leaders do not want German unification and will agree to it only on their own terms. Monsieur Pineau wants to work with the Russians even if they don't unify Germany.

To have two such speeches follow a conference between the United States and one of its principle allies is not, as I said, a new diplomatic technique. It is what it appears to be, an undiplomatic and highly disturbing event. It leaves no doubt that all the points of agreement listed in the communique are overshadowed by the disagreement about the Soviet Union. There were other differences in the talks - at least six - but these others were of the kind to be expected between friends, and meant no weakening of the alliance. But if the French, not having persuaded Mr. Dulles to take a softer line toward Russia, decide to do it without America, and try to enlist co-operation from other European governments, that would be serious. Western unity would be disintegrating and American leadership would be in danger of an eclipse.

Monsieur Pineau regards himself as much of an apostle of democracy as Mr. Dulles, and wants to keep the flag of individual liberty flying. In his talks with Mr. Dulles he proposed that the Western governments sit down together and decide how best to exploit the new Soviet line. He urged that they take advantage of human contacts and economic concessions. Specifically, he suggested that each Western Power should take on one satellite in which its prestige and influence are high, and concentrate on that country. He nominated Britain for missionary duties in Poland, and France for similar work in Hungary. But Mr. Dulles was not favorable to the idea. He was sure that any ~~rapprochement~~ weaking with communists would undermine NATO and other collective security alliances. He believes it is too early to know whether Soviet policy has genuinely changed.

It is instructive to see how this argument affected Monsieur Pineau. He said - in his Washington speech - that he simply did not wish to discuss whether the Russian leaders are sincere. "In foreign policy" he declared, "this is a problem removed from reality. What counts are facts, and facts often change intentions." Changing facts have changed Soviet policy, he thinks. And he urged that the West try the experiment of co-operating with the Russians. If it didn't work, he said in effect, the policy can be reconsidered. What do we risk, he asked, if the community we have organized for security purposes remains strong?

This is clearly the crucial question, and the nub of the differences between Mr. Dulles and Monsieur Pineau. Mr. Dulles' answer is that what we risk is, that in the course of the experiment we lose our collective unity and strength. Then if we find that the Soviet leaders were not sincere, and couldn't be trusted, he is saying that it will be too late to save ourselves, at least without colossal effort.

We can assume that Mr. Dulles and Monsieur Pineau had lively arguments along these lines in private. / Now, it would seem, that having failed to convince each other in private, each one hopes to get the public to side with him. / But it is obvious that while such a debate goes on, a weakening of Western unity is being demonstrated.

Ted Pearson.—

Word for Today

France has suggested a new approach to Russia, and Secretary of State Dulles has shown... plainly... he disagrees. Euripides said, "If all men defined 'honorable' and 'wise' alike, there would be no debate on earth." Oliver Goldsmith observed, "In two opposite opinions, if one be perfectly reasonable, the other cannot be perfectly right."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that until free elections are allowed in Russia, the world has the right to presume something is basically wrong. Dulles called Communist Party Boss Khrushchev's speech denouncing Stalin "the most damning indictment of despotism ever made by a despot." And he accused Red China's leaders of "trying to outdo Stalin in brutality." Dulles spoke at a Kiwanis meeting in San Francisco.

French Foreign Minister Pineau flies back to Paris tonight, after his series of talks with Secretary Dulles in Washington. Pineau told reporters today that the talks were cordial. "But", he said, "we were not always of the same opinion." (I should like to discuss these differences of opinion in a few minutes.)

Former President Truman spoke tonight at a ba quet in London...and said, "You and we, and all our friends and associates, should not get careless about our strength or our unity." The common danger, he said, has rarely been greater, though is has often been more spectacular."

The foreign minister of Iceland said tonight that his country is determined not to be used any longer as an American base. He said Iceland's stand on this question will not be affected by Sunday's parliamentary llections. In other respects, he said, Iceland will abide by its obligations under the North Atlantic Pact.

The commander of NATO forces...General Gruenther..warned Congress today that and sizeable cut in the foreign aid program would have "a direct, unfavorable impact" on American defense. Gruenther told the Senate Appropriations Committee that the program would provide NATO with new advanced weapons. And a free Europe, he said, "is indispensible to our own security."

The Air Force chief of staff, General Twining, left today to attend the Soviet air show in Moscow on Sunday. Twining told reporters the Russians had arranged an "interesting" itinerary for him outside Moscow. The Associated Press says he will be taken on a tour of secret air installations.

The East German communist leader, Walter Ulbright, said today that the present rulers of Russia must share, with Stalin, the responsibility for development of the "personality cult". Ulbirght said the central committee of the East German communist party was also to blame for not denouncing the cult of personality while Stalin was still alive. The Italian communist leader, Palmiro Togliatti, made the same kind of announcement last week.

The Communist government of East Germany said today that it has released another 691 political prisoners. It said more than 3-thousand "war criminals" had been freed from prison..and that an additional 15-thousand prisoners in other categories were soon to be released.

And the communist government of North Vietnam said it is cutting its army by 80-thousand men...50-thousand of whom already have been demobilized since the Indo-China War.

The prime minister of Jordan said today that his new government will never make peace with Israel. He referred to Israel as "the usurped part of the Arab world." Only yesterday the Israeli foreign ministry accused Syria and Jordan of issuing threats in violation of the general armistice agreement.

President Eisenhower walked outside his hospital room today for the first time since the operation on June 19th. Mr. Eisenhower strolled into the corridor where he sat in a chair and chattered with members of the hospital staff. Then he walked back to his bed---altogether, a distance of about 80 feet.

News Secretary Hagerty denied a report that word has been passed to White House officials that Mr. Eisenhower is holding to his decision to seek another term. Hagerty said the question has not been discussed with the President.

A special Senate committee resumed its public hearings today on lobbying practices. The witness was John Heyke, president of the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, who is also chairman of a group that opposed the natural gas bill.... later vetoed by the President. Heyke said he discussed the measure with presidential assistant Sherman Adams, but that his appointment with Adams had no apparent results. He said he wanted to know if rumors that the Administration was supporting the bill were true..and told the committee he would not regard asking Adams such a question as "lobbying". He testified that members of his group, registered under the Federal Lobbying Act, did contact a number of senators. But he denied they had done anything improper.

The House today approved a new legal ceiling of 278-billion dollars on the national debt. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Playwright Arthur Miller told the House committee on un-American activities today that he "wouldn't deny" having supported Communist front organizations in the late '40's. ...that he had made "mistakes". But Miller denied he had ever been "under the discipline" of the Communist party. (During a recess in the hearing he told reporters it is true, he and Marilyn Monroe plan to get married by the 13th of July.)

The blinded labor columnist...Victor Riesel..submitted written testimony today to a Senate subcommittee investigating Communist activities on the New York waterfront. Riesel said the leftist labor leader, Harry Bridges, had tried, unsuccessfully, to gain control over the New Orleans waterfront as well as the port of New York.

The United Steelworkers resumed joint negotiations today tith the nation's three biggest steel companies. A management spokesman said after today's meeting, "We are still miles apart."

It is not the invention of a new device in diplomacy, for Secretary Dulles and French Foreign Secretary Pineau, in connection with a joint communique - one that almost reeked with harmony --to advertise to the high heavens that they disagree about the changes in Soviet policy.

Monsieur Pineau in a talk yesterday to Washington newsmen virtually called the United States policy toward the Soviet Union "immobilism" and made a studied appeal to the West to give the new Soviet line a thorough trial. The West, he said, had denounced the Iron Curtain for years, and now that the Kremlin was lifting it, the West could not take the blame of keeping it down.

Mr. Dulles within a day launched a scathing attack on the new leaders in the Kremlin, calling them close collaborators of Stalin and beneficiaries of his sadistic purges. He did not rule out a test of their policies, but the only one he was ready to apply was the unification of Germany. This is something that doesn't greatly interest Monsieur Pineau, though he pays lip service to it. In fact he told Mr. Dulles that he learned on his recent trip to Moscow that the present Kremlin leaders do not want German unification and will agree to it only on their own terms. Monsieur Pineau wants to work with the Russians even if they don't unify Germany.

To have two such speeches follow a conference between the United States and one of its principle allies is not, as I said, a new diplomatic technique. It is what it appears to be, an undiplomatic and highly distrubing event. It leaves no doubt that off th points of agreement listed in the communique, are overshadowed by the disgareement about the Soviet Union. There were other differences in the talks -- at least six -- but these others were of the kind to be expected between friends, and meant no weakening of the alliance.

But if the French, not having persuaded Mr. Dulles to take a softer line toward Russia, decided to do it without America, and try to enlist co-operation from other European governments, that would be serious. Western unity would be disintegrating and American leadership would be in danger of an eclipse.

Monsieur Pineau regards himself as much of an apostle of democracy as Mr. Dulles, and wants to keep the flag of individual liberty flying. In his talks with Mr. Dulles he proposed that the Western governments sit down together and decide how best to exploit the new Soviet line. He urged that they take advantage of human contacts and economic concessions. Specifically, he suggested that each Western Power should take on one satellite in which its prestige and influence are high, and concentrate on that country. He nominated Britain for missionary duties in Poland, and France for similar work in Hungary. But Mr. Dulles was not favorable to the idea. He was sure than any working with communists would undermine NATO and other collective security alliaces. He believes it is too early to know whether Soviet policy has genuinely changed.

It is instructive to see how this argument affected Monsieur Pineau. He said - in his Washington speech - that he simply did not wish to discuss whether the Russian leaders are sincere. "In foreign policy" he declared, "this is a problem removed from reality. What counts are facts, and facts, often change intentions." Changing facts have changed Soviet policy, he thinks And he urged that the West try the experiment of co-operating with the Russians. If it didn't work, he said in effect, the policy can be reconsidered. What do we risk, he asked, if the community we have organized for security purposes remains strong.

This is clearly the crucial question, and the nub of the differences between Mr. Dulles and Monsieur Pineau. Mr. Dulles' answer is that what we risk is, that in the course of the experiment we lost our collective unity and strength. Then if we find that the Soviet leaders were not sincere, and could'nt be trusted,he is saying that it will be too late to save ourselves, at least without collosal effort.

We can assume that Mr. Dulles and Monsieur Pineau had lively arguments along these lines in private. Now, it would seem, that having failed to convince each other in private, each one hopes to get the public to side with him. But it is obvious that while such a debate goes on, a weakening of Western unity is being demonstrated.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Ted Pearson.

PEARSON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: France has suggested a new approach to Russia, and Secretary of State Dulles has shown...plainly..he disagrees. Euripides said, "If all men defined 'honorable' and 'wise' alike, there would be no debate on earth." Oliver Goldsmith observed, "In two opposite opinions, if one be perfectly reasonable, the other cannot be perfectly right."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 22, 1956

This is the news:

Democratic senators called today for the resignation of Charles E. Wilson as secretary of defense. Wilson told a news conference last night, that congressional efforts to get more money for the Air Force were "phony". The Senate Appropriations Committee recently voted to give the Air Force a billion, 160-million dollars more than the Administration requested. General Lemay of the Strategic Air Command had testified, that considerably more money could be used for the production of B-52 bombers, and other aircraft. Additional testimony subscribed to a stepped-up missiles program. Today, Senator Bridges of New Hampshire... the ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee... accused Wilson of making "an unwarranted slur". Democratic Leader Johnson called Wilson's remark, "revolting to all patriotic Americans", and Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri said, "The usefulness of this cabinet member has come to an end." Not a single Republican voice in the Senate was raised in Wilson's defense. In Quantico, Virginia... where he is attending the annual defense secretaries' conference... Wilson said, "Maybe I shouldn't have said it. If I had thought more about it, I probably wouldn't have used that word."

→

On another subject, Wilson told reporters that the Defense Department is reviewing the military's manpower needs, with the possibility of a further cut in personnel.

President Eisenhower has named Vice President Nixon to represent him at the ceremonies in Manila, marking the 10th anniversary of Philippines independence. Mrs. Nixon will accompany the vice president. The ceremonies with be held on July 4th.

Mr. Eisenhower also accepted the resignation today of Joseph M. Dodge as head of his council on foreign economic policy. Dodge... who formerly served as Director of the Budget... resigned for personal reasons.

The President's condition continues to improve.

The Republican national chairman... Leonard Hall... said today, that there "is not the slightest doubt" that President Eisenhower will seek re-election. Hall made his statement after a meeting... in Washington... of the arrangements committee for the Republican convention. The committee chose Governor Arthur Langlie of Washington as keynote speaker. The temporary chairman of the Republican convention will be Senator Knowland of California. The permanent chairman will again be Representative Martin of Massachusetts. Senator Bush of Connecticut will be chairman of the platform committee.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson... and Democratic Senator Kefauver... spoke from the same platform today in Eldora, Iowa. Kefauver, who is a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, expressed doubt that the Administration comprehends the farmer's problems. The new farm program, he said, is being administered in a "timid and reluctant" manner. Benson replied that the Administration is "determined that farmers shall share fairly in the national prosperity." He noted that, since the first of January, farm prices... on the average... have gone up about 9 percent.

Here in New York, another Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination... Governor Harriman... accused the Administration of bungling the Civil Defense program. Harriman told a House investigating committee that present statutes are "obsolete". In civil defense, he said, the Administration has failed "to recognize its enormously increased responsibilities."

In Washington, a government referee ruled today that persons employed by the Communist Party are eligible for Social Security. The ruling was made on an appeal by seven Communist Party workers, including William Z. Foster, chairman of the Communist Party in the United States. They had been denied Social Security benefits, on grounds that they "performed services in the employ of a foreign government."

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov concluded his series of talks in Cairo today by announcing that Premier Nasser had agreed to visit Moscow in August. Shepilov said... in a farewell speech... that Russia hopes Egypt will always be "a strong, free and independent state." A joint communique (on the results of the talks) said that he and Nasser agreed on the need for closer cooperation "in the political, economic and cultural spheres." The communique made no mention of a Soviet offer to help finance construction of the Aswan Dam. One report says Nasser will wait until after his Moscow trip to decide what to do about offers he has received from both East and West. Shepilov is not returning directly to Moscow. He flew tonight to Damascus for a three-day conference with Syrian leaders.

My colleague, Ernest Leiser, has just returned to Bonn after a trip to Magdeburg, in East Germany. Leiser went to Magdeburg, with other reporters, to witness the withdrawal from that area of some 10-thousand Russian troops---part of the 33-thousand Russia said it was evacuating from the eastern zone. Leiser cables me that if Magdeburg can serve as a basis of judgment, living standards in East Germany have undergone little change. "There is," he reports, "the same expanse of untouched ruins which have now virtually disappeared from the cities of West Germany... the same absence of automobile traffic. The same grayness of both landscape and people... and the same scantily stocked stores." ~~Leiser noticed one major difference. The Russians [redacted] he saw the United States 9th Army turn Magdeburg over to in 1945 were a shaggy, raggle-taggle lot. The Russian troops Leiser saw pull out of Magdeburg this week were "paragons of spit and polish, natty in new uniforms and well equipped."~~

Here in New York today, the steel industry announced that it will start shutting down ~~[redacted]~~ its furnaces next Wednesday or Thursday, if [redacted] negotiations with the United Steelworkers Union remain [redacted] deadlocked. The current contract expires a week from tomorrow. And the union has authorized a strike.

Edward R. Murrow: June 22, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Reports about what General Twining will be able to see in the Soviet Union are being kept vague, and so far cannot be called particularly promising. It is stated that along with the other Western air chiefs he will visit top secret installations. But these turn out to be some aircraft factories, one airfield not previously shown to non-communist visitors - and perhaps more than one - and the Zhukovsky Air Engineering Academy, where Soviet aeronautical research is centered. And obviously, he will see whatever the Soviet high command decides to unveil at the annual Aviation Day ceremony on Sunday.

It may be quite irrational to expect more. We should hesitate to show Soviet visitors our most guarded secrets. The origin of the invitation to General Twining was not a Russian desire to disclose secret weapons or to impress him with a display of Russian armed might. It was the opposite; it arose from a Soviet decision to announce a reduction in its armed forces by 1,200,000 men. At first there was talk of outside inspection to verify this reduction. Harold Stassen proposed it to Khrushchev when they met at a diplomatic reception in London in April after Khrushchev told Stassen that the big cut was being made. Stassen at once said it would be much more convincing if it were accompanied by the kind of inspection he had been trying to sell Soviet delegate Gromyko in the disarmament negotiations. Khrushchev beamed, and told Stassen: Very well, he could send over some American Generals "to wave the boys goodbye." With this in hand, Stassen tried to thaw out Gromyko on joining in an experiment of true inspection. But Gromyko told him that the Soviet reduction was a matter of high honor, and not to be put under suspicion by holding a formal inspection. However, he said, the chiefs of staff would be welcome to the Soviet Union to take a look at the military establishment, which could pass as a kind of inspection. Thereupon the invitation to the Joint Chiefs was informally extended. In the end Washington accepted for General Twining alone, and ruled that other chiefs could go later, depending on what was shown to Twining.

There is plenty he would like to see. At the top of the list is the long-range ballistic missile. We would like to verify whether the Russians are far enough along to fit it with a hydrogen warhead, and whether it can be guided accurately to its target. Western governments know that the Soviet Union has been regularly testing supersonic ballistic missiles in ranges above one thousand miles. But they do not know how operational they are. They may still be prototypes.

Information on this subject is of equal interest to the British and French air chiefs who are seeing everything along with Twining. Once the Soviet Union has an operational missile with a range up to fifteen hundred miles, the air defense of Western Europe may be obsolete, for a vast area would be exposed to devastation without adequate protection. The effect on the United States of the medium-range missile would, of course, be restricted to our forward bases, but Stewart Alsop says that the official estimate is that without these bases, the retaliatory striking power of the Strategic Air Force would be reduced by one-half to two-thirds.

If the Russians show anything giving information on new weapons, General Twining has with him the experts to appraise it. They are Lieutenant-General Donald Putt, deputy chief of staff for development, and Lieutenant-General Thomas Power, chief of air research and development command. But it seems doubtful that these visitors will be taken to the ballistic missile ranges in the Ukraine or the Arctic.

They possibly will be shown a new jet transport plane about which the Russians boasted during the Khrushchev-Bulganin visit to London. It has a capacity of one hundred and seventy persons, and is possibly ahead of anything designed in this country. They might get to see a new supersonic bomber, which is believed to be through its tests, and compares with our

B-58, which is still on the drawing boards. And they may be shown a long-range turbo-jet, called the Bear, which can re-fuel the heavy jet bomber, the Bison. And if the Russians feel expansive they can demonstrate their new ground-to-air missiles.

But judging from the way the visit began, it seems unlikely that the Soviet government will show anything that can be remotely construed as a new threat. The present Soviet line is to concentrate all propaganda on the will to peace and disarmament. The visit was conceived in this spirit. If it turns out to be otherwise, that can only mean that the propaganda line itself has changed.

Word for Today

The experts are looking forward to the Soviet air show on Sunday. As Aristotle said, "All men desire by nature to know." Even if they are shown little, they are bound to learn more of the nature of Soviet air power... and, consequently, of the Soviet military threat. And an old Latin proverb says, "To be forewarned is to be forearmed."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 22, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Democratic senators called today for the resignation of Charles E. Wilson as secretary of defense. Wilson told a news conference last night that congressional efforts to get more money for the Air Force were "phony" The Senate Appropriations Committee recently voted to give the Air Force a billion, 160-million dolars more than the Administration requested. General Lemay of the Strategic Air Command had testified that considerably more money could be used for the production of B-52 bombers and other aircraft. Additiona testimony subscribed to a stepped-up missiles program. Today, Senator Bridges of New Hampshire ..the ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee.. accused Wilson of making "an unwarranted slur." Democratic Leader Johnsnn called Wilson's remark "revolting to all patriotic Americans", and Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri said, "The usefulness of this cabinet member has come to an end." Not a single Republican voice in the Senate was raised in Wilson's defense. In Quantico, Virginia..where he is attending the annual defense secretaries' conference..Wilson said, "Maybe I shouldn't have said it. If I had thought more about it, I probably wouldn't have used that word."

On another subject, Wilson told reporters that the Defense Department is reviewing the military's manpower needs with the possibility of a further cut in personnel.

President Eisenhower has named Vice President Nixon to represent him at ceremonies in Manila marking the10th anniversary of Philippine independence. Mrs. Nixon will accompany the vice president. The ceremonies will be held on July 4th.

Mr. Eisenhower also accepted the resignation today of Joseph M. Dodge as head of his council on foreign economic policy. Dodge..who formerly served as Director of the Budget..resigned for personal reasons.

The President's condition continues to improve.

The Republican national chairman..Leonard Hall...said today that there "is not the slightest doubt" that President Eisenhower will seek re-election. Hall made his statement after a meeting..in Washington..of the arrangements committee for the Republican convention. The committee chose Governor Arthur Langlie of Washington as keynote speaker. The temporary chairman of the Republican convention will be Senator Knowland of California. The permanent chairman will again be Representative Martin of Massachusetts. Senator Bush of Connecticut will be chairman of the platform committee.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson..and Democratic Senator Kefauver...spoke from the same platform today in Eldora, Iowa. Kefauver, who is a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, exressed doubt that the Administration comprehends the farmer's problems. The new farm program, he said, is being administered in a "timid and reluctant" manner. Benson replied that the Administration is "determined that farmers shal share fairly in the national prosperity." He noted that, since the first of January, farm prices..on the average..have gone upabout 9 percent.

Here in New York, another Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination..Governor Harriman..accused the Administration of bungling the Civil Defense program. Harriman told a House investigating committee that present statutes are "obsolete." In civil defense, he said, the Administration had failed "to recognize its enormously increased responsibilities.".

In Washington, a government referee ruled today that persons employed by the Communist Party are eligible for Social Security. The ruling was made on an appeal by seven Communist Party workers, including William Z. Foster, chairmnn of the Communist Party in the United States. They had been denied Social Security benefits, on grounds that they "performed services in the employ of a foreign government."

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov concluded hisseries of talks in Cairo today by announcing that Premier Nasser had agreed to visit Moscow in August. Shepilov said..in a farewell speech..that Russia hopes Egypt will always be "a strong, free and independent state." A joint communique ' on the results of the talk) said that he and Nasser agreed on the need for closer cooperation "in the political, economic and cultural spheres". The communique made no mention of a Soviet offer to help finance construction of the Aswan Dam. One report says Nasser willwait until after his Moscow trip to decide what to do about offers he has received from both East and West. Shepilov is not returning directly to Moscow. He flew tonight to Damascus for a three-day conference with Syrian leaders.

My colleague, Ernest Leiser, has just returned to Bonn after a trip to Magdeburg, in East Germany. Leiser went to Magdeburg, with other reporters, to witness the withdrawal from that area of some 10-thousand Russian troops--part of the 33-thousand Russia said it was evacuating from the Eastern zone. Leiser cables me that if Magdeburg can serve as a basis of judgment, living standards in East Germany have undergone little change. "There is," he reports, "The same expanse of untouched ruins which have now virtually disappeared from the cities of West Germany..the same absence of automobile traff. The same greyness of both landscape and people..and the same scantily stocked stores."

Here in New York today, the steel industry announced that it will start shutting down its furnaces next Wednesday or Thursday, if negotiations with the United Steelworkers Union remain deadlocked. The current contract expires a week from tomorrow. And the union has authorized a strike.

Reports about what General Twining will be able to see in the Soviet Union are being kept vague, and so far cannot be called particularly promising. It is stated that along with the other Western air chiefs he will visit top secret installations. But these turn out to be some aircraft factories, one airfield, not previously shown to non-communist visitors - and perhaps more than one - and the Zhukovsky Air Engineering Academy, where Soviet Aeronautical research is centered. And obviously, he will see whatever the Soviet high command decides to unveil at the annual Aviation Day ceremony on Sunday.

It may be quite irrational to expect more. We should hesitate to show Soviet visitors our most guarded secrets. The origin of the invitation to General Twining was not a Russian desire to disclose secret weapons or to impress him with a display of Russian armed might. it was the opposite; it arose from a Soviet decision to announce a reduction in its armed forces by 1,200,000 men. At first there was talk of outside inspection to verify this reduction. Harold Stassen proposedit to Khrushchev when they met at a diplomatic reception in London in April after Khrushchev told Stassen that a big cut was being made. Stassen at once said it would be much more convincing if it were accompanied by the kind of inspection he had been trying to sell Soviet delegate Gromyko in the disarmament negotiations. Khrushchev beamed, and told Stassen: Very well, he could send over some American Generals "to wave the boys goodbye." With this in hand, Stassen tried to thaw out Gromyko on joining in an experiment of true inspection. But Gromyko told him that the Soviet reduction was a matter of high honor, and not to be put under suspicion by holding a formal inspection. However, he said, the chiefs of staff would be welcome to the Soviet Union to take a look at the military rstablishment, which could pass as a kind of inspection. Thereupon the invitation to the Joint Chiefs was informally extended. In the end Washington accepted for General Twining alone, and ruled that other chiefs could go later, depending on what was shown to Twining.

There is plenty he would like to see. At the top of the list is the long-range ballistic missile. We would like to veryify whether the Russians are far enough along to fit it with a hydrogen warhead, and whether it can be guided accurately to its target. Western governments know that the Soviet Union has been regularly testing supersonic ballistic missiles in ranges above one thousand miles. But they do not know how operational they are. They may still be prototypes.

Information on this subject is of equal interest to the British and French air cheifs who are seeing everything along with Twining. Once the Soviet Union has an operational missile with a range up to fifteen hundred miles, the air defense of Western Europe may be obsolete, for a vast area would be exposed to devastation without adequate protection. The affect on the United States of the medium-range missile would, of course, be restricted to our forward bases, but Stewart Alsop says that the official estimate is that without these bases, the retaliatory striking power of the Strategic Air Force would be reduced by one-half to two-thirds.

They possibly will be shown a new jet transport plane about which the Russians boasted during the Khrushchev-Bulganin visit to London. It has a capacity of one hundred and seventy persons, and is possibly ahead of anything designed in this country. They might get to see a new supersonic bomber, which is believed to be through its tests, and compares with our B-58, which is still on the drawing boards. And they may be shown a long-range turbo-jet, called the Bear, which can re-fuel the heavy jet bomber, the Bison. And if the Russians feel expansive, they can demonstrate their new ground-to-air missilss.

But judging from the way the visit began, it seems unlikely that hhe Soviet government will show anything that can be remotely construed as a new threat. The present Soviet line is to concentrate all propaganda on the will to peace and disarmament. The visit was conceived in this spirit. If it turns out to be otherwise, that can only mean that the propaganda line itself has changed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The experts are looking forward to the Soviet air show on Sunday. As Aristotle said, "All men desire by nature to know." Even if they are shown little, they are bound to learn more of the nature of Soviet air power... and, consequently, of the Soviet military threat. And an old Latin proverb says, "to be forewarned is to be forearmed."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Geo. Bryan

June 25, 1956

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower has postponed a meeting with Prime Minister Nehru of India, scheduled for July seventh. Nehru had cabled he was looking forward to seeing the President in Washington, but that he did not want to impose an additional strain on Mr. Eisenhower during his convalescence. The President replied that he had concluded... with deep regret... that the visit should be postponed. At the same time, he asked Nehru to suggest another date. He said, "This, I assure you, is meant as an urgent invitation." Nehru may not be able to accept this invitation until September, or perhaps after India's general election in the spring.

It was announced today that Mr. Eisenhower will go to Panama on July 21st, to attend a conference of the heads of American states. The conference had been scheduled to open today... but was postponed because of the President's illness.

13

(more)

News Secretary Hagerty told reporters that Mr. Eisenhower will leave Walter Reed Hospital this week-end. He said the President would go directly to his Gettysburg farm.

Secretary of the Army Brucker told a Senate committee today that allocations for the Army this year are "austere". He said appropriations for the Army next year should be raised at least ten percent.

The Senate Democratic leader... Lyndon Johnson... called on the Senate today to vote an extra billion dollars for the Air Force, despite Administration opposition. "The United States," he said, "must let potential aggressors know that we are prepared... at all times... to meet them with greater strength than they possess." Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State said the possible loss of American air bases overseas makes the approval of extra money for the Air Force all the more important.

Latest reports on yesterday's parliamentary election in Iceland show the conservative Independence Party losing some ground. On the basis of incomplete returns, the opposition parties favoring the removal of American troops from Iceland have gained three seats, with no party holding a clear majority. I should like to discuss this crucial election further in a few minutes.

31

(more)

The foreign minister of Morocco said today that agreements the United States made with France for maintaining air bases in Morocco are obsolete. He said the United States will have to take the matter up again with the new, independent government of Morocco.

Colonel Nasser was proclaimed president of Egypt today, on the basis of Saturday's national election. Nasser... who has been prime minister... was the only candidate listed on the ballot, and he will serve a six-year term. The voters also ratified a new constitution, calling for election of a national assembly under a one-party system. Nasser promised... in a speech today... to defend the constitution and "continue the struggle for social justice."

In Algeria, the French say they have killed another 80 rebels in a mop-up operation in the Aures Mountains.

The shah of Iran arrived in Moscow today for a state visit. According to Reuters, the shah and his queen were RECEIVED with even more pomp and circumstance than Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia earlier this month.

(more)

46

4 5

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] shah....

The United States Air Force chief of staff... General Twining... gave Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov a personal message today from President Eisenhower. The letter thanked Zhukov for inviting Twining, and his aides, to attend Russia's aviation day celebration. Today, Twining visited a hitherto secret airfield, outside of Moscow. My colleague, Dan Schorr, who is covering the Twining visit, cables me that the Americans saw two aircraft not shown at yesterday's air show... an armor-plated two-engine jet ground attack plane and a single-engine twin-propeller turbo-jet, apparently designed for submarine attack. Twining described the new aircraft as looking "pretty good, comparable to ours."

In Washington today, Great Britain gave the United States permission to test-fire its guided missiles over British island possessions in the South Atlantic. The agreement extends the present American test range by four thousand miles.

(more) 5-8

Fleet Admiral Ernest King... chief of naval operations during World War Two... died in Portsmouth Naval Hospital today following a long illness. Admiral King suffered a heart attack yesterday. He was 77 years old.

Governor Chandler of Kentucky told the annual governors conference in Atlantic City today that he is available for the Democratic presidential nomination. Chandler said he would go to the convention as a "favorite son". He indicated that... under the right conditions... he might deliver Kentucky's thirty convention votes to Governor Harriman of New York. Another Democratic governor... Ribicoff of Connecticut... made no secret of his support for Adlai Stevenson. He proposed that Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts be chosen as Stevenson's running mate.

20

The clerk of the House of Representatives... Ralph Roberts... revealed today that he cannot PRODUCE the statements showing who contributed how much to the major political parties in 1952. The Justice Department says it has looked in vain for the statements. Mr. Roberts says he assumes that the reports.... normally filed with his office... were thrown away as wastepaper. He argues that, by law, they have to be kept only two years.

End of hard news portion.

76

Swing June 25

In 1952 the three chief parties of Iceland's ancient parliament united to invite the United States to build a great air and radar base in their country and man it with American airforce, army and navy personnel. Yesterday Iceland's voters asked the Americans to leave. It is perhaps the quickest reversal and most stinging rebuff United States policy has ever received from a friendly people.

¶ Iceland is a tiny country. Its total population is somewhat less than the city of Yonkers, New York. But a miniature can be easier to study than a more populous and complex land, ~~country. Here one can see American policy at work and trace its mistakes.~~

Let me say that one learns the American mistakes were not outrageous; they were not doing wrong things, but failing to do right ones. And when some of the right ones were done belatedly it already was too late.

¶ The upshot of the story is that the Russians won the victory. For it must count as a Russian victory if a free country votes to ask its American protectors to go back home.

The Russians

worked adroitly to bring this about, for [redacted]. They stepped in at two psychological moments to help turn the tide against the airbase and its foreign personnel. In yesterday's election they didn't add a single seat to their small handful in parliament, but without them, America would not have been beaten, the [redacted].

¶ What turned out to be fatal in American policy [redacted] was a quiet natural decision to let local contractors do all the construction work on a cost-plus basis, and all of them without exception belonged to the conservative party--called the Independence party. Money poured into the country through the pockets of these contractors. The Independence Party suddenly blossomed into prosperity. Some of its members could ride in hard-top convertibles. The rival parties, who had joined in the invitation to the United States, were frozen out. They were the Progressives, representing the farmers, and the Social Democrats representing labor. They were getting no gravy. Not only that, the rush of workers to the airbase took labor off the farms and fishing fleets. A labor shortage set in, so did inflation. There also was a semi-economic factor of well-paid Americans at the base having first call on Iceland's young women for social doings and even matrimony. That always causes local illwill.

¶ At this time the Communists won control of the unions from social democrats by organizing a drive for wage hikes, which they won. That was one of their interventions.

¶ The other had to do with fish, a matter ~~where everyone contained to play into hands of the Kremlin.~~ The Icelanad fishermen put up their prices, ~~which~~ and at once lost ~~them~~ their American market. Then They got into a dispute over fishing rights with the British, who closed their markets to them, ~~which in turn~~ so they lost taking the bulk of I~~celand's~~ (their) fish exports. The Soviet government promptly ~~and~~ stepped in and bought the up whole fish supply.

¶ By 1953 it had become evident that the American policy of enrishing the Independent party exclusively might end badly, ~~and~~ Contracting procedure was revised. Contractors belonging the the Independent Party were to get only half the work. A fourth was to go to the farmers' co-ops, which were allied ~~[illegible]~~ with the Progressive party. Another fourth was to be parvelled out by the government, which was supposed to see that the Social Democrats got ~~some of the gravy.~~ something out of it.

¶ Rules also were adopted curtailing the social life ~~outside the base~~ off-base of the American personnel. But all this was too late. Public opinion had already jelled. In March the parliament voted to ask the withdrawal of American personnel by 1957. Yesterday's election confirmed the resolution. Though the base provides about 20 percent of the national income the Icelanders deliberately voted themselves that much poorer. ¶ Many Icelanders, though not communists, believe the Russian peace propaganda. They were impressed when the Kremlin gave back to Finland its Porkalla base. Besides, they know the American base may be saved for NATO, of which Iceland is proud to be a fullfledged member. It may offer to preserve the base under its own command, and even to use American technicians to staff the radar equipment. ~~Icelanders weren't voting to get out of NATO, but simply to get Americans out of Iceland.~~

¶ In retrospect it is easy to see that the United States government has no ready way to buy up Iceland's fish at high prices. No was there an easy way to urge the British keep to open their markets even if the Icelanders ~~demands for fishing rights~~ were unreasonable. We and the British live in a price-economy. But the Russians don't. They at once rescued Iceland's fishermen. Whatever it cost, it was a bargain.

¶ What is clear is that nobody on the American side thought through, at the start, what the effect would be on a small country to build a big base there and pump a lot of money into its economy. The contractors in the Independence party were our business friends. We play ball with our business friends. That is the way of the business world. But in Iceland we didn't play with all our political friends. So we lost some of them. In the end our business friends were beaten.

The moral of the story is that it takes more than normal business habits to operate an American program in a foreign country. Statesmanship is needed, even in the smallest of them.

Word for Today

The situation is Iceland was handled with some shortsightedness. William Penn said, "It is one of the most fatal errors to spoil a good cause by ill management." But We may gain elsewhere from this experience. As a Fifteenth Century Chinese philosopher remarked, "The virtue of man lies in his ability to correct his mistakes."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 25, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower has postponed a meeting with Prime Minister Nehru of India, scheduled for July seventh. Nehru had cabled he was looking forward to seeing the President in Washington, but that he did not want to impose an additional strain on Mr. Eisenhower during his convalescence. The President replied that he had concluded..with deep regret..that the visit should be postponed. At the same time, he asked Nehru to suggest another date. He said, "This, I assure you, is meant as an urgent invitation." Nehru may not be able to accept this invitation until September, or perhaps until after India's general election in the spring.

It was announced today that Mr. Eisenhower will go to Panama on July 21st. to attend a conference of the heads of American states. The conference had been scheduled to open today..but was postponed because of the President's illness.

News Secretary Hagerty told the reporters that Mr. Eisenhower will leave Walter Reed Hospital this week-end. He said the President would go directly to his Gettysburg farm.

Secretary of the Army Brucker told a Senate committee today that allocations for the Army this year are "austere". He said appropriations for the Army next year should be raised at least ten percent.

The Senate Democratic leader ...Lyndon Jonson..called on the Senate today to vote on extra billion dollars for the Air Force, despite Administration opposition. "The United States," he said, "must let potential aggressors know that we are prepared ...at all times..to meet them with greater strength than they possess." Democratic Senator Jackson of Washington State said the possble loss of American air bases overseas makes the approval of extra money for the Air Force all the more important.

Latest reports on yesterday's parliamentary electiom in Iceland show the conservative Independence Party losing some ground. On the basis of incomplete returns, the opposition parties favoring the removal of American troops from Iceland have gained three seats, with no party holding a clear majority. I should like to discuss this crucial election further in a few minutes.

The foreign minister of Morocco said today that agreements the United States made with France for maintaining air bases in Morocco are obsolete. He said the United States will have to take the matter up again with the new, independent government of Morocco.

Colonel Nasser was proclaimed president of Egypt today, on the basis of Saturday's national election. Nasser..who has been prime minister..was the only candidate listed on the ballot, and he will serve a six year term. The voters also ratified a new constitution, calling for election of a national assembly under a one-party system. Nasser promised..in a speech today..to defend the constitution and "continue the struggle for social justice."

In Algeria, the French say they still have killed another 80 rebels in a mop up operation in the Aures Mountains.

The Shah of Iran arrived in Moscow today for a state visit. According to Reuters, the shah and his queen were received with even more pomp and circumstance than Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia earlier this month.

The United States Air Force chief of staff..General Twining..gave Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov a personal message today from President Eisenhower. The letter thanked Zhuhkov for inviting Twining, and his aides, to attend Russia's aviation day celebration. Today, Twining visited a hitherto secret airfield, outside of Moscow. My colleague, Dan Schorr, who is covering the Twining visit, cables me that the Americans saw two aircraft not shown at yesterday's air show.. an armor-plated two-engine jet ground attack plane and a single-engine twin -propellor turbo-jet, apparently designed for submarine attack. Twining described the new aircraft as looking "pretty good, comparable to ours."

In Washington today, Great Britain gave the United States permission to test-fire its guided missiles over British island possessions in the South Atlantic. The agreement extends the present American test range by four thousand miles.

Fleet Admiral Ernest King..chief of naval operations during World War Two.. died in Portsmouth Naval Hospital today following a long illness. Admiral King suffered a heart attack yesterday. He was 77 years old.

Governor Chandler of Kentucky told the anual governors conference in Atlantic City today that he is available for the democratic presidential nomination. Chandler said he would go to the convention as a "favorite son." He indicated that..under the right conditions..he might deliver Kentucky's thirty convention votes to Governor Harriman of New York. Another Democratic governor.. Ribicoff of Connecticut..made no secret of his support for Adlai Stevenson. He proposed that Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts be chosen as Stevenson's running mate.

The clerk of the House of Representatives..Ralph Roberts..revealed today that he cannot produce the statements showing who contriubuted how much to the major political parties in 1952. The Justice Department says it has looked in vain for the statements. Mr. Roberts says he assumes that the reports ..normally filed with his office..were thrown away as wastepaper. He argues that, by law, they have to be kept only two years.

In 1952 the three chief parties of Iceland's ancient parliament united to invite the United States to build a great air and radar base in their country and man it with American airforce, army and navy personnel. Yesterday Iceland's voters asked the Americans to leave. It is perhaps the quickest reversal and most stinging rebuff United States policy has received from a friendly people.

Iceland is a tiny country. Its total population is somewhat less than the city of Yonkers, New York. But a miniature can be easier to study than a more populous and complex land.

Let me say that one hears the American mistakes were not outrageous; they were not doing wrong things, but failing to do right ones. And when some of the right ones were done belatedly it already was too late.

The upshot of the story is that the Russians won the victory. For it must count as a Russian victory if a free country votes to ask its American protectors to go back home.

The Russians worked adroitly to bring this about. They stepped in at two psychological moments to help turn the tide against the airbase and its foreign personnel. In yesterday's election they didn't add a single seat to their small handful in parliament, but without them, America would not have been beaten.

What turned out bo be fatal in American policy was a quiet natural decision to let local contractors do all the construction work an a cost- plus basis, and all of them without exception belonged to the conservative party--called the Independence party. Money poured into the country through the pockets of these contractors. The Independence Party suddenly blossomed into prosperity. Some of its members could ride in hard-top convertibles. The rival parties, who had joined the invitation to the United States, were frozen out. They were the Progressives, representing the farmers, and the Social Democrats representing labor. They were getting no gravy. Not only that, the rush of workers to the airbase took labor off the farms and fishing fleets. A labor shortage set in, so did inflation. There also was a semi-economic factor of well-paid Americans at the base having first call on Iceland's young women for social doings and even matrimony. That always causes local ill will.

At this time the Communists won control of the unions from social democrats by organizing a drive for wage hikes, which they won. That was one of their interventions.

The other had to do with fish. The Iceland fishermen put up their prices and at once lost their American market. Then they got into a dispute over fishing rights with the British, who closed their markets to them, so they lost the bulk of their fish exports. The Soviet government promptly stepped in and bought up the whole fish supply.

By 1953 it had become evident that the American policy of enriching the Independent party exclusively might end badly, Contracting procudure was r vised. Contractors belonging the the Independent Party were to get only half the work. A fourth was to go to the farmer's co-ops, which were allied with the Progressive party. Another fourth was to be parvelled out by the government, which was supposed to see that the Social Democrats got something out of it.

Rules also were adopted curtailing the off-base social life of the American personnel. But all this was too late. Public opinion already had jelled. In March the parliament voted to ask the withdrawal of American personnel by 1957. Yesterday's election confirmed the resolution. Though the base provides about 20 percent of about 20 percent of the national income, the Icelanders deliberately voted themselves that much poorer.

Many Icelanders, though not communists, believe the Russian peace propaganda. They were impressed when the Kremlin gave back to Finalnd its Porkalla base. Besides, they know American base may be saved for NATO, of which Iceland is proud to be a full fledged member. It may offer to preserve the base for NATO under its own command, and even to use American technicians to staff the radar equipment.

In retrospect it is easy to see that the United States government has no ready way to buy up Iceland's fish at high prices. Nor was there an easy way to urge the British to keep their markets open even if the Icelanders were unreasonable. We and the British live in a price-economy. But the Russians don't. They at once rescued Iceland's fishermen. Whatever it cost, it was a bargain. What is clear is that nobody of the American side thought through the start, what the effect would be on a small country to build a big base there and pump a lot of money into its economy. The contractors in the Independence party were our business friends. We play ball with our business friends. That is the way of the business world. But in Iceland we didn't play with all our political friends. So we lost some of them. In the end our business friends were beaten.

The moral of the story is that it takes more than normal business habits to operate an American program in a foreign country. Statesmanship is needed, even in the smallest of them.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The situation in Iceland was handled with some shortsightedness. William Penn said, "It is one of the most fatal errors to spoil a good cause by ill management." But we may gain elsewhere from this experience. As a fifteenth Century Chinese philosopher remarked, "The virtue of man lies in his ability to correct his mastakes. "

Good Night and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 26, 1956

This is the news:

The Senate today voted an extra 960-million dollars for the Air Force. The vote was 48 to 40. Most of the additional money will go for production of the B-52 intercontinental bomber. Part of it will also go for weapons research. The Administration had insisted, the extra money was not required. Only today, Secretary of the Air Force Quarles told a Senate committee that the Administration request for 15 and a half billion dollars was "adequate". But Democratic senators recalled the testimony of General LeMay, of the Strategic Air Command, that Russia is threatening American air supremacy. Once the issue of Air Force money was settled today, the Senate unanimously approved a 35-billion-dollar budget for overall defense in the next fiscal year. The House has passed a measure calling for expenditure of about 33 and a half billion dollars, so both bills now go to a conference committee.

Congress completed action today on a 33-billion-dollar highway construction program. The House passed the measure on a voice vote, then sent it to the Senate, where it was approved by a vote of 89 to 1. The dissenting vote was cast by Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana. The program covers 13 years, and the cost will be met... to large extent... by raising taxes on gasoline, tires and trucks. President Eisenhower is expected to sign the legislation without delay.

[redacted]

The secretary to the President's cabinet... Maxwell Rabb... refused today to testify before the Senate investigations subcommittee. Democratic Senator McClellan, who is chairman of the subcommittee, wants to know how an author obtained certain government information, in writing a forthcoming book. McClellan says the book "clearly is based on access to minutes of cabinet meetings, and other official documents." He says he wants to know how an author can come by this information when he... McClellan... was denied such material, when he was investigating East-West trade. Mr. Rabb told the subcommittee today that he must "respectfully" decline to appear. He said he had nothing to add to his letter to Senator McClellan yesterday, [redacted] in which he denied that he, or any member of his staff, ever gave the author any official documents. (The author, incidentally, is Robert J. Donovan of New York). Republican Senator McCarthy... who is a member of the subcommittee... called Rabb's refusal to testify "inexcusably arrogant". And he suggested that Rabb be cited for contempt.

Senator McCarthy said today that Supreme Court CHIEF Justice Warren "has become a hero" to the Communist Daily Worker. "I don't say he is a Communist", McCarthy said, "but there is something radically wrong with him." McCarthy made the charge at a Senate internal security subcommittee hearing. The hearing concerned legislation that would nullify the recent Supreme Court decision... prohibiting the firing of federal workers as security risks from "non-sensitive" jobs.

The government announced today that living costs went up four-tenths of one percent in May. That brings the Labor Department's cost-of-living index up to the all-time peak reached in October, 1953. A department spokesman said a sharp rise in food prices was primarily responsible. And he predicted higher food prices through the summer.

The head of the United Steelworkers Union... David McDonald... has summoned the union's wage policy committee to meet here in New York on Friday. Joint talks between representatives of the union and the country's three largest steel producers were suddenly recessed this morning... until tomorrow... and there is speculation management may have submitted a compromise contract proposal. A nationwide steel strike has been set for midnight Saturday, when the current contract expires.

Prime Minister Nehru of India told President Eisenhower today that he hopes their postponed talks may be held "in the future", but he did not suggest any new date. The talks originally were scheduled for July 7th. The President told Mr. Nehru yesterday that their meeting would have to be put off because of his illness. He also expressed hope that they could meet at another time.

The United Nations Security Council today turned down a request... by 13 Asian-African countries... that it consider the Algerian question. Only Russia and Iran voted for the resolution. France has always argued that Algeria is an internal question, not proper for United Nations debate.

The French Communists announced today that they have sent a high-level delegation to Moscow, presumably to be briefed on the new party line. French Communist leaders recently expressed "serious concern" over the denunciation of Stalin.

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables me from London that the special meeting of the Supreme Soviet... called for July 11th... will be devoted primarily to domestic problems. Election laws may be revised. Kendrick quotes the London Daily Worker as saying that, for the first time, Russian voters will be given a choice of candidates in local elections. But all the candidates must have the approval of the Communist Party.

The United States Air Force chief of staff... General Twining... visited a Soviet air academy today. Twining saw some jet engines being tested, and watched Russian teachers instruct their students in aerodynamics. He told reporters afterward, "It's the best day I have had so far." Twining and some of his top aides have been in Moscow since Saturday, at the invitation of the Soviet government.

Guatemala has been placed under a state of siege, following the death last night of four student demonstrators. The students were shot by police as they marched on the residence of President Armas. They were protesting a 30 day suspension of constitutional guarantees. Armas said he suspended the guarantees to cope with a Communist plot.

Twenty Republican governors... attending the annual governors conference in Atlantic City, signed a resolution today endorsing President Eisenhower for another term. The only other Republican governor at the conference... Craig of Indiana... is an Eisenhower supporter and is expected to sign later.

Republican Senate Leader Knowland said today that he has "no doubt" Mr. Eisenhower will be a candidate for re-election. But he said he had no "inside information."

Edward R. Murrow: June 26, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Robert Lacoste, France's resident minister in Algeria, has given my colleague Lou Cioffi an unusually comprehensive and frank analysis of the task of France to put down the rebellion and come to terms with Algeria's inhabitants. His language was tough in discussing fanatics among the rebels, but it also was tough in referring to extremists among Algeria's French residents.

Mr. Lacoste believes the situation in Algeria will begin to improve in about a month, when the latest and final French reinforcements, which have now arrived, are in place. Algeria is being divided into sectors, with certain of the 400,000 troops operating in each sector, and cleaning it up as they move south.

"Before there can be a final solution" Mr. Lacoste said, "two thousand rebel troops will have to be killed. These are the hard core of the rebel forces, the cut-throats and gangsters who will never be pacified and will never surrender. There is no other solution than to kill them. It is not going to be easy, because they do not belong to a single gang but are members of smaller groups. In addition there are another six thousand who could be pacified, though with difficulty, while another seven thousand will be easy to induce to lay down their arms. Those are rough figures, but our intelligence is now working smoothly, and we have a pretty good idea of the rebel make-up."

According to Lacoste, the weight of the French military effort is telling on the rebels, and some bands are breaking up and their members going home. Other groups are heading southwest for the Moroccan border, and we are trying to head them off. The most important areas to subdue are along the Moroccan and Tunisian borders, with some pockets in the interior."

On the subject of an armistice, Mr. Lacoste said that he would not negotiate with the rebels, until there is one man who can guarantee an immediate cease-fire. "People in France" he said, "want to end the bloodshed, and they send me names of rebel leaders. But all of them are in Cairo. I won't talk with them, for they are not in any way in control of the rebel troops." He denied that this is an Algerian war for independence. "The rebels use the word independence" he said, "but they have no positive program. When the banner of the Prophet was raised in Cairo, the Algerian problem became really a Nasser problem. Nasser wants to control North Africa and the Middle East."

This emphasis on Nasser was repeated today in comment in France on his election as President of Egypt yesterday, by a ninety-nine percent vote. This was called the best vote-getting since Hitler and Stalin. The French Defense Minister actually called Nasser a Hitler in a public speech, the first time a French Minister has directly attacked the head of a state with which France maintains diplomatic relations.

Communist influence in Algeria, Mr. Lacoste told Mr. Cioffi, is not strong. "The Algerian Moslems do not want communism" he said. "A French communist officer who deserted to them could not stay long in one place, because he wasn't wanted. When he was killed and the French tried to bury him along with Algerian terrorists, the Moslems actually protested."

Mr. Lacoste promised to put the reform program into high gear the moment pacification is accomplished. Then, he said, he will call for new men to run a new Algeria. He is CONFIDENT they will emerge with the general elections. He foresees the distinct possibility of Moslems out-numbering the French in the newly elected assembly, and he predicted that the great majority of the European population will accept equality with the Moslems. "They know they must make concessions if they are to stay" he said. "The trouble in the past" he explained, "was that French governors gave special privileges to five hundred families, mostly French, some Moslems, and these privileges were handed down from father to son. These are the people of yesterday, and they will have no place in the Algeria of tomorrow. Some ultra-nationalists among the French," he said, "have only two solutions, to kill three million Moslems, or to pour gasoline on the Casbah and burn it to the ground. I warn them that I will give them the same treatment as the Moslem terrorists."

Mr. Cioffi found that diplomatic officials in Algiers believe Mr. Lacoste is gaining among the people of both races, because he lays down his policies forthrightly, and plays no favorites. They think it possible that he may end the struggle quickly, and with the least bloodshed. But one point he makes clear: France is staying in Algeria.

Gayland Avery

Word for Today

General LaCoste would solve the Algerian problem by a combination of persuasion and force. Francis Kossuth (Kos-sooth) said, "The power that is supported by force alone, will often have cause to tremble." And John Dewey once remarked, "The measure of civilization, is the degree to which cooperative intelligence, replaces the method of brute conflict."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 26, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Senate today voted an extra 960-million dollars for the Air Force. The vote was 48 to 40. Most of the additional money will go for production of the B-52 intercontinental bomber. Part of it will also go for weapons research. The Administration had insisted the extra money was not required. Only today, Secretary of the Air Force Quarles told a Senate committee that the Administration request for 15 an a half billion dollars was "adequate". But Democratic senators recalled the testimony of General LeMay, of the Strategic Air Command, that Russia is threatening American air supremacy. Once the issue of Air Force money was settled today, the Senate unanimously approved a 35-billion dollar budget for overall defense in the next fiscal year. The House has passed a measure calling for expenditure of about 33 and a half billion dollars, so both bills now go to a conference committee.

Congress completed action today on a 33-billion-dollar highway construction program. The House passed the measure on a voice vote, than sent it to the Senate where it was approved by a vote of 89 to 1. The dissenting vote was cast by Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana. The program covers 13 years, and the cost will be met..to large extent..by raising taxes on gasoline, tires and trucks. President Eisenhower is expected to sign the legislation without delay.

The secretary to the President's cabinet..Maxwell Rabb...refused today to testify before the Senate investigations subcommittee. Democratic Senator McClellan, who is chairman of the subcommittee, wants to know how an author obtained certain government information in writing a forthcoming book. McClellan says the book "clearly is based on access to minutes of cabinet meetings and other official documents." He says he wants to know how an author can come by this information when he...McClellan..was denied such material when he was investigating East-West trade. Mr. Rabb told the subcommittee today that he must "respectfully" decline to appear. He said he had nothing to add to his letter to Senator McClellan yesterday, in which he denied that he, or any member of his staff, ever gave the author any official documents. (The author, incidentally, is Robert J. Donovan of New York.) Republican Senator McCarthy ..who is a member of the subcommittee..called Rabb's refusal to testify "inexcusably arrogant". And he suggested that Rabb be cited for contempt.

Senator McCarthy said today that Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren "has become a hero" to the Communist Daily Worker. "I don't say he is a Communist", McCarthy said, "but ther is something radically wrong with him." McCarthy made the charge at a Senate internal security subcommittee hearing. The hearing concerned legislation that would nullify the recent Supreme Court decision prohibiting the firing of federal workers as security risks from "non-sensitive" jobs.

The government announced today that living costs went up four-tenths of one percent in May. That brings the Labor Department's cost-of-living index to to the all-time peak reached in October 1953. A department spokesman said a sharp rise in food prices was primarily responsible. And he predicted higher food prices through the summer.

The head of the United Steelworkers Union..David McDonald..has summoned the union's wage policy committee to meet here in New York on Friday.. Joint talks between representatives of the union and the country's three largest steel producers were suddenly recessed this morning ..until tomorrow..and there is speculation management may have submitted a compromise contract proposal

A nationwide steel strike has been set for midnight Saturday, when the current contract expires.

Prime Minister Nehru of India told President Eisenhower today that he hopes their postponed talks may be held "in the future", but he did not suggest any new date. The talks originally were scheduled for July 7th. The President told Mr. Nehru yesterday that their meeting would have to be put off because of his illness. He also expressed hope that they could meet at another time.

The United Nations Security Council today turned down a request ..by 13 Asian-African countries..that it consider the Algerian question. Only Russia and Iran voted for the Resolution. France has always argued that Algeria is an internal question, not proper for United Nations debate.

The French Communists announced today that they have sent a high-level delegation to Moscow, presumably to be briefed on the new party line. French Communist leaders recently expressed "serious concern" over the denunciation of Stalin.

The United States Air Force chief of staff...General Twining..visited a Soviet Air Academy today. Twining saw some jet engines being tested and watched Russian teachers instruct their students in aerodynamics. He told reporters afterward, "It's the best day I have had so far." Twining and some of his top aides have been in Moscow since Saturday, at the invitation of the Soviet government.

Guatemala has been placed under a state of siege, following the death last night of four student demonstrators. The students were shot by police as they marched on the residence of President Armas.

Twenty Republican governors..attending the annual governors conference in Atlantic City signed a resolution today endorsing President Eisenhower for another term. The only other Republican governor at the conference..

Craig of Indiana..is an Eisenhower supporter and is expected to sign later.

Robert Lacoste, France's resident minister in Algeria, has given my colleague, Lou Ciofi an unusually comprehensive and frank analysis of the task of France to put down the rebellion and come to terms with Al eria's inhabitants. His language was tough in discussing fanatics among the rebels, but it also was tough in referring to extremists among Algeria's French residents.

Mr. Lacoste believes the situation in Algeria will begin to improve in about a month, when the latest and final French reinforcements, which have now arrived, are in place. Algeria is being divided into sectors, with certain of the 400,000 troops operating in each sector, and cleaning it up as they move south.

"Before there can be a final solution" Mr. Lacoste said, "two thousand rebel troops will have to be killed. These are the hard core of the rebel forces, the cut-throats and gangsters who will naver be pacified and will never surrender. There is no other solution than to kill them. It is not going to be easy, because they do not belong to a single gang but are members of smaller groups. In addition there are another six thousand tho could be pacified, athough with difficulty, while another seven thousand will be easy to induce to lay down their arms. Those are rough figures, but our intelligence is now working smoothly, and we have a pretty good idea of the rebel make-up."

According to Lacoste, the weight of the French military effort is telling on the rebels, and some bands are breaking up, and their members going home. Other groups are heading southwest for the Moroccan border, and we are trying to head them off. The most important areas to subdue are along the Moroccan and Tusisian borders, with some pockets in the interior."

On the subject of an armistice, Mr. Lacoste said that he would not negotiate with the rebels, until there is one man who can guarantee an immediate cease-fire. "People in France" he said, "want to end the bloodshed, and they send me names of rebel leaders. But all of them are in Cairo. I won't talk with them, for they are not in any way in control of the rebel troops." He denied that this is an Algerian war for independence. "The rebels used the word independence" he said, "but they have no positive program. When the banner of the Prophet was raised in Cairo, the Algerian problem became really a Nasser problem. Nasser wants to control North Africa and the Middle East."

This emphasis on Nasser was repeated today in comment in France on his election as President of Egypt yesterday, by a ninety-nine percent vote. This was called the best vote-getting since Hitler and Stalin. The French Defense Minister actually called Nasser a Hitler in a public speech, the first time a French Minister has directly attacked the head of a state with which France maintains diplomatic relations.

Communist influence in Algeria, Mr. Lacoste told Mr. Cioffi, is not strong. "The Algerian Moslems do not want Communism" he said. "A French communist officer who deserted to them could not stay long in one place, because he wasn't wanted. When he was killed and the French tried to bury him along with Algerian terrorists, the Moslems actually protested."

Mr. Lacoste promised to put the reform program into high gear the moment pacification is accomplished. Then, he said, he will call for new men to run a new Algeria. He is confident they will emerge with the general elections. He foresees the distinct possibility of Moslems out-numbering the French in the newly elected assembly, and he predicted that the great majority of the European population will accept equality with the Moslems. "They know they must make concessions if they are to stay" he said. "The trouble in the past" he explained, "was that French governors gave special privileges to five hundred families, mostly French, some Moslems, and these privileges were handed down from father to son. These are the people of yesterday, and they will have no place in the Algeria of tomorrow. Some ultra-nationalists among the French," he said, "have only two solutions, to kill three million Moslems, or to pour gasoline on the Casbah and burn it to the ground. I warn them that I will give them the same treatment as the moslem terrorists."

Mr. Cioffi found that diplomatic officials in Algiers believe Mr. Lacoste is gaining among the people of both races, because he lays down his policies forthrightly, and plays no favorites. They think it possible that he may end the struggle quickly and with the least bloodshed. But one point he makes clear; France is staying in Algeria.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Gaylord Avery.

AVERY: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General LeCoste would solve the Algerian problem by a combination of persuasion and force. Francis Kossuth said, "The power that is supported by force alone will often have cause to tremble." And John Dewey once remarked, "The measure of civilization is the degree to which cooperative intelligence replaces the method of brute conflict."

Good night and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 27, 1956

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the denunciation of Stalin has left international Communism "in a state of perplexity." Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that he believes Russia's grip on Communist parties in other countries is slipping. He said the Communists are in a dilemma "because certain basic truths ~~are~~ HAVE caught up with them." One of these truths, he said, is that it is difficult for international Communism to be an effective instrument "without such iron discipline and brutal terrorism as Stalin employed." Dulles said another truth is that iron-fisted rule will not be tolerated unless it produces a string of victories. And there have been no recent Communist victories, he said, because of the strong, united effort of countries that are free. He called for a continuation of that unity. "If the free world countries themselves lose the strength of unity," he said, "then international Communism would gain hope of new victories, which would help it to surmount its present trouble." Dulles said he had noted the rash of statements... by Communist parties outside Russia... criticizing present Soviet leaders. But he rejected the idea that the statements are part of a preconceived plan.

One of these critical statements appeared in Russia today, for the first time. Pravda reprinted an article published last week by the New York Daily Worker. The article was written by Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States. And it asks what, if anything, the present Soviet leadership did to keep Stalin from committing his misdeeds. It also warns against trusting the "infallibility" of any group of leaders... which, it says, would only multiply past mistakes. The article was reprinted in Pravda, along with an explanation that Communist Party Boss Khrushchev had denounced Stalin at the party congress in February. This is the first time the Khrushchev speech has been mentioned in the Soviet press. The Associated Press says it has created a sensation.

Radio Moscow said today that the Communist Party secretary in the Ukraine has been replaced "because of deteriorating health."

The shah of Iran... who is in Moscow on a state visit... held an unexpected conference today with Premier Bulganin. The subject of their conference was not announced.

General Twining... the United States air force chief of staff... visited a Russian aircraft factory today. He saw some jet engines being assembled, and called the visit "interesting". Tomorrow, he will make an inspection trip to Stalingrad.

Marshal Tito returned to Yugoslavia today, from his "mission to Moscow". Tito said... in a homecoming speech... that the new Soviet leaders have the "sincere approval" of the Russian people. Yugoslavia and Russia, he said, will join in the struggle for peace.

The Yugoslav government confirmed that Prime Minister Nehru of India, and President Nasser of Egypt, will confer with Tito in Yugoslavia around the middle of next month. The Yugoslav news agency said the conference will discover "new possibilities" for peace.

Russia and Pakistan signed a new trade agreement today. And Indonesia has formally accepted a Russian offer of economic and technical aid.

→

A Soviet mission is expected in Jakarta next month, to conclude a trade agreement under which Indonesia will receive farm machinery in exchange for rubber and other raw materials.

In Algeria, the French say they killed 27 rebels today in a new action near the Moroccan border.

An Algerian nationalist organization... in Switzerland... has proposed that an American, Dr. Ralph Bunche, be sent to Algeria to try to arrange a cease-fire. The organization said, in a message to United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold, that such action would, of course, be subject to French approval. A French government spokesman rejected the proposal, saying that France cannot accept foreign intervention in Algeria from any source. (Dr. Bunche served as mediator, eight years ago, in the war in Palestine and was awarded the Nobel Prize).

The French cabinet today approved a land reform program for Moslem farmers in Algeria. The cabinet chose to act by decree, rather than through legislation that would have to be passed by the National Assembly.

The prime ministers of nine Commonwealth countries opened a 10-day conference today in London. Conference sources say the prime ministers will examine new Soviet policy, with special attention to the attempt to gain influence in under-developed countries through economic aid.

In Washington, the White House announced tonight that Vice President Nixon... and Mrs. Nixon... will visit Vietnam early in July. The Nixons already are scheduled to be in Manila on July 4th, for ceremonies marking the tenth anniversary of Philippine independence.

News Secretary Hagerty said today that it "looks now" as though President Eisenhower will leave Walter Reed Hospital on Saturday. Hagerty said that... so far as he knows... the plan is still for Mr. Eisenhower to go directly from the hospital to his Gettysburg farm.

The nation's governors have just concluded their 48th annual conference in Atlantic City. As might be expected, in an election year, the main topic at the meeting was politics. For a direct report on the meeting, we switch now to Wells Church in Atlantic City.

(Church portion to run 4 mins., (returns on cue:"And that about (sums it up, Ed."

Debate on President Eisenhower's foreign aid program opened today on the floor of the Senate. The Administration is asking for 4-billion, 500-million dollars... more than half of which would go for military assistance overseas./ Democratic Senator George, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, warned the Senate against "liquidating the military strength of the free world."/ It is not a "give-away" program, he said. It is a program for shoring up the defenses of the free world.| The House cut more than a billion dollars from the measure./ The present fight centers about an effort to restore 700-million dollars of that cut. /And Democratic Leader Johnson said tonight that the final vote... either tomorrow or Friday... is going to be close.

The House today passed and sent to the Senate [redacted] a bill to raise SOME veterans pensions./ The vote was 364 to 51. The measure was stripped, at the last moment, of [redacted] special provisions for increasing benefits for service-disabled veterans, and for veterans' widows and dependents.

The House Rules Committee decided today to send the controversial civil rights bill to the House floor for a vote./ Final House action is not expected for at least two weeks.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas told a Senate committee today that the Navy has developed a new weapon that will "revolutionize" anti-submarine warfare.

—2

He said he could give no details.

The House Un-American Activities Committee has voted to give playwright Arthur Miller ten days to purge himself of a possible contempt citation. Miller admitted last week that he supported a number of Communist-front organizations in the late 40's. He told the committee it was something he would not do today. But he refused to name other persons for reasons of conscience. A committee spokesman says Miller has 10 days to name these persons, if he wishes "to purge himself of contempt and eliminate a possibility of contempt proceedings."

Here in New York today, the United Steelworkers agreed to extend their present contract with the steel companies until July 16th, in an effort to avoid a strike in the steel industry. The contract expires at midnight Saturday. The companies have submitted a new contract offer, the terms of which have not been divulged.

Marvin Sweeny

Word for Today

The governors are going home from their meeting in Atlantic City, and despite all the oratory, few minds have been changed. Napoleon said: "In politics, you must never retreat, never retrace your steps, never admit a mistake. If you have made a mistake," Napoleon said, "you must persevere. That will put you in the right."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, June 27, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The nation's governors have just concluded their forty-eighth annual conference, in Atlantic City. As might be expected, in an election year, the main topic at the meeting was politics. For a direct report on the meeting, we switch now to Wells Church, in Atlantic City.

CHURCH: This has been very much like a small convention, Ed, with both parties represented, sort of a dry run of Chicago and San Francisco combined. As you say, state problems and how to solve them is supposed to be the business of this three-day conference, but the fact is the main business is politics. The impression is strong that Democratic candidate Adlai Stevenson has strengthened his position, despite the fact that no new governors announced their support. It was the very friendly attitude toward his candidacy which seemed to create the feeling. James Finnegan, his campaign manager, didn't seem to be trying very hard to work up support - but his calm confidence was catching. It is quite possible that the impression that Stevenson strengthened himself is largely responsible for the further impression that New York Governor Averell Harriman didn't do himself any good.

Most everyone here says that, but it's pretty hard to prove. Harriman's secretary, Charles Vandevander, was quite firm in his statement that Harriman didn't expect to collect public commitments here, that he'd use the occasion to meet and talk to other Democratic governors so that they could know better where he stands and what he thinks about the national picture. For example, over and over again Harriman said "the right man," meaning himself, "and the right platform," meaning a very liberal one, "could defeat President Eisenhower." It seemed to many that Harriman had to play his hand here the way he did and his failure to get off the ground, if that's what happened, was more from the warmth shown toward the Stevenson candidacy than from his own inadequacy. Harriman himself put it this way, "A lot of ball games are won in the ninth inning."

There was one strange paradox within the Democratic picture. Despite the fact that many of these Democratic governors openly admitted President Eisenhower would very probably carry their state, there was no serious air of defeatism among the Democrats. It was recalled that in 1948 the Democratic gloom was so deep and thick you could cut it with a knife; but that wasn't the case here this time.

On health issue Democrats appear to have gotten together on how to handle it. The young Minnesota governor, Freeman, gave me an example of it. First he spoke very highly of Mr. Eisenhower and of the country's affection for him and how everyone hoped he would get well and then he talked about the heavy duties of the Presidency in these times; it doesn't sound as though they're making an issue of it, but it's certainly there.

The most important development on the Republican side was that wherein two governors, Stratton of Illinois, and Knight of California, said out loud the party should start discussing alternatives to Mr. Eisenhower. Now this wasn't disloyalty, it was a practical idea held by many other Republican governors who refused to go on record as feeling that way about him. Neither Stratton nor Knight thought the President would back out now. They just thought it unwise to put all the eggs in the Eisenhower basket.

Leaving Richard Nixon's name off the petition to get the President to run again, meant only one thing; two or three governors might have refused to sign. Governor Knight, for example, makes no bones about his attitude toward Mr. Nixon.

The only serious split which developed among Democrats was over the Supreme Court desegregation order. The two extremes were represented by Governor Williams of Michigan, and Governor Timmerman of South Carolina. Williams wants the order enforced to the hilt; everything short of the use of troops - whereas Timmerman wants the South to act in concert at Chicago to force the adoption of a civil rights plank in the Democratic platform, which the Southerners can accept.

There was a good deal of rather pious hope expressed today, at the end of the meeting, that some sort of a compromise could be reached. But I must confess, Ed, after seeing the completely unbending attitude of Governor Timmerman and the hot zeal of Governor Williams, well, you can expect a knock-down-drag-out battle at the Democratic convention on that subject. And that about sums it up, Ed.

MURROW: Debate on President Eisenhower's foreign aid program opened today on the floor of the Senate. The Administration is asking for four billion, five hundred million dollars ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R.MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the denunciation of Stalin has left international Communism "in a state of perplexity". Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that he believes Russia's grip on Communist parties in other countries is slipping. He said the Communists are in a dilemma "because certain basic truths have caught up with them." One of these truths, he said, is that it is difficult for international Communism to be an effective instrument "without such iron discipline and brutal terrorism as Stalin employed." Dulles aaid another truth is that iron-fisted rule will not be tolerated unless it producea a string of victories. And there have been no recent Communist victories, he said, because of the strong, united effort of countries that are free. He called for a continuation of that unity. "If the free world countries themselves lose the strength of unity", he said, "then international Communism would gain hope of new victories which would help it to surmount its present trouble." Dulles said he had noted the rash of statements..by Communist parties outside Russia..criticizing present Soviet leaders. But he rejected the idea that the statents are part of a preconceived plan.

One of these critical statements appeared in Russia today for the first time. Pravda reprinted an article published last week by the New York Daily Worker. The article was written by Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States. And is asks what, if anything, the present Soviet leadership did to keep Stalin from committing his misdeeds. It also warns against trusting the "infallibility" of any group of leaders..which it,says, would only multiply past mistakes. The article was reprinted in Pravda, along with an explanation that Communist Party Boss Khrushchev had denounced Stalin at the party congress in February. This is the first time the Khrushchev speech has been mentioned in the Soviet press. The Associated Press says it has created a sensation.

Radio Moscow said today that the Communist Party secretary in the Ukraine has been replaced "because of deteriorating health."

The shah of Iran..who is an Moscow on a state visit..held an unexpected conference today with Premier Bulganin. The subject of their conference was not anounced.

General Twining..the United States air force chief of staff..visited a Russian aircraft factory today. He saw some jet engines being assembled and called the visit "interesting." Tomorrow, he will make an inspection trip to Stalingrad. Marshal Tito returned to Yugoslavia today from his "mission to Moscow". Tito said..in a homecoming speech..that the new Soviet leaders have the "the sincere approval" of the Russian people. Yugoslavia and Russia, he said, will join in the struggle for peace.

The Yugoslav government confirmed that Prime Minister Nehru of India and President Nasser of Egypt will confer with Tito in Yugoslavia around the middle of next month. The Yugoslav news agency said the conference will discover "new possibilities" for peace.

Russia and Pakistan signed a new trade agreement today. And Indonesia has formally accepted a Russian offer of economic and technical aid. A Soviet mission is expected in Jakarta next month, to conclude a trade agreement under which Indonesia will receive farm machinery in exchange for rubber and other raw materials.

In Algeria, the French say they killed 27 rebels today in a new action near the Moroccan border.

An Algerian nationalist organization..in Switzerland..has proposed that an American, Dr. Ralph Bunche, be sent to Algeria to try to arrange a cease-fire. The organization said, in a message to United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold, that such action would, of course, be subject to French approval. A French government spokesman rejected the proposal, saying that France cannot accept foreign intervention in Algeria from any source. (Dr. Bunche served as mediator, eight years ago, in the war in Palestine and was awarded the Nobel Prize.)

The French cabinet today approved a land reform program for Moslem farmers in Algeria. The cabinet chose to act by decree, rather than through legislation that would have to be passed by the National Assembly.

The prime ministers of nine Commonwealth countries opened a 10-day conference today in London. Conference sources say the prime ministers will examine new Soviet policy, with special attention to the attempt to gain influence in under-developed countries thorugh economic aid.

In Washington, the White House announced tonight that Vice President Nixon..and Mrs. Nixon..will visit Vietnam early in July. The Nixons already are scheduled to be in Manila on July 4th, for ceremonies marking the tenth anniversary of Philippine independence.

News Secretary Hagerty said today that it "looks now" as though President Eisenhower will leave Walter Reed Hospital on Saturday. Hagerty said that..so far as he knows..the plan is still for Mr. Eisenhower to go directly from the hospital to his Gettysburg farm.

The nation's governors have just concluded their 48th annual conference in Atlantic City. As might be expected, in th election year, the main topic at the meeting was politics. For a direct report on the meeting, we switch now to Wells Church, in Atlantic City.

CHURCH: This has been very much like a small convention, Ed, with both parties represented, sort of a dry run of Chicago and San Francisco combined. As you say, state problems and how to solve them is supposed to be the business of this three day conference, but the fact is the main business is politics. The impression is strong that Democratic candidate Adlai Stevenson has strengthened his position, despite the fact that no new governors announced their support. It was the very friendly attitude toward his candidacy which seemed to create the feeling. James Finnegan, his campaign manager, didn't seem to be trying very hard to work up support - but his calm confidence was catching. It is quite possible that the impression that Stevenson strengthened himself is largely responsible for the further impression that New York Governor Averell Harriman didn't do himself any good.

Most everyone here says that, but it's pretty hard to prove. Harriman's secretary, Charles Vandevander, was quite firm in his statement that Harriman didn't expect to collect public commitments here, that he's use the occasion to meet and talk to other Democratic governors so that they could know better where he stands and what he thinks about the national picture. For example, over and over again Harriman said "the right man", meaning himself, "and the right platform," meaning a very liberal one, "could defeat President Eisenhower" It seemed to many that Harriman had to play his hand here the way he did and his failure to get off the ground, if that's what happened, was more from the warmth shown toward the Stevenson candidacy than from his own inadequacy. Harriman himself put it this way, " A lot of ball bames are won in the ninth inning."

There was one strange paradox within the Democratic picture. Despite the fact that many of these Democratic governors openly admitted President Eisenhower would very probably carry their state, there was no serious air of defeatism among the Democrats. It was recalled that in 1948 the Democratic gloom was so deep and thick you could cut it with a knife; but that wasn't the case here this time.

On health issue Democrats appear to have gotten together on how to handle it. The young Missesota governor, Freeman, gave me an example of it. First he spoke very highly of Mr. Eisenhower and of the country's affection for him and how everyone hoped he would get well and then he talked about the heavy duties of the Presidency in these times; it doesn't sound as though they're making an issue of it, but it's certainly there.

The most important development on the Republican side was that wherein two governors, Stratton of Illinois, and Knight of California, said out loud that the party should start discussing alternatives to Mr. Eisenhower. Now this wans't disloyalty, it was a practical idea held by many other Republican governors who refused to go on record as feeling that way about him. Neither Stratton nor Knight thought the President would back out now. Theu just thought it uswise to put all the eggs in the Eisenhower basket.

Leaving Richard Nixon's name off the petition to get the President to run again, meant only one thing; two or three governors might have refused to sign. Governor Knight, for example, makes no bones about his attitude toward Mr. Nixon.

The only serious split which developed among Democrats was over the Supreme Court desegretation order The two extremes were represented by Governor Williams of Michigan, and Governor Timmerman of South Carolina. Williams wants the order enforced to the hilt; everything short of the use of troops - whereas Timmerman wants the South to act in concert at Chicago to force the adoption of a civil rights plank in the Democratic platform, which the Southerners can accept.

There was a good deal of rather pious hope expressed today, at the end of the meeting, that some sort of a compromise could be reached. But I must confess, Ed, after seeing the completely unbending attitude of Governor Timmerman and the hot zeal of Governor Williams, well, you can expect a knock-down-drag-out battle at the Democratic convention on that subject. And that about sumi it up, Ed.

MURROW: Debate on President Eisenhower's foreign aid program opened today on the floor of the Senate. The Administration is asking for 4-billion 500-million dollars..more than half of which would go for military assistance overseas. Democratic Senator George, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee warned the Senate against "liquidating the military strength of the free world." It is not a "give-away" program, he said. It is a program for shoring up the defenses of the free world. The House cut more than a billion dollars from the measure. The present fight centers about an effort to restore 700-million dollars of that cut. And Democratic Leader Johnson said tonight that the final vote..either tomorrow or Friday..is going to be close.

The House today passed and sent to the Senate a bill to raise some veterans pensions. The vote was 364 to 51. The measure was stripped, at the last moment, of special provisions for increasing benefits for service-disabled veterans and for veterans' widows and dependents.

The House Rules committee decided today to send the controversial civil rights bill to the House floor for a vote. Final House action is not expected for at least two weeks.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas told a Senate committee today that the Navy has developed a new weapon that will "revolutionize" anti-submarine warfare. He said he could give no details.

The House Un-American Activities Committee has voted to give playwright Arthur Miller ten days to purge himself of a possible contempt citation. Miller admitted last week that he supported a number of Communist-front organizations in the late 40's. He told the committee it was something he would not do today. But he refused to name other persons for reasons of conscience. A committee spokesman says Miller has 10 days to name these persons, if he wished "to purge himself of contempt and eliminate a possibility of contempt proceedings."

Here in New York today, the United Steelworkers agreed to extend their present contract with the steel companies until July 16th, in an effort to avoid a strike in the steel industry. The contract expires at midnight Saturday. The companies have submitted a new contract offer, the terms of which have not been divulged.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Warren Sweeney.

SWEENEY: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The governors are going home from their meeting in Atlantic City and despite all the oratory, few minds have been changed. Napoleon said: "In politics, you must never retreat, never retrace your steps, never admit a mistake. If you have made a mistake," Napoleon said, "you must persevere. That will put you in the right."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 28, 1956

This is the news:

The Warsaw radio claims, a "revolt" in the Polish city of Poznan has been crushed. /It says the workers' rebellion was put down with troops and tanks... and that "a number" of persons were killed. /Travelers reaching Warsaw, from Poznan, say that casualties ran high. /They say the trouble began as a general strike. ~~[illegible]~~ Factory workers marched through the streets shouting, "We want bread." /According to eye-witness reports, the workers ~~[illegible]~~ attacked the local Communist Party headquarters, set fire to a prison, and on one building (which is not identified) pulled down the Russian flag. /A West German businessman, on his way to the airport, said he passed "about 12 tanks" entering the city. Earlier tonight, the Warsaw radio referred to "serious unrest". And it called the action "a provocation by the enemies of Poland." The West German post office says, that telephone communications with Poznan are still out. All the reports are coming to us from Warsaw.

"a provocation organized by the enemies of Poland." The West German post office says that telephone communications with Poznan are still out. All the reports are coming to us from Warsaw.

There has been some unrest in Poland since the denunciation of Stalin, especially among students. And last week, the head of the secret police was dismissed.

The Communist Party of Canada joined Communist parties in other countries today, in demanding a full explanation of how Stalin was allowed to commit his crimes. (I should like to discuss this whole subject further, in a few minutes).

Moscow announced tonight that Russia and Lebanon have agreed on a program of economic and cultural development. The agreement is the result of talks this week between Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov and Lebanese leaders in Beirut.

In Egypt today, 40 persons were sentenced to prison for "Communist activities". The prison terms ranged from two to seven years.

Premier Chou En-lai, of Red China, offered today to negotiate the "peaceful liberation" of Formosa. Chou made his offer in a speech before the National Peoples Congress in Peiping. He said he would negotiate the Formosa issue with "Taiwan authorities". My colleague, Guy Searls in Hong Kong, says in Communist jargon "Taiwan authorities" might refer only to provincial officials on Formosa, and not to representatives of the Nationalist Government, which Communist China has refused to recognize. Chou said the United States and Red China should be able to agree on a pact, renouncing the use of force in the Formosa area. American and Communist representatives have been discussing such an agreement off and on in Geneva, ever since last summer.

Great Britain is reported seeking a triple alliance with Turkey and Greece, as a basis for solving the Cyprus problem. Prime Minister Eden reportedly will outline his plan for such an alliance, when he meets again tomorrow with the prime ministers of the other Commonwealth countries. At their meeting in London today, the prime ministers completed a general discussion of Soviet foreign policy.

In Washington, Secretary of Defense Wilson was summoned to Walter Reed Hospital today for a talk with the President. The conference lasted about 45 minutes. News Secretary Hagerty said Wilson was instructed "to lay it on the line" tomorrow, when he testifies before Congress on the state of the nation's defense.

A Senate-House conference committee agreed today to appropriate 34 and a half billion dollars for running the defense establishment in the next fiscal year. The additional appropriation of nearly a billion dollars for the Air Force... voted by the Senate... is retained in the compromise measure.

Congressional testimony on the effects of nuclear warfare was released today with the approval of the Defense Department. General Gavin, chief of Army research, told a Senate committee that "several hundred million" persons probably would die from radio-activity, if the United States ever launched a full-scale nuclear assault. He said the casualties would not be confined to the Soviet Union, due to wind currents. Western Europe or Japan would also be affected, depending on wind direction. Senator Jackson of Washington State expressed surprise that General Gavin's testimony was released. "I am shocked," he said, "not from the viewpoint of security but from the standpoint of our friends throughout the world."

The Senate has gone into a night session in the hope of clearing the way for a vote tomorrow on the foreign aid program. More than a dozen amendments are awaiting action.

Walter Reuther testified today before the special Senate committee investigating lobbying practices. The president of the United Auto Workers said his union spent 39-thousand dollars... directly... in an effort to defeat the natural gas bill. Thirty-three of the 39-thousand dollars, he said, went for newspaper advertising... and most of the rest of it for spot announcements on radio. Reuther called this "peanuts", compared with the lobbying expenditures of the gas and oil industry. He proposed that Congress pass a law, limiting individual campaign contributions in a presidential election year to 20 dollars.

Union and management negotiators met again today in an effort to prevent a strike in the steel industry. A union spokesman said there was no progress toward a contract agreement. The present contract expires at midnight Saturday, and the steel companies have begun banking their furnaces.

Edward R. Murrow: June 28, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda has only four pages, but yesterday it devoted fourteen-and-a-half columns to reprint an article by the Secretary-General of the American Communist Party, Eugene Dennis, from the New York ~~XXXXX~~ Daily Worker. It was on the Khrushchev speech denouncing Stalin. In doing so, it gave the first newspaper publicity inside the Soviet Union to the fact that the speech had been made. And it gave the first publicity to any of the criticism that has greeted that speech in the communist parties outside the Soviet bloc.

Pravda, of course, is very choosy about what it prints. Only an ignoramus would think it aired the speech and the implied attacks on Khrushchev out of journalistic enterprise. It didn't need to mention Mr. Dennis or any other foreign party official. It wanted to. It didn't need to publicize the veiled attacks on Khrushchev. It wanted to. That is, Khrushchev wanted it to. And he wanted it released to the entire Soviet bloc, as it was by a repeat over the Soviet radio today. And this wide circulation is a big item in the debate now going on in Washington and other Western capitals over the independence of the communist parties abroad.

As the debate has shaped up, one side believes that the communist movement abroad has been shaken loose from Kremlin control by the down-grading of Stalin, and that Khrushchev has gone too far and will either have to retreat or go under. The other side thinks the attacks by foreign communists are phoney, and have been ordered by the Kremlin, so as to make it possible for communist parties to join popular front governments. This would speed up the collapse of the Western alliances.

Secretary Dulles is on the side that thinks the Khrushchev speech "has shaken and loosened" the Reds. He says the foreign parties are in revolt against Kremlin control. Mr. Dulles's elation over the repercussions of the State Department' scoop in publishing the speech is understandable. But it seems to have made him jubilant rather than critical.

The statements of the foreign communists about the Khrushchev speech show a striking similarity, not only in some of the things said, but in the very phraseology used to say it. That would be ~~explicable~~ understandable if the Communist leaders had met somewhere secretly of late to talk over their common problems. But they didn't. The uniformity can only point to a common source of inspiration. These same parties always had such a common source in the Kremlin. The Kremlin acted through the ~~XXXXXXXXXXX~~ Comintern until it was dissolved, then through the Cominform, which recently went through an alleged dissolution. But whatever the instrumentality, it was the Kremlin that counted as the general staff of the world communist movement. It takes a lot of credulity to believe that these recent statements have any other origin.

To say this is not to deny that the Soviet system has been shaken by the sensational denunciation of Stalin's mistakes, and that rank-and-file workers behind the Iron Curtain are not growing restive as today's news from Poznan reveals. When Khrushchev first delivered the attack on Stalin, voices from the floor spoke up to ask what he and the others had been doing all the time Stalin was mis-governing. It was an unavoidable question, and Khrushchev may now be staging an occasion when he will more fully answer it. At the Congress he didn't say much more than that it was more than a man's life was worth to stand up to Stalin. That doesn't pass even as a good Marxist answer, and will need revision.

Khrushchev seems to have told the party leaders abroad that they are right enough to ask what he was doing, but that they are in the same box themselves. For they profited by Stalin's iron rule and passionately subscribed to the so-called "cult of personality". None of the non-Russian parties ever blanched at the purges. They dexterously followed Stalin from one contradiction to another. If Khrushchev lacked backbone, so did they.

And they can't be criticizing Khrushchev without at the same time condemning themselves.

There is no persuasive argument that the communist parties abroad are showing genuine independence. There is no convincing sign of an early disintegration of the world communist movement. On the contrary, the world movement is showing a concerted strategy to hasten the disintegration of Western unity. There is no secret on that score. The call for united fronts is shouted from the housetops.

But it is a strategy that can't succeed while the communist parties are unmistakeable stool-pigeons for Moscow. They have to look independent. Not since the war, when the Soviet Union was an ally of the West, could they be shown off in anything but prison clothes.

Of course, it is more than a hope that the world communist movement one day will fall apart from its internal weaknesses. It is possible that the communists abroad, by pretending to independence, may be infected by their own pretense. It also is a possibility that the destruction of Stalinism will have been too gigantic a task for Khrushchev, and he will be crushed like Samson in bringing it down. But it may be dangerous to think that because these things are conceivable they are happening now.

Tad Pearson.

Word for Today

There is a suspicious uniformity in the reaction of Communist parties to the denunciation of Stalin. "Every why," Shakespeare said, "has a wherefore." Khrushchev would make it all seem open and above board. But Ralph Waldo Emerson once remarked (of a departed guest), "The louder he talked of his honor, the faster we counted our spoons."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Warsaw radio claims a "revolt" in the Polish city of Poznan has been crushed. It says the workers' rebellion was put down with troops and tanks.. and that a "number" of persons were killed. Travelers reaching Warsaw from Poznan say that casualties ran high. They say the toouble began as a general strike. Factory workers marched through the streets shouting, "We want bread." According to eye-witness reports, the workers attacked the local Communist Party headquarters, set fire to a prison,and on one building (which is not identified) pulled down the Russian flag. A West German businessman on his way to the airport said he passed "about 12 tanks" entering the city. Earlier tonight, the Warsaw radio referred to "serious unrest". And it called the action "a provocation by the enemies of Poland". The West German post office says the telephone communications wit Poznan are till out. All the reports are coming to us from Warsaw.

There has been some unrest in Poland since the denunciation of Stalin, especially among students. And last week, the head of the secret police was dismissed.

The Communist Party of Canada joined Communist parties in other countries today indemanding a full explanation of how Stalin was allow to commit his crimes. (I should like to discuss this whole subject further in a few minutes.)

Moscow announced tonight that Russia and Lebanon have agreed on a program of economic and cultural development. The agreement is the rssult of talks this week between Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov and Lebanese leaders in Beirut.

In Egypt today, 40 persons were sentenced to prison for "Communist activities." The prison terms ranged from two to seven years.

Premier Chou En-lai of Red China offered today to negotiate fhe "peaceful liberation" of Formosa. Chou made his offer in a speech. before the National Peoples Congress in Peiping. He said he would negotiate the Formosa issue with "Taiwan authorities." My colleague, Guy Searls in Hong Kong, says in Communist jargon "Taiwan authorities" might refer only to provincial officials on Formosa, and not to representatives of theNationalist Government, which Communist China has refused to recognize. Chou said the United States and Red China should be able to agree on a pact renouncing the use of force in the Formosa area. American and Communist representatives have been discussing such an agreement off and on in Geneva ever since last summer.

In Washington, Secretary of Defense Wilson was summoned to Walter Reed Hospital today for a talk with the President. The conference lasted about 45 minutes. News Secretary Hagerty said Wilson was instructed "to lay it on the line" tomorrow, when he testifies before Congress on the state of the nation's defense.

A Senate-House conference committee agreed today to appropriate 34 and a half billion dollars for running the defense establishment in the next fiscal year. The additional appropriation of nearly a billion dollars for the Air Force..voted by the Senate..is retained in the compromise measure.

Congressional testimony on the effects of nuclear warfare was released today with the approval of the Defense Department. General Gavin, chief of Army research, told a Senate committee that "several hundred million " persons probably would die from radio-activity, if the United States ever launched a full-scale nuclear assault. He said the cauualties would not be confined to the Soviet Union, due to wind currents. Western Europe or Japan would also be affected, depending on wind direction. Senator Jackson of Washington State expressed surprise that General Gavin's testimony was released. "I am shocked," he said, "not from the viewpoint of security but from the standpoint of our friends throughout the world."

Walter Reuther testified today before the special Senate committee investigating lobbying practices. The president of the United Auto workers said his union spent 39-thousand doll rs..directly..in an effort to defeat the natural gas bill. Thirty-three of the 39-thousand dollars, he said, went for newspaper advertising..and most of the rest of it for spot announcements on radio. Reuther called this "peanuts", compared with the lobbying expenditures of the gas and oil insustry. He proposed that Congress pass a law, limiting individual compaign contributions in a presidential year to 20 dollars. Union and management negotiators met again today in an effort to prevent a strike in the steel industry. A union spokesman said there was no progress toward a contract agreement. The present contract expires at midnight on Saturday, and the steel companies habe begun banking their furnaces.

The Soviet Newspaper Pravda has only four pages, but yesterday it devoted fourteen - and - a half columns to reprint an article by the Secretary-General of the American Communist Party, Eugene Dennis, from the New York Daily Worker. It was on the Khrushchev speech denouncing Stalin. In doing so, it gave the first newspaper publicity inside the Soviet Union to the fact that the speech had been made. And it gave the first publicity to any of the criticism that has greeted that speech in the Communist parties outside the Soviet bloc.

Pravda, of course, is very choosy about what it prints. Only an ignoramus would think it aired the speech and the implied attacks on Khrushchev out of journalistic enterprise. It didn't need to mention Mr. Dennis or any other foriegn party official. It wanted to. It didn't need to publicize the veiled, attacks on Khrushchev. It wanted to. That is, Khrushchev wanted it to. And he wanted it released to the entire Soviet bloc, as it was by a repeat over the Soviet radio today. And this wide circulation is a big item in the debate now going on in Washington and other Western capitals over the independence of the Communist parties abroad.

As the debate has shaped up, one side beleived that the communist movement aborad has been shaken loose from Kremlin control by the down-grading of Stalin and that Khrushchev has gone too far and will either have to retreat or go under. The other side thinks the attacks by foreign communists are phoney, and have been ordered by the Kremlin, so as to make it possible for Communist parties to join popular front governments. This would speed up the collapse of the Western alliances.

Secretary Dulles is on the side that thinks the Khrushchev speech "has shaken and loosened the Reds". He says the foreign parties are in revolt against Kremlin control. Mr. Dulles' elation over the repercussions of the State Department's scoop in publishing the speech is understandable. But it seems to have made him jubilant rather than critical.

The statements of the foreign communists about the Khrushchev speech show a striking similarity, not only is some of the things said, but in the very phrasiology used to say it. That would be understandable if the Communist leaders had met somewhere secretly of late to talk overtheir common problems. But they didn't the uniformity can only point to a common source of inspiration. These same parties always had such a common source in the Kremlin. The Kremlin acted through the Comintern until is was dissolved, then through the Cominform, which recently went through an alleged dissolution. But whatever the instrumentality, it was the Kremlin that counted as the general staff of the world communist movement. It takes a lot of credulity to believe that these recent statments have ano other origin.

To say this is not to deny that the Soviet system has been shaken by the sensational denunciation of Stalin's mistakes, and that rank-and-file workers behind the Iron Curtain are not growing restive as today's news from Poznan reveals. When Khrushchev first delivered the attack on Stalin, voices from the floor spoke up, to ask what he and the others had been doing all the time Stalin was mis-governing. It was an unavoidable question, and Khrushchev may now be staging an occasion, when he will more fully answer it. At the Congress he didn't say much more than that it was more than a man's life was worth to stand up to Stalin. That doesn't pass even as a good Marxist answer, and will need revision.

Khrushchev seems to have told the party leaders abroad that they are right enough to ask what he was doing, but that they are in the same bote themselves. For they profited by Stalin's iron rule and passionately subscribed to the so-called "cult of personality". None of the non-Russian parties ever blanched at the purges. The dextrously followed Stalin from one contradiction to another. If Khrushchev lacked backnone, so did they. And they can't be criticizing Khrushchev without at the same time condemning themselves.

There is no persuasive argument that the communist parties abroad are showing genuine indepencence. There is no convincing sign of an early disintegration of the world communist movement. On the contrary, the world movement is showing a concerted strategy to hasten the disintegration of Western unity. There is no secret on that score. The call for united fronts is shouted from the housetops.

But it is a strategy that can't succeed while the communist parties are unmistakeable stool-pigeons for Moscow. They hate to look independent. Not since the war, when the Soviet Union was an ally of the West, could they be shown off in anything but prison clothes.

It is a possibility that the destruction of Stalinism will have been too gigantic a task for Khrushchev, and he will be crushed like Samson in bringing it down. But it may be dangerous to think that because things are conceivable they are happening now.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Ted Pearson.

PEARSON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is a suspicious uniformity in the reaction of Communist parties to the denunciation of Stalin. "Every why", Shakespeare said, "has a wherefore". Khrushchev would make it all seem open and above board. But Ralph Waldo Emerson remarked (of a departed guest), "The louder he talked of his honor, the faster we counted our spoons,"

Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 29, 1956

This is the news:

The United States said today that it is "profoundly shocked" by the shooting of Polish workers yesterday in Poznan. The Warsaw radio admits 38 persons died in the rioting, which began as an orderly demonstration against economic conditions. The State Department renewed the appeal President Eisenhower made at the summit meeting in Geneva, that the "sovereign rights" of the peoples of Eastern Europe [redacted] be restored. "We believe," it said, "that all free peoples will be watching to see whether the Polish people will be allowed a government that will remedy the grievances, which have brought them to a breaking point."

The Polish government-in-exile... in London... denied that the outbreak was, in any real sense, a revolt. Premature uprisings in Poland, it said, could result in "calamity".

The Moscow radio tonight called the outbreak in Poznan "a hostile provocation committed by imperialist agents." This is the first mention Moscow has made of the incident.

The latest word is that a curfew has been ordered, prohibiting the inhabitants of Poznan from appearing on the street between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. Two Swedish businessmen... who arrived in Stockholm tonight... say they heard gunfire in Poznan shortly before noon today. (The businessmen had been attending the Poznan industrial fair). Other reports say the city is quiet. A ~~West German correspondent reports that yesterday he saw~~ a Polish SOLDIER ~~officer~~ ~~refuse to fire on the marching workers. He says, "An officer pointed his pistol at the soldier and killed him."~~ (I should like to discuss this matter further, in a few minutes).

The United States Air Force chief of staff... General Twining.... continued his tour of Russia today by visiting an atomic power station. Twining said he was "no physicist", but that it seemed to be a "very modern, fine-looking installation." Quite a contrast, he said, to the backward village in which it is located.

4

In Washington today, Secretary of Defense Wilson testified for three hours before a Senate committee investigating the relative strength of Soviet and American air power. Wilson began by reading a long prepared statement. He warned Congress against insisting on "excessive" military strength. "Our objective," he said, "is to deter war by every honorable means. It is not our objective to over-arm, or to give any country cause for alarm." But Wilson emphasized that the United States has... and will continue to have... "dynamic military power of true substance." "We expect," he said, "to have, in the relatively near future, ballistic missiles of intercontinental range, which can be launched from the United States." He said that to belittle American military might "would be a serious disservice to our country, and the morale of the free world." Democratic senators pressed Wilson on whether the Administratio had economized on air power in order to balance the budget. He denied that fiscal policies had played "an excessively heavy role."

Reporters asked Wilson... after the hearing... about testimony released yesterday that "hundreds of millions" of persons would die if the United States ever launched an all-out nuclear attack. The testimony was given Congress by General Gavin, chief of Army research. Gavin had testified that casualties [redacted] in such an attack would not be confined to the Soviet Union... that there would also be casualties, depending on the wind direction, in Western Europe OR Japan. Secretary Wilson said today that the testimony was reviewed by Vice Admiral Arthur Davis, and that Davis decided there was no military security involved. ~~Yesterday, Democratic Senator Jackson, of Washington State, [redacted] expressed shock that the testimony had been released "from the standpoint of our friends around the world."~~ Wilson said today that he believes the [redacted] casualty estimate was "somewhat exaggerated". [redacted], he said, if it had been up to him, he would not have made the testimony public.

Congress completed action today on the defense appropriation bill, and sent it to President Eisenhower for his signature. The measure provides nearly a billion dollars more for the Air Force, than the Administration requested.

→

The President signed the multi-billion-dollar highway construction bill today.

The Senate took further action on the foreign aid bill today. On a voice vote, it defeated an amendment...proposed by Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota... that would have cut about a billion dollars out of the program. [redacted]

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Simon E. Sobeloff, of Baltimore, to be a judge for the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. The vote was 8 to 2. President Eisenhower made the nomination last July. Some southern senators opposed Sobeloff, charging that he is "prejudiced" in favor of school integration. Sobeloff... who now holds the position of solicitor general in the Justice Department... has said he favors a "moderate" approach to the integration problem. Senator Johnston of South Carolina predicts a lengthly debate when the nomination comes up for action on the Senate floor.

Tonight, President Eisenhower accepted... with deepest regret... the resignation of Dr. Leonard Scheele as surgeon general. Dr. Scheele said he was resigning in order to provide "more properly" for the future security of his family.

Vice President Nixon had another conference with President Eisenhower today in Walter Reed General Hospital. Nixon said the President's political future was not discussed. Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will leave the hospital for his Gettysburg farm.

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that the President would still like to see Russia accept the Western proposal for exchanging "information and ideas". The proposal was first made by the Western foreign ministers at Geneva last October. It calls, among other things, for progressive elimination of censorship and exchange of books, newspapers and films.

Negotiations to avert a nationwide steel strike remain deadlocked. The talks are expected to continue tomorrow. The present contract expires tomorrow midnight.

Edward R. Murrow: June 29, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The rioting in Poznan was probably the most severe outbreak behind the Iron Curtain since the violence in East Berlin on June 17th, 1953. The Communists, of course, claim it was done by the "reactionary underground" and "imperialist agents." Some observers in the West appear to regard it as a spontaneous uprising against overwhelming odds - men shouting for bread in a land that used to export wheat.

There is little doubt that the Communists in Poland had been easing the pressure in recent months. They claim to have released twenty-six thousand political prisoners. There is no doubt that Poland, a predominantly Catholic country, is anti-Russian and anti-Communist. But the theory that this was both spontaneous and hopeless may not be the right one. It is true that the Communist Premier of Poland made a broadcast tonight, saying his government would do "everything possible to improve the living conditions of the masses." But he said something else. He said: "Everyone who raises his hand against the people may be sure that it will be hacked off. In the interests of the working class, in the interest of raising our standard of living, and in the interest of the Fatherland." He promised that the Communist Government would never be overthrown. But the threat of retaliation was the important part of the speech. It probably fore-shadowed tightened controls and more terror. It may be wise in this case to ask the murder mystery question: "Who benefits from the crime?" There is probably only one answer. It is the Polish Communist Government that benefits, or XXXXXXX at least that element in it which has not given up on Stalinism. It permits them to say that the only result of relaxed controls, and the destruction of the Stalin myth, is to breed rebellion and treason. Hence they will argue that all movement in the direction of a more liberal regime must be halted. It will permit them to raise, as the Premier did in his broadcast tonight, the issue of the security of the state.

Alex Kendrick reminds me from London tonight that the history of class warfare in Eastern Europe has been a history of provocation, double agentry, and trumped up trials. This is the way you get things done under Communism, and not only under Communism. In 1905 the leader of a workers' demonstration in St. Petersburg was a Czarist agent who deliberately led scores of workers to death under the Czarist guns. # Even after Stalin's death there have been numerous executions in Russia, merely on Khrushchev's say-so. The Communists in Czechoslovakia have demonstrated the hollowness of the claim that wrongly executed comrades will be rehabilitated. The Communists have all decided that Tito-ism is no longer treason, but they executed Slansky for it, and he stays executed, like all the others.

It is not difficult to imagine someone brought up in this tradition figuring out that the best way to preserve authority, and the iron discipline of the Communist Party, was to allow a certain amount of freedom, then provoke it to the extreme, then cut it down with apparently sufficient excuse for so doing, and then clamp on the terror and the controls again. This is at least the pattern that has unfolded in Poland.

If we are rightly cautious about the sincerity of the so-called de-Stalinization in the Soviet Union and the Satellites, how much more cautious should we be about a bloody incident that at one stroke wipes out all the gains of the past few months.

Putting together all of the eye-witness reports available, it is certain that the Poznan rioting began as a peaceful demonstration by unarmed workers against low living standards. It is possible that they had been led to believe that such demonstrations would be tolerated. But the question remains: who was it that turned this parade into an assault on the Communist Party headquarters, and other public buildings, giving the police provocation and opportunity to open fire. Who was it that provided the guns to the demonstrators so that they could shoot police agents and soldiers, and thereby make themselves the targets for massive return fire? # In combat the Poles are brave and often reckless. But in this case it is at least possible that brave men were betrayed. Whether this surmise be true or not, the result will be another night of terror and repression for those proud Poles who hunger for freedom. Whether the demonstration was spontaneous, or whether it was engineered by the iron discipline gangsters, the result will be the same - more names added to the long list of Polish martyrs, and less freedom and security for those who remain.

George Bryan

This reporter is deserting this microphone for a few weeks...being mindfull of Will Rodgers words.."The Lord kinder looks us over and says,wait ,you folks are going too fast..Slow up and look yourself over..a bit of silent meditation will do you good.....I shall try it ..on a bulldozer and hay bailer..Charles Collingwood will sit in for me...

good night and good luck

Edward R. Murrow Aug. 9, 1956

This is the news:

Russia agreed today to attend an international conference on Suez. But it wants a different meeting than that proposed by the United States, Britain and France. The Big Three have invited the 24 countries most affected by Egypt's seizure of the canal to meet in London next Thursday. They want the canal internationalized, to insure that it will be kept open to ships of all flags. Russia proposed today that the meeting be postponed until the end of the month, that it be broadened to include all the Arab states and countries of the Soviet bloc, including Red China, and that it be held in Cairo. The Russian statement called "utterly inadmissable" the military counter-measures taken by the British and French governments. It accused those governments of resorting to "gross and unjustified pressure" against Egypt, of taking "a line incompatible with the principles of the charter of the United Nations." "The Soviet Union," it said, "considers that Egypt in nationalizing the Suez Canal Company took a perfectly lawful action." Russia hinted that it may demand internationalization of the Panama Canal. It said: "The question naturally arises, why is the Suez Canal alone being singled out, of the straits and canals of no smaller importance?"

→

In London, Prime Minister Eden reacted to the Russian statement by going into immediate consultation with Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd. The United Press reports from London that Britain is expected to reject all the Soviet proposals.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles said he had invited congressional leaders of both parties to confer with him Sunday afternoon for a briefing on the Suez crisis. Tonight, this plan was changed. The White House announced that because of the seriousness of the situation, the conference with Republican and Democratic leaders would be held with the President instead. Also on Sunday, President Nasser of Egypt is expected to announce Egypt's reaction to the bid for a London conference. (And this may have something to do with the timing of the White House meeting.) The importance of that meeting is underscored by the fact that Senate Leader Johnson and House Speaker Rayburn have cancelled their plans to be here in Chicago on Sunday for the opening, the following day, of the Democratic National Convention.

→

The big news here in Chicago today was the arrival of former President Truman. My colleague, Richard Hottelet, covered that story. Tell me, Dick. How was Mr. Truman received?

Hottlet & tape

Senator Humphrey of Minnesota also arrived in town today. Humphrey is the only avowed candidate for the Democratic vice-presidential nomination. He also played the unity theme. The issue over civil rights, he said, is principally one of methods.

In Washington, Harold Stassen announced that Elroy Bromwich, chairman of the Missouri delegation to the Republican national convention, had joined his "dump Nixon" camapign. Stassen said that, in his opinion, there is a 50-50 chance that the Republican convention will replace Mr. Nixon with Governor Herter of Massachusetts.

Negotiations for a Soviet-Japanese peace treaty remain deadlocked. In Moscow today, Japanese Foreign Minister Shigemitsu asked for permission to see Soviet Premier Bulganin, or Communist Party Boss Khrushchev, in an effort to break the stalemate. Japan is demanding the return of two small islands, in the southern Kuriles. Russia calls ~~accession~~ agreement to the demand "out of the question".

In Geneva today, the marathon talks between representatives of the United States and Red China entered their second year. Today's meeting, on the Formosa problem and the repatriation of Americans held in China, was the 55th held so far. The talks began on August 1st, 1955.

On Cyprus, Greek Cypriots have protested the hanging of three underground fighters by staging a general strike. Most shops were closed, and construction of a 33-million-dollar base for the Royal Air Force was brought to a halt. Resentment is strong because last week the Cypriot underground had released a British hostage, on the plea of the three men hanged early today. No major incidents are reported.

In New York today, the Aluminum Company of America and the United Steelworkers signed a contract, ending a nine-day strike. The contract is similar to that reached in the steel industry. It is a three-year, no-strike agreement, providing a package increase of about 45 and a half cents an hour. The new contract is still subject to approval by the union rank-and-file.

Paul Condillis

1415 A

Word for the Day...

I would say my thanks to Charles Collingwood for sitting in during the past few weeks...Someone once ~~said~~ remarked...what is said is important...how it is said may be equally important...This reporter appreciated both what he said and how he said it...The trouble with a vacation is that it must end...before the necessary work is done...

Good night and good luck...

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, Aug. 9, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: ... EDWARD R. MURROW with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Tonite's program originates in Chicago, at the scene of the Democratic National Convention, which opens on Monday. Mr. Murrow and other distinguished reporters of the CBS News staff are on hand to provide accurate, up-to-the-minute coverage of developments in the caucus rooms, at all the political headquarters and on the convention floor. Mr. Murrow is also backed up by a staff ofCBS News correspondents assigned to news centers around the world.

Now, direct from Convention City, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

Russia agreed today to attend an international conference on Suez, but it wants a different meeting than that proposed by the United States, Britain and France. The Big Three have invited the twenty-four countries most affected by Egypt's seizure of the canal to meet in London next Thursday. They want the canal internationalized, to insure that it will be kept open to ships of all flags. Russia proposed today that the meeting be postponed until the end of the month, that it be broadened to include all the Arab States and countries of the Soviet bloc, including Red China, and that it be held in Cairo. The Russian statement called utterly inadmissible the military counter-measures taken by the British and French Governments. It accused those governments of resorting to "gross and unjustified pressure" against Egypt, of taking a line incompatible with the principles of the charter of the United Nations. The Soviet Union, it said, considers that Egypt in nationalizing the Suez Canal Company took a perfectly lawful action. Russia hinted that it may demand internationalization of the Panama Canal. It said, "The question naturally arises, why is the Suez Canal alone being singled out of the straits and canals of no smaller importance?"

In London, Prime Minister Eden reacted to the Russian statement by going into immediate consultation with Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd. The United Press reports from London that Britain is expected to reject all the Soviet proposals. In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles said he had invited Congressional leaders of both parties to confer with him Sunday afternoon for a briefing on the Suez crisis. Tonite this plan was changed. The White House announced that because of the seriousness of the situation, the conference with Republican and Democratic leaders would be held with the President instead. Also on Sunday, President Nasser of Egypt is expected to announce Egypt's reaction to the bid for a London conference - and this may have something to do with the timing of the White House meeting. The importance of that meeting is underscored by the fact that Senate Leader Johnson and House Speaker Rayburn have cancelled their plans to be here in Chicago on Sunday for the opening, the following day, of the Democratic National Convention.

The big news here in Chicago today was the arrival of former President Truman. My colleague Dick Hottelet covered that story.

Tell me, Dick, how was Mr. Truman received?

HOTTELET: Harry Truman came bouncing onto the political stage here this morning and he brought down the house from the very beginning. It was the old Harry in every way. He looked well, his jaunty air and bright smile never flagged - and he was here for business. None of this Elder Statesman thing for him. An elder statesman, he told us, is a dead politician, "but I am a live politician." There was no doubt about that from the first moment. He got off his train at 8:30 this morning, literally as thousands cheered, and Adlai Stevenson and India Edwards and Lloyd Butterfield and most of the big Democrats in town elbowed each other out of the way to shake his hand. Two hours later Mr. Truman was holding his first news conference, and he laid his position on the line. He was here, he said, to collect information, and he expected he would have enough information by Saturday to announce his choice for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

The correspondents fell on him like a pack of hounds, worrying him for hints and indications, but Mr. Truman shook them off with not a show of effort and wound up baffling them completely. If he wasn't for anyone now, was he against anyone? "Yes, I am," he said, and we perked up our ears: "I'm against me. I will not be a candidate." Someone else piped up that there was a bandwagon rolling in Chicago, and Mr. Truman snapped that he was not a bandwagon man.

This afternoon he appeared before the platform committee and showed again how live he is in the Democratic party. Chairman McCormack welcomed him warmly as one of the great Americans of all time, and the members of the committee gave him a standing ovation. (applause)

TRUMAN: Mr. Chairman, members of this distinguished committee, everyone of whom I'm personally acquainted with: I more than appreciate that introduction and I sincerely wish that I deserved it. But it always makes a fellow feel very good to have things said about him that he wishes were true.

HOTTELET: He felt very good, indeed, and he sailed into the present Administration on various points. Foreign policy, he said, needs special attention. "I don't think," said Mr. Truman,"that the present Administration knows what it's doing anywhere." On domestic issues he attacked the Republicans for a policy of special interests and special privilege. Farmers, he said, have been put in the same position that Any Mellon put them in in 1920. "As nearly as I can find out, the farmer is just about ruined." He denounced Washington for increasing the debt and criticized the housing program, speaking of (and I quote) "the ghouls who prey upon the common man, getting rich at the expense of you and me."

As the members of the committee threw him leading questions, Harry Truman batted them out of the park: atomic energy was being thrown to the special interest boys, tidelands oil was a giveaway, so was Hell's Canyon and Dixon-Yates. But the main point, which everyone had come to hear, was civil rights. Here Mr. Truman showed the great political talent of being emphatic without really committing himself. He referred to the report of a Presidential committee on human freedom which he had sent to Congress in 1947.

TRUMAN: For us here in America a new charter of human freedom will be a guide for action. And I want to say to you that there have been a great many steps taken, based on this document which I sent to the Congress in 1947, and a great many of those actions have been exceedingly controversial. But I want to say to you that they have been right. And whenever anything is right, it makes no difference how controversial it is; we ought to make an effort to put it through.

HOTTELET: This applause did not come from Southern delegates. Mr. Truman gave a short lecture about the 14th Amendment, said it had never been enforced until President Roosevelt took office. "Read the 14th Amendment," he cried, "read it; it is history and important. It is the law of the land and should be enforced."

Congressman Diggs of Michigan, one of the three Negro members of the House of Representatives, tried to get something very specific on civil rights.

DIGGS: Mr. President, your record in the field of civil rights (balance drowned out)

TRUMAN: Well, my suggestion has been and always ... has been right along that the platform planks of 1948 and 1952 were good civil rights planks. Of course, I was a little bit partial to 1948 because that's the one on which I got elected - and I liked it very much. But your statement that the Republicans have been trying to take credit for everything that's done is right in line with what's been happening also in one or two of the foreign things. One thing I'd like to mention in regard to that foreign thing, Mr. Chairman, if you'll allow me to do it.

HOTTELET: And here Mr. Truman moved off as far as he could go from civil rights to discuss international waterways. But when another member gave him a more general invitation, Mr. Truman answered directly. Could he give the Democrats a fighting slogan for 1956?

TRUMAN: I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, it isn't slogans that win elections. This campaign must be made on the principles which we've been discussing - and the man who can put over the fact that the welfare of this country is wrapped up in the welfare of the Democratic party, rather than in General Motors, will be the guy that will put this thing over. It won't be slogans.

HOTTELET: Mr. Truman's testimony did not sharpen the conflict over civil rights. Many observers thought he meant to suggest a compromise by citing the party platforms of 1948 and 1952, which do not mention the Supreme Court. There was no immediate Southern comment. Southern delegates will meet in caucus tonight to discuss their stand. But tomorrow the issue of civil rights formally comes before the platform committee and will be fought out in public dispute.

MURROW: Thank you, Dick Hottelet!

Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota also arrived in town today. Humphrey is the only avowed candidate for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination. He also played the unity theme. The issue over civil rights, he said, is principally one of methods.

In Washington, Harold Stassen announced that Elroy Bromwich, the chairman of the Missouri delegation to the Republican National Convention, had joined his Dump-Nixon campaign. Stassen said that in his opinion there is a fifty-fifty chance that the Republican convention will replace Mr. Nixon with Governor Herter of Massachusetts.

Negotiations for a Soviet-Japanese peace treaty remain deadlocked. In Moscow today Japanese Foreign Minister Shigemitsu asked for permission to see Soviet Premier Bulganin or Communist party boss Khrushchev, in an effort to break the stalemate. Japan is demanding the return of two small islands in the southern Kuriles. Russia calls agreement to the demand "out of the question".

On Cyprus, Greek Cypriotes have protested the hanging of three underground fighters by staging a general strike. Most shops were closed, and construction of a 33-million-dollar base for the Royal Air Force was brought to a halt. Resentment is strong because last week the Cypriote underground released a British hostage on the plea of the three men hanged early today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the WORD FOR TODAY.

(SAFE DRIVING ANNOUNCEMENT)

ANNC'R: Now, here's Mr. Murrow with his WORD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: I would say my thanks to Charles Collingwood for sitting in during these past few weeks. Someone once remarked, "What is said is important. How it is said may be equally important." This reporter appreciated both what he said and how he said it. The trouble with a vacation, of course, is that it must end - and frequently before the necessary work is done!

Good night and good luck!

ANNC'R: You've been listening to EDWARD R. MURROW with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time over most of these stations. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts brought to you each day by CBS News.

(CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENT)

For comprehensive coverage stay tuned to the CBS Radio Network.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1956
7:45-8:00 PM

This is the news:

Russia agreed today to attend an international conference on Suez, but it wants a different meeting than that proposed by the UnitedStates, Britain, and France. The Big Three have invited the twenty-four countries most affected by Egypt's seizure of the canal to meet in London next Thursday, They want the canal internationalized, to insure that it will be kept open to ships of all flags. Russia proposed today that the meeting be postponed until the end of the month that it be broadened to include all the Arab States and countries of the Soviet bloc, including Red China, and that it be held in Cairo. The Russian statement called utterly inadmissible the military counter-measures taken by the British and French Governments. It accused those governments of resorting to "gross and unjustified pressure" against Egypt, of taking a line incompatible with the principles of the charter of the United Nations. The Soviet Union, it said, considers that Egypt in nationalizing the Suez Canal Company took a perfectly lawful action. Russia hinted that it may demand internationalization of the Panama Canal. It said, "The question naturally arises, why is the Suez Canal alone being singled out of the straits and canals of no smaller importance?"

In London, Prime Minister Eden reacted to the Russian statement by going into immediate consultation with Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd. The United Press reports from London that Britain is expected to reject all the Soviet proposals. In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles said he had invited Congressional leaders of both parties to confer with him Sunday afternoon for a briefing on the Suez crisis. Tonight this plan was changed. The White House announced that because of the seriousness of the situation, the conference with Republican and Democratic leaders would be held with the President instead. Also on Sunday, President Nasser of Egypt is expected to announce Egypt's reaction to the bid for a London conference and this may have something to do with the timing of the White House meeting. The importance of that meeting is underscored by the fact that Senate Leader Johnson and House Speaker Rayburn have cancelled their plans to be here in Chicago on Sunday for the opening, the following day, of the Democratic National Convention.

The big news here in Chicago today was the arrival of former President Truman. My colleague Dick Hottelet covered that story. Tell me, Dick, how was Mr. Truman received:

HOTTELET: Harry Truman came bouncing onto the political stage here this morning and he brought down the house from the very beginning. It was the old Harry in every way. He looked well, his jaunty air and bright smile never flagged -- and he was here for business. None of this Elder Statesman thing for him. An elder statesman, he told us, is a dead politician, "but I am a live politician." There was no doubt about that from the first moment. He got off his train at 8:30 this morning, literally as thousands cheered, and Adlai Stevenson and India Edwards and Lloyd Butterfield and most of the big Democrats in town elbowed each other out of the way to shake his hand. Two hours later Mr. Truman was holding his first news conference, and he laid his position on the line. He was here, he said, to collect information, and he expected he would have enough information by Saturday to announce his choice for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

The correspondents fell on him like a pack of hounds, worrying him for hints and indications, but Mr. Truman shook them off with not a show of effort and wound up baffling them completely. If he wasn't for anyone now, was he against anyone? "Y es, I am," he said, and we perked up our ears: "I'm against me. I will not be a candidate." Someone else piped up that there was a bandwagon rolling in Chicago, and Mr. Truman snapped that he was not a bandwagon man.

This afternoon he appeared before the platform committee and showed again how live he is in the Democratic party. Chairman McCormack welcomed him warmly as one of the great Americans of all time, and the members of the committee gave him a standing ovation. (Applause)

TRUMAN: Mr. Chairman, members of this distinguished committee, everyone of whom I'm personally acquainted with: I more than appreciate that introduction and I sincerely wish that I deserved it. But it always makes a fellow feel very good to have things said about him that he wishes were true.

HOTTELET: He felt very good, indeed, and he sailed into the present Administration on various points. Foreign policy, he said, needs spedial attention. "I don't think," said Mr. Truman, "That the present Adminstration knows what it's doing anywhere." On domestic issues he attacked the Republicans for a policy of special interests and special privilege. Farmers, he said, have been put in the same position that Mellon put them in in 1920. "As nearly as I can find out, the farmer is just about ruined." He denounced Washington for increasing the debt and critized the housing program, speaking of "the ghouls who prey upon the common man, getting rich at the expense of you and me."

As the members of the committee threw him leading questions, Harry Truman batted them out of the park: atomic energy was being thrown to the special interest boys, tidelands oil was a giveaway, so was Hell's Canyon and Dixon-Yates. But the main point, which everyone had come to hear, was Civil Rights. Here Mr. Truman showed the great political talent of being emphatic without really committing himself. He referred to the report of a Presidential committee on human freedom which he had sent to Congress in 1947.

TRUMAN: For us here in America a new charter of human freedom will be a guide for action. And I want to say to you that there have been a great many steps taken, based on this document which I sent to the Congress in 1947, and a great many of those actions have been exceedingly controversial. But I want to say to you that they have been right. And whenever anything is right, it makes no difference how controversial it is; we ought to make an effort to put it through.

HOTTELET: This applause did not come from Southern delegates. Mr. Truman gave a short lecture about the 14th Ammendment, said it had never been enforced until President Roosevelt took office. "Read the 14th Amendment," he cried, "read it; it is history and important. It is the law of the land and should be enforced."

Congressman Diggs of Michigan, one of the three Negro members of the House of Representatives, tried to get something very specific on civil rights.

DIGGS: Mr. President, your record in the field of civil rights (balance drowned out)

TRUMAN: Well, my suggestion has been and always has been right along that the platform planks of 1948 and 1952 were good civil rights planks. Of course, I was a little bit partial to 1948 because that's the one on which I got elected - and I liked it very much. But your statement that the Republicans have been trying to take credit for everything that's done is right in line with what's been happening also in one or two of the foreign things. One thing I'd like to mention in regard to that foreign thing, Mr. Chairman, if you'll allow me to do it.

HOTTELET: And here Mr. Truman moved off as far as he could go from civil rights to discuss international waterways. But when another member gave him a more general invitation, Mr. Truman answered directly. Could he give the Democrats a fighting slogan for 1956?

TRUMAN: I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, it isn't slogans that win elections. This campaign must be made on the principles which we've been discussing - and the man who can put over the fact that the welfare of this country is wrapped up in the welfare of the Democratic party, rather than in General Motors, will be the guy that will put this thing over. It won't be slogans.

HOTTELET: Mr. Truman's testimony did not sharpen the conflict over civil rights. Many observers thought he meant to suggest a compromise by citing the party platforms of 1948 and 1952, which do not mention the Supreme Court. There was no immediate Southern comment. Southern delegates will meet in caucus tonight to discuss their stand. But tomorrow the issue of civil rights formally comes before the platform committee and will be fought out in public dispute.

MURROW: Thank you, Dick Hottelet.

Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota also arrived in town today. Humphrey is the only avowed candidate for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination. He also played the unity theme. The issue over civil rights, he said, is principally one of methods.

In Washington, Harold Stassen announced that Elroy Bromwich, the chairman of the Missouri delegation to the Republican National Convention, had joined his Dump-Nixon campaign. Stassen said that in his opinion there is a fifty-fifty chance that the Republican convention will replace Mr. Nixon with Governor Herter of Massachusetts.

Negotiations for a Soviet-Japanese peace treaty remain deadlocked. In Moscow today Japanese Foreign Minister Shigemitsu asked for permission to see Soviet Premier Bulganin or Communist party boss Khurshchev, in an effort to break the stalemate. Japan is demanding the return of two small islands in the southern Kuriles. Russia calls agreement to the demand "out of the question."

On Cyprus, Greek Cypriotes have protested the hanging of three underground fighters by staging a general strike. Most shops were closed, and construction of a 33-million-dollar base for the Royal Air Force was brought to a halt. Resentment is strong because last week the Cypriote underground released a British hostage on the plea of the three men hanged early today.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

MURROW: I would say my thanks to Charles Collingwood for sitting in during these past few weeks. Someone once remarked, "What is said is important. How it is said may be equally important." This reporter appreciated both what he said and how he said it. The trouble with a vacation, of course, is that it must end - and frequently before the necessary work is done. Good night and good luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, August 10, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: CBS NEWS presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Tonight's program originates in Chicago at the scene of the Democratic National Convention which opens on Monday. Mr. Murrow and other distinguished reporters of the CBS NEWS staff are on hand to provide accurate, up to the minute coverage of developments in the caucus rooms and all the political headquarters and on the convention floor. Mr. Murrow is also backed up by a staff of CBS news correspondents assigned to news centers around the world.

Now, direct from Convention City - here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. Secretary of State Dulles said today, "We're making our plans on the assumption that there will be a peaceful solution of the Suez problem". He discounted rumor that Pres. Eisenhower may call a special session of Congress to deal with the situation. The reason Mr. Eisenhower has summoned Congressional leaders to a White House meeting on Sunday, Dulles said, is that Mr. Eisenhower feels very strongly about sharing responsibility with Congress. Particularly, if there is any risk of hostilities. The White House announced tonight that Mr. Dulles will see the President tomorrow morning to review plans for the Sunday meeting.

Today, the Sec. of State conferred with United Nations Secretary General Hammerskjold in New York. After the conference Dulles said he had not asked Hammerskjold to take any action regarding Suez.

It was indicated in London today that Britain will not go along with the Russian proposal, either to delay the conference or to open it to additional 22 countries including Red China and all the Arab states.

The Egyptian government announced tonight that Pres. Nasser has postponed his visit to Moscow scheduled for next Tuesday. I should like to discuss this situation further in a few minutes.

Here in Chicago, today, former President Truman was visited privately by Adlai Stevenson and Averell Harriman. The two principal contenders for the Democratic presidential nomination. Both of them are bidding for Mr. Truman's support. When reporters asked Stevenson what he and the ex-President talked about he said, "We decided to elect a Democratic president". And then he added, "I feel just as good today as I did yesterday and the day before". Mr. Truman has said he likes a fighter. After Gov. Harriman saw Mr. Truman today reporters asked if he regarded Harriman as a "good fighter". "Yes", he said, "Harriman's a good fighter." Mr. Truman said he will announce his choice for the presidential nomination at a news conference tomorrow afternoon. A Stevenson supporter who is a friend of Mr. Truman's predicts that the nod may go to Harriman. Stevenson says that if that happens he thinks he can win the nomination anyway. Actually, it is doubtful whether Mr. Truman has made up his own mind. No one here in Chicago knows.

Gov. Harriman held a news conference today and said the Democratic platform should specifically endorse the Supreme Court decisions in favor of desegregation. "The Democratic Party", he said, "should recognize the decision and state that they are the laws of the land." The platform committee heard testimony today from Gov. Timmerman of South Carolina that a strong civil rights plank would ensure a Democratic defeat in November. "It would be an outright endorsement", he said, "of the Republican administration". An opposite view was expressed earlier by George Meaney, president of the AFofL-CIO. Meaney said the civil rights issue should be met head on. Any other stand, he said, would be considered by labor to be a deliberate evasion of this vital issue.

Tonight, Sen. Kefauver an ex-contender for the Democratic presidential nomination accused top officials of the Eisenhower administration of criminal conspiracy to cover up on the Dixon-Yates power contract. The officials named by Kefauver include Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams and Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Engrgy Commission. He demanded a grand jury investigation.

Pres. Eisenhower, today, vetoed a bill authorising expenditure of more than one and a half billion dollars for flood control and for the development of rivers and harbors in nearly every part of the country. The action was unusual for an election year. The President said in his veto message that while the majority of the project had been given adequate study many others had not. He said he took the action with regret.

In Algeria 27 French soldiers have been killed in rebel ambushes in the last 24 hours. French authorities say several dozen Arab villagers were massacred near Constantine yesterday by a Nationalist extremist.

The Italian line sued the Swedish-American line today for 25 million dollars in the sinking of the Andrea Doria last month off Nantucket light. The suit was filed in Federal Court in New York and says the tragedy was caused by negligence of the Stockholm and her crew. Fifty persons are feared dead in the collision. The Italian line alleges the Stockholm was moving at immoderate speed in heavy fog and failed to maintain a proper course. Last Tuesday the Swedish line filed similar charges against the Italian company.

Six Eastern railroads asked the Interstate Commerce Commission today for authority to raise first class passenger fares 4½%. They also want a 5% increase in coach fares. The six railroads include the Pennsylvania and the New York Central. Higher fares are necessary, they said, to meet operating costs.

Chicago, which once counted as a capitol of isolationism, found itself today situated, in a sense, on the Suez Canal. The Suez crisis has been felt to be too immediate to permit handy treatment in the Democratic platform now being drafted here. But the Democrats were startled. First, by the stock market break on on Monday and then by the summons to th e White House Conference for Sunday. This will send key Congressional leaders back to Washington. And mention that the administration may examine a request for standby powers in the Mediterranean has suddenly made Democrats realize that more is going on in the world than next week's national convention.

The Suez crisis might be called different from most choices between force and negotiation. For this time either alternative is dangerous for the West. This can hardly be a story with a happy ending no matter which way it is written. Nor is it unrealistic to speak of the dangers of negotiation. It looks highly doubtful that Nasser can be prevailed upon to restore international control over the canal or its traffic. That is, he seems even likelier to win a victory if force is not used than if it is.

If force were used and even if it were restricted to a blockade without occupation of Egyptian territory, Nasser could be brought down fairly soon. But the cost of such action to the British and French and to Americans, too - even if this country did not take direct part in a blockade, is considered very high indeed. Too many people would refuse to accept it as a Simon-pure defense of international rights established by treaty. It would be seen as an attempt ~~[illegible]~~ to bring Nasser down, as indeed it would be and not without provocation. Nasser, having Suez in his hands, would be in a position to shut off much of the Middle East's oil and so paralyze British and French economy. If his canal policy paid off, all foreign investments in oil throughout the whole area would be in danger of nationalization. In a very real way, Nasser would have his hands at the jugular vein of Western prosperity.

The violent reactions in London and Paris reflect genuine fear. Thirty years ago the use of force against Nasser would have been the most natural thing in the world. But, today, the world is different. Free nations areemerging from past subjugation and world sympathies, generally in the West too, are with the free nations rather than with the declining empires. Even when the young nations are headstrong and impulsive. But even if the case against using force is compelling, the outlook for the West in the upcoming negotiations is gloomy. For Nasser to lose he would have to restore the international control of the canal. In the past this control has been exercised by a private company. In the future it might be an official international agency, but the nature of the company is not the issue. The issue is the free use of the canal by all countries and this Nasser guarantees to continue. It is true that Nasser abused his previous power at Suez by banning commerce with Israel with whom he was technically at war, but the international control system never made an issue of that. So the powers cannot consistently do it now in the sacred cause of the freedom of the canal. Nor can they expect to take the canal out of Nasser's hands on the grounds that he might at some future time treat their commerce the way he is treating Israel's. It seems that the most the West can hope for is to set up a plan for joint military action that would crack down on Nasser the instant that he discriminated against foreign commerce other than Israel's. But even if this were achieved, Nasser still would have won. And the Western influence in the Middle East would suffer accordingly.

What remains unexplained about the crisis is how the State Department came to set it off. Which it did. Nasser decided, belatedly it is true, to accept the United States offer of aid in building the upper or the Aswan Nile Dam. And then when he called in the United States ambassador to say so, he was told that the offer had been withdrawn. This was a rather melodramatic slap in the face and the public has never been adequately told the reason for it. The public knew that Nasser had been something of a disappointment. He had played very closely with the Kremlin. He had recognized Red China. He had broken his promise to keep hands off the Algerian conflict. He seemed to be ambitious for supreme power in the Arab world. So as to use it chiefly against the West. But if Mr. Dulles thought the time had come to get rid of Nasser he would have gone along with the British and French military plans after the canal was seized.

Mr. Dulles has called the withdrawal of the Aswan Dam offer - a calculated risk. This word "calculated" is a little odd for the State Department hardly calculated that Nasser would answer by nationalizing the Suez Canal. It looks as though Mr. Dulles thought it safe. And he started a course of events of which the end is not yet in sight. And which, as things now look, are going to bring Nasser unexpected rewards. And the West very serious losses.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

(GROUND OBSERVER CORPS ANNOUNCEMENT)

ANNC'R: Now, here is Mr. Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW: There are, unfortunately, no safe alternatives to Egypt's seizure of the Suez Canal. When Mr. Dulles took his so-called "calculated risk" in punishing Nasser he was not necessarily wrong, but he was audacious. In this, he might well have taken the counsel of a French writer who said, "Tact in audacity consists in knowing how far one may go too far".

Good night and good luck.

ANNC'R: You've been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news, Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time over most of these stations. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts brought to you each day by CBS NEWS. Regularly heard from Convention City will be the distinguished reports of other CBS newsmen including Charles Collingswood, Eric Severeid, Lowell Thomas, Bill Downs, Allan Jackson and Bob Trout etc.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, AUGUST 10, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today, "We're making our plans on the assumption that there will be a peaceful solution of the Suez problem." He discounted rumor that President Eisenhower may call a special session of Congress to deal with the situation. The reason Mr. Eisenhower has summoned Congressional leaders to a White House meeting on Sunday, Dulles said, is that Mr. Eisenhower feels very strongly about sharing responsibility with Congress. Particularly, if there is any risk of hostilities. The White House announced tonight that Mr. Dulles will see the President tomorrow morning to review plans for the Sunday meeting.

Today, the Secretary of State conferred with United Nations Secretary General Hammerskjold in New York. After the conference Dulles said he had not asked Hammerskjold to take any action regarding Suez.

It was indicated in London today that Britain will not go along with the Russian proposal, either to delay the conference or to open it to additional 22 countries including Red China and all the Arab states.

The Egyptian government announced tonight that President Nasser has postponed his visit to Moscow scheduled for next Tuesday. I should like to discuss this situation further in a few minutes.

Here in Chicago, today, former President Truman was visited privately by Adlai Stevenson and Averell Harriman. The two principal contenders for the Democratic presidential nomination. Both of them are bidding for Mr. Truman's support. When reporters asked Stevenson what he and the ex-President talked about he said, "We decided to elect a Democratic president." And then he added, "I feel just as good today as I did yesterday and the day before." Mr. Truman has said he likes a fighter. After Governor Harriman saw Mr. Truman today reporters asked if he regarded Harriman as a "good fighter" "Yes," he said,"Harriman's a good fighter." Mr. Truman said he will announce his choice for the presidential nomination at a news conference tomorrow afternoon. A Stevenson supporter who is a friend of Mr. Truman's predicts that the nod may go to Harriman. Stevenson says that if that happens he thinks he can win the nomination anyway. Actually, it is doubtful whether Mr. Truman has made up his own mind. No one here in Chicago knows.

Governor Harriman held a news conference today and said the Democratic platform should specifically endorse the Supreme Court decisions in favor of desegregation. "The Democratic Party," he said, "should recognize the decision and state that they are the laws of the land." The platform committee heard testimony today from Governor Timmerman of South Carolina that a strong civil rights plank would ensure a Democratic defeat in November. "It would be an outright endorsement," he said, "of the Republican administration." An opposite view was expressed earlier by George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO. Meany said the civil rights issue should be met head on. Any other stand, he said, would be considered by labor to be a deliberate evasion of this vital issue.

Tonight, Senator Kefauver an ex-contender for the Democratic presidential nomination accused top officials of the Eisenhower administration of criminal conspiracy to cover up on the Dixon-Yates power contract. The officials named by Kefauver include Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams and Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission. He demanded a grand jury investigation.

President Eisenhower, today, vetoed a bill authorizing expenditure of more than one and a half billion dollars for flood control and for the development of rivers and harbors in nearly every part of the country. The action was unusual for an election year. The President said in his veto message that while the majority of the project had been given adequate study many others had not. H e said he took the action with regret.

In Algeria 27 French soldiers have been killed in rebel ambushes in the last 24 hours. French authorities say several dozen Arab villagers were massacred near Constantine yesterday by a Nationalist extermist.

The Italian line sued the Swedish-American line today for 25 million dollars in the sinking of the Andrea Doria last month off Nantucket light. The suit was filed in Federal Court in New York and says the tragedy was caused by negligence of the Stockholm and her crew. Fifty persons are feared dead in the collision. The Italian line alleges the Stockholm was moving at immoderate speed in heavy fog and failed to maintain a proper course. Last Tuesday the Swedish line filed similar charges against the Italian company.

Six Eastern railroads asked the Interstate Commerce Commission today for authority to raise first class passenger fares 45%. They also want a 5% increase in coach fares. The six railroads include the Pennsylvania and the New York Central. Higher fares are necessary, they said, to meet operating costs.

Chicago, which once counted as a capitol of isolationism, found itself today situated, in a sense, on the Suez Canal. The Suez crisis has been felt to be too immediate to permit handy treatment in the Democratic platform now being drafted here. But the Democrats were startled. First, by the stock market break on Monday and then by the summons to the White House Conference for Sunday. This will send key Congressional leaders back to Washington. And mention that the administration may examine a request for standby powers in the Mediterranean has suddenly made Democrats realize that more is going on in the world than next week's national convention.

The Suez crisis might be called different from most choices between force and negotiation. For this time either alternative is dangerous for the West. This can hardly be a story with a happy ending no matter which way it is written. Nor is it unrealistic to speak of the dangers of negotiation. It looks highly doubtful that Nasser can be prevailed upon to restore international control over the canal or its traffic. That is, he seems even likelier to win a victory if force is not used than if it is.

If force were used and even if it were restricted to a blockade without occupation of Egyptian territory, Nasser could be brought down fairly soon. But the cost of such action to the British and French and to Americans, too - even if this country did not take direct part in a blockade, is considered very high indeed. Too many people would refuse to accept it as a Simon-pure defense of international rights established by treaty. It would be seen as an attempt to bring Nasser down, as indeed it would be and not without provocation. Nasser, having Suez in his hands would be in a position to shut off much of the Middle East's oil and so paralyze British and French economy. If his canal policy paid off, all foreign investments in oil throughout the whole area would be in danger of nationalization. In a very real way, Nasser would have his hands at the jugular vein of Western prosperity.

The violent reactions in London and Paris reflect genuine fear. Thirty years ago the use of force against Nasser would have been the most natural thing in the world. But, today, the world is different. Free nations are emerging from past subjugation and world sympathies, generally in the West too, are with the free nations rather than with the declining empires. Even when the young nations are headstrong and impulsive. But even if the case against using force is compelling, the outlook for the West in the upcoming negotiations is gloomy. For Nasser to lose he would have to restore the international control of the canal. In the past this control has been exercised by a private company. In the future it might be an official international agency, but the nature of the company is not the issue. The issue is the free use of the canal by all countries and this Nasser guarantees to continue. It is true that Nasser abused his previous power at Suez by banning commerce with Israel with whom he was technically at war, but the international control system never made an issue of that. So the powers cannot consistently do it now in the sacred cause of the freedom of the canal. Nor can they expect to take the canal out of Nasser's hands on the grounds that he might at some future time treat their commerce the way he is treating Israel's. It seems that the most the West can hope for is to set up a plan for joint military action that would crack down on Nasser the instant that he discriminated against foreign commerce other than Israel's. But even if this were achieved, Nasser still would have won. And the Western influence in the Middle East would suffer accordingly.

What remains unexplained about the crisis is how the State Department came to set it off. Which it did. Nasser decided, belatedly it is true, to accept the United States offer of aid in building the upper or the Aswan Nile Dam. And then when he called in the United States ambassador to say so, he was told that the offer had been withdrawn. This was a rather melodramatic slap in the face and the public has never been adequately told the reason for it. The public knew that Nasser had been something of a disappointment. He had played very closely with the Kremlin. He had recognized Red China. He had broken his promise to keep hands off the Algerian conflict. He seemed to be ambitious for supreme power in the Arab world. So as to use it chiefly against the West. But if Mr. Dulles thought the time had come to get rid of Nasser he would have gone along with the British and French military plans after the canal was seized.

Mr. Dulles has called the withdrawal of the Aswan Dam offer - a calculated risk. The word"calculated" is a little odd for the State Department hardly calculated that Nasser would answer by nationalizing the Suez Canal. It looks as though Mr. Dulles thought it safe. And he started a course of events of which the end is not yet in sight. And which, as things now look, are going to bring Nasser unexpected rewards. And the West very serious losses.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: There are, unfortunately, no safe alternatives to Egypt's seizure of the Suez Canal. When Mr. Dulles took his so-called "calculated risk" in punishing Nasser he was not necessarily wrong, but he was audacious. In this, he might well have taken the counsel of a French writer who said, "Tact in audacity consists in knowing how far one may go too far."

Good night and Good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Aug. 13, 1956

This is the news:

The Democratic National Convention opened here in Chicago today---on time. National Chairman Paul Butler said it was the first time this had happened in the history of these conventions. / The first session was routine... consisting mostly of welcoming speeches... and lasted an hour and 45 minutes. / Senator Douglas of Illinois appealed for party unity. It can be done, he said, "even as we respect each other and defend what we believe to be right." Douglas made no direct mention of the civil rights issue. / Senator Smathers of Florida warned of a hard fight to hold Democratic control of Congress. (He's chairman of the Senate campaign committee). But we will win, he said. "We have the issues and the men." Representative Kirwan of Ohio accused the Republicans of fighting "every progressive measure every proposed that would benefit mankind during this century." (Kirwan heads the Democratic campaign committee in the House). / The convention adopted a resolution honoring the memory of the late Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky. /

Tonight, Governor Clement of Tennessee will deliver the keynote address... the text of which has been released. The governor will chide the Republicans as being the party of "privilege and pillage." He will say, "You cannot judge the prosperity of a nation by the earnings of a privileged monopoly." And he will accuse the Republican Administration of following a "fatal" foreign policy, and of reducing the standing of the United States among the nations of the world to an all-time low. Clement will also say... in this fighting speech... that "the President's record, and his party's record, are one and the same."

In the caucus rooms, in any number of other rooms, and at the headquarters of the various candidates, the jockeying continued. Former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson met for the first time since Mr. Truman came out for Governor Harriman. It was at a breakfast staged by Mayor Daley of Chicago for a large group of Democratic leaders. And the two men smiled, shook hands for the photographers, then went their divers ways. Later, Stevenson had a long talk with Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas, who... as a favorite son... controls 56 delegate votes. Tonight, Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, came out formally for Stevenson... as David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, came out for Harriman yesterday. Senator Johnson also had a 45-minute conference today with Senator Symington of Missouri, both of whom are presidential possibilities.

The forces of Averell Harriman claimed today to have picked up a few votes in the Illinois delegation, which is predominately for Stevenson. Harriman's supporters now claim to have "about" 400 first ballot votes.

The Democratic platform committee has drawn up a tentative plank scoring the Administration's economic policies. No definite word yet on a civil rights plank.

The United States today declared its "complete agreement" with Great Britain and France, that the Suez Canal should be operated by an international authority. The State Department said: "The United States is not aware of any difference in the matter, between the British and French governments and itself." All three governments, it said, believe there should be "international means" to insure that the canal will be kept open.

Tomorrow, Secretary of State Dulles will leave for the London conference on Suez, that starts on Thursday. Of the 24 countries invited, only Egypt and Greece refused to attend. Two planeloads of Russian diplomats already have arrived for the talks.

The British Labor Party demanded today that Prime Minister Eden guarantee, publicly, that British will not attack Egypt in the Suez dispute. The Labor opposition proposed that... in view of public anxiety... the government "make plain" that recent military measures were purely precautionary.

The airlift of British troops to the Eastern Mediterranean, continued.

In Cairo today, the Arab League... representing nine Arab countries... declared that aggression against Egypt will be regarded as aggression against all Arab states. The League said President Nasser's proposal for a much broadened, 45-nation conference on Suez, was "consistent with the international principles of justice."

In Tel Aviv, the leader of the opposition to Prime Minister Ben Gurion proposed today that Israel abandon its passive policy on Suez. The opposition leader said that, for Israel, Nasser's success or failure is "a matter of life or death".

The United States has proposed a new inter-American conference to make the Organization of American States "a more effective instrument of cooperative effort in the economic, social and technical fields." The meeting... in Washington... would be attended by a special committee representing the 21 American republics. President Eisenhower called for creation of such a committee at the recent Panama Conference.

The east coast of Florida... between Miami and Daytona Beach... has been placed on "hurricane watch." At last report, Hurricane Betsy was 500 miles southeast of Miami, traveling northwest at about 19 miles an hour. The wind near the center of the storm was clocked at 110 miles an hour.

At Springfield, Illinois, former state auditor Orville Hodge entered a plea of guilty today to 48 indictments accusing him of fraud. Sentence was postponed until next Monday.

Edward R. Murrow: August 13, 1956.

A national convention that opens with a surprise can be expected to go on producing surprises. Harry Truman's bombshell for Harriman may or may not have changed the outcome of the convention. Stevenson still may be nominated. But it will not come out as had been predicted. There will be conflict and strong rivalries, and what is most unsettling for a convention, a season of uncertainty. The longer the delay, the more unpredictable a convention becomes.

Mr. Truman's motives are being variously expressed. The real authority on them is Mr. Truman, and he quite frankly says he is not an elder statesman but a politician. A statesman might be said to be someone preoccupied with policy and its wisdom, while a politician is preoccupied with power. That described Mr. Truman's motives intelligibly. For what is at stake in the Chicago convention is the control of the Democratic party. Mr. Truman is a realist, and knows as well as the next man how hard it is to nominate Harriman. But in a fight for power the plunge for Harriman is understandable.

This convention is like a struggle among heirs for a vast estate. Truman is the elder brother who knows he cannot be the heir himself, and is backing his favorite cousin, Averill Harriman. If the handsome cousin gets it, he will be under Truman's ~~thumb~~ influence in the management of the estate. And if he is not chosen, there will be at least time to make a deal that would put Truman in the driver's seat. Eleanor Roosevelt, on this occasion, is the gracious dowager. She has cordial smiles for all, but her preference is for her favorite, the adopted son, Adlai Stevenson. The room is full of eager and hopeful relatives; some of them are definitely "poor relations", some are quite ~~affluent~~ well to do. All of them know the control of the estate is a complicated business, and this or that heir is not so important as what group he represents, and what power that group has.

To put this more concretely: Mr. Truman by coming out for Harriman may have stopped Stevenson's nomination on the first, second or third ballot. That is the way it looks tonight. The result may be that the favorite son delegations may not be released at once to vote for Stevenson, as they otherwise would have been. They may be kept under discipline to see what happens. Then, if a deadlock develops, a compromise candidate might be chosen. Whoever he is, this man would be somewhat beholden to Truman.

But it would be a mistake to consider Mr. Truman to be the key man in the tussle between heirs. He started the fracas, but he won't be the one to settle it. He won't be, because it will be settled by the favorite sons themselves. And of these by far the most important is Lyndon Johnson. Not only does he have the big Texas delegation in his pocket, he is a magnet for southern delegates generally. His power is great. If he releases his delegates to Stevenson, Stevenson will be nominated. If he stays in the race, Stevenson probably will lose. Though he says sincerely that he is a serious candidate, it is unlikely that he could be nominated against northern opposition. So if he is not going to be heir to the estate, he stands to gain control of it.

But if Lyndon Johnson is a key man, another Texan must be mentioned in the same breath, Sam Rayburn, and in fact he may be the most powerful single person in the convention. He is one of the most deeply realistic and trusted leaders of the party. It is too much to say that Lyndon Johnson will do whatever Rayburn advises him to do. But it is safe to say he will not go against Rayburn's advice without most anxious consideration. / Mr. Rayburn has been basically for party unity under Stevenson, and was riled by the Truman strategy. / But the business of influencing Lyndon Johnson is a delicate matter. Johnson is genuinely ambitious. He also has political problems in Texas which will be eased if he stays for a while in the race.

Mr. Rayburn must take his colleague's sensibilities into account as well as his difficulties at home.

Perhaps the most noteworthy single fact in today's developments has been that Stevenson's strength did not melt away more in the heat of the Harriman boom. ~~Last night Stevenson's advisers were figuring that he would lose around fifty votes to Harriman, a figure that was naturally discounted as being professionally optimistic.~~ XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX

It seems that some southern delegations solidified their Stevenson support as a reaction to Truman and his plunge for Harriman. If they had doubts about Stevenson, because of his civil rights stand, they knew for sure they preferred him to Harriman. More of them would have re-affirmed their support of Stevenson if Lyndon Johnson were not seriously in the race. So Truman's campaign for Harriman did Stevenson good as well as harm, perhaps more good than had at first seemed likely. It freed him from any obligation to the Truman faction, and in the struggle for power, that may clear the way for the younger leadership to consolidate its hold on the party.

But tonight it is well to recognize that uncertainty is in the air. A good many delegates who haven't switched, know that they might change later on if circumstances changed. The air may be cleared by the adoption of a strong platform. But tonight the uncertainty is like an excess humidity. It makes everyone uncomfortable.

Ed Fahnon -

Word for Today

In his welcoming address today, Mayor Daley called Chicago "the greatest convention city in the world." This is, indeed, a city of conventions. But, years ago, Carl Sandburg called Chicago "the city of the big shoulders" and "the hog butcher for the world." There are signs that that, too, has not changed.

Goodnight and good luck!

Word for Today

The Democrats are hard at work... hewing out and hammering in place the various planks for their party platform. In the cause of unity, the builders of this platform would seem to have taken counsel of Lord Bacon, who said: "If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the music of praise will be fuller."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, August 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the News. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Tonight's program originates in Chicago, at the scene of the Democratic National Convention, which opened today. Mr. Murrow and other distinguished reporters of the CBS News staff are on hand to provide accurate, up-to-the-minute coverage of developments in the caucus rooms and all the political headquarters and on the convention floor. Mr. Murrow is also backed up by a staff of CBS News correspondents assigned to news centers around the world. Now direct from convention city, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. The Democratic National Convention opened here in Chicago today and on time. National Chairman Paul Butler said it was the first time this had happened in the history of these conventions. The first session was routine, consisting mostly of welcoming speeches and lasted an hour and forty-five minutes.

Senator Douglas, of Illinois, appealed for party unity. It can be done, he said, even as we respect each other and defend what we believe to be right. Douglas made no direct mention of the Civil Rights issue.

Senator Smathers, of Florida, warned of a hard fight to hold Democratic control of Congress; he's chairman of the Senate Campaign Committee. "But we will win," he said. "We have the issues and the men." Representative Kirwan of Ohio, accused the Republicans of fighting every progressive measure ever proposed that would benefit mankind during this century. Kirwan heads the Democratic Campaign Committee in the House. The convention adopted a resolution honoring the memory of the late Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky.

Tonight Governor Clement of Tennessee will deliver the keynote address, the text of which has been released. The Governor will chide the Republicans as being the party of privilege and pillage; he will say you cannot judge the prosperity of a nation by the earnings of a privileged monopoly; and he will accuse the Republican Administration of following a fatal foreign policy and of reducing the standing of the United States among the nations of the world to an all time low. Clement will also say, in this fighting speech, that the President's record and his party's record are one and the same.

In the caucus rooms and any number of other rooms, and at the headquarters of the various candidates, the jockeying continued.

Former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson met for the first time since Mr. Truman came out for Governor Harriman; it was at a breakfast staged by Mayor Daley of Chicago for a large group of Democratic leaders, and the two men smiled and shook hands for the photographers. Then went their diverse ways. Later, Stevenson had a long talk with Senator Lyndon Johnson, of Texas, who as a favorite son, controls 56 delegate votes. Tonight Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, came out formally for Stevenson, as David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, came out for Harriman yesterday. Senator Johnson also had a 45-minute conference today with Senator Symington of Missouri, both of whom are Presidential possibilities.

The forces of Averell Harriman claim to have picked up a few votes in the Illinois delegation, which is predominatly for Stevenson. Harriman supporters now claim to have about 400 first ballot votes.

The Democratic Platform Committee has drawn up a tentative plank scoring the Administration's economic policy. No definite word yet on the Civil Rights plank.

The United States today declared its complete agreement with Great Britain and France that the Suez Canal should be operated by an international authority. The State Department said the United States is not aware of any difference in the matter between the British and French governments and itself. All three governments, it said, believe there should be international means to insure that the canal will be kept open.

Tomorrow Secretary of State Dulles will leave for the London conference on Suez, the one that starts on Thursday. Of the twenty-four countries invited, only Egypt and Greece refused to attend. Two plane-loads of Russian diplomats already have arrived for the meetings.

The British Labor Party demanded today that Prime Minister Eden guarantee, publicly, that the British will not attack Egypt in the Suez dispute. The LABOR Opposition proposed that in view of public anxiety, the government make plain that recent military measures were purely precautionary. The airlift of British troops to the Eastern Mediterranean continued.

In Cairo today, the Arab League, representing nine Arab countries, declared that aggression against Egypt will be regarded as aggression against all Arab States. The League said President Nasser's proposal for a much broadened 45-nation conference on Suez was consistent with the international principles of justice.

In Tel Aviv, the leader of the opposition to Prime Minister Ben Gurion proposed today that Israel abandon its passive policy on Suez. The opposition leader said that for Israel Nasser's success or failure is a matter of life or death.

The east coast of Florida, between Miami and Daytona Beach, has been placed on "hurricane watch." At last report, Hurricane Betsy was 500-miles southeast of Miami, travelling northwest at about 19-miles an hour. The wind, near the center of the storm, was clocked at 110-miles an hour.

A national convention that opens with a surprise can be expected to go on producing surprises. Harry Truman's bombshell for Harriman may or may not have changed the outcome of the convention. Stevenson still may be nominated. But it will not come out as had been predicted. There will be conflict and strong rivalries and what is most unsettling for a convention, a certain season of uncertainty --- the longer the delay, the more unpredictable a convention becomes.

Mr. Truman's motives are being variously expressed. The real authority on them, of course, is Mr. Truman, and he quite frankly says he is not an elder statesman but a politician. A statesman might be said to be someone preoccupied with policy and its wisdom while a politician is preoccupied with power. That describes Mr. Truman's motives intelligibly, for what is at stake in the Chicago convention is the control of the Democratic party. Mr. Truman is a realist, and he knows as well as the next man how hard it is to nominate Harriman. But in a fight for power, the plunge for Harriman is understandable.

This convention is rather like a struggle among heirs for the control of a vast estate. Truman is the elder brother who knows he cannot be the heir himself and is backing his favorite cousin, Averell Harriman. If the handsome cousin gets it, he will be under Truman's influence in the management of the estate; and if he's not chosen, there will be at least time to make a "deal" that would put Truman in or near the driver's seat.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, on this occasion, is the gracious dowager. She has cordial smiles for all. But her preference is for her favorite, the adopted son, Adlai Stevenson. The room is full of eager and hopeful relatives; some of them are definitely poor relations; some are quite well to do, -- all of them know the control of the estate is a complicated business and this or that heir is not so important as what group he represents and what power that group has.

To put this more concretely, Mr. Truman - by coming out for Harriman - may have stopped Stevenson's nomination on the first, second or third ballot, - that's the way it looks tonight. The result may be that the favorite son delegations may not be released at once to vote for Stevenson as they had planned to do. They may be kept under discipline just to see what happens. Then if a deadlock develops, a compromise candidate might be chosen. Whoever he is, this man would be somewhat beholden to Mr. Truman. But it would be a mistake to consider Mr. Truman to be the key man in this tussle between the heirs. He started the fracas - but he won't be the one to settle it. He won't be because it will be settled by the favorite sons themselves; and of these by far the most important is Lyndon Johnson. Not only does he have that big Texas delegation in his pocket, he's a magnet for Southern delegates generally. His power is great. If he releases his delegates to Stevenson, Stevenson will be nominated. If he stays in the race, Stevenson may well lose. Though he says sincerely that he is a serious candidate, it is unlikely that he could be nominated against Northern opposition. So if he is not going to be heir to the estate, he stands to gain control of it. But if Lyndon Johnson is a key man, another Texan must be mentioned in the same breath - Sam Rayburn. And, in fact, he may be the most powerful single person in this convention. He is one of the most deeply realistic and trusted leaders of the party. It is too much to say, of course, that Lyndon Johnson will do whatever Rayburn advises him to do. But it is safe to say he will not go against Rayburn's advice without most anxious consideration.

Mr. Rayburn has been, basically, for party unity, under Stevenson, and he was somewhat riled by the Truman strategy. But the business of influencing Lyndon Johnson is a delicate matter. Johnson is genuinely ambitious. He also has political problems in Texas, which will be eased if he stays for a while in the race. Mr. Rayburn must take his colleagues' sensibilities into account as well as his difficulties at home.

Perhaps the most noteworthy single fact in today's developments has been that Stevenson's strength did not melt away more in the heat of the Harriman boom. It seems that some Southern delegations solidified their Stevenson support as a reaction to Truman and his plungefor Harriman. If they had doubts about Stevenson, because of his Civil Rights stand, they knew for sure they preferred him to Harriman. More of them would have reaffirmed their support of Stevenson if Lyndon Johnson were not seriously in the race. So Truman's campaign for Harriman did Stevenson some good as well as harm; perhaps more good than at first seemed possible. It freed him from any obligation to the Truman faction and in the struggle for power that may clear the way for the younger leadership to consolidate its hold on the party. But tonight it is well to recognize that uncertainty and a lot of it is in the air.

A good many delegates, who haven't switched, know that they might change later on if circumstances change. And one thing you can be quite sure of, the circumstances here are certainly going to change. One couldtake all of those favorite son delegates and ambitions and deal them out like a hand of poker and make a lot of possible combinations. But, unfortunately, the people themselves are not cards. Of course, possibly the air may be cleared by the adoption of a strong platform. But, tonight, the uncertainty is like an excess humidity; it makes everyone uncomfortable.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is Ed Farrett.

ANNOUNCER: ... (the American Council to Improve Our Neighborhoods is fighting the spread of slums ...)

CBS Radio urges you to join with neighbors to keep living standards high; clean up, repair, see that zoning laws are followed, that parks and playgrounds are adequate. ... This has been a Public Service message from CBS Radio.

Now, here is Mr.Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW: In his welcoming address today, Mayor Daley called Chicago "the greatest convention city in the world." This is, indeed, a city of conventions. But years ago, Carl Sandburg called Chicago "the city of the big shoulders," and he also called it "the hog butcher for the world." There are signs that that, too, has not changed and, certainly, the hospitality of Chicago for conventions has not changed. Good Night and Good Luck.

ANNOUNCER: You've been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday-through-Friday at this time over most of these stations. Mr. Murrow's is one of the many authoritative broadcasts brought to you each day by CBS News. Regularly heard from convention city will be the distinguished reports of other CBS Newsmen, including Charles Collingwood, Eric Sevareid, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Bob Trout and Dalls Townsend, with the latest convention developments.

THIS IS THE CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Monday, August 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news:

The Democratic National Convention opened here in Chicago today and on time. National Chairman Paul Butler said it was the first time this had happened in the history of these conventions. The first session was routine, consisting mostly of welcoming speeches and lasted an hour and forty-five minutes.

Senator Douglas, of Illinois, appealed for party unity. It can be done, he said, even as we respect each other and defend what we believe to be right. Douglas made no direct mention of the Civil Rights issue.

Senator Smathers, of Florida, warned of a hard fight to hold Democratic control of Congress; he's chairman of the Senate Campaign Committee. "But we will win," he said. "We have the issues and the men." Representative Kirwan of Ohio, accused the Republicans of fighting every progressive measure ever proposed that would benefit mankind during this century. Kirwan heads the Democratic Campaign Committee in the House. The convention adopted a resolution honoring the memory of the late Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky.

Tonight Governor Clement of Tennessee will deliver the keynote address, the text of which has been released. The Governor will chide the Republicans as being the party of privilege and pillage; he will say you cannot judge the prosperity of a nation by the earnings of a privileged monopoly; and he will accuse the Republican Administration of following a fatal foreign policy and of reducing the standing of the United States among the nations of the world to an all time low. Clement will also say, in this fighting speech, that the President's record and his party's record are one and the same.

In the caucus rooms and any number of other rooms, and at the headquarters of the various candidates, the jockeying continued.

Former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson met for the first time since Mr. Truman came out for Governor Harriman; it was at a breakfast staged by Mayor Daley of Chicago for a large group of Democratic leaders, and the two men smiled and shook hands for the photographers. Then went their diverse ways. Later, Stevenson had a long talk with Senator Lyndon Johnson, of Texas, who as a favorite son controls 56 delegate votes. Tonight Walter Reuther, President of the United Auto Workers, came out formally for Stevenson, as David McDonald, President of the United Steelworkers, came out for Harriman yesterday. Senator Johnson also had a 45-minute conference today with Senator Symington of Missouri, both of whom are Presidential possibilities.

The forces of Averell Harriman claim to have picked up a few votes in the Illinois delegation, which is predominately for Stevenson. Harriman supporters now claim to have about 400 first ballot votes.

The Democratic Platform Committee has drawn up a tentative plank scoring the Administration's economic policy. No definite word yet on the Civil Rights plank.

The United States today declared its complete agreement with Great Britain and France that the Suez Canal should be operated by an international authority. The State Department said the United States is not aware of any difference in the matter between the British and French governments and itself. All three governments it said, believe there should be international means to insure that the canal will be kept open.

Tomorrow Secretary of State Dulles will leave for the London conference on Suez, the one that starts on Thursday. Of the twenty-four countries, invited only Egypt and Greece refused to attend. Two plane-loads of Russian diplomats already have arrived for the meetings.

The British Labor Party demanded today that Prime Minister Eden guarantee, publicly, that the British will not attack Egypt in the Suez dispute. The labor opposition proposed that in view of public anxiety, the government make plain that recent military measures were purely precautionary. The airlift of British troops to the Eastern Mediterranean continued.

In Cairo today, the Arab League, representing nine Arab countries, declared that aggression against Egypt will be regarded as aggression against all Arab States. The League said President Nasser's proposal for a much broadened 45-nation conference on Suez was consistent with the international principles of justice.

In Tel Aviv, the leader of the opposition to Prime Minister Ben Gurion proposed today that Israel abandon its passive policy on Suez. The opposition leader said that for Israel Nasser's success or failure is a matter of life or death.

The east coast of Florida, between Miami and Daytona Beach, has been placed on "hurricane watch." At last report, Hurricane Betsy was 500-miles southeast of Miami, travelling northwest at about 19-miles an hour. The wind, near the center of the story, was clocked at 110-miles an hour.

A national convention that opens with a surprise can be expected to go on producing surprises. Harry Truman's bombshell for Harriman may or may not have changed the out-come of the convention. Stevenson still may be nominated. But it will not come out as had been predicted. There will be conflict and strong rivalries and what is most unsettling for a convention, a certain season of uncertainty -- the longer the delay, the more unpredictable a convention becomes.

Mr. Truman's motives are being variously expressed. The real authority on them, of course, is Mr. Truman, and he quite frankly says he is not an elder statesman but a politician. A statesman might be said to be someone preoccupied with policy and its wisdom while a politician is preoccupied with power. That describes Mr. Truman's motives intelligibly, for what is at stake in the Chicago convention is the control of the Democratic party. Mr. Truman is a realist, and he knows as well as the next man how hard it is to nominate Harriman. But in a fight for power, the plunge for Harriman is understandable.

This convention is rather like a struggle among heirs for the control of a vast estate. Truman is the elder brother who knows he cannot be the heir himself and is backing his favorite cousin, Averell Harriman. If the handsome cousin gets it, he will be under Truman's influence in the management of the estate; and if he's not chosen, there will be at least time to make a "deal" that would put Truman in or near the driver's seat.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, on this occasion, is the gracious dowager. She has cordian smiles for all. But her preference is for her favorite, the adopted son, Adlai Stevenson. The room is full of eager and hopeful relatives; some of them are definitely poor relations; some are quite well to do, all of them know the control of the estate is a complicated business and this or that heir is not so important as what group he represents and what power that group has.

Toe put this more concretely, Mr. Truman-by coming out for Harriman - may have stopped Stevenson's nomination on the first, second, or third ballot, that's the way it looks tonight. The result may be that the favorite son delegations may not be released at once to vote for Stevenson as they had planned to do. They may be kept under discipline just to see what happens. Then if a deadlock develops a compromise candidate might be chosen. Whoever he is, this man would be somewhat beholden to Mr. Truman. But it would be a mistake to consider Mr. Truman to be the key man in this tussle between the heirs. He started the fracas - but won't be the one to settle it. He won't be because it will be settled by the favorite sons themselves; and of these by far the most important is Lyndon Johnson. Not only does he have that big Texas delegation in his pocket, he's a magnet for Southern delegates generally. His power is great. If he releases his delegates to Stevenson, Stevenson will be nominated. If he stays in the race, Stevenson may well lose. Though he says sincerely that he is a serious candidate, it is unlikely that he could be nominated against Northern opposition. So if he is not going to be heir to the estate, he stands to gain control of it. But if Lyndon Johnson is a key man, another Texan must be mentioned in the same breath - Sam Rayburn. And, in fact, he may be the most powerful single person in this convention. He is one of the most deeply realistic and trusted leaders of the party. It is too much to say, of course, that Lyndon Johnson will do whatever Rayburn advises him to do. But it is safe to say he will not go against Rayburn's advice without most anxious consideration.

Mr. Rayburn has been, basically, for party unity, under Stevenson, and he was somewhat riled by the Truman strategy. But the business of influencing Lyndon Johnson is a delicate matter. Johnson is genuinely ambitious. He also has political problems in Texas, which will be eased if he stays for a while in the race. Mr. Rayburn must take his colleagues' sensibilities into account as well as his difficulties at home.

Perhaps the most noteworthy single fact in today's developments has been that Stevenson's strength did not melt away more in the heat of the Harriman boom. It seems that some Southern delegations solidified their Stevenson support as a reaction to Truman and his plunge for Harriman. If they had doubts about Stevenson because of his Civil Rights stand, they knew for sure they preferred him to Harriman. More of them would have re-affirmed their support of Stevenson if Lyndon Johnson were not seriously in the race. So Truman's campaign for Harriman did Stevenson some good as well as harm; perhaps more good than at first seemed possible It freed him from any obligation to the Truman faction and in the struggle for power that may clear the way for the younger leadership to consolidate its hold on the party. But tonight it is well to recognize that uncertainty and a lot of it is in the air.

A good many delegates, who haven't switched, know that they might change later on if circumstances change. And one thing you can be quite sure of, the circumstances here are certainly going to change. One could take all of those favorite son delegates and ambitions and deal them out like a hand of poker and make a lot of possible combinations. But, unfortunately, the people themselves are not cards. Of course, possibly the air may be cleared by the adoption of a strong platform. But tonight the uncertainty is like an excess humidity; it makes everyone uncomfortable. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is Ed Farrett.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: In his welcoming address today, Mayor Daley called Chicago "the greatest convention city in the world." This is, indeed, a city of conventions. But years ago, Carl Sandburg called Chicago "the city of the big shoulders," and he also called it "the hog butcher for the world." There are signs that that, too, has not changed and, certainly, the hospitality of chicago for conventions has not changed. Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Aug. 14, 1956

This is the news:

Former President Truman said tonight that he is against Adlai Stevenson, in the fight for the Democratic presidential nomination, because he doesn't think Stevenson can win the election in November. "On the other hand," Mr. Truman said, "I think Averell Harriman can. The [redacted] Saturday, but [redacted] m[redacted] He said, "I don't think Stevenson can win a single state in addition to those he carried in [redacted] 1952. I'm trying my best," he said, "to keep him from getting the nomination."

A spokesman for Stevenson reacted immediately, by saying [redacted] Truman would not succeed. [redacted] Finnegan, Stevenson's manager, said: [redacted] Eisenhower this year."

Cutmann

Brantson

Harriman headquarters announced today that Governor Gary of Oklahoma will make the nominating speech for Harriman on the convention floor.

The Tennessee delegation decided to cast all its 32 votes... on the first ballot... to Governor Clement, as a favorite son. Harriman supporters said they were "delighted" that Tennessee had decided to hold out.

The Arizona delegation said it would cast its bloc of 16 votes for Stevenson on the first ballot.

The platform committee has still to reach agreement on the controversial civil rights plank. It has agreed tentatively on a farm plank, promising price supports on basic crops at 90 percent of parity. A proposal for 100 percent parity was dropped.

(I should like to discuss these, and other convention developments further, in a few minutes).

The main speaker at the convention tonight will be House Speaker Sam Rayburn, who will take over [redacted] as permanent chairman. Mr. Rayburn will accuse President Eisenhower, and his administration, of "mishandling" American foreign policy "in the most perilous times in world history." He will accuse Mr. Eisenhower, directly, of "[redacted] of "passing the buck", when programs go wrong.

CBS President Frank Stanton said today that the network was not committed to televise a movie which was shown last night to the convention delegates. Democratic Chairman Paul Butler said last night that CBS had committed itself to carry the film... a documentary on the history of the Democratic Party. And he called the omission "absolute sabotage of an important part of our program." Mr. Stanton replied in a telegram: "Neither I nor anyone else at CBS has ever committed CBS to carry the film. Far more important," he said, "is the vital issue of freedom of the press which you raise. Those who make the news cannot, in a free society, dictate to broadcasters, as part of the free press, to what extent, where and how they shall cover the news. Television and radio... in covering the conventions, as well as all other news events... are not mere conduits, which must carry everything which the newsmakers demand. On the contrary," Mr. Stanton said, "we must insist most vigorously that we are, and must remain, free to exercise our news judgment." Robert Kintner, president of the American Broadcasting Company, issued a statement, supporting the CBS position. "The right of networks to exercise judgment on important news events," he said, "is as basic as freedom of the press and freedom of speech." This afternoon, Chairman Butler reiterated his stand that CBS had "no right" to edit what he termed a "vital part" of the keynote address.

→

Chairman Hall, of the Republican National Committee, said today that last night's keynote speech... by Governor Clement... indicates a rough campaign ahead. Vice President Nixon has declined to comment on Clement's characterization of him as "the hatchet-man" of the Republican Party.

White House News Secretary Hagerty says President Eisenhower will [redacted] talk politics tomorrow with former Governor Dewey of New York. Hagerty "thinks" the meeting is in connection with the Republican National Convention, which opens in San Francisco [redacted] on Monday.

President Eisenhower has renewed his invitation to Prime Minister Nehru of India, to come to Washington for a discussion of world problems. The White House says, no formal acceptance has been received. A similar meeting... arranged for early last month... was cancelled because of the President's attack of ileitis. The timing of this new conference is being [redacted] left up to the prime minister.

~~General Gruenther said today that [redacted] Commander in Europe, [redacted] Eisenhower had announced the resignation last April, [redacted] then will be succeeded by General Norstad, his present air deputy.~~

President Eisenhower today formally appointed J. Lee Rankin to be solicitor general of the United States. Mr. Rankin has been serving as assis[redacted]

The President also named a career diplomat, Raymond Hare, to be the new ambassador to Egypt, succeeding Henry Byroade. Byroade has been reassigned to the Union of South Africa.

Secretary of State Dulles discussed the Suez crisis [redacted] with Mr. Eisenhdwer today, and then took off for the London conference on Suez that starts on Thursday. Of his meeting with the President, he said: "We went over a good many of the formulas which could be devised to assure a dependable international operation of the canal, consistent with Egypt's [redacted] rights." Mr. Dulles said he was confident a peaceful solution can be found.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, who will represent Russia at the conference, said today that he will seek to settle the issue "through [redacted] agreement by all the states concerned." [redacted] Any settlement, he said, must have Egypt's participation. Egypt has refused to attend the London meeting. Instead, it wants a conference with broader representation in Cairo later on.

The latest word on "Hurricane Betsy" is that... due to change of direction... it may not hit the Atlantic coast. At last report, the storm was north of Palm Beach and 200 miles out at sea.

Edward R. Murrow: August 14, 1956.

The Democratic convention could be described today as experiencing a kind of "creeping harmony". It isn't yet an all-out attack. That can't come before the civil rights plank of the platform is accepted, which can't be before tomorrow night. This plank still remains the biggest hazard to the convention so far as unity is concerned. But the creeping harmony is already operating in this field, and indications tonight are that an acceptable compromise is within reach. Senator Sam Erwin of North Carolina showed this in saying that extremists of both wings will have to swallow something they don't like. However, a floor fight on the civil rights plank seems to be inevitable, simply because some of the extremists will not bow to a compromise without a challenge.

But harmony has been established on the troublesome issue of a loyalty oath, and a compromise on the civil rights plank may not be much more difficult. And once it is in the bag the struggles of the '52 convention and the open split of '48 are probably out of the question this year.

It will be recalled that in the '52 ~~XXX convention the north put through a XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX resolution calling for a pledge by all delegates to work to get the Democratic ticket on the state ballots. They were trying to head off a third party as in '48. The northerners angrily insisted, the~~ southerners angrily fought back. When the convention adopted the resolution by voice vote, South Carolina, Louisiana and Virginia refused to accept the oath. But they did not bolt, even though South Carolina wanted to. They stayed on as observers. In the end the three states were allowed to vote without the oath, but by a very close margin.

But the loyalty oath issue was not finally disposed of till a decision of the rules committee yesterday. But only a year ago Governor Timmerman of South Carolina said there was a strong probability of a third party this year, and a few weeks ago warned that southern state conventions would stand by in recess to convene after the Chicago convention to decide whether to set up a third party. However, Governor Timmerman found himself opposed by such southern leaders as Lyndon Johnson, Walter George, Kerr Scott and John Sparkman, all more influential and more moderate on this issue.

Four years ago two XXX flaming antagonists on the loyalty oath were Senator Humphrey and Governor Battle of Virginia. It shows how different things are today that these two men jointly proposed the abolition of the oath to the rules committee. The new "good faith oath", as adopted, takes it for granted that every delegate is loyal. It places on national committee-men and state organizations the responsibility of seeing that the official Democratic ticket gets on the state ballots in November.

XXXX

So this is a substantial contribution to harmony. Another is the certainty that no fight over credentials will be carried to the floor of the convention this year. Both the South Carolina and Mississippi delegations were challenged, and both were confirmed by 52 votes to 2. (There have to be ten votes against confirmation to permit a floor fight on the subject.) The charge against the Mississippi delegation was that some individuals on it had been Republicans or Eisenhower men. One motive of the challenge was to keep Senator ~~KKKKKK~~ Eastland out of the convention. But the steam was taken out of the fight when it was privately explained that Governor Coleman, who heads the delegation, is probably the only man in Mississippi who can take Senator Eastland's seat from him in 1960.

Just how a compromise plank on civil rights will be worded cannot yet be forecast. It may be that a specific endorsement of the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration will ~~XXX~~ not be made, but that the substance of the ruling will be endorsed without mention of the court. That is what Adlai Stevenson proposed to the platform committee when asked for his views on the plank. He wanted the platform to promise equal rights in voting, transportation, housing and education, and put education fourth. That is, he wanted principles to be endorsed, as being what mattered.

Southern leaders, in meetings prior to the convention, were understood to have said they were willing that the convention should recognize the Supreme Court as the law of the land, but that it must not set a time when integration has to be completed.

Senator Johnson still was centering his activity today on getting a platform that is acceptable all around, in other words, he was using his great power first of all to obtain harmony. Probably it is true that until harmony on the civil rights issue is assured, the choice of a candidate cannot come into focus. That is why most of the precise predictions about this and that combination for President and Vice President are premature. The masters of the convention will be those who in the end decide who gets the nomination. They will have control of the party. But these masters will exert their mastery first of all in the platform committee, as they have done in the rules committee and the credentials committee. The forces wanting harmony so far are getting it. And that perhaps is the most significant news from a somewhat newsless convention today.

A rumor reached this reporter tonight about the terms that Lyndon Johnson has made for supporting Stevenson. It is that Stevenson can have

Johnson's support - which amounts to nomination - for three considerations: a civil rights plank acceptable to the South, the vice presidential nomination, or the designation of the candidate, and the choice of a national chairman. The Stevenson people, the rumor said, had not accepted it, and may think they don't need to pay so much. Whether or not this is a true story, it is indicative of profound truth, that what is at stake behind the scenes in Chicago is the control of the party, with Lyndon Johnson in a position to negotiate for tremendous power.

Bob Grant

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, Aug. 14, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: Now, direct from Convention City, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

Former President Truman said tonite that he is against Adlai Stevenson in the fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination because he does not think Stevenson can win the election in November. On the other hand, Mr. Truman said, "I think Averell Harriman can." He said, "I don't think Stevenson can win a single state in addition to those he carried in 1952. I'm trying my best," he said, "to keep him from getting the nomination. A spokesman for Stevenson reacted immediately by sayingTruman would not succeed, that the delegates had made up their mind that Stevenson is the only man who can beat Eisenhower in November.

Harriman headquarters announced today that Governor Gerry of Oklahoma will make the nominating speech for Harriman on the convention floor. The Tennessee delegation decided to cast all its 32 votes on the first ballot to Governor Clement as a Favorite Son. Harriman supporters said they were delighted that Tennessee had decided to hold out. The Arizona delegation said it would cast its block of sixteen votes for Stevenson on the first ballot.

The Platform Committee has still to reach agreement on the controversial civil rights plank. It has agreed tentatively on a farm plank, promising price supports on basic crops at 90% of parity. A proposal for 100% parity was dropped. I should like to discuss these and other convention developments further in a few minutes.

The main speaker at the convention tonite will be House Speaker Sam Rayburn, who will take over as permanent chairman. Mr. Rayburn will accuse President Eisenhower and his Administration of mishandling American foreign policy in the most perilous times in world history. He will accuse Mr. Eisenhower directly of passing the buck when programs go wrong.

CBS President Frank Stanton said today that the network was not committed to televise a movie which was shown last night to the convention delegates. Democratic Chairman Paul Butler said last night that CBS had committed itself to carry the film, a documentary on the history of the Democratic party, and he called the omission "absolute sabotage" of an important part of our program." Mr. Stanton replied in a telegram: "Neither I nor anyone else at CBS ever committed CBS to carry the film. Far more important," he said, "is the vital issue of freedom of the press which you raise. Those who make the news cannot, in a free society, dictate to broadcasters as part of the free press to what extent, where and how they shall cover the news. Television and radio in covering the conventions, as well as all other news events are not mere conduits which must carry everything which the newsmakers demand. On the contrary," Stanton said, "we must insist most vigorously that we are and must remain free to exercise our news judgment." Robert Gintler, president of the American Broadcasting Company, issued a statement supporting the CBS position. "The right of networks to exercise judgment on important news events", he said, "is as basic as freedom of the press and freedom of speech." This afternoon Chairman Butler reiterated his stand that CBS has no right to edit what he termed "a vital part of the keynote address."

Chairman Hall of the Republican National Committee said today that last night's keynote speech by Governor Clement indicates a rough campaign ahead. Vice President Nixon has declined to comment on Clement's characterization of him as "the hatchet man of the Republican party".

White House News Secretary Hagerty says President Eisenhower will talk politics tomorrow with former Governor Dewey of New York. Hagerty thinks the meeting is in connection with the Republican National Convention which opens in San Francisco on Monday.

President Eisenhower has renewed his invitation to Prime Minister Nehru of India to come to Washington for discussion of world problems. The White House says no formal acceptance has been received. A similar meeting, arranged for early last month, was cancelled because of the President's attack of ileitis. The timing of this new conference is being left up to the Prime Minister. The President also named a career diplomat, Raymond Hare, to be the new ambassador to Egypt, succeeding Henry Byeroad. Byeroad has been reassigned to the Union of South Africa.

Secretary of State Dulles discussed the Suez crisis with Mr. Eisenhower today and then took off for the London conference on Suez that starts on Thursday. Of his meeting with the President, he said, "We went over a good many of the formulas which could be devised to assure a dependable international operation of the canal, consistent with Egypt's rights. Mr. Dulles said he was confident a peaceful solution can be found.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, who will represent Russia at the conference, said today that he will seek to settle the issue through agreement by all the states concerned. Any settlement, he said, must have Egypt's participation. Egypt has refused to attend the London meeting. Instead, it wants a conference with broader representation in Cairo later on.

The latest word on Hurricane Betsy is that, due to change of direction, it may not hit the Atlantic coast. At last report the storm was north of Palm Beach and 200 miles out at sea.

The Democratic convention could be described today as experiencing a kind of creeping harmony. It isn't yet an all-out attack. That can't come before the civil rights plank of the platform is accepted - and that can't be done before tomorrow night. This plank still remains the biggest hazard to the convention, so far as unity is concerned. But the creeping harmony is already operating in this field, and indications tonight are that an acceptable compromise is within reach. Senator Sam Ervin of North Carolina showed this in saying that extremists of both wings will have to swallow something they don't like. However, a floor fight on the civil rights plank seems to be inevitable, simply because some of the extremists will not bow to a compromise without a prolonged challenge. But harmony has been established on the troublesome issue of a loyalty oath, and a compromise on the civil rights plank may not be much more difficult. And once it is in the bag, the struggles of the '52 convention and the open split in '48 are probably out of the question for this year, although that will depend largely on what is determined by the Harriman forces in connection with that fight.

The loyalty oath issue was not finally disposed of till a decision of the Rules Committee yesterday. But only a year ago Governor Timmerman of South Carolina said there was a strong possibility of a third party this year, and a few weeks ago warned that Southern State conventions would stand by in recess to convene after the Chicago convention to decide whether to set up a third party. However, Governor Timmerman found himself opposed by such Southern leaders as Lyndon Johnson, Walter George, Kerr Scott and John Sparkman, all more influential and more moderate on this issue.

Four years ago two flaming antagonists on the loyalty oath were Senator Humphrey and Governor Battle of Virginia. It shows how different things are today, that these two men jointly proposed the abolition of the oath to the Rules Committee. The new good-faith oath as adopted takes it for granted that every delegate is loyal, and so they managed to solve that one in that way. So this is a substantial contribution to harmony. Another is the certainty that no fight over credentials will be carried to the floor of the convention this year. Both the South Carolina and Mississippi delegations were challenged, and both were confirmed by 52 votes to 2. There have to be ten votes against confirmation to permit a floor fight on the subject of credentials.

Just how a compromise plank on civil rights will be worded cannot yet be forecast. It may be that a specific endorsement of the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration will not be made, but that somehow the substance of the ruling will be endorsed, without any mention of the court. That is what Adlai Stevenson proposed to the platform committee when asked for his views on the plank. He wanted a platform to promise equal rights in voting, transportation, housing and education, and he put education fourth. That is, he wanted principles to be endorsed, as being what really mattered. Southern leaders, in meetings prior to the convention, were understood to have said they were willing that the convention should recognize the Supreme Court as the law of the land, but that it must not set a time when integration had in fact to be completed.

Senator Johnson still was centering his major activity today on getting a platform that is acceptable all around. In other words, he was using his very considerable power, first of all, in an effort to obtain harmony on the various planks of the platform. Probably it is true that until harmony on the civil rights issue is assured, the choice of a candidate cannot come into focus. That is why most of the precise predictions about this and that combination for President and Vice President are, to say the least, premature. No one is going to give away his trading position before the various planks of that platform have been nailed down. The masters of this convention will be those who in the end decide who gets the nomination, because they will have control of the party. But these masters will exert their mastery first of all in the platform committee, as they have done in the Rules Committee and in the Credentials Committee. The forces wanting harmony so far appear to be getting a considerable measure of it. And that perhaps is the most significant news that has been made in this rather newsless convention today.

A rumor reached this reporter tonight about the terms that Lyndon Johnson has made for supporting Stevenson. It is this: that Stevenson can have Johnson's support, which in fact would practically amount to nomination for three considerations. First, a civil rights plank acceptable to the South; the Vice Presidential nomination, or at least the designation of that candidate and the choice of a National Chairman. That, of course, would give Johnson practically everything but the Presidential nomination. The Stevenson people, the rumor said, had not accepted it - and may think they don't need to pay so much. Whether or not this is a true story, it is indicative of a very profound truth - and that is, that what is at stake, behind the scenes, in all this manoeuvring here in Chicago, is the control of the party, with Lyndon Johnson in a position to negotiate for tremendous power.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the WORD FOR TODAY. Now, here is Bob Grant.

GRANT: (SAFE DRIVING ANNOUNCEMENT)

Now, here is Mr. Murrow with his WORLD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: The Democrats are hard at work hewing out and hammering in place the various planks of their party platform. In the cause of unity, the builders of this platform would seem to have taken counsel of Lord Bacon, who once said: "If a man so temper his action as in some one of them, he does content every faction. The music of praise will .....?

Good Night and Good Luck!

ANNC'R: (CLOSING ANNOUNCEMENT)

For comprehensive coverage stay tuned to the CBS RADIO NETWORK.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Tuesday, August 14, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news:

Former President Truman said tonight that he is against Adlai Stevenson in the fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination because he does not think Stevenson can win the election in November. On the other hand, Mr. Truman said, "I think Averell Harriman can." He said, "I don't think Stevenson can win a single state in addition to those he carried in 1952. I'm trying my best," he said,"to keep him from getting the nomination. A spokesman for Stevenson reacted immediately be saying Truman would not succeed, that the delegates had made up their mind that Stevenson is the only man who can beat Eisenhower in November.

Harriman headquarters announced today that Governor Gerry of Oklahoma will make the nominating speech for Harriman on the convention floor. The Tennessee delegation decided to cast all its 32 votes on the first ballot to Governor Clement as a favorite son. Harriman supporters said they were delighted that Tennessee had decided to hold out. The Arizona delegation said it would cast its block of sixteen votes for Stevenson on the first ballot.

The Platform Committee has still to reach agreement on the controversial civil rights plank. It has agreed tentatively on a farm plank, promising price supports on basic crops at 90% of parity. A proposal for 100% parity was dropped. I should like to discuss these and other convention developments further in a few minutes.

The main speaker at the convention tonight will be House Speaker Sam Rayburn who will take over as permanent chairman. Mr. Rayburn will accuse President Eisenhower and his Administration of mishandling American foreign policy in the most perilous times in world history. He will accuse Mr. Eisenhower directly of passing the buck when programs go wrong.

CBS President Frank Stanton said today that the network was not committed to televise a movie which was shown last night to the convention delegates. Democratic Chairman Paul Butler said last night that CBS had committed itself to carry the film, a documentary on the history of the Democratic party, and he called the omission "absolute sabotage of an important part of our program." Mr. Stanton replied in a telegram: "Neither I nor anyone else at CBS ever committed CBS to carry the film. Far more important," he said,"is the vital issue of freedom of the press which you raise. Those who make the news cannot, in a free society, dictate to broadcasters as part of the free press to what extent, where and how they shall cover the news. Television and radio in covering the conventions, as well as all other news events are not mere conduits which must carry everything which the newsmakers demand. On the contrary, "Stanton said, "we must insist most vigorously that we are and must remain free to exercise our news judgment." Robert Gintler, President of the American Broadcasting Company, issued a statement supporting the CBS position. "The right of networks to exercise judgment on important news events", he said, "is as basic as freedom of the press and freedom of speech." This afternoon Chairman Butler reiterated his stand that CBS has no right to ddit what he termed "a vital part of the keynote address."

Chairman Hall of the Republican National Committee said today that last night's keynote speech by Governor Clement indicates a rough campaign ahead. Vice President Nixon has declined to comment on Clement's characterization of him as "the hatchet man of the Republican party."

White House News Secretary Hagerty says President Eisenhower will talk politics tomorrow with former Governor Dewey of New York. Hagerty thinks the meeting is in connection with the Republican National Convention which opens in San Francisco on Monday.

President Eisenhower has renewed his invitation to Prime Minister Nehru of India to come to Washington for discussion of world problems. The White House says no formal acceptance has been received. A similar meeting, arranged for early last month, was cancelled because of the President's attack of ileitis. The timing of this new conference is being left up to the Prime Minister. The President also named a career diplomat, Raymond Hare, to be the new ambassador to Egypt, succeeding Henry Beyroad. Byeroad has been reassigned to the Union of South Africa.

Secretary of State Dulles discussed the Suez crisis with Mr. Eisenhower today and then took off for the London conference on Suez that starts on Thursday. Of his meeting with the President, he said, "We went over a good many of the formulas which could be devised to assure a dependable international operation of the canal consistent with Egypt's rights." Mr. Dulles said he was confident a peaceful solution can be found.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, who will represent Russia at the conference, said today that he will seek to settle the issue through agreement by all the states concerned. Any settlement, he said, must have Egypt's participation. Egypt has refused to attend the London meeting. Instead, it wants a conference with broader representation in Cairo later on.

The latest word on Hurrican Betsy is that, due to change of direction, it may not hit the Atlantic coast. At last report the story was north of Palm Beach and 200 miles out at sea.

The Democratic convention could be described today as experiencing a kind of creeping harmony. It isn't yet an all-out attack. That can't come before the civil rights plank of the platform is accepted - and that can't be done before t tomorrow night. This plank still remains the biggest hazard to the convention, so far as unity is concerned. But the creeping harmony is already operating in this field, and indications tonight are that an acceptable compromise is within reach. Senator Sam Ervin of North Carolina showed this in saying that extremists of both wings will have to swallow something they don't like. However, a floor fight on the civil rights plank seems to be inevitable, simply because some of the extremists will not bow to a compromise without a prolonged challenge. But harmony has been established on the troublesome issue of a loyalty oath, and a compromise on the civil rights plank may not be much more difficult. And once it is in the bag, the struggles of the '52 convention and the open split in '48 are probably out of the question for this year, although that will depend largely on what is determined by the Harriman forces in connection with that fight.

The loyalty oath issue was not finally disposed of til a decision of the Rules Committee yesterday. But only a year ago Governor Timmerman of South Carolina said there was a strong possibility of a third party this year, and a few weeks ago warned that Southern State conventions would stand by in recess to convene after the Chicago convention to decide whether to set up a third party. However, Governor Timmerman found himself opposed by such Southern leaders as Lyndon Johnson Walter George, Kerr Scott and John Sparkman, all more influential and more moderate on this issue.

Four years ago two flaming antagonists on the loyalty oath were Senator Humphrey and Governor Battle of Virginia. It shows how different things are today, that these two men jointly proposed the abolition of the oath to the Rules Committee. The new good-faith oath as adopted takes it for granted that every delegate is loyal, and so they managed to solve that one in that way. So this is a substantial contribution to harmony. Another is the certainty that no fight over credentials will be carried to the floor of the convention this year. Both the South Carolina and Mississippi delegations were challenged, and both were confirmed by 52 votes to 2. There have to be ten votes against confirmation to permit a floor fight on the subject of credentials.

Just how a compromise plank on civil rights will be worded cannot yet be forecast. It may be that a specific endorsement of the supreme Court's ruling on school integration will not be made, but that somehow the substance of the ruling will be endorsed, without any mention of the court. That is what Adlai Stevenson proposed to the platform committee when asked for his views on the plank. He wanted a platform to promise equal rights in voting, transportation, housing and education, and he put education fourth. That is, he wanted principles to be endorsed, as being what really mattered. Southern leaders, in meetings prior to the convention, were understood to have said they were willing that the convention should recognize the Supreme Court as the law of the land, but that it must not set a time when integration had in fact to be completed.

Senator Johnson still was centering his major activity today on getting a platform that is acceptable all around. In other words, he was using his very considerable power, first of all, in an effort to obtain harmony on the various planks of the platform. Probably it is true that until harmony on the civil rights issue is assured, the choice of a candidate cannot come into focus. That is why most of the precise predictions about this and that combination for President and Vice President are, to say the least, premature. No one is going to give away his trading position before the various planks of that platform have been nailed down. The masters of this convention will be those who in the end decide who gets the nomination, bedause they will have control of the party. But these masters will exert their mastery first of all in the platform committee, as they have done in the Rules Committee and in the Credentials Committee. The forces wanting harmony so far appear to be getting a considerable measure of it. And that perhaps is the most significant news that has been made in this rather newsless convention today.

A rumor reached this reporter tonight about the terms that Lyndon Johnson has made for supporting Stevenson. It is this: that Stevenson can have Johnson's support, which in fact would practically amount to nomination for three considerations. First, a civil rights plank acceptable to the South; the Vice Presidential nomination, or at least the designation of that candidate and the choice of a National Chairman. That, of course, would give Johnson practically everything but the Presidential nomination. The Stevenson people, the rumor said, had not accepted it -- and may think they don't need to pay so much. Whether or not this is a true story, it is indicative of a very profound truth -- and that is, that what is at stake, behind the scenes, in all this maneuvring here in Chicago is the control of the party, with Lyndon Johnson in a position to negotiate for tremendous power. This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Grant.

GRANT:

MURROW: The Democrats are hard at work hewing out and hammering in place the various planks of their party platform. In the cause of unity, the builders of this platform would seem to have taken counsel of Lord Bacon, who once said: "If a man so temper his action as in some one of them, he does content every faction." Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Aug. 15, 1956

This is the news:

All signs point to the nomination of Adlai Stevenson on the first ballot. Or, if not on the first ballot, then immediately thereafter. The latest Associated Press tabulation gives Stevenson 665 and a half votes for the Democratic presidential nomination, and Governor Harriman 240 and a half votes. On the basis of these unofficial figures, Stevenson now needs only 21 delegate votes to win the nominaton on the first ballot. Six hundred and eighty-six and a half votes are required to nominate.

The trend toward Stevenson began gaining momentum today when Governor Mennen Williams, of Michigan, declared for Stevenson and took, along with him, 31 and a half of the 44 votes of the Michigan delegation. New Jersey threw Stevenson all its 36 votes. The Arkansas delegation then announced that Stevenson would have its 26 votes, if there was a "satisfactory" civil rights plank. So far, the delegation has not said what it thinks of the plank, which was announced today. Tonight, there are reports that the majority of the Massachusetts delegation will switch to Stevenson tomorrow night, during the first ballot. Massachusetts has 40 votes, now committed to Representative McCormack as a favorite son. For the story of how Stevenson is reacting to these developments... and Mr. Truman's insistence that Stevenson does not have the "fighting spirit" needed to win the election in November... let's switch now to Bill Downs at the Stevenson headquarters.

→

Downs for approx 2 mins
Returns on standard cue

Thanks, Bill. Let's go next to Blair Clark, who is at Governor Harriman's headquarters.

Clark for approx 2 mins
Returns on standard cue

There has been a new, interesting development involving former President Truman and two leaders of the South, Sam Rayburn and Lyndon Johnson. Here is Griffing Bancroft at Senator Johnson's headquarters.

Bancroft runs for min and half

The platform committee gave its tentative approval today to a compromise civil rights plank, and because it is a compromise, nobody likes it very much. Some northern groups do not feel that it goes far enough. The New York delegation just called the plank "totally unacceptable". The Georgia delegation says it will vote against the entire platform, because of the civil rights plank, when it is presented tonight on the convention floor. Governor Griffin told the delegation that he would do his "level best" to see that Georgia's protest is registered before the convention. But, he said, if the sentiment for the platform is overwhelming, an expression of disapproval might be difficult. Former Governor Battle of Virginia told his state delegation he doubted there would be a fight on the convention floor.

Here, in substance, is what the civil rights plank said... subject to approval of the full convention: It says "recent decisions of the Supreme Court relating to segregation in publicly supported schools, and elsewhere, have brought consequesces of vast importance to our nation as a whole, and especially to communities directly affected. We reject all proposals for the use of force to interfere with the orderly determination of these matters by the courts." The plank goes on to say: "The Democratic Party emphatically reaffirms its support of the historic principle that ours is a government of laws and not of men. It recognizes the Supreme Court of the United States as one of the three constitutional and coordinated branches of the Federal Government, superior to and separate from any political party, the decisions of which are part of the law of the land." The paragraph concluded: "We condemn the efforts of the Republican Party to make it appear that this tribunal is a part of their party."

Despite the belief of some southerners... like Governor Battle... that there will not be a floor fight on the civil rights issue, such a possibility remains very real. A group of Democratic leaders met this afternoon and mapped strategy for a contest tonight on the floor. This group included Governor Williams of Michigan, Senator Lehman of New York, and Governor Freeman of Minnesota. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Joe Rauh of Americans for Democratic Action acted as co-chairman of the meeting. My colleague Charles Collingwood tells me that two principal demands were agreed upon: First, that a strong statement that the Supreme Court decision will be implemented, be included in the plank on civil rights. And, second, that the language deleted from the 1952 platform, be restored... particularly that relating to a strong federal Fair Employment Practices Commission. The meeting was also attended by Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers. Reuther said: "We are not interested in tearing this convention apart. But if we can't get a decent civil rights plank through the machinery of the platform committee, we will get it through the machinery of the floor."

→

Republican Senator Dirksen, of Illinois, said the Republican platform would... in his words... "contain no such weaseling" as that found in the Democratic civil rights plank. He would not say flatly that the Republican plank would include a straightforward endorsement of the Supreme Court decision. "The Supreme Court," he said, "is the law of the land and I believe in enforcement of the law." Dirksen is chairman of the subcommittee that will draw up the civil rights plank for the Republican national convention, that opens in San Francisco on Monday.

Former Governor Dewey saw President Eisenhower for 30 minutes today at the White House. Afterward, Dewey told reporters they talked about plans for the Republican convention. Dewey also said he is "quite confident" Vice President Nixon will be nominated for a second term. He called Mr. Nixon "the most useful vice president in history."

In London today, Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov, on the Suez problem. Mr. Dulles reportedly was encouraged by the talk... and [redacted] told Shepilov that the West has no intention of presenting Egypt with an ultimatum to surrender control of the canal. Dulles and Shepilov are in London, to be on hand for the opening tomorrow of the 22-nation conference on Suez. Egypt has relaxed its boycott of the meeting, to the extent of sending an observer to watch the proceedings.

Prime Minister Nehru warned today that the exercise of military force in the canal zone could lead to a general conflagration. Nehru expressed confidence that a peaceful solution will be found. "Even if the first conference fails," he said, "success will come at a second or third conference."

Bob Grant.

Word for Today

The nomination of Adlai Stevenson, on the first ballot, is regarded almost a sure thing. In the face of this opinion, Governor Harriman says he has no intention of quitting the race, that he believes he can still win. Damon Runyon once allowed that the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. "But," he said, "that's the way to bet."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (OPENING ANNOUNCEMENT)

Now, direct from Convention City in Chicago, here is EDWARD R. MURROW.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

All signs point to the nomination of Adlai Stevenson on the first ballot or, if not on the first ballot, then immediately thereafter. The latest Associated Press tabulation gives Stevenson 665½ votes for the Democratic Presidential nomination and Governor Harriman 240½ votes. On the basis of these unofficial figures, Stevenson now needs only 21 delegate votes to win the nomination on the first ballot. 686½ votes are required to nominate.

The trend toward Stevenson began gaining momentum today when Governor Mennen Williams of Michigan declared for Stevenson and took along with him 31½ of the 44 votes of the Michigan delegation. New Jersey threw Stevenson all its 36 votes. The Arkansas delegation then announced that Stevenson would have its 26 votes if there was a satisfactory civil rights plank. So far, the delegation has not said what it thinks of the plank which was announced today. Tonight there are reports that the majority of the Massachusetts delegation will switch to Stevenson tomorrow night during the first ballot. Massachusetts has 40 votes, now committed to Rep. McCormack as a Favorite Son.

For the story of how Stevenson is reacting to these developments and Mr. Truman's insistence that Stevenson does not have the fighting spirit needed to win the election in November, let's switch now to Bill Downs at Stevenson's headquarters.

DOWNS: Well, Governor Stevenson right now is on a tour of a series of receptions, smiling and confident but also looking like a man who's just run a three-minute mile and awaiting the judge's decision to make it official. As one Stevenson manager put it, nothing is final until the latest gavel falls. Well, Stevenson's headquarters is studying the latest New York delegation move over civil rights, which you'll hear about later, not discounting that move and that rejection but at the same time not overly worried about what appears to be their eventual convention victory. Well, Stevenson has had a day chockful of conferences and is running at least a half-hour behind schedule. One thing he's tried to do is to restore unity within the liberal wing of the Democratic party. He was obviously hurt personally -- apparently not politically -- by ex-President Truman's statement this morning that Stevenson would not make a fighting candidate and could not win. Stevenson described his reaction to these words as "more disappointment than anger, more distress than indignation."

Well, one expert pointed out that in 1952 Stevenson polled three million more votes, losing, than Truman did in 1948, winning. But now the Stevenson camp is intent on choosing a running-mate out of a half-dozen candidates. No favorite apparent for the Vice Presidential spot. Meanwhile at this headquarters ...)(several words slurred) - which is a smart gesture for any politician now in Chicago.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thanks, Bill Downs.

Let's go next to Blair Clark, who is at Governor Harriman's headquarters.

CLARK: Governor Harriman, the New York delegation voted a few minutes ago, or this afternoon, that the civil rights platform plank was totally unacceptable. How does this put the civil rights prospects right now?

HARRIMAN: Well, I don't know. The committee has been meeting, the Platform Committee's been meeting. I understand they've made some improvements, but I haven't been there and I don't know. The New York delegation instructed the committee to wait on Speaker Rayburn and asked to be heard. There may be changes that will improve the situation, but I don't know. It looks, as I say, as if there'll be a false light.

CLARK: Governor, you've been seeing a lot of delegates today, how does it look for you?

HARRIMAN: Well, I find that many delegates are coming to me. I found they like the cause that I stand for. There are a number of men that have announced ... delegations have announced which were expected. They're early commitments, but I think if they're released, why, many of the individuals would come to me. This is still an open convention and we are going to carry this fight right through to the end. There are mamy more people today, I feel, that are determined to stay with me. The majority# of the Kefauver delegates of Minnesota, for instance, told me that they would - and so it goes.

CLARK: Governor, you went upstairs a minute ago to talk to former President Truman. Can you give us any i_mpression of how he's feeling right now?

HARRIMAN: Oh, he's always on the crest of the wave.

He's just starting out, with Mrs. Truman, to have some dinner, and I only had a minute with him, and I'll see him tomorrow.

CLARK: Fine. Thank you very much, Governor Harriman. Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Blair Clark and Governor Harriman.

There has been a new, interesting development involving former President Truman and two leaders of the South, Sam Rayburn and Lyndon Johnson. Here is Griffing Bancroft at Senator Johnson's headquarters.

BANCROFT: Well, Ed, the mystery that's been hanging over the Texas delegation all week now seems to be clearing up. The mastermind has been that old Texas political warhorse, Mr. Sam Rayburn; the front man, Favorite Son Senator Lyndon Johnson. And here's the way it has worked out. Reliable sources tell me they really have been for Adlai Stevenson all the time; and now that Stevenson seems to have won, Texas probably will vote against him. That's the peculiar way politics take sometimes. The Rayburn-Johnson political enemies in Texas have been accusing Johnson of being a stooge for Stevenson. The important Texas conventions come up next month, with final control of the Democratic party in the state at stake. The Rayburn-Johnson forces will be stronger there if the delegation here in Chicago votes at least once for Johnson - and that is what is planned. But when things seemed to take a dip, when it looked as though Mr. Truman's opposition might have denied the nomination to Stevenson, Sam Rayburn sent out word that if it was really needed, Texas would risk the taunts of its enemies and plump for Stevenson. As it turned out, the Texas help apparently is not needed, so it can turn its political eyes back to state problems and vote for Johnson.

President Truman came up to this floor a little while ago for a brief conference with Rayburn and Johnson, but that was not with any hope of stemming the Stevenson tide. Mr. Truman wanted to talk about his speech Friday night and make peace with Rayburn, who, it is putting it mildly to say, has been displeased with the former President's activities here.

And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Griffing Bancroft.

The Platform Committee gave its tentative approval today to a compromise civil rights plank. And because it is a compromise, nobody likes it very much. Some Northern groups do not feel that it goes far enough. The New York delegation just called the plank totally unacceptable. The Georgia delegation says it will vote against the entire platform because of the civil rights plank when it is presented tonite on the convention floor. Governor Griffin told the delegation that he would do his level best to see that Georgia's protest is registered before the convention. But, he said, if the sentiment for the platform is overwhelming, an expression of disapproval might be difficult.

Former Governor Battle of Virginia told his state delegation he doubted there would be a fight on the convention floor. Here in substance is what the civil rights plank said, subject to approval, of course, of the full convention. It says: "Recent decisions of the Supreme Court relating to segregation in publicly-supported schools and elsewhere have brought consequences of vast importance to our nation as a whole and especially to communities directly affected. We reject all proposals for the use of force to interfere with the ordinary determination of these matters by the courts." The plank goes on to say: "The Democratic party emphatically reaffirms its support of the historic principle that ours is a government of laws and not of men. It recognizes the Supreme Court of the United States as one of the three constitutional and coordinated branches of the Federal Government, superior to and separate from any political party, the decisions of which are part of the law of the land." The paragraph concluded: "We condemn the efforts of the Republican party to make it appear that this tribunal is part of their party." Despite the belief of some Southerners, like Governor Battle, that there will not be a floor fight on the civil rights issue, such a possibility remains very real. A group of Democratic leaders met this afternoon and mapped strategy for a contest tonight on the floor. This group included Governor Williams of Michigan, Senator Lehman of New York and Governor Freeman of Minnesota. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Goe Rauh (?) of Americans for Democratic Action acted as co-chairman of the meeting. My colleague Charles Collingwood tells me that two principal demands were agreed upon. First, that a strong statement that the Supreme Court decision will be implemented be included in the plank on civil rights; and, second, that the language deleted from the 1952 platform be restored, particularly that relating to a strong Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission. The meeting was also attended by Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers. Reuther said: "We are not interested in tearing this convention apart, but if we can't get a decent civil rights plank through the machinery of the Platform Committee, we will get it through the machinery of the floor."

Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois said the Republican platform would, in his words, contain no such weasling as that found in the Democratic civil rights plank. He would not say flatly that the Republican plank would include a straightforward endorsement of the Supreme Court decision. "The Supreme Court", he said, "is the law of the land - and I believe in enforcement of the law." Dirksen is chairman of the subcommittee that will draw up the civil rights plank for the Republican National Convention that opens in San Francisco on Monday.

Former Governor Dewey saw President Eisenhower for thirty minutes today at the White House. Afterwards Dewey told reporters they talked about plans for the Republican convention. Dewey also said it is ... that he is quite confident Vice President Nixon will be nominated for a second term. He called Mr. Nixon "the most useful Vice President in history."

In London today Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov on the Suez problem. Mr. Dulles reportedly was encouraged by the talk, and he is reported to have told Shepilov that the West has no intention of presenting Egypt with an ultimatum to surrender control of the canal. Mr. Dulles and Shepilov are in London to be on hand for the opening tomorrow of the twenty-two-nation conference on Suez. Egypt has relaxed its boycott of the meeting to the extent of sending an observer to watch and report upon the proceedings.

India's Prime Minister Nehru warned today that the exercise of military force in the canal zone could lead to a general conflagration. Nehru also expressed confidence that a peaceful solution will somehow be found. "Even if the first conference fails," he said, "success will come at a second or third conference."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the WORD FOR TODAY. Now, here is Bob Grant.

GRANT: (SLUM ANNOUNCEMENT)

Now, here is Mr. Murrow with his WORD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: The nomination of Adlai Stevenson on the first ballot is regarded almost a sure thing. In the face of this opinion, Governor Harriman says he has no intention of quitting the race, that he believes he can still win. Damon Runyon once allowed that the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. "But," he said, "that's the way to bet!"

Good Night and Good Luck!

ANNC'R: (CLOSING ANNOUNCEMENT)

For comprehensive coverage stay tuned to the CBS Radio Network.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Wednesday, August 15, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news:

All signs point to the nomination of Adlai Stevenson on the first ballot or, if not on the first ballot, then immediately thereafter. The lates Associated Press tabulation gives Stevenson 665½ votes for the Democratic Presidential nomination and Governor Harriman 240½ votes. On the basis of these unofficial figures, Stevenson now needs only 21 delegate votes to win the nomination on the first ballot. 686½ votes are required to nominate.

The trend toward Stevenson began gaining momentum today when Governor Mennen Williams of Michigan declared for Stevenson and took along with him 31½ of the 44 votes of the Michigan delegation. New Jersey threw Stevenson all its 36 votes. The Arkansas delegation then announced that Stevenson would have its 26 votes if there was a satisfactory civil rights plank. So far, the delegation has not said what it thinks of the plank which was announced today. Tonight there are reports that the majority of the Massachusetts delegation will switch to Stevenson tomorrow night during the first ballot. Massachusetts has 40 votes now committed to Rep. McCormack as a Favorite Son.

For the story of how Stevenson is reacting to these developments and Mr. Truman's insistence that Stevenson does not have the fighting spirit needed to win the election in November, let's switch now to Bill Downs at Stevenson's headquarters.

DOWNS: Well, Governor Stevenson right now is on a tour of a series of receptions smiling and confident but also looking like a man who's just run a three-minute mile and awaiting the judge's decision to make it official. As one Stevenson manager put it, nothing is final until the latest gavel falls. Well, Stevenson's headquarters is studying the latest New York delegation move over civil rights, which you'll hear about later, not discounting that move and that rejection but at the same time not overly worried about what appears to be their eventual convention victory. Well, Stevenson has had a day chockful of conferences and is running at least a half-hour behind schedule. One thing he's tried to do is to restore unity within the liberal wing of the Democratic party. He was obviously hurt personally -- apparently not politically -- by ex-President Truman's statement this morning that Stevenson would not make a fighting candidate and could not win. Stevenson described his reaction to these words as "more disappointment than anger, more distress than indignation."

Well, one expert pointed out that in 1952 Stevenson polled three million more votes, losing, than Truman did in 1948, winning. But now the Stevenson camp is intent on choosing a running-mate out of a half-dozen candidates. No favorite apparent for the Vice Presidential spot. Meanwhile at this headquarters...(words slurred) - which is a smart gesture for any politican now in Chicago. Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thanks, Bill Downs. Let's go next to Blair Clark, who is at Governor Harriman's headquarters.

CLARK: Governor Harriman, the New York delegation voted a few minutes ago, or this afternoon, that the civil rights platform plank was totally unacceptable. How does this put the civil rights prospects right now?

HARRIMAN: Well, I don't know. The committee has been meeting, the Platform Committee's been meeting. I understand they've made some improvements, but I haven't been there and I don't know. The New York delegation instructed the committee to wait on Speaker Rayburn and asked to be heard. There may be changes that will improve the situation, but I don't know. It looks , as I say, as if there'll be a false light.

CLARK: Governor, you've been seeing a lot of delegates today, how does it look for you?

HARRIMAN: Well, I find that many delegates are coming to me. I found they like the cause that I stand for. There are a number of men that have announced..delegations have announced which were expected. They're early commitments, but I think if they're released, why, many of the individuals would come to me. This is still an open convention and we are going to carry this fight right through to the end. There are many more people today, I feel, that are determined to stay with me. The majority of the Kefauver delegates of Minnesota, for instance, told me that they would - and so it goes.

CLARK; Governor, you went upstairs a minute ago to talk to former President Truman. Can you give us any impression of how he's feeling right now?

HARRIMAN: Oh, he's always on the crest of the wave. He's just starting out, with Mrs. Truman, to have some dinner, and I only had a minute with him, and I'll see him tomorrow.

CLARK: Fine. Thank you very much, Governor Harriman. Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Blair Clark and Governor Harriman. There has been a new, interesting development involving former President Truman and two leaders of the South, Sam Rayburn and Lyndon Johnson. Here is Griffing Bancroft at Senator Johnson's headquarters.

BANCROFT: Well, Ed, the mystery that's been hanging overthe Texas delegation all week now seems to be clearing up. The mastermind has been that old Texas political warhorse, Mr. Sam Rayburn; the front man, Favorite Son Senator Lyndon Johnson. And here's the way it has worked out. Reliable sources tell me they really have been for Adlai Stevenson all the time; and now that Stevenson seems to have won, Texas probably will vote against him. That's the peculiar way politics take sometimes. The Rayburn-Johnson political enemies in Texas have been accu sing Johnson of being a stooge for Stevenson. The important Texas conventions come up next month, with final control of the Democratic party in the state at stake. The Rayburn-Johnson forces will be stronger there if the delegation here in Chicago votes at least once for Johnson - and that is what is planned. But when things seemed to take a dip, when it looked as though Mr. Truman's opposition might have denied the nomination to Stevenson, Sam Rayburn sent out word that if it was really needed, Texas would risk the taunts of its enemies and plump for Stevenson. As it turned out, the Texas help apparently is not needed, so it can turn its political eyes back to state problems and vote for Johnson.

President Truman came up to this floor a little while ago for a brief conference with Rayburn and Johnson, but that was not with any hope of stemming the Stevenson tide. Mr. Truman wanted to talk about his speech Friday night and make peace with Rayburn, who, it is putting it mildly to say, has been displeased with the former President's activities here. And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Griffing Bancroft. The Platform Committee gave its tentative approval today to a compromise civil rights plank. And because it is a compromise, nobody likes it very much. Some Northern groups do not feel that it goes far enough. The New York delegation just called the plank totally unacceptable. The Georgia delegation says it will vote against the entire platform because of the civil rights plank when it is presented tonight on the convention floor. Governor Griffin told the delegation that he would do his level best to see that Georgia's protest is registered before the convention. But, he said, if the sentiment for the platofmr is overwhelming, an expression of disapproval might be difficult.

Former Governor Battle of Virginia told his state delegation he doubted there would be a fight on the convention floor. Here in substance is what the civil rights plank said, subject to approval, of course, of the full convention. It says: "Recent decisions of the Supreme Court relating to segregation in publicly-supported schools and elsewhere have brought consequences of vast importance to our nation as a whole and especially to communities directly affected. We reject all proposals the use of force to interfere with the ordinary determination of these matters by the courts." The plank goes on to say: "The Democratic party emphatically reaffirms its support of the historic principle that ours is a government of laws and not of men. It recognizes the Supreme Court of the United States as one of the three constitutional and coordinated branches of the Federal Government, superior to and separate from any political party, the decisions of which are part of the law of the land." The paragraph concluded: "We condemn the efforts of the Republican party to make it appear that this tribunal is part of their party." Despite the belief of some Southerners, like Governor Battle, that there will not be a floor fight on the civil rights issue, such a possibility remains very real. A group of Democratic leaders met this afternoon and mapped strategy for a contest tonight on the floor. This group included Governor Williams of Michigan, Senator Lehman of New York, and Governor Freeman of Minnesota. Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Joe Rauh of Americans for Democratic Action acted as co-chairman of the meeting. My colleague Charles Collingwood tells me that two principal demands were agreed upon. First, that a strong statement that the Supreme Court decision will be implemented be included in the plank on civil rights; and, second, that the language deleted from the 1952 platform be restored, particularly that relating to a strong Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission. The meeting was also attended by Walter Reuther President of the United Auto Workers. Reuther said: "We are not interested in tearing this convention apart, but if we can't get a decent civil rights plank through the machinery of the Platform Committee, we will get it through the machinery of the floor."

Republican Senator Dirksen of Illinois said the Republican platform would, in his words, contain no such weasling as that found in the Democratic civil rights plank. He would not say flatly that the Republican plank would include a straightforward endorsement of the Supreme Court decision. "The Supreme Court", he said, "is the law of the land - and I believe in enforcement of the law." Dirksen is chairman of the subcommittee that will draw up the civil rights plank for the Republican National Convention that opens in San Francisco on Monday.

Former Governor Dewey saw President Eisenhower for thirty minutes today at the White House. Afterwards Dewey told reporters they talked about plans for the Republican convention. Dewey also said it is.. that he is quite confident Vice President Nixon will be nominated for a second term. He called Mr. Nixon "the most useful Vice President in history."

In London today Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov on the Suez problem. Mr. Dulles reportedly was encourage by the talk, and he is reported to have told Shepilov that the West has no intention of presenting Egypt with an ultimatum to surrender control of the canal. Mr. Dulles and Shepilov are in London to be on hand for the opening tomorrow of the twenty-two-nation conference on Suez. Egypt has relaxed its boycott of the meeting to the extent of sending an observer to watch and report upon the proceedings.

India's Prime Minister Nehru warned today that the exercise of military force in the cnaal zone could lead to a general conflagration. Nehru also expressed confidence that a peaceful solution will somehow be found. "Even if the first conference fails," he said," success will at a second or third conference."

This isEd Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Grant.

GRANT:

MURROW: The nomination of Adlai Stevenson on the first ballot is regarded almost a sure thing. In the face of this opinion, Governor Harriman says he has no intention of quitting the race, that he believes he can still win. Damon Runyon once allowed that the race is not alwayssto the swift, nor the battle to the strong, "But," he said, "that's the way to bet!" Gooddnight and Good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Aug. 16, 1956

This is the news:

The Democratic Convention today placed in nomination the names of ten candidates for President. Eight of them were favorite sons. The attention, of course, centered on the two rivals, Governor Harriman of New York and Adlai Stevenson of Illinois. Stevenson was nominated by Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts, who called Stevenson "a man equal to our times"... the man best qualified "by his compassion, conscience and courage to hold in his hand the destiny of the free world." The nomination was seconded by Governor Hodges of North Carolina, Senator Lehman of New York, Governor Leader of Pennsylvania, Representative Dawson of Illinois, and Representative Edith Green of Oregon. Governor Harriman, who says he is in the fight to the finish (despite almost impossible odds), was nominated, as scheduled, by Governor Gary of Oklahoma. And the Harriman nomination was seconded by the president of the United Steelworkers, David McDonald, Representative Edna Kelly of New York, Attorney General

Arnold Olsen of Montana, and former President Truman, who is not a delegate. Mr. Truman was given the floor by unanimous consent. He told the convention that "never in history" has it been so necessary for the Democrats to win an election. And then he said, "I am supporting Averell Harriman for President of the United States." In his nominating speech, Governor Gary called Harriman "a fighting liberal of new vision" and "by far" the best equipped man for the job.

The "favorite sons" nominated today were Senator Magnuson of Washington, (who withdrew in favor of Stevenson), Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, of Texas; Representative James Davis of Georgia, Governor Happy Chandler of Kentucky, House Leader McCormack of Massachusetts, former Governor Battle of Virginia, Senator Symington of Missouri, and (Gov. Timmerman of S.C.)

Balloting for the presidential nomination is scheduled for later tonight. There was talk that Mr. Stevenson would make his acceptance speech, if he wins (and that is most probable), after the balloting tonight. That plan has been dropped. The acceptance speeches will be delivered tomorrow night, as originally scheduled. / The balloting for the vice-presidential nomination will come tomorrow afternoon. / This afternoon, Mr. Stevenson remained at his suite at the Blackstone Hotel, writing his acceptance speech in longhand, as is his wont. / The word at Stevenson headquarters is that Stevenson still has not arrived at his choice for a runningmate. While Stevenson remained silent, there was increased talk that the vice presidential nod would go to either Senator Kefauver of Tennessee, or Senator Humphrey of Minnesota. Stevenson's news secretary, Roger Tubby, says it is not true that the vice presidency has been narrowed down to two names. The Kefauver camp is claiming 234 certain votes for vice president on the first ballot. Kefauver would appear to have suffered a setback, when the Tennessee delegation decided to cast its 32 votes for Stevenson for President and for Governor Clement for Vice President. According to the latest AP poll, Stevenson now has 747 delegate votes for the presidential nomination. Only 686½ are needed to nominate. The same AP poll gives Harriman only 235 first ballot votes.

→

Governor Herter of Massachusetts said today, that if he is nominated for the vice presidency at the Republican convention in San Francisco (which opens on Monday) he will ask the permanent convention chairman...

Representative Martin... to withdraw his name. Harold Stassen has been urging that Vice President Nixon be dropped as Mr. Eisenhower's runningmate... and that Herter be nominated instead. [redacted] that their [redacted] start on Monday afternoon, [redacted] scheduled f[redacted]day.

In London, Secretary of State Dulles presented a four-point program today for solving the crisis over Suez. Mr. Dulles presented the plan to the 22-nation conference on behalf of the United States, Britain and France. Under the plan, the canal would be [redacted] run by an international board, linked to the United Nations. The board would be established by treaty, and would provide for operation of the canal, in accordance with the Constantinople Convention of 1888, which insists [redacted] that it be kept open to all shipping in war and peace. Egypt would be a member of the board, and Egypt's right to "equitable return" would be recognized. The plan also provides fair compensation to the stockholders of the nationalized Suez Canal Company. There would [redacted] be some sort of arbitration machinery, to settle [redacted] disputes which might arise. Mr. Dulles was the first speaker at the afternoon session. The earlier speech by [redacted] Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov contained no proposal. He said he did not want to complicate the conference, but called its [redacted] aims and purposes [redacted] "incompatible" with Egypt's sovereign rights. Shepilov said the invitation... and arrangements... had come to Egypt "practically in the form of an ultimatum", [redacted] and that it was no wonder Egypt refused to take part.

nd

Israel reported a new incident today in the Negeb. A bus was ambushed near the Egyptian frontier. Three Israeli soldiers, and a woman passenger, were killed. Seven other passengers were wounded in the burst of gunfire, which came from a ditch.

On Cyprus, Greek Cypriot extremists reportedly called today for an end to violence. Leaflets were distributed ordering a "suspension of operations" by the EOKA organization. British officials would not vouch for the authenticity of the leaflets, purportedly signed by an underground leader.

Edward R. Murrow: August 16, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Adlai Stevenson has reached what seems his inevitable nomination tonight a free man, without any limiting commitments to anyone. And he did so after overcoming difficulties that sometimes appeared insurmountable. A candidate often has to buy his way out of difficulties, getting support wherever he can pick it up. That is normal in politics. In 1952 Stevenson also was nominated without owing political debts, but that year he was a reluctant candidate who had been drafted, so his freedom was not surprising. Now he has come to his re-nomination after four years of front-running, and for him still to be free is something of a phenomenon.

Nobody is so vulnerable as the front-runner in a long political campaign. To win he not only has to be stronger than his nearest rival, he has to be politically stronger than the combined opposition. It isn't really like a foot-race. In a foot-race, the slower runners don't unite first of all to push the fast man off the track. But in a political campaign all the competing candidates have the common need of getting rid of the front man, and the longer the campaign the greater the chance of doing so.

Stevenson was the first candidate in the field and as soon as he announced himself he was exposed to all the hazards of a front-runner. One of the greatest was that he had to go into the primaries against Senator Kefauver, who had a special knack for primary fighting. This nearly proved to be Stevenson's undoing in Minnesota, and precedents were enough to convince anyone that he had lost the nomination then and there. He didn't like primary campaigning, he wasn't specially good at it. But he made himself master it, and in the end he out-campaigned Kefauver. He didn't make so many of his superb speeches, but he wooed and won voters. ~~He would have clinched the nomination after his victory in California~~ if our primary system ~~were genuine~~.

But with his California victory his dangers actually mounted. He had to come to the convention and produce more power than all the opposition combined. This meant not only Kefauver and Harriman - and as it turned out, Harry Truman too - it meant Lyndon Johnson, and then the galaxy of the favorite sons who between them might quite easily produce a fatal deadlock.

This was the perfect setting for a deal. If Stevenson had been a normal politician he would have seen just how he could buy his way out, do his own combining and get nominated. It would cost a price, but in politics victory normally costs prices. But Stevenson did not buy his way out. He didn't have to pay a price. He felt he was strong enough to get the nomination without tying his hands. And so he was. That he should do so in 1956 is more to his credit than in 1952. It showed astuteness, first of all. It showed quiet self-confidence. And it also showed character.

Stevenson went into the long campaign with several drawbacks. One was that he had lost the '52 election. And in a sense he was handicapped in being the kind of man he is. He is not a back-slapper and a spell-binder. He is genial and cordial, but he also is aloof, and in a very real way, solitary. He cannot promise glibly. He thinks and he weighs, he studies both sides of questions and seeks the right answers, which are not always the popular answers. Such characteristics don't make a man unpopular, but they certainly don't build him up, except perhaps in the perspective of history.

In 1952 Stevenson had come upon the scene as something unusual and fresh, a man with a gift for making eloquent, lucid and often humorous speeches, who had behind these talents a hard core of intellectual integrity. Part of his strength four years ago was the surprise of the country in discovering such a man. But after four years the surprise was gone. In the meantime the world was changing. National problems were changing - as in the field of civil rights. International problems were changing still more, and were decidedly more inscrutable.

What Stevenson though about these issues was often exploratory. He didn't jump to conclusions. He was trying to formulate what he would have to do if he were in power, not how to talk about these things in a way to get into power. Naturally his ideas were not fighting ideas, which is one reason an old-time whistle-stop campaigner like Harry Truman was in despair. But all the time Stevenson was a candidate for nomination, he was a student of the changing world. That was where his interest lay. His dedication to the New Deal and the Fair Deal, in a time when the Republicans had pretty well accepted both, could be taken for granted. But Stevenson was more interested in the present and the immediate future. He regularly sought and studied advice from some of the ablest experts in the country. They have not always convinced him. He has to make up his own mind. But it is in his preparation for responsibility in this changing world that Stevenson won the recognition of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, and produced her plea to turn party leadership over to younger men. Stevenson and some of those around him ~~represent a change in the type of Democratic leadership, but even more,~~ in the subject ~~matter of the thinking of leaders.~~

Just how much of this will be dramatized in the coming campaign remains to be seen. Stevenson has a supreme gift of communicating ideas. The difficulty of defining the changing world needs this talent, no matter who wins the election.

Stuart Metz

Word for Today

This was Nominating Day in Chicago, and there has been much speech-making and parading in the aisles. We have heard a great deal of "the man who." Of those souls who remained silent, this reporter is moved to say, with James Russell Lowell: "Blessed are they who have nothing to say, and cannot be persuaded to say it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Aug. 17, 1956

This is the news:

The Democratic National Convention nominated Senator Estes Kefauver today on the second ballot. The main threat came from Senator John Kennedy of Massachusetts, although there were half a dozen other candidates in the race. The contest was wide open, as Adlai Stevenson, the presidential nominee, told the convention he wanted it late last night. The other principal contenders were Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, Senator Gore of Tennessee, and Mayor Wagner of New York. At the end of the first ballot, Kefauver was in front with 483½ votes. Kennedy was runner-up with 304. The other candidates trailed considerably behind, but Wagner had New York's bloc of 98 votes. Gore had the 56 Texas votes, plus the 32 Tennessee votes, and the 28 votes of the delegation from Oklahoma. Humphrey had all of Minnesota's 30 votes. He also had substantial support from California, plus a scattering of votes in delegations ranging from the District of Columbia, all through the farm states, to the Northwest. Then in the course of the second ballot, Kennedy began picking up additional votes. When the clerk had completed calling the roll, Kennedy had nearly a hundred more votes than Kefauver. (Kefauver had 551½ votes at the end of the second ballot. Kennedy had 648---only 38½ under the 686½ required to nominate). New York had deserted Wagner, giving Kennedy 96½ of its 98 votes. Texas dropped Gore and gave Kennedy all of its 56 votes. Then came a new turn. Senator Gore, who had received 110 votes, withdrew from the race. And Oklahoma (which had supported Gore) gave its 28 votes to Kefauver. Minnesota, which had been supporting Humphrey, also switched to Kefauver. That gave Kefauver another 30 votes... and the stampede to get on the Kefauver bandwagon followed, with the Humphrey forces giving their winning votes to the senator from Tennessee. Senator Kennedy went to the platform, and asked the convention to make the nomination of Kefauver unanimous. And this was done. Senator Kefauver then expressed his thanks, in a brief speech. Tonight, he and Adlai Stevenson will make their formal acceptance speeches. Former President Truman will also speak, and we understand that Mr. Truman's emphasis will be on party unity.

Vice President Nixon left Washington today, to attend the Republican National Convention, which opens in San Francisco on Monday. With regard to renomination, Mr. Nixon told reporters, "I am not going to say I have the inside track." Republican National Chairman Hall has predicted that Nixon will be the vice presidential nominee. Harold Stassen has proposed that Nixon be dropped as vice president, and that Governor Herter of Massachusetts be nominated instead. Stassen also took off for San Francisco today, they passed within a few feet of each other at the airport. They did not speak.

The White House news secretary... James Hagerty... told a news conference today that he is "sure" President Eisenhower will again defeat Adlai Stevenson in November. Mr. Eisenhower will leave for San Francisco on Wednesday, to make his acceptance speech the following day.

Russia today rejected the western plan for internationalizing the Suez Canal. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov told the 22-nation conference in London that the plan fails to take Egypt's interests fully into account. Shepilov called again for a larger conference to settle the issue... and proposed that a commission, of six nations, be set up to make [redacted] arrangements for such a conference. He suggested that the six nations be Egypt, India, Russia, the United States, Britain and France. He demanded that the western powers renounce force as a means of settling the dispute. The western plan was presented yesterday by Secretary of State Dulles. Under it, the canal would be run by [redacted] an international board, linked to the United Nations. Egypt would be a member of the board, and Egypt's right to "equitable return" would be recognized. The plan also proposes that the canal [redacted] be operated in accordance with the Constantinople Convention of 1888, which provides that it be kept open... at all times... to the ships of all flags.

Egypt lodged a complaint against Israel today, charging that Israeli troops killed nine Egyptian soldiers... on Egyptian territory... in the Gaza Strip. Reports indicate the action is continuing. Yesterday, four Israelis were killed in a bus ambush, near the Egyptian frontier.

West Germany outlawed the Communist Party today as unconstitutional. Forty Communist officials were arrested in widespread raids.

In New York, the F.B.I. announced that it had solved the Victor Riesel case. Last April, Mr. Riesel... who is a labor columnist... was blinded by an assailant who threw acid. [redacted] The F.B.I. says the man who threw the acid is dead, that his body was found in a New York street on July 28th... a bullet through the head. He was identified as Abraham Telvi, 22, who had a police record dating back to 1949. Two other men are being held on a charge of conspiracy to obstruct justice. The government says Riesel was attacked to keep him from testifying on labor racketeering before a grand jury.

Olin Tice

Mr. Stevenson has recognized the importance of the vice presidency, calling the choice for that office almost as important as the choice for the presddency itself. There is, inevitably, some opposition to the new "free process" he proposed. But Thomas Huxley said, "Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools, and the beacons of free men."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, August 17, 1956
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday thru Friday at this time with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Tonight's program originates in Chicago at the scene of the Democratic National Convention which ends tonight. Mr. Murrow and other distinguished reporters of the CBS news staff will be hand to provide up to the minute coverage from San Francisco in the caucus rooms and all the political headquarters and, of course, on the convention floor.

Mr. Murrow is also backed up by a staff of CBS NEWS correspondents assigned to news centers around the entire world. Now, direct from Convention City in Chicago here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW:

This is the news. The Democratic National Convention nominated Senator Estes Kefauver today on the second ballot. The main threat came from Senator John Kennedy of Massachusettes, although there were half a dozen other candidates in the race. The contest was wide open as Adlai Stevenson, the presidential nominee, told the Convention he wanted it to be late last night. The other principal contenders were Sen. Humphrey of Minnesota, Sen. Gore of Tennessee, and Mayor Wagner of New York. At the end of the first ballot Kefauver was in front with 483½ votes - Kennedy was runner up with 304 the other candidates trailed considerably behind. But Wagner had New York's block of 98 votes.

Gore had the 56 Texas votes plus the 32 Tennessee votes and the 28 votes of the delegation from Oklahoma. Humphrey had all of Minnesota's 30 votes. He also had substantial support from California, plus a scattering of votes in delegations ranging from the district of Columbia all thru the farm states to the Northwest.

Then in the course of the second ballot Kennedy began picking up additional votes. When the Clerk had completed calling the roll Kennedy had nearly a hundred more votes than Kefauver. Kefauver had 551½ votes at the end of the se cond ballot. Kennedy had 648 only 38½ under the 686½ required to nominate. New York had deserted Wagner giving Kennedy 96½ of its 98 votes. Texas dropped Gore and gave Kennedy all of its 56 votes. Then he came a new turn - Sen. Gore who had received 110 votes withdrew from the race and Oklahoma which had supported Gore gave its 28 votes to Kefauver. Minnesota which had been supporting Humphrey also switched to Kefauver, that gave Kefauver another 30 votes. And the stampede to get on the Kefauver bandwagon followed with the Humphrey forces giving their winning votes to the Senator from Tennessee. Senator Kennedy went to the platform and asked the convention to make the nomination of Kefauver unanimous and this was done. Sen. Kefauver then expressed his thanks in a brief speech. Tonight he and Adlai Stevenson will make their formal acceptance speeches. Former President Truman will also speak and we understand that Mr. Truman's emphasis will be on party unity. This can be called the year of vice presidential significance. Certainly never before have so many and experienced Senators been contending for the nomination.

My old friend and colleague Eric Sevareid was here watching the proceedings today. What did you make of it, Eric?

SEVAREID:

Well, Ed, in the net, the two men who won out here on the ticket are the men who made the most friends around the country over these past four years. The would-be kingmakers were pushed aside, notably Mr. Truman himself. He was against both Stevenson and Kefauver more, perhaps, than he has been against any other two men around the party leadership. Sen. Kefauver almost fell between two stools, determined Southern opposition to him because of his Senate record on such things as civil rights, for example, and the lingering hatred among some big city organizations in the North for his crime hearings of years ago. It had to be a senator for vice president. The Southern senators tried to coalesce against Kefauver and almost did it. They would have preferred Kennedy though he's a Northern catholic or even Humphrey although he's a Northern fire eating liberal. It was Gore that they really would like to have had. Him they respect the most. But he has been much too quiet and modest these past few years.

Neither Stevenson nor Kefauver came here with any single big solid core of support. For both their support was scattered and loose, but it was scattered awfully wide. After four years or more of handshaking, raising money for the party, making friends in every part of the country. Mr. Truman, after all, has been politically idle these past four years and Senator Kennedy has not done this kind of fence building around the country. Sen. Humphrey's fence building had been too much confined to the Senate itself. Albert Gore had accomplished more in this Senate this year than any of these other contenders, but he is a quiet man and had put on no kind of personal campaign. And Lyndon Johnson who must hold the slim majority coalition in the Senate together who has great parliamentary skill - well, Johnson's influence, too, has been confined to the Senate and like Mr. Truman he, too, has suffered a loss of prestige here in Chicago although by no means so much as Mr. Truman.

So now the new generation of Democrats takes over. It is again a basically liberal ticket, both very experienced campaigners. And on both party tickets now, we're assuming Mr. Nixon will be nominated next week, on both the vice presidents is a very prominent indeed famous personality . There's a great change from the days when a nonentity was so often given the vice presidential spot. The old background tradition - backroom traiditon - of picking candidates receded him further into the past./

Well, I think that Kefauver will bring more votes to the Democratic than any of the others could've done. But should Stevenson be elected he will not have the influential lieutenant on capitol hill that Stevenson has been wanting. That was Stevenson's problem this week - to pick a Gore, Humphrey or Kennedy for this post November need should he be elected or Kefauver for his pre-November need. He resolved it by throwing it into the lap of the open convention.

MURROW: Well Eric you wrote a piece not long ago saying that the backroom was finished in political conventions and c ertainly that happened here today didn't it?

SEVAREID: I think so. I think in the past two conventions, now this one and four years ago, have been pretty much an open affair.

MURROW: Taft could not use that rule successfully then.

SEVAREID: I had a feeling that there was a great d eal of seriousness down there on the floor today. There was almost a sudden r ealization that for so long vice presidential candidates were picked either casually or by compromise and that some had turned out well and some had not, but there was a sense of responsibility and sort of politicking under the lights down there today.

MURROW: Indeed there was. That was a barrel of eels for quite a while.

So many vice presidential candidates have been selected without the public or the party having an opportunity to examine their q ualifications.

SEVAREID: Well, they didn't have very long to do it today but it was hectic while it lasted.

MURROW: This was not a case where the presidential nominee has to ask the name of his running mate ....has happened before.

SEVAREID: It was a real gamble which Stevenson took last night it seemed to me when he decided that he was not going to decide the name of his running mate.

MURROW: Do you think as a result of that he may be accused of indecisiveness and inability to make up his mind.

SEVAREID: Oh..this has been such a public thing, Ed,that I don't know why people would think of it that way. I suppose he may be "....?" if I say that. It wasn't a case of inability to make up the mind, I think. It was a case of what was the wisest political courseit involved..

MURROW: Well, Mr. Truman is going to make a speech here tonight and he's labelled in advance as making one on the subject of unity which has certain ridiculous overtones but nevertheless he will remain something of an embarrassment to Stevenson in this campaign will he not?

SEVAREID: I think that perhaps, In fact I'm sure it's obvious now that Mr. Stevenson faces quite an embarrassing position in respect to Mr. Truman. He's got to decide whether he does want him in the campaign to campaign for him in an active fashion as Truman said he would need. He'd need the old man from Missouri, said Mr. Truman the other day. Does he encourage him to go ahead or does he don't? I don't know what he's going to do.

MURROW: Well, I should think at the outset you might simply say that he would welcome all help coming from Democratic sources and then try to work out a deal with Mr. Truman to perhaps restrain him a little in his utterances.

SEVAREID: This has been tried before.

MURROW: Quite true. Eric you mentioned Lyndon Johnson's position. How difficult will that be now as the leader in the Senate?

SEVAREID: I don't think we can tell really until the Senate comes back next winter. But it's a very delicate ground that treads to keep this coalition together with that majority of one.

MURROW: Well, Eric, let's have a look at the rest of the news, shall we? And see if we have more time to talk about politics. Well, this is politics, too.

Vice President Nixon left Washington today to attend the Republican National Convention which opens in San Francisco on Monday. With regard to renomination, Mr. Nixon told reporters, "I am not going to say I have the inside track". Republican National Chairman Hall has predicted Nixon will be the vice presidential nominee. Harold Stassen has proposed that Nixon be dropped as vice president and that Gov. Herter of Massachusettes be nominated instead. Stassen also took off for San Francisco today. They passed within a few feet of each other at the airport. Theyndid not speak.

White House news secretary James Hagerty told a news conference today that he is sure President Eisenhower will again defeat Adlai Stevenson in November. Mr. Eisenhower will leave for San Francisco on Wednesday to make his acceptance speech the following day/

Russia today rejected the Western plan for internationalizing the Suez Canal. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov told the 22 nation conference in London that the plan fails to take Egypt's interests fully into account. Shepilov called again for a larger conference to settle the issue and proposed that a commission of six nations be set up to make arrangements for such a conference. He suggested that the six nations be Egypt, India, Russia, United States, Britain, and France. He demanded that the Western powers denounce force as a means of settling the dispute.

The Western plan was presented yesterday by Secretary of State Dulles. Under it the Canal would be run by an international board linked to the United Nations. Egypt would be a member of the board and Egypt's right to equitable return would recognized. The plan also proposes that the canal be operated in accordance with the Constantinople Convention of 1888 which provides that it be kept open at all times to the ships of all flags.

Egypt lodged a complaint against Israel today charging that Israeli troops killed nine Egyptian s oldiers on Egyptian territory in the Gaza strip. Reports indicate the action is continuing. Yesterday four Israelis were killed in a bus ambush near the Egyptian frontier.

West Germany outlawed the Communist Party today as being unconstitutional. Forty Communist officials were arrested in widespread raids.

In New York the FBI announced that it had solved the Victor Riesel case. Last April Mr. Riesel, who is a labor columnist, was blinded by an assailant who threw acid. The FBI says the man who threw the acid is dead, that his body was found in a New York street on July 28th - a bullet thru the head. He was identified as Abraham Telvi, 22, who had a police record dating back to 1949. Two other men are being held on a charge of conspiracy to obstruct justice. The government said Riesel was attacked to keep him from testifying on labor racketeering before a grand jury.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

ANNC'R: (SAFETY ANNOUNCEMENT)

Now, here is Mr. Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW:

Mr. Stevenson has recognized the importance of the vice presidency, calling the choice for that office almost as important as the choice for the presidency itself. There is inevitably some opposition to the new free process he proposed. But Thomas Huxley once said "logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools and the beacons of free men".

Good night and good luck.

ANNC'R:

You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday thru Friday at this time over most of these same s tations. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts brought to you each day by CBS NEWS.

From San Francisco you will hear the distinguished reports of other CBS newsmen including Charles Collingwood, Eric Sevareid, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Robert Trout and Dallas Townsend with the latest convention developments from San Francisco.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Friday, August 17, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news. The Democratic National Convention nominated Senator Estes Kefauver today on the second ballot. The main threat came from Senator John Kennedy of Massachusettes, although there were half a dozen other candidates in the race. The contest was wide open as Adlai Stevenson, the presidential nominee, told the Convention he wanted it to be late last night. The other principal contenders were Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, Senator Gore of Tennessee, and Mayor Wagner of New York. At the end of the first ballot Kefauver was in front with 483½ votes - Kennedy was runner up with 304 the other candidates trailed considerably behind. But Wagner had New York's block of 98 votes. Gore had the 56 Texas votes plus the 32 Tennessee votes and the 28 votes of the delegation from Oklahoma. Humphrey had all of Minnesota's 30 votes. He also had substantial support from California, plus a scattering of votes in delegations ranging from the district of Columbia all through the farm states to the Northwest.

Then in the course of the second ballot Kennedy began picking up additional votes. When the Clerk had completed calling the roll Kennedy had nearly a hundred more votes than Kefauver. Kefauver had 551½ votes at the end of the second ballot. Kennedy had 648 only 38½ under the 686½ required to nominate. New York had deserted Wagner giving Kennedy 96½ of its 98 votes. Texas dropped Gore and gave Kennedy all of its 56 votes.

Then came a new turn - Sen. Gore who had received 110 votes withdrew from the race and Oklahoma which had supported Gore gave its 28 votes to Kefauver. Minnesota which had been supporting Humphrey also switched to Kefauver, that gave Kefauver another 30 votes. And the stampede to get on the Kefauver bandwagon followed with the Humphrey forces giving their winning votes to the Senator from Tennessee. Senator Kennedy went to the platform and asked the convention to make the nomination of Kefauver unanimous and this was done. Sen. Kefauver then expressed his thanks in a brief speech. Tonight he and Adlai Stevenson will make their formal acceptance speeches. Former President Truman will also speak and we understand that Mr. Truman's emphasis will be on party unity. This can be called the year of vice presidential significance. Certainly never before have so many experienced Senators been contending for the nomination. My old friend and colleague, Eric Sevareid was here watching the proceedings today. What did you make of it, Eric?

SEVAREID: Well, Ed, in the net, the two men who won out here on the ticket are the men who made the most friends around the country over these past four years. The would-be kingmakers were pushed aside, notably Mr. Truman himself. He was against both Stevenson and Kefauver more, perhaps, than he has been against any other two men around the party leadership. Sen. Kefauver almost fell between two stools, determined Southern opposition to him because of his Senate record on such things as civil rights, for example, and the lingering hatred among some big city organizations in the North for his crime hearings of years ago. It had to be a senator for vice president. The Southern senators tried to coalesce against Kefauver and almost did it. They would have preferred Kennedy though he's a Northern catholic or even Humphrey although he's a Northern fire eating liberal. It was Gore that they really would like to have had. Him they repect the most. But he has been much too quiet and modest these past few years.

Neither Stevenson nor Kefauver came here with any single big solid core of support. For both their support was scattered and loose, but it was scattered awfully wide. After four years or more of handshaking, raising money for the party, making friends in every part of the country. Mr. Truman, after all, has been politically idle these past four years and Sen. Kennedy has not done this kind of fence building around the country. Sen. Humphrey's fence building had been too much confined to the Senate itself. Albert Gore had accomplished more in this Senate this year than any of these other contenders, but he is a quiet man and had put on no kind of personal campaign. And Lyndon Johnson who must hold the slim majority coalition in the Senate together who has great parliamentary skill - well, Johnson's influence, too, has been confined to the Senate and like Mr. Truman, he, too, has suffered a loss of prestige here in Chicago although by no means so much as Mr. Truman.

So now the new generation of Democrats takes over. It is again a basically liberal ticket, both very experienced campaigners. And on both party tickets now, we're assuming Mr. Nixon will be nominated next week, on both the vice presidents is a very prominent indeed famous personality. There's a great change from the days when a nonentity was so often given the vice presidential spot. The old background tradition - backroom tradition - of picking candidates receded him further into the past.

Well, I think that Kefauver will bring more votes to the Democratic than any of the others could've done. But should Stevenson be elected he will not have the influential lieutenant on capitol hill that Stevenson has been wanting. That was Stevenson's problem this week - to pick a Gore, Humphrey or Kennedy for this post November need should he be elected or Kefauver for his pre-November need. He resolved it by throwing it into the lap of the open convention.

MURROW: Well Eric you wrote a piece not long ago saying that the backroom was finished in political conventions and certainly that happened here today didn't it?

SEVAREID: I think so. I think in the past two conventions, now this one and four years ago, have been pretty much an open affair.

MURROW: Taft could not use that rule successfully then.

SEVAREID: I had a feeling that there was a great deal of seriousness down there on the floor today. There was almost a sudden realization that for so long vice presidential candidates were picked either dasually or by compromise and that some had turned out well and some had not, but there was a sense of responsibility and sort of politicking under the lights down there today.

MURROW: Indeed there was. That was a barrel of eels for quite a while. So many vice presidential candidates have been selected without the public or the party having an opportunity to examine their qualifications.

SEVAREID: Well, they didn't have very long to do it today but it was hectic while it lasted.

MURROW: This was not a case where the presidential nominee has to ask the name of his running mate.

MURROW: Do you think as a result of that he may be accused of indecisiveness and inability to make up his mind.

SEVAREID: Oh..this has been such a public thing, Ed, that I don't know why people would think of it that way. I suppose he may be "..." if I say that. It wasn't a case of inability to make up the mind, I think. It was a case of what was the wisest political course it involved.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Truman is going to make a speech here tonight and he's labelled in advance as making one on the subject of unity which has certain ridiculous overtones but nevertheless he will remain something of an embarrassment to Stevenson in this campaign will he not?

SEVAREID: I think that perhaps, in fact I'm sure it's obvious now that Mr. Stevenson faces quite an embarrassing position in respect to Mr. Truman. He's got to decide whether he does want him in the campaign to campaign for him in an active fashion as Truman said he would need. He'd need the old man from Missouri, said Mr. Truman the other day. Does he encourage him to go ahead or doesn't he? I don't know what he's going to do.

MURROW: Well, I should think at the outset you might simply say that he would welcome all help coming from Democratic sources and then try to work out a deal with Mr. Truman to perhaps restrain him a little in his utterances.

SEVAREID: This has been tried before.

MURROW: Quite true. Eric, you mentioned Lyndon Johnson's position. How difficult will that be now as the leader in the Senate?

SEVAREID: I don't think we can tell really until the Senate comes back next winter. But it's a very delicate ground that treads to keep this coalition together with that majority of one.

MURROW: Well, Eric, let's have allook at the rest of the news, shall we? And see if we have more time to talk about politics. Well, this is politics, too.

Vice President Nixon left Washington today to attend the Republican National Convention which opens in San Francisco on Monday. With regard to renomination,

Mr. Nixon told reporters, "I am not going to say I have the inside track." Republican National Chairman Hall has predicted Nixon will be the vice presidential nominee. Harold Stassen has proposed that Nixon be dropped as vice president and that Gov. Herter of Massachusetts be nominated instead. Stassen also took off for San Francisco today. They passed within a few feet of each other at the airport. They did not speak.

White House news secretary, James Hagerty told a news conference today that he is sure President Eisenhower will again defeat Adlai Stevenson in November. Mr. Eisenhower will leave for San Francisco on Wednesday to make his acceptance speech the following day.

Russia today rejected the Western plan for internationalizing the Suez Canal. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov told the 22 nation conference in London that the plan fails to take Egypt's interests fully into account. Shepilov called again for a larger conference to settle the issue and proposed that a commission of six nations be set up to make arrangements for such a conference. He suggested that the six nations be Egypt, India, Russia, United States, Britain, and France. He demanded that the Western powers denouce force as a means of settling the dispute.

The Western plan was presented yesterday by Secretary of State Dulles. Under it the Canal would be run by an international board linked to the United Nations. Egypt would be a member of the board and Egypt's right to equitable return would be recognized. The plan also proposes that the canal be operated in accordance with the Constantinople Convention of 1888 which provides that it be kept open at all times to the ships of all flags.

Egypt lodged a complaint against Israel today charging that Israeli troops killed nine Egyptian soldiers on Egyptian territory in the Gaza strip. Reports indicate the action is continuing. Yesterday four Israelis were killed in a bus ambush near the Egyptian frontier.

West Germany outlawed the Communist Party today as being unconstitutional. Forty Communist officials were arrested in widespread raids.

In New York the FBI announced that it had solved the Victor Riesel case. Last April Mr. Riesel, who is a labor columnist, was blinded by an assailant who threw acid. The FBI says the man who threw the acid is dead, that his body was found in a New York street on July 28th - a bullet through the head. He was identified as Abraham Telvi, 22, who had a police record dating back to 1949. Two other men are being held on a charge of conspiracy to obstruct justice. The government said Riesel was attacked to keep him from testifying on labor racketeering before a grand jury. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

ANNOUNCEMENT:

MURROW: Mr. Stevenson has recognized the importance of the vice presidency, calling the choice for that office almost as important as the choice for the presidency itself. There is inevitably some opposition to the new free process he proposed. But Thomas Huxley once said,"logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools and the beacons of free men." Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Aug. 24, 1956

This is the news:

Police today found the body of the Weinberger baby. The remains of the one-month-old child... kidnapped on July 4th... were discovered in a woods, eight miles from the Weinberger home in Westbury, Long Island. Police say that Angelo Lamarca, 31, has confessed taking the child, and demanding a ransom of 2-thousand dollars. They quote him as saying he abandoned the baby a day after the kidnaping, because of fear he would be caught. Lamarca... who is married and has two children... told police he needed the money to pay numerous debts. A peculiarity in handwriting, in the ransom note, betrayed him. After examining more than 2-million specimens of handwriting in the public records, FBI agents discovered Lamarca's signature in a 1954 bootlegging case, in which he had drawn a 90-day suspended sentence. He is now being held without bail, pending a hearing next Friday. Police say, even if the child was alive when abandoned, "it may well constitute murder." Kidnaping itself carries a maximum penalty of death in New York State.

→

The Government announced today that the cost of living in July reached a new all-time high. This is the second time in two months that living costs have reached a new peak. The previous all-time high was recorded in June. The cost of living in July jumped seven-tenths of one percent. As a result, the pay of more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries will automatically be raised three to five cents an hour.

Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, said today that the new rise in the cost of living "explodes" Republican claims that the Eisenhower Administration has controlled inflation. And he called for a bipartisan congressional investigation.

Adlai Stevenson said today that President Eisenhower's ~~address~~ speech... accepting the Republican nomination... was "a fine speech". But the record, he said, "bears little resemblance to the President's words." Stevenson charged that much of what was accomplished must be credited to a Democratic Congress. He said: "Mr. Nixon says they are going to carry the Eisenhower record to every corner of the country. So are we."

Republican National Chairman Hall told a news conference today that the only enemy, for the Republicans, "might be complacency." He warned his party against overconfidence. At the same time, Hall predicted that in November, the Republicans would carry as many states as they did in 1952, ~~their landslide victory of 1952.~~ Four years ago, they carried 39 of the 48 states---including four Southern states. Hall said the Republicans will start active campaigning about the middle of next month, with Vice President Nixon carrying the main load. No new plans were announced regarding the campaign role of the President. The national chairman said what he has said before, that Mr. Eisenhower will make five or six major speeches over radio and television. He insisted the President will not conduct a whistle-stop campaign.

President Eisenhower is relaxing today at Pebble Beach, California, about 120 miles from San Francisco. He got in some golf today...18 holes - at the famous Cypress Point Golf Course...and probably will not fly back to Washington until Monday. The White House physician, General Snyder, reports the President "feeling fine", after last night's acceptance speech. News Secretary Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower has now regained the five pounds he lost after his operation for ileitis, plus an additional half-pound.

In New York today, the United Nations announced it had fired a Soviet translator whom the United States accused of being a spy. The translator, Viktor Petrov, was employed by the secretariat and already has left the country. He is alleged to have tried to get secret data from an employe of an American aircraft company.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov charged today that military preparations taken by Great Britain and France in the Suez crisis constitute "flagrant violation of the United Nations charter. Shepilov told a news conference in London it would be wrong to underestimate "the gravity of the situation that might arise," if the West sought to settle the problem "from positions of strength." There was also a warning tonight from the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. Lloyd said (in a broadcast) that for President Nasser of Egypt to reject international authority over operation of the Suez Canal would be "a very serious matter."

In Washington, the Navy announces that the body of one member of the crew of the Navy patrol plane shot down off the China coast has been recovered. The aircraft had a 16-man crew. The Navy announcement said, "Initial examination of the wreckage indicated items recovered had been damaged by fire." The patrol plane was attacked on Wednesday by "unidentified aircraft". Red China says its fighters attacked a Chinese Nationalist plane. The Nationalists say no aircraft of their's was in the area. The search for survivors is continuing.

Edward R. Murrow: August 24, 1956.

Having belabored each other with several jaw bones, both Parties managed to nominate their candidates. Most of the ancient rituals were observed. Both Parties probably nominated their best vote-getters. The campaign will start off on a high level. But if precedent is any guide the language will grow stronger as the campaign progresses, or deteriorates. Spokesmen for both Parties have a vision of the future....Peace, prosperity and plenty. Their visions of the future are altogether admirable, and remarkably similar. They will be arguing, not so much about the direction of change as the rate of change.

The fundamental differences between the two candidates on such matters as civil rights and foreign policy, are not very considerable. Mr. Stevenson sees ominous signs over the horizon in our relations with foreign nations. Mr. Eisenhower does not. Mr. Stevenson speaks of the new America. The Republicans are gambling that most voters will like the America they have. The Democrats are blamed for the Korean war; the Republicans take credit for ending it; and neither side pays much attention to what would have happened to the free world had that use of force by the Communists not been met by force.

Much of the weight of the campaigning for the Republicans will be carried by Mr. Nixon, not only because he is young, able and vigorous, but because if defeat should come to the Republicans, there will be many in his own Party - unwilling to oppose him here - who will be willing to give him full credit for defeat. If his acceptance speech is any indication, he will follow the high road and avoid the gutter. As a matter of fact, the middle of the road will be pretty crowded during this campaign.

The state of the President's health will of course do more than anything else to determine Republican chances in November. No one talked about that here in San Francisco, but it was easy to sense the lift and relief on the part of those who realised that his recovery has been so remarkable, his appearance and manner so vigorous. He enjoyed himself in San Francisco, and his supporters were much heartened.

There is no question that during this campaign the farmers will be cultivated as never before - at least not since 1948. This is one of the principal reasons the Democrats went for Estes Kefauver.

The Conventions themselves were about as streamlined as a San Francisco cable car. Most of the information that came out of the first two days could easily have been compressed into a couple of half-hour reports.

Eric Sevareid is sitting here beside me, as he has been for the last two weeks.....

2-3 thoughts

sev. for murrow show aug. 24-56 radio ex-san francisco

Ed, I've been slowly ~~emerging~~ returning to rationality from ~~the~~ these two weeks of brain washing; ~~Ixfinx~~

I find odd, unrelated items ~~of ideas, things observed and things not observed,~~ crawling out of back recesses of the brain where the washing machine had flung them...

I noticed in chicago that the democrats seemed to shrink away from the korean war issue; as tho they had become convinced that the country was convinced that war was wrong. And yet, ~~the history books will probably record it as the bravest ~~grxxxxx~~ of the post-war acts designed to stop ~~xx~~ communism. ~~After all,~~ the whole free world applauded when we did it.

I noticed that the democrats handled the question of the president's health very gingerly, and here the republicans ~~xxxx~~ rigorously ignored it; yet, surely, it is the one univeral issue in this election, the one thing in the back of everybodys mind.

~~x~~ And I noticed, here, that no label, no title has fastened itself upon the eisenhower administration, so far. The history books still speak of Teddy roosevelt's Square Deal, Wilson's new freedom, Franklyn roosevelt's New Deal ~~and so on~~

But no word or phrase has stuck for the past four years; you didn't see the word "crusade" for example, anywhere in the hall; and even the president last night used it only lightly, in passing.... For the republicans here the title, the definition, the whole meaning of their program seems to be summed up in the word, "Ike."

~~I dislike using the phrase "cult of personality" because that's the post-stalin phrase now used in russia; but~~ I suppose this week's phenomenon is about as close to the "cult of personality" as we get in a free democracy; I imagine it was much the same, for roosevelt, in '36...

perhaps you noticed that the republican orators made practically no claims about cleaning subversives or security risks out of government...not even mr. dewey, or mr. Nixon, who rode that line so hard two years ago; apparently they won't make it an issue this year and I suspect that the revelations by former republican senator harry cain have forded the party to drop it...

Dewey did say something that pricked my curiosity. He said that when eisenhower went to korea at the end of fifty-two, he took personal actions toward ending that war. Dewey said history would reveal what these actions were. They have certainly been a well kept secret up to now; at that time, of course, mr. eisenhower was a private citizen with no civil or military powers to act; and he himself has never said that he took any actions.

But certainly, in san francisco, we didn't hear anything quite like the unblushing assertions of mr. truman at chicago; he announced he had practically dictated the forty-eight platform, and that he had done more for civil rights than any president before him.

There was one thing we all noticed at both conventions, ~~something that might be dispensed with~~: and that was the repeated suggestion that the Almighty was a partisan; in effect, we were asked to believe at chicago that god is a democrat, and at san francisco, that he had just switched to the republican side; there were vulgarities at both meetings; this, I suppose, was the most offensive.

And I kept wondering if delegates ought not vote by secret ballot; maybe that's unworkable; but maybe it would provide a little more drama -- and an occasional surprise

Word for Today

A considerable effort has been made... by a goodly number of us... to define a political convention. This reporter likes the definition Will Rogers wrote many years ago. "A political convention," he said, "is the Fourth of July celebration of national politics. It's entertaining and enlightening. It's a show that no American should miss."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, August 24, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow, with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday-through-Friday at this time, with his report and analysis on the latest news developments. Tonight's program originates in San Francisco, where, for the past week, Mr. Murrow and other distinguished reporters of the CBS News staff, have been covering the Republican National Convention. During the preceding week it was the Democratic convention in Chicago. Their accurate, up-to-the-minute knowledgeable coverage of these conventions, now concluded, is typical of all reporting by the staff of CBS News correspondents, assigned to news centers in this country and around the world. Now, from KCBS - San Francisco - here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. Police today found the body of the Weinberger baby. The remains of the one month old child, kidnapped on July 4, were discovered in a woods eight miles from the Weinberger home in Westbury, Long Island. Police say that Angelo LaMarca, 31, has confessed taking the child and demanding a ransom of two thousand dollars. They quote him as saying he abandoned the baby a day after the kidnapping because of fear he would be caught. LaMarca, who is married and has two children, told police he needed the money to pay numerous debts. A peculiarity in handwriting, in the ransom note, betrayed him. After examining more than two million specimens of handwriting in the public records, FBI agents discovered LaMarca's signature in a 1954 bootlegging case, in which he had drawn a 90-day suspended sentence. He is now being held without bail pending a hearing next Friday. Police say even if the child was alive when abandoned, it may well constitute murder. Kidnapping itself carries a maximum penalty of death in the State of New York.

The government announced today that the cost of living in July reached a new all-time high. This is the second time in two months that living costs have reached a new peak. The previous all-time high was reported in June. The cost of living in July jumped seven-tenths of one per cent. As a result, the pay of more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries will automatically be raised three-to-five cents an hour. Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, said today that the new rise in the cost of living explodes Republican claims that the Eisenhower Administration has controlled inflation, and he called for a bi-partisan Congressional investigation.

Adlai Stevenson said today that President Eisenhower's speech accepting the Republican nomination was a "fine speech." "But the record," he said, "bears little resemblance to the President's words. Stevenson charged that much of what was accomplished must be credited to a Democratic Congress. He said "Mr. Nixonsays they're going to carry the Eisenhower record to every corner of the country. So are we."

Republican National Chairman Hall told a news conference today that the only enemy for the Republicans might be complacency. He warned his party against over-confidence. At the same time, Hall predicted that in November the Republicans would carry as many xx states as they did in 1952. Four years ago, they carried 39 of the 48 states, including four Southern states. Hall said the Republicans will start active campaigning about the middle of next month, with Vice President Nixon carrying the main load. No new plans were announced regarding the campaign role of the President. The national chairman said what he has said before, that Mr. Eisenhower will make five or six major speeches over radio and television. He insisted the President will not conduct a whistle-stop campaign.

President Eisenhower is relaxing today at Pebble Beach, California, about 120-miles from San Francisco. He got in some golf today, 18-holes, at the famous Cyprus Point golf course, and probably will not fly back to Washington until Monday. The White House physician, Gen. Snyder, reports the President feeling fine after last night's acceptance speech. News secretary Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower has now regained the five poundshe lost after his operation for ileitis, plus an additional half pound.

In New York today, the United Nations announced it had fired a Soviet translator whom the United States accused of being a spy. The translator, Victor Petrov, was employed by the Secretariate, and already has left the country. He is alleged to have tried to get secret data from an employee of an American aircraft company.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov charged today that military preparations taken by Great Britain and France in the Suez crisis, constitute flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter. Shepilov told a news conference in London it would be wrong to underestimate what he called the "gravity of the situationsthat might arise if the West sought to settle the problem from positions of strength."

There was also a warning tonight from the British Foreign Secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. Lloyd said in a broadcast that for President Nasser of Egypt to reject international authority over operation of the Suez Canal would be a very serious matter.

In Washington theNavy announces that the body of one member of the crew of the Navy patrol plane shot down off the China coast has been recovered. The aircraft had a 16-man crew. The Navy announcementsaid "initial examination of the wreckage indicated itmes recovered had been damaged by fire." The patrol plane was attacked nn Wednesday by unidentified aircraft. Red China says its fighterx attacked a Chinese Nationalist plane. The Nationalists say no aircraft of theirs was in the area. The search for survivors is continuing.

Well, having belabored each other with several jaw bones, both parties managed to nominate their candidates. Most of the ancient rituals were observed. Both parties probably nominated their best vote-getters. The campaign will start off on a high level. But if precedent is any guide, the language will grow stronger as the campaign progresses or deteriorates. Spokesmen for both parties have a vision of the future: Peace, prosperity and plenty. Their visions of the future are altogether admirable and remarkably similar. They will be arguing not so much about the direction of change as the rate of change. The fundamental differences between the two candidates - on such matters as Civil Rights and foreign policy - are not very considerable. Mr. Stevenson sees ominous signs over the horizon in our relationswith foreign nations. Mr. Eisenhower does not. Mr. Stevenson speaks of the new America. The Republicans are gambling that most voters will like the America they have. Much of the weight of the campaigning for the Republicans will be carried by Mr. Richard Nixon, not only because he is young, able and vigorous, but because if defeat should come to the Republicans, there will be many in his own party unwilling to oppose him here, who will be willing to give him full credit for defeat - should it come. If his acceptance speech is any indication, he will follow the high road and avoid the gutter. As a matter of fact, the middle-of-the-road will be pretty crowded during this campaign.

The state of the President's health will, of course, do more than anything else to determine Republican chances in November. No one talked about that here in San Francisco. But it was very easy to sense the lift and relief on the part of those who realized that his recovery has been so remarkable, his appearance and manner so vigorous; he enjoyed himself in San Francisco and his supporters were very heartened.

There is no question that during this campaign, the farmers will be cultivated as never before; at least, not since 1948. This is one of the principal reasons the Democrats went for Estes Kefauver as their Vice Presidential candidate.

The conventions themselves were about as steamlined as a San Francisco cable car. Most of the information that came out of the first two days could easily have been compressed into a couple of half-hour reports. Eric Sevareid is sitting here alongside me as he has been for the last two weeks. Eric, have you had any second or third thoughts?

SEVAREID: Well, Ed, I've been rather slowly returning to a state of semi-rationality after these two weeks of brain-washing, and I find somewhat unrelated items - crawling out of the back recesses of the brain where the washing machines have flung them. I noticed in Chicago that the Democrats seemed to shrink away from the issue of the Korean war, as though they had become convinced that the country was convinced that that war was wrong. And yet, the whole free world applauded when we went into Korea. I? noticed that the Democrats handled the question of the President's health very gingerly, and here the Republicans rigorously ignored it. And yet surely, as you were just suggesting, it's the one universal issue in thiselection, the one thing in the back of everybody's mind. And I noticed here that no label, no title, has fastened itself upon the Eisenhower Administration so far. The history books still speak of Teddy Roosevelt's Square Deal, Wilson's New Freedom, Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, but no word or phrase has stuck for these past four years. You did not see the word "crusade" for example, anywhere in the hall here. And even the President last night used it only very lightly in passing. For the Republicans in San Francisco the title, the definition, the whole meaning of their program and the record seems to be summed up in the word "Ike."

I suppose this week's phenomenon is about as close to the cult of personality as weget in a frew democracy -- and I imagine it must have been much the same for Roosevelt back in 1936.

Perhaps you noticed that the Republican orators made practically no claims about cleaning subversives or security risks out of government; not even Mr. Dewey or Mr. Nixon, who rode that line so hard two years ago. Apparently, they won't make it an issue this year - and I suspect that the revelations by former Republican Senator Harry Cain have obliged the party to drpp it. Mr. Dewey did say something that pricked my curiosity. He said that when Eisenhower went to Korea at the end of '52, he took personal actions toward ending that war. Mr. Dewey said history wouldreveal what those actions were. Well, they've certainly been a weal kept secret up till now. At that time, of course, Mr. Eisenhower was a private citizen with no civil or military powers to act - and he himself has never said that he took any actions.

But certainly in San Francisco, we did not hear anything quite like the unblushing assertions of Mr. Truman at Chicago. He announced that he had practically dictated the '48 platform and that he had done more for Civil Rights than any President before him.

There was one thing that we all noticed at both conventions, and that was the repeated suggestion that the Almighty (two words indistinct) In effect, we were asked to believe at Chicago that God is a Democrat, and at San Francisco that He had just switched to the Republican side. There were vulgarities at both meetings - but this, I suppose, was the most offensive.

And I kept wondering over the last two weeks if delegates ought not vote by secret ballot; perhaps that's unworkable. But maybe it would provide a little more drama and maybe an occasional surprise.

MURROW: Well, Eric, I would guess that both parties came out of these conventions with a greater degree of unity than either has had, certainly, since 1940. Wouldn't you think that's true?

SEVAREID: Yes. The question is how long it holds, after November, for each party when the votes are in . You could have a split again - North-South - among the Democrats; and Right and Left-Wing split among the Republicans. I'm not sure (inter.)

MURROW: Perhaps this unity is only skin deep - but we shall see as the campaign progresses. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is Dean Stewart.

ANNOUNCER: ... (use signals in traffic ...) Now here is Mr. Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW: A considerable effort has been made by a goodly number of people, to define a political convention. This reporter likes at least part of the definition Will Rogers wrote many years ago: "A political convention," he said, "is the Fourth of July celebration of national politics. It's entertaining and enlightening. It's a show that no American should miss." Good Night and Good Luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow, with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday-through-Friday at this time over most of these stations. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts, brought to you each day by CBS News. Regularly heard over CBS Radio are the distinguished reports of other CBS newsmen, including Eric Sevareid, Bill Downs, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Robert Trout and Dallas Townsend, with the latest national and world developments. For comprehensive coverage, stay tuned to the CBS Radio Network.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Friday, August 24, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm

This is the news:

Police today found the body of the Weinberger baby. The remains of the one month old child, kidnapped on July 4, were discovered in a woods eight miles from the Weinberger home in Westbury, Long Island. Police say that Angelo LaMarca, 31, has confessed taking the child and demanding a ransom of two thousand dollars. They quote him as saying he abandoned the baby a day after the kidnapping because of fear he would be caught. LaMarca who is married and has two children, told police he needed the money to pay numerous debts. A peculiarity in handwriting, in the ransom note, betrayed him. After examining more than two million specimens of handwriting in the public records, FBI agents discovered LaMarca's signature in a 1954 bootlegging case, in which he had drawn a 90-day suspended sentence. He is now being held without bail pending a hearing next Friday. Police say even if the child was alive when abandoned, it may well constitute murder. Kidnapping itself carries a maximum penalty of death in the State of New York.

The government announced today that the cost of living in July reached a new all-time high. This is the second time in two months that living costs have reached a new peak. The previous all-time high was reported in June. The cost of living in July jumped seven-tenths of one per cent. As a result, the pay of more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries will automatically be raised three-to-five cents an hour. Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, said today that the new rise in the cost of living explodes Republican claims that the Eisenhower Administration has controlled inflation, and he called for a bi-partisan Congressional investigation.

Adlai Stevenson said today that President Eisenhower's speech accepting the Republican nomination was a "fine speech." "But the record," he said, "bears little resemblance to the President's words. Stevenson charged that much of what was accomplished must be credited to a Democratic Congress. He said, "Mr. Nixon says they're going to carry the Sienhower record to every corner of the country. So are we."

Republican National Chairman Hall told a news conference today that the only enemy for the Republicans might be complacency. He warned his party against over-confidence. At the same time, Hall predicted that in November the Republicans would carry as many states as they did in 1952. Four years ago, they carried 39 of the 48 states, including four Southern states. Hall said the Republicans will start active campaigning about the middle of next month, with Vice President Nixon carrying the main load. No new plans were announced regarding the campaign role of the President. The national chairman said what he has said before, that Mr. Eisenhower will make five or six major speeches over radio and television. He insisted the President will not conduct a whistle-stop campaign.

President Eisenhower is relaxing today at Pebble Beach, California, about 120-miles from San Francisco. He got in some golf today, 18-holes, at the famous Cyprus Point golf course, and probably will not fly back to Washington until Monday. The White House physician, Gen. Snyder, reports the President feeling fine after last night's acceptance speech. News Secretary Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower has now regained the five pounds he lost after his operation for ileitis, plus an additional half pound.

In New York today, the United Nations announced it had fired a Soviet translator whom the United States accused of being a spy. The translator, Victor Petrov, was employed by the Secretariate, and already has left the country. He is alleged to have tried to get secret data from an employee of an American aircraft company.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov charged today that military preparations taken by Great Britain and France in the Suez crisis, constitute flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter. Shepilov told a news conference in London it would be wrong to under-estimate what he called the "gravity of the situation that might arise if the West sought to settle the problem from positions of strength."

There was also a warning tonight from the British Foreign Secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. Lloyd said in a broadcast that for President Nasser of Egypt to reject international authority over operation of the Suez Canal would be a very serious matter.

In Washington, the Navy announces that the body of one member of the crew of the Navy patrol plane shot down off the China coast has been recovered. The aircraft had a 16 man crew. The Navy announcement said "initial examination of the wreckage indicated items recovered had been damaged by fire." The patrol plane was attacked on Wednesday by unidentified aircraft. Red China says its fighters attacked a Chinese Nationalist plane. The Nationalists say no aircraft of theirs was in the area. The search for survivors is continuing.

Well, having belabored each other with several jaw bones, both parties managed to nominate their candidates. Most of the ancient rituals were observed. Both parties probably nominated their best vote-getters. The campaign will start off on a high level. But if precedent is any guide, the language will grow stronger as the campaign progresses or deteriorates. Spokesmen for both parties have a vision of the future: Peace, prosperity and plenty. Their visions of the future are altogether admirable and remarkably similar. They will be arguing not so much about the direction of change as the rate of change. The fundamental differences between the two candidates - on such matters as Civil Rights and foreign policy - are not very considerable. Mr. Stevenson sees ominous signs over the horizon in our relations with foreign nations. Mr. Eisenhower does not. Mr. Stevenson speaks of the new America. The Republicans are gambling that most voters will like the America they have. Much of the weight of the campaigning for the Republicans will be carried by Mr. Richard Nixon, not only because he is young, able and vigorous, but because if defeat should come to the Republicans, there will be many in his own party unwilling to oppose him here, who will be willing to give him full credit for defeat - should it come. If his acceptance speech is any indication, he will follow the high road and avoid the gutter. As a matter of fact, the middle-of-the-road will be pretty crowded during this campaign.

The state of the President's health will, of course, do more than anything else to determine Republican chances in November. No one talked about that here in San Francisco. But it was very easy to sense the lift and relief on the part of those who realized that his recovery has been so remarkable, his appearance and manner so vigorous; he enjoyed himself in San Francisco and his supporters were very heartened.

There is no question that during this campaign, the farmers will be cultivated as never before; at least, not since 1948. This is one of the principal reasons that the Democrats went for Estes Kefauver as their Vice Presidential candidate.

The conventions themselves were about as streamlined as a San Francisco cable car. Most of the information that came out of the first two days could easily have been compressed into a couple of half-hour reports. Eric Sevareid is sitting here alongside me as he has been for the last two weeks. Eric, have you had any second or third thoughts?

SEVAREID: Well, Ed, I've been rather slowly returning to a state of semi-rationality after these two weeks of brain-washing, and I find somewhat unrelated items -- crawling out of the back recesses of the brain where the washing machines have flung them. I noticed in Chicago that the Democrats seemed to shrink away from the issue of the Korean war, as though they had become convinced that the country was convinced that that war was wrong. And yet, the whole free world applauded when we went into Korea. I noticed that the Democrats handled the questions of the President's health very gingerly, and here the Republicans rigourously ignored it. And yet surely, as you were just suggesting, it's the one universal issue in this election, the one thing in the back of everybody's mind. And I noticed here that no label, no title, has fastened itself upon the Eisenhower Administration so far. The history books still speak of Teddy Roosevelt's Square Deal, Wilson's New Freedom, Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, but no word or phrase has stuck for these past four years. You did not see the word "drusade" for example, anywhere in the hall here. And even the President last night used it only very lightly in passing. For the Republicans in San Francisco the title, the definition, the whole meaning of their program and the record seems to be summed up in the word "Ike."

I suppose this week's phenomenon is about as close to the cult of personality

as we get in a free democracy -- and I imagine it must have been much the same for Roosevelt back in 1936.

Perhaps you noticed that the Republican orators made practically no claims about cleaning subversives or security risks out of government; not even Mr. Dewey, or Mr. Nixon, who rode that line so hard two years ago. Apparently, they won't make it an issue this year -- and I suspect that the revelations by former Republican Senator Harry Cain have obliged the party to dropp it. Mr. Dewey did say something that pricked my curiosity. He said that when Eisenhower went to Korea at the end of '52, he took personal actions toward ending that war. Mr. Dewey said history would reveal what those actions were. Well, they've certainly been a well kept secret up til now. At that time, of course, Mr. Eisenhower was a private citizen with no civil or military powers to act -- and he himself has never said that he took any actions.

But certainly in San Francisco, we did not hear anything quite like the unblushing assertions of Mr. Truman at Chicago. He announced that he had practically dictated the '48 platform and that he had done more for Civil Rights than any President before him.

There was one thing that we all noticed at both conventions, and that was the repeated suggestion that the Almighty was partisan. ~~(two words indistinct)~~ In effect, we were asked to believe at Chicago that God is a Democrat, and at San Francisco that He had just switched to the Republican side. There were vulgarities at both meetings but this, I suppose, was the most offensive.

And I kept wondering over the last two weeks if delegates ought not vote by secret ballot; perhaps that's unworkable. But maybe it would provide a little more drama and maybe an occasional surprise.

MURROW: Well, Eric, I would guess that both parties came out of these conventions with a greater degree of unity than either has had, certainly, since 1940. Wouldn't you think that's true?

SEVAREID: Yes. The question is how long it holds, after November, for each party when the votes are in. You could have a split again -- North-South among the

Democrate; and Right and Left-Wing split among the Republicans. I'm not sure (Inter)

MURROW: Perhaps this unity is only skin deep -- but we shall see as the campaign progresses. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is Dean Stewart.

STEWART: Announcement

MURROW A considerable effort has been made by a goodly number of people, to define a political convention. This reporter likes at least part of the definition Will Rogers wrote many years ago: "A political convention," he said, "is the Fourth of July celebration of national politics. It's entertaining and enlightening. It's a show that no American should miss." Good Night and Godd Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

...Now let's hear that report from Ed Murrow in Cairo, as he recorded it late this afternoon.

MURROW: This is Cairo. A city that is calm on the surface, where rumors move faster than taxicabs, and most of the rumors collide and expire without sound or substance. The Suez Canal is operating normally. The muddy Nile is rising, carrying valuable top soil down to the Mediterranean. In Cairo it is business - - as - usual. The Menzies committee has departed - and now the waiting time begins. The Egyptians have invited the views of all interested nations. But they have made it clear that Suez belongs to them. They will listen to advice, welcome technical assistance but they control the canal and they (indistinct) to go on doing so.

The principal architect of this crisis or situation is a 38-year-old former colonel, the President of Egypt, Abdul Nasser, and tonight he's one of the coolest men in town. He is the head of a state of 23-million people. His country is mostly desert, with a thin ribbon of fertility along the banks of the Nile. He has just rejected the recommendations of eighteen nations, controlling more than 90% of the ships on the Suez Canal.

This reporter has been privileged to talk with a considerable number of heads of state at times of great crisis. None was more casual, calm or collected than President Nasser was this evening. He displayed neither fear nor fanaticism. And he talked for about three hours in the first interview he has granted since the departure of the Menzies mission. It was in preparation for a television program on See It Now. I shall try to summarize what he said. Would President Nasser be willing that the whole matter of the Suez Canal be placed before the United Nations? He would have no objection to such a procedure. Why does Nasser think the United States and Britain withdrew their offer to finance the Aswan Dam? He did not know. He'd only read in the newspapers the explanation that he'd been negotiating too closely with the Russians, a statement which he denied. Nasser said his first information about the withdrawal of the offer came from a newspaper, and he regarded the language used as an effort to undermine confidence in Egypt's dignity and financial integrity. Did Colonel Nasser still have hopes for Western support for the Aswan Dam? He did not know. But, he said, "under no circumstances" would Egypt ask again for such assistance. The withdrawal would mean a delay in the social and economic changes he had planned for Egypt - but he was not dismayed. Did President Nasser ever believe that the British and French would use force? He had constantly had this in mind, he said, and is still obliged to regard it as a possibility. In the event of hostilities, had he received assurances of military support from states outside the Arab bloc? The President would not reply directly but said that Egypt must rely upon her own resources and the rightness of her position. He felt that French and British concern was not primarily or exclusively equal and guaranteed access to the canal. They were also concerned, he thought, to re-establish a dominant position in the Middle East. President Nasser expressed complete confidence in his ability to maintain and operate the canal as a going concern. Did he anticipate more trouble with the pilots on the canal? He did. He expects a general strike of the non-Egyptian pilots. But in spite of this, he is confident that full service can be maintained. President Nasser agreed that economic sanctions by Britain and France would force him to do more business with the Soviet Union. But he denied that this would increase the possibility of his coming more and more under Russian political domination. Asked whether he would like to visit the United States, Nasser said he had heard about it since he was a boy; that he had not yet turned down any invitation to visit a foreign country; but that there's an old Egyptian saying - that you could not accept an invitation until you had been invited,

Asked whether the possibility of international control of the Panama Canal would influence his thinking about the Suez Canal, he said "for the moment, I am interested in and concerned with only one canal, the Suez." The possibility that Britain and France might be legitimately concerned about his stopping their ships at some future time, as he stopped Israeli ships, Nasser referred to the Treaty of 1888 and indicated that he would not find it in his interest to undertake such action. Asked whether his example of nationalization might be contagious and result in the nationalization of oil in other Arab States, he said he iidn't think so, that oil (indistinct) transported, bought and sold as the Iranians had discovered, whereas Suez was indispensable to the nations using the canal. To this reporter, President Nasser appeared a calm gambler, familiar with the odds, devoid of bombast, prepared to talk with candor about anything except Israel and the maintenance of Egypt's complete and absolute sovereignty over her own affairs and those of the Suez Canal. He gave the impression of neither a mystic nor a fanatic. Rather, a young, steady and alert man who has taken the odds and concluded that the world has changed so much that political purposes are no longer likely to be achieved by war. This belief is perhaps his supreme gamble, of this man who has recognized that history is made by geography. He has seized geography by the neck. He promised not to strangle the economic life of Western Europe. Most of Western Europe does not believe him. The historians and the mapmakers will one day record the outcome.

This is Ed Murrow in Cairo

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD:

Monday, September 10, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Now let's hear that report from Ed Murrow in Cairo, as he recorded it late this afternoon.

MURROW: This is Cairo. A city that is calm on the surface, where rumors move faster than taxicabs, and most of the rumors collide and expire without sound or substance. The Suez Canal is operating normally. The muddy Nile is rising, carrying valuable top soil down to the Mediterranean. In Cairo it is business-as-usual. The Menzies committee has departed - and now the waiting time begins. The Egyptians have invited the views of all interested nations. But they have made it clear that Suez belongs to them. They will listen to advice, welcome technical assistance but they control the canal and they (one word indistinct) to go on doing so.

The principal architect of this crisis or situation is a 38-yr. old former colonel, the President of Egypt, Abdul Nasser, and tonight he's one of the coolest men in town. He is the head of a state of 23-million people. His country is mostly desert, with a thin ribbon of fertility along the banks of the Nile. He has just rejected the recommendations of eighteen nations, controlling more than 90% of the ships on the Suez Canal.

This reporter has been privileged to talk with a considerable number of heads ofstate at times of great crisis. None was more casual, calm or collected than President Nasser was this evening. He displayed neither fear nor fanatisism. And he talked for about three hours in the first interciew he has granted since the departure of the Menzies mission. It was in preparation for a television program on See It Now. I shall try to summarize what he said. Would

President Nasser be willing that the whole matter of the Suez Canal be placed before the United Nations? He would have no objection to such a procedure. Why does Nasser think the United States and Britain withdrew their offer to finance the Aswan Dam? He did not know. He'd only read in the newspapers the explanation that he'd been negotiating too closely with the Russians, a statement which he denied. Nasser said his first information about the withdrawal of the offer came from a newspaper, and he regarded the language used as an effort to undermine confidence in Egypt's dignity and financial integrity. Did Colonel Nasser still have hopes for Western support for the Aswan Dam? He did not know. But, he said, "under no circumstances" would Egypt ask again for such assistance. The withdrawal would mean a delay in the social and economic changes he had planned for Egypt - but he was not dismayed. Did President Nasser ever believe that the British and French would use force? He had constantly had this in mind, he said, and is still obliged to regard it as a possibility. In the event of hostilities, had he received assurances of military support from states outside the Arab bloc? The President would not reply directly but said that Egypt must rely upon her own resources and the rightness of her position. He felt that French and British concern was not primarily or exclusively equal and guaranteed access to the canal. They were also concerned, he thought, to re-establish a dominant position in the Middle East. President Nasser expressed complete confidence in his ability to maintain and operate the canal as a going concern. Did he anticipate more trouble with the pilots on the canal? He did. He expects a general strike of the non-Egyptian pilots. But in spite of this, he is confident that full service can be maintained. President Nasser agreed that economic sanctions by Britain and France would force him to do more business with the Soviet Union. But he denied that this would increase the possibility of his coming more and more under Russian political domination. Asked whether he would like to visit the United States, Nasser said he had heard about it since he was a boy; that he had not yet turned down any invitation to visit a foreign country; but that there's an old Egyptian saying - that you could not accept an invitation until you had been invited.

Asked whether the possibility of international control of the Panama Canal would influence his thinking about the Suez Canal, he said "for the moment I am interested in and concerned with only one canal, the Suez." The possibility that Britain and France might be legitimately concerned about his stopping their ships at some future time, as he has stopped Israeli ships, Nasser referred to the Treaty of 1888 and indicated that he would not find it in his interest to undertake such action. Asked whether his example of nationalization might be contagious and result in the nationalization of oil in other Arab States, he said he didn't think so, that oil (indistinct) transported, bought and sold as the Iranians had discovered, whereas Suez was indispensable to the nations using the canal. To this reporter, President Nasser appeared a calm gambler, familiar with the odds, devoid of bombast, prepared to talk with candor about anything except Israel and the maintenance of Egypt's complete and absolute sovereignty over her own affairs and those of the Suez Canal. He gave the impression of neither a mystic nor a fanatic. Rather, a young, steady and alert man who has taken the odds and concluded that the world has changed so much that political purposes are no longer likely to be achieved by war. This belief is perhaps his supreme gamble, of this man who has recognized that history is made by geography. He has seized geography by the neck. He promises not to strangle the economic life of Western Europe. Most of Western Europe does not believe him. The historians and the map-makers will one day record the outcome.

This is Ed Murrow in Cairo.

COLLINWOOD: This is Charles Collingwood in New York. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to today's news. But, first, here's George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Sept. 12, 1956

Good evening:

The Suez dispute has entered a new, critical phase. Prime Minister Eden told the British House of Commons today that the United States, Britain and France have agreed to set up an association which would, in effect, run the Suez Canal. Eden said the association would employ pilots, collect dues, and control the movement of ships. It would be a "provisional" organization, preparing the way for a permanent system which, he hopes, can be established with the full agreement of all the interested parties. ~~Egypt, he said, will be asked to cooperate in maintaining the uninterrupted flow of traffic through the canal, and Egypt will be paid for the use of its facilities.~~ Eden again pledged his government to do everything possible to achieve a peaceful settlement. But President Nasser's rejection of the Western proposal for placing the canal under international control, he said, required emergency action. He told the House of Commons that the association had to be set up without delay...~~and~~ and that all principal users of the canal will be invited to join. He said: "If the Egyptian government should seek to interfere, that government would once more be in breach of the Convention of 1888." ~~Britain and the other powers concerned, he said, would then be free to take "such further steps as seem to be required, either through the United Nations or by other means for the assertion of their rights."~~

The prime minister's words were greeted by cheers from Conservative members of Parliament, and by loud cries of "Resign!" from members of the Labour opposition. The Labour party leader, Hugh Gaitskell, took the floor and accused Eden of advocating steps which, in Gaitskell's words, "have the very gravest implications." Gaitskell charged that it would take force to make Egypt swallow such a proposal. He said, "If they intend to use force in this way, in the absence of any further deliberate provocative action by Colonel Nasser... or aggression by him... then I say the consequences to this country will be disastrous." ~~We are [illegible] [illegible] advocating the view," Gaitskell said, "that each nation decides in its own right what it is going to do. We are saying there only power [illegible]."~~ He concluded by saying that the dispute is one which belongs, rightfully, before the United Nations. ~~"Why should it not be~~

→

2A
4

So far, the only official reaction from Cairo comes from the Egyptian director of information. He calls the Western plan "an act of provocation, with the obvious aim of creating a situation resulting in armed aggression against Egypt and leading to war."

[redacted]

British sources in London say the proposal outlined by Eden was inspired by the United States. A State Department spokesman [redacted] confirms that this country is willing [redacted] to join Britain and France in such a project. The spokesman says that Secretary of State Dulles will hold a news conference tomorrow, at which time he will answer questions.

[redacted]

France and Great Britain ~~did bring~~ brought the Suez problem to the attention of the United Nations Security Council today... through a letter to the Council president... but they made no request for action at this time. It was a routine move to lay the groundwork for possible future action.

[redacted]

INTRO TO ED

The regular proprietor of this program, Edward R. Murrow, returned today from Cairo where he had filmed an interview with President Nasser for his television program See It Now. Few people are in a better position to appraise todays new turn in the ~~Gu~~ Suez situation. So, although ~~hawillxentxkx~~ other projects will keep him from returning regularly to these broadcasts ~~for some time yet~~ immediately, we asked him to comment tonight on the new western plan for the Suez Canal..... Ed.

Sir Anthony Eden's "users association" for the Suez Canal, is to be made up originally of the United States, Britain, and France. Other nations will be invited to join. Just how this association is to function, was left very vague indeed. He said it will employ pilots, undertake responsibility for co-ordination of traffic through the Canal, Egypt will be paid something for the facilities provided, but the Canal tolls will be paid to this new association and not to the Egyptian authorities. The British Prime Minister said that "if the Egyptian Government seeks to interfere with the operation of the Association, or refuses to extend to it the essential minimum of cooperation, the three countries, Britain, France and the United States, will be free to take such further steps as seem to be required either through the United Nations or by other means for the assertion of their rights." This will, I am sure, be regarded in Egypt as a direct and overt threat of force and the entire move will be seen in Egyptian eyes as one designed to provoke an incident which will serve as an excuse for military action by the Western powers.

In theory, and under the Treaty of 1888, the Western Powers can station a ship at each end of the Canal, can transport pilots from those ships to any vessel wishing to traverse the Canal and then proceed, but it is not as simple as that. The present practice is for a pilot to take a ship from Suez to Ismalia about half way through the Canal and from there another pilot takes over for the trip to Port Said. The launches that are used to transfer the pilots are manned by Egyptians. If they go on strike, or refuse to work, the pilots will presumably have to swim. The whole complex of communications which causes one convoy to tie up in a by-pass while another proceeds is controlled from Ismalia. The nerve center is there, it is on Egyptian soil, both sides of the Canal are guarded by Egyptian troops. This will not simply be a matter of a good pilot conning a tanker through 103 miles of narrow water. Someone must decide the composition of convoys, determine priorities and rights of way and control the elaborate communications. systemx

Many of the foreign pilots are going to leave on Friday night. No one knows how many of them will go, Last night in Paris the former director of the old Suez Canal Company told me that probably 80 would depart. The Egyptians have said today that they are free to go. Efforts have already been made by the British and French to persuade non-Egyptian technical personnel to leave the Canal.

One Greek technician told me on the Canal last week that he had been offered three years salary just to go back to Greece and do nothing. It is difficult to see how this effort to remove key personnel can do anything other than increase the hazards of serious accidents in the Canal. And it is inconceivable that President Nasser would permit the three-power "Users Association" to take over control of the whole nerve-center of the Canal at Ismalia. Eden's proposal will be regarded in Cairo as another attempt at internationalization which the Egyptians have turned down. It had been felt out there that the United States in recent weeks had excercised a restraining influence upon Britain and France. That feeling will now largely disappear.

The Egyptians have maintained that they can continue to operate the Canal even after a certain number of foreign pilots leave. So far, they have operated it. And now before it has been demonstrated that they can't, the three Western nations announce in effect that they are taking over. This inevitably will increase the opinion already widely held in official circles in Cairo that the real purpose of Western action is not to guarantee access to the Canal but to bring down the Government of President Nasser and to create an excuse for military intervention.

Earlier this week no one in Cairo would talk with candor about how far Nasser has moved or been pushed in the direction of Moscow, but today's announcement by Eden will inevitably move him a little more in that direction.

Much talk has been heard in all capitols concerned about the Constantinople Treaty of 1888 guaranteeing free access to the Canal for the shipping of all nations. Israeli ships have been barred for many years. The Western powers made no significant protest. Had they done so, their position now would be more conprehensible and consistent. Our own posture in the matter might be more understandable if we were to be told why we withdrew our offer of aid for the Aswan Dam and why a British Prime Minister gave us the news that our Government had ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ underwritten such a vague and da~~ngerous~~ p~~olicy~~. vital policy.

There was a new incident today on the Israel-Jordan border. Jordan charges that Israeli troops attacked a police post on Jordanian territory and killed at least 15 of its defenders. One report sets the death toll as high as twenty. According to Jordan, the attack was launched by about a thousand Israelis, who swept across the border in armored cars, jeeps and trucks. The chief U.N. truce observer, General Burns, said the attack appeared to be an act of retaliation such, he said, "as has been repeatedly condemned by the Security Council." Last Monday, six Israeli soldiers were killed in an incident involving the troops of Jordan. Israel said the attack took place on Israeli territory. / T[redacted] lasted about two hours.

The United States sent a memorandum to Russia today... suggesting that Russia let Japan have two disputed islands in the southern Kuriles. Such action, the memorandum said, would be "a positive contribution to the reduction of tension in the Far East." Disposition of the islands has been one of the stumbling blocks in [redacted] negotiations to end the state of war between Russia and Japan.

Today... in Clay, Kentucky... National Guardsmen escorted two Negro

students to the local grade school. The two children had been intimidated from entering the school for several days. Today they did attend classes, but the white students went home, in a mass boycott. Three teachers are also reported to have left the school in protest. ~~Governor Chandler said he ordered the National Guard to go into the town... not to force anyone to go to school... but to protect law and order.~~

Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver... the Democratic candidates for President and Vice President... received the endorsement today of the general board of the AFL-CIO. The board is composed of representatives of each of the 145 unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO, in addition to the members of the organization's executive council. The council gave the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket a similar endorsement last month.

Senator Kefauver announced today that... on Friday... he will set out on a speaking tour of 15 states, starting with Florida.

President Eisenhower launched his re-election campaign today at a "political picnic" at his Gettysburg farm. The picnic was attended by about 500 Republican leaders from all sections of the country. And when they had met together in a huge tent... pitched in a meadow... Mr.

Eisenhower told them the objectives in the campaign should be fourfold: To arouse in the American people a consciousness of what is at stake, to convince people that the Republican Party is the party best fitted to run the government, to make converts among the Democrats and---last but not least---to get out the vote. The Republican message, he said, should be carried to the last man, the last woman, in every block.

Here in New York today, Adlai Stevenson conferred with Democratic leaders from six eastern states. For the first time in several days he didn't make a speech.

Latest returns from yesterday's primary show Wisconsin Republican Senator Wiley definitely won his bid for nomination for a fourth term. Although he lacked the support of the Republican state organization, Wiley defeated his rival, Glenn R. Davis, by roughly 10-thousand votes.

In Washington, the Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures has decided to ask all major political organizations to report the status of their campaign funds as of October first. These reports will then be taken up in a series of public hearings, starting October 8th.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

In giving Republican campaign workers his philosophy of how the campaign ought to be conducted, President Eisenhower cautioned them not to be too solemn about it. Go into it "with a grin on your face," the President said. "Never under-estimate the value of a grin," said the possessor of one of the most famous grins in history. "Pessimism never won a battle."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

The regular proprietor of this program, Edward R. Murrow returned today from Cairo where he had filmed an interview with President Nasser for his television program See It Now. Few people are in a better position to appraise todays new turn in the Suez situation. So, although other projects will keep him from returning regularly to these broadcasts immediately, we asked him to comment tonight on the new western plan for the Suez Canal....Ed. MURROW: Sir Anthony Eden's "user's association" for the Suez Canal, is to be made up originally of the United States, Britain, and France. Other nations will be invited to join. Just how this association is to function, was left very vague indeed. He said it will employ pilots, and undertake responsibility for co-ordination of traffic through the Canal.

Egypt will be paid something for the facilities provided, but the Canal tolls will be paid to this new association and not to the Egyptian authorities. The British Prime Minister said that "if the Egyptian Government seeks to interfere with the operation of the Association" or refuses to extend to it the essential minimum of cooperation, the three countries, Britain, France and the United States, will be "free to take such further steps as seem to be required either through the United Nations or by other means for the assertion of their rights.

This will, I am sure, be regarded in Egypt as a direct and overt threat of force and the entire move will be seen in Egyptian eyes as one designed to provoke an incident which will serve as an excuse for military action by the Western powers.

In theory, and under the Treaty of 1888, the Western Powers can station a ship at each end of the Canal, can transport pilots from those ships to any vessel wishing to traverse the canal and then proceed, but it is not as simple as that. The present practice is for a pilot to take a ship from Suez to Ismalia about half way trhough the canal and from there another pilot takes over for the trip to Port Said. The launches that are used to transfer the pilots are manned by Egyptians. If they go on strike, or refuse to work, the pilots will presumably have to swim. The whole complex of communications which causes one convoy to tie up in a by-pass while another proceeds is controlled from Ismalia. The nerve center is there, it is on Egyptian soil, both sides of the Canal are guarded by Egyptian troops. This will not simple be a matter of a good pilot conning a tanker through 103 miles of narrow water. Someone must decide the composition of convoys, determine priorities and rights of way, and control the elaborate communications system.

Many of the foreign pilots are going to leave on Friday night. No one knows how many of them will go. Last night in Paris the former director of the old Suez Canal Company told me that probably 80 would depart. The Egyptians have said today that they are free to go. Efforts have already been made by the British and French to persuade non-Egyptian technical personnel to leave the Canal.

One Greek technician told me on the Canal last week that he had been offered three years salary, just to go back to Greece and do nothing. It is difficult to see how this effort to remove key personnel can do anything other than increase the hazzards of serious accidents in the Canal. And it is inconceivable that President Nasser would permit the three-power "Users Association" to take over control of the whole nerve-center of the Canal at Ismalia . Eden's proposal will be regarded in Cairo as another attempt at internationalization which the Egyptians have turned down. It had been felt out there that the United States in recent weeks had exercised a restraining influence upon Britain and France. That feeling will now largely disappear.

The Egyptians have maintained that they can continue to operate the Canal even after a certain uumber of foreign pilots leave. So far, they have operated it. And now, before it has been demonstrated that they can't, the three Western nations announce in effect that they are taking over. This inevitably will increase the opinion already widely held in official circles in Cairo that the real purpose of Western action is not to guarantee access to the Canal but to bring down the Government of President Nasser and to create an excuse for military intervention.

Earlier this week no one in Cairo would talk with candor about how far Nasser has moved or been pushed in the direction of Moscow, but today's announcement by Eden will inevitably move him a little more in that direction.

Much talk has been heard in all capitols concennad about the Constantinople Treaty of 1888 guaranteeing free access to the Canal for the shipping of all nations. Israeli ships have been barred for many years. The Western powers made no significant protest. Had they done so, their position now would be more comprehensible and consistent. Our own posture in the matter might be more understandable if we were to be told why we withdrew our offer of aid for the Aswan Dam and why a British Prime Minister gave us the news that our government has underwritten such a vague and vital policy.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 8, 1956

This is the news:

The first perfect game in World Series history was pitched today in Yankee Stadium. / In defeating the Dodgers... 2 to nothing... Don Larsen did more than pitch a no-hitter, he never allowed a Dodger to reach first base on balls, or for any other reason whatsoever. (The Yankees now lead in the series, three games out of five). Until today, there had never been a no-hit game in a World Series, let alone a game in which a team was never able to get on base. / In fact, only once before in modern major league baseball... outside the World Series... had there ever been a perfect game. / And that was in 1922, when Charley Robertson of the White Sox, worked the miracle against Detroit. Today, Larsen retired 27 Dodgers in a row. My colleague, Doug Edwards, has just been talking to him, and we hope to have that interview for you in a few minutes.

Egypt presented her case today before the United Nations Security Council. The Egyptian foreign minister... Mahmoud Fawzi... spoke for an hour and rejected the Anglo-French resolution for settling the Suez dispute. That is the resolution submitted on Friday, urging the Security Council to endorse the London proposals for internationalizing the canal and to ask Egypt to cooperate with the Canal Users Association while negotiating a settlement. Fawzi said the re-introduction of these proposals would be "neither wise nor profitable". He suggested, instead, that the problem be referred to a special negotiating committee. This committee, he said, should take into full consideration the sovereignty of Egypt and the interests of the canal users. It would set up a system of tolls... fair to the canal users... and permit a "reasonable percentage" of the revenue to be set aside for canal improvement. Dr. Fawzi said the most basic principle guiding the committee should be the principle "guaranteeing for all... for all time... freedom of navigation in the canal." The Egyptian proposal for a negotiating committee was promptly supported by Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov. Such a committee, he said, might be made up of the United States, Britain, Russia, France, India and Egypt. He suggested that Yugoslavia and Iran... or Indonesia and Sweden... might be included, if a larger membership were desired. Shepilov called on Britain and France to withdraw their joint resolution since, he said, it would not make for progress in settling the Suez problem. Tomorrow, Secretary of State Dulles is expected to set forth the American view.

Fifty-eight ships are reported to have moved through the Suez Canal today. According to Egyptian authorities, this is a record for traffic in a single day.

Britain renewed its offer today to mediate the Arab-Israeli dispute. A Foreign Office statement, said the offer of Britain's good offices... extended by Prime Minister Eden last November... still stands.

On Cyprus today, a Greek Cypriot youth was convicted of killing a British police sergeant, and was sentenced to be hanged. This is the 11th death sentence meted out by the British, in 18 months.

The first major sentences were handed down today in the Poznan trials. Two youths, convicted of murdering a Polish police officer during the riots of June 28, were sentenced to four and a half years in prison. A third youth... convicted of the same crime... got four years. /All three could have been sentenced to death. It is quite possible that severe penalties might have set off new violence against the Communist state, and that this was a consideration. The judge said that... in reaching his decision... he ignored statements made by the defendants in pre-trial testimony. Some of the accused said their early confessions had been obtained through torture. /The rumor that the mass trials may be called off, remains unconfirmed.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court held its first business session of the new term. In a series of orders, it agreed to review a lower court decision upholding the Subversive Activities Act of New Hampshire and to rule whether congressional committees can force a witness to identify former members of the Communist Party. /The Supreme Court denied a hearing to six former draftees, who have challenged Army security risk procedures. But it granted a hearing to Ben Gold, former president of the International Fur and Leather Workers Union. Gold was convicted of lying, when he denied that he was a Communist and a supporter of Communist causes. The Supreme Court also asked the Justice Department whether... in its view...

the court should reconsider its ruling that civilians, who accompany the armed forces overseas, may be tried in military courts. The Justice Department was given 15 days in which to submit a brief. And in still another order, the Supreme Court agreed to decide whether professional football is exempt from the Federal anti-trust laws.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland conferred with President Eisenhower at the White House today. Knowland told reporters afterward that Republican political prospects are on "a definite upturn". And a major reason for this, he said, is "the very fine impact the President's appearances have made in various sections of the country." Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will fly to Pittsburgh, to make what is billed as a major political address.

Adlai Stevenson made no speeches today... but, by means of a couple of conference calls on the telephone, he talked to Democratic leaders in all 48 states. Stevenson asked them to join him, on October 16th, in a nationwide, door-to-door appeal for funds. "We are winning," he said, "but we must not be allowed to run out of gas."

Stevenson issued a statement tonight... outlining a four-point national health program. First, he said, comes a program of comprehensive private health insurance "available on a voluntary basis to all Americans, so that no American will be denied good medical care for financial reasons." Stevenson said, by this, he does not mean "socialized medicine". His second goal, he said, is to see to it that medical research is not held back by lack of funds. And for his third and fourth points, he listed the building of more hospitals and the training of more medical personnel. And to do this, he said, more Federal money must be spent.

The Democratic candidate for vice president... Senator Kefauver... will say in a speech in Wilmington, Delaware tonight that more women will vote Democratic this year because of higher living costs. "The Eisenhower Administration," he will say, "has made certain that we are heading for the most expensive Christmas in the history of the world."

A Senate committee was told today that election laws have failed to keep business and labor groups from pouring millions of dollars into political campaigns. The testimony came from Professor Alexander Heard, a teacher of political science at the University of North Carolina. He submitted charts purporting to show that in the 1952 campaign, most of the big contributions went to Republicans, except for funds reported by labor groups. Heard said that altogether... four years ago... more than 140-million dollars was spent. And the total this time, he said, will be much higher.

The special Senate committee investigating lobbying practices resumed its hearings today. Albert Stoddard, a Boston insurance executive, said that last July he had 160 "phony" telegrams sent to Senators Kennedy and Saltonstall, opposing a certain piece of legislation then before Congress. That legislation, he testified, was an amendment to allow Social Security benefits to go to permanently and totally disabled workers at the age of 50. Mr. Stoddard said he took "full responsibility" for sending the wires, urging the two Massachusetts senators to vote against the amendment. He said he realizes he shouldn't have done it.

Now, let's have that recorded interview... made just a few minutes ago... between Doug Edwards and one Don Larsen, pitcher of rare distinction and hero of the hour.

(tape runs 3:15
ends on cue: "--Thanks a lot for being with us, Don Larsen."

Tomorrow, the World Series moves back to Ebbets Field. The pitchers: Clem Labine for the Dodgers. Either Johnny Cooks or Bob Turkey for the Yanks.

This is Ed Murrow...

I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

DOUGLAS EDWARDS INTERVIEWS DON LARSEN

ON E. R. MURROW SHOW

Monday, October 8, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

EDWARDS: Don Larsen, we'd like to ask you the traditional question first. When did you realize that you had a no hitter going?

LARSEN: Well, I don't know, Doug, when I pitch the game it's hard to keep your eyes off the score board and I sorta noticed it around the sixth inning, I guess, and then as everything went on I got to feeling a little weak in the stomach and in the ninth I knew I was going to try to give it everything I had.

EDWARDS: You didn't really know at that moment that you had a perfect game though, did you?

LARSEN: No.

EDWARDS: Don, you know it was a perfect situation all the afternoon as far as the boys out in the field were concerned. I know your team mates didn't mention the no hitter on the theory that knowing about it would make you nervous. But even after you knew you looked pretty relaxed out there. Did nervousness effect your pitching any?

LARSEN: Around the ninth inning I got pretty nervous I.. I didn't know if my legs were going to make it or not...tension and everything.

EDWARDS: We of course know your tremendous control was a major factor. What kind of pitches were you actually throwing today?

LARSEN: Fast balls, I mixed up with a crossy sliders, and I'd change-up once in a while. Just everything I threw seemed to the right spot and the balls were hit hard the guys were right there.

EDWARDS: Matter of fact the Dodger third base coach, Billy Herman said that he just didn't give any signs today at all because you were doing everything right there was no opportunity whatsoever to tell the boys to steal a base, for one reason, nobody got on. But of course the Dodgers are tough. There must be at least one or two that you were specially careful of. Who were they?

LARSEN: Well, Jackie Robinson, he hangs in there pretty good and there's Duke Snider. Of course all of them you got to respect.

EDWARDS: Don, how about this new delivery you were using with no wind-up, does it help your control?

LARSEN: I think it does. I just started it a couple a weeks ago, we already won the penant and I asked Turner if I could use it and he said all right, and I used it twice against Boston. Of course I'm pretty strange to it myself. After a while I think there's a few variations I'll do it to I'll probably start pumpin' again now and then.

EDWARDS: Do you think this new wind-up fools the hitters any?

LARSEN: Well, I catch a couple of them off balance once in a while I think you got to get ready a little faster, they got to be ready all the time.

EDWARDS: Don, what do you think this perfect game of yours today will do to Brooklyn?

LARSEN: I...

EDWARDS: In other words how about a prediction on the series?

LARSEN: They got ...(mumbled word). We beat them two last year and they followed us right back and beat us three. They ain't gonna give up. You can tell the way Sal Maglie works they ain't gonna quit.

EDWARDS: Well, this means you're not predicting anything very soon then.

LARSEN: No, I wouldn't.

EDWARDS: What happened to that famous baseball today, the one that you threw past Mitchell there?

LARSEN: No, It's layin down in the locker someplace. I hope it's still there when I get back.

EDWARDS: You better put an armed guard out on that one right away, boy, because you certainly don't want to lose it, that's for sure. Don, what are your plans after the season is over?

LARSEN: Well, I imagine I'll be busy a while. I'm gonna go to Boston get my teeth fixed then as soon as that's over I'm going back to California.

EDWARDS: Well, have a very happy wintertime and you certainly have something to be tremendously proud of as you and all baseball and all America know. Thanks a lot for being with us, Don Larsen.

MURROW: Tomorrow the World Series moves back to Ebbets Field. The pitchers, Clem Labine for the Dodgers, either Johnny Kucks or Bob Turley for the Yanks.

Ed. trans. A.G.

WORD FOR THE DAY

I would -

~~This is my first opportunity~~ to say my thanks to two old friends, Charles Collingwood and Larry Lesueur, for sitting in for me during the summer. It so happened that I had the opportunity, and the privilege, of bringing them both into C.B.S. News during the war. Listening to them was considerably more gratifying and illuminating than listening to myself.

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

DOUGLAS EDWARDS INTERVIEWS DON LARSEN

ON E. R. MURROW SHOW

Monday, October 8, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

EDWARDS: Don Larsen, we'd like to ask you the traditional question first. When did you realize that you had a no hitter going?

LARSEN: Well, I don't know, Doug, when I pitch the game it's hard to keep your eyes off the score board and I sorta noticed it around the sixth inning, I guess, and then as everything went on I got to feeling a little weak in the stomach and in the ninth I knew I was going to try to give it everything I had.

EDWARDS: You didn't really know at that moment that you had a perfect game though, did you?

LARSEN: No.

EDWARDS: Don, you know it was a perfect situation all the afternoon as far as the boys out in the field were concerned. I know your team mates didn't mention the no hitter on the theory that knowing about it would make you nervous. But even after you knew you looked pretty relaxed out there. Did nervousness effect your pitching any?

LARSEN: Around the ninth inning I got pretty nervous I.. I didn't know if my legs were going to make it or not...tension and everything.

EDWARDS: We of course know your tremendous control was a major factor. What kind of pitches were you actually throwing today?

LARSEN: Fast balls, I mixed up with a crossy sliders, and I'd change-up once in a while. Just everything I threw seemed to the right spot and the balls were hit hard the guys were right there.

EDWARDS: Matter of fact the Dodger third base coach, Billy Herman said that he just didn't give any signs today at all because you were doing everything right there was no opportunity whatsoever to tell the boys to steal a base, for one reason, nobody got on. But of course the Dodgers are tough. There must be at least one or two that you were specially careful of. Who were they?

LARSEN: Well, Jackie Robinson, he hangs in there pretty good and there's Duke Snider. Of course all of them you got to respect.

EDWARDS: Don, how about this new delivery you were using with no wind-up, does it help your control?

LARSEN: I think it does. I just started it a couple a weeks ago, we already won the penant and I asked Turner if I could use it and he said all right, and I used it twice against Boston. Of course I'm pretty strange to it myself. After a while I think there's a few variations I'll do it to I'll probably start pumpin' again now and then.

EDWARDS: Do you think this new wind-up fools the hitters any?

LARSEN: Well, I catch a couple of them off balance once in a while I think you got to get ready a little faster, they got to be ready all the time.

EDWARDS: Don, what do you think this perfect game of yours today will do to Brooklyn?

LARSEN: I...

EDWARDS: In other words how about a prediction on the series?

LARSEN: They got ...(mumbled word). We beat them two last year and they followed us right back and beat us three. They ain't gonna give up. You can tell the way Sal Maglie works they ain't gonna quit.

EDWARDS: Well, this means you're not predicting anything very soon then.

LARSEN: No, I wouldn't.

EDWARDS: What happened to that famous baseball today, the one that you threw past Mitchell there?

LARSEN: No, It's layin down in the locker someplace. I hope it's still there when I get back.

EDWARDS: You better put an armed guard out on that one right away, boy, because you certainly don't want to lose it, that's for sure. Don, what are your plans after the season is over?

LARSEN: Well, I imagine I'll be busy a while. I'm gonna go to Boston get my teeth fixed then as soon as that's over I'm going back to California.

EDWARDS: Well, have a very happy wintertime and you certainly have something to be tremendously proud of as you and all baseball and all America know. Thanks a lot for being with us, Don Larsen.

MURROW: Tomorrow the World Series moves back to Ebbets Field. The pitchers, Clem Labine for the Dodgers, either Johnny Kucks or Bob Turley for the Yanks.

Ed. trans. A.G.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

The first perfect game in World Series history was pitched today in Yankee Stadium. In defeating the Dogers..2 to nothing.. Don Larsen did more than pitch a no-hitter, he never allowed a Dodger to reach first base on balls or for any other reason whatsoever. (The Yankees now lead in the series, three games out of five.) Until today, there had never been a no-hit game in a World Series, let alone a game in which a team was never able to get on base. In fact, only once before in modern major league baseball..outside the World Series..had there ever been a perfect game. And that was in 1922, when Charley Robertson of the White Sox worked the miracle against Detroit. Today, Larsen retired 27 Dodgers in a row. My colleague, Doug Edwards, has just been talking to him, and we hope to have that interview for you in a few minutes.

Egypt presented her case today before the United Nations Security Council. The Egyptian foreign minister.. Mahmoud Fawze..spoke for an hour and rejected the Anglo-French resolution for settling the Suez dispute. That is the resolution submitted on Friday, urging the Security Council to endorse the London proposals for internationalizing the canal and to ask Egypt to cooperate with the Canal Users Association while negotiating a settlement. Fawzi said the re-introduction of these proposals would be "neither wise nor profitable." He suggested, instead, that the problem be referred to a special negotiating committee. This committee, he said, should take into full consideration the sovereignty of Egypt and the interests of the canal users. It would set up a system of tolls..fair the the canal users..and permit a "reasonable percentage" of the revenue to be set aside for canal improvement. Dr. Fawzi said the most basic principle guiding the committee should be the principle "guaranteeing for all..for all time..freedom of navigation in the canal". The Egyptian proposal for a negotiating committee was promptly supported by Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov. Such a committee, he said, might be made up of the United States, Britain, Russia, France, India and Egypt. He suggested that Yugoslavia and Iran..or Indonesian and Sweden..might be included if a larger membership were desired. Shepilov called on Britain and France to withdraw their joint resolution since, he said, it would not make for progress in settling the Suez problem. Tomorrow, Secretary of State Dulles is expected to set forth the American view.

Fifty-eight ships are reported to have moved through the Suez Canal today. According to Egyptian authorities, this is a record for traffic in a single day.

Britain renewed its offer today to mediate the Arab-Israeli dispute. A Foreign Office statement said the offer of Britain's good offices..extended by Prime Minister Eden last November..still stands. On Cyprus today, a Greek Cypriot youth was convicted of killing a British police sergeant and was sentenced to be hanged. This is the 11th death sentence meted out by the British in 18 months.

The first major sentences were handed down today on the Poznan trials. Two youths convicted of murdering a Polish police officer during the riots of June 28, were sentenced to four and a half years in prison. A third youth.. convicted of the same crime..got four years. All three could have been sentenced to death. It is quite possible that severe penalties might have set off new violence against the Communist state, and that this was a consideration. The judge said that..in reaching his decision..he ignored statements made by the defendants in pre-trial testimony. Some of the accused said their early early confessions had been obtained through torture. The rumor that the mass trials may be called off, remains unconfirmed.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court held its first business session of the new term. In a series of orders, it agreed to review a lower court decision upholding the Subversive Activities Act of New Hampshire and to rule whether congressional committees can force a witness to identify former members of the Communist Party. The Supreme Court denied a hearing to six former draftees, who have challenged Army security risk procedures. But it granted a hearing to Ben Gold, former president of the International Fur and Leather Workers Union. Gold was convicted of lying, when he denied that he was a Communist and a supporter of Communist causes. The Supreme Court also asked the Justice Department whether..in its view.. the court should reconsider its ruling that civilians who accompany the armed forces overseas may be tried in military courts. The Justice Department was given 15 days in which to submit a brief. And in still another order, the Supreme Court agreed to decide whether professional football is exempt from the Federal anti-trust laws.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland conferred with President Eisenhower at the White House today. Knowland told reporters afterward that Republican political prospects are on "a definite upturn." And a major reason for this, he said, is "the very fine impact the President's appearances have made in various sections of the country." Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will fly to Pittsburgh to make what is billed as a major political address.

Adlai Stevenson made no speeches today...but, by means of a couple of conference calls on the telephone, he talked to Democratic leaders in all 48 states. Stevenson asked them to join him on October 16th in a nationwide, door-to-door appeal for funds. "We are winning," he said, "but we must not be allowed to run out of gas."

Stevenson issued a statement tonight..outlining a four - point national health program. First, he said, comes a program of comprehensive private health insurance "available on a voluntary basis to all Americans, so that no American will be denied good medical care for financial reasons." Stevenson said, by this, he does not mean "socialized medicine." His second goal, he said, is to see to it that medical research is not held back by lack of funds. And for ths third and fourth points, he listed the building of more hospitals and the training of more medical personnel. And to do this he said, more Federal money must be spent.

The Democratic candidate for vice president..Senator Kefauver..will say in a speech in Wilmington, Delaware tonight that more women will vote Democratic this year because of higher living costs. "The Eisenhower Administration", he will say, "has made certain that we are heading for the most expensive Christmas in the history of the world."

A Senate committee was told today that election laws have failed to keep business and labor groups from pouring millions of dollars into political campaigns. The testimony came from Professor Alexander Heard, a teacher of political science at the University of North Carolina. He submitted charts purporting to show that in the 1952 campaign, most of the big contributions went to Republicans, except for funds reported by labor groups. Heard said that altogether..four years ago..more than 140-million dollars was spent. And the total this time, he said, will be much higher.

The special Senate committee investigating lobbying practices resumed its hearings today. Albert Stoddard, a Boston insurance executive, said that last July he had 160 "phony" telegrams sent to Senators Kennedy and Saltonstall, opposing a certain piece of legisaltion then before Congress. That legislation, he testified, was an amendment to allow Social Security benefits to go to permanently and totally disabled workers at the age of 50. Mr. Stoddard said he took "full responsibility" for sending the wires urging the two Massachusetts senators to vote against the amendment. He said he realizes he shouldn't have done it.

Now, let's have that recorded interview..made just a few minutes ago... between Doug Edwards and one Don Larsen, pitcher of rare distinction and hero of the hour.

EDWARDS: Don Larsen, we's like to ask you the traditional question first. When did you realize that you had a no hitter going?

LARSEN: Well, I don't know, Doug, when I pitch the game it's hard to keep your eyes off the score board and a sorta noticed it around the sixth inning, I guess, and then as everything went on I got to feeling a little weak in the stomach and in the ninth I knew I was going to try to give it everything I had.

EDWARDS: You didn't really know at the moment that you had a perfect game though, did you?

LARSEN: No.

EDWARDS: Don, you know it was a perfect situation all the afternoon as far as the boys out in the field were concerned. I know your tema mates didn't mention the no hitter on the theory that knowing about it would make you nervous. But even after you knew you looked pretty relaxed out there. Did nervousness effect your pitching any?

LARSEN: Around the ninth inning I got pretty nervous. I...I didn't know if my legs were going to make it or not..tension and everything.

EDWARDS: We of course know your tremendous control was a major factor. What kind of pitches were you actually throwing today?

LARSEN: Fast balls, I mixed up with cross sliders, and I'd change -up once in a while. Just everything I threw seemed to the right spot and the balls were hit hard the guys were right there.

EDWARDS: Matter of fact the Dodger third base coach, Billy Herman said he just didn't give any signs today at all because you were doing everything right there was no opportunity whatsoever to tell the boys to steal a base, for one reason, nobody got on. But of course the Dodgers are tough. There must be at least one or two that you were specially careful of. Who were they?

LARSEN: Well, Jackie Robinson, he hangs in there pretty good and there's Duke Snider. Of course all of them you got to respect.

EDWARDS: Don, how about this new delivery you were using with no wind-up, does it help your control?

LARSEN: I think it does. I just started it a couple a weeks ago, we already won the penant and I asked Turner if I could use it and he said all right, and I used it twice against Boston. Of course I'm pretty strange to it myself. After a while I think there's a few variations I'll do it to I'll probably start pumpin' again now and then.

EDWARDS: Do you think this new wind-up fools the hitters any?

LARSEN: Well, I catch a couple of them off balance once in a while I think you got to ready a little faster, they got to be ready all the time.

EDWARDS: Don, what do you think this perfect game of yours today will do to Brooklyn?

LARSEN: I..

EDWARDS: In other words how about a prediction on the series?

LARSEN: They got..(mumbled word). We beat them two last year and they followed us right back and beat us three. They ain't gonna give up. You can tell the way Sal Maglie workd they ain't gonna quit.

EDWARDS: Well, this means you're not predicting anything very soon then.

LARSEN: No, I wouldn't.

EDWARDS: What happened to that famous baseball today, the one that you threw past Mitchell there?

LARSEN: No, it's layin down in the locker someplace. I hope it's still there when I get back.

EDWARDS: You better put an armed guard out on that one right away, boy, because you certainly don't want to lose it, that's for sure. Don, what are your plans after the season is over?

LARSEN: Well, I imagine I'll be busy a while. I'm gonna go to Boston get my teeth fixed then as soon as that's over I'm going back to California.

EDWARDS: Well, have a very happy wintertime and you certainly have something to be teemendously proud of as you and all baseball and all America know. Thanks a lot for being with us, Don Larsen.

MURROW: Tomorrow, the World Series moves back to Ebbets Field. The pitchers: Clem Labine for the Dodgers. Either Johnny Cooks or Bob Turley for the Yanks.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in an moment with the Word for Today. But firse, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: I would say my thanks to two old friends, Charles Collingwood and Larry LeSueur, for sitting in for me during the summer. It so happened that I had the opportunity and the privilege of bringing them both into C.B.S. News during the war. Listening to them was considerably more gratifying and illuminating than listening to myself.

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 9, 1956

This is the news:

The Dodgers tied up the World Series three-all today... thanks to a single by Jackie Robinson in the tenth, with two out and two on. Robinson's drive went over the head of Enos Slaughter in left field and Junior Gilliam scored, making the final score: Dodgers one, Yankees nothing. Not since 1913 had a series game gone nine innings in a scoreless tie. And in the ten innings, Bob Turley of the Yankees allowed only four hits. Clem Labine of the Dodgers gave up only seven. The final, deciding game will be played tomorrow... again at Ebbets Field. Don Newcombe will pitch for Brooklyn. The Yankee pitcher is expected to be Johnny Kucks.

Secretary of State Dulles today gave the United Nations Security Council the American view on proposals for settling the Suez dispute. Mr. Dulles spoke favorably of the Egyptian plan for setting up a negotiating committee that would take into consideration both the sovereignty of Egypt and the interests of the canal users. He called it a "constructive" proposal. At the same time, Mr. Dulles accused Russia of trying to perpetuate the dispute... of "fishing in troubled waters"... and he said he will support the joint resolution introduced by B ritain and France. The resolution urges the Security Council to endorse the London proposals for international control of the canal. There should be a system, Dulles said, to insure that the canal cannot be used by any country as an instrument of national policy. He called acceptance of this principle "the heart of the problem." (Later... at a news conference... Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov rejected this principle, contending that it would only be a cloak for internationalizing the canal). Mr. Dulles also attacked the proposal Shepilov made yesterday for having membership on the negotiating committee divided among those advocating international control and those opposed. Shepilov replied... at his news conference... that he would not agree to a group not properly balanced. And he accused Mr. Dulles of inconsistency. On this note, the Security Council cut off public debate... and began a round of exploratory talks behind closed doors.

There was more unrest today among British Army reservists, called up because of the Suez crisis. On Malta, an undisclosed number of reservists, belonging to an anti-aircraft regiment, marched on the officers' mess and demanded an opportunity to air their grievances. Their complaint concerned the quality of food and living conditions in their encampment on the island. It is the fourth such demonstration at a British Army base in 10 days.

In Poland today, the Communist government fired three vice-ministers in the ministry of machine industry, and promised a "major reorganization" of the ministry. The department was involved in the trouble that touched off the Poznan riots of June 28. Poland's deputy premier is also reported out.

~~The semi-official Yugoslav news agency said today that "difficulties" still exist between the Communist parties of Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, despite their week-end agreement to restore friendly cooperation. Another report... which is unconfirmed... says that Yugoslavia probably will attend a meeting of all the Communist parties of the satellite states "within a few weeks".~~

In Algeria, rebel guerrillas have killed another four Europeans in hit-and-run raids.

President Eisenhower flew to Pittsburgh this afternoon, to make a political speech on radio and television. The advance text (which has been released) shows the President accusing Adlai Stevenson of "political irresponsibility at its worst." The issue of the military draft, he says, "is no matter of a technical point, to be scored in a political debate. We need the manpower. We cannot pretend that rockets and bombs make brains and hands obsolete." Regarding Democratic charges that the Administration is not interested in the "little fellow", Mr. Eisenhower says, "This amounts to saying that your government has no interest in the people of America. This amounts to a charge that your government has betrayed your trust." The President will also make a new attack on Stevenson's proposal for an end to the testing of hydrogen bombs, calling it a move "unjustified by world realities." So long as we are strong, he will say, we can stay free.

While the President is speaking in Pittsburgh, Adlai Stevenson will be addressing a Democratic rally in Seattle, after making speeches earlier in the day in Idaho and Montana. Stevenson will say that he made his proposal to stop the testing of hydrogen bombs, "without criticism of the Eisenhower Administration." And Stevenson will offer his "complete willingness to accept any better proposal for accomplishing the same purpose." But, he will say, "I can't accept the apparent Administration position that we are powerless to stop this headlong race for extinction." He will also hit at what he calls Mr. Eisenhower's "undue delegation" of presidential responsibilities.

The Atomic Energy Commission has ordered hearings to be held next month in connection with plans for a nuclear power plant near Lagunna Beach, Michigan. Several labor unions... including the United Auto Workers... have demanded that the permit to build the plant be revoked, on grounds that it would be a public hazard. The A.E.C. rejected the demand for immediate suspension of the permit... but scheduled hearings on the safety factor to be held in Washington on November 13th. The plant... of the "fast-breeder" type... would be built by private industry at a cost of 40-million dollars.

The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the right of a private power company to build three dams in Hell's Canyon. The court turned down a request... by an association of public power interests... that the construction permit license granted by the Federal Power Commission be set aside. The license was granted to the Idaho Power Company. The next step will be an appeal... by the advocates of public power... to the Supreme Court.

In Boston today, all eight defendants in the Brink's robbery were sentenced to life imprisonment. The trial lasted nine weeks.

Edward R. Murrow: October ~~XX~~ 9, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

This is one reporter's comment on Suez and the United Nations. Today's argument between Mr. Dulles and Russia's Shepilov really involved two issues. Mr. Dulles thought the idea of a small negotiating committee, originally proposed by Egypt, was constructive and had some merit. But he wanted to be sure that the Canal would not be controlled by a single country, namely Egypt. To that Shepilov said "No". That would mean internationalising the Canal, and Russia would have no part of such a plan.

The second argument was about the composition of the six or eight nation committee, which would try to hammer out some kind of agreement. Shepilov wanted it a "balanced" committee; in other words, ~~[illegible]~~ an equal division between countries ~~[illegible]~~ who support the Russian-Egyptian position, and those who favor the position of the Western Powers. Mr. Dulles would have no part of ~~it~~ that. He said, "rarely has a scheme to perpetuate differences been so candidly revealed." The Russians, who can of course veto any action recommended by the Security Council, obviously want a committee with a built-in deadlock, one that has in effect an advance guarantee that no agreement is possible. In any event, the Suez issue is now firmly before the United Nations, where it might well have been placed more than two months ago. It was brought there by the British and French. It is the third major crisis to come before that organization; the other two were the Berlin blockade and the Korean war. The U.N. didn't solve either of those, but it served as a useful forum. If a settlement agreeable to all parties can be reached as a result of these negotiations, the power and prestige of the United Nations will be greatly increased. For if an agreement is reached - and it's much too early to predict that that will happen - it must include some provision for enforcement - penalties for breaking it.

This whole procedure is something new in United Nations experience. The U.N. has been essentially a debating body, not a negotiating one. It has been regarded as the bar of public opinion before which representatives of governments argue like lawyers at a trial, but without a judge or jury. World opinion was supposed to serve as both judge and jury. The U.N. has no judicial authority, and only vague powers of enforcement. The chief force of the United Nations has been its ability to rally world opinion for or against some nations' policies.

The British and French had no great hopes of reaching a solution through the U.N.; but they wanted to demonstrate, not that they could win a debate, but that all possible peaceful alternatives had been explored. They will not be content unless penalties and action are agreed upon in advance, and are applied automatically in case of violation. If that should be agreed, in whatever form, then the power of the U.N. will have been greatly expanded.

When this crisis arose on July 26th, Britain and France reacted the way nations always have, when their vital interests are threatened - began to talk of force, to move troops and warships. Our vital interests were not so closely threatened. Mr. Dulles exercised restraint; the Russians supported Egypt; the Indians tried to compromise; and Western unity was badly shaken. There was of course another reason the British and French didn't move in those first few weeks. They did not have the men and the metal in position to strike quickly. During this cooling off period, public opinion in both countries began to have sober second thoughts - the Canal Users Association was fabricated in great haste, and with considerable reluctance - no one appearing to be sure just what it could or should do.

During this period, President Nasser managed to keep the Canal functioning, maintained public order. There was no violence against Western nationals or property, which might have provoked intervention. And the world watched the spectacle of a poverty-stricken nation of twenty-three million defying the majority of the great maritime nations of the world. But his defiance was echoed by the Soviet Union, and no one could be sure where violence once started would end.

Now the Egyptians and the Russians have agreed to negotiate. The Indians will continue to try to find middle ground. It is a testing time not only for the United Nations, but for the Egyptians, for the Russians and for Western unity.

Colonel Nasser's ambitions may not long be satisfied by a reasonable compromise. If he makes an agreement and breaks it, the West wants a prior undertaking to knock him in the head. Western unity may be subjected to even greater strains. But the one massive fact that emerges is that the Russians, after two hundred years of trying, have secured a position of power and influence in the Middle East. This means that the conflict between the forces of freedom and communism will continue there and elsewhere with increasing intensity.

George Bryan —

Word for Today

There is some ~~hesitancy~~ Reluctance on the part of the West to accept the word of Colonel Nasser that he will keep the Suez Canal open to the ships of all nations. The West wants insurance of this in the form of guarantees. It was the Russian... Litvinov... who said, "Peace and security cannot be organized on the shifting sands of verbal promises and declarations."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

The Dodgers tied up the World Series three-all today thanks to a single by Jackie Robinson in the tenth, with two out and two on.

Robinson's drive went over the head of Enos Slaughter in left field and Junior Gilliam scored, making the final score: Dodgers one, Yankees nothing. Not since 1913 had a series game gone nine innings in a scoreless tie. And in the ten innings, Bob Turley of the Yankees allowed only four hits. Clem Labine of the Dodgers gave up only seven. The final, eciding fame will be played tomorrow, again at Ebbets Field. Don Newcombe will pitch for Brooklyn. The Yankee pitcher is expected to be Johnny Kucks.

Secretary of State Dulles today gave the United Nations Security Council the American view on proposals for settling the Suez dispute. Mr. Dulles spoke favorably of the Egyptian plan for settling up a negotiating committee that would take into consideration both the sovereignty of Egypt and the interests of the canal users. He call d it a "constructive" proposal. At the same time, Mr. Dulles accused Russia of trying to perpetuate the dispute ..of "fishing in troubled waters".. and he said he will support the joint resolution introduced by Britain and France. The resolution urges the Security Council to endorse the London proposals for international control of the canal. There should be a system, Dulles said, to insure that the canal cannot be used by any country as an instrument of national policy. He called acceptance of this principle "the heart of the problem" (Later ..at a news conference.. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov rejected this principle, contending that it would only be a cloak for internationalizing the canal.) Mr. Dulles also attacked the proposal Shepilov made yesterday for having memberhsip on the negotiating committee divided among those advocating international control and those opposed. Shepilov replied..at his news conference..that he would not agree to agroup not properly balanced. And he accused Mr. Dulles of inconsistency. On this note, the Security Council cut off public debate and began a round of exploratory talks behind closed doors.

There was more unrest today among British Army reservists called up because of the Suez crisis. On Malta, an undisclosed number of reservists belonging to an anti-aircraft regiment marched on the officers' mess and demanded an opportunity to air their grievances. Their complaint concerned the quality of food and living conditions in their encampment on the island. It is the fourth such demonstrationn at a British Army base in 10 days.

In Poland today, the Communist government fired three vice-ministers in the ministry of machine industry and promised a "major reorganization" of the ministry. The department was involved in the trouble that touched off the Poznan riots of June 28. Poland's deputy premier is also reported out.

In Algeria, rebel guerrillas have killed another four Europeans in hit-and run raids.

President Eisenhower flew to Pittsburgh this afternoon to make a political speech on radio and television. The advance text (which has been released) shows the President accusing Adlai Stevenson of "political irresponsibility at its worst." The issue of the military draft, he says, "is no matter of a technical point to be scored in a political debate. We need the manpower. We cannot pretend that rockets and bombs make brains and hands obsolete." Regarding Democratic charges that the Administration is not interested in the "little fellow", Mr. Eisenhower says, "This amounts to saying that your government has no interest in the people of America. This amounts to a charge that your government has betrayed your trust." The President will also make a new attack on Stevenson's proposal for an end to the testing of hydrogen bombs, calling it a move "unjustified by world realities." So long as we are strong, he will say, we can stay free.

While the President is speaking in Pittsburgh, Adlai Stevenson will be addressing a Democratic rally in Seattle, after making speeches earlier in the day in Idaho and Montana. Stevenson will say that he made his proposal to stop the testing of hydrogen bombs "without criticism of the Eisenhower Administaation." And Stevenson will offer his "complete willingness to accept any better proposal for accomplishing the same purpose." But, he will say, "I can't accept the apparent Administration position that we are powerless to stop the headlong race for extinction." He will also hit at what he calls Mr. Eisenhower's "undue delegation" of presidential responsibilites.

The Unites States Court of Appeals today upheld the right of a private power company to build three dams in Hell's Canyon. The Court turned down a request by an association of public power interest that the construction license granted by the Federal Power Commission be set aside. The license was granted to the Idaho Power Company. The next step will be an appeal..by the advocates of public power..to the Supreme Court.

In Boston today, all eight defendants in the Brink's robbery were sentenced to life imprisonment. The trial lasted nine weeks.

This is one reporter's comment on Suez and the United Nations.

Today's argument between Mr. Dulles and Russia's Shepilov really involved two issues. Mr. Dulles thought the idea of a small negotiating committee, originally proposed by Egypt, was constructive and had some merit. But he wanted to be sure that the Canal would not be controlled by a single country, namely Egypt. To that Shepilov said "No". That would mean internationalising the Canal, and Russia would have no part of such a plan.

The second argument was about the composition of the six or eight nation committee which would try to hammer out some kind of agreement. Shepilov wanted it a "balanced" committee; in other words, an equal division between countries who support the Russian-Egyptian position, and those who faver the position of the Western Powers. Mr. Dulles would have no part of that. He said, "rarely has a scheme to perpetuate differences been so candidly revealed" The Russians who can of course veto any action recommended by the Security Council, obviously want a committee with a built-in deadlock, one that has in effect an advance guarantee that no agreement is possible. In any event, the Suez issue is now firmly before the United Nations, where it might well have been placed more than two months ago. It was brought there by the British and French. It is the third major crisis to come before that organization; the other two were the Berlin blockade and the Korean war. The U.N. didn't solve either of those, but it served as a useful forum. If a settlement agreeable to all parties can be reached as a result of these negotiations, the power and prestige of the United Nations will be greatly increased. For if an agreement is reached -- and it's much too early to predict that that will happen - it must include some provision for enforcement - penalties for breaking it.

This whole procedure is something new in United Nations experience. The U.N. has been essentially a debating body, not a negotiating one. It has been regarded as the bar of public opinion before which representatives of governments argue like lawyers at a trial, but without a judge and jury. World opinion was supposed to serve as both judge and jury. The U.N. has no judicial authority, and only vague powers of enforcemtnt. The chief force of the United Nations has been its ability to rally world opinion for or against some nation's policies.

The British and French had no great hopes of reaching a solution through the U.N.; but they wanted to demonstrate, not that they could win a debate, but that all possible peaceful alterntaives had been explored. They will not be content unless penalties and action are agreed upon in advance, and are applied automatically in case of violation. If that should be agreed, in whatever form, then the power of the U.N. will have been greatly expanded.

When this crisis arose on July 26th, Britain and France reacted the way nations always have when their vital interests are threatened - began to talk of force, to move troops and warships. Our vital interests were not so closely threatened. Mr. Dulles exercised restraint; the Russians supported Egypt; and the Indians tried to compromise; and Western unity was badly shaken. There was of course another reason the British and French didn't move in those first few weeks. They did not have the men and the metal in position to strike quickly. During this colling off period, pulbic opinion in both countries began to have sober second thoughts - the Canal Users Association was fabricated in great haste, and with considerable reluctance - no one appearing to be sure just what it could or should do.

During this period, President Nasser managed to keep the Canal functioning maintained public order. There was no violence against Western nationals or property, which might have provoked intervention. And the world watched the spectacle of a poverty-stricken nation of twenty-three million defying the majority of the great maritime nations of the world. But his defiance was echoed by the Soviet Union, and no one could be sure where violence once started would end.

Now the Egyptians and the Russians have agreed to negotiate. The Indians will continue to try to find middle ground. It is a testing time not only for the United Nations. but for the Egyptians, for the Russians and for Western unity.

Colonel Nasser's ambitions may not long be satisfied by a reasonable compromise. If he makes an agreement and breaks it, the West wants a prior undertaking to knock him in the head. Western unity may be subjected to even greater strains. But the one massive fact that emerges is that the Russians, after two hundred years of trying, have secured a position of power and influence in the Middle East. This means that the conflict between the forces of freedom and Communism will continue and there and elsewhere with increasing intensity.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a momett with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is some reluctance on the part of the West to accept the word of Colonel Nasser that he will keep the Suez Canal open to the ships of all nations. The West wants insurance of this in the form of guarantees. Is was the Russian..Litvinov..who said, "Peace and security cannot be organized on the shifting sands of verbal promises and declarations."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 10, 1956

This is the news:

The Dodgers are undone. ~~Faced with the superb pitching of Johnny~~ Cooks ~~Kucks,~~ they lost the ~~seventh and last game of the World Series~~ 9 to 0. — ~~And, with it, the championship of the world.~~ Cooks ~~Kucks allowed only three~~ hits. ~~Yogi Berra hit a home run the first two times he came to bat,~~ each time with a man on base. ~~Elston Howard got another homer off~~ Don Newcombe in the ~~fourth,~~ and Newcombe left ~~the~~ game. And then in the seventh, ~~Bill Skowron got a grand-slammer with three on--something that has happened only five other times in World Series history.~~ The ~~Dodgers~~ Dodgers They leave tomorrow for a tour of Japan.

The British crown colony of Hong Kong was torn today by the worst rioting in thirty years. At least two persons were killed and 60 injured. Reuthers news service, sets the death toll unofficially at five. The incident began as an outgrowth of the Nationalist "double-10" holiday, marking the 45th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Republic.

→

A government official opposed the posting of Nationalist flags in a housing project for refugees ~~in~~ from Red China. My colleague, Guy Searls, cables me that this official was Chinese, not British. / There was a disturbance. The trouble spread... and soon thousands of Chinese were demonstrating in the streets, hurling stones and bottles, and attacking a police station. Searls reports that he saw a bakery set on fire. For the first 18 hours, police tried to stop the demonstrations (and the looting) with tear gas. / Searls himself was caught by a charge of tear gas, and once he was rescued from stoning by the appearance of a British jeep. Then tonight, in the mainland suburb of Kowloon, the British constabulary opened fire. / It is not clear whether the two to five persons reported dead died as the result of this action. / At last report, the riots were continuing... but not in the foreign residential area.

At United Nations headquarters today, there were more closed door talks between Secretary General Hammarskjold and the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France... in search of a formula for settling the Suez dispute. / British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd has knocked down a report that Britain is willing to take a "softer" position. / That is, that Britain would agree to management of the canal by the Egyptians, under the supervision of an international board. Lloyd said, "There is no new British plan." He said that he and French Foreign Minister Pineau find themselves "in complete agreement". They will continue to work together for a solution on the basis of the London proposals calling for international control. There were indications, however, that the British position may now be more flexible as regards actual operation of the canal. Secretary of State Dulles met today with India's roving ambassador, Krishna Menon. Menon recently conferred with President Nasser, and there have been reports that he brought a compromise proposal. Nothing official on that. Tomorrow, the Security Council will meet in private session, with a possibility of an open session again on Friday.

→

The United States joined Britain and France today in calling on Russia to fulfill its agreement for reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections. The American note referred to the promise Russia made at the "summit meeting" in Geneva and said: "The division of Germany must be brought to an end in the interests... not only of the Germans themselves... but of all nations anxious to safeguard the peace."

A Yugoslav army mission flew to Russia today to make a tour of Soviet armament plants. This is the first military mission Yugoslavia has sent to Moscow since Marshal Tito broke with the Cominform in 1948. And it comes only five days after Tito's conference with Soviet leaders. ~~As the Yugoslav mission flew to Russia, a delegation of the Young Communist League left Moscow by plane for Belgrade.~~

~~Marshal Tito conferred with a delegation of Italian communists today in Belgrade.~~

~~Israel tonight accused Jordan of "absolute irresponsibility" in its duty to maintain peace along their common border. The Israeli foreign ministry said that two minelayers laborers killed yesterday were victims of infiltrators from Jordan.~~

~~Jordan received a new shipment of arms today from Iraq. Last month, five Arab states... including Iraq... agreed to strengthen the Jordanian frontier against what they called "Israeli aggression".~~

Nearly half the returns have come in from the general election yesterday in Alaska. The returns show the Democrats ahead in 30 of the 39 contests for territorial offices

The Senate elections subcommittee was told today that thousands of qualified Negroes in Louisiana are being denied their right to vote "purely because of their race." The testimony came from Warren Olney, an assistant attorney general in the Justice Department. A spokesman for the Louisiana Association of Citizens Councils called the statement "an effort to influence the Negro vote nationally for the Republican Party."

The Democratic national chairman... Paul Butler... told the subcommittee ~~today that some leading Republican businessmen are pressuring their employes for campaign contributions. Butler said~~ that... as of October first... the Democrats were almost 106-thousand dollars in the red. Republican National Chairman Hall testified that... as of that date... there was more than 500-thousand dollars in the Republican treasury.

In a speech in Portland, Oregon, tonight, Adlai Stevenson will answer President Eisenhower's charge last night of "political irresponsibility". "I will merely remind you," he will say, "that it was the Democrats who voted the Air Force almost a billion dollars, over the opposition of the President Eisenhower's budget-balancers."

President Eisenhower said today that his administration is building a career civil service "dedicated to carrying out the policies and programs of the administration in office, regardless of political considerations." He said this in a statement to a union of government employes.

Mr. Eisenhower will hold his weekly news conference tomorrow.

The Supreme Court today ordered a new trial for five Communist leaders convicted of conspiracy to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government. The five... including Pennsylvania Communist leader Steve Nelson... were tried in the United States district court in Pittsburgh in 1953. The Justice Department had asked the Supreme Court to order a hearing to determine the veracity of one of the witnesses in that trial. Instead, it ordered the case remanded to the district court for re-trial.

Edward R. Murrow: October 10, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

With less than four weeks to go, the political campaign seems to this reporter to have failed to develop any sizeable and deep division in national thinking, at least not the kind that normally marks a campaign in a two-party system. Two subjects have been repeatedly talked about - the draft and the hydrogen bomb - and they certainly are not party issues, if they can be called issues at all. Stevenson wasn't promising to end the draft or even to end hydrogen bomb tests. He was inexpensively lining himself up on the side of the angels, which President Eisenhower, who also is for the angels, naturally resented.

But by giving these topics so much time the candidates have avoided talking about better ones. Maybe they don't have them, or maybe they don't think the country wants to hear about them.

Mr. Stevenson did raise a real issue, the school crisis, but party lines in Congress had not been drawn closely enough on the school bills to make this an exclusive Democratic cause. He also raised a live subject last night in charging that the Administration is not pushing its atoms for peace program. It is leaving it to private industry to experiment with power reactors, which is too expensive for industry to do. ~~The charge~~ originated with the Princeton physicist Dr. Smythe, former member of the Atomic Energy Commission, who has a most discouraging article about it in the current issue of Foreign Affairs. But the subject is much too technical for campaign uses, and will hardly change votes. However, it is more immediate and tangible than the pie-in-the-skies promise that Stevenson made that people on retiring should keep the standard of life they had while working; or Nixon's vision of the four-day week.

A two-party system ought to develop two distinct political philosophies. Only one philosophical detail is apparent in this campaign. The Democrats still think of themselves as the party of the people, running against a party of the special interests. And the Republicans still think of themselves as serving all the people best by assuring business stable and conservative conditions. But other basic differences of the past are bygones. For example, the Republicans by now have accepted and expanded the social security system installed during Democratic administrations. And Democrats no longer inveigh against tariffs as such.

On questions of foreign policy the two parties are certainly more united than divided. So far the campaign has failed to produce a single effective foreign issue. The Democrats have tried to exploit the decline of American prestige abroad. But either audiences don't respond, or the Democrats don't make it clear how they would do things differently. A devastating attack might be made just now on the Administration's handling of the Suez crisis, which has whipped up more anti-American feeling in Europe than has existed since the war. But Mr. Stevenson set a precedent by declining to talk about Suez while Secretary Dulles was in the midst of the crisis.

One reason we are not seeing a full-blooded two-party campaign is that the race is between the Democratic party on the one hand and one man on the other, the man being Eisenhower. It is now generally accepted that in a straight fight between the two parties the Republicans would be outnumbered and beaten. The Democrats are concentrating their efforts on winning back the members of their party and the independents who voted for Eisenhower in '52. And Republicans are concentrating on President Eisenhower. It is true that Mr. Eisenhower tried to create a new kind of Republican Party bearing the imprint of his middle-of-the-road thinking. But it is still a tender plant, not strong enough to turn this campaign into a two-party fight. Not only that, the political old-timers predict that if Eisenhower wins, his influence will inevitably fade away during his last term because he can't succeed himself. That means that the influence of someone else will correspondingly rise. This someone else presumably would be Nixon. Nixon for the present is an Eisenhower Republican. Only time can tell what kind of Republican he would be by 1960. But even this consideration is not a campaign issue, though it seems likely to change some votes.

As the campaign goes into the final weeks, the strategy of both sides is fairly clear. The Democrats to win must carry the solid South and the border states, and pick up a hundred electoral votes in the rest of the country. If they carry the South, and then sweep the Pacific coast, they would need only Pennsylvania, Michigan and Minnesota, or some similar combination, to get in. So they are focussing on the states with large urban populations, and are plugging local issues and building up their local political machinery. In Wayne County, Michigan, where Detroit is situated, registrations are 100,000 more than in '52, which is a notable Democratic success achieved with labor union help. This is real party work. And it is the party that President Eisenhower has to beat. He knows it. His appearances and speeches will be calculated to stem these party gains, and to hold his Democratic and independent adherents, as well as to get out the Republican vote.

Such a campaign will not produce an interesting campaign philosophically.

But there will be plenty of excitement and Promises - by election day.

George Bryan. -

Word for Today

The promise is no stranger to politics, and perhaps experience should teach us to view such promises with a jaundiced eye. Will Rogers insisted, "All politics is Apple Sauce." Yet P.T. Barnum said, "More persons, on the whole, are humbugged by believing in nothing, than in believing in too much." (And P.T. Barnum was a humbugger himself).

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

This is the news:

The Dodgers are undone --nine to nothing. They leave tomorrow for a tour of Japan.

The British crown colony of Hong Kong was torn today by the worst rioting in thirty years. At least two persons were killed and 60 injured. Reuthers news service sets the death toll unofficially at five. The incident began as an outgrowth of the Nationalist "double-10" holiday, marking the 45th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Republic.

A government official opposed the posting of the Nationalist flags in a housing project for refugees from Red China. My colleague, Guy Searls, cables me that this official was Chinese, not British. There was a disturbance. The trouble spread and soon thousands of Chinese were demonstrating in the streets, hulling stones and bottles, and attacking a police station. Searls reports that he saw a bakery set on fire. For the first 18 hours, police tried to stop the demonstration (and the looting) with tear gas. Searls himself was caught by a charge of tear gas, and once he was rescued from stoning by the appearance of a British jeep. Then tonight, in the mainland suburb of Kowloon, the British constabulary opened fire. It is not clear whether the two to five persons reported dead died ad the result of this action. At last report, the riots were continuint but not in the foreign residential ares.

At United Nations headquarters today, there were more closed door talks between Secretary General Hammarskjold and the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France in search of a formula for settling the Suez dispute. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd had knocked down a report that Britain is willing to take a "softer" position. That is, that Britain would agree to management of the canal by the Egyptians, under the supervision of an international board. Lloyd said, "There is no new British plan." He said that he and French Foreign Minister Pineau find themse ves "in complete agreement". They will continue to work together for a solution on the basis of the London proposals calling for international control. There were indications, however, that the British position may now be more flexible as regards actual operation of the canal. Secretary of State Dulles met today with India's roving ambassador, Krishna Menon. Menon recently conferred with President Nasser, and there have been reports that he brought a compromise proposal. Nothing official on that. Tomorrow, the Security Council will meet in private session, with a possibility of an open session again on Friday.

The United States joined Britain and France today in calling on Russia to fulfill its agreement for reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections. The American note referred to the promise Russia made at the "summit meeting" in Geneva and said: "the division of Germany must be brought to an end in the interests..not only of the Germans themselves..but of all nations anxious to safeguard the peace."

A Yugoslav army mission flew to Russia today to make a tour of Soviet armament plants. This is the first military mission Yugoslavia has sent to Moscow since Marshal Tito broke with the Cominform in 1948. And it comes only five days after Tito's conference with Soviet leaders.

Nearly half the returns have come in from the general election yesterday in Alaska. The returns show the Democrats ahead in 30 of the 39 contests for territorial offices.

The Senate elections subcommittee was told today that thousands of qualified Negroes in Louisiana are being denied their right to vote "purely because of their race." The testimony came from Warren Olney, an assistant attorney general in the Justice Department. A spokesman for the Louisiana

Association of Citizens Councils called the statement "an effort to influence the Negro vote nationally for the Republican Party."

The Democratic national chairman Paul Butler told the subcommittee that as of October first the Democrats were almost 106-thousand dollars in the red. Republican National Chairman Hall testified that as of that date there was more than 500-thousand dollars in the Republican treasury.

In a speech in Portland, Oregon, tonight, Adlai Stevenson will answer President Eisenhower's charge last night of "political irresponsibility." "I will merely remind you," he will say, "that it was the Democrats who voted the Air Force almost a billion dollars over the opposition of the President Eisenhower's budget-balancers."

President Eisenhower said today that his administration is building a career civil service "dedicated to carrying out the policies and programs of the administration in office, regardless of political considerations."He said this in a statement to a union of government employes.

Mr. Eisenhower will hold his weekly news conference tomorrow.

With less than four weeks to go, the political campaign seems to this reporter to have failed to develop any sizeable and deep division in national thinking, at least not the kind that normally marks a campaign in a two-party system. Two subjects have been repeatedly talked about - the draft and the hydrogen bomb - and they certainly are not party issues, if they can be called issues at all. Stevenson wasn't promising to end the draft or even to end hydrogen bomb tests. He was inexpensively lining himself up on the side of the angels, which President Eisenhower, who is also for the angles, naturally resented.

But by giving these topics so much time, the candidates have avoided talking about better ones. Maybe they don't have them, or maybe they don't think the country wants to hear bout them.

Mr. Stevenson did raise a real issue, the school crisis, but party lines in Congress had not been drawn closely enough on the school bills to make this an exclusive Democratic cause. He also raised a live subject last night in charging that the Administration is not pushing its atoms for peace program. It is leaving it to private industry to experiment with power reactors, which is too expensive for industry to do. But th subject is much too technical for campaign uses, and will hardly change votes. However, it is more immediate and tangible than the pie-in-the-skies promise that Setvenson made that people on retiring should keep hhe standard of life they had while working; or Nixon's vision of the four-day week.

A two-party system ought to develop two distinct political philosophies. Only one philosophical detail is apparent in this campaign. The Democrats still think of themselves as the party of the people, running against a party of the special interests. And the Republicans still think of themselves as serving all the people best by assuring business stable and conservative conditions. But other basic differences of the past are bygones. For example The Republicans by now have accepted and expanded the social security system installed during Democtatic administrations. And Democrats no longer inveigh against tariffs as such.

On questions of foreign policy the two parties are certainly more united than divided. So far the campaign has failed to produce a single effective foreign issue. The Democrats have tried to exploit the decline of American prestige abroad. But either audiences don'r respond, or the Democrats don't make it clear how they dould do things differently. A devastating attack might be made just now on the Administration's handling of the Suez crisis, which has whipped up more anti-American feeling in Europe than has existed since the war. But Mr. Stevenson set a precident by declining to talk about Suez while Secretary Dulles was in the midst of the cirsis.

One reason we are not seeing a full-blooded two-party campaign is that the race is between the Democratic party on the one hand and one man on the other, the man being Eisenhower. It is not generally accepted that in a straight fight between the two parties the Republicans would be outnumbered and beaten. The Democrats are concentrating their efforts on winning back the members of their party and the independents who voted for Eisenhower in '52. And Republicans are concentrating on President Eisenhower. It is true that Mr. Eisenhower tried to create a new kind of Republican Party bearing the imprint of his middle-of-the-road thinking. But it is still the tender plant, not strong enough to turn this campaign into a two-party fight. Not only that, the political old-timers predict that if Eisenhower wins, his influence will inevitably fade away during his last term because he can't succeed himself. That means that the influence of someone else will correspondingly rise. This someone else presumably would be Nixon. Nixon for the present is an Eisenhower Republican. Only time can tell what kind of Republican he would be by 1960. But even this consideration is not a campaign issue, though it seems likely to change some votes.

As the campaign goes into the final weeks, the strategy of both sides is fairly clear. The Democrats to win, must carry the solid south and the border states, and pick up a hundred electoral votes in the rest of the country. If they carry the South, and then sweep the Pacific coast, they would need only Pennsylvania, Michigan and Minnesota, or some similar combination to get in. So they are focussing on the states with large urban populations, and are plugging local issues and building up their local political machinery. In Wayne County, Michigan, where Detroit is situated, registrations are 100,000 more than in '52, which is a notable Democratic success achieved with labor union help. This is real party work. And it is the party that President Eisenhower has to beat. He knows it. His appearances and speeches will be calculated to stem these party gains, and to hold his Democratic and independent adherents, as well as to get out the Republican vote.

Such a campaign will not produce an interesting campaign philosophically. But there will be plenty of excitement and promises by election day.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The promise is no stranger to politics, and perhaps experience should teach us to view such promises with a jaundiceed eye. Will Rogers insisted, "All politics is Apple Sauce." Yet P. T. Barnum said, "More persons, on the whole, are humbugged by believing in nothing, than in believing in too much." (And P. T. Barnum was a humbugger himself.)

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 11, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today said that he would make a personal appearance before the United Nations, if he thought that would further a just and peaceful settlement of the Suez dispute. / Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference it is "an error" to say that American policy regarding Suez "has not been clear and firm." / He said that ever since Egypt seized the canal on July 26, the United States has been guided by four principles. These principles, he said, are respect for Egyptian sovereignty, insistence on efficient operation of the canal, insistence that it never be operated for the political purposes of any single country, and a desire that Egypt shall have a fair share of the revenue from the canal. / While sticking to these basic principles, Mr. Eisenhower said, "it was never implied that these details were not negotiable."

He said any dissatisfaction with American policy in Britain and France is due to a misunderstanding, and he hopes it will be cleared up soon.

At the United Nations today, the foreign ministers of five countries... including Egypt... continued their secret talks on the Suez problem. My colleague, Larry Lesueur, has been at United Nations headquarters all day covering that story. Larry, what kind of reaction has there been to the President's offer to go to the United Nations, if that will help?

Lesueur for 4:30

Most of President Eisenhower's news conference was taken up with politics. A reporter brought up Adlai Stevenson's proposals regarding a discontinuance of hydrogen bomb tests and the possibility of ending the draft. The reporter wanted to know if reports were true... that Republican strategists would have made the same proposals if Stevenson had not made them first. The President said no one had made such a suggestion to him concerning the draft. He said, "You are telling me things about my adminsitration that I never heard of." And he added: "Now I tell you frankly, I have said my last words on these subjects. Enough has been said about them for the purposes of a political campaign."

Mr. Eisenhower asserted that management of America's internal affairs is the main issue of the campaign---no one is against peace. For one thing, he said, the Democrats do not seem particularly concerned with the "sound dollar". He said if the country is going to continue to prosper, it must maintain sound dollars; it can't be done by raising expenditures and cutting taxes. He denied that he had "written off" the South... and said he will have another thorough physical examination before the end of the month. He conceded that he cannot look to Senators Jenner, McCarthy and Malone for much help in putting over his legislative program.

Later in the day, Mr. Eisenhower issued a statement announcing a stepped up program for helping farmers in the southwestern states, suffering from drought. And he said he plans a personal visit to the drought area.

A prominent Negro congressman... Representative Adam Clayton Powell... announced today that he will support President Eisenhower in the current campaign. Powell is a Democrat from New York. In 1952 he supported Stevenson. Powell made his announcement after a conference with the President. He said Mr. Eisenhower had promised, if re-elected, to press for legislation to prevent discrimination against Negro voters.

Mr. Stevenson is campaigning in California tonight. In a speech in Oakland, he will accuse the Republicans of an election-year "pretense" of liberalism. Stevenson will also attack President Eisenhower's statement... made recently in a news conference... that American prestige abroad "has never been higher." This, Stevenson charges, is manifestly untrue.

Senator Kefauver is campaigning in the Midwest, where he is accusing the Eisenhower Administration of political expediency. The soil bank, Kefauver says, "was trimmed to fit the political purposes of the administration in this election year."

Vice President Nixon will be speaking tonight in Boulder, Colorado. Mr. Nixon has been looking over the promises made by the Democrats. He will say that if these promises are all kept, it would mean 320 dollars in additional taxes a year for every family of four, or 15-billion dollars altogether.

Israel said tonight that there will be peace on the Jordan frontier, if Jordan will put a stop to its armed attacks against Israel. The Israeli foreign office said its raid last night on a Jordanian police post was in reprisal for "murderous assaults" on Israeli citizens. The foreign office cited the murder of five Israelis in an ambush on October 1st and the ~~slaying~~ killing... by Arab infiltrators... of two Israeli farm workers on October 9th. It was the second reprisal raid into Jordan in two weeks. Thirty-eight Jordanian troops were killed in a similar ~~foray~~ action on September 25th. The Jordanian police headquarters attacked last night was destroyed — in what is called the heaviest fighting since the end of full-scale hostilities in 1948. The action continued through the night, and U.N. observers have counted 48 Jordanian dead. Other, unofficial reports say more than a hundred Jordanians died in the attack. Israel sets its own losses at 18 dead and 12 wounded.

In Amman, King Hussein of Jordan called an emergency meeting of his cabinet. At United Nations headquarters... here in New York.... the Jordanian ambassador said Jordan may ask for a special session of the Security Council. If the council fails to stop Israel, he said, then

→

Jordan will have to use similar force.

In Cairo, President Nasser held an urgent conference with the Jordanian foreign minister. The foreign minister said afterward that Nasser promised "immediate effective measures" to help Jordan defend itself from Israeli attack. He said this help would take the form of stepped up arms shipments and financial aid.

An American citizen... Mary Frances Hagan... was convicted of espionage today by an Israeli court. Miss Hagan, of Huntington, West Virginia, was found guilty of spying for Syria... and sentenced to serve a year in prison.

So far, no trace has been found of that military transport plane, reported missing almost 24 hours ago on a flight from England to the Azores. There are 59 American servicemen on the aircraft, including a nine-man Navy crew. The 50 passengers are members of the 307th Bomber Wing, based at Lincoln, Nebraska. The Navy says that tomorrow the aircraft carrier Antietam and six destroyers will join the search.

In Hong Kong, the Chinese riots are apparently being brought under control. British troops are enforcing a curfew, after two days of violence in which at least 44 persons died.

Britain's first operational atomic-bomb was tested successfully today in the Australian desert. The bomb was released from a jet aircraft at great height, and exploded with a force of more than 10-thousand tons of T.N.T.

George Bryan-

Word for Today

The secret talks at United Nations headquarters are not meeting with ~~instantaneous~~ much success. This could be cause for disappointment, but Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "The great thing is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving." And Sherwood Anderson once remarked, "Nothing approaching accomplishment grows wearisome."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - LARRY LE SUEUR

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: At the United Nations today, the Foreign Ministers of five countries, including Egypt, continued their secret talks on the Suez problem. My colleague, Larry Le Sueur, has been at United Nations headquarters all day covering that story. Larry, what kind of a reaction has there been to the President's offer to go to the United Nations if that will help?

LE SUEUR: Nobody here has really taken President Eisenhower's offer to come to the UN on the Suez crisis seriously. They think he made the offer in answer to a reporter's loaded question. He did say he would come if he thought it would do any good, but it's clear that even a visit from the President of the United States would not be particularly useful now unless the other heads of states decided to come too.

At the moment, of course, all of the nations on the UN Council which are directly concerned are represented by their Foreign Ministers; and the meetings now taking place are unrivalled in interest and drama since the early days of the Korean war. For the third day running today, the Foreign Ministers of Britain and France have been closeted with the Foreign Minister of Egypt in the sanctity of the UN Secretary General's 38th floor office; and only Mr. Dag Hammarksjold knows what's been going on in those private three-power talks, and he won't tell.

But we do know the deadlock continues as negotiations are reaching a crucial state. Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, Christian Pineau of France and Mahmoud Fawzi of Egypt met again for three hours this afternoon and as far as we know, they got nowhere. They just left here - they'll meet again tomorrow morning.

Today, the full eleven nation Security Council met

again in secret session. There had been hopes that there would be a public session tomorrow, at least to give Israel and the seven other Arab states a chance to state their views on the Canal question, where Israel of course, has complained bitterly, to no avail, about the fact that her ships have been blockaded from the Canal by Egypt ever since the Palestine war ended,--Since Egypt contends, after seven years, that a state of war still continues. But the seven attending Foreign Ministers on the Security Council de (sic) decided to postpone that public show in favor of another secret session in the hopes that the intense private talks between Egypt and the French and British might come up with some solution, or at least lay the basis on which a solution could be worked out.

The crux of this deadlock seems to be over just what guarantees user nations could get over the possibilities that their rights might be violated. This is what Sec. of State Dulles referred to as the "insultation of the Canal against the politics of any one nation." You may have noticed then that Mr. Dulles did not use the word "internationalization" of the Canal, for the Egyptians don't like that word. And although the British and French originally demanded a form of internationalization in a control and management of the Canal, there are many observers here who believe that these two nations might be content with absolute guarantees that their freedom of passage would not be violated; perhaps by a kind of international watch-dog team of inspectors, armed with automatic sanctions against Egypt if the usership were interfered with.

But there's also reason to believe that the Egyptians consider a plan of automatic punishment against them with considerable distaste, as a threat to their national sovereignty.

Events today with Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Fawzi, and while everything he said was on the record, he was careful to say nothing in so many words. Although he did point out that a solution was still being sought in every direction. But when I asked him if he would be happy if no solution were found, and the Security Council were forced to come to a vote on the original British-French demand for the Canal's re-internationalization, Mr. Fawzi merely murmured that the British-French demand was unrealistic for if this came to a public showdown in a vote, the Russians, in the form of early (?) Foreign Minister Shepilov has already served notice he would veto it.

But from my conversations with other Egyptians here like Wing-Commander Ali Sabri, who is President Nasser's Chef-de-Cabinet, one gets the impression that the Egyptians are not too keen to demonstrate that they're completely aligned with Soviet Russia. It wouldn't go down well with the rest of the free world and particularly the other Arab nations.

It seems quite clear to everyone here that the Russians do not want a solution to the Suez crisis, and that they'll sabotage one if they can. But it's also plain that the Egyptians do want a solution, in their own favor, of course, and on the best possible terms, without showing complete dependence on Soviet Russia. And this is the approach that the West is hammering on. But the only sign of success for them so far is that the Egyptians and the French and the British have been holding long face to face talks on the question without the presence of Russia's Mr. Shepilov.

But at least one other Western Foreign Minister, Mr. Pineau of France is becoming disgusted; threatens to leave for home this weekend if the Egyptians won't bend. But others like Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium are counseling patience; and so the round of secret talks continue. Egyptians say they are willing to stay here forever to get a solution but it's becoming plain that a crucial point is rapidly approaching and that the tension is now nearing the breaking point. This is Larry Le Sueur at the UN, now back to Ed Murrow.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - LARRY LE SUEUR

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: At the United Nations today, the Foreign Ministers of five countries, including Egypt, continued their secret talks on the Suez problem. My colleague, Larry Le Sueur, has been at United Nations headquarters all day covering that story. Larry, what kind of a reaction has there been to the President's offer to go to the United Nations if that will help?

LE SUEUR: Nobody here has really taken President Eisenhower's offer to come to the UN on the Suez crisis seriously. They think he made the offer in answer to a reporter's loaded question. He did say he would come if he thought it would do any good, but it's clear that even a visit from the President of the United States would not be particularly useful now unless the other heads of states decided to come too.

At the moment, of course, all of the nations on the UN Council which are directly concerned are represented by their Foreign Ministers; and the meetings now taking place are unrivalled in interest and drama since the early days of the Korean war. For the third day running today, the Foreign Ministers of Britain and France have been closeted with the Foreign Minister of Egypt in the sanctity of the UN Secretary General's 38th floor office; and only Mr. Dag Hammarksjold knows what's been going on in those private three-power talks, and he won't tell.

But we do know the deadlock continues as negotiations are reaching a crucial state. Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, Christian Pineau of France and Mahmoud Fawzi of Egypt met again for three hours this afternoon and as far as we know, they got nowhere. They just left here - they'll meet again tomorrow morning.

Today, the full eleven nation Security Council met

again in secret session. There had been hopes that there would be a public session tomorrow, at least to give Israel and the seven other Arab states a chance to state their views on the Canal question, where Israel of course, has complained bitterly, to no avail, about the fact that her ships have been blockaded from the Canal by Egypt ever since the Palestine war ended,--Since Egypt contends, after seven years, that a state of war still continues. But the seven attending Foreign Ministers on the Security Council de (sic) decided to postpone that public show in favor of another secret session in the hopes that the intense private talks between Egypt and the French and British might come up with some solution, or at least lay the basis on which a solution could be worked out.

The crux of this deadlock seems to be over just what guarantees user nations could get over the possibilities that their rights might be violated. This is what Sec. of State Dulles referred to as the "insultation of the Canal against the politics of any one nation." You may have noticed then that Mr. Dulles did not use the word "internationalization" of the Canal, for the Egyptians don't like that word. And although the British and French originally demanded a form of internationalization in a control and management of the Canal, there are many observers here who believe that these two nations might be content with absolute guarantees that their freedom of passage would not be violated; perhaps by a kind of international watch-dog team of inspectors, armed with automatic sanctions against Egypt if the usership were interfered with.

But there's also reason to believe that the Egyptians consider a plan of automatic punishment against them with considerable distaste, as a threat to their national sovereignty.

Events today with Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Fawzi, and while everything he said was on the record, he was careful to say nothing in so many words. Although he did point out that a solution was still being sought in every direction. But when I asked him if he would be happy if no solution were found, and the Security Council were forced to come to a vote on the original British-French demand for the Canal's re-internationalization, Mr. Fawzi merely murmured that the British-French demand was unrealistic for if this came to a public showdown in a vote, the Russians, in the form of early (?) Foreign Minister Shepilov has already served notice he would veto it.

But from my conversations with other Egyptians here like Wing-Commander Ali Sabri, who is President Nasser's Chef-de-Cabinet, one gets the impression that the Egyptians are not too keen to demonstrate that they're completely aligned with Soviet Russia. It wouldn't go down well with the rest of the free world and particularly the other Arab nations.

It seems quite clear to everyone here that the Russians do not want a solution to the Suez crisis, and that they'll sabotage one if they can. But it's also plain that the Egyptians do want a solution, in their own favor, of course, and on the best possible terms, without showing complete dependence on Soviet Russia. And this is the approach that the West is hammering on. But the only sign of success for them so far is that the Egyptians and the French and the British have been holding long face to face talks on the question without the presence of Russia's Mr. Shepilov.

But at least one other Western Foreign Minister, Mr. Pineau of France is becoming disgusted; threatens to leave for home this weekend if the Egyptians won't bend. But others like Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium are counseling patience; and so the round of secret talks continue. Egyptians say they are willing to stay here forever to get a solution but it's becoming plain that a crucial point is rapidly approaching and that the tension is now nearing the breaking point. This is Larry Le Sueur at the UN, now back to Ed Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

President Eisenhower today said that he would make a personal appearance before the United Nations, if he thought that would further a just and peaceful settlement of the Suez dispute. Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference it is "an error" to say that American policy regarding Suez "has not been clear and firm." He said that ever since Egypt seized the canal on July 26, the United States has been guided by four principles. These principles, he said, are respect for Egyptian sovereignty, insistence on efficient operation of the canal, insistence that it never be operated for the political purposes of any singel country, and a desire that Egypt shall have a fair share of the revenue from the canal. While sticking to these basic principles, M . Eisenhower said, "it was never implied that these details were not negotiable." He said any dissatisfaction with American policy in Britain and France is due to a misunderstanding, and he hopes it will be cleared up soon.

At the United Nations today, the foreign ministers of five countries, including Egypt, continued their secret talks on the Suez problem. My colleague, Larry Lesueur, has been at United Nations headquarters all day covering that story. Larry, what kind of reaction has there been to the President's offer to go to the United Nations, if that will help?

LESUEUR: Nobody here has really taken President Eisenhower's offer to come to the UN on the Suez crisis seriously. They think he made the offer in answer to a reporter's loaded question. He did say he would come if he thought it would do any good, but it's clear that even a visit from the President of the United States would not be particularly useful now unless the other heads of states decided to come too.

At the moment, of course, all of the nations on the UN Council which are directly concerned are represented by their Foreign Ministers; and the meetings now taking place are unrivalled in interest and drama since the early days of t the Korean war. For the third day running today, the Foreign Ministers of Britain and France have been closeted with the Foreign Minister of Egypt in the sanctity of the UN Secretary General's 38th floor office; and only Mr. Dag Hammarskjold knows what's been going on in those private three-power talks, and he won't tell.

But we do know the deadlock continues as negotiations are reaching a crucial state. Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, Christian Pineau of France and Mahmoud Fawzi of Egypt met again for three hours this afternoon and as far as we know, they got nowhere. They just left here - they'll meet again tomorrow morning.

Today, the full eleven nation Security Council met again in secret session. There had been hopes that there would be a public session tomorrow, at least to give Israel and the seven other Arab states a chance to state their views on the Canal question, where Israel of course, had complained bitterly, to no avail, about the fact that her ships have been blockaded from the Canal by Egypt ever since the Palestine war ended, since Egypt contends, after seven years, that a state of war still continues. But the seven attending Foreign Ministers of the Security Council decided to postpone that public show in favor of another secret session in the hopes that the intense private talks between Egypt and the French and British might come up with some solution, or at least lay the basis on which a solution could be worked out.

The crux of this deadlock seems to be over just what guarantees user nations could get over the possibilities that their rights might be violated This is that Secretary of State Dulles referred to as the "insulation of the Canal against the politics of any one nation." You may have noticed then that Mr. Dulles did not use the word "internationalization" of the Canal, for the Egyptians don't like that word. And although the British and French originally demanded a form of internationalization in a control and management of the Canal, there are many observers here who believe that these two nations might be content with absolute guarantees that their freedom of passage would not be violated; perhaps by a kind of international watch-dog team of inspectors, armed with automatic sanctions against Egypt if the usership were interfered with.

But there's also reason to believe that the Egyptians consider a plan of automatic punishment against them with considerable distaste, as a threat to their national severeignty.

Events today with Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Fawzi, and while everything he said was on the record, he was careful to say nothing in so many words. Although he did point out that a solution was still being sought in every direction. But when I asked him if he would be happy if no solution were found, and the Security Council were forced to come to a vote on the original British-French demand for the Canal's re-internationalization, Mr. Fawzi merely murmured that the British French demand was unrealistic for if this came to a public showdown in a vote, the Russians, in the form of early (?) Foreign Minister Shepilov has already served notice he would veto it.

But from my conversations with other Egyptians here like Wing-Commander Ali Sabri, who is President Nasser's Chef-de-Cabinet, one gets the imresssion that the Egyptians are not too keen to demonstrate that they're completely aligned with Soviet Russia. It wouldn't go down well with the rest of the free world and particularly the other Arab nations.

It seems quite clear to everyone here that the Russians do not want a solution to the Suez crisis, and that they'll sabotage one of they can. But it's also plain that the Egyptians do want a solution, in their own favor, of course, and on the best possible terms, without showing complete dependence on Soviet Russia. And this is the approach that the West is hammering on. But the only sign of success for them so far is that the Egyptians and the French and the British have been holding long face to face talks on the question without the presence of Russia's Mr. Shepilov.

But at least one other Western Foreign Minister, Mr. Pineau of France is becoming disguated; threatens to leave for home this weekend if the Egyptians won't bend. But others like Paul-Henri- Spaak of Belgium are counseling patience, and so the round of secret talks continue. Egytpians say they are willing to stay here forever to get a solution but it's becoming plain that a crucial point is rapidly approaching and that the tension is now nearing the breaking point. This is Larry Le Sueur at the UN, now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Most of President Eisenhower's news conference was taken up with politics. A reporter brought up Adlai Stevenson's proposals regarding a discontinuance ofthehydrogen bomb tests and the possibility of ending the draft. The reporter wanted to know if reports were true that Republican strategists would have made the same proposals if Stevenson had not made them first. The President said no one had made such a suggestion to him concerning the draft. He said, "You are telling me things about my administration that I never heard of." And he added: "Now I tell you frankly, I have said my last words on these subjects. Enough has been said about them for the purposes of a political campaign."

Mr. Eisenhower asserted that management of America's internal affairs is the main issue of the campaign a. no one is against peace. For one thing, he said, the Democrats do not seem particularly concerned with the "sound dollar". He said if the country is going to continue to prosper, it must maintain sound dollars; it can't be done by raising expenditures and cutting taxes. He denied that he has "written off" the South and said he will have another thorough physical examination before the end of the month. He conceded that he cannot look to Senators Jenner, McCarthy and Malone for much help in putting over his legislative program.

Later in the day, Mr. Eisenhower issued a statement announcing a stepped up program for helping farmers in the southwestern states, suffering from drought. And he said he plans a personal visit to the drought area.

A prominent Negro congressman, Representative Adam Clayton Powell, announced today that he will support President Eisenhower in the current campaign. Powell is a Democrat from New York. In 1952 he supoorted Stevenson. Powell made his announcement after a conference with the President. He said Mr. Eisenhower had promised, if re-elected, to press for legislttion to prevent discrimination against Negro voters.

Mr. Stevenson is campaigning in California tonight. In a speech in Oakland, he will accuse the Republicans of an election-year "pretense" of liberalism. Stevenson will also attack President Eisenhower's statement, made recently in a news conference, that American prestige abroad "has never been higher." This, Stevenson charges, is manifestly untrue.

Senator Kefauver is campaigning in the Midwest, where he is accusing the Eisenhower Administration of political expediency. The soil bank, Kefauver says, "was trimmed to fit the political purposes of the administration in this election year."

Vice President Nixon will be speaking tonight in Boulder, Colorado. Mr Nixon has been looking over the promises made by the Democrats. He will say that if these promises are all kept, it would mean 320 dollars in additional taxes a year for every family fo four, or 15-billion dollars altogether.

Israel said tonight that there will be peace on the Jordan frontier, if Jordan will put a stop to its armed attacks against Israel. The Israeli foreign office said its raid last night on a Jordanian police post was in reprisal for "murderous assaults" on Israeli citizens. The foreign office cited the murder of five Israelis in an ambush on October first and the killing by Arab infiltrators, of two Israeli farm workers on October 9th. It was the second reprisal raid into Jordan in two weeks. Thirty-eight Jordanian troops were killed in a similar action on September 25th. The Jordanian police headquarters attacked last night was destroyed in what is called the heaviest fighting since the end of full-scale hostilities in 1948. The action continued through the night, and U.N. observers have counted 48 Jordanian dead. Other, unofficial reports say more than a hundred Jardanians died in the attack. Israel sets its own losses at 18 dead and 12 wounded.

In Amman, King Hussein of Jordan called an emergency meeting of his cabinet. At United Nations headq arters here in New York the Jordanian ambassador said Jordan may ask for a special session of the Security Council. If the council fails to stop Israel, he said, then Jordan will have to use similar force.

In Cairo, President Nasser held an urgent conference with the Jordanian foreign minister. The foreign minister said afterward that Nasser promised "immediate effective measures" to help Jordan defend itself from Israeli attack. He said this help would take the form of stepped up arms shipments and financial aid.

An American citizen..Mary Frances Hagan..was convicted of espionage today by an Israeli court. Miss Hagan, of Huntington, West Virginia, was found guilty of syping for Syria and sentenced to serve a year in prison.

So far, no trace had been found of that military transport plane, reported missing almost 24 hours ago on a flight from England to the Azores. There wre 59 American servicemen on the aircraft, including a nine-man Navy crew. The 50 passengers are members of the 307th Bomber Wing, based an Lincoln, Nebraska. The Navy says that tomorrow the aircraft carrier Antietam and six destroyers will join the search.

In Hong Kong, the Chinese riots are apparently being brought under control. British troops are enforcing a curfew, after two days of violence in which at least 44 persons died.

Britains first operational atomic-bomb was tested successfully today in the Australian desert. The bomb was released from a jet aircraft at great height and exploded with a force of more than 10-thousand tons of T.N.T.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The secret talks at United Nations Headquarters are not meeting with much success. This cound be cause for disappointment, but Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "The great thing is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving." And Sherwood Anderson once remarked, "Nothing approaching accomplishment grows wearisome."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 12, 1956

This is the news:

Throughout the day, carrier and land-based aircraft scoured the Atlantic for a trace of the military transport plane missing with 59 men aboard. The search centered north of the Azores, after a Pan American passenger plane picked up a radio distress-signal during the night. The signal was thought to come from a survival raft, approximately 150 miles north of the Azores. A hundred aircraft, and a U.S. naval task force, are taking part in the search for the plane, which disappeared Wednesday night on a flight from England to the States. A late message from the task force says: "No luck. Nothing sighted." The Air Force says the search is being pressed with "utmost vigor".

The United States sent a note to Russia today, demanding 1-million 356-thousand dollars damages, for the shooting down... two years ago... of an American aircraft over the Sea of Japan. According to the State Department, the Neptune patrol bomber was shot down over international waters. ~~One crewman died in the incident.~~

Here in New York today, the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France held another round of secret talks at United Nations headquarters. The three countries have agreed on a set of principles, drawn up by Secretary General Hammarskjold, as a basis for continued negotiations in the Suez dispute. These further talks... it is said... may take place at the United Nations late this month. Informed sources say "real progress" is being made.

In Washington, President Eisenhower today ordered plans drafted for possible construction of a fleet of super-tankers, to bring oil from the Middle East. A decision will be made later on whether to build the tankers.

There was a flurry of gunfire in Jerusalem today, between Israeli and Jordanian troops. No casualties are reported.

Israel warned today that the sending of troops from Iraq to Jordan would undermine its armistice agreement with Jordan "in far-reaching respects." And, in London, a Foreign Office spokesman said that Britain would be obligated by Treaty to go to the assistance of Jordan, in the event of outright Israeli aggression against that Arab state.

Also in London today, British authorities removed the turn-about refugee Alexei Chwastev, and his American-born daughter Tanya, from a Russian ship just as it was scheduled to sail for Leningrad. Last week, American immigration officials failed to prevent their departure from the United States. British immigration officers acted today on the strength of an injunction making the two-year-old child a ward of the British high court. The order prohibits her removal from Britain until the matter of who should have legal custody is determined. The order was obtained by the Church World Services organization, on request of the girl's mother in Detroit.

The case of Nina Ponomareva... the Russian lady discus thrower... was settled today in a London police court. She was convicted of stealing five hats from a London department store last August, as charged, and allowed to leave the country, after paying three guineas... the equivalent of 8 dollars and 82 cents... in court costs. She had been hiding in the Soviet embassy for more than a month.

In Washington today, a House committee opened public hearings ~~in~~ ON- the polio vaccine program. Democratic Representative Holifield of California said there was evidence of "collusion" in the sale of vaccine ~~sold~~ to the government for free distribution, that prices paid by the United States Public Health Service were too high. Reid Hovey, purchasing agent for the Health Service, said it's not too late to report the matter to the Justice Department if this is indeed the case.

A program of college scholarships... to be set up by the Federal Government and administered by the states... was proposed today at the annual meeting of the American Council on Education. The program would cost an estimated 200-million dollars a year. It is merely a recommendation to the council by one of its committees and is still being studied.

President Eisenhower has chosen Bertram Tallamy, chairman of the New York State Thruway Authority, to administer the government's 33-billion-dollar highway construction program. If confirmed by the Senate, Tallamy will take over the job early next year.

An interim agreement was signed today... between Louisiana and the Federal Government... for immediate resumption of oil operations in disputed tideland areas off the Louisiana coast. The agreement calls for impounding of revenues until such time as the Supreme Court decides ownership of the submerged properties.

Secretary of Defense Wilson said today that... next year... the armed forces may be cut by 160-thousand men. At the same time, he said, military spending may be increased by more than 2-billion dollars because of the high cost of weapons in the atomic age. Wilson said that until world conditions change, it is "irresponsible" to talk of ending either hydrogen bomb tests or the draft.

The White House announced plans today for another major campaign speech by President Eisenhower. It will be in New York's Madison Square Garden on October 25th. The occasion will be a rally sponsored by the "Citizens for Eisenhower" and the New York state and county Republican organizations.

Both Vice President Nixon and Senator Kefauver spoke today at the national corn-picking contest in Columbus, Nebraska. Mr. Nixon spoke first... and warned farmers in the corn belt that Democratic promises of high, rigid price supports are "a cruel hoax". Kefauver spoke a few hours later... despite a sore throat... and accused the Eisenhower Administration of "betraying" the American farmer with its farm policies.

Adlai Stevenson continued his barnstorming tour through California today... and hammered away at the theme that the Eisenhower Administration, in his words, "represents the interests of the rich."

Two of my colleagues... Bill Downs and Bill Shadel... have been in the Midwest this past week. They have been making an informal survey of the attitudes of voters in that part of the country, and tonight we will have their first-hand reports. First, let's switch by recording to Bill Downs in Detroit.

Downs runs 3:10
Returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in New York."

Next, for an appraisal of voter reaction from the point of view of farmers in the Midwest, here is the recorded report of Bill Shadel in Minneapolis.

Shadel runs 3:20
Returns on cue: "Back now to Ed Murrow in New York."

You have been listening to the observations of two political observers who have a habit of knowing what is going on.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

But first, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

The election is three weeks from Tuesday... and it is possible some voters have still to make up their minds. (The activity of the candidates would so indicate). No party is perfect. But Bernard Shaw said, "What better do you expect? You are, I hope, on the side of the angels. But you cannot join them until you die."

Goodnight and good luck! Meanwhile - you must Register to vote -

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, October 12, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Let's switch by recording to Bill Downs in Detroit.

DOWNS: One of the miracles of America's growth has been the creation of what is called the midwest industrial conflict which over the past 75 years has grown to embrace an area bounded by Milwaukee, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, and Pittsburgh. The development of the industry here produced a demand for man power out of which have evolved two groupings of Americans which the politicians now are studying. The politicians call them the negro vote and the union vote. This reporter has been taking a look at both. In Chicago, for example, there's a negro population of 900,000 persons. A Republican negro leader Golden Darby, told us of GOP efforts to persuade members of his race to vote for the Republicans and of the difficulty of selling the two party system,,despite the powerful argument he has that a vote for the Democrats is a vote for Mississippi's Eastland and other southern congressional leaders.

On the Democratic side the Reverend Paul Turner, a negro grassroots worker for the powerful Cook County machine, says firmly that the negro vote would stick solidly with the Democrats. He says that the city's Democratic organization is the most effective instrument to help and protect the interests of negroes in Chicago and that this fact alone is enough to overcome the Republican arguments, no matter how distasteful is the southern leadership in congress.

Other politicians, negro and white, agree that the Republicans up to now have made little inroad into the Democratic strength in Chicago's South Side. Here in Detroit we've been looking into the so called Labor vote of the powerful United Automobile Workers who have 600,000 members in Michigan alone. Four years ago General Eisenhower carried Michigan by 321,000 votes and even the Democrats admit that about 25% of their party strength went Republican.

Today the experts say that President Eisenhower still has the edge, although presently leaders on both sides of the political fence say that Michigan's 20 electoral votes are a toss up this year. Republican leaders admit there's an urge to return to the party by Union Democrats who voted for Eisenhower four years ago, but they also maintain that this redefection will be off-set by new registrations plus a loyal, independent vote.

Democrats say that the Republicans in Michigan are spending eight to ten times as much money as the Democrats, but they also estimate that the UAW will have put in a half million dollars all tolled before election day.

Michigan has an important race for the governorship. Democratic Governor Williams is conceded to be running far ahead of Republican Albert Cobo (sp.). The big issue here is the state's 230,000 unemployed, plus you have the peculiar coat tail situation. Candidate Eisenhower appears to be the only hope for Mayor Cobo's election as governor. While the popular Governor Williams may provide the coat tail which may enable candidate Stevenson to overcome Eisenhower's Michigan advantage. Labor vote or not Michigan can go either way. Now back to Ed. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Next for an appraisal of voter reaction from the point of view of farmers in the Mid West here is a recorded report of Bill Shadel in Minneapolis.

SHADEL: If there is any single fact we've learned in traveling through the middle west, attempting to survey political sentiment in the so called farm belt, the fact is there is no such thing as a block of farm votes. Not even within a single state for instance. Here in Minnesota or in Iowa, Illinois or Wisconsin is there a common ~~pi~~ political denominator to be found. Here in a corn and hog producing area one old cynic tells us just what's the price of hogs on November 6. If they're below eighteen dollars a hundred the old man will vote Democratic. Mom is likely however to vote for Eisenhower for what she considers is the promise of peace.

A year ago there was much wider sharing of political disgust amounting to political revolt in crossing state bounderies, engulfing ~~increasing~~ the farm belt. The farmers then might have been of a single political mind and it might well have been a Democratic story, but now the heat seems to be off and the farmer lets his mind wander to other fields. In mid Illinois, for instance, his political thinking can be influenced by the scandals and corruption uncovered in the state's offices. In Wisconsin we found a farmer with five sons telling us, well, dairy prices are better, I think I'll vote for Ike again. He kept us out of war.

Among the big dairy-men of Wisconsin, we found a complacency, due in part to good crops, better prices than last year. This complacency, of course, a source of concern to the Republican leaders, for while the dairymen in southern Wisconsin, or the soybean farmer in Illinois, or the cattle-feeders, in particular, who are enjoying a profitable comeback - while these farmers may be sitting back, grumbling over the farm situation in general, they're not hurting like they were a year ago. And so they're incl - inclined to contemplate that magic theme of peace. They could be expected to vote for Eisenhower again as they did in 1952. The question is: Will they actually get out and vote? Their vote is needed by the Republicans to offset an admitted Democratic upsurge in an otherwise normally Republican area.

That Democratic surge comes from the really depressed farm areas, and theye are some serious ones in drought-ridden Iowa, for instance.

Democratics find an ally in some spotty unemployment in the larger cities, and some readiness to believe, also, the Democratic charges that the Republican Party is not good for the little man. But we found no signs of any widely shared farm depression nor anything like a wholesale farm revolt. In other words, the farmers of the mid-West as a whole are not to be classified this year as a part of any trend as they were in 1948. Aside from the heavy influence of a farmer's own particular economic status at the time, his vote is to be shaded by many other influences, and that, in turn, has to be broken down by states and districts and counties where the farm vote is there blended with the many influences of cities, towns and villages.

And unless the Democrats are able to show considerably more strength in the latter precincts, off the farm, that is, political observers here are inclined to see only spotty additional help from the farmers. That, of course, could be enough to turn Minnesota, for one, from the Republican column into eleven electoral votes for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. AG and FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, October 12, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Let's switch by recording to Bill Downs in Detroit.

DOWNS: One of the miracles of America's growth has been the creation of what is called the midwest industrial conflict which over the past 75 years has grown to embrace an area bounded by Milwaukee, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, and Pittsburgh. The development of the industry here produced a demand for man power out of which have evolved two groupings of Americans which the politicians now are studying. The politicians call them the negro vote and the union vote. This reporter has been taking a look at both. In Chicago, for example, there's a negro population of 900,000 persons. A Republican negro leader Golden Darby, told us of GOP efforts to persuade members of his race to vote for the Republicans and of the difficulty of selling the two party system,,despite the powerful argument he has that a vote for the Democrats is a vote for Mississippi's Eastland and other southern congressional leaders.

On the Democratic side the Reverend Paul Turner, a negro grassroots worker for the powerful Cook County machine, says firmly that the negro vote would stick solidly with the Democrats. He says that the city's Democratic organization is the most effective instrument to help and protect the interests of negroes in Chicago and that this fact alone is enough to overcome the Republican arguments, no matter how distasteful is the southern leadership in congress.

Other politicians, negro and white, agree that the Republicans up to now have made little inroad into the Democratic strength in Chicago's South Side. Here in Detroit we've been looking into the so called Labor vote of the powerful United Automobile Workers who have 600,000 members in Michigan alone. Four years ago General Eisenhower carried Michigan by 321,000 votes and even the Democrats admit that about 25% of their party strength went Republican.

Today the experts say that President Eisenhower still has the edge, although presently leaders on both sides of the political fence say that Michigan's 20 electoral votes are a toss up this year. Republican leaders admit there's an urge to return to the party by Union Democrats who voted for Eisenhower four years ago, but they also maintain that this redefection will be off-set by new registrations plus a loyal, independent vote.

Democrats say that the Republicans in Michigan are spending eight to ten times as much money as the Democrats, but they also estimate that the UAW will have put in a half million dollars all tolled before election day.

Michigan has an important race for the governorship. Democratic Governor Williams is conceded to be running far ahead of Republican Albert Cobo (sp.). The big issue here is the state's 230,000 unemployed, plus you have the peculiar coat tail situation. Candidate Eisenhower appears to be the only hope for Mayor Cobo's election as governor. While the popular Governor Williams may provide the coat tail which may enable candidate Stevenson to overcome Eisenhower's Michigan advantage. Labor vote or not Michigan can go either way. Now back to Ed. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Next for an appraisal of voter reaction from the point of view of farmers in the Mid West here is a recorded report of Bill Shadel in Minneapolis.

SHADEL: If there is any single fact we've learned in traveling through the middle west, attempting to survey political sentiment in the so called farm belt, the fact is there is no such thing as a block of farm votes. Not even within a single state for instance. Here in Minnesota or in Iowa, Illinois or Wisconsin is there a common ~~pl~~ political denominator to be found. Here in a corn and hog producing area one old cynic tells us just what's the price of hogs on November 6. If they're below eighteen dollars a hundred the old man will vote Democratic. Mom is likely however to vote for Eisenhower for what she considers is the promise of peace.

A year ago there was much wider sharing of political disgust amounting to political revolt in crossing state bounderies, engulfing ~~increasing~~ the farm belt. The farmers then might have been of a single political mind and it might well have been a Democratic story, but now the heat seems to be off and the farmer lets his mind wander to other fields. In mid Illinois, for instance, his political thinking can be influenced by the scandals and corruption uncovered in the state's offices. In Wisconsin we found a farmer with five sons telling us, well, dairy prices are better, I think I'll vote for Ike again. He kept us out of war.

Among the big dairy-men of Wisconsin, we found a complacency, due in part to good crops, better prices than last year. This complacency, of course, a source of concern to the Republican leaders, for while the dairymen in southern Wisconsin, or the soybean farmer in Illinois, or the cattle-feeders, in particular, who are enjoying a profitable comeback - while these farmers may be sitting back, grumbling over the farm situation in general, they're not hurting like they were a year ago. And so they're incl - inclined to contemplate that magic theme of peace. They could be expected to vote for Eisenhower again as they did in 1952. The question is: Will they actually get out and vote? Their vote is needed by the Republicans to offset an admitted Democratic upsurge in an otherwise normally Republican area.

That Democratic surge comes from the really depressed farm areas, and there are some serious ones in drought-ridden Iowa, for instance.

Democratics find an ally in some spotty unemployment in the larger cities, and some readiness to believe, also, the Democratic charges that the Republican Party is not good for the little man. But we found no signs of any widely shared farm depression nor anything like a wholesale farm revolt. In other words, the farmers of the mid-West as a whole are not to be classified this year as a part of any trend as they were in 1948. Aside from the heavy influence of a farmer's own particular economic status at the time, his vote is to be shaded by many other influences, and that, in turn, has to be broken down by states and districts and counties where the farm vote is there blended with the many influences of cities, towns and villages.

And unless the Democrats are able to show considerably more strength in the latter precincts, off the farm, that is, political observers here are inclined to see only spotty additional help from the farmers. That, of course, could be enough to turn Minnesota, for one, from the Republican column into eleven electoral votes for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. AG and FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

Throughout the day, carrier and land-based aircraft scoured the Atlantic for a trace of the military transport plane missing with 59 men aboard.

The search centered north of the Azores, after a Pan American passenger plane picked up a radio distress signal during the night. The signal was thought to come from a survival raft, approximately 150 miles north of the Azores. A hundred aircraft and a U.S. naval task force are taking part in the search for the plane, which disappeared Wednesday night on a flight from England to the States. A late message from the taks force says: "No luck. Norhing is sighted." The Air Force says the search is being pressed with "utmost vigor."

The United States sent a note to Russia today demanding 1-million 356 - thousand dollars damages for the shooting down two years ago of an American aircraft over the Sea of Japan. According to the State Department, the Neptune patrol bomber was shot down over international waters.

Here in New York today, the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France held another round of secret talks at United Nations headquarters. The three countries have agreed on a set of principles drawn up by Secretary General Hammarakjold as a basis for continued negotiations in the Suez dispute. These further talks ..it is said..may take place at the United Nations late this month. Informed sources say "real progress" is being made.

In Washington, President Eisenhower today ordered plans drafted for possible construction of a fleet of super-tankers, to bring oil from the Middle East. A decision will be made later on whether to build the tankers.

There was a flurry of gunfire in Jerusalem today between Israeli and Jordanian troops. No casualties are reported.

Israel warned today that the sending of troops from Iraq to Jordan would undermine the armistice agreement with Jordan "in far-reaching respects." And, in London, a Foreign Office spokesman said that Britain would be obligated by treaty to go th the assistance of Jordan in the event of outright Israeli aggression against that Arab state.

The case of Nina Ponomareva the Russian lady discuss thrower was settled today in a London police court. She was convicted of stealing five hats from a London department store last August as charged and allowed to leave the country after paying three guineas the equivalent of 8 dollars and 82 cents.. in court costs. She had been hiding in the Soviet embassy for more than a month.

In Washington today, a House committee opened public hearings on the polio vaccine program. Democratic Representative Holifield of California said there was evidence of "collusion" in the sale of vaccine to the government for free distribution that prices paid by the United States Public Health Service were too high. Reid Hovey, purchasing agent for the Health Service, said it's not too late to report the matter to the Justice Department if this is indeed the case.

President Eisenhower has chosen Bertram Tallamy, chairman of the New York State Thruway Authority, to administer the government's 33 billion - dollar highway construction program. If confirmed by the Senate, Tallamy will take over the job early next year.

Secretary of Defense Wilson saud today that next year, the armed forces may be cut by 160-thousand men. At the same time, he said, military spending may be increased by more than 2 billion dollars becuase of the high cost of weapons in the atomic age. Wilson said that until world conditions change, it is "irresponsible" to talk of ending either hydrogen bomb tests or the draft.

The White House announced plans today for another major campaign speech by President Eisenhower. It will be in New York's Madison Square Garden on October 25th. The occasion will be a rally sponsored by the "Citizens for Eisenhower" and the New York state and county Republican organizations.

Both Vice President Nixon and Senator Kefauver spoke today at the national corn - picking contest in Columbus, Nebraska. Mr. Nixon spoke first and warned farmers in the corn belt that Democratic promises of high, rigid price supports are a "cruel hoax". Kefauver spoke a few hours later despite a sore throat and accused the Eisenhower Administration of "betraying" the American farmer with its farm policies.

Adlai Stevenson continued barnstorming through California today and hammered away at the theme that the Eisenhower Administration, in his words, "represents the interests of the rich."

Two of my colleagues, Bill Dowwn and Bill Shadel, have been in the Midwest this past week. They have been making an informal survey of the attitudes of voters in that part of the country and tonight we will have their first -hand reports. First, let's switch ty recording to Bill Downs in Detroit.

DOWNS: One of the miracles of America's growth has been the creation of what is called the midwest industrial conflict which over the past 75 years has grown to embrace an area bounded by Milwaukee, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh. The development of the industry here produced a demand for man power out of which have evolved two groupings of Americans which the politicians now are studying. The politicians call them the negro vote and the union vote. This reporter has been taking a look at both. In Chicago, for example there's a negro population of 900,000 persons. A Republican negro leader Golden Darby, told us of GOP efforts to persuade members of his race to vote for the Republicans and of the difficulty of selling the two party system, despite the powerful argument he has that a vote for the Democrats is a vote for Mississippi's Eastland and other southern congressional leaders.

On the Democratic side the Reverend Paul Turner, a negro grass roots worker for the powerful Cook County machine, says firmly that the negro vote would stick solidly with the Democrats. He says that the city's Democratic organization is the most effective instrument to help and protect the interests of negroes in Chicago and that this fact alone is enough to overcome the Republican arguments, no matter how distasteful is the southern leadership in congress.

Other politicians, negro and white, agree that the Republicans up to now have made little inroad into the Democratic strength in Chicago's South Side. Here in Detroit we've been looking into the so called Labor vote of the powerful United Automobile Workers who have 600,000 members in Michigan alone. Four years ago General Eisenhower carried Michigan by 321,000 votes and even the Democrats admit that 25% of their party strength went Republican.

Today the experts say that President Eisenhower still has the edge, although presently leaders on both sides of the political fence say that Michigan's 20 electoral votes are a toss up this year. Republican leaders admit there's an urge to return to the party by Union Democrats who voted for Eisenhower four years ago, but they also maintain that this redefection will be off-set by new registrations plus a loyal, independent vote.

Democrats say that the Republicans in Michigan are spending eight to ten times as much money as the Democrats, but they also estimate that the UAW will have put in a half million dollars all tolled before election day.

Michigan has an important race for the governorship. Democratic Governor Williams in conceded to be running far ahead of Republican Albert Cobo. (sp?)

The big issue here is the state's 230,000 unemployed, plus you have the peculiarcoat tail situation. Candidate Eisenhower appears to be the only hope for Mayor Cobo's election as governor. While the popular Governor Williams may provide the coat tail which may enable candidate Stevenson to overcome Eisenoower's Michigan advantage. Labor vote or not Michigan can go either way. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Next for an appraisal of voter reaction from the point of view of farmers in the Mid West here is a recorded report of Bill Shadel in Minneapolis.

SHADEL; If there is any single fact we've learned in traveling through the middle west, attempting to survey political sentiment in the so called farm belt, the fact is there is no such thing as a block of farm votes. Not even within a single state for instance. Here in Minnesota or in Iowa, Illinois or Wisconsin is there a common political denominator to be found. Here in a corn and hog producing area one old cynic tells us tust what's the price of hogs on November 6. If they're below eighteen dollars a hundred the old man will vote Democratic. Mom is likely however to vote for Eisenhower for what she considers is the promise of peace.

A year ago there was much wider sharing of political disgust amounting to political revolt in crossing state bounderies, engulfing the farm belt. The farmers then might have been of a single political mind and it might well have been a Democratic story, but now the heat seems to be off and the farmer lets his mind wander to other fields. In mid Illinois, for instance, his political thinking can be influenced y the scandals and corruption uncovered in the state's offices. In Wisconsin we found a farmer with five sons telling us, well, dairy prices are better, I think I'll vote for Ike again. He kept us out of war.

Among the big dairy men of Wisconsin, we found a complacency, due in part to good crops, better prices than last year. This complacency, of course, is a source of concern to the Republican leaders, for while the dairymen in southern Wisconsin, or the soybean farmer in Illinois, or the cattle feeders in particular, who are enjoying a profitable comeback - while these farmers may be sitting back, grumbling over the farm situation in general, they're not hurting like they were a year ago. And to they're inclined to contemplate that magic theme of peace. They could be expected to vote for Eisenhower a again as they did in 1952. The question is: Will they actually get out and vote? Their vote is needed by the Republicans to offset an admitted Democratic upsurge in an otherwise normally Republican area.

The Democratic surge comes from the really depressed farm areas, and there are some serious ones in drought-ridden Iowa, for instance.

Democrats find an ally in some spotty unemployment in the larger cities, and some readiness to believe, also, the Democratic charges that the Republican Part is not good for the little man. But we found no signs of any widely shared farm depression nor an like a wholesale farm revolt. In other words, the farmers of the mid-West as a whole are not to be classified this year as a part of any trend as they were in 1948. Aside from the heavy influence of a farmer's own particular economic status at the time, his vote is to be shaded by many other influences, and that, in turn, has to be broken down by states and districts and counties where the farm vote is there blended with many influences of cities, towns and villages.

And unless the Democrats are able to show considerably more strength in the latter precincts, off the farm, that is, political observers here are inclined to see only spotty additional help from the farmers. That of course, could be enough to turn Minnesota, for one, from the Republican column into eleven electoral votes for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket. Back now to Ed

Murrow in New York.

MURROW: You have been listening to bhe observations of two political observers who have a habit of knowing what is going on.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in amoment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The election is three weeks from Tuesday and it is possible some voters have still to make up their minds. (The activity of the candidates would so indicate.) No party is perfect. But Bernard Shaw said, "What better do you expect? You are, I hope, on the side of the angels. But you cannot join them until you die."

Meanwhile.....you must register and vote.

Goodnight and Good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 15, 1956

This is the news:

Jordan has requested an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council, to take up what it calls "the most serious situation" created by Israeli attacks. [The council is expected to hear Jordan's complaint on Thursday.]

The United Nations truce supervisor, General Burns, reported from Jerusalem today, that Israel's refusal to let United Nations observers investigate border incidents, has "paralyzed" operations of the Mixed Armistice Commission. Burns said he felt duty-bound to point out "the obvious dangers involved."

The British Foreign Office commented today on the possibility that troop reinforcements may be sent into Jordan from Iraq. Britain, it said, has reassured Israel that such a move would... in the British view... "contribute to stability in the area."

Israel accused Iraq today of "a desire for territorial expansion and aggression against Israel." And the Israeli foreign ministry said, "Whoever encourages Iraq, actively or passively, in the realization of its schemes, takes upon himself grave responsibility." The Israeli statement noted that Iraq does not recognize Israel, and that a state of war exists between the two countries.

In Cairo, a semi-official newspaper calls the sending of Iraqi troops into Jordan "a most serious conspiracy by Western imperialism to undermine Arab unity."

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that if troops go into Jordan from Iraq, it would constitute a violation of the 1949 armistice. And Israel, he warned, would reserve its right to "freedom of action" in such an event. He said Israel will keep on trying to get defensive arms from the United States. The United States, he said, has encouraged other countries to supply arms to Israel, but "we cannot be content with this encouragement alone." With regard to Suez, Ben Gurion said Israel had received assurances from "several governments", that Israel's right to navigation through the canal will be safeguarded through "a regime of free navigation for all peoples."

The Egyptian government issued a statement today, saying it cannot "in any way" agree to international administration of the Suez Canal. But at the same time, it said Egypt accepts cooperation between the Egyptian Canal Authority and the user nations, and agrees to "insulation" of the canal from politics.

In Washington, Democratic Senator Mansfield tonight accused the Administration of taking "belated" action in the Suez crisis. What has been gained, he said, is "a temporary respite", not a "just and lasting solution." Mansfield... who is a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee... said there may well be a "bloodbath" in the Middle East, if the western countries don't stop what he called "their stalling tactics".

Representatives of the Hungarian Communist Party arrived in Belgrade today to confer with Yugoslav leaders. It is the first time Hungarian officials have visited Belgrade since Tito was kicked out of the Cominform in 1948, for his espousal of Communism independent of Moscow.

An Italian communist delegation ended a 10-day visit in Yugoslavia today with the issuance of a joint communique. The communique said the Communist Parties of Yugoslavia and Italy had agreed on a policy of mutual ~~cooperation "within the framework of the principles of equality and non-interference in the internal life of both countries."~~

President Eisenhower today announced the continuation of American aid to Yugoslavia. And for that story, here is Bill Downs in Washington.

Downs runs ~~2:00~~ 2:50

Returns on cue: "--To Ed Murrow in NY."

The President gave the final go-shead today for construction of the first atomic-powered merchant ship. In a White House ceremony, Mr. Eisenhower said he wants the Atomic Energy Commission and the Commerce Department to proceed with the project "as rapidly as possible". Forty-two million dollars to build the ship was voted at the last session of Congress.

~~By pressing a telegraph key today, By pressing a telegraph key,~~ the President ~~signaled the official~~ start of construction on the Upper Colorado River reclamation project. The telegraphic ~~impulse set off~~ blasts for excavating both the Glen Canyon Dam in Arizona and the Flaming Gorge Dam in Utah. The water storage project ~~will cost a billion dollars and take more than 20 years to complete.~~

Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will leave Washington for the West Coast to make a series of political talks. The White House announced today that in addition to the speeches scheduled for Washington and Oregon, the President will make a major address in Los Angeles on Friday night.

In Libertyville, Illinois, today, Adlai Stevenson launched the nationwide "Dollars for Democrats" drive by calling at the home of William G. Wells, a retired shoe salesman. Mr. Wells described himself as the "other" Democrat in Libertyville and donated five dollars.

~~The Supreme Court agreed today to review the conviction of mystery man Henry Grunewald, on charges of conspiring to "fix" criminal income-tax cases. The court wants to look into a number of "questions of law" involved in the conviction. The Supreme Court decided to "let stand" the policy of the General Electric Company of firing employes who plead the Fifth Amendment. It rejected... without comment... an appeal filed by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union, which contended the policy violated its contract with the company. The Justice Department has accused the union of being "Communist-infiltrated."~~

Edward R. Murrow: October 15, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The crisis in the Middle East might be called about the same as usual today, only more so. That is, there is no fundamental improvement, and the danger of serious trouble mounts. This is true of both prongs of the crisis, the one over Suez and the one of Israeli-Arab relations.

To speak first of Suez, the prolonged debate in the Security Council of the United Nations ended in the adoption of six principles. But only one of them could be called an advance over agreements in the past. That was the clause calling for the "insulation" of the canal from politics. However, no progress was made toward finding a guarantee to assure this insulation, and that left the big issue of practical safeguards unsolved.

The British now want to press ahead, set up the canal users' association at once, have the association collect all tolls from its members, and see what President Nasser does about it. If he holds back British ships, Britain is presumed to be ready to push them through the canal by force. London has asked the United States to have all American vessels pay tolls to the association, a decision that Washington has not yet made, or at least announced. It has not been suggested that we use force if our ships are held up.

By and large this is about where the crisis stood before it reached the United Nations. Maybe the fruitless experience at the U.N. was needed to pressure the negotiators into making more concessions. But it also may be that the prospects for successful negotiation are growing less bright. It seems fair to say that the optimism with which President Eisenhower hailed the news from inside the Security Council, before the Russian veto, was not on display in Washington today. The British point out that the fight for international operation of the canal was lost, after Egypt had stressed that President Eisenhower had shown satisfaction with the six principles.

Today the hope for further negotiations seems to lie in Egypt's interpretation of what it calls "co-operation between the canal authority and the users of the canal". How this can be turned into a guarantee that Egypt will not exploit its control of the canal politically, and still leave Egyptian sovereignty uncompromised, remains the chief unanswered question.

The crisis between Israel and Jordan may appear to be quite separate from the Suez dispute, but it probably isn't. The Jordanian Government is shaky. Elections are due on Sunday. An outbreak of violence is feared, Nasser's influence in Jordan is increasing. It has been proposed that an undisclosed number of troops from Iraq be moved into Jordan. This plan has strong British backing. Iraq is an ally of Britain; her army is British-trained. But Iraq is still at war with Israel; and the Israelis are naturally not enthusiastic about having a few thousand additional enemy troops on their frontier.

Britain tells the Israelis, in effect, that the troops from Iraq will help maintain order in Jordan, and also help maintain King Hussein in power. They say that if Hussein is flung out, then Jordan will be completely dominated by Nasser, and that would be worse for Israel than the present state of affairs. But Israel is not comforted by these assurances; has called home her principal ambassadors, and warned Britain in the most solemn terms about the dangers involved in moving Iraqi troops into Jordan.

The British obviously want to support the anti-Nasser elements in the Arab world. The Israeli's don't object to that, but they don't want any more of their enemies on their border.

The Egyptians, of course, take a totally different view of this complex situation. They are inclined to think that the whole crisis between Israel and Jordan has been maneuvered by the British, as a method of increasing the power of King Feisal of Iraq, who is an ally of Britain, and Nasser's chief rival for Arab leadership. The Egyptians also believe that this is Britain's method of applying pressure to get a settlement on Suez.

In this incredibly complex situation the tension between Israel and Jordan has reached the point where it may get out of hand. So it seems fair to say that the crisis in the Middle East -- including Suez -- is no better than it was, and might be getting a little worse.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is a mounting danger in the Middle East. Woodrow Wilson said, "Nobody can guarantee the world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But," he said, "if the nations of the world will, in deed and truth, agree to put arbitration and discussion always first... and war always last... I say that we have an immense insurance against war."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - BILL DOWNS

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: President Eisenhower today announced the continuation of American aid to Yugoslavia, and for that story, here is Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: The President's decision to continue aid to Yugoslavia, carries with it several strings and not a few carrots. President Eisenhower's statement declares that Marshal Tito will not get some 200 jet fighter bombers specified in the original military aid program. But he will get spare parts and maintainence supplies to keep running the American war machines he already has. The major portion of the economic aid will be in foodstuffs badly needed by Yugoslavia's bankrupt Communist agricultural economy, and it a - around this wheat (cough) pardon me, lard and cotton that now revolves United States policy toward the rebel Communist country. Actually, this policy began some eight years ago during the Truman administration, a policy which offered aid to any country willing to join us in building defenses against Russian expansion.

When Stalin kicked Tito out of the Cominform, the United States seized to - to provok - promote that split. Thus, was the thing called Titoism born and maintained and it has survived Stalinism. The new leaders of Russia k now are attempting to woo Tito back into the fold. This has been the meaning of the Bulganin and Krush - Khrushchev visit to Belgrade and Khrushchev's vacation on the island of Brioni and the subsequent mystery trip by Tito to meet with other European Communist leaders at Yalta.

Now Tito has been back from Yalta for eleven days. Our State Department has received assurances that Yugoslavia's policy of independence from Russia has not changed, and President Eisenhower has complied with the law and reported to Congress that Yugoslav aid can proceed.

But there are strings on this, too. The Presidential announcement says that Russian designs against Yugoslavia are more subtle than heretofore and perhaps, says the President, Yugoslavia does not adequately appreciate the danger nor adequately defend herself against these Kremlin designs. In other words, the White House is calling on Tito to prove that he is as independent of Khrushchev and Bulganin as he was of Stalin.

How Tito will do this remains to be seen, but an interesting thing now is happening in Yugoslavia. During the past ten days, Communist Party delegations from Poland, Italy and now Hungary have been making pilgrimages to Belgrade to talk with Tito. Whether these party visits are designed to put pressure on Tito, or whether this is evidence of greater independence among the Communist satellites is not clear. American Intelligence reports, particularly from Poland, indicate that there is a tendency among the national Communist parties to get out from under Moscow's domination. Such a splintering of Kremlin influence in eastern Europe would be a major victory for the West.

Meanwhile, officials of the Yugoslav and the United States governments will begin bilateral discussions on the amount of wheat, fats and cotton to be granted under our economic aid program. Just how much economic aid Yugoslavia will get will depend on Tito's next moves. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

Jordan has requested an urgent meeting of the United Nations Security Council to take up what it calls "the most serious situation" created by Israeli attacks. The Council is expected to hear Jordan's complaint on Thursday.

The United Nations truce supervisor, General Burns, reported from Jerusalem today that Israel's refusal to let United Nations observers investigate border incidents has "paralyzed" operations of the Mixed Armistice Commission. Burns said he felt duty - bound to point out "the obvious dangers involved."

The British Foreign Office commented today on the possibility that troop reinforcements may be sent into Jordan from Iraq. Britain, it said, has reassured Israel that such a move would .. in the British view.."contribute to stability in the area."

Israel accused Irqq today of "a desire for territorial expansion and aggression against Israel." And the Israeli foreign ministry said, "Whoever encourages Iraq, actively or passively, in the realization of its schemes, takes upon himself grave responsibility." The Isreeli statement noted that Irac does not recognize Israel and that a state of war exists between the two countries.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that if troops go into Jordan from Iraq, it would constitute a violation of the 1949 armistice. And Israel, he warned, would reserve its right to "freedom of action" in such an event. He said Israel will keep on trying to get defensive arms from the United States. The United States, he said, has encouraged other countries to supply arms to Israel, but "we cannot be content with this encouragement alone." With regard to Suez, Ben Gurion said Israel had received assurances from "several governments" that Israel's right to navigation through the canal will be safeguarded through a "regime of free navigation for all peoples."

In Washington, Democratic Senator Mansfield tonight accused the Administration of taking "belated" action in the Suez crisis. What has been gained, he said, is "a temproary respite", not a "just and lasting solution." Mansfield who is a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said there may well be a "bloodbath" in the Middle East if the western countries don't stop what he called "their stalling tactics."

President Eisenhower today announced the continuation of American aid to Yugosla ia. And for that story, here is Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: The President's decision to continue aid to Yugoslavia, carries with it several strings and not a few carrots. President Eisenhower's statement declares that Marhsal Tito will not get some 300 jet fighter bombers specified in the original military aid program. But he will get spare parts and maintainence supplies to keep running the American war machines he already has. The major portion of the economic aid will be in food stuffs badly needed by Yugoslavia's bankrupt Communist agricultural economy, and around this wheat lard and cotton that now revolves United States policy toward the rebel Communist country. Actually, this policy began some eight years ago during the Truman administration, a policy which offered aid to any country willing to join us in building defenses against Russian expansion.

When Stalin kicked Tito out of the Cominform, the United States seized to provoke that split. Thus, was the thing called Titoism born and maintained and it has survived Stalinism. The new laders of Russia now are attempting to woo Tito back into the fold. This has been the meaning of the Bulganin and Khrushchev visit to Belgrade and Khrushchev's vacation of the island of Brioni and the subsequent mystery trip by Tito to meet with other European Communist leaders at Yalta.

Now Tito has been back from Yalta for eleven days. Our State Department has received assurances that Yugoslavia's policy of independence from Russia has not changed, and President Eisenhower has complied with the law and reported to Congress that Yugoslav aid can proceed.

But there are strings on this, too. The Presidential announcement says that Russian designs against Yugoslavia are more subtle than heretofore and perhaps, says the President, Yugoslavia does not adequately appreciate the danger nor adequately defend herself against these Kremlin designs. In other words, the White House is calling on Tito to prove that he is as independent of Khrushchev and Bulganin as he was of Stalin.

How Tito will do this remains to be seen, but an interesting thing now is happening in Yugoslavia. During the past ten days, Communist Party delegations from Poland, Italy and now Hungary have been making pilgrimages to Belgrade to talk with Tito. Whether these party visits are designed to put pressure on Tito, or whether this is evidence of greater independence among the Communist satellites is not clear. American Intelligence reports, particularly from Poland, indicate that there is a tendency among the national Communist parties to get out from under Moscow's domination. Such a splintering of Kremlin influence in Eastern Europe would be a major victory for the West.

Meanwhile, officials of the Yugoslav and the United States governments will begin bilateral discussions on the amount of wheat, fats and cotton to be granted under our economic aid program. Just how much economic aid Yugoslavia will get will depend on Tito's next moves. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The President gave the final go-ahead today for construction of the first atomic-powered merchant ship. In a White House ceremony, Mr. Eisenhower said he wants the Atomic Energy Commission and the Commerce Department to proceed with the project "as rapidly as possible." Forty-two million dollars to build the ship was voted at the last session of Congress.

Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will leave Washington for the West Coast to make a series of political talks. The White House announced today that in addition to the speeches scheduled for Washington and Oregon, the President will make a major address in Los Angeles on Friday night.

In Libertyville, Illinois, today, Adlai Stevenson lunched the nationwide "Dollars for Democrats" drive by calling at the home of William G. Wells, a retired shoe salesman. Mr. Wells described himself as the "other " Democrat in Libertyville and donated five dollars.

The crisis in the Middle East might be called about the same as usual today, only more so. That is, there is no fundamental improvement, and the danger of serious trouble mounts. This is true of both prongs of the crisis, the one over Suez and the one of Israeli-Arab relations.

To speak first of Suez, the prolonged debate in the Security Council of the United Nations ended in the adoption of six principles. But only one of them could be called an advance over agreements in the past. That was the clause calling for the "insulation" of the canal from politics. However, no progress was made toward finding a guarantee to assure this insulation, and that left the big issue of practical safeguards unsolved.

The British now want to press ahead, set up the canal users' association at once, have the association collect all tolls from its members, and see what President Nasser does about it. If he holds back British ships, Britain is presumed to be ready to push them through the canal by force. London has asked the United States to have all American vessels pay tolls to the association, a decision what Washington has not yet made, or at least announced. It has not been suggested that we use force if our ships are held up.

By and large this is about there the crisis stood before it reached the United Nations. Maybe the fruitless experience at the U.N. was needed to pressure the negotiators into making more concessions. But it also may be that the prospects for successful negotiations are growing less bright. It seems fair to say that the optimism with which President Eisenhower hailed the news from inside the Security Council before the Russial veto was not on display in Washington today. The British point out that the fight for international operation of the canal was lost, after Egypt has stressed that President Eisenhower had shown satisfaction with the six principles.

Today the hope for further negotiations seems to lie in Egypt's interpretation of what it calls "co-operation between the canal authority and the users of the canal." How this can be turned into a guarantee that Egypt will not exploit its control of the canal politically, and still leave Egyptian sovereignty uncompromised, remains the chief unanswered question.

The crisis between Israel and Jordan may appear to be quite separate from the Suez dispute, but it probably isn't. The Jordanian Government is shaky. Elections are due on Sunday. An outbreak of violence is feared. Nasser's influence in Jordan is increasing. It has been proposed that an undisclosed number of troops from Irac be moved into Jordan. This plan has strong British backing. Iraq is an ally of Britain; her army is British trained. But Iraq is still at war with Israel; and the Israelis are naturally not enthusiastic about having a few thousand additional enemy troops on their frontier.

Britain tells the Israelis, in effect, that the troops from Iraq will help maintain order in Jordan, and also help maintain King Hussein in power. They say that if Hussein is flung out, then Jordan will be completely dominated by Nasser, and that would be worse for Israel than the present state of affairs. But Israel is not comforted by these assurances; has called home her principal ambassadors, and warned Britain in the most solemn terms about the dangers involved in moving Iraqui troops into Jordan.

The British obviously want to support the anti-Nasser elements in the Arab world. Tho Israelis's won't object to that, but they don't want any more of their enemies on their border.

The Egyptians, of course, take a totally different view of this complex situation. They are inclined to think the whole crisis between Israel and Jordan has been maneuvered by the British as a method of increasing the power of King Feisal of Iraq, who is an ally of Britain and Nasser's cheif rival for Arab leadership. The Egyptians also believe that this is Britain's method of applying pressure to get a settlement on Suez.

In this incredibly complex situation the tension between Israel and Jordan has reached the point where it may get out of hand. So it seems fair to say that the crisis in the Middle East -- including Suez -- is no better than it was, and might be getting a little worse.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with thw Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is mounting danger in the Middle East. Woodrow Wilson said, "Nobody can guarantee thw world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But", he said, "if the nations of the world will, in deed and truth, agree to put arbitration and discussion always first..and war always last.. I say that we have an immense insurance against war."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 16, 1956

This is the news:

Jordan said today that in the event of another heavy Israeli raid, it will invoke aid from Britain and Iraq. Britain has a treaty with Jordan; so does Iraq. But under a new agreement, Iraq will not send troop reinforcements into Jordan, at this time. Instead, Iraqi troops will be stationed near the Jordan frontier, ready to move in an emergency. Prime Minister Ben Gurion warned yesterday that Israel would reserve "freedom of action", if Iraq sent its armed forces into Jordan.

Syria announced today that it is supplying Jordan with heavy weapons as a gift from the Syrian people. The arms reportedly include Czech field artillery, mortars and tanks.

British Prime Minister Eden flew to Paris today to discuss the Middle East situation with French leaders. A French spokesman said they are taking up the Suez problem, where the United Nations Security Council left off, as well as the uneasy truce between Israel and the Arab states.

The French National Assembly debated the Suez crisis today. Former Premier Paul Reynaud demanded to know why France had threatened to use force against Egypt and had not done so. Foreign Minister Pineau told the Assembly that both France and Britain would have liked more support from the United States.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles noted that Jordan is getting arms from Syria and said the "real purpose" of this remains to be seen. The United States, he said, stands by its pledge to come to the assistance of any victim of aggression in the Middle East---within its constitutional means."

Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that "progress" has been made toward achieving a just and peaceful solution of the Suez crisis. Many difficulties remain. "Nevertheless," he said, "each difficulty overcome means one less difficulty remaining to be overcome."

He said the United States will continue to support Japan's bid for membership in the United Nations.

Mr. Dulles commented on the proposal of Adlai Stevenson for stopping hydrogen bomb tests. He did not mention Mr. Stevenson by name, but said he doubts very much that persons not fully acquainted with the problem are in a position to find a solution. So many important details, he said, are necessarily secret. He added that President Eisenhower has both the will and the necessary knowledge to move ahead to such a goal as part of a world disarmament plan. If there is an effective way to limit the use of these bombs, he said, the President will find it.

Vice President Nixon will make a detailed reply to Stevenson tonight in a speech in Buffalo. Earlier today... in Evansville, Indiana... Nixon said Stevenson is "dangerously wrong" about suspending H-bomb tests without "a fool-proof inspection system" first.

In Flint, Michigan tonight, former Governor Dewey will say that Stevenson has changed his mind on the subject five times, but that... in Dewey's words... "it still adds up to an invitation to national suicide."

At a news conference, here in New York, Senator Kefauver said he is in full agreement with Stevenson that further testing of hydrogen bombs is dangerous and should be stopped. Kefauver said it is the belief of scientists that the United States now has an H-bomb potential "capable of blowing the earth off its axis by 16 degrees." The atomic scientist... Dr. Ralph Lapp... said tonight that he knows nothing "within the realm of scientific fact" to substantiate such a statement.

President Eisenhower left Washington today on a five-day barnstorming tour in which he will make eight speeches in five western states. Mr. Eisenhower's first stop was Minneapolis, where he said his administration is trying "to dedicate the atom---not to destruction---but to the constructive service of our civilization." The President said his administration has provided "clean, honest government" and "a strong, up-to-date, alert national defense." The farmers of the country, he said, are "over the hump". Mr. Eisenhower received a warm reception in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and now he goes on to the West Coast. He's due back in Washington Saturday night.

A Pan-American passenger plane developed engine trouble, and was ditched in the Pacific Ocean today, a thousand miles off San Francisco. All 31 persons aboard were rescued by a Coast Guard CUTTER ship on the scene.

The Pan-American strato-cruiser was a Tokyo-to-San Francisco flight. The pilot... Captain Richard Ogg... circled the cutter for nearly five hours, waiting for daylight before ditching the aircraft in a fairly rough sea. (The cutter was on regular weather and navigation duty). The airplane broke up and sank in 21 minutes. The survivors... all in good condition... will be brought to San Francisco on the Coast Guard vessel.

The Navy announced today that its new, secret missile... the Sidewinder... has been delivered to units of the United States fleet. The Sidewinder gets its name from a species of rattlesnake, and its mission is to knock down super-sonic aircraft. The new missile is simple in construction and operation. Its speed and range, remain classified.

Edward R. Murrow: October 16, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

At a time when mankind is able to destroy itself with nuclear weapons, no subject would seem more appropriate for discussion in an election campaign than the prevention of atomic warfare. Certainly Mr. Stevenson intends to go on talking about the hydrogen bomb, and to press his proposal to end all tests of it.

Since this is the only topic thus far introduced in the campaign that bears even remotely on disarmament and its controls, no exception need be taken to its being raised, in ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ the opinion of this reporter. Mr. Stevenson's address last night was a sober discussion of the ~~almost~~ ~~incalculable~~ unprecedented dangers that come with the H-bomb.

In raising the subject, Mr. Stevenson was asking for room with Mr. Eisenhower on the platform for peace. No doubt he considers it good leadership to do so, and also good politics. He knows that the President's greatest pull with many voters is that he ended the fighting in Korea, and with some, that he vetoed a war with Red China over the Asian off-shore islands.

It does not disparage Mr. Stevenson's dedication to peace to point out that banning the H-bomb tests, actually has no direct connection with peace. We and the Russians already have the H-bomb, and could use it in a war whether we went on with the tests or not. Mr. Stevenson did not propose to ban the weapons, or the development of other weapons. His chief argument against the H-bomb tests was the danger to people from the increased radiation that would result if the tests continue.

This argument has an imposing weight of scientific opinion behind it. We do not yet know how much radiation the human race can safely stand. We know that radiation is a silent and menacing thing. The perils may well be greater than we suppose. Geneticists tell horrible things about the possibility of mutations. They can affect future generations without our even being aware of it. It is not impossible that the human race should die out as the result of mutations. The amount of radiation present in the atmosphere today may be well below the level of tolerance. But that would not justify adding to it.

Mr. Stevenson declared that the British and Russians are ready to ban the tests. In March the Russians in the disarmament negotiations in London proposed to discontinue forthwith the tests of thermo-nuclear explosions. And in July Sir Anthony Eden told the British Parliament that Britain would join the United States and Soviet Union in an agreement to limit H-bomb tests. He used the word "limit" rather than "ban", but it may be a quibble to say that Britain is not pledged to the ban. Surely it would go along if the others did.

The H-bomb, however, is by no means an ideal subject for public debate. To start with, the general public has not been allowed to know much about it, for reasons of security. It has never been authoritatively told what our H-bomb is, or what the first and second Soviet H-bombs were. There have been hints that the first Russian bomb was bigger than our first one because it used a better material, but we did better with our second one, so much better, in fact that our scientists were dumfounded. Since then our H-bombs have been considerably smaller, it is said, but no reason for that fact has been advanced.

The public doesn't know how big a hydrogen bomb can be. It doesn't know to what extent it can be used to spread death-bringing poison over vast stretches of the earth. It doesn't know whether the H-bomb could be made still more horrible without further testing. Debate about a subject so carefully wrapped in secrecy can't be very convincing. There is another angle. Scientists hope one day to control the fusion of the hydrogen atom, and so to harness this power for peacetime uses. If this is achieved, the human race would have unlimited power for the rest of its existence. To what extent this research can go on if H-bomb tests are banned also is not clear.

Mr. Stevenson last night was careful not to propose anything that entailed one-sided risks for us. He was for full preparedness, and the maintenance of adequate power for deterrence. He ~~even~~ wanted to develop the long-range ballistic missiles. What he was against was nuclear war, just as Mr. Eisenhower repeatedly has been against it.

It is fair to suggest there are more fruitful ways to approach the problem of preventing war than banning the H-bomb, even though starting with that would make for good will. The policy of the United States in the disarmament discussions has been a bewildering zig-zag. It would be highly instructive to hear it criticized and defended. True, disarmament is a complex subject, but not more so than nuclear physics, and controlled disarmament, of course, is the key to permanent peace.

It may be that the control of disarmament can't be solved at present, and for this reason disarmament is now unattainable. For example, there is no way to detect the existence of secreted nuclear weapons. But if total disarmament is impossible now, how much disarmament would be safe. That is a big question, but surely not too big for an election campaign, and not bigger than the H-bomb. Americans who are able to face the facts of life, presumably are adult enough also face the facts of death.

George Bryan.-

Word for Today

In urging an end to hydrogen bomb tests, Adlai Stevenson doubtless would agree with Ellen Glasgow that "the only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimensions." The Administration, on the other hand, might quote William Sumner, who said: "Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1956
7L45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

Jordan said today that in the event of another heavy Israeli raid, it will invoke aid from Britain and Iraq. Britain has a treaty with Jordan; so does Iraq. But under a new agreement, Iraq will not send troop reinforcements into Jordan at this time. Instead, Iraqui troops will be stationed near the Jordan frontier, ready to move in an emergency.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion warned yesterday that Israel would reserve "freedom of action", if Iraq sent its armed forces into Jordan.

Syria announced today that it is supplying Jordan with heavy weapons "as a gift from the Syrian people". The arms reportedly include Czech field artillery, mortars and tanks.

British Prime Minister Eden flew to Paris today to disucss the Middle East situation with French leaders. A French spokesman said they are taking up the Suez problem where the United Nations Security Council left off, as well as the uneasy truce between Israel and the Arab states.

The French National Assembly debated the Suez crisis today. Former Premier Paul Reynaud demanded to know why France had threatened to use force against Egypt and had not done so. Foreign Minister Pineau told the Assembly that both France and Britain would have liked more support from the United States.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles noted that Jordan is getting arms from Syria, and said the "real purpose" of this remains to be seen. The United States, he said, stands by its pledge to come to the assistance of any victim of aggression in the Middle East--"within its constitutional means."

Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that "progress" has been made toward achieving a just and peaceful solution of the Suez cirsis. Many difficulties remain. "Nevertheless," he said, "each difficulty overcome means one less difficulty remaining to be overcome."

He said the United States will continue to support Japan's bit for membership in the United Nations.

Mr. Dulles commented on the proposal of Adlai Stevenson for stopping hydrogen bomb tests. He did not mention Mr. Stevenson by name, but he said he doubts very much that persons not fully acquainted with the problem are in a position to find a solution. So many important details, he said, are necessarrily secret. He added that President Eisenhower has both the will and the necessary knowledge to move ahead to such a goal as part of a world disarmament pland. If there is an effective way to limit the use of tesse bombs, he said, the President will find it.

Vice President Nixon will make a detailed reply to Stevenson tonight in a speech in Buffalo. Earlier today..in Evansville, Indiana, Nixon said Stevenson is "dangerously wrong" about suspending H-bomb tests without "a fool-proof inspection system" first

At a news conference, here in New York, Senator Kefauver s aid he is in full agreement with Stevenson that further testing hf hydrogem bombs is danderous and should be stopped. Kefauver said it is the belief of scientists that the United States now has an H-bomb potential "capable of blowing the earth off its axis by 16 degrees." The atomic scientist, Dr. Ralph Lapp, said tonight that he knows nothing "within the realm of scientific fact" to substantiate such a statement.

President Eisenhower left Washington today on a five-day barnstorming tour in which he will make eight speeches in five western states. Mr. Eisenhower's first stop was Minneapolis, where he said his administration is trying "to dedicate the atom---not to destruction--but to the constructive service of our civilization." The President said his administration has provided "clean, honest government" and "a strong, up-to-date, alert national defense." The farmers of the country, he said, are "over the hump". Mr. Eisenhower received a warm reception in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and now he goes on to the West Coast. He's due back in Washington Saturday night.

A Pan-American passenger plane developed engine trouble and was ditched in the Pacific Ocean today, a thousand miles off San Francisco. All 31 persons aboard were rescued by a Coast Guard cutter on the scene.

The Navy announced today that its new, secret missile, the Sidewinder, has been delivered to units of the United States fleet. The Sidewinder gets its name from a species of rattlesnake, and its mission is to knock down super-sonic aircraft. The new missile is simple in construction and operation. Its speed and range remain classified.

At a time when mankind is able to destroy itself with nuclear weapons, no subject would seem more appropriate for discussion in an election campaign than the prevention of atomic warfare. Certainly Mr. Stevenson intends to go on talking about the hydrogen bomb, and to press his proposal to end all tests of it.

Since this is the only topic thus far introduced in the campaign that bears even remotely on disarmament and its controls, no exception need be taken to its being raised in the opinion of this reporter. Mr. Stevenson's address last night was a sober discussion of the unprecidented dangers that come with the H-bomb.

In raising the subject Mr. Stevenson was asking for room with Mr. Eisenhower on the platform for peace. No doubt he considers it good leadership to do so, and also good poltitcs. He knows that the President's greatest pull with many voters is that he ended the fighting in Korea, and with some that he vetoes a war with Red China over the Asian off-shore islands.

It does not disparage Mr. Stevenson's dedication to peace to point out that banning the H-bomb tests, actually has no direct connection with peace. We and the Russians already have the H bomb and could use it in a war whether we went on with the tests or not. Mr. Stevenson did not propose to ban the weapons, or the development of other weapons. His chief argument against the H bomb tests was the danger to people from the increased radiation that would result if the tests continue.

This argument was an imposing weight of scientific opinion behind it. We do not yet know how much radiation the human race can safely stand. We know that radiation is a silent and menacing thing. The perils may well be greater than we suppose. Geneticists tell horrible things about the possibility of mutations. They can affect future generations without our even being aware of it. It is not impossible that the human race should die out as the result of mutations. The amount of radiation present in the atmosphere today may be well below the level of tolerance. But that would not justify adding to it.

Mr. Stevensnn declared that the British and Russians are ready to ban the tests. In March the Russians in the disarmement negotiations in London proposed to discontinue forthwith the tests of thermo-nuclear explosions. And in July S r Anthony Eden told the British Parliament that Britain would join the United States and Soviet Union in an agreement to limit H-bomb tests. He used the word "limit" rather than "ban", but it may be a quibble to say that Britain is not pledged to the ban. Surely it would go along if the others did.

The H-bomb, however, is by no means an ideal subject for public debate. To start with, the general public has not been allowed to know much about it, for reasons of security. It has never been authoritatively told what our H-bomb is, or what the first and second Soviet H-bombs were. There have been hints that the first Russian bomb was bigger than our first one, because it used a better material, but we did better with our second one, so much better, in fact, that our scientists were dumbfounded. Since then our H-bombs have been considerably smaller, it is said, but no reason for that fact has been advanced.

The public doesn't know how big a hydrogen bomb can be. It doesn't know to what extent it can be used to spread death-bringing poi over vast stretches of the earth. It doesn't know whether the H-bomb could be made still more horrible without further testing. Debate about a subject so carefully wrapped insecercy can't be very convincing. There is another angle. Scientists hope one day to control the fusion of the hydrogen atom, and so to harness this power for peacetime uses. If this is achieved, the human race would have unlimited power for the rest of its existenc.e To what extent this research can go on if H-bomb tests are banned also is not clear.

Mr. Stevenson last night was careful not to propost anything that entailed one-sided risks for us. He was for full preparedness, and the maintenance of edequate power for deterrend. He wanted to develop the long-range ballistic missiles. That he was against was nuclear war, just as Mr. Eisenhower repeatedly has geen against it.

It is fair to suggest there are more frutiful waysto approach the problem of preventing war than banning the H-bomb, even though starting with that would make for good will. The polciy of the United States in the disarmament discussions has been a bewildering zig-zag. It would be highly instructive to hear it critcized and defended. True, disarmament is a complex subject, but not more so than nuclear physics, and controlled disarmament, of course, is the key to permanent peace.

It may be that the control of disarmamant can't be solved at present, and for this reason disarmament is now unattainable. For example, there is no way to detect the existence of secreted neclear weapons. But if total disarmament is impossible now, how much disarmament would be safe. That is a big question, but surely not too big for an election campaign, and not bigger than the H-bomb. Americans who are able to fact the facts of life, presumably are adult enough to fact the facts of death.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: In urging an end to hydrogen bomb tests, Adlai Stevenson doubtless would agree with Ellen Glasgow that "the only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimensions." The Administration. on the other hand, might quote William Sumner, who said: "Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 17, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower has ordered Administration experts to prepare "a complete history" on the subject of the hydrogen bomb. White House News Secretary Hagerty said the action is being taken because of "incorrect statements" Adlai Stevenson has made in advocating the suspension of hydrogen bomb tests. The report is being written under the direction of Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of Defense Wilson, and Lewis Straws, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. Hagerty said every detail will be included, except "some matters" in the security field. The report will be issued sometime next week.

The Soviet delegate to the United Nations said tonight, that Russia "is ready to enter now into an agreement for an immediate halt to the testing of nuclear weapons---without conditions." He made no reference to Mr. Stevenson's proposal.

Will Mahe -

President Eisenhower made what is called "a hard-hitting speech" tonight in Seattle, Washington. He rapped the Deomcratic platform, declaring "one might think its authors inhabited some land just lately swept by famine and pestilence." Democratic campaigners, he said, have been putting out "political fables". And he accused Adlai Stevenson of resorting to "the big straddle"---the "old-fashioned double standard otherwise known as the rubber yardstick." Mr. Eisenhower then went on to list what he regarded as the accomplishments of his administration.

Vice President Nixon toured upstate New York today... mostly by train... and said that "more and more" we need the Eisenhower brand of leadership. "Because of the dangers," Nixon said, "there have been several times when leaders less experienced could have involved the United States in war."

[Secretary Dulles will say tonight... in a speech sponsored by the Republican National Committee... that Mr. Eisenhower has more "capacity" for achieving peace "than any man I know." Dulles will cite as examples the Allied victory in Europe and the ending of the Korean War.]

Adlai Stevenson said in a speech in Kalamazoo, Michigan, today that "the most shameless thing" the Republicans have done in the current campaign has been "to claim credit for the peace of the world." What peace there is, Stevenson said, was won by Americans who fought and died. Later... in a speech in Battle Creek... the Democratic candidate told a whistle-stop audience he would never "give up the battle to win peace in this hydrogen age."

His running mate, Senator Kefauver, said in a Missouri speech that the world today is in what he called "a condition of armistice". The President and Mr. Dulles, he said, apparently are not thinking in terms of "a grand design for peace"... otherwise they would have accomplished more at the "summit meeting" in Geneva.

Israel accused Jordan today of "persistent violation" of the Palestine armistice... and called on the United Nations Security Council to hear its case. The Israeli charge counters a complaint filed by Jordan in which Israel is accused of endangering the peace. The Security Council will meet Friday to hear Jordan's complaint.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli parliament today gave Prime Minister Ben Gurion a vote of confidence. The vote was 76 to 13. Ben Gurion summed up the two-day policy debate by reaffirming Israel's "freedom of action" if troop reinforcements move into Jordan from Iraq.

In Cairo, the Egyptian defense minister said Egypt would "enter into battle immediately" if war is waged against any Arab state.

And in London today, the Foreign Office indicated that British aid will not be automatic if Jordan is attacked. A Foreign Office spokesman said that under its treaty with Jordan, Britain would have to decide "that the circumstances warranted action being taken." The government in London, he said, would have to take the decision---not the British officers on the scene.

British officials are ~~willing~~ READY to call off negotiations in the Suez dispute, unless Egypt comes up with a concrete alternative to international control. (Last night, in Paris, the British and French issued a joint communique, inviting Egypt to produce an alternate plan, that would give the canal users "equivalent guarantees"). My colleague, Howard K. Smith, cables me that Britain is now prepared to play a strictly passive role. If Egypt makes a concrete proposal, the British will listen and negotiate. But, Smith says, if Egypt simply wants more exploratory talks (as it indicated today), then Britain will balk... because it feels there has been more than enough exploration already. Britain would then go ahead... with France... to build the canal users association into a going concern as soon as possible.

The Council of Europe... now meeting in Strasbourg... made a proposal today in the Suez dispute. A committee of the Council of Europe proposed that the United Nations help set up a court that could authorize sanctions against Egypt for any breach of international contract.

The premier of Afghanistan arrived in Moscow today for talks with Soviet leaders. An important buffer state between Europe and Asia, Afghanistan recently was granted a hundred million dollars in Soviet aid.

Yugoslavia said today that it has proposed a new form of economic aid from the United States. The Yugoslav statement... issued in Belgrade... revealed a plan whereby the Tito government would buy American farm surpluses on long-term credits. "Thus," the statement said, "certain comments would be avoided which do not contribute to confidence and friendship between our two countries." The other day, President Eisenhower said economic aid to Yugoslavia is being continued... but that further military assistance is being withheld until Yugoslavia's relationship with Russia can be more accurately accessed. Yugoslavia bristled at this today. It said no threat to the independence of Yugoslavia... on the part of the Soviet Union... exists.

In England today, Queen Elizabeth pulled a master switch and... for the first time... electricity produced by an atomic power plant began flowing into British homes. The first output amounted to only about 10 megawatts, or enough to meet the needs of a small town. Gradually this will be stepped up.

Edward R. Murrow: October 17, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

When the presidential campaign started off, several things about it seemed fairly certain. One was that the farmers were in revolt and the Republicans might lose the farm belt. Another was that Mr. Nixon would be the storm center in the campaign, and wherever he went the barometer would fall and the winds rise. Another was that foreign policy would provide at least one of the big public issues separating the party. Another was that the President's health was bound to be a big issue, and that he could take only a limited part in the campaign.

It may give a line on how the election is shaping up to see what has happened to these particular expectations.

First of all, most reports from the grass roots agree that the farm revolt is considerably weaker than anticipated. There is dissatisfaction over lower farm incomes, but the soil-bank checks are in sight, and they seem to be soothing farm feelings already. No stampede of farmers to the Democratic side is foreseen. Farmers probably trust Eisenhower more for keeping the peace, than they distrust him for backing Secretary Benson's flexible price controls. The Democrats are not banking on a repeat of the '48 election when it was the farm belt that tipped the scales for Truman.

As to Nixon, he has not been anything faintly resembling a storm center. He has maintained an unruffled dignity. The Democrats have done their best to needle him into losing his poise, but has stayed sedately on the high road. They hoped to make the Nixon of 1956 a big issue of the campaign. They have had to be satisfied with talking of the Nixon of '52 and '54, and to call attention to the Nixon of 1960.

Foreign policy sometimes has played a big role in the fight between the parties. With isolationism on the one hand, and full participation in world affairs on the other, real passion can be stirred up. But no such gulf separates the parties today. Democratic speakers have pointed to signs of rising disillusionment abroad with American leadership. They say American prestige is falling in Europe, American influence is declining in Asia, and American behavior in the Middle East has been ruinously indecisive. But such charges are aimed not so much at Administration policies as the way they have been conducted. The Republicans are accused, not of doing the wrong things, but of not doing the right things well. And that is hardly political fighting in high gear.

The one made-to-order issue for campaign purposes was the handling of the Suez crisis. This roused strong feelings in Britain, France and especially Israel. It could easily do so in this country. But Mr. Stevenson renounced the issue, on the ground that Secretary Dulles was in negotiation and must not be hampered by home attacks. This show of responsibility may by now have become a pattern for election campaigns. Mr. Eisenhower was briefed by Central Intelligence in '52, and Mr. Dewey four years before. Mr. Stevenson is getting the C.I.A. reports. He couldn't very well criticize the handling of the Suez crisis without appearing to take advantage of secret information.

Perhaps the biggest change in expectations is over the President's health. By now the modest program of six T.V. AND RADIO addresses has been supplemented by cross-continental tours, several lesser ones, and personal appearances all along the line. The Democrats can say the Republicans are running scared, and, indeed, the Maine and Alaska elections were omens that hard-headed politicians could not ignore. Mr. Nixon has been bombarding the Republican Committee with warnings against complacency. But if Mr. Eisenhower's heavier schedule proves the Republicans are not taking anything for granted, it also shows that Mr. Eisenhower feels fit and able to do the heavier campaigning.

Actually the President, when seen in the flesh, looks astonishingly well, considering what he has gone through. He looks as though he hadn't gone through it. And when seen on television he looks quite a different and older man. The personal presence of the President arouses enthusiasm. Mr. Eisenhower loves it, he responds to it. He is far more effective before a roaring crowd or while lifting his arms from the bubble-top of his car than in a T.V. studio. So he is going places, lots of places, and the traditional campaign techniques are pushing electronics aside. But any Democrats who thought the President would lose many, many votes because of his heart attack and operation are having to revise their opinion.

These, then, are some of the changed factors of the campaign. They don't all point in the same direction. But as of now, it seems certain that the election will be close, much closer than four years ago.

George Ryan

Word for Today

The political campaign is not following the expected pattern. In making more personal appearances than originally planned, President Eisenhower would seem to be taking the counsel of Plautus, who said, "One eye-witness weighs more than ten hearsays. Those who hear speak what they have heard. Those who see know beyond mistake."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

President Eisenhower has ordered Administration experts to prepare "a complete history" on the subject of the hydrogen bomb. White House News Secretary Hagerty said the action is being taken because of "incorrect statements" Adlai Stevenson has made in advocating the suspension of hydrogen bomb tests. The report is being written under the direction of Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of Defense Wilson, and Lewis Straws, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. Hagerty said every detail will be included, except "some matters" in the security field. The report will be issued sometime next week.

The Soviet delegate to the United Nations said tonight that Russia "is ready to enter now into an agreement for an immediate halt to the testing of nuclear weapons--without conditions." He made no reference to Mr. Stevenson's proposal.

President Eisenhower wlll make what is called "a hard hitting speech" tonight in Seattle, Washington. He rapped the Democratic platform, declaring "one might think its authors inhabited some land just lately swept by famine and pestilence." Democratic campaigners, he said, have been putting out "political fables". And he accused Adlai Stevenson of resorting to "the big straddle" the old fashioned double standard otherwise known as the rubber yardstick." Mr. Eisenhower then went on to list what he regarded as the accomplishplishments of his administration..

Vice President Nixon toured upstate New York today, mostly by train, and said that "more and more" we need the Eisenhower brand of leadership. "Because of the dangers", Nixon said, "there have been several times when leaders less experienced could have involved the United States in war."

Adlai Stevenson said in a speech in Kalamazoo, Michigan, today that "the most shameless thing" the Republicans have done in the current campaign has been to claim credit for the peace of the world." What peace there is, Stevenson said, was won by Americans who fought and died. Later, in a speech in Battle Creek, the Democratic candidate told a whistel-stop audience he would never "give up the battle to win peace in this hydrogen age."

His running mate. Senator Kefauver, said in a Missouri speech that the world today is in what he called "a condition of armistice." The President and Mr. Dulles, he said, apparently are not thinking in terms of "a grand design for peace." Otherwise they would have accomplished more at the "summit meeting" in Geneva.

Israel accused Jordan today of "persistent violation" of the Palestine armistice..and called on the United Nations Security Council to hear its case. The Israeli charge counters a complaint filed by Jordan in which Israel is accused of endangering the peace. The Security Council will meet Friday to hear Jordan's complaint.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli parliament today gave Prime Minister Ben Gurion a vote of confidence. The vote was 76 to 13. Ben Gurion summed up the two-day policy debate by reaffirming Israel's "freedom of action" if troop reinforcements move into Jordan from Iraq.

In Cairo, the Egyptian defense minister said Egypt would "enter into battle immediately" if war was waged against any Arab state.

And in London today, the Foreign Office indicated that British aid will not be automatic if Jordan is attacked. A Foreign Office spokesman said that under its treaty with Jordan, Britain would have to decide "that the circumstances warranted action being taken." The government in London, he said, would have to take the decision not the British officers on the scene.

British officials are ready to call off negotiations in the Suez dispute, unless Egypt comes up with a concrete alternative to international control. (Last night, in Paris, the British and French issued a joint communique inviting Egypt to produce an alternate plan that would give the canal users "equivalent guarantees") My colleague, Howard K. Smith, cables me that Britain is now prepared to play a strictly passive role. If Egypt makes a concrete proposal, the British will listen and negotiate. But, Smith says, if Egypt simply wants more exploratory talks (as it indicated today), then the British will balk because it feels there has been more than enough exploration already. Britain would then go ahead with France to build the canal users association into a going concern as soon as possible.

The premier of Afghanistan arrived in Moscow today for talks with Soviet leaders. An important buffer state between Europe and Asia, Afghanistan recently was granted a hundred million collars in Soviet aid.

Yugoslavia said today that it has proposed a new form of economic aid from the United States. The Yugoslav statement, issued in Belgrade, revealed a plan whereby the Tito government would buy American farm surpluses on long-term credits. "Thus", the statement said, "certain comments would be avoided which do not contribute to confidence and friendship between our two countries." The other day, President Eisenhower said economic aid to Yugoslavia is being continued but that further military assistance is being withheld until Yugoslavia's relationship with Russia can be more accurately accessed. Yugoslavia bristled at this today. It said no threat to the independence of Yugoslavia, on the part of the Soviet Union exists.

When the presidential campaign started off, several things about it seemed fairly certain. One was that the farmers were in revolt and the Republicans might lose the farm belt. Another was that Mr. Nixon would be the storm center in the campaign, wherever he went the barometer would fall and the winds rise. Another was that foreign policy would provide at least one of the big public issues separating the party. Another was that the President's health was found to be a big issue, and that he could take only a limited part in the campaign.

It may give a line on how the election is shaping up to see what has happened to these particular expectations. First of all, most reports from the grass roots agree that the farm revolt is considerably weaker than anticipated. There is dissatisfaction over lower farm incomes, but the soil-bank checks are in sight, and they seem to be soothing farm feelings already. No stampede of farmers to the Democratic side is foreseen. Farmers probably trust Eisenhower more for keeping the peace, than they distrust him for backing Secretary Benson's flexible price controls. The Democrats are not banking on a repeat of the '48 election when it was the farm belt that tipped the scales for Truman.

As to Nixon, he has not been anything faintly resembling a storm center. He has maintained an unruffled dignity. The Democrats have done their best to needle him into losing his poise, but he has stayed sedately on the high road. They hoped to make the Nixon of 1956 a big issue of the campaign. They have had to be satisfied with talking of the Nixon of '52 and '54, and to call attention to the Nixon of 1960.

Foreign policy sometimes has played a big role in the fight between the parties. With isolationism on the one hand, and full participation in world affairs on the other, real passion can be stirred up. But no such gulf separates the parties today. Democratic speakers have pointed to signs of rising disillusionment abroad with American leadership. They say American prestige is falling in Europe, American influence is declining in Asia, and American behavior in the Middle East has been ruinously indecisive. But such charges are aimed not so much at Administration policies as the way they have been conducted. The Republicans are accused, not of doing the wrong things, but of not doing the right things well. And that is rarely political fighting in high gear.

The one made-to-order issue for campaign purposes was the handling of the Suez Crisis. This roused strong feelings in Britain, France and especially Israel. It could easily do so in this country. But Mr. Stevenson renounced the issue, on the ground that Secretary Dulles was in negotiation and must not be hampered by home attacks. This show of responsibility man now have become a pattern for election campaigns. Mr. Eisenhower was briefed by Central intelligence in '52, and Mr. Dewey four years before. Mr. Stevenson is getting the C.I.A. reports. He couldn't very well criticize the handling of the Suez crisis without appearing to take advantage of secret information.

Perhaps the biggest change in expectations is over the President's health. By now the modest program of six T.V. and radio addresses has been supplemented by cross-coutinental tours, several lesser ones, and personal appearances all along the line. The Democrats can say the Republicans are running scared, and, indeed, the Maine and Alaska elections were omens that hard-headed politicians could not ignore. Mr. Nixon has been bombarding the Republican Committee with warnings against complacency. But if Mr. Eisenhower's heavier schedule proves the Republicans are not taking anything for granted, it also shows that Mr. Eisenhower feels fit and able to do the heavier campaigning.

Actually the President, when seen in the flesh, looks astonishingly well, considering what he has gone through. He looks as though he hadn't gone through it. And when seen on television he looks quite a different and older man. The personal presence of the President arouses enthusiasm. Mr. Eisenhower loves it, he responds to it. He is far more effective before a roaring crowd or while lifting his arms from the bubble - top of his car than in a T.V. studio. So he is going places, lots of places, and the traditional campaign techniques are pushing electronics aside. But any Democrats who thought the President would lose many, many votes because of his heart attack and operation are having to revise their opinion.

These, then, are some of the changed factors in the campaign. They don't all point in the same direction! But as of now, it seems certain that the election will be close, much closer than four years ago.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The political campaign is not following the expected pattern. In making more personal appearances than originally planned, President Eisenhower would seem to be taking the counsel of Plautus, who said, "One eyewitness weighs more than ten hearsays. Those who hear speak what they have heard. Those who see know beyond mistake."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 18, 1956

This is the news:

Adlai Stevenson will make a speech in Youngstown, Ohio tonight, in which he will revive the issue of the draft. The text of Mr. Stevenson's speech shows him saying that the present draft system is... in his words... "an incredible waste" of money and manpower. A better way, he says, must be found to preserve the nation's military strength in this era of "shaky peace". Mr. Stevenson suggests that one way the problem could be attacked would be through a broad incentive system---one that would provide special bonuses for experienced and professional personnel. At the same time, he denies ever advocating an abrupt end of the draft.

Mr. Stevenson's H-bomb proposal received new ~~support~~ ATTENTION today. Twenty-four scientists at Washington University... in St. Louis... urged "intensive scientific study and public discussion" of what effect continued hydrogen bomb tests may have on mankind. They said that while there is at present insufficient data to permit "an absolute conclusion" of the danger due to radio-active fallout, the outlook is "alarming".

President Eisenhower is making a major speech tonight in Portland, Oregon. Earlier today... in a speech in Tacoma, Washington... Mr. Eisenhower said that, next year, he will press for congressional approval of a 4-billion-dollar school construction program. He said he would propose that the program be carried out in four years... instead of five years... as originally planned. Otherwise, it is the same school program that got stopped in Congress this year, due to the segregation issue. Next year, Mr. Eisenhower said, "I will support the program with all the force at my command for I hold this action to be essential to the welfare of the Republic."

Papers will be signed tomorrow, ending the state of war between Russia and Japan. Japanese sources in Moscow... where talks have been in progress since Monday... say agreement was reached to restore diplomatic relations immediately. Ambassadors will be exchanged, and Japanese prisoners, still in Soviet hands, will be set free. It is not known whether Japan won its demand for the return of two islands, taken over by Russia in World War Two. The belief is that it did not.

At the United Nations today, Secretary General Hammarskjold submitted a report to the Security Council on the Palestine situation. Without mentioning Israel by name, Hammarskjold decried the Israeli boycott of the mixed armistice commission. He called it "a dangerous negation" of the armistice agreement. Hammarskjold also forwarded to the council a report by the truce supervisor, General Burns... in which Burns reviewed the situation for the past two years. In that time, Burns said, more than 600 persons---soldiers and civilians---were killed in border incidents. Heaviest losses were on the Arab side.

Two British jets arrived in Jordan today, to "beef up" British forces stationed there, under the treaty of 1948. And more are due in a few days.

The French news agency says a ship smuggling arms to Algerian nationalists has been intercepted off the Algerian coast. The ship reportedly carried 70 tons of modern weapons and came from Egypt. French authorities are quoted as saying that Egyptian support of the rebels has now been "clearly and irrefutably proved."

French policy in Algeria was debated today in the French National Assembly. The resident-minister of Algeria... Robert LaCoste... said the "pacification campaign" in Algeria has produced an improvement in the situation. At the same time, he warned of possible new "terrorist attacks" in Algiers... timed to coincide with the convening next month of THE United Nations General Assembly, here in New York.

Italy today proposed a conference of European prime ministers to examine possible new steps toward a united Europe. Italian Foreign Minister Martino made the surprise proposal to the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe, meeting in Strasbourg. He suggested that a start be made with the Schuman Plan countries---West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg and France. A committee of the Council of Europe submitted a report, urging the West to wage a political offensive, aimed at liberating the satellite states. Opportunity is presented, it said, by the "confusion and dissension" now existing in the Communist sphere.

Worker unrest is reported in East Germany. According to West German sources, five factories in Magdeburg have been crippled by strikes... due to stepped-up work schedules, and low pay. The Communists deny the story, but refuse to let Western correspondents go TO Magdeburg to see for themselves.

The Communist Party in Poland may soon make some far-reaching decisions. Its central committee meets tomorrow... and is expected to demand more independence of Moscow, along Titoist lines. The Polish government today fired two deputy ministers of reconstruction. This brings to more than 20, the number of officials dismissed since the Poznan riots in June.

The Nobel Prize in medicine was won jointly today by two Americans and a German. The Americans are Dr. Dickinson W. Richards and Dr. Andre Cour-nond, of Columbia University. They will share the 38-thousand dollars in prize money with Dr. Werner Forssmann of West Germany. The award was made for the techniques they developed in combating heart disease. The literary prize... and the prizes for physics and chemistry... are still to be announced.

The Navy announces that a Neptune patrol plane crashed in the Antarctic today, killing three members of the crew. Five other crewmen were hurt. The aircraft was flying from New Zealand to the American base on McMurdo Sound.

For the past three weeks, my colleague... Richard C. Hottelet... has been traveling through the western states, examining the political situation there at first hand. For a report on what he found out, we switch now to Dick Hottlet in Washington.

Hottelet runs 5:00
Returns on cue: "--to Ed Murrow
in New York."

15-8

That was my colleague, Richard Hottelet, reporting the intelligence he gained on his recent tour of the western part of this country. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But, ~~first, here~~ is George Bryan.

Word for Today

From now till November sixth, the speech-makers will be asking voters to lend an ear. Corey Ford has complained, "Every political campaign I hear the same old factional arguments back and forth again, and I'm convinced that what this country needs is another party. There's nothing like a party to give everyone a chance to relax."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, October 18, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For the past three weeks my collegue, Richard C. Hottelet has been traveling through the Western States examining the political situation there at first hand. For a report on what he found out we switch now to Dick Hottelet in Washington.

HOTTELET: From the way the major candidates have been racing around the Western States you'd think the election could be won or lost out there. As a matter of fact that might well be true. The eleven states of the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific Coast have a total of only 79 electoral votes. In 1952 they all went to Eisenhower and only swelled his landslide. This year, as the returns are counted from east to west, the race may be so close that the decision may fall out there. Small wonder that both Kefauver and Nixon have barnstormed the area, that Adlai Stevenson has hit it twice, and that President Eisenhower has gone out to the coast for the second time, counting the convention, and is now working harder for his ticket then he's done anywhere so far.

The people of the west have no orthodox politics, they make up their minds neither early nor easily and the straight ticket is practically unknown. In many states there is not even a place on the ballot to vote for a whole party slate with one mark. The voter has to X his way down from name to name and he skips lightly from one column to another. The result is that states which supported Democratic presidents for twenty years chose Republican governors at the same time and sent a mixture of Democrats and Republicans to Congress. Party organization is not as diciplined as it is in the east and the great political contest is broken up by the lights and shadows and the vivid colors of regional issues and personalities. The most dramatic encounters by far are in the northwest. In Oregon the key figures are Senator Wayne Morse, former Republican now running on the Democratic ticket and Douglas McKay, former Secretary of Interior, who was sent out from Washington, D.C. to defeat him. Both men are strong candidates. Mr. Morse has served two terms in the Senate and is universally known, Mr. McKay was twice governor of Oregon and has never lost an election there. They are fighting as hard as they can and although it's been kept on a civilized plain their debate has been shot through with personal bitterness. Republicans call Morse a turncoat, Democrats accuse McKay of giving away natural resources.

Right now Senator Morse seems clearly to have the advantage over his Republican opponent. The Democrats say a trend is running in their favor, a trend which elected Senator Richard Neuberger in 1954, the first Democratic Senator to be elected in Oregon in forty years. They are also exploiting a current weakness in the important lumber industry and they're running hard on the issue of power development which is the key to the economic expansion of the entire northwest. But, nothing is sewed up. President Eisenhower is speaking in Portland tonight. He is expected by all to carry Oregon for himself, but will he be strong enough to carry McKay in with him. That same question applies all through the west, and no where more than in the State of Washington.

Seven Congressmen and the Governor are up for election and in the center of the arena is another battle royal for a seat in the Senate. The Republican Governor, Arthur Langlie, has been detailed to defeat the encumbent Democratic Senator Warren G. Magnuson. Langlie is at the top of his career, undefeated in public life and with twelve years in the governor's chair. Keynote speaker at the Republican National Convention, a man of unquestioned moral and political stature. But so far and even after President Eisenhower's intervention he seems plainly to be running behind Senator Magnuson, and in his efforts to close the gap Governor Langlie has resorted to personal attack against Magnuson's behavior, his bank account, and his associations.

In Washington, too, it looks as though the Democrats will retain their seat in the Senate even if Eisenhower carries the state by an expected narrow margin. Of course, the big political prize in the west is California, with 32 electoral votes, second only to New York's 45. In terms of political organization California has been a state of chaos. Party lines have been practically non-existent and with a registered majority of some 800,000 Democrats Californis has remained Republican. Now for the first time in about 50 years the Democrats lay claim to the skeleton of an organization which will deliver their vote. The result is by no means certain but local experts think the Republicans will hold their own where it counts.

There are few states where President Eisenhower is expected to win by as large a margin as in '52. No single issue or experience is responsible howerver for his ultimate victory. The combination of the President's personality, peace and general prosperity seem to be tipping the balance. However, the Congressional picture is much less rosey for his party. From the look of things at the moment the Republicans are in danger of losing several western districts. The American people in the western quarter of our country seem to perfer things as they are both in the White House and in the Democratic Congress. And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. A.G.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, October 18, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For the past three weeks my collegue, Richard C. Hottelet has been traveling through the Western States examining the political situation there at first hand. For a report on what he found out we switch now to Dick Hottelet in Washington.

HOTTELET: From the way the major candidates have been racing around the Western States you'd think the election could be won or lost out there. As a matter of fact that might well be true. The eleven states of the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific Coast have a total of only 79 electoral votes. In 1952 they all went to Eisenhower and only swelled his landslide. This year, as the returns are counted from east to west, the race may be so close that the decision may fall out there. Small wonder that both Kefauver and Nixon have barnstormed the area, that Adlai Stevenson has hit it twice, and that President Eisenhower has gone out to the coast for the second time, counting the convention, and is now working harder for his ticket then he's done anywhere so far.

The people of the west have no orthodox politics, they make up their minds neither early nor easily and the straight ticket is practically unknown. In many states there is not even a place on the ballot to vote for a whole party slate with one mark. The voter has to X his way down from name to name and he skips lightly from one column to another. The result is that states which supported Democratic presidents for twenty years chose Republican governors at the same time and sent a mixture of Democrats and Republicans to Congress. Party organization is not as diciplined as it is in the east and the great political contest is broken up by the lights and shadows and the vivid colors of regional issues and personalities. The most dramatic encounters by far are in the northwest. In Oregon the key figures are Senator Wayne Morse, former Republican now running on the Democratic ticket and Douglas McKay, former Secretary of Interior, who was sent out from Washington, D.C. to defeat him. Both men are strong candidates. Mr. Morse has served two terms in the Senate and is universally known, Mr. McKay was twice governor of Oregon and has never lost an election there. They are fighting as hard as they can and although it's been kept on a civilized plain their debate has been shot through with personal bitterness. Republicans call Morse a turncoat, Democrats accuse McKay of giving away natural resources.

Right now Senator Morse seems clearly to have the advantage over his Republican opponent. The Democrats say a trend is running in their favor, a trend which elected Senator Richard Neuberger in 1954, the first Democratic Senator to be elected in Oregon in forty years. They are also exploiting a current weakness in the important lumber industry and they're running hard on the issue of power development which is the key to the economic expansion of the entire northwest. But, nothing is sewed up. President Eisenhower is speaking in Portland tonight. He is expected by all to carry Oregon for himself, but will he be strong enough to carry McKay in with him. That same question applies all through the west, and no where more than in the State of Washington.

Seven Congressmen and the Governor are up for election and in the center of the arena is another battle royal for a seat in the Senate. The Republican Governor, Arthur Langlie, has been detailed to defeat the encumbent Democratic Senator Warren G. Magnuson. Langlie is at the top of his career, undefeated in public life and with twelve years in the governor's chair. Keynote speaker at the Republican National Convention, a man of unquestioned moral and political stature. But so far and even after President Eisenhower's intervention he seems plainly to be running behind Senator Magnuson, and in his efforts to close the gap Governor Langlie has resorted to personal attack against Magnuson's behavior, his bank account, and his associations.

In Washington, too, it looks as though the Democrats will retain their seat in the Senate even if Eisenhower carries the state by an expected narrow margin. Of course, the big political prize in the west is California, with 32 electoral votes, second only to New York's 45. In terms of political organization California has been a state of chaos. Party lines have been practically non-existent and with a registered majority of some 800,000 Democrats Californis has remained Republican. Now for the first time in about 50 years the Democrats lay claim to the skeleton of an organization which will deliver their vote. The result is by no means certain but local experts think the Republicans will hold their own where it counts.

There are few states where President Eisenhower is expected to win by as large a margin as in '52. No single issue or experience is responsible howerver for his ultimate victory. The combination of the President's personality, peace and general prosperity seem to be tipping the balance. However, the Congressional picture is much less rosey for his party. From the look of things at the moment the Republicans are in danger of losing several western districts. The American people in the western quarter of our conntry seem to perfer things as they are both in the White House and in the Democratic Congress. And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. A.G.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

Adlai Stevenson will make a speech in Youngstown, Ohio tonight in which he will revive the issue of the draft. The text of Mr. Stevenson's speech shows him saying that the present draft system is..in his words.."an incredible waste " of money and manpower. A better way, he says, must be found to preserve the nation's military strength in this area of "shaky peace". Mr. Stevenson suggests that one way the problem could be attacked would be through a broad incentive system -- one that would provide special bonuses for experienced and professional personnel. At the same time, he denies ever advocating an abrupt end of the draft.

Mr. Stevenson's H-bomb proposal received new attention today. Twenty-four scientists at Washington University, in St. Louis, urged "intensive scientific study and public discussion" of what effect continued hydrogen bomb tests may have on mankind. They said that while there is at present insufficient data to permit "an absolute conclusion" of the danger due to radioactive fallout, the outlook is "alarming."

President Eisenhower is making a major speech tonight in Portland, Oregon. Earlier today, in a speech in Tacoma, Washington, Mr. Eisenhower said that, next year, he will press for congressional approval of a 4 billion dollar school construction program. He said he would propose that the program be carried out in four years instead of five years as originally planned Otherwise, it is the same school program that got stopped in Congress this year, due to the segregation issue. Next year, Mr. Eisenhower said, "I will support the program with all the force at my command for I hold this action to be essential to the welfare of the Republic."

Papers will be signed tomorrow ending the state of war between Russia and Japan. Japanese sources in Moscow where talks have been in progress since Monday, say agreement was reached to restore diplomatic relations immediately. Ambassadors will be exchanged, and Japanese prisoners still in Soviet hands will be set free. It is not known whether Japan won its demand for the return of two islands taken over by Russia in World War Two. The belief is that it did not.

At the United Nations today, Secretary General Hammarskjold submitted a report to the Security Council on the Palestine situation. Without mentioning Israel by name, Hammarskjold decried the Israeli boycott of the mixed armistice commission. He called it "a dangerous negation" of the armistice agreement Hammarsjkold also forwarded to the council a report by truce supervisor, General Burns in which Burns reviewed the situation for the past two years. In that time, Burns said, more than 600 persons, soldiers and civilians, were killed in border incidents. Heaviest losses were on the Arab side.

Two British jets arrived in Jordan today to "beef up" British forces stationed there under the treaty of 1948. And more are due in a few days.

The French news agency says a ship smuggling arms to Algerian nationalists has been intercepted off the Algerian coast. The ship reportedly carried 70 tons of modern weapons and came from Egypt. French authorities are quoted as saying that Egyptian support of the rebels has not been "clearly and irrefutably proved. "

Italy today proposed a conference of European prime ministers to examine possible new steps toward a united Europe. Italian Foreign Minister Martino made the surprise porposal to the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe, meeting in Strasbourg. He suggested that a start be made with the Schuman Plan countries -- West Germany Italy, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg and France. A committee of the Council of Europe submitted a report, urging the

the West to wage a political offensive aimed at liberating the satellite states. Opportunity is presented, it said, by the "confusion and dissension" now existing in the Communist sphere.

Worker unrest is reported in East Germany. According to West German sources, five factories in Magdeburg have been crippled by strikes due to stepped - up work schedules and low pay. The Communists deny the story but refuse to let Western corrsspondents go to Magdeburg to see for themselves.

The Communist Party in Poland may soon make some far - reaching decisions. Its central committee meets tomorrow and is expected to demand more independence of Moscow, along Titoist lines. The Polish government today fired two deputy ministers of reconstuuction. This brings to more than 20 the number of officials dismissed since the Poznan riots in June.

The Nobel Prize in medicine was won jointly today by two Americans and a German. The Americans are Dr. Dickinson W. Richards and Dr. Andre Cournond, of Columbia University. They will share the 3 -thousand dollars in prize money with Dr. Werner Forssmann of West Germany. The award was made for techniques they developed in combating heart disease. The literary prize and the prizes for physics and chemistry are still bo be announced.

The Navy announces that a Neptune patrol plane crashed in the Antarctic today, killing three members of the crew. Five other crewmen were hurt. The aircraft was flying from New Zealand to the Amercia base on McMurdo Sound.

For the past three weeks, my colleague, Richard C Hottelet, has been travelling through the western states, examining the political situation there at first hand. For a report on what he found out, we switch now to Dick Hottelet in Washington.

HOTTELET: From the way the major candidates have been racing around the Western states you'd think the election could be won or lost out there. As a matter of fact that might well be true. The eleven states of the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific Coast have a total of only 79 electoral votes. In 1952 they all went to Eisenhower and only swelled his landslide. This year, as the returns are counted from East to West, the races may be so close that the decision may fall out there. Small wonder that both Kefauver and Nixon have barnstormed the area, that Adlai Stevesnon has hit it twice, and that President Eisenhower has gone out to the coast for the second time, counting the con ention, and is now working harder for his ticket than he's done anywhere so far.

The people of the West have no othhodox politics, they make up their minds neither early nor easily and the straight ticket is practically unknown. In many states there is not even a place on the ballot to vote for a whole party slate with one mark. The voter has to X his way down from name to name and he skips lightly from one column to another. The result is that states which supported Democratic presidents for twenty years chose Republican governors at the same time and sent a mixture of Democrats and Republicans to Congress Party organization is not as disciplined as it is in the east and the great political contest is broken up by the lights and shadows and he vivid colors of regional issues and personalities The most dramatic encounters by far are in the north-west. In Oregon the key figures are Senator Wayne Morse, former Republican now running on the Democratic ticket and Douglas McKay, former Secretary of Interior, who was sent out from Washington, D.C. to defeat him. Both men are strong candidates. Mr. Morse has served two terms in the Senate and is universally known, Mr. McKay was twice governor of Oregon and has never lost an election there. They are fighting as hard as they can and although it's been kept on a civilized plain their debate has been shot through with personal bitterness. Republicans call Morse a turncoat, Democrats accuse McKay of giving away natural resources.

Right now Senator Morse seems clearly to have the advantage over his Republican opponent. The Democrats say a trend is running in their favor, a trend which elected Senator Richard Neuberger in 1954, the first Democratic senator to be elected in Oregon in forty years. They are also exploiting a current weakness in the important lumber industry and they're running hard on the issue of power development which is the key to the economic expansion of the entire northwest. But, nothing is sewed up. President Eisenhower is speaking in Portland tonight. He is expected by all to carry Oregon for himself, and will be be strong enough to carry McKay in with him. That same question applies all through the west, and no where more than in the State of Washington.

Seven Congressmen and the Governor are up for election and in the center of the arena is another battle royal for a seat in the Senate. The Republican Governor, Arthur Langlie, has been detailed to defeat the encumbent Democratic Senator Warren G. Magnuson. Langlie is at the top of his career, undefeated in public life and with twelve years in the governor's chair. Keynote speaker at the Republican National convention, a man of unquestioned moral and political stature. But so far and even after President Eisenhower's intervention he seems plainly to be running behind Senator Magnuson, and in his efforts to close the gap Governor Langlie has resorted to personal attack against Mannuson' behavior, his bank account, and his associations.

In Washington, too, it looks as though the Democrats will retain their seat in the Senate even if Eisenhower carries the state by an expected narrow margain. Of course, the big political prize in the west is California, with 32 electoral votes, second only to New York's 45. In terms of political organization California has been a state of chaos. Party lines have been practically non - existent and with a registered majority of some 800,000 Democrats California has remained Republican. Now for the first time in about 50 years the Democrats lay claim to the skeleton of an organization which will deliver their vote. The result is no no means certain but local experts think the Republicans will hold their own where it counts.

There are few states where President Eisenhower is expected to win by as large a margin as in '52. No single issue of ex erience is responsible, however for his ultimate victory. The combination of the President's personality, peace and general prosperity seem to be tipping the balance. However, the Congressional picture is much less rosey for his party. From the look of things at the moe nt the Republicans are in danger of losing several western districts. The American people in the western quarter of our country seem to prefer things as they are both in the White House and in the Democratic Congress And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Richard Hottelet, reporting the intelligence he gained on his recent tour of the western part of this country. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moemtt with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: From now till November sixth, the speech-makers will be asking voters to lend an ear. Corey Ford has complained, "Every political campaign I hear the same old factional arguements back and forth again, and I'm convinced that what this country needs is another party. There's nothing like a party to give everyone a chance to relax."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 19, 1956

This is the news:

Soviet party boss Khrushchev flew to Warsaw today, and interrupted a plenary session of the Polish central committee. The committee... which represents the Communist leadership of Poland... had just reinstated Wladislaw Gomulka, a ~~notorious~~ ACTIVE Titoist, as one of its members. Three other advocates of independence from Moscow, also were elected to full membership on the committee. The importance of Khrushchev's mission is underscored by the fact that he was accompanied... on his trip to Warsaw... by former Foreign Minister Molotov, two deputy premiers, and some of the top brass of the Red Army. (I should like to discuss this matter further in a few minutes).

Russia and Japan signed agreements today, ending the technical state of war between the two countries. The Russians promised to return two disputed islands to Japan---but only after a formal peace treaty has been signed. (No date for a peace conference was fixed). Meantime, ambassadors will be exchanged, and Japanese prisoners still in Soviet hands will be sent home. All reparation claims on Japan are renounced. The agreements include a protocol for increased trade between the two countries... and support of Japan's bid for membership in the United Nations. There are 10 agreements in all.

Soviet Premier Bulganin sent a new letter today to President Eisenhower. The message was delivered to Secretary of State Dulles through the Soviet Embassy in Washington and its contents WERE not divulged. The speculation is it concerns disarmament... as other messages from Bulganin have in the past. The President is not expected to see the text of this new message until he returns to Washington this week-end. (He is presently campaigning on the West Coast).

Jordan today urged the United Nations Security Council to impose sanctions on Israel, for what Jordan called "Israeli aggression". The Jordanian ambassador told the council that if it fails to take effective action, Jordan will have to protect its borders by "other methods". He did not spell out these "other methods". The acting Israeli delegate said the raids on Jordan were in reprisal for armed attacks on Israel.

He said, "If Jordan is prepared to put an end to these attacks, there will be peace on the frontier." / The United States did not take part in today's debate... but both Britain and Russia supported Jordan's position. #
The British delegate praised Jordan for its "great restraint". / And Russia accused Israel of "deliberate violation" of its obligations under the United Nations Charter, and the cease-fire agreements. After hearing these arguments, the Security Council recessed until next week.

There were more developments today in the Suez dispute. In London, a Danish career diplomat... Eyvind Bartels... was named administrator of the canal users association. / He is now serving as the Danish consul-general, here in New York. / The association also announced that it has opened two bank accounts---one for administrative purposes, and one into which nations using the canal may pay tolls. / The United States and Britain were reported in disagreement today on the question of tolls. Secretary Dulles is pictured as advocating that toll money paid to the users association, should be turned over to Egypt for use of the canal---less expenses the association may incur in its operations. (Such an expense would be money paid out to pilots.) Britain, on the other hand, is said to favor holding the tolls as blocked funds, until there is a final settlement. The State Department spokesman... Lincoln White... said today that American policy remains unchanged---that the association should collect dues from the ships and be prepared to pay Egypt "an appropriate share".

The British Foreign Office reiterated today that it is waiting for more specific proposals from Egypt, before joining any new talks on the Suez problem.

India's roving ambassador... Krishna Menon... turned up again today in Cairo and had another long talk with President Nasser, presumably on the Suez problem. It was the fifth meeting between Nasser and Menon since Egypt nationalized the canal in July.

Most of the news in this country today was of a political nature. The Democratic presidential candidate... Adlai Stevenson... barnstormed through Kentucky, and said a vote for President Eisenhower is a vote for Secretary of Agriculture Benson. The friendship of Benson for the farmer, he charged, "depends on the proximity of an election." In Louisville, Stevenson called Benson "the No. 1 enemy" of the farmer.

He also said that a vote for Eisenhower is a vote for Vice President Nixon. Earlier... in LEXINGTON... he characterized Nixon as a Republican leader who favors "a return to yesterday." The Republican Party, he said, is "hopelessly divided."

President Eisenhower campaigned in California today, in a drive for that state's 32 electoral votes. He has arrived in Los Angeles... where he will make a major speech tonight in the Hollywood Bowl... and was greeted by large crowds. Mr. Eisenhower is suffering from a very slight eye injury. His personal physician... Major General Snyder... said his left eye is a little bloodshot as the result of some confetti that blew into it while he was in Portland.

Edward R. Murrow: October 19, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

There are increasing signs of discontent throughout Russia's satellite empire. There is confusion and dissension. One of our most eminent experts on Russian affairs, Mr. George Kennan, says there is an extensive disintegration of Moscow's authority within the Soviet orbit.

Recently dissenters in the Communist parties of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary have been restored to good standing. Some who were anti-Stalinists, and were killed for it, have now been declared innocent of any crimes against the State.

The Communist parties, particularly in Italy, are demonstrating greater independence from Moscow control.

Many of the satellite countries appear to be finding Marshal Tito and his independence [redacted] a powerful magnet. The recent exchange of visits between Khrushchev and Tito has never been fully explained. But after those meetings a secret letter was sent from Moscow to the Party faithful abroad, warning that the understanding with Tito was not a new Party line. The communique issued after Tito's visit admitted that there might be more than one road to Socialism, and that the various countries should choose their own. They are showing an appetite to choose. They do not want all roads to lead to Moscow.

Tito demonstrated his increasing independence when a group of Yugoslav Stalinists who had sought refuge in Russia, decided to come home. Tito promptly flung them into jail - sentenced them to long prison terms. It was a demonstration of independence on his part that was both brutal and defiant.

And then today the mountain really came to Mohammet. Khrushchev and three top-ranking Russian army officers arrived unexpectedly, and apparently unannouced, in Warsaw. They didn't summon the increasingly restless and rebellious Poles to Moscow.

The Central Committee of the Polish Communist Party was meeting when they arrived. One order of business was to restore to influence and power those Polish leaders who had wanted to follow an independent line like Tito.

The Russian leaders drove straight to the meeting of the Polish Committee. Beyond that we have no information. But it is clear that urgent and important talks are now taking place. The Poles are re-shuffling their government, partly as a result of the Poznan riots and the general discontent throughout the country. There has been for some time a widening gap between those Polish Communists who wanted to continue to take their orders direct from Moscow, and those who wanted an increasing degree of independence.

Those who were tethered to Moscow appear to be losing out. Today's meeting of the Polish Central Committee was to determine the direction in which Poland was to go. And the meeting was faced with demands that the people of Poland be told something about military expenditures - demands that the deputy premier, who controls Polish industry, be dismissed - demands that the Russian-imposed system of collective farms be abolished. And there were also demands that the Russian Marshal Rokosovsky, who commands the Polish Army, be replaced. He is regarded by most Poles as a symbol of Russian domination. ~~XXXXXXXX~~ The Russians still maintain a couple of divisions of troops in Poland, and the Poles want them to get out too.

Most of the demands facing the Committee asked for more freedom in one form or another - more freedom of information, more freedom politically and economically.

But what has been happening in Poland is not a revolt against the philosophy of Communism, (although no one who knows that country can believe that more than a small percentage of its people are communists.) What has happened ~~is~~ a revolt against dictation and domination by Moscow. The leaders , even those recently returned to power, continue to contend, as Marshal Tito has for years, that they are faithful communists, merely unwilling to rubber-stamp whatever is decided by the big bosses in Moscow. Whatever happens during these critical and indeed astonishing talks in Warsaw, it does not mean that the satellite nations are about to become free and independent countries. But it does mean that even the independence that Tito has enjoyed is a contagious thing.

It seems possible that our investment in Tito is paying substantial dividends. And it is certainly true that the forces of freedom - limited freedom - are stirring inside the vast Soviet empire. This in turn means that the forces of real freedom have an opportunity to ~~[illegible]~~ seize the initiative if their leaders choose to do so.

George Bryan

Word for Today

Walt Whitman said, "I am for those who have never been mastered." And so no one can doubt that Whitman would be for the Poles. Of course, their break is with Moscow domination---not Communism. Poland remains Communist. But, as Stanley Pargellis observed, "Everyone knows where liberty begins. It is the point at which people resent being shoved about."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

THIS IS THE NEWS:

Soviet party boss Khrushchev flew to Warsaw today and interrupted a plenary session of the Polish central committee. The committee, which represents the Communist leadershop of Poland..had just reinstated Wladislaw Gomulka, an active Titoist, as one of its members. Three other advocates of independence from Moscow, also were elected to full membership on the committee. The importance of Khrushchev's mission is underscored by the fact that he was accompanied on his trip to Warsaw, by former Foreign Minister Molotov, two deputy premiers, and some of the top brass of the Red Army. (I should like to discuss this matter further in a few minutes.)

Russia and Japan signed agreements today ending the technical state of war between the two countries. The Russians promised to return two disputed islands to Japan, but only after a formal peace treaty has been signed. (No date for a peace conference was fixed.) Meantime, ambassadors will be exchanged, and Japanese prisoners still in Soviet hands will be sent home. All reparation claim on Japan are renounced. The agreements include a protocal for increased trade between the two countries and support of Japans bid for membership in the United Nations. There are 10 agreements in all.

Soviet Premier Bulganin sent a new letter today to President Eisenhower The message was delivered to Secretary of State Dulles through the Soviet Embassy in Washington and its contents were not divulged. The speculation is, it concerns disarmament, as other messages from Bulganin have in the past. The President is no expected to see the text of this new message until he returns to Washington this week-end. (He is presently campaigning on the West Coast.)

Jordan today urged the United Nations Security Council to impose sanctions on Israel, for what Jordan called "Israeli aggression." The Jordanian ambassador told the council that if it fails to take effective action, Jordan will have to protect its borders by "other methods." He did not spell out these "other methods". The acting Israeli delegate said the raids on Jordan were in reprisal for armed attacks on Israel. He said, "If Jordan is prepared to put an end to these attacks, there will be peace on the frontier." The United States did not take part in today's debate, but both Britain and Russia supported Jordan's position.

The British delegate praised Jordan for its " great restraint." And Russia accused Israel of "deliberate violation" of its obligations under the United Nations Charter and the cease-fire agreements. After hearing these arguments, the Security Council recessed until next week.

There were more developments today in the Suez dispute. In London, a Danish career diplomat, Eyvind Bartels, was named administrator of the canal users association. He is now serving as the Danish Consul-general, here in New York. The association also announced that it has opened two bank accounts -- one for administrative purposes and one into which nations using the canal may pay tolls. The United States and Britain were reported in disagreement today on the question of tolls. Secretary Dulles is pictured as advocating that toll money paid to the users association should be turned over to Egypt for use of the canal less the expenses the association may incur in its operations. Such an expense would be money paid out to pilots. Britain, on the other hand, is said to favor holding the tolls as blockaded funds until there is a final settlement. The State Dpeartment spokesman, Lincoln White, said today that American policy remains unchanged, that the association should collect dues from the ships and be prepared to pay Egypt "an appropriate share."

The British Foreign Office reiterated today that it is waiting for more specific proposals from Egypt, before joining any new talks on the Suez problem.

India's roving ambassador, Krishna Menon, turned up again today in Cairo and had another long talk with President Nasser, presumably on the Suez problem. It was the fifth meeting between Nasser and Menon since Egypt nationalized the canal in July.

Most of the news in this country today was of a political nature. The Democratic presidential candidate, Adlai Stevenson, barnstormed through Kentucky, and said a vote for President Eisenhower is a vote for Secretary of Agriculture Benson. The friendship of Benson for the farmer, he charged, "depends on the proximity of an election." In Louisville, Stevenson called Benson "the Number one enemy"of the farmer.

He also said that a vote for Eisenhower is a vote for Vice President Nixon. Earlier, in Lexington, he characterized Nixon as a Republican leader who favors "a return to yesterday." The Republican Party, he said, is "hopelessly divided."

President Eisenhower campaigned in California today, in a drive for that state's 32 electoral votes. He has arrived in Los Angeles..where he will make a major speech tonight in the Hollywood Bowl, ans was greeted by large crowds . Mr. Eisenhower is suffering from a very slight eye injury. His personal physician, Major General Snyder, sais his left eye is a little bloodshot as the result of some confetti that blew into it while he was in Portland.

There are increasing signs of discontent throughout Russia's satellite empire. There is confusion and dissentsion. One of our most eminent experts on Russian affairs, Mr. George Kennan, says there is an expensive disintegration of Moscow's authority within the Soviet orbit.

Recently, dissenters in the Communist parties of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary have been restored to good standing. Some who were anti-Stalinist and were killed for it, have now been declared innocent of any crimes against the State.

The Communist parties, particularly in Italy, are demonstrating greater independence from Moscow control.

Many of the satellite countries appear to be finding Marshal Tito and his independence a powerful magnet. The recent exchange of visits between Khrushchev and Tito has never been fully explained. But after those meetings, a secret letter was sent from Moscow to the party faithful abroad, warning that the understanding with Tito was not a new Party line. The communique issues after Tito's visit admitted that there might be more than one road to Socialism, and that various countries should choose their own. They are showing an appetite to choose. They do not want all roads to lead to Moscow.

Tito demonstrated his increasing independence when a group of Yugoslav Stalinists who has sought refuge in Russia, decided to come home. Tito promptly flung them into jail - sentenced them to long prison terms. It was a demonstration of independence on his part that was both brutal and defiant.

And then today the mountain really came to Mohammet. Khrushchev and three top-ranking Russian army officers arrived unexpectedly, and apparently unannounced, in Warsaw. They didn't summon the increasingly restless and rebellious Poles to Moscow.

The Central Committee of the Polish Communist Party was meeting when they arrived. One order of business was to restore to influence and power those Polish leaders who had wanted t follow an independent line like Tito.

The Russian leaders drove straight to the meeting of the Polish committee Beyond that we have no information. But it is clear that urgent and important talks are now taking place. The Poles are re-shuffling their government, partly as a result of the Poznan riots and the general discontent throughout the country. There has been for some time a widening gap between those Polish Communists who wanted to continue to take their orders direct from Moscow, and those who wanted an increasing degree of independence. Those who were tethered to Moscow appear to be losing out. Today's meeting of the Polish Central Committee was to determine the direction in which Poland was to go. And the meeting was faced with demands what the people of Poland be told something about military expenditures, demands that the deputy premier, who controls Polish industry, be dismissed -- demands that the Russian - imposed system of collective farms be abolished. And there were also demands that the Russian Marshal Rokosovsky, who commands the Polish Army, be replaced. He is regarded by most Poles as a symbol of Russian domination. The Russians still maintain a couple of divisions of troops in Poland, and the Poles want them to get out too.

Most of the damands facing the Committee asked for more freedom in one form or another - more freedom of information, more freedom politically and economically.

But what has been happening in Poland is not a revolt against the philosophy of Communism, although no one who knows that country can believe that more than a small percentage of its people are communists. What has happened is a revolt against dictation and domination by Moscow. The leaders, even those recently returned to power, continue to contend, as Marshal Tito has for years, that they are faithful Communists, merely unwilling to rubber-stamp whatever is decided by the big bosses in Moscow. Whatever happens during these critical and indeed astonishing talks in Warsaw, it does not mean that the satellite nations are about to become free and independent countries. But it does mean that even the independence that Tito has enjoyed is a contagious thing.

It seems possible that our investment in Tito is paying substantial dividends. And it is certainly true that the forces of freedom - limited freedom - are stirring inside the vast Soviet empire. This in turn means that the forces of real freedom have an opportunity to seize the initiative if their leaders choose to do so.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Walt Whitman said, " I am for those who have never been mastered." And no one can doubt that Whitman would be for the Poles. Of course, their break is with Moscow domination, not Communism. Poland remainse Communist. But, as Stanley Pargellis observed, "Everyone knows where liberty begins. It is the point at which people resent bein shoved about."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 22, 1956

This is the news:

The Warsaw Radio said tonight that the general staff of the Polish Army has pledged its support to the new Communist regime. / The general staff is said to have expressed conviction that the party's new Titoist leader... Wladyslaw Gomulka... will work for the "democratization" of the army. / Such a process might affect Soviet Marshal Rokossovsky, who is still defense minister of Poland... although he was removed yesterday from the politburo. / The new politburo met today, reportedly to decide his fate. He could be on his way out.

According to the Warsaw Radio, Polish workers held mass meetings today and pledged support to Gomulka. / There were also rumors of Russian troop movements... of Soviet divisions entering Poland from East Germany... but these reports are unconfirmed. / Another of these rumors is, that the Russian officer in charge of the Warsaw military district, suddenly packed his bags and went home. / That report also is unconfirmed.

The Polish Communist newspaper today rejected President Eisenhower's expression of sympathy for the ~~yearning~~ yearning of the Polish people for independence. The paper said this constituted an interference in Poland's internal affairs. Anyone, it said, who thinks the changes that have taken place "indicate a new orientation in our foreign policy is deeply mistaken. Our alliance ~~with the Soviet Union~~ and friendship with the Soviet Union was, is and will remain the cornerstone of our policy."

There are reports from Warsaw tonight... again totally unconfirmed... that Nikita Khrushchev may lose his job ~~as~~ as first secretary of the Soviet Communist Party because of developments in Poland. According to these reports, ~~some~~ three deputy premiers... Molotov, Mikoyan and ~~Molotov...~~ Malenkov... are working to have him deposed.

~~Talks between Hungary and Yugoslavia ended tonight in Belgrade. Reuters news service says the Hungarian and Yugoslav Communist Parties formally re-established the policy of cooperation that was abandoned after the Cominform dispute of 1948.~~

~~Hungary showed other signs today of following in the footsteps of Poland. The party newspaper in Budapest said Hungary, like Poland~~

There was an interruption today in the Poznan trials. The district court declared a mistrial in the case of eight defendants... charged with taking part in the uprising of June 28... and three of the eight prisoners were set free. / An entirely new trial was ordered for the other five.

Talks between Hungary and Yugoslavia ended tonight in Belgrade. Reuters news service says the Hungarian and Yugoslav Communist Parties formally re-established the policy of cooperation they abandoned after the Cominform dispute of 1948.

Hungary showed other signs today of following in the footsteps of Poland. The party newspaper in Budapest said Hungary... like Poland... must map its own road to socialism. "No foreign experience," it said, "can replace the ideological work we have to do ourselves." / And tonight the official Budapest Radio broadcast a student demand that former Premier Nagy be returned to power. Nagy was kicked out last year on charges of being a Titoist.

~~Prime Minister Van Acker of Belgium arrived in Moscow today for a 10-day visit. He was accompanied by his foreign minister, Paul-Henri~~ Spaak.

Here in this country, Adlai Stevenson said tonight that he "shares fully" the resentment of President Eisenhower over the latest Bulganin letter. The message proposed a stop to nuclear weapons tests, and Mr. Eisenhower denounced it as constituting "interference" in this country's internal affairs... coming as it did during a presidential campaign. He also criticized Russia's action in making public the contents of the message before he had a chance to read it. Mr. Stevenson said tonight that while he shares Mr. Eisenhower's resentment, he feels the United States should pursue the matter "all the way."

Senator Kefauver said today he was "shocked" by President Eisenhower's response. "This is no time," Kefauver said, "for stubborn and peevish response. This is a time for the United States to take the lead in turning the awesome power of nuclear energy to peaceful pursuits."

Vice President Nixon told a news conference in Saginaw, Michigan that Stevenson should have read the Bulganin letter more carefully. If he had, Nixon said, Stevenson would have recognized it was not new... but the same thing Russia has been proposing for the past two years.

~~(I should like to discuss this subject of the letter further in a few minutes.)~~

The White House announces that the government report on hydrogen bomb tests... promised by President Eisenhower.... will be issued sometime tomorrow. The White House said last week that such a report would be prepared by experts, to correct "inaccurate statements" made by Adlai Stevenson, in proposing an end to hydrogen bomb tests.

Three Russians arrived in Washington today to observe the presidential election as guests of the United States government. The delegation came at the invitation of the State Department, for a first-hand look at American politics in action. The delegation is composed of an economics professor, an editor of Izvestia, and a trade union official. One of them said... on arrival... that Bulganin's offer to negotiate an end to hydrogen bomb tests is "sincere". None of them would hazard to say, whom he preferred for President.

The White House announced today, that President Eisenhower will undergo a thorough medical examination at Walter Reed Hospital next week-end. News Secretary Hagerty said the President will enter the hospital on Saturday... and that a report will be made public "not later than Monday morning." The series of medical tests will be made by eight doctors, including the heart specialist, Paul Dudley White, and the President's personal physician, Major General Snyder. Hagerty told reporters today the president is "feeling fine".

The French are reported to have captured some of the top leaders of the Algerian revolt. The French news agency says that an aircraft carrying leaders of the rebellion was intercepted over the Mediterranean and forced to land near Algiers. It identifies one of the captured men as Ahmed ben Bella, a Nationalist chieftain long wanted for his part in the two-year-old civil war.

Latest reports from Jordan confirm the parliamentary victory of anti-Western forces in that Middle East country. Candidates opposed to Jordan's traditional alliance with Britain gained a wide majority in the new Parliament. Egypt has hailed the results as a big step toward Arab unity.

Edward R. Murrow: October 22, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The Bulganin letter to President Eisenhower certainly reads as though it was meant to be a bomb that would shatter a lot of windows in our presidential campaign. It backed the campaign proposal of Mr. Stevenson to seek an end of H-bomb tests; it openly criticized Secretary Dulles, and indirectly criticized President Eisenhower; it was addressed to the President and then released for publication before the President could receive it; it even stressed the fact that it was dealing with an issue raised in the campaign.

That raises the question: Why was it sent? Apparently Mr. Eisenhower feels it was sent to injure him. His immediate and caustic reply was steaming with resentment. Then Mr. Stevenson criticized the President for not giving the Russian offer more careful consideration, and that seemed to justify the President's anger. But if Mr. Bulganin himself thought the letter would help Stevenson and hurt Eisenhower, he would qualify for the booby prize among the world's supposedly astute politicians. And his advisors on American affairs hardly could have misled him to that extent. They would know - and surely Bulganin knew - that a public letter purporting to help Stevenson would have the opposite effect in an election campaign in this country, simply because it came from Moscow.

Candidates Eisenhower and Stevenson are in agreement on one thing. They both resent interference in our domestic political quarrels. Mr. Stevenson thinks we ought to explore Bulganin's proposals "immediately and all the way." He says this isn't the first time the Russians have meddled in our domestic politics. According to Stevenson the real issue is not Mr. Bulganin's manners, or Russian views about American politics. The real issue is "what can be done to save the world from hydrogen disaster." Stevenson said: "Viewed from the standpoint ~~XXXXXX~~ not of politics but of peace, I think the President's reply to Bulganin is unfortunate." Stevenson contended that the Russians have made it plain that their candidate is Eisenhower. This statement was apparently based on remarks that Bulganin made at the Summit meeting last summer, hoping that Eisenhower would run for re-election.

Stevenson doesn't pretend to know whether Bulganin is serious or not, but he thinks an agreement to end H-Bomb testing should be made here and now; or we should expose Mr. Bulganin's insincerity to the world.

Washington observers are trying to figure out what Bulganin wanted. Beyond an understandable desire to advertise the Soviet position on nuclear tests, another motive is suspected. It is that the Russians really don't want to have the tests suspended. They want to go forward with the H-bomb so long as they are ahead with the inter-continental ballistic missile. By writing this letter, and drawing Mr. Eisenhower's indignant reply, they seem to have made sure than an agreement ending the tests will not be made with him. And they hope that what blame follows for the failure will not be theirs.

Actually the Bulganin letter did not confine itself to Stevenson's proposal to ban H-bomb tests by agreement. It spent much more space boosting the familiar Soviet proposals for banning nuclear weapons. Mr. Stevenson had said nothing like this. He had not even suggested banning the use of the H-bomb. His position in favor of full preparedness for deterrence, and of development of modern weapons, is not at variance with the President's.

Both men want disarmament and both believe it can only come through adequate controls. Mr. Stevenson is not against nuclear weapons as such, for his case for ultimately ending the draft rests on nuclear weapons making the present reliance on so much manpower unnecessary.

But the Bulganin letter disregards these points. Though Stevenson is not mentioned by name, the letter leaves the impression that Stevenson wants what Bulganin wants. In fact, Stevenson and Bulganin agree only on the point of suspending H-bomb tests, and on making a fresh start to seek a wider agreement.

Mr. Eisenhower's reply was so sharp that a retort by the Soviet Premier is not to be ruled out. If it is true that the Russians are playing some inscrutable game of their own in this whole matter, another letter from Moscow is to be expected before election day.

George Bryan

The question is raised: Why did Bulganin send that controversial letter. ~~What are the Russians up to?~~ Sir Winston Churchill once told the House of Commons: "I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia." (And then those famous lines). "It is a riddle, wrapped in a mystery, inside an enigma. But perhaps," Churchill said, "there is a key. That key, is Russian national interest."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1956
7:45--8:00 E.D.T.

This is the news:

The Warsaw Radio said tonight that the general staff of the Polish Army has pledged its support to the new Communist regime. The general staff is said to have expressed conviction that the party's new Titoist leader..Wladyslaw Gomulka, will work for the "democratization" of the army. Such a process might affect Soviet Marshal Rokossovsky, who is still defense minister of Poland, although he was removed yesterday from the politburo. The new politburo met today, reportedly to decide his fate. He could be on his way out.

According to the Warsaw Radio, Polish workers held mass meetings today and pledged support to Gomulka. There were also rumors of Russian troop movements, of Soviet divisions entering Poland from East Germany, but these reports are unconfirmed. Another of these rumors is that the Russian officer in charge of the Warsaw military district suddenly packed his bags and went home. That report also is unconfirmed.

The Polish Communist newspaper today rejected President Eisenhower's expression of sympathy for the yearning of the Polish people for independence. The paper said this constituted an interference in Poland's internal affairs. Anyone, it said, who thinks the changes that have taken place "indicate a new orientation in our foreign policy is deeply mistaken. Our alliance and friendship with the Soviet Union was, is and will remain the cornerstone of our policy."

There are reports from arsaw tonight, again totally unconfirmed, that Nikita Khrushchev may lose his job as first secretary of the Soviet Communist party because of developments in Poland. According to these reports, three deputy premiers, Molotov, Mikoyan and Malenkov are working to have him deposed.

There was an interruption today in the Poznan trials. The district court declared a mistrial in the case of eight defendants charged with taking part in the uprising of June 28, and three of the eight prisoners were set free. An entirely new tiral was ordered for the other five.

Talks between Hungary and Yugoslavia anded tonight in Belgrade. Reuters news service says the Hungarian and Yugoslav Communist Parties formally re established the policy of cooperation they abandoned after the Cominform dispute of 1948.

Hungary shoved other signs: today of following in the footsteps of Poland. The Party newspaper in Budapest said Hungary, like Poland, must map its own road to socialism. "No foreign experience," it said, "can replace the ideological work we have to do ourselves." And tonight the official Budapest Radio broadcast a student demand that former PremierNagy be returned to power. Nagy was kicked out last year on charges of being a Titoist.

Here in this country, Adlai Stevenson said tonight that he "shares fully" the resentment of President Eisenhower over the latest Bulganin letter. The message proposed a stop to neclear weapons tests, and Mr. Eisenhowe denounced it as constituting "interference" in this country's internal affairs, coming as it did during a presidential campaign. He also criticized Russia'a action in making public the contents of the message before he had had a chance to read it. Mr. Stevenson said tonight that while he shares Mr. Eisenhwoer's resentment, he feels the United States should pursue the matter "all the way."

Senator Kefauver said today that he was "shocked" by President Eisenhower's response. "This is no time", Kefauver said, "for stubborn and peevish response. This is a time for the United States to take the lead in turning the awsome power of nuclear energy to peaceful pursuits."

Vice President Nixon told a news conference in Saginaw, Michigan, that Stevenson should have read the Bulganin letter more carefully. If he had, Nixon said, Stevenson would have rocognized it was not new but the same thing Russia has been proposing for the past two years.

The White House announces that the government report on hydrogen bomb tests promised by President Eisenhower, will be issued sometime tomorrow. The White House said last week that such a report would be prepared by experts to correct "inaccurate statements" made by Adlai Stevenson in proposing an end to hydrogen bomb tests.

Three Russians arrived in Washington today to observe the presidential election as guestsof the United States government. The delegation came at the invitation of the State Department, for a first - hand look at American politics in action. The delegation is composed of an economics professor, an editor of Izvestia and a trade union official. One of them is said, on arrival, that Bulganin's offer to negotiate an end to hydrogen bomb tests is "sincere". None of them would hazard to say whom he preferred for President.

The White House announced today that President Eisenhower will undergo a thorough medical examination at Walter Reed Hospital next week-end. News Secretary Hagerty said the President will enter the hospital on Saturday and that a report will be made public "not later than Monday morning." The series of medical tests will be made by eight doctors, including the heart specialist, Paul Dudley White, and the President's personal shysician, Major General Snyder. Hagerty told reporters today the president is "feeling fine."

The French are reported to have captured some of the top leaders of the Algerian revolt. The French news agency says that an aircraft carrying leaders of the rebellion was intercepted over the Mediterranean and forced to land near Algiers. It identifies one of the cpatured men as Ahmed ben Bella, a Nationalist chieftain long wanted for his part in the two-year-old civil war.

Latest reports from Jordan confirm the parliamentary victory of anti-Western forces in the Middle East country. Candidates opposed to Jordan's traditional alliance with Britain gained a wide majority in the new Parliament. Egypt has hailed the results as a big step toward Arab unity.

The Bulganin letter to President Eisenhower certainly reads as though it was meant to be a bomb that would shatter a lot of windows in our presidential campaign. It backed the campaign proposal of Mr. Stevenson to seek an end of H-bomb tests; it openly criticized Secretary Dulles, and indirectly criticized President Eisenhower; it was addressed to the President and then released for publication before the President could receive it; it even stressed the fact that it was dealing with an issue raised in the campaign.

That raises the question: Why was it sent? Apparently Mr. Eisenhower feels it was sent to injure him. His immediate and caustic reply was steaming with resentment. Then Mr. Stevenson criticized the President for not giving the Russian offer more careful consideration, and that seemed to justify the President's anger. But if Mr. Bulganin himself thought the letter would help Stevenson ahd hurt Eisenhower, he would qualify for the boob prize among the world's supposedly astute politicians. And his advisers an American affairs hardly could have misled him to that extent. They would know, and surely Bulganin knew, that a public letter purporting to help Stevenson, would have the opposite effect in an election campaign in this country, simply because it came from Moscow.

Candidates Eisenhower and Stevenson are in agreement on one thing. They both resent interference in our domestic political quarrels. Mr. Stevenson thinks we ought to explore Bulganin's proposals "immediately and all the way." He says this isn't the first time the Russians have meddled in our domestic politics. According to Stevenson the real issue is not Mr. Bulganin's manners, or Russian views about American poltitis. The real issue is "what can be done to save the world from hydrogen disaster." Stevenson said: "Viewed from the standpoint not of politics but of peace, I think the President's reply to Bulganin' is unfortunate." Stevenson contended that the Russians have made it plain that their candidate is Eisenhower. This statement was apparently based on remarks that Bulganin made at the Summit meeting last summer, hoping that Eisenhower would run for re-election.

Stevenson doesn't pretend to know whether Bulganin is serious or not, but he thinks an agreement to end H-bomb testing should be made here and now; or we should expose Mr. Bulgnain's insincerity to the world.

Washington observers are trying to figure out what Bulganin wanted. Beyond an understandable desire to advertise the Soviet position on nuclear tests, another motive suspected. It is that the Russians really don't to have the tests suspended. They want to go forward with the H-bomb so long as they are ahead with the inter-continental ballistic missile. By writing this letter, and drawing Mr. Eisenhower's indignant reply, they seem to have made sure that an agreement ending the tests will not be made with him. And they hope that what blame follows for the failure will not be theirs.

Actually the Bulganin letter did not confine itself to Stevenson's proposal to ban H-bomb tests by agreement. It spent much more space boosting the familiar Soviet proposals for banning nuclear weapons. Mr. Stenenson had said nothing like this. He had not even suggested banning the use of the H bomb. His position in favor of full preparedness for deterrence, and to development of modern weapons, is not at vairance with the President's.

Both men want disarmament and both believe it can only come through adequate controls. Mr. Stevenson is not against nuclear weapons as such, for his case for ultimately ending the draft rests on nuclear weapons making the present reliance on so much manpower unnecessary.

But the Bulganin letter disregards these points. Though Stevenson is not mentioned by name, the letter leaves the impression that Stevenson wants what Bulganin wants. In fact, Stevenson and Bulganin agree only on the point of suspending H-bomb tests, and on making a fresh start to seek a wider agreement.

Mr. Eisenhower's reply was so sharp that a retort by the Soviet Premier is not to be ruled out. It it is true that the Russians are playing some inscrutable game of their own in this whole matter, another letter from Moscow is to be expected before election day.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The question is raised: Why did Bulganin send that controversial letter. Sir Winston Chruchill once told the House of Commons: "I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia." (And then those famous lines.) "It is a riddle wrapped in a mystery, inside an enigma. But perhaps " Churchill said, "there is a key. That key is Russian national interest."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 23, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower tonight issued a special report on the problem of the hydrogen bomb. The 6-thousand-word document was prepared by Administration experts... in answer to Adlai Stevenson's proposal that the United States take the lead in ending hydrogen bomb tests. It adds up to a categorical rejection of the Stevenson plan. "There is," Mr. Eisenhower said, "nothing in postwar history to justify the belief that we should... or that we could even dare... accept anything less than sound safeguards and controls for any disarmament arrangements." He said that if the United States suspended its research and preparation for tests... until another country exploded an H-bomb, "we could find our present commanding lead in nuclear weapons erased or even reversed." "The continuance of the present rate of H-bomb testing by the most sober and scientific judgment," he said, "does not imperil the health of humanity." But, he added, "I remain profoundly hopeful that---if we stay strong and steadfast---the reality of significant world disarmament will come to pass."

→

President Eisenhower will say in a speech tonight that the United States has a mission as the champion of human freedom. He will tell the 75th anniversary dinner of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners that a people like the Poles, who have once known freedom, "cannot be for always deprived of their national independence." The United States, he will say, must "help those freedom-loving people who need, and want, and can profitably use our aid."

Adlai Stevenson was campaigning here in New York today, and tonight... in a speech in Madison Square Garden... he will pledge his support to the Polish drive for independence. He will call for economic aid and suggest that, "if Soviet pressure continues and the Polish government wishes it, the United States should assist in bringing the matter before the United Nations." Stevenson will again propose that the United States take the lead in curbing "this ghastly killer", the H-bomb. "I think we must make the effort," he will say, "in the name of humanity."

In Poland today, the new Communist leaders dismissed the pro-Soviet deputy minister of defense. As his successor, they chose an officer who had once been sent to prison for his Titoist beliefs. For the present at least, the Russian, Marshal Rokossovsky remains as defense minister.

The Polish parliament met today. Its hand-picked members will be replaced in new elections on December 16th. A government shake-up is expected to be announced through the parliament in a few days.

There are more reports of Russian troop movements in Poland, none of which is confirmed. It is confirmed that a Russian cruiser and three destroyers were anchored off Danzig yesterday, but these warships are now said to have left Polish waters.

Anti-Russian demonstrations are reported tonight from several Polish cities. The Warsaw Radio says that students led a demonstration of "hundreds of thousands" of persons today in Poznan, the scene of bloody rioting on June 28. In Breslau, a crowd stormed the headquarters of the Polish-Soviet Friendship Society, smashed some windows, and trampled on the Soviet flag. [~~The Warsaw Radio warned that such outbursts do not help the workers of Poland and might, in fact, serve the interests of~~

"other ~~elements~~". Authoritative Polish sources say that Wladyslaw Gomulka, the new first secretary of the Communist Party in Poland, talked by telephone today with Soviet party boss Khruschev in Moscow. Khruschev purportedly congratulated Gomulka on his rise to power. (There is speculation that the departure of Soviet warships from the Danzig area may have been due to this telephone conversation,-that Gomulka may have registered a complaint).

The Poznan trials were watered down again today. The prosecutor's office ordered "a revision" of all indictments growing out of the June riots. The courts were also asked to release all defendants not charged with major crimes.

There were more demonstrations today in Hungary. Thousands of university students paraded in Budapest, shouting for freedom... and for the Russian troops in Hungary to go home. The party newspaper in Hungary promised a new leadership... "democratically elected"... but appealed for patience.

Yugoslavia and Hungary today issued a joint communique calling for cooperation between the two countries "on the basis of full confidence and non-interference in each other's affairs." The document advocates the free, independent development of Communism "without imposition"---presumably from Moscow.

The French are faced with new trouble in North Africa. Arab nationalists have reacted to the capture of five leaders of the Algerian revolt, by staging strikes and general demonstrations. General strikes were called in Tunis and Casablanca. In Tunis, crowds surged through the streets, overturning the cars of Europeans and setting them on fire. The French Embassy was placed under heavy guard. In Casablanca, demonstrators waved the green flag of the Algerian rebellion. Talks in Tunis between the sultan of Morocco, and the Tunisian prime minister... looking toward a peaceful settlement of the Algerian problem... may be broken off. A member of the Tunisian cabinet said, "Now there is nothing left but to fight." [~~The five Algerian leaders... captured by the French... were on their way by plane to attend these talks. The aircraft was manned by a French crew, which obeyed an order to land at an airport near Algiers, thus delivering the rebel leaders into French hands. The Moroccan government has called the action "pure piracy". And Tunisia has recalled its ambassador to France.~~]

France today recalled its ambassador to Cairo. The recall was in protest against the alleged shipment of arms by Egypt to the Algerian rebels. [Last week, the French intercepted a shipment of modern weapons which France charged originated in Alexandria and was destined for the insurgent forces. France said today that it will take the case to the United Nations. It also served notice that, henceforth, it will stop all ships suspected of carrying such cargo.]

At the United Nations today, representatives of 82 countries unanimously approved the statute for creation of an international "atoms for peace" agency. Headquarters will be in Vienna. A board of governors, and an executive secretary and staff, are still to be named. The agency was proposed by President Eisenhower in a speech before the General Assembly in December, 1953.

[United Nations headquarters announced today that the Security Council will meet on Thursday to continue debate on the Israel-Jordan dispute.]

The French foreign minister, M. Christian Pineau, flew to London tonight to confer with British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, on what step to take next in the Suez dispute. Lloyd told parliament today that Britain is not "wholly satisfied" with what came out of the recent discussion of the problem in the United Nations Security Council. Egypt, he said,

Edward R. Murrow: October 23, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

So far, most of the news about Poland's ~~[illegible]~~ MOVE ~~[illegible]~~ toward independence has come from Warsaw. But this is an event with two great participants, the Poles and the Russians. The Poles can claim independence, but to gain it, the Russians have to concur. / So far, we have no solid information about what the Russians will do. / In the absence of it, the events in Poland take on a rosy glow. For if the Poles really become independent, the greatest and most menacing modern colonial empire - the Soviet Union and its satellites - will have begun to fall apart. Nothing more stirring could be asked for in the chronicles of a single year.

But the fact that the Russians have not told us how they will treat the poles does not mean that they concur. / Here is a situation that is governed first of all by the stark consideration of power. / Poland is part of the Soviet Union's power system, numerically, economically and geographically. If Poland pries itself loose from that system, Soviet power is weakened. / It not only loses Poland, but other satellites will be the less trustworthy.

One can be sure that the Soviet Union will not tolerate the loss of so much power. That is not to say it will go to war with Poland. / Soviet leaders may decide there are much more promising weapons than tanks and machine guns. But Moscow will do something, and it is not speculation to point out what it can do.

Des on Smith
Mm 6-6000

There is power in military force that doesn't go into action. That is, there is power in the threat of power. Moscow already is using the threat. The Soviet army has Russian troops stationed in Poland to guard communications with Germany. These now have begun what are called "maneuvers." Who knows where these moving troops will go? [The Poles aren't sure, and they are worried.] They have asked to have the maneuvers discontinued. Russian warships have showed up off the Polish Coast. This is no coincidence. Moscow sent them. The ships asked entry into the Polish harbors, which was denied. But the threat of power bothers the Polish leaders. In a week the whole Communist politburo is scheduled to visit Moscow. It will go in a different frame of mind because of these demonstrations of military power, than if they had not been made. The Communist leaders know that Poland could be wiped out by the Red army and its modern weapons. They bank on Moscow not doing it, but they can't be sure.

The Soviet Union has other kinds of power. It has a stranglehold on Poland's economy. Poland cannot live without Soviet materials, and the markets of the Soviet bloc. It is an illusion to think that the United States could take the place of the Soviet empire in keeping Poland alive.

We are not in a position to accept Polish goods or provide Poland with materials on the scale that would be needed. The sum Tito received for Yugoslavia is a fraction of what Poland would have to have to maintain its independence.

Another power the Russians have over Poland is the ability to join hands with the Germans at Poland's expense in territory. They did it at the start of World War Two. It wouldn't happen again in just that way. But the day may be near when Moscow offers to come to terms with the Germans by restoring some of the former German territory now incorporated in Poland. Already the West Germans have been given to understand that when the time comes to unify Germany, they can count on getting back at least Breslau and the country around it. One can imagine how much more of Poland would be sacrificed if Moscow finds it must play for higher stakes. This is a tremendous weapon in Russian hands. However ambitious Polish nationalism becomes, it can hardly invite partition on a great scale.

A further consideration calls for emphasis in weighing the events in Poland. The struggle within Poland has been between relatively small factions of the Communist movement. The triumph of Gomulka, however heartening it is, is not one of the masses of the Polish people against tyrannical leaders. This is not even a struggle between Communists and Social Democrats. It is between the reactionary and the liberal or Nationalist wings of the Communist party. By and large the Polish people are unhappy over communism of either wing. They like the liberal wing better, but they ~~XXXXXXX~~ are no converts to it, and they hardly would come forward to die for it.

Since both factions in Warsaw are Communists, the objective they seek had better be carefully described as independence, and not freedom. No doubt the Polish people long for freedom, but they do not expect the real thing from communists. Soviet police control may be thrown off, there may be greater freedom in debate and even freer elections. Polish industry may make more consumer goods. But the men in the saddle are Marxist-Leninists. And to save their victory, they may have to compromise with the realities in which they live. The chief realities are the many kinds of Soviet power. It takes a wild kind of optimism to believe that Poland alone can defy Soviet power and live to tell the tale.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Poles are standing up to the Russian [redacted], and in doing this they are taking considerable risk. But it was our own revolutionary leader, George Washington, who said, "Nothing short of independence, it appears to me, [redacted] can possibly do." The Poles would doubtless agree. And they may take some comfort from the observation made by James Russell Lowell, who said: "Tyranny is always weakness."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower tonight issued a special report on the problem of the hydrogen bomb. The 6-thousand-word document was prepared by Administration experts in answer to Adlai Stevenson's proposal that the United States take the lead in ending hydrogen bomb tests. It adds up to a categorical rejection of the Stevenson plan. "There is," Mr. Eisenhower said, "nothing in postwar history to justify the belief that we should, or that we could even dare, accept anything less than sound safeguards and controls for any disarmament arrangements." He said that if the United States suspended its research and preparations for tests, until another country exploded an H-bomb, "we could find our present commanding lead in nuclear weapons erased or even reversed." "The continuance of the present rate of H-bomb testing by the more sober and scientific judgement," he said, "does not imperil the health of humanity." But, he added, "I remain profoundly Hopeful that, if we stay strong and steadfast, the reality of significant world disarmament will come to pass."

President Eisenhower will say in a speech tonight that the Unites States has a mission as the champion of human freedom. He will tell the 75th anniversary dinner of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners that a people like the Poles, who have once known freedom, "cannot be for always deprived of their national independence." The United States, he will say, must "help those freedom-loving people who need, and want, and can profitably use our aid."

Adlai Stevenson was campaigning here in New York today, and tonight, in a speech in Madison Square Garden, he will pledge his support to the Polish drive for independence. He will call for economic aid and suggest that, "if Soviet pressure continues and the Polish government wishes it," the United States should assist in bringing the matter before the United Nations. Stevenson will again propose that the United States take the lead in curbing "this ghastly killer", the H-bomb. "I think we must make the effort," he will say, "in the name of humanity."

In Poland today, the new Communist leaders dismissed the pro-Soviet deputy minister of defense. As his successor, they chose an officer who had once been sent to prison for his Titoist beliefs. For the present at least, the Russian Marshal Rokossovsky remains as defense minister.

The Polish parliament met today. Its hand-picked members will be replaced in new elections on December 16th. A government shake-up is expected to be announced through the parliament in a few days.

There are more reports of Russian troop movements in Poland, none of which is confirmed. It is confirmed that a Russian cruiser and three destroyers were anchored of Danzig yesterday, but these warships are now said to have left Polish waters.

Anti-Russian demonstrations are reported tonight from several Polish cities. The Warsaw Radio says that students led a demonstration of "hundreds of thousands' of persons in Poznan, the scene of bloody rioting on June 28. In Breslau, a crowd stormed the headquarters of the Polish-Soviet Friendship Society, smashed some windows and trampled on a Soviet flag.

Authoritative Polish sources say that Wladyslaw Gomulka, the new first secretary of the Communist Party in Poland, talked by telephone today with Soviet party boss Khrushchev in Moscow. Khrushchev purportedly congratulated Gomulka on his rise to power. (There is speculation that the departure of Soviet warships from the Danzig area may have been due to this telephone conversation that Gomulka may have registered a complaint.)

The Poznan trials were watered down again today. The prosecutor's office ordered "a revision" of all indictments growing out of the June riots. The courts were also asked to release all defendants not charged with major crimes.

There were more demonstrations today in Hungary. Thousands of university students paraded in Budapest, shouting for freedom, and for the Russian troops in Hungary to go home. The party newspaper in Hungary promised a new leadership, "democratically elected", bur appealed for patience.

Yugoslavia and Hungary today issued a joint communique calling for cooperation between the two countries "on the basis of full confidence and non-interference in each other's affairs." The document advocates the free, independent development of Communism "without imposition", presumably from Moscow.

The French are faced with the new trouble in North Africa. Arab nationalists have reacted to the capture of five leaders of the Algerian revolt by staging strikes and general demonstrations. General strikes were called in Tunis and Casablanca. In Tunis, crowds surged through the streets, overturning the cars of Europeans and setting them on fire. The French Embassy was placed under heavy guard. In Casablanca, demonstrators waved the green flag of the Algerian rebellion. Talks in Tunis between the Sultan of Morocco and the Tunisian prime minister, looking toward a peaceful settlement of the Algerian problem, may be broken off. A member of the Tunisian cabinet said, "Now there is nothing left to do but fight."

At the United Nations today, representatives of 82 countries unanimously approved the statute for creation of an international "atoms for peace" agency. Headquarters will be in Vienna. A board of governors and an executive secretary and staff are still to be named. The agency was proposed by President Eisenhower in a speech before the General Assembly in December, 1953.

So far, most of the news about Poland's move toward independence has come from Warsaw. But this is an event with two great participants, the Poles and the Russians. The Poles can claim independence, but to gain it, the Russians have to concur. So far, we have no solid information about what the Russians will do. In the absence of it, the events in Poland take on a rosy glow. For if the Poles really become independent, the greatest and most menacing modern colonial empire , the Soviet Union and its satellites, will have begun to fall apart. Nothing more stirring could be asked for in the chronicles of a single year.

But the fact that the Russians have not told us how they will treat the Poles does not mean that they concur. Here is a situation that is governed first of all by the stark consideration of power. Poland is part of the Soviet Union's power system, numerically, economically and geographically. If Poland pries itself loose from that system, Soviet power is weakened. It not only loses Poland, but other satellites will be the less trustworthy.

One can be sure that the Soviet Union will not tolerate the loss of so much power. That is not to say it will go to war with Poland. Soviet leaders may decide there are much more promising weapons that tanks and machine guns. But Moscow will do something, and it is not speculation to point out what it can do.

There is power in military force that doesn't go into action. That is, there is power in the threat of power. Moscow already is using the threat. The Soviet army has Russian troops stationed in Poland to guard communications with Germany. These now have begun what are called "maneuvers." Who knows where these moving troops will go? The Poles aren't sure and they are worried. They have asked to have the maneuvers discontinued. Russian warships have showed up off the Polish Coast. This is no coincidence. Moscow sent them.

The ships asked entry into the Polish harbors, which was denied. But the threat of power bothers the Polish leaders. In a week the whole Communist politburo is scheduled to visit Moscow. It will go in a different frame of mind because of these demonstrations of military power than if they had not been made. The Communist leaders know that Poland could be wiped out by the Red army and its modern weapons. They bank on Moscow not doing it, but they can't be sure.

The Soviet Union has other kinds of power. It has a stranglehold on Poland's economy. Poland cannot live without Soviet meterials and the markets of the Soviet bloc. It is an illusion to think that the United States could take the place of the Soviet empire in keeping Poland alive. We are not in a position to accept Polish goods or provide Poland with materials on the scale that would be needed. The sum Tito received for Yugoslavia is a fraction of what Poland would have to have to maintain its independence.

Another power the Russians have over Poland is the ability to join hands with the Germans at Poland's expense in territory. They did it at the start of World War Two. It wouldn't happen again in just that way. But the day any be near when Moscow offers to come to terms with the Germans by restoring some of the former German territory now incorporated in Poland. Already the West Germany have geen given to understand that when the time comes to unify Germany, they can count on getting back at least Breslau and the country around it. one can imagine how much more of Poland would be sacrificed if Moscow finds it must play for higher stakes . This is a tremendous weapon in Russian hands However ambitious Polish nationalism becomes, it can hardly invite partition on a great scale.

A further consideration calls for empahais in weighing the events in Poland. The struggle within Polnd has been between relatively small factions of the Communist movement. The triumph of Gomulka, however heartening it is, is not one of the masses of the Polish people against trrannical leaders. This is not even a struggle between Communists and Social Democrats. It is between the reactionary and the liberal or nationalist wings of the Communist party. By and large the Polish people are unhappy over communism of either wing. They like the liberal wing better, but they are no converts to it, and they hardly would come forward to die for it.

Since both factions in Warsaw are Communists, the objective they seek had better be carefully described as independence and not freedom. No doubt the Polish people long for freedom, but they do not expect the real thing from Communists. Soviet police control may be thrown off, there may be greater freedom in debate and even freer elections. Polish industry may make more consumer goods. But the men in the saddle are Marxist - Leninists. And to save their victory, they may have to compromise with the realities in which they live. The chief realities are the many kinds of Soviet power. It takes a wild kind of optimism to believe that Poland alone can defy Soviet power and live to tell the tale.

This is Ed Murrow. I811 be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Poles are standing up to the Russians and in doing this they are taking considerable risk. But it was our ownrevolutionary leader, George Washington, who said, "Nothing short of independence, it appears to me, can possibly do." The Poles would doubtless agree. And they make take dome comfort from the observation made by James Russell Lowell, who said:"Tyranny is always weakness."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 24, 1956

This is the news:

The revolt in Hungary is continuing. The new Titoist government of Premier Nagy... less than 24 hours old... admits that "heavy fighting" is still in progress in Budapest. According to the Budapest radio, the action is centered about a barracks (which is besieged by revolutionary forces) and a party headquarters in the city's 13th District. The Budapest radio says that government troops... supported by tanks... are fighting for the second day to keep the headquarters from falling into rebel hands. And a state of emergency has been proclaimed throughout Hungary. The battle may have spread to Western Hungary. The sound of shooting has been heard in Austria, just across the Hungarian frontier. Train travel between Austria and Hungary is prohibited. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, reports from Vienna that telephone communications are also out, and that the Hungarian government refuses to grant him a visa at this time. No one is being granted a visa to enter the country.

Travelers in Hungary... and who have tried to reach Budapest... have found their way blocked by Russian tanks. German businessmen who left Budapest today said the entire city is surrounded by Soviet troops and tanks. One of these travelers estimated that 350 persons have been killed so far, but this can only be a guess. The Budapest radio itself admits that the casualties have been high. There is a report that Communist jets swept over the city and strafed rebellious crowds in the streets. A witness says the aircraft opened fire "repeatedly". Throughout the day, the Budapest radio called on the rebels to lay down their arms, promising them amnesty if they would comply. The government set one deadline for compliance, then... when that was ignored... set another deadline four hours later. That, too, was largely ignored and the state radio said that "counter-revolutionaries" could no longer expect mercy. The government then began setting up ~~summary~~ courts martial, whereby captured "counter-revolutionaries" could be sentenced to death. The action began late yesterday as a struggle for an independent Hungarian brand of Communism. The Stalinist premier was kicked out and the Titoist... Imre Nagy... put in his place. When violence continued, Nagy promised government reforms and a higher standard of living for workers. When this had no effect, he imposed martial law---then called for the support of Russian troops. / There was no doubt, as the day wore on, that the demonstrations had been transformed into a revolt against Communism itself.

33 →

The Russian people were informed of none of this until tonight. / The news agency Tass said "underground revolutionary organizations" had attempted an uprising in Budapest "against the people's regime." / The Moscow radio (in a broadcast which was heard only overseas) claims that order has been restored in Budapest.

In Washington, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles discussed the Hungarian situation for an hour at the White House.

There was a brawl in Warsaw today, between Polish students and the security police. The students had demonstrated in front of the Hungarian Embassy, shouting anti-Russian slogans, and proclaiming their support of the Hungarian revolt. / When the crowd began marching toward the Soviet Embassy, it was intercepted by Polish security forces, and a struggle ensued. The security police attempted to disperse the demonstrators with clubs. Apparently no shots were fired.

This incident occurred shortly after another crowd... estimated at more than 200-thousand persons... heard a speech by Wladyslaw Gomulka, the new party secretary. Gomulka called for "wholehearted friendship" with Russia. Soviet party boss Khrushchev, he said, had promised that control of Polish affairs would remain in Poland... that Russian troops called out over the week-end would return within 48 hours to bases prescribed by the Warsaw Pact. (The Warsaw Pact is the Communist version of NATO.) Gomulka said Soviet troops would have to stay in Poland as long as NATO forces are based in West Germany.

51

The premier... Josef Cyrankiewicz... made substantially the same statement to the Polish parliament. He said members of the new Politburo will go to Moscow next week for a meeting with the Soviet Presidium. The conference, he said, will be aimed at "consolidating the principle of cooperation on the basis of equality, solidarity and mutual respect of rights."

The Warsaw radio says all but three of the 154 persons indicted for participation in the June riots in Poznan have been set free. Those still held are the three youths convicted of killing a member of the secret police.

In North Africa, anti-Western rioting spread today to Libya. Demonstrators in Tripoli stoned automobiles driven by foreigners, and smashed windows in the British embassy. This is a continuation of the riots yesterday in Morocco and Tunisia, which grew out of the capture... by the French... of five leaders of the Algerian revolt. At least 29 Europeans, perhaps as many as 60, were killed in Morocco yesterday.

Jordan ~~announced today~~ that it has joined Egypt ~~and Syria in setting~~ up a unified army ~~command. The command will be headed by an Egyptian...~~ and would operate in case of war with Israel.

In Washington tonight, the Federation of American Scientists called for an international agreement to ban the testing of H-bombs----without waiting for a "complete" inspection system. President Eisenhower said today, that the hydrogen bomb is a great deterrent to war. It is a weapon, he said, which tells any potential enemy that to attack the United States would be "suicidal". Mr. Eisenhower made the statement in a nationwide talk, directed at the women of the country. He did not refer to Adlai Stevenson's proposal, that the United States take the lead in ending hydrogen bomb tests.

Edward R. Murrow: October 24, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The break-up of empires - British, French, and now perhaps the Soviet Union's - has made up a big share of the political news of this generation. It is possible to include all three of them in a single generalization, ~~that~~ because their chief undoing has been nationalism. We still don't know where the process of disintegration will end with any of them. Indeed it may be much too soon to speak of the break-up of the Soviet empire, though it hardly will again be what it was under Stalin.

All three empires have dealt with nationalism in different ways. The British made part of their empire into a commonwealth of purely voluntary membership. But the Commonwealth has been too diverse to continue a commanding role in world affairs. At the same time British power in the Middle East and part of Africa has been sinking fast. The decline of British power is one of the sensational chapters of history.

The French tried to go modern by making the most advanced segments of the empire a part of France with full ~~XXXX~~ French citizenship. They by-passed the commonwealth idea, and tried to hold their colonies by promising ultimate promotion to full citizenship. The program failed. France has lost Morocco and Tangiers outright and now is losing Algeria itself, despite its having been part of France for a century. The sinking of French power has been even more sensational than that of Britain. #

The Soviet Union under Stalin produced an empire at the close of the war that outweighed all other existing empires in military might and cohesion. It was a novelty: it was held together by communist ideology and merciless party discipline. For a time it seemed that a new cement had been found that could hold even nationalist states together under a single dictator. One crack developed in Stalin's time, the rift with Tito. But the free world will not soon forget how frightening Soviet power became and how trivial the defection of Tito seemed for a time.

But Stalin died without leaving an heir to dictate ruthlessly in his stead. And now the Soviet empire, like the British and French, must cope with that solvent of empires, nationalism. There is not a little irony in this. Communist propaganda in trying to wreck other colonial empires, lit and fanned the fires of nationalism in every colonial corner. Now these flames are lighting the skies over Warsaw and Budapest.

Some observers are saying that Khrushchev himself lit these fires inside the Soviet empire when he made his pilgrimage of repentance to Tito. They predict his head will fall. But after Stalin's death there was only one alternative to reconsiliation with Tito. It was to rule the empire with Stalin's brutal and resistless discipline. This Khrushchev could not undertake. The empire might not tolerate it much longer, and even if it did, neither he nor anyone in the Kremlin commanded Stalin's power. So the men in the Kremlin took the course they did, and hoped for the best.

Now they must think that what is happening is the worst, not the best. Perhaps Khrushchev's head will fall. But probably only if someone unexpectedly becomes another Stalin, or the sacrifice of a scapegoat is unavoidable. It is important to bear in mind that Moscow still holds the satellites by known bonds ~~that~~ A few changes in satellite personnel and a few days of rioting ~~do~~ will not much loosen them. One of them is the continuance of communist governments in Warsaw and Budapest. Certainly the most significant fact about the Budapest uprising is that the new Communist Premier Nagy, a man whom the Stalinists deposed and reviled, himself called on the Russian troops in Hungary to overpower the Hungarians fighting in the streets. Nagy came into power on the crest of the anti-Russian wave in his country, then invited the Red Army to restore order. He may have hated to do it. But it must have given him a sense of security. He could be pretty sure these same troops would not be ordered to put him back into jail.

When the British Empire broke up, most of its independent members carried on the tradition of democracy. States like India and Ceylon might have been supposed to be breeding grounds for communism. But they remained loyal to democracy and sternly fought off communist infiltration. Presumably the men in the Kremlin expect Nagy and Gomulka to be loyal to communism, if not to a Stalinist type dictatorship, and save the empire from disaster. In the British commonwealth, democracy is the faith of the majority. In Poland and Hungary, or any satellite country, communists are in a small minority. But if the minority communist rulers win genuine independence from Moscow dictatorship, that is, dictatorship over domestic and economic affairs, presumably they will be kept. The Poles and Hungarians are not rebelling for the right to join the West, or for the blessings of Western civil liberties. They are rebelling for independence. They are nationalists. In the long run the majority may be able to put nationalists and non-communists into the government. If they do, the Soviet empire would become unrecognizable. But that is not what is happening now.

Frank Meyer

Word for Today

National independence is not the same thing as individual liberty. Edmund Burke said, "When I see the spirit of liberty in action, I see a strong principle at work. But we ought to suspend judgment until the first effervescence is a little subsided. I must be tolerably sure before congratulating men upon a blessing that they have really received one."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 25, 1956

15-9

This is the news:

The fighting in Hungary has gone through its third day. A major listening post for developments in that story is Vienna. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, is there. And so we will switch immediately to Vienna for his recorded report.

(Leiser runs 2 mins.
Returns on cue "--to Ed Murrow
in New York."

Reports from Berlin say that Communist security forces in East Germany are being kept on "emergency alert" to head off possible trouble in that Russian satellite. There is also some agitation in Czechoslovakia. Communist authorities there have sent "flying squads" about the country... trying to explain the situation in Hungary and appealing to the Czechs to beware of what the Prague radio calls "Western subversion attempts. Likewise in Poland, the Communist leadership set up workers' "militia units" in factories throughout the country to help deal with any new anti-Russian demonstrations. At the same time, the re-organized Communist Party of Poland published a series of new directives... promising more democracy and improved living conditions.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov said in Moscow today that Russian troops intervened in the Hungarian revolt because... in his words... "there was danger that counter-revolutionary forces would disorganize the life of the country." These forces, Shepilov said, capitalized on existing discontent, provoking disorders which required the Hungarian government to appeal for Soviet aid.

There is a report tonight that Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan was in Budapest, taking a direct hand in the situation.

President Eisenhower today said the United States "deplores" the intervention of Soviet troops in Hungary. The demands made by the Hungarian people, he said, "clearly fall within the framework of those human rights to which all are entitled." They are, he added, rights specifically guaranteed in the peace treaty signed by the Soviet government, after the war. "The heart of America," he said, "goes out to the people of Hungary."

Mr. Eisenhower issued the statement, shortly after arriving in New York by special train from Washington. Tonight... in a major campaign speech in Madison Square Garden... he will again refer to the situation in the Russian satellites. In comparing the international scene today with what it was four years ago, Mr. Eisenhower will say, "We await... this night... no chilling word of some new assault upon a free nation. We hear instead from the peoples of Eastern Europe the solemn word... the solemn proof... that men who have once known the blessings of freedom will lay down their lives in its name." And he will again attack Mr. Stevenson's draft and H-bomb proposals, saying that the United States "will go on steadfastly seeking safe and sound means for disarmament." Right after his speech, the President will fly back to Washington.

Adlai Stevenson left New York earlier today for the Midwest to make another bid for the farm vote. Before leaving, he told reporters... at the airport... "I am shocked that Republican politicians claim credit for the bravery of the Poles and the Hungarians. This is not a political matter." Stevenson spoke in response to reports that Republican "truth squads" were saying that it was the Eisenhower foreign policy which HELPED foment the uprisings. In a speech in Springfield, Illinois, tonight, Stevenson will accuse the Administration of "political perfidy" in handling the farm problem. "The pieces of broken Republican promises," he will say, "are there for everyone to see."

In Paris today, the French National Assembly gave Premier Mollet a vote of confidence. The vote was 330 to 140, with 49 absentions. It was not just on one issue... but on policy ranging from domestic economic problems to the problems of North Africa and Suez.

The prime minister of Tunisia told the Tunisian parliament today that fighting had broken out between French and Tunisian forces near the Algerian border... and that there had been casualties. French officials in Tunis denied such an incident had occurred.

In Washington, the government ~~The government~~ announced today that living costs reached a new record high in September. The consumer price index went up three-tenths of one percent, or one-tenth of a percentage point above the previous record set in July. The increase brings an automatic cost-of-living raise of one to four cents an hour to 300-thousand workers, chiefly in the electrical industry. The average take-home pay of factory workers also set a new record in September. And President Eisenhower issued a statement saying that... despite the increase in consumer prices... the purchasing power of the average factory worker is at an all-time high for this time of year.

~~Occasionally, this reporter calls in a correspondent who has been covering the political candidates "on the road".~~ My colleague, Wells Church, has been accompanying Vice President Nixon since the start of the campaign. There has been, he says, a change in the Nixon strategy. And for that story, we shall switch to Wells Church in Chicago.

(Church to run 4 mins.
Returns on cue: "--to Ed Murrow
in New York."

George Bryan

— FILL —

In St. Louis today, the United States Court of Appeals upheld a district court order prohibiting interference with racial integration in the Hoxie, Arkansas, schools. It is the first local school dispute in which the Federal Government has formally intervened since the Supreme Court decision of 1954. The lower court had charged opponents of desegregation in Hoxie with resorting to "acts of intimidation".

The Nobel Prize for literature was awarded today to the Spanish poet, Juan Jimenez (HĒ-MĀ-NĔS), who now teaches in Puerto Rico. His best known work, Silver and Me (an ode to a donkey), was written in 1914.

George Bryan

Word for Today

Rough words have been spoken in this political campaign... some of them downright insulting. Russell Lynes said, "The only graceful way to accept an insult is to ignore it. If you can't ignore it, top it. If you can't top it, laugh at it. And if you can't laugh at it," Lynes said, "it's probably deserved."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - WELLS CHURCH

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: --- There has been, he says, a change in the Nixon strategy and for that story, we switch to Wells Church in Chicago.

CHURCH: Wednesday morning, at the university town of Carbondale, Illinois, the Republican campaign of 1956 took a sharp turn. Vice President Nixon stated on the record what a number of leading Republicans in Washington were saying off the record this past weekend. At Carbondale, Nixon virtually claimed the election for Mr. Eisenhower and then flatly predicted that the women of America, the young people and the wage earners would elect enough Republicans to the Senate and House for the party to control both. Now this position is far beyond any he had taken in his coast to coast campaigning and it touched off a new emphasis in his half dozen or so talks a day.

True, he is still selling the Eisenhower name, but now it is being done in a way calculated to persuade voters already presumed going to vote for Mr. Eisenhower to take the next step and vote for a Republican for Congress. On the question of how the women will vote, Nixon doesn't spell his belief out very much, but he goes all out on the question of how the workers are going to vote and his attention to young voters ever since he started this campaign has been one of the more remarkable aspects of it.

He has visited some 20 colleges or universities and has stopped, for a moment, at countless lesser schools. Reporter Sam Armstrong of the St. Louis Post Dispatch has dubbed these children "Nixon's vote bank". As to the laboring men, Mr. Nixon is known to feel that the average American workman is a pretty independent fellow when it comes to his vote and he does not believe that workman generally are going to vote against the GOP.

At Elint, Michigan, for example, Mr. Nixon put it this way: "America's wage earners will be risking their jobs, their take-home pay, their security and their prospects for greater progress in the future by turning to other leadership. America's workers", he concluded, "are not going to play politics with their prosperity".

Now perhaps the most interesting move by Mr. Nixon in this more direct drive for a Republican Congress was his surprise challenge last night at Evanston, Illinois to all candidates for the National House and Senate, Republicans and Democrats alike, to state before election day whether they favor the Eisenhower H-bomb position or the Stevenson position. Nixon evidently feels the Stevenson position is the unpopular one and his challenge is regarded here as a shrewd political maneuver.

Looking back over the thirty thousand plus miles of this Nixon campaign trail, two things seem to stand out to me, aside from the candidate himself and the crowds he draws. First is the astonishing number of young people at work in this campaign. At every stop, their youthful energy is very evident and Nixon never fails to direct a part of his talk toward them. The other outstanding thing is the emergence, at long last, of the two-party system in Texas. For years, wishful thinking politicians have hailed a Republican party in the South, but for the first time, there really seems to be one. A Republican county chairman in Texas explained the change to me, saying, "Texans finally found out that the two-party system was better for Texas" and a packed hall and stage at a Ft. Worth rally confirmed beyond question that an opposition party has finally gotten off the ground there.

An often asked question is: Has the Nixon campaign been successful? Well, of course, the answer to that one will come next November 6th. But it can be said that the Nixon campaign has been very strenuous. An idea of the scope may be gained by remembering that we are in Illinois today, but we will sleep tomorrow night in Oregon, with stops in Montana and Washington state in between.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. Trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.T.

This is the news:

The fighting in Hungary has gone through its third day. A major listening post for developments in that story is Vienna. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, is there. And so we well switch immidiately to Vienna for his recorded report.

LEISER: When the blood bath started in Budapest 48 hours ago, Ed, the rebels put down two major demands to their Communist masters. The first was accepted almost immediately, they were promised today that the second would be accepted and still the uprising continues tonight. The rebels insisted first that Imre Nagy, the so called National Communist who had been deposed as premier and imprisoned for his Titoism, be reinstated as prime minister. He was and his first two days of rule have been devoted to surpressing the rebellion of those who then were calling him to power. The second demand was that the Soviet troops be withdrawn from Hungary This afternoon and evening Nagy has said he would ask the Russians to do so once the blood shed stopped. It hasn't.

The latest objective information to come out of Budapest, it came to be teletype from the U.S. Legation there, said both sides seem to have established positions for the night and that the firing has died down somewhat. Tanks still are rolling down the street and sporadic shooting continues. Earlier the first sizeable convoy of foreigners to get out, six carloads primarily Austrian citizens reached the border. They told of continuing resistance and confirmed what the Communist radio had hinted at. The Hungarian soldiers had defected to the rebels.

The SKB's estimates of casualties ranged from two to three thousand. There's no way of course yet to substantiate such figures and they described incredible scenes of fury and violence, with mobs racing through the streets carrying blood stained Hungarian national flags. The newest bit of information the Hungarians brought out with them is that the uprising is spreading outside the Budapest area.

The little town you pass thoough on the way to Austria is Gyoer. There they reported the samiliar red stars across the building had been torn down. Crowds were still massing and there were signs there's already been violence there. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Reports from Berlin say that Communist security forces in East Germany are being kept on "emergency alert" to head off possible trouble in that Russian satellite. There is also some agitation in Czechoslovakia. Communist Authorities there have sent "flying squads" about the country trying to explain the situation in Hungary and appealing to the Czechs to beware of what the Prague radio calls "Western subversion attempts." Likewise in Poland, the Communist leadership set up workers' "militia units" in factories throughout the country to help deal with any new anti-Russian demonstrations. At the same time, the re-organized Communist Party of Poland published a series of mew directives, promising more democracy and improved living conditions.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov said in Moscow today that Russian troops intervened in the Hungarian revolt because, in his words, "there was danger that counter-revolutionary forces would disorganize the life of the country." These forces,Shepilov said, capitalized on existing discontent, provoking disorders which required the Hungarian government to appeal for Soviet aid.

There wa a report tonight that Soviet Deputy Premier Mikoyan was in Budapest, taking a direct hand in the situation.

President Eisenhower today said the United States "deplores" the intervention of Soviet troops in Hungary. The demands made by the Hungarian people he said, "clearly" fall within the framework of those human rights to which all are entitled." They are, he added, rights specifically guaranteed in the peace treaty signed by the Soviet government after the war. "The heart of America," he said, "goes out to the people of Hungary."

Mr. Eisenhower issued a statement shortly after arriving in New York by special train from Washington. Tonight, an a major campaign speech in Madison Square Garden, he will again refer to the situation in the Russian satellites. In comparing the international scene today with what it was four years ago, Mr. Eisenhower will say "We await, this night, no chilling word of some new assault upon a free nation. We hear instead from the peoples of Eastern Europe the solemn word, the solemn proof, that men who have once known the blessings of freedom will lay down their lives in its name." And he will again attack Mr. Stevenson's draft and H-bomb proposals, saying that the United States "will go on steadfastly seeking safe and sound means for disarmament." Right after his speech, the President will fly back to Washington.

Adlai Stevenson left New York earlier today for the Midwest to make another bid for the farm vote. Before leaving, he told reporters, at the air port, "I am shocked that Republican polticians claim credit for the bravery of the Poles and the Hungarians. This is not a political matter." Stevenson spoke in response to reports that Republican "truth squads" were saying that it was the Eisenhower foreign policy which helped forment the uprisings. In a speech in Springfield, Illinsois, tonight, Stevenson will accuse the Administration of "political perfidy" in halding the farm problem."The pieces of broken Republican promises," he will say, "are for everyone to see."

In Paris today, the French National Assembly gave Premier Mollet a vote of confidence. The vote was 330 to 140, with 49 abstentions. It was not just on one issue, but on policy ranging from domestic economic problems to the problems of North Africa and Suez.

The Prime Minister of Tunisia told the Tunisian parliament today that fighting had broken out between French and Tuniaisn forces near the Algerian border and that there had been casualties. French officials in Tunis denied such an incident had occurred.

In Washington, the government adnounced today that living costs reached a new record high in Septemter. The consumer price index went up three-tenths of one percent, or one-tenth of a percentage point above the previous record set in July. The increases brings an automatic cost-of-living raise of one to four cents an hour to 300-thousan workers, cheifly in the electrical industry. The average take-home pay of factory workers also set a new record in September. And President Eisenhower issued a statement saying that despite the increase in consumer prices, the purchasing power of the average factory worker is at an all-time high for this time of year.

My colleague, Wells Church, has been accompanying Vice President Nixon since the start of the campaign. There has been, he says, a change in the Nixon strategy. And for that story, we shall switch to Wells Church in Chicago.

CHURCH: Wednesday morning, at the university town of Carbondale, Illinois, the Republican campaign of 1956 took a sharp turn. Vice President Nixon stated on the record what a number of leading Republicans in Washington were saying off the record this past weekend. At Carbondale, Nixon virtually claimed the election for Mr. Eisenhower and then flatly predicted that the women of America, the young people and the wage earners would elect enough

Republicans to the Senate and House for the party to control both. Now this position is far beyond any he had taken in his coast to coast campaigning and it touched off a new empahsis in his half dozen or so talks a day.

True, he is still selling the Eisenhower name, but now it is being done in a way calculated to persuade voters already presumed boing to vote for Mr. Eisenhower to take the next step and vote for a Republican for Congress. On the question of how the women will vote, Nixon doesn't spell his belief out very much, but he goes all out on the question of how the workers are going to vote and his attention to young voters ever since he started this campaign has been one of the most remarkable aspects of it.

He has visited some 20 colleges or universities and has stopped, for a moment, at countless lesser schools. Reporter Sam Armstrong of the St. Louis Post Dispatch has dubbed thise children "Nixon's vote bank." As to the laboring men, Mr. Nixon is known to feel that the average American workman is a pretty independent fellow when it comes to his vote and he does not believe that workmen generally are going to vote against the GOP.

At Flint, Michigan, for example, Mr. Nixon put it this way: "America's wage earners will be risking their jobs, their take-home pay, their security and their prospects for greater progress in the future by turning to other lead rship. America's workers" he concludes, "are not going to play politics with their prosperity."

Now perhaps the most inter sting move by Mr. Nixon in this more direect drive for a Republican Congress was his surprise challenge last night at Evanston, Illinois, to all candidates for the National House and Senate, Republicans and Democrats alike, to state before election day whether they favor the Eisenhower H-bomb position or the Stevenson position. Nixon evidently feels the Stenenson position is the unpopular one and his challenge is regarded here as a shrewd political maneuver.

Looking back over the thirty thousand plus miles of this Nixon campaign trail, two things seem to stand out to me, aside from the candidate himself and the crowds he draws. First is the astonishmng number of young people at work in this campaign. At every stop, their youthful energy is very evident and Nixon never fails to direct a part of his talk toward them. The other outstanding thing is the emergence, at long last, of the two-party system in Texas. For years, wishful thinking polticians have hailed a Republican party in the South, but for the first time, there really seems to be one. A Republican county chairman in Texas explained the change to me, saying, "Texans finally found out that the two party system was better for Texas" and a packed hall and stage at a Ft. Worth rally confirmed beyond question that an opposition part has finally gotten off the ground there.

An often asked question is: "Has the Nixon campaign been successful? Well, of course, the answer to that one will come next November 6th. But it can be said that the Nixon campaign has been very strenuous. An idea of the scope may be gained by remembering that we are in Illinois today, that we will sleep tomorrow night in Oregon, with stops in Montana and Washington state in between.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Rough words have been spoken in this political campaign, some of them downright insulting. Russell Lynes said, "The only graceful way to accept an insult is to ignore it. If you can't ignore it, top it. If you can't top it, laugh at it. But if you can't laugh at it," Lynes said, "It's probably deserved."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 26, 1956

This is the news:

The anti-Communist revolt in Hungary is spreading. Just how far it has spread is impossible to say. But persons reaching Austria say they have seen fighting in many localities. Much of Western Hungary is said to be under rebel control. The rebel forces have also seized two radio stations---one near the Czech frontier, the other not far from the border of Yugoslavia. ~~And~~ This is an indication the revolution has met with some success in the south and in the northeast as well. An Hungarian ambulance... loaded with wounded... crossed into Austria. It was accompanied by three doctors, who told of a bloody battle only a few miles from the frontier. They appealed for medical equipment, blood plasma, and food. ~~And~~ Their appeal was granted. The Austrian government said tonight that it is reinforcing its frontier---in the words of a government spokesman "to protect Austrian people in the border areas fron unpleasant surprises." He said, "From the bottom of our hearts we support the fight of those who realized that only a democracy can insure the right of the people."

Early today, the government of Hungary made a new appeal for an end to the revolt. It promised to get Russian troops out of Hungary by January first... and it promised amnesty to all rebel forces that lay down their arms by 5 p.m., New York time. A late report says this new ultimatum was ignored, that fighting continued in Budapest... and elsewhere... after the deadline passed.

Dispatches from Berlin say the Communist army of East Germany has been placed on an emergency footing. All leaves have been cancelled. And tonight the Communist radio promised East German workers a higher standard of living. At the same time, it said any attempt to rebel would be "completely crushed".

In Poland today, a number of Communist officials in the provinces resigned. They were criticized for failing to support the new liberalization program.

A dispatch from Moscow ~~is interesting... not because it contains~~ anything new... but because of what the Russian censors allowed the Reuters correspondent to say. The dispatch leads off by reporting that young Russians have been putting pressure on Soviet party boss Khrushchev for more "democratization". Then it says, "But the big question (and this was passed by the Russian censor) the big question is whether Khrushchev will be allowed to continue with his liberalization policies after what has happened in Poland and Hungary." Some Soviet leaders... like Molotov... are ~~said to feel that~~ Khrushchev has gone too far.

In ~~Washington today, President Eisenhower met with the National Security Council. The White House said the Hungarian and Polish situations were discussed.~~

The State Department announced that it is consulting "a number of friendly governments" on the "feasibility" of bringing the Hungarian question before the United Nations. The ~~State~~ department spokesman... Lincoln White... ~~[illegible]~~ said the governments being consulted include Britain and France. A ~~[illegible]~~ specific point under discussion, he said, "is whether Soviet troops are in Hungary legitimately under the Warsaw Pact."

French Foreign Minister Pineau told a press luncheon in Paris today that the western "Big Three" ~~might~~ may soon take the question of Soviet intervention to the Security Council. /The Russians, he said, have made "a major mistake". /Likewise, Pineau said, it would be a mistake for the West to interfere in the internal affairs of the satellites, though he believes the West should be ready to help re-establish their economic stability.

In the United Nations today, France asked the Security Council to take up the question of alleged interference by Egypt in the Algerian revolt. France formally accused Egypt of trying to send a shipload of arms to the Algerian rebels "in flagrant violation," France said, "of the fundamental rules of international law."

The charter for an international "atoms for peace" agency was signed at United Nations headquarters today by the representatives of 70 countries. The other 12 countries participating in the program have 90 days in which to sign. President Eisenhower sent the conference a message, pledging 11-thousand pounds of Uranium-235 to get the program underway. In addition, he offered to match all donations of Uranium-235 by other nations until July, 1960. ~~He said, "I wish my country to be among the first to recognize by official action what you at this conference have accomplished."~~ The agency was originally proposed by Mr. Eisenhower, in a speech before the United Nations, in 1953.

King Hussein of Jordan called in western correspondents tonight to disprove reports... circulated earlier today... that he had been assassinated. Hussein told the reporters, "As you can see, I am quite all right."

Rioting in Singapore has reached serious proportions. Eleven persons are now dead... and more than 50 injured... in clashes between pro-Communist demonstrators and police. More British troops are being moved into Singapore in an effort to put down the violence. The trouble began yesterday when crowds protested the banning of a students' organization the government charged was subversive. Most of the demonstrators are Chinese.

A statement that President Eisenhower "apparently suffered a mild relapse" last week, on his western campaign trip, was vigorously denied today by the White House. The statement was made by Drew Pearson in his syndicated column. News Secretary Hagerty called the statement "the most amazing document of falsehood that I have ever seen." It is, he said, "absolutely and categorically untrue." Hagerty said the President "felt fine" during the trip, except for a "perfectly natural tiredness" anyone might experience after a long, hard day. Pearson said he ~~was~~ is standing by his story. "It was carefully checked," he said, "and I believe it to be true."

Adlai Stevenson today charged that President Eisenhower's hydrogen bomb policy is an attempt "to preserve peace by a preponderance of terror." And this, the Democratic candidate said in a speech in Rock Island, Illinois, "is madness." ~~Stevenson said the next step is the cobalt bomb, or "a force that can shake the earth on its axis."~~ The way to peace, he said, is not "through fear, and ever more horrible weapons. It is through faith and confidence and rising standards of living among the have-nots---the millions who tremble on the sidelines of this mad arms race." #

Edward R. Murrow: October 26, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The H-Bomb has stirred up more controversy than any other issue in the campaign, but it is proving itself to be a poor subject for debate. The lay public really knows ~~nothing~~ Little about the H-Bomb and has to rely on the scientists for an opinion. The scientists themselves have only partial knowledge, and they differ as to what this means. The underlying facts about contamination from H-Bomb tests, and about the certainty of detecting them, are incomplete. And where there is no agreement about the facts, there can be little reliance on the conclusions drawn from them.

Mr. Stevenson raised the humanitarian issue and then argued that it would be safe to give up H-Bomb tests. He said that if the Soviet Union broke an agreement to do so, we could detect it and resume our own experiments. President Eisenhower denied that the tests are a danger to humanity, and also denied that all Soviet tests could be detected. He also argued that it would take time to resume our own tests and the Russians might get ahead in H-Bomb power.

Both Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Eisenhower turned to scientists for support on the humanitarian question. Those cited by Mr. Stevenson were later reinforced by physicists and scientific groups all over the country, the latest being the Federation of American Scientists. Mr. Eisenhower relied chiefly on the report of the committee of the National Academy of Scientists on the genetic effects of radiation. This had been interpreted as saying that a ten-fold increase of fall-out would not be serious.

But today, D. A. H. Sturtevant, one of the world's foremost geneticists, and a member of the committee that drafted the National Academy statement, declared that the committee reached no such conclusion. "I for one", he wrote in a letter to the Washington Post, "would have been unwilling to sign a report that could reasonably have been so interpreted." He went on to say that since the committee reported, Commissioner Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission had indicated that the danger from radio-active strontium in fall-out was greater than the information available to the committee led it to suppose. "For this reason," he wrote, "our conclusions about the danger from fall-out need revision upward."

The Radiation Hazards Committee of the Federation of American Scientists reported that the distribution of Strontium-90 is unequal, and went on to say: "It may well be true that in certain areas of the world the Strontium-90 hazard has already passed the danger point, to say nothing of the additional production of this material in further tests."

These statements seem to put Mr. Stevenson ahead in the humanitarian argument. The scientists at least do not agree that H-Bomb tests are no danger to humanity. Since some of them believe they are, the case against calling off the tests rests on it not being practicable and safe to do so.

That makes the possibility of detection important. But the difficulty here seems to be only one of size. Nobody denies that a big H-Bomb explosion can be detected. It is the little ones that probably can be kept secret. And here the issue gets confused. Both we and the Russians are experimenting with big and little bombs. ~~We presumably are far ahead with the big ones. Military talk in Washington is that our lead may be something like twenty to three. Consequently there would be strong military approval for a proposal to ban the tests of big H-Bombs, since that would freeze us in a position of H-Bomb superiority.~~ And since big bombs presumably have more fall-out than little ones, even several little ones, a proposal to ban the big tests would have humanitarian as well as military benefits.

Stet.

~~But that is not what Mr. Stevenson proposed. He wanted all H-Bomb~~ tests abandoned. ~~This is where the question of control~~ comes in. ~~If the Russians agreed to what Mr. Stevenson wants, and then experimented with an explosion, say, of a quarter of a megaton, we probably would not know it,~~ and the agreement would put us to a disadvantage.

Stet x

[This leads to the thought of an agreement to forbid only the explosions that can be detected. This sounds possible and even practicable, and it might be middle ground on which Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Eisenhower could meet.] Neither our experimenters nor the Russians might be willing to give up the right to make little H-Bombs. For both sides are feverishly developing the ballistic missile, and want to fit it with an H-Bomb warhead.

But there would be trouble with even this kind of limited agreement. Detection, hence enforcement, gets harder the smaller the explosion. [Suppose the agreement bans everything over a quarter of a megaton and the Russians explode one of a third of a megaton; we could protest, but the Russians could swear their bomb was only a quarter megaton size. We would have no way to prove them wrong. But this is only a detail, and doesn't necessarily make an agreement impossible.]

Washington sources say that within the Pentagon and the Administration a proposition to put a ban on tests of big H-bombs has been under consideration for some time. If Mr. Stevenson had not raised the H-Bomb issue, something might have been heard about this idea. Now it is pushed into the lower drawer. But it is not dead. It is simply dormant for the length of the the campaign. After the election, more may be heard about it, as though the H-Bomb debate had never taken place.

Jerry Bryan -

Word for Today

Controversy... such as the controversy over the hydrogen bomb... is a healthy thing in a democracy. / For as Professor Edmond Cahn once said, very wisely: "The voices of the republic are not mere discord. / Conflicts there must be from time to time. / For when all conflicts cease, the spirit of political institutions dies."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow: October 26, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The H-Bomb has stirred up more controversy than any other issue in the campaign, but it is proving itself to be a poor subject for debate. The lay public really knows ~~nothing~~ little about the H-Bomb and has to rely on the scientists for an opinion. The scientists themselves have only partial knowledge, and they differ as to what this means. / The underlying facts about contamination from H-Bomb tests, and about the certainty of detecting them, are incomplete. And where there is no agreement about the facts, there can be little reliance on the conclusions drawn from them.

Mr. Stevenson raised the humanitarian issue and then argued that it would be safe to give up H-Bomb tests. / He said that if the Soviet Union broke an agreement to do so, we ~~should~~ could detect it and ~~would~~ resume our own experiments. President Eisenhower denied that the tests are a danger to humanity, and also denied that all Soviet tests could be detected. / He also argued that it would take time to resume our own tests and the Russians might get ahead in H-Bomb power.

Both Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Eisenhower turned to scientists for support on the humanitarian question. Those cited by Mr. Stevenson were later reinforced by physicists and scientific groups all over the country, the latest being the Federation of American Scientists. Mr. Eisenhower relied chiefly on the report of the committee of the National Academy of Scientists on the genetic effects of radiation. This had been interpreted as saying that a ten-fold increase of fall-out would not be serious.

But today, D. A. H. Sturtevant, one of the world's foremost geneticists, and a member of the committee that drafted the National Academy statement, declared that the committee reached no such conclusion. "I for one", he wrote in a letter to the Washington Post, "would have been unwilling to sign a report that could reasonably have been so interpreted." He went on to say that since the committee reported, Commissioner Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission had indicated that the danger from radio-active strontium in fall-out was greater than the information available to the committee led it to suppose. "For this reason," he wrote, "our conclusions about the danger from fall-out need revision upward."

The Radiation Hazards Committee of the Federation of American Scientists reported that the distribution of Strontium-90 is unequal, and went on to say: "It may well be true that in certain areas of the world the strontium-90 hazard has already passed the danger point, to say nothing of the additional production of this material in further tests."

These statements seem to put Mr. Stevenson ahead in the humanitarian argument. The scientists at least do not agree that H-Bomb tests are no danger to humanity. Since some of them believe they are, the case against calling off the tests rests on it not being practicable and safe to do so.

That makes the possibility of detection important. But the difficulty here seems to be only one of size. Nobody denies that a big H-Bomb explosion can be detected. It is the little ones that probably can be kept secret. And here the issue gets confused. Both we and the Russians are experimenting with big and little bombs. We presumably are far ahead with the big ones. Military talk in Washington is that our lead may be something like twenty to three. Consequently there would be strong military approval for a proposal to ban the tests of big H-Bombs, since that would freeze us in a position of H-Bomb superiority. And since big bombs presumably have more fall-out than little ones, even several little ones, a proposal to ban the tests would have humanitarian as well as military benefits.

But that is not what Mr. Stevenson proposed. He wanted all H-Bomb tests abandoned. This is where the question of control comes in. If the Russians agreed to what Mr. Stevenson wants, and then experimented with an explosion, say, of a quarter of a megaton, we probably would not know it, and the agreement would put us to a disadvantage.

Stet.

This leads to the thought of an agreement to forbid only the explosions that can be detected. This sounds possible and even practicable, and it might be middle ground on which Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Eisenhower could meet. Neither our experimenters nor the Russians might be willing to give up the right to make little H-Bombs. For both sides are feverishly developing the ballistic missile, and want to fit it with an H-Bomb warhead.

But there would be trouble with even this kind of limited agreement. Detection, hence enforcement, gets harder the smaller the explosion. Suppose the agreement bans everything over a quarter of a megaton and the Russians explode one of a third of a megaton; we could protest, but the Russians could swear their bomb was only a quarter-megaton size. We would have no way to prove them wrong. But this is only a detail, and doesn't necessarily make an agreement impossible.

Washington sources say that within the Pentagon and the Administration a proposition to put a ban on tests of big H-bombs has been under consideration for some time. If Mr. Stevenson had not raised the H-Bomb issue, something might have been heard about this idea. Now it is pushed into the lower drawer. But it is not dead. It is simply dormant for the length of the the campaign. After the election, more may be heard about it, as though the H-Bomb debate had never taken place.

James Byrnes

Oct. 29, 1956

The government of Israel announced today that its defense forces had ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ crossed into Egypt and had attacked suicide commando bases near a road junction leading toward the Suez canal. U.S. Courier says 18½ miles E of Suez. "This operation was necessitated" the communique said, "by continuous Egyptian military attacks on citizens and on Israel land and sea communications, the purpose of which was to cause the destruction and deprive the people of Israel of the possibility of a peaceful existence." The attack was ordered after ~~two~~ Egptian suicide commando squads had entered Isreal from the Gaza strip, the Israelis said, (and two of the squads) ~~and one of them~~ had been captured. The commandos, they said, had blown up a watertank at Niram, near the Gaza Strip.

Insert A

A statement of the Israeli foreign office said that the Egyptian commandos, ~~the Fedayeen~~, had been quiet for some time, but that after last week's ~~the~~ Security Council's action, Nasser felt free to authorize them to enter Israeli territory again. "Within the last week" (the statement said) ~~he said~~ ~~at~~ "twenty-four Israeli casualties were caused by mines planted by the ~~Fedayeen~~ Commandos in the Negev territory.

Elkins

2

News of the invasion of Egypt sent tremors of a war scare all around the world. Stock prices fell on the New York stock market. Hasty ministerial conferences were held in many capitals. The news was flashed to President Eisenhower on a campaign tour in the South.

This, ~~however,~~ is the first time the Israelis have crossed into Arab territory on a military mission and not been immediately withdrawn. ~~Egypt has confirmed the action but says no clashes have occurred~~

Two notes had been sent by President Eisenhower to Premier Ben Gurian of Israel cautioning him against making any move likely to bring on war. A similar message of caution was delivered by U.S.Ambassador Hare to President Nasser in Egypt today. And in Miami, President Eisenhower departed from his prepared text to say that nowhere is the danger to peace more critical than in the Middle East. The United States, he said, cannot hope to erase suddenly the ancient animosities in that part of the world, but we would, he declared, "go on striving to do all in our power to heal old wounds, rather than let them open up in bloodshed." He promised to use "the full moral power of America to maintain peace."

In Washington Secretary Dulles had a busy day. He briefed three members of the Senate foreign relations committee, then met with the British and French ambassadors. He talked with President Eisenhower by telephone on his plane and arranged to discuss the crisis with the President at the White House at 7. He told the President what he had discussed with the British and French. It had raised the question that the tri-partite agreement of 1950 might be applicable to the present crisis. This calls upon the three powers to act to maintain peace in the region. He also had urged that prompt action be taken to bringing the Israeli entry into Egypt before the United Nations. Both ambassadors expected to have replies in the morning.

The notes President Eisenhower sent to Israel had been occasioned by Israel's partial mobilization of reserves on the border of Jordan. This was separate from today's invasion o Egypt.

This was linked with the shift of Jordan's political backing from the West to Egypt. Jordan today set up its first ministry reflecting the result of the election a weekago. It contained seven members from the leftist and pro-Egyptian national socialist party, one from the Arab resurrection party, and two independents. The minister of agriculture is an acknowledged communist supporter, and the first of that description to be given a portfolio in an Arab government.

Israel's defense measures on the Jordan border are ascribed to a fear that Iraqi troops, now poised on Jordan's frontier, will move into the kingdom. If this happens, Israel ~~would~~ has said it would also move. As Jordan has ~~a treaty~~ an alliance with Britain, and now has joint military command with Egypt, this might lead to the incredible situation of Britain and Egypt both fighting on the side of Jordan against Israel. But Israel's suprise move today was in the opposite direction, ~~and of itself not so menacing to Middle Eastern peace~~ fateful.

~~This is the news!~~

Radio Budapest announced today that an agreement had been reached with the rebels to turn in their arms, whereupon the Russian troops are to leave Budapest. This surrender of the arms ~~army~~ in Budapest is due to take place at 9 tomorrow morning. This news appears to be confirmed by a statement by Foreign Minister Shapilov in Moscow, who put it the other way, saying that Soviet troops will not withdraw from Budapest until the rebels have laid down their arms. Movement of the Russian troops out of Budapest apparently had already begun tonight. However, withdrawal of Russian troops from all of Hungary has not yet been promised. Marshal Zhukov is quoted as saying that there can be no complete withdrawal until it has been negotiated by the signatories of the Warsaw pact. As in Poland, the Russian troops in Hungary are stationed there to be ready to resist any attack from the West. This is under terms of the pact set up as the Soviet counterpart to NATO.

¶ The situation outside Budapest still remains unclear. Withdrawal of Soviet troops from the northeast appeared to have started. This was indicated in a broadcast heard from a rebel radio station, which said it gave the news because workers had gone on strike until the Soviet troops departed. "The withdrawal" it said "has now begun. This should contribute to calm events, so that life in Hungary can return to normal." Another rebel radio station was heard calling on workers to return to their factories.

My colleague Daniel Schorr cables from Moscow that Russia's leaders appeared at three social functions in six hours this evening, and ~~appeared~~ seemed more accessible, talkative and relaxed than in recent days. They gave the impression they must have reached a decision. He judged from their remarks, and the Soviet press, that they intend to extricate the Soviet Union from the Hungarian mess by making any reasonable concessions, and accepting the revolution in Hungary with as good face as possible. "Defense Minister Zhukov assured me" said Schorr "that no Soviet reinforcements had moved into Hungary. Foreign Minister Shepilov told me that Soviet troops had been ordered not to fire unless attacked, and to evacuate Budapest as soon as peace had been restored in the capital. But both men repeated that troops could not be taken altogether out of Hungary until ~~[illegible]~~ signatories of the Warsaw pact had agreed to it."

A concession won by the Hungarian rebels was announced today, the dissolution of the Communist secret police. ~~The news was officially broadcast in the name of Interior Minister Ferenc Muennich.~~ It was ~~He~~ promised that members of the secret police guilty of torture and oppression would be punished.

The government has not promised free elections and a free press, as rebels have demanded, but the concessions so far made count as a substantial victory for the uprising.

An official voice was lifted in Budapest today protesting against Pravda's charge that the Hungarian uprising was brought about by British and American imperialists. The Communist Party newspaper ~~Szabad Nep~~ said that the entire population of Budapest felt insulted by Pravda's assertions. "Pravda", wrote the newspaper, "also said that the uprising was directed against the people and was an adventure. It was neither one nor the other. The Hungarian people want freedom from fear and terror and they want national independence. What has happened in Hungary is no adventure and it did not fail."

In New York The Daily Worker, the Communist newspaper, called the use of Soviet troops in Hungary deplorable, and on a par with the use of French troops in Algeria and British troops in Cyprus. It said that the communists in Hungary had been too late in rectifying the evils of the Stalin regime, in contrast with those in Poland who had joined the liberalization movement in time.

At the United Nations, observers today were discussing the fact that Hungarian delegate yesterday pocketed the speech he intended to make supporting the Soviet anti-western position. He decided instead to ask for furhter instructions. He did this after the Australian delegate E. Ronald Walker, quoted to him the language Premier Nagy of Hungary had used a few minutes before in a broadcast. The premier had called the events of the past week "the consequence of the dreadful sins and mistakes of the past decades." The uprising", the premier said, had been "a huge movement of the Hungarian people, and none could deny that the events were a big national democratic movement welding the entire Hungarian people into unity." Budapest is now sending a special envoy to the United Nations. Western powers hope to press further the charge that Soviet troops violated the peace treaty with Hungary in firing on Hungarian troops and civilians. The Security Council yesterday voted nine to one to debate the question, Soviet Union was against it, and Jugoslavia abstained.

In Poland, one notable figure has appeared on the scene, another (Vishinsky) has vanished. The one to appear is Cardinal Wyszynski, who briefly addressed a crowd before his palace and advised it ~~against disorders and demonstrations~~ to maintain peace since it is essential to freedom. It was his first appearance since his release from house arrest. The man who has vanished is the Defense Minister Marshal Rokossovsky. Officially he is on leave. Presumably he has gone to Moscow. Presumably, too, he will not retain his position as defense minister. In his absence, his place is being taken by one of Poland's "rehabilitated" generals who is a close friend of Premier Gomulka Marian Spychalski. (Spichalsky)

The Algerian crisis made news in the United Nations today, where the Security Council, in a ten minute session, voted to hear the charge of France that Egypt was smuggling arms to the Algerian rebels. And Algeria made news in Paris, where the five insurgent rebels, arrested last Monday at an airport on their way to a parley with Moroccans and Tunisians, were formally indicted. They were accused of distributing pamphlets in the Paris region aimed at demoralizing the army and the nation. The penalty for this offense, if proved, can be death.

25 sec

-11-

Adlai Stevenson in Massachusetts today returned to the attack on the H-bomb policy of President Eisenhower ~~today~~. He issued a 3,500-word statement on the issue, in which he called the President's outlook one of "hopeless defeatism". He predicted that if tests are not ended the Russians might catch up with us in H-bombs, ~~and~~ then, he said, ~~that~~ we must turn to diplomacy ~~and~~ and new ideas to find a way to non-nuclear peace.

Mike Elkins -

EDWARDS SHOW: October 29, 1956.

ISRAEL: ABOUT SIZE NEW JERSEY. TOTAL POPULATION MILLION, EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND - SURROUNDED HOSTILE ARAB STATES - ISRAELI ARMY 2 1/2 years - MAGNIFICENT FIGHTING FORCE - SHORT OF AIRCRAFT AND ARMOR. THEIR INTELLIGENCE AND COMMUNICATIONS BEST IN THE MIDDLE EAST. HIGH MORALE.

TODAY'S MOVE BY THE ARMY OF ISRAEL COULD MEAN A RENEWAL OF FULL-SCALE WAR, OR IT COULD BE UNUSUALLY STRONG PUNITIVE OPERATION AGAINST EGYPTIAN SUICIDE SQUADS - AREA CHOSEN FOR THIS OPERATION INDICATES TWAS NOT INTENDED AS OPENING FULL-SCALE WAR - ISRAELIS COULD CUT OFF AND ISOLATE CONSIDERABLE EGYPTIAN FORCES IN ~~SINAI PENINSULA~~ Gaza Strip - PROBABLY MOST SIGNIFICANT INDICATION SO FAR IS ABSENCE OF AIR ACTION REPORTED BY EITHER SIDE - IF ISRAELIS HAVE DETERMINED UPON ALL-OUT WAR AS FINAL RESULT, THEY WOULD CERTAINLY HAVE PLASTERED EGYPTIAN AIRFIELDS, FOR PRIMARY THREAT TO ISRAEL IS FROM THE AIR. NO ONE KNOWS HOW COMPLETELY EGYPTIANS HAVE DIGESTED THEIR RUSSIAN-BUILT

FIGHTERS AND BOMBERS, BUT A JET CAN FLY LENGTH OF ISRAEL IN THIRTY-FIVE MINUTES, AND ACROSS IT IN A MATTER OF SECONDS. HAIFA AND TEL AVIV ARE FANTASTICALLY VULNERABLE, AND ISRAEL WOULD SCARCELY HAVE STARTED FULL-SCALE WAR WITHOUT ATTEMPTING NEUTRALIZE ENEMY AIR POWER.

EGYPTIAN SUICIDE SQUADS HAVE BEEN INCREASINGLY ACTIVE - EGYPT, JORDAN AND SYRIA SIGNED A MILITARY PACT AIMED AT ISRAEL, AND IRAQI FORCES MOVED TO THE BORDERS OF JORDAN - NO DOUBT ISRAEL WAS PROVOKED AND FELT INCREASING IMPLACABLE THREAT - HOWEVER IF ISRAEL SHOULD BE JUDGED AGGRESSOR, OUR GOVERNMENT PLEDGED TO AID EGYPT.

No U.N. observers -

IF EITHER SIDE DECIDES IT'S TO BE ALL-OUT WAR THE NEWS WILL COME IN TERMS OF AERIAL BOMBARDMENT. SO FAR THAT NEWS HASN'T COME - IF IT DOES IT WILL BE NECESSARY TO USE BIBLICAL TERMS TO DESCRIBE THE FEROCITY OF THE FIGHTING. NO MAN CAN SAY WHERE IT WILL END.

Our Conn. in IS. + Egypt this is Stated

The news from Israel today is fraught with great uncertainty and unquestionable danger. Some pessimists ~~already are saying~~ may already believe that what has developed to this ~~crisis~~ point is too deep and too farreaching to make war unavoidable. But Bonar Law once said:"There is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes it will be from the failure of human wisdom.

Goodnight & Good Luck

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM

MONDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents EDWARD R. MURROW with the News. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time with his report and analysis on the latest news developments. In his summary of the news, and in his analysis of its sginificance, Mr. Murrow frequently uses the exclusive reports of CBS News correspondents in this country and overseas. Each of these correspondents is a specialist, with a specialist's knowledge of the country to which he has been assigned, and of the underlying trends that give meaning to the news. From their rpports, you learn not only what is happening, but why it is happening. The result is the complete, authoritative coverage for which CBS News is noted. Now here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. The government of Israel announced today that its defense forces had crossed into Egypt and had attacked suicide commando bases near a road junction leading toward the Suez Canal. Israeli sources just announced that their forces are now about eighteen and a half miles east of the city of Suez. This operation was necessitated, the communique said, by continuous Egyptian military attacks on citizens and on Israel land and sea communications, the purpose of whihh was to cause a destruction and deprive the people/of or Israel the possibility of a peaceful existence. The attack was ordered after Egyptian suicide commando squads had entered Israel from the Gaza Strip, the Israelis said, and two of the squads had been captured. The commandos, they said, had blown up a water tank ~~xxxx~~ at Niram (?) near the Gaza Strip.

A statement of the Israeli Foreign Office said that the Egyptian commandos had been quiet for some time but that after last week's Security Council action, Nasser felt free to authorize them to enter Israeli territory again. Within the last week, the statement said, twenty-four Israeli casualties were caused by mines planted by the commandos in the Negev territory. And now for the latest word, let's switch to Mike Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: For a few minutes tonight, the critical situation in the Middle East took a fantastic twist as official Israel sources stated the Israel army has struck deep into Egypt, and official Egyptian sources said it wasn't so. This much, however, is now clear in a still confused picture: The Egyptian government has just officially announced that Israel army units are indeed inside Egyptian territory. The Israeli story is that mobile units of the Israel army have captured and now occupy fortified Egyptian position at Kuntilla and Ras el Naqb, more than 75 miles inside Egypt at the Sinai Peninsula and within striking distance of the Suez Canal. Although a tight security blackout prevails, there is some evidence that Israeli colugns are still on the move. The Nakhl road, which Israeli forces are officially reported to have cut and crossed runs southwest to the immediate vicinity of the Suez Canal, but from their positions at Ras el Naqb the Israels - the Israelis may also strike north at the Egyptian held Gaza Strip. The Gaza Strip is a 65 mile finger of land that blocks part of Israel off from the Meditteranean Sea. Since 1948, this Strip has been a source of constant irritation for Israel. Large numbers of border raiders, apparently recruited by Egypt from among the thousands of Palestinian refugees that cram this Strip, have struck again and again at the farm settlements in the Israel Negev. Some indication that Egypt feels the Gaza Strip may be the next target is given by reports of Egyptian naval units consisting of six destroyers and support vessels have been spotted in the viminity of the Gaza coast line. The Israelis, naturally, are releasing no information on troop movements or future plans. Official statements contend that the attack was aimed at bases from which Egyptian Fedayeen, or suicide squads, have been sent to terrorize the Israel countryside. Two such squads were captured earlier in the vicinity of the farm settlement at ~~[illegible]~~. Sde Boker. Sde Boker is Prime Minister' David Ben-Gurion's settlement, and is the place where the Premier of Israel spends his weekends and holidays. It is widely believed that the two groups of border raiders caught near the settlement had been assigned to assassinate the Israeli leader. The Israel population is stunned by the suddenness of the attack and by the fact that the blow fell on Egypt. In view of the threatening mobilization of Iraqi armored brigades on the Jordan border, and the creation of a joint Syrian-Jordanian-Egyptian army command to be based in Jordan, it was widely believed here, that if an attack was to be mounted by the Israel army it would be directed against Jordan. As far as can now be judged, the Arab countries are similarly stunned. Except for sporadic shelling by the Egyptians of Israel's Negev border settlement, Nassaloren (?), no Arab military action is yet evident. There are unconfirmed reports, however, that mobilization of army reserves in the Arab states is now beginning. The big question in the minds of Israelis tonight is - what will the United Nations do? The question exists, but for a long time now, most Israelis have felt the issues in the Middle East would be sooner or later resolved not in international debate but by tests of arms. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: News of the invasion of Egypt sent tremors of a war scare ~~[illegible]~~ all around the world. Stock prices fell on the New York stock market. Hasty ministerial conferences were held in many capitals. The news was flashed to President Eisenhower on a campaign tour in the south. This is the first time the Israeli have crossed into Arab territory on a military mission and not been immediately withdrawn. Two notes have been sent by President Eisenhower to Premier Ben-Gurion of Israel, cautioning him against making any move likely to bring on war. A similar message of caution was delivered by US Ambassador here to to President Nasser in Egypt today. And in Miami, President Eisenhower departed from his prepared text to say that nowhere is the danger to peace more critical than in the Middle East. "The United States," he said, "cannot hope to erase suddenly the ancient animosities in that part of the world. But we would", he declared, "go on striving to do all in our power to heal old wounds rather than let them open up in bloodshed." He promised to use the full moral power of America to maintain peace.

In Washington, Sec. Dulles had a busy day. He briefed three members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, then met with the British and French Ambassadors. He talked with President Eisenhower by telephone on his plane and arranged to discuss the crisis with the President at the White House at seven. He told the President that he had discussed the matter with the British and the French.

Israel is a small country, just about the size of New Jersey; total population 1,800,000. Pretty well crowded in by hostile Arab states. The Israeli army is a magnificent fighting force. The men spend two and a half years in compulsory military service, the women only two years. The Israeli army is short of aircraft and of armor. Their intelligence and communications are the best in the Middle East, and their morale is high. Today's move by the army of Israel could mean the renewal of full scale war, or it could be an unusually strong punitive operation against Egyptian suicide squads. The area chosen for this operation would seem to indicate that it was not intended as the opening for a full scale war. The Israelis, as Mike Elkins remarked, could cut off considerable Egyptian forces in the Gaza Strip. But ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ probably the most significant indication so far is the absence of air action reported by either side. If the Israelis had determined upon all out war as a final result, they would certainly have plastered the Egyptian air fields, for the primary threat to Israel is from the air. No one knows how completely the Egyptians have digested their Russian built fighters and Aleutian bombers, but a jet can fly the length of Israel in 35 minutes, and can fly across it in a matter of seconds. Haifa and Tel Aviv are fantastically vulnerable and Israel would scarcely have started full scale war without attempting to neutralize the enemy's air power. The Egyptian suicide squads have been increasingly active. Egypt, Jordan and Syria signed a military pact aimed directly at Israel; and Iraqi forces moved to the borders of Jordan.

No doubt Israel was provoked, and felt increasingly implacable threat. However, if Israel should be judged the aggressor, our government is pledged to go to the aid of Egypt. If either side decides it's to be all out war, the news will come in terms of aerial bombardment. So far, that news has not come. If it does, it will be necessary to use Bibilical terms to describe the ferocity of the fighting, and no man can say where it will end.

Israel's defense measures on the Jordan border are ascribed to a fear that those Iraqi troops, now poised on Jordan's frontier, will move into the kingdom. If this happens, Israel has said that it also would move. As Jordan has an alliance with Britain, and now has joint military command with Egypt, this might lead to the incredible situation of Britain and Egypt both fighting on the side of Jordan against Israel. But Israel's surprise move today was in the opposite direction. Most people in Israel had expected that if the Israeli forces moved, they would attack Jordan. Instead, they moved against Egypt.

Radio Budapest announced today that an agreement had been reached with the rebels to turn in their arms, whereupon the Russian troops are to leave Budapest. This surrender of the arms in Budapest is due to take place at nine o'clock tomorrow morning. This news appears to be confirmed by a statement by Foreign Minister Shepilov

in Moscow, who put it the other way, saying that Soviet troops will not withdraw from Budapest until the rebels have laid down their arms. Movements of the Russian troops out of Budapest apparently has already begun tonight. However, withdrawal of Russian troops from all of Hungary has not yet been promised. Marshal Zukhov is quoted as saying that there can be no complete withdrawal until it has been negotiated by the signatories of the Warsaw pact. As in Poland, the Russian troops in Hungary, are stationed there to be ready to resist any attack from the West - at least that's the ~~mmk~~ claim. This is under terms of the pact set up as a Soviet counterpart to NATO.

The situation outside Budapest still remains unclear. Withdrawal of Soviet troops from the northeast appears to have started. This was indicated in a broadcast heard from a rebel radio station, which said it gave the news because workers had gone on strike until the Soviet troops departed. The withdrawal, it said, has now begun. This should contribute to calm events, so that life in Hungary can return to normal. Another rebel radio station was heard calling on workers to return to their factories. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, cables from Moscow that Russian leaders appeared at three social functions in six hours this evening and seemed more accessible, talkative and relaxed than in recent days. They gave the impression that they must have reached a decision. He judged from their remarks and the Soviet press that they intend to extricate the Soviet Union from the Hungarian mess by making any reasonable concessions and accepting the revolution in Hungary with as good a face as possible. This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

ANNOUNCER: Now here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Suppose all the social welfare projects in your community were suddenly stopped. One way or another everybody living in your community would be affected. There'd be no more Scout groups, BRYAN: (continues promo. Then) Now, back to Ed Murrow with his word for today.

MURROW: The news from Israel today is fraught with great uncertainty and unquestionable danger. Some pessimists may already believe that what has developed to this point is too deep and too far-reaching to make war unavoidable, but Bonner Law (?) once said "There is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes, it will be from the failure of human wisdom". Good night and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the News. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time, over most of these stations. To provide you with these daily reports, on events that affect the lives of all of us, Mr. Murrow has the assistance of CBS News correspondents with years of experience in every important area of the globe. Bringing you the broadest possible coverage of the news as it happens. Make CBS News your listening habit. The next news report will be heard in one hour on the CBS . RADIO Network.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government of Israel announced today that its defense forces had crossed into Egypt and had attacked suicide commando bases near a road junction leading toward the Suez Canal. Israeli sources just announced that their forces are now about eighteen and a half miles east of the city of Suez. This operation was necessitated, the communique said, by continuous Egyptian military attacks on citizens and on Israel land and sea communications, the purpose of which was to cause a destruction and deprive the people of Israel of the possibility of a peaceful existence. The attack was ordered after Egyptian suicide commando squads had entered Israel from the Gaza Strip, the Israelis said, and two of the squads had been captured. The commandos, they said, had blown up a water tank at Niram (?) near the Gaza Strip.

A statement of the Israeli Foreign Office said that the Egyptian commandos had been quiet for some time but that after last week's Security Council action, Nasser felt free to authorize them to enter Israeli territory again. Within the last week, the statement said, twenty-four Israeli casualties were caused by mines planted by the commandos in the Negev territory. And now for the latest word, let's switch to Mike Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: For a few minutes tonight, the critical situation in the Middle East took a fantastic twist as official Israel sources stated the Israel army had struck deep into Egypt, and official Egyptian sources said it wasn't so. This much, however, is now clear in a still confused picture: The Egyptian government has just officially announced that Israel army units are indeed inside Egyptian territory. The Israeli story is that mobile units of the Esrael army have caputred and now occupy fortified Egyptian position at Kuntilla and Ras el Naqb, more than 75 miles inside Egypt at the Sinai Peninsula and within striking distance of the Suez Canal. Although a tight security blackout prevails, there is some evidence that Israeli columns are still on the move. The Kanhl road, which Israeli forces are officially reported to have cut and crossed runs southwest to the immediate vicinity of the Suez Canal, but from their positions at Ras el Naqb the Israels - the Israelis may also strike north at the Egyptian held Gaza Strip. The Gaza Strip is a 65 mile finger of land that blocks part of Israel off from the Meditteranean Sea. Since 1948, this Strip has been a source of constant irritation for Israel. Large numbers of border raiders, apparently recruited by Egypt from among the thousands of Palestinian refugees that cram this Strip, have struck again and again at the farm settlements in the Israel Negev. Some indications that Egypt feels the Gaza Strip may be the next target is given by reports of Egyptian naval units consisting of six destroyers and support vessels have been spotted in the vicinity of the Gaza coast line. The Israelis, naturally, are releasing no information on troop movements or future plans. Official statements contend that the attack was aimed at bases from which Egyptian Fedayeen, or suicide squads, have been sent to terrorize the Israel countryside. Two such squads were captured earlier in the vicinity of the farm settlement at Sde Boker. Sde Boker is Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's settlement, and is the place where the Premier of Israel spends his weekends and holidays. It is widely believed that the two groups of border raiders caught near the settlement had been assigned to assissinate the Israeli leader. The Israel population is stunned by the suddenness of the attack and by the fact that the blow fell on Egypt. In view of the threatening mobilization of Iraqi armored brigades on the Jordan border, and the creation of a joint Syrian-Jordanian-Egyptian army command to be based in Jordan, it was widely believed here, that if an attack was to be mounted by the Israel army it would be directed against Jordan. As far as can now be judged, the Arab countries are similarly stunned. Except for sporacic shelling by the Egyptians of Israel's Negev border settlement, Nassaloren (?), no Arab military action is yet evident. There are unconfirmed reports, however, that mobilization af army reserves in the Arab states is now beginning. The big question in the minds of Israelis tonight is - what will the United Nations do? The question exists, but for a long time now, mose Israelis have felt the issues in the Middle East would be sooner of later resolved not in international debate but by tests of arms. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: News of the invasion of Egypt sent tremors of a war scare all around the world. Stock prices fell on the New York stock market. Hasty ministerial conferences were held in many capitals. The news was flashed to President Eisenhower on a campaign tour in the south. This is the first time the Israeli have crossed into Arab territory on a military mission and not been immediately withdrawn. Two notes have been sent by President Eisenhower to Premier Ben - Gurion of Israel, cautioning him against making any move likely to bring on war. A similar message of caution was delivered by US Ambassador here to President Nasser in Egypt today. And in Miami, President Eisenhower departed from his prepared text to say that nowhere is the danger to peace more critical than in the Middle East. "The United States," he said, "cannot hope to erase suddenly the ancient animosities in that part of the world. But we would", he declared, "go on striving to do all in our power to heal old wounds rather than let them open up in bloodshed." He promised to use the full moral power of America to maintain peace.

In Washington, Secretary Dulles had a busy day. He briefed three members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, then met with the British and French Ambassadors. He talked with President Eisenhower by telephone on his plane and arranged to discuss the crisis with the President at the White House at seven. He told the President that he had discussed the matter with the British and the French.

Israel is a small country, just about the size of New Jersey; total population 1,888,000. Pretty well crowded in by hostile Arab states. The Isreeli army is a magnificent fighting force. The men spend two and a half years in compulsory militray service, the women only two years. The Israeli army is short of aircraft and of armor. Their intelligence and communications are the best in the Middle East, and their morale is high. Today's move by the army of Israel could mean the renewal of full scale war, or it could be an unusually strong punitive operation against Egyptian suicide squads. The area chosen for this operation would seem to indicate that it was not intended as the opening for a full scale war. The Israelis, as Mike Elkins remarked, could cut off considerable Egyptian forces in the Gaza Strip. But probably the most significant indication so far is the absence of air action reported by either side. If the Israelis had determined upon all out war as a final result, they would certainly have plastered the Egyptian air fields, for the primary threat to Israel is from the air. No one knows how completely the Egyptians have digested their Russian built fighters and Aleutian bombers, but a jet can fly the length of Israel in 35 minutes, and can fly across it in a matter of seconds. Haifa and Tel Aviv are fantastically vulnerable and Israel would scarcely have started full scale war without attempting to neutralize the enemy's air power. The Egyptians suicice squads have been increasingly active. Egypt, Jordan and Syria signed a military pact aimed directly at Israel; and Iraqui forces moved to the borders of Jordan.

No doubt Israel was provoked, and felt increasingly implacable threat. However, if Israel should be judged the aggressor, our government is pledged to go to the aid of Egypt. If either side decides it's to be all out war, the news will come in terms of aerial bombardment. So far, that news has not come. If it does, it will be necessary to use Biblical terms to describe the ferocity of the fighting, and no man can say where it will end.

Israel'd defense measures on the Jordan border are ascribed to a fear that those Iraqui troops, now poised on Jordan's frontier, will move into the kingdom. If this happens, Israel has said that it also would move. As Jordan has an alliance with Britain, and now has joint military command with Egypt, this might lead to the incredible situation of Britain and Egypt both fighting on the side of Jordan against Israel. But Israel's surprise move today was in the opposite direction. Most people in Israel had expected that if the Israeli forces moved, they would attack Jordan. Instead, they moved against Egypt.

Radio Budapest announced today that an agreement had been reached with the rebels to turn in their arms, whereupon the Russian troops are to leave Budapest. This surrender of the arms in Budapest is due to take place at nine o' clock tomorrow morning. This news appears to be confirmed by a statement by Foreign Minister Shepilov in Moscow, who put it the other way, saying that Soviet troops will not withdraw from Budapest until the rebels have laid down their arms. Movements of the Russian groops out of Budapest apparently has already begun tonight. However , withdrawal of Russian troops from all of Hungary has not yet been promised. Marshal Zukhov is quoted as saying that there can be no complete withdrawal until it has been negotiated by the signatories of the Warsaw Pact. As in Poland, the Russian troops in Hungary, are stationed there to be ready to resist any attack from the West, at least that's the claim. This is under terms of the pact set up as a Soviet counterpart to NATO.

The situation outside Budapest still remains unclear. Withdrawal of Soviet troops from the northeast appears to have started. This was indicated in a broadcast heard from a rebel radio station, which said it gave the news because workers had gone on strike until the Soviet troops departed. The withdrawal, it said, has now begun. This should contribute to calm events, so that life in Hungary can return to normal. Another rebel radio station was heard calling on workers to return to their factories. My colleag e, Daniel Schorr, cables from Moscow that Russian leaders appeared at three social functions in six hours this evening and seemed more accessible, talkative and relaxed than in recent days. They gave the impression that they must have reached a decision. He judged from their remarks and the Soviet press that they intend to extricate the Soviet Union from the Hungarian mess by making any reasonable concessions and accepteing the revolution in Hungary with as good a face as possible. The

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The news from Israel today is fraught with great uncertainty and unquestionalbe danger. Some pessimists may already believe that what has developed to this point is too deep and too far-reaching to make war unavoidable, but Bonner Law(?) once said "There is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes, it will be from the failure of human wisdom."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 30, 1956

This is the news:

B ritain and France have proposed sending troops into the Suez Canal Zone "to guarantee freedom of transit through the canal." British Prime Minister Eden today told the House of Commons that urgent communications have been sent to both Egypt and Israel, demanding that they stop "all warlike action forthwith" and that they withdraw their military forces 10 miles from the canal. "Further," Eden said, "we have asked the Egyptian government to agree that Anglo-French forces should move temporarily... I repeat, temporarily... into key positions at Port Said, Ismailia and Suez. Eden warned that unless Egypt and Israel stop fighting within 12 hours, British troops will intervene "in whatsoever strength may be necessary to secure compliance." That deadline is up at 11:30 tonight, New York time. Eden later made it clear that Britain and France will send "token" forces to the Suez Canal Zone, even if the Egyptian and Israeli governments comply. Token forces would be necessary, Eden said,

"to make sure that what is accepted by both sides is carried out."

The Eden announcement came to Washington as a surprise. President Eisenhower immediately sent the British and French prime ministers an urgent personal message, appealing against the use of force. The White House News Secretary said Mr. Eisenhower expressed this country's "earnest hope" that the United Nations will be given full opportunity to settle the controversy.

Tonight, Egypt rejected the ultimatum... calling it "unacceptable under any circumstances." Israel accepted. Egypt called on the United Nations to take emergency action to prevent Britain and France from carrying out their threat. The Egyptian foreign minister requested... by cable... that the Security Council meet tonight in special session in an attempt to forestall the Anglo-French action.

A resolution demanding the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory was introduced in the Security Council today by the United States. It failed of passage — vetoed by Britain + France. American Ambassador Lodge said that failure of the council to react at this time would be "a clear avoidance of its responsibility for the maintenance of peace." He appealed to council members not to give aid to Israel until it has withdrawn its forces... and not, in his words, "to take advantage of the situation for any selfish purpose." The Anglo-French ultimatum, Lodge said, "is not justified, nor consistent with the principles of the United Nations Charter." He insisted that the Security Council deal first with the Israeli attack on Egypt, and turn later to the question of safeguarding the canal. Russia immediately backed up the American position.

The Moscow radio charged today that the purpose of Israel's action is to disrupt navigation through the Suez Canal... and thus give the western powers a pretext for sending in troops. "It is obvious," Moscow said, "that the western powers have not abandoned their attempts to maintain the colonial system in the Middle East at any price."

In Paris, a French foreign ministry spokesman said the Israeli action is explained but not justified "by the provocations to which Israel has been subjected." He said these "provocations" should be taken into account in any condemnation action which the Security Council might take.

Secretary General Hammarskjold told the council today that the United Nations truce supervisor in Palestine... General Burns... already has called on both Egypt and Israel for an immediate cease-fire.

But so far, he said, there has been no word of a reply from either side.

The CBS News correspondent in Jerusalem has just come up on the short-wave circuit with a late report on the Middle East situation from the Israeli point of view. For his story, we switch by recording to Mike Elkins in Jerusalem.

14-8

Elkins runs approx 2 mins ends on cue: "---to Ed Murrow
in New York."

An Egyptian Army communique... issued tonight... says that an Israeli force has been "annihilated" in the vicinity of El Themed, a desert post 30 miles inside the Egyptian frontier. It also says, "Mopping up operations in the rest of the battle area are continuing." And Egyptian forces in the Gaza Strip claim another Israeli jet has been shot down by anti-aircraft fire... and another in combat, making seven in all by Egyptian count. Egypt insists that the Israeli advance has been "completely stopped".

The sound of anti-aircraft fire was heard in Cairo this morning, but the Egyptian government said it was only practice. Air raid sirens sounded in Cairo tonight, The Cairo radio said the Israeli attack could have had but one purpose---"to rout Egypt." Thus, it said, the Arab peoples have no choice but to win a victory. "We will teach Israel a lesson she will never forget." Another Cairo broadcast said the government of Egypt "reserves the right to take all measures sanctioned by the United Nations Charter, among them the right of self-defense."

Egypt and its allies... Syria and Saudi Arabia... are reported to have ordered general mobilization. However, the president of Syria flew to Moscow today, as scheduled, for a 10-day visit.

In Washington, the State Department says it is trying to divert some merchant ships to East Mediterranean ports, to help bring American civilians home. And the United States Sixth Fleet is reported under orders to help in the evacuation, if necessary. Other U.S. naval forces may be on their way to the Mediterranean. Several warships... including the carrier Antietam and six destroyers... have left Holland sbruptly for an undisclosed destination.

The British Mediterranean Fleet has been ordered to cancel its exercises and stand by. And the Admiralty tonight advised all British merchant shipping to steer clear of the Suez Canal and its adjacent waters.

President Eisenhower conferred again today with Secretary of State Dulles and other top advisers. News Secretary Hagerty said congressional leaders of both parties are being advised continuously on Middle East developments.

Mr. Eisenhower has canceled the campaign trip he planned to make tomorrow to the Southwest. He notified Republican leaders in Dallas, Oklahoma City and Memphis, "The turn of events leaves me no option, in the interests of working for peace, but to remain at the White House on Wednesday." Hagerty said the President's campaign plans are now on a "day to day" basis.

Adlai Stevenson continued his campaign today, saying that the foreign policy of the Eisenhower Administration has been a record of "threats, bluffs, foolish words, provocations and appeasements." The Israeli-Egyptian fighting, Stevenson said, threatens to "engulf" the Middle East.

In a speech in San Diego tonight, Vice President Nixon will challenge Mr. Stevenson to say what he would do in the present situation. This is no time, Nixon will say, to turn to Stevenson's "second-rate" leadership.

The Moscow radio said tonight that Russia is ready to discuss the withdrawal of all Soviet forces from Hungary, Poland and Roumania. /Moscow said the continued presence of Russian troops in Hungary could lead to "a greater deterioration" of the situation.

Fighting continues in Hungary tonight, although apparently on a smaller scale than heretofore. Russian troops are still much in evidence in Budapest, and in the surrounding countryside. New attempts were made today to placate the rebel forces. Premier Nagy promised an end to one-party rule. He held out the hope of free elections and a coalition government "made up of all Democratic parties." And he claimed that he had nothing to do with calling in Russian troops. /He said that was a decision taken by Communist leaders who have since been dismissed.

The Hungarian News Agency reports that Cardinal Mindszenty has been released from house arrest. Mindszenty, the primate of Hungary, was convicted seven years ago for so-called "anti-state" activities.

Poland is relatively quiet. The Warsaw Radio says the Russian commander of the Polish Air Force has been dismissed.

George Bryan

On the New York Stock Exchange today, prices moved higher on the word that B ritain and France might occupy the Suez Canal. Oil shares were the first to advance.

The Agriculture Department announced today that farm prices last month dropped nearly one percent. At the same time, employment across the country rose to 66-million, 174-thousand... a recor d for October.

In Wildwood, Florida, police reported finding a blood-stained shirt worn by Jesse Wood, a Negro who disappeared from the city jail on Sunday. Wood had been charged with insulting a white woman. Fear has been expressed that he was lynched.

ERM

~~ER~~ PROGRAM: OCT 30.

LOOKS AS THOUGH ISRAEL MADE IT POSSIBLE FOR BRITAIN AND FRANCE TO DO WHAT THEY'VE WANTED TO DO FOR THE PAST THREE MONTHS - REOCCUPY SUEZ CANAL ZONE - EDEN TOLD HOUSE OF COMMONS THAT UNLESS FIGHTING CEASES WITHIN TWELVE HOURS, BRITISH FRENCH FORCES WOULD OCCUPY PORT SAID, ISMAILIA AND SUEZ, TEMPORARILY - HE DIDN'T WAIT FOR UNITED NATIONS TO ACT - GAVE AS HIS REASON, IMPORTANCE OF MAINTAINING CANAL TRAFFIC: SAID HE HAD ASKED EGYPT TO AGREE - ~~WE DON'T KNOW~~ They Haven't ~~WHETHER EGYPT HAS~~ - EDEN SAID AMERICAN AMBASSADOR LONDON INFORMED EARLY THIS MORNING - AMERICAN OFFICIALS IN WASHINGTON EXPRESS DISMAY AND ANNOYANCE: SAID WE HADN'T BEEN CONSULTED - MAYBE SOMETHING WENT WRONG COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN LONDON AND WASHINGTON. - EDEN SAID LATER BRITISH FRENCH FORCES WILL MOVE IN EVEN IF EGYPT ISRAEL ACCEPT ANGLO-FRENCH ULTIMATUM TO STOP SHOOTING.

TWO THINGS SHOULD BE ADDED THIS STORY WESTERN DISUNITY. ISRAEL PROMISED BRITAIN YESTERDAY NOT TO ATTACK JORDAN. THAT MEANT

BRITAIN NO LONGER FACED POSSIBILITY OF FIGHTING ON SAME SIDE NASSER - BUT THERE'S MORE IMPORTANT INDICATION THAT THIS WAS THREE-WAY DEAL BETWEEN ISRAEL, FRANCE AND BRITAIN. LAST WEEK FRENCH PRIME MINISTER MOLLET SAID OF SUEZ: ~~XTHISXBUSINESSXX~~ "THIS BUSINESS NOT YET OVER. SOMETHING GOING TO HAPPEN BEFORE END OF YEAR: BUT THERE IS A DIPLOMATIC SECRET TO BE KEPT."

ANGLO-FRENCH ULTIMATUM EXPIRES ELEVEN THIRTY NEW YORK TIME TONIGHT. THE QUESTION IS WHETHER NASSER WILL FIGHT, AND IF HE DOES WHETHER NEIGHBORING ARAB STATES WILL HELP HIM - ISRAELI FORCES IN POSITION TO PREVENT CONSIDERABLE NUMBER EGYPTIAN TROOPS GETTING BACK FROM THE GAZA STRIP TO HELP DEFEND SUEZ.

SO BRITISH AND FRENCH HAVE PRESENTED NASSER WITH AN ULTIMATUM. THEIR TROOPS WILL GO INTO THE CANAL ZONE AT FIRST LIGHT TOMORROW. PRESUMABLY TWILL BE COMBINED AIR DROP AND NAVAL OPERATION. PRESIDENT NASSER CAN EITHER FIGHT OR GIVE UP - PRESIDENT EISENHOWER HAS SENT A MESSAGE TO LONDON AND PARIS URGING THEM NOT TO USE FORCE, BUT

THEY ARE COMMITTED AND CAN'T VERY WELL BACK DOWN AGAIN. THIS WHOLE CHAIN OF EVENTS IS VERY NEAT * FAR TOO NEAT TO HAVE BEEN ACCIDENTAL * BUT STILL LEAVES PLENTY OF ROOM FOR WORRY IN DAYS AHEAD.

MARSHAL TITO IS DOING SOME WORRYING TOO - HAS WRITTEN A LETTER TO HUNGARIAN COMMUNISTS ASKING THEM TO END THE REBELLION. TITO APPARENTLY THINKS THAT HIS HUNGARIAN NEIGHBORS HAVE GONE TOO FAR: THAT IN ADDITION TO WANTING INDEPENDENCE FROM MOSCOW THEY WANT SOME REAL FREEDOM: AND HE IS WORRIED LEST THE PEOPLE OF YUGOSLAVIA GET A WHIFF OF THAT FREEDOM AND DECIDE THEY WANT MORE OF IT THAN HE IS WILLING TO GIVE.

SO TONIGHT THERE IS DISUNITY AND UNREST IN THE COMMUNIST WORLD - BITTER DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN THIS COUNTRY AND OUR ALLIES OVER SUEZ - AND THE UNITY OF THE ARAB WORLD IS ABOUT TO BE TESTED - CONFUSION IS BEING COMPOUNDED BY THE HOUR.

Word for Today

General George Marshall once said, "We must take the nations of the world as they are... the human passions and prejudices of people as they exist... and find some way to secure a peaceful world." It is only necessary to take one look (a superficial look will do) at the world today to see that the formula that General Marshall envisioned has not been found.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, October 30, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday thru Friday at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Assisting Mr. Murrow in bringing the news to you quickly and accurately is the CBS News staff of correspondents, covering events in our own country and overseas. By Short Wave Radio, telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens; and their many years of experience assure the accuracy and the authenticity of their reporting.

Now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. Britain and France have proposed sending troops into the Suez Canal zone to guarantee freedom of transit through the canal. British Prime Minister Eden today told the House of Commons that urgent communications have been sent to both Egypt and Israel, demanding that they stop all warlike action forthwith and that they withdraw their military forces ten miles from the canal. Furather, Eden said, "We have asked the Egyptian government to agree that Anglo-French forces should move temporarily, I repeat - temporarily, into key positions at Port Said, Ismailia and Suez. Eden warned that unless Egypt and Israel stop fighting within twelve hours, British troops will intervene in whatsoever strength may be necessary to secure compliance. That deadline is up at 11:30 tonight New York Time. Eden later make it clear that Britain and France will send token forces to the Suez Canal zone "even if" the Egyptian and Israeli governments comply. Token forces would be necessary, Eden said, to make sure that what is accepted by both sides is carried out.

The Eden announcement came to Washington as a surprise. President Eisenhower immediately sent the British and French Prime Ministers an urgent personal message, appealing against the use of force. The White House news secretary said Mr. Eisenhower expressed this country's earnest hope that the United Nations will be given full opportunity to settle the controversy.

Tonight Egypt rejected the ultimatum, calling it "unacceptable under any circumstances." Israel accepted it. Egypt called on the United Nations to take emergency action to prevent Britain and France from carrying out their threat. The Egyptian Foreign Minister requested by cable that the Security Council meet tonight in special session in an attempt to forestall the Anglo-French action.

A resolution demanding the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory was introduced in the Security Council today by the United States. It failed of passage. Vetoed by Britain and France.

American Ambassador Lodge said that failure of the Council to react at this time would be a clear avoidance of its responsibility for the maintenance of peace. He appealed to Council members not to give aid to Israel until it had withdrawn its forces and - not in his words - "to take advantage of the situation for any selfish purpose."

"The Anglo-French ultimatum," Lodge said, "is not justified, nor consistent with the principles of the United Nations Charter." He insisted that the Security Council deal first with the Israeli attack on Egypt and turn later to the question of safeguarding the canal. Russia immediately backed up the American position.

The Moscow Radio charged today that the purpose of Israel's action is to disrupt navigation through the Suez Canal, and thus give the Western powers a pretext for sending in troops. It is obvious, Moscow said, that the Western powers have not abandoned their attempts to maintain the Colonial system in the Middle East at any price.

In Paris, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman said the Israeli action is explained but not justified by the provocations to which Israel has been subjected. He said these provocations should be taken into account in any condemnation action which the Security Council might take.

Secretary General Hammarskjold told the Council today that the United Nations Truce supervisor in Palestine, General Burns, already has called on both Egypt and Israel for an immediate cease-fire. But so far, he said, there has been no word of a reply from either side.

The CBS News correspondent in Jerusalem has just come up on the Short Wave circuit with a late report on the Middle East situation from the Israeli point of view. For his story we switch by recording to Mike Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: One hour ago the citizens of Israel gathered before their radios in their blackedout homes, heard their government announce that it would accept the British and French proposals for ending the two-day old Israel-Egypt war. The Israel government announced that it was accepting the proposal for withdrawing its troops from a corridor ten miles wide on both sides of the Suez canal on the assumption that a positive response would be forthcoming also from Egypt. But there are reports that Col. Nasser has already decided to reject the Anglo-French formula. If this should be true, both Britain and France have gone on record that they are prepared to enforce this solution upon the recalcitrant party to the war by landing troops within the proposed corridor. To this end, apparently, the British Mediterranean Fleet is at action stations, and the French paratroopers are reported mobilized and ready to go. Just before the Israel government announced this decision, word was received here that President Eisenhower had urged England and France to come to a peaceful solution of the Middle East crisis. It is believed that the President's intercession gave rise to unexpected complications which delayed the Israel government's announcement.

The first reactions of the Israel public to the announcement are extremely favorable. The people of this country are immensely relieved. Until the receipt of President Eisenhower's communication it was widely assumed here that Britain and France meant exactly what their proposal - one might say 'ultimatum' - said, that the neutral corridor would be forced upon whichever party rejected the formula. Now there are some anxious doubts in Israel: Will Britain and France stand by their previous position, or will they - in view of the President's plea - stop short of sending in troops?

At this moment it seems possible to assume that unless the British and French troops move into the Suez area, Israeli troops will do their best to move in themselves.

Now back to Ed. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: An Egyptian Army communique, issued tonight, says that an Israeli force has been annihilated in the vicinity of el Thamad, a desert post 30-miles inside the Egyptian frontier. It also says "mopping up operations in the rest of the battle area are continuing." And Egyptian forces in the Gaza Strip claim another Israeli jet has been shot down by anti-aircraft fire. And another in combat, making seven in all by Egyptian count. Egypt insists that the Israeli advance has been completely stopped.

The sound of anti-aircraft fire was heard in Cairo this morning. But the Egyptian government said it was only practice. Air raid sirens sounded in Cairo tonight. The Cairo Radio said the Israeli attack could have had but one purpose, "to route Egypt." Thus, it said, the Arab peoples had no choice but to win a victory. "We will teach Israel a lesson she will never forget." Another Cairo broadcast said the government of Egypt reserves the right to take all measures sanctioned by the United Nations Charter, among them the right of self defense. Egypt and its allies, Syria and Saudi Arabia, are reported to have ordered general mobilization. However, the President of Syria flew to Moscow today as scheduled for a ten day visit.

In Washington, the State Department says it is trying to divert some merchant ships to East Mediterranean ports to help bring American civilians home. And the United States Sixth Fleet is reported under orders to help in the evacuation if necessary. Other U.S. naval forces may be on their way to the Mediterranean. Several warships, including the Carrier Antietam, and six destroyers have left Holland abruptly to an undisclosed destination.

The British Mediterranean fleet has been ordered to cancel its exercises and stand by. And the Admiralty tonight advised all British merchant shipping to stear clear of the Suez Canal and its adjacent waters.

President Eisenhower conferred again today with Secretary of State Dulles and other top advisers. News secretary Haggerty said Congressional leaders of both parties are being advised continually on Middle East developments.

Mr. Eisenhower has cancelled a campaign trip he planned to make tomorrow to the southwest. He notified Republican leaders in Dallas, Oklahoma City and Memphis that the turn of events "leaves me no option in the interests of working for peace but to remain at the White House on Wednesday." Hagerty said the President's campaign plans are now on a day-to-day basis.

Adlai Stevenson continued his campaign today, saying that the foreign policy of the Eisenhower Administration has been a record of threats, bluffs, foolish words, provocations and appeasement. The Israeli-Egyptian fighting, Stevenson said, threatens to engulf the Middle East.

In a speech in San Diego tonight, Vice President Nixon will challenge Mr. Stevenson to say what he would do in the present situation. "This is no time," Mr. Nixon will say, "to turn to Stevenson's second-rate leadership."

On the New York Stock Exchange today prices moved higher on the word that Britain and France might occupy the Suez Canal. Oil shares were the first to advance.

The Agriculture Department announced today that farm prices last month dropped nearly one per cent. At the same time, employment across the country rose to 66,174,000 - a record for October.

It looks as though Israel has made it possible for Britain and France to do what they wanted to do for the past three months, that is, to reoccupy the Suez Canal zone. Mr. Eden's statement today in the House of Commons was an ultimatum. He did not wait for the action by the United Nations. Two things might well be added to this story of Western disunity, because not since the end of the war has the divergence of opinion between the United States and its allies been so considerable as it is tonight. That was demonstrated by the fact that Britain and France vetoed the U.S. resolution in the UN just a few minutes ago. But two things should be added to this story of Western disunity. One is that Israel promised Britain yesterday not to attack Jordan. That meant that Britain was no longer tied to Jordan in the event of a possible Israeli attack - because Israel had promised not to attack. That meant in turn that Britain would not find herself in the position of fighting on the side of General Nasser. But there's a more important indication that this was a three-way deal between Israel, France and Britain.

French Prime Minister Guy Mollet said of Suez only about ten days ago, "this business is not yet over; something is going to happen before the end of the year; but there is a diplomatic secret to be kept" and presumably that diplomatic secret was the Israeli stab toward Suez. So the British and French have now presented Nasser with an ultimatum. He must decide whether to give up or to fight. So tonight there's disunity and unrest in the Communist world. Bitter disagreement between this country and our allies over Suez. And the unity of the Arab world is about to be tested. Confusion is being compounded by the hour. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Britain and France have proposed sending troops into the Suez Canal Zone "to guarantee freedom of transit through the canal." British Prime Minister Eden today told the House of Commons that urgent communications have been sent to both Egypt and Israel, demanding that they stop "all warlike action forthwith." and that they withdraw their military forces 10 miles from the canal. "Further", Eden said, "we have asked the Egyptians government to agree that Anglo-French forces should move temporarily ...I repeat, temporarily, into key positions at Port Said, Ismailia and Suez. Eden warned that unless Egypt and Israel stop fighting within 12 hours, British troops will intervene "in whatever strength may be necessary to secure compliance." That deadline is up at 11:30 tonight, New York time. Eden later made it clear that Britain and France will send "token" forces to the Suez Canal Zone, even if the Egyptian and Isreeli governments comply. Token forces would be necessary, Eden said, "to make sure that what is accepted by both sides is carried out."

The Eden announcement came to Washington as a surprise. President Eisenhower immediately sent the British and French prime ministers an urgent personal message, appealing against the use of force. The White House News Secretary said Mr. Eisenhower sxpressed this country's "ernest hope" that the United Nations will be given full opportunity to settle the controversy.

Tonight, Egypt rejected the ultimatum, calling it "unacceptable under any circumstances." Israel accepted. Egypt called on the United Nations to take emergency action to prevent Britain and France from carrying out their threat. The Egyptian foreign minister requested, by cable, that the Security Council meet tonight in special session in an attempt to forestall the Angle-French action.

A resolution demanding the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory was introduced in the Security Council today by the Unites States. It failed of passage -- vetoes by Britain and France. American Ambassador Lodge said thet failure of the council to react at this time would be "a clear avoidance of its responsibility for the maintenance of peace." He appealed to council members not to give aid to Israel until it has withdrawn its forces, and not, in his words, "to take advantage of the situation for any selfish purpose." The Anglo-French ultimatum, Lodge said, "is not justified nor consistent with the principles of the United Nations Charter." He insisted that the Security Council deal first with the Israeli attack on Egypt and turn later to the question of safeguarding the canal. Russia immediately backed up the American position.

The Moscow radio charged today that the purpose of Israel's action is to disrupt navigation through the Suez Canal, and thus give the western powers a pretext for sending in troops. "It is obvious", Moscow said, "that the western powers have not abandoned their attempts to maintain the colonial system in the Middle East at any price."

In Paris, a French foreign ministry spokesman said the Israeli action is explained but not justified "by the provocations to which Israel has been subjected ." He said these "provocations" should be taken into account in any condemnations action which the Security Council might take.

Secretary General Hammarskjold told the council toda that the United Nations truce supervisor in Palestine...General Burns..already has called on both Egypt and Israel for immediate cease-fire. But so far, he said, there has been no word of a reply from either side.

The CBS News correspondent in Jerusalem has just come up on the short-wave circuit with a late report on the Middle East situation from the Israeli point of view. For his story we switch by recording to Mike Elkins in Jerusalem

ELKINS: One hour ago the citizens of Israel gathered before their radios in their blackedout homes, heard their government announce that it would accept the British and French proposals for ending the two - day old Israel - Egypt war. The Israel government announced that it was accepting the proposals for withdrawing its troops from a corridor ten miles wide on both sides of the Suez Canal on the assumption that a positive response would be forthcoming also from Egypt. But there are reports that Colonel Nasser has already decided to reject the Anglo-French formula. If this should be true, both Britain and France have gone on record that they are prepared to enforce this solution upon the recalciatrant party to the war by landing troops within the proposed corridor. To this end, apparently, the British Mediterranian Fleet is at action stations, and the French paratroopers are reported mobilized and ready to go. Just before the Israel government announ ed this decision, word was received here that President Eisenhower had urged England and France to come to a peaceful solution of the Middle East crisis. It is believe that the President's intercession gave rise to unexpected complications thich delayed the Israel government's announcement.

The first reactions of the Israel public to the announcement are exteemely favorable. The people of this country are immensely relieved. Until the receipt of President Eisenhower's communication it was widely assumed here that Britain and France meant exactly what their proposal - one might say "ultimatum" -said, that the neutral corridor would be forced upon which ever party rejected the formula. Now there are some anxious doubts in Israel: Will Britain and France stand by their previous position, or will they - in view of the President's plea - stop short of sending in troops?

At this moment it seems possible to assume that unless the British and French troops move into the Suez area, Israeli troops will do their best to move in themselves. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: An Egyptian communique, issued tonight, says that an Israeli force has been annihilated in the vicinity of el Thamad, a desert post 30-miles inside the Egyptian frontier. It also says "mopping up operations in the rest of the battle area are continuing." An Egyptian forces in the Gaza Strip claim another Israeli jet has been shot down by anti-aircraft fire. And another in combat, making seven in all by Egyptian count. Egypt insists that the Isrelli advance has been completely stopped.

The sound of anti-aircraft fire was heard in Cairo this morning. But the Egyptians government said it was only practice. Air raid sirens sounded in Cairo tonight. The Cairo radio said the Israeli attack could have had but one purpose, "to route Egypt", Thus, it said, the Arab peoples had no choice but to win a victory. "We will t ach Israel a lesson she will never forget." Another Cairo broadcast said the government of Egypt reserves the right to take all measures sanctioned by the United Nations Charter, among them the right of self defense. Egypt and its allies, Syria and Saudi Arabia, are reported to have ordered general mobilization. However, the President of Syria flew to Moscow today as scheduled for a ten day visit.

In Washington, the State Department says it is trying to divert some merchant ships to East Mediterranean ports to help bring American civilians home. And the Uni ed States Sixth Fleet is reported under orders to help in the evacuation if necessary. Other U.S. naval forces may be on their way to the Mediterranean. Several warships, including the Carrier Antietam, and six destroyers have left Holland abruptly to an undisclosed destination.

The British Mediterranean fleet has been ordered to cancel its exercises and stand by. And the Admiralty tonight advised all British merchant shipping to stear clear of the Suez Canal and its adjacent waters.

President Eisenhower conferred again today with Secretary of State Dullas and other top advisers. News secretary Hagerty said Congressional leaders of both parties are being advised continually on the Middle East developments.

Mr. Eisenhower had cancelled a campaign trip he planned to make tomorrow to the southwest. He notified Republican leaders in Dall , Oklahoma City and Memphis that the turn of events "leaves me no option in the interests of working for peace but to remain at the White House on Wednesday." Hagerty said the President's campaign plans are now on a day-to-day basis.

Adlai Stevenson continued his campaign today, saying that the foreign policy of the Eisenhower Administration has been a record of threats, bluffs, folish words, provocations and appeasement. The Israeli-Egyptian fighting, Stevenson said, threatens to engulf the Middle East.

In a speech in San Diego tonight, Vice President Nixon will challenge Mr. Stevenson to say what he would do in the present situation. "This is not time," Mr. Nixon will say, "to turn to Stevenson's second-rate leadership."

On the New York Stock Exchange today prices moved higher on the word that Britain and France might occupy the Suez Canal. Oil shares were the first to advance.

The Agriculture Department announced today that farm prices last month dropped nearly one per cent. At the same time, employment across the country rose to 66,174,000 - a record for October.

It looks as though Israel has made it possible for Britain and France to do what they wanted to do for the past three months, that is, to reoccupy the Suez Canal zone. Mr. Eden's statement today in the House of Commons was an ultimatum. He did not wait for the action by the United Nations. Two things might well be added to this story by Western disunity, because not since the end of the war has the divergence of opinion between the United States and its allies been so considerable as it is tonight. That was demonstrated by the fact that Britain and France vetoed the U.S. resolution in the UN just a few minutes ago. But two things should be added to this story of Western disunity. One is that Israel promised Britain yesterday not to attack Jordan. That meant that Britain was no longer tied to Jordan in the event of a possible Israeli attack - because Israel had promised not to attack. That meant in turn that Britain would not find herself in the position of fighting on the side of General Nasser. But there's a more important indication that this was a three-way deal between Israel, France and Britain.

French Prime Minister Guy Mollet said of Suez only about ten days ago, "this business in not yet over; something is going to happen before the end of the year; but there is a diplomatic secret to be kept" and presumably that diplomatic secret was the Israeli stab toward Suez. So the British and French have now presented Nasser with an ultimatum. He must decide whether to give up or to fight. So tonight there's disunity and unrest in the Communist world. Bitter disagreement between this country and our allies over Suez. And the unity of the Arab world is about to be tested. Confusion is being compounded by the hours This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. No , here is George Bryan.

BRYAN.

MURROW: General George Marshall once said, "We must take the nations of the world as they are...the human passions and prejudices of people as they exist .. and find some way to secure a peaceful world." It is only necessary to take one look (a superficial look will do) at the world today to see that the formula that General Marshall envisioned has not been found.

Goodnight and good luck!

Wed., Oct. 31, 1956

This is the news

Half-an-hour ago President Eisenhower spoke to the nation; reviewed recent events in Eastern Europe, promised economic aid for Poland and ~~Czechoslovakia~~ HUNGARY, said that if Russia withdraws her troops from such countries it will be a great forward stride toward justice, trust and understanding in the world.

On the subject of the Suez crisis the President took a "hands-off" policy, pinning his hopes on the United Nations. ~~Here~~ BY RECORDING is part of what he had to say on that subject:

14'8

~~[illegible]~~

In the United Nations tonight, Yugoslavia called for an extraordinary meeting of the General Assembly to consider the action taken by Britain and France. The Security Council voted... over British and French objections... to grant the Yugoslav request.

At the same time, Russia asked the Security Council to condemn Britain and France for what Soviet Delegate Sobolev called "the aggression against the Egyptian State." He said he would introduce a resolution charging Britain and France with aggression. Secretary-General Hammarskjold indicated that the Security Council should dismiss him, if it disagreed with his Palestine policies. He said he could not remain neutral where the principles of the United Nations Charter were involved.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 31, 1956

~~This is the most~~

Great Britain and France have attacked Egypt by air. So far, there is no word of a landing by British and French troops. /Two hours ago, my colleague, Frank Kearns, came up from Cairo with an eye-witness report. H ere is his first-hand, recorded story of what happened:

(Kearns runs 2:05, returns on cue: "---to CBS News in NY."

Immediately after this report was recorded, the Cairo transmitter went off the air, ~~purposely~~ presumably because another raid was in progress. / The British foreign secretary... Selwyn Lloyd... told the ~~British~~ House of Commons tonight that it is "untrue" that Cairo proper has been bombed. / Lloyd said the joint British-French operations were limited strictly to military targets, mainly airfields. The first official word of the attack came from the combined British and French headquarters on Cyprus. / The announcement said: "An air offensive by bomber aircraft, under allied command, is at this moment being launched against military targets in Egypt." /A few minutes later, the French Defense Ministry... in Paris... said attacks were being carried out against targets in the Suez Canal area at 6:40 p.m., Cairo time. That is 11:40 a.m., New York time. /The French announcement spoke of a combined air and naval bombardment, indicating that warships... as well as aircraft... were involved. The bombardment began a little more than 14 hours after an Anglo-French ultimatum to Egypt and Israel expired. ~~/The ultimatum called for an end of hostilities between Egypt and Israel, and the withdrawal of their forces to a point 10 miles from the Suez Canal. B ritain and France said yesterday they were moving in "to separate the belligerents, and to guarantee freedom of transit through the canal." They asked Egypt's permission to go in, but made plain they were going in, permission or not. Egypt rejected the ultimatum. Israel accepted it... but on condition Egypt also would agree. As a result, there was no cease-fire. And Britain and France launched their attack.~~

→

The Anglo-French move was debated again today in the British House of Commons. Today's debate opened before the announcement of the joint action against Egypt, and Labour members demanded to know if, indeed, the attack was underway. Prime Minister Eden refused to give this information. In the midst of shouts that he resign, Eden said, "I am not going to give the House any kind of account of that action. We stand by what we said, and we shall carry it out." Eden told the House of Commons, "We cannot accept that we have to obtain the agreement of the United States before acting in our own vital interests. He conceded that the free movement of shipping through the Suez Canal is of "concern" to Americans. But for Britain and the rest of Europe, he said, it is "a matter of survival." He said, "It is sometimes a government's duty to take decisions for its own country." Labour Leader Hugh Gaitskell called the attack "an act of disastrous folly." He said it would do "irreparable harm" to British prestige, solidarity with the Commonwealth and Britain's alliance with the United States. It is expected that tomorrow the Labour Party will introduce a motion of censure against the Eden government.

Shortly before the BRITISH-FRENCH attack, Marshal Tito issued a statement in Belgrade declaring that Israel's invasion of Egypt had created a situation which threatened to turn into a major war. And the Anglo-French decision, he said, represents the continuation of Israel's aggression. Tito said the two actions are obviously connected..."and comprise, in fact, one aggression."

In New Delhi, an official spokesman of the Indian government called the Anglo-French ultimatum "a flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter."

And in Moscow, the Soviet government issued a statement branding Britain and France as aggressors. Moscow called Israel's invasion of Egypt "a calculated pretext" for Britain and France to take over the Suez Canal.

Now, for a report on the action between Egypt and Israel from the Israeli point of view we switch by recording to Winston Burdett in Tel Aviv.

Burdett runs 1:50
returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow
in New York."

In Hungary today, Russian troops and tanks began pulling out of Budapest, under threat of attack by the Hungarian air force. The Hungarian news agency says rebel leaders are demanding that the government "denounce" the Warsaw Pact. The pact was drawn up last year as Moscow's answer to NATO. Since then, Russia has used it as a pretext for stationing troops in the satellite countries. Cardinal Mindszenty returned to Budapest today, in triumph, after being imprisoned by the Reds for nearly eight years.

Gene Rupp

Word for Today

The British and French are trying to solve the Suez problem through force. This was not an easy decision to come by right or wrong. Much patience was spent in fruitless negotiation. For as Alvin Johnson once remarked, "However bravely men may talk, they shrink from the appeal to force until there appears to be no other way out."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - WINSTON BURDETT

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Now for a report on the action between Egypt and Israel, from the Israeli point of view, we switch by recording to Winston Burdett in Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: The Israeli forces tonight are moving rapidly to cut off the Gaza Strip from Egypt and to complete the encirclement of that narrow panhandle on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean. There are 200,000 Arab refugees inside the Gaza area, and it's reported tonight that many of them are fleeing in panic down the coast road toward Port Said in Egypt, while others are trying to escape by boat before Israeli troops block the way. Military spokesmen here refused to confirm or deny this new Israeli thrust, but unofficial reports say that an Israeli tank force is striking toward the sea at the south end of the strip. Whether the Israelis will invade the strip and occupy it, once they've surrounded it, we just don't know. What has happened to the Egyptian army? Where has it gone? That is the question that everyone here is asking. No major clash between Israeli and Egyptian troops has been reported here and yet the Israeli Radio said tonight that Egyptian resistance throughout the vast Sinai Peninsula, more than twice as big as Israel itself, has been liquidated. The Israeli still insist that their aim in this war is a limited aim, namely, to wipe out all the Egyptian commando bases in the Sinai desert. If that is so, the Israelis will have no reason to go all the way to the Suez Canal. I asked an Israeli official tonight ~~with~~ whether Israeli troops would go home after they have finished their job, or would they remain in the Sinai desert to make sure the Egyptians don't come back. His answer was, "That depends on circumstances". Unquote. This may be a limited war, but the Israelis are as uncertain as everyone else how it will end. In the port of Haifa today about 100 Americans boarded a naval transport and left for Greece with an escort of two destroyers. That brings to 500 the number of Americans who have left Israel in the past two days. And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: On the subject of the Suez crisis, the President took a hand's off policy, pinning his hopes on the United Nations. Here, by recording, is part of what he had to say on that subject.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: On Sunday, the Israeli government ordered total mobilization. On Monday, their armed forces penetrated deeply into Egypt and of the vicin (sic) and to the vicinity of the Suez Canal, nearly 100 miles away. And on Tuesday, the British and French governments delivered a twelve-hour ultimatum to Israel and Egypt, now followed up by armed attack against Egypt.

The United States was not consulted in any way about any phase of these actions, nor were we informed of them in advance. As it is the manifest right of any of these nations to take such decisions and actions, it is likewise ~~right~~ our right, if our judgment so dictates, to dissent. We believe these actions to have been taken in error, for we do not accept the use of force as a wise or proper instrument for the ~~[illegible]~~ settlement of international disputes. To say this, in this particular instance, is in no way to minimize our friendships with these nations nor our determination to maintain those friendships; and we are fully aware of the grave anxieties of Israel, of Britain and France. We know that they have been subjected to grave and repeated provocations. The present fact, nonetheless, seems clear. The action taken can scarcely be reconciled with the principles and purposes of the United Nations, to which we have all subscribed. And beyond this, we are forced to doubt that resort to force and war will for long serve the (unintelligible) of the attacking nations. Now we must look to the future.

In the circumstances I have described, there will be no United States involvement in these present hostilities. I therefore have no plan to call the Congress in special session. Of course, we shall continue to keep in contact with Congressional leaders of both parties. I assure you your government will remain alert to every possibility of this situation and keep in close contact and coordination with the legislative branch of this government.

At the same time it is, and it will remain, the dedicated purpose of your government to do all in its power to localize the fighting and to end the conflict. We took our first measure in this action yesterday. We went to the United Nations with the request that the forces of Israel return to their own land and that hostilities in the area be brought to a close. This proposal was not adopted, because it was vetoed by Great Britain and by France. The processes of the United Nations, however, are not exhausted. It is our hope and intent that this matter will be brought before the United Nations General Assembly, there with no veto operating, the opinion of the world can be brought to bear in our quest for a just end to this tormenting problem. In the past, the United Nations has proved able to find a way to end bloodshed. We believe it can and that it will do so again.

My fellow citizens, as I review the march of world events in recent years, I am ever more deeply convinced that the United Nations represents the soundest hope for peace in the world. For this very reason, I believe that the processes of the United Nations need further to be developed and strengthened. I speak particularly of increasing its ability to secure justice under international law. In all the recent troubles in the Middle East, there have indeed been injustices suffered by all nations involved. But I do not believe that another instrument of injustice - war - is a remedy for these wrongs. There can be no peace without law. And there can be no law, if we were to invoke one code of international conduct for those who oppose us and another for our friends. The society of nations has been slow in developing means to apply this truth, but the passionate longing for peace on the part of all people of the earth, compels us to speed out search for new and more effective instruments of justice. The peace we seek and need means much more than mere absence of war. It means the acceptance of law and the fostering of justice in all the world.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Half an hour ago President Eisenhower spoke to the nation; reviewed recent events in Eastern Europe, promised economic aid for Poland and Hungary; said that if Russia withdraws her troops from such countries it will be a great forward stride toward justice, turst and understanding in the world.

On the subject of the Suez crisis the President took a "hands-off" policy pinning his hopes on the United Nations. Here, by recording, is part of what he had to say on that subject.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: On Sunday, the Israeli government ordered total mobilization. On Monday, their armed forces penetrated deeply into Egypt and to the vicinity of the Suez Canal, nearly 100 miles away. And on Tuesday, the British and French governments delivered a twelve - hour ultimatum to Israel and Egypt, now followed up by armed attack against Egypt.

The United States was not consulted in any way about any phase of these actions, nor were we informed of them in advance. As it is the manifest right of any of these nations to take such decisions and actions, it is likewise our right, if our judgement so dictates, to dissent. We believe these actions to have been taken in error, for we do not accept the use of force as a wise or proper instrument for the settlement of international disputes. To say this, in this particular instance, is in no way to minimize our friendships with these nations nor our determination to maintain those friendships; and we are fully aware of the grave anxieties of Israel, of Britain and France. We know that they have been subjected to grave and repeated provocations. The present fact, nonetheless, seems clear. The action taken can scarcely be reconciled with the principles and purposes of the United Nations, to which we have all subscribed. And beyond this, we are forced to doubt that resort to force and war will for long serve the (unintelligible) of the attacking nations. Now we must look to the future.

In the circumstances I have described, there will be no United States involvement in these present hostilities. I therefore have no plan to call the Congress in special session. Of course, we shall continue to keep in contact with congressional leaders of both parties. I assure you your government will remain alert to every possibility of this situation and keep in close contact and coordination with the legislative branch of this government.

At the same time it is, and it will remain, the dedicated purpose of your government to do all in its power ro localize the fighting and to end the conflict. We took our first measure in this action yesterday. We went to the United Nations with the request that the forces of Israel return to their own land and that hostilities in the area be brought to a close. This proposal was not adopted, because it was vetoed by Great Britain and by France. The processes of the United Nations, however, are not exhausted. It is out hope and intent that this matter will be brought before the United Nations General Assembly, there with no veto operating, the opinion of the world can be brought to bear in our quest for a just end to this tormenting problem. In the past, the United Nations has proved able to find a way to end bloodshed. We believe it can and that it will do so again.

My fellow citizens, as I review the march of world events in recent years, I am ever more deeply convinced that the United Nations represents the soundest hope for peace in the world. For this very reason, I believe that the processes of the United Nations need further to be developed and strengthened. I speak particularly of increasing its ability to secure justice under international law. In all the recent troubles in the Middle East, there have indeed been injustices suffered by all nations involved. But I do not believe that another instrument of injustice - war - is a remedy for these wrongs. There can be no peace without law. And there can be no law, if we were to invoke one mode of international conduct for those who oppose us and another for our friends. The society of nations has been slow in developing means to apply this truth, but the passionate longing for peace on the part of all people of the earth, compels us to speed out search for new and more effective instuments of justice. The peace we seek and need means much more than mere absence of war. It means the acceptance of law and the fostering of justice in all the world.."

MURROW: In the United Nations tonight, Yugoslavia called for an extraordinary meeting of the General Assembly to consider the action taken by Britain and France. The Seucrity council voted, over British and French objections, to grant the Yugoslav request.

Great Britain and France have attacked Egypt by air. So far, there is no word of a landing by British and French troops. Two hours ago, my colleague, Frank Kearns, came up from Cairo with an eye-witness report. Here is his first-hand, recorded story of what happened:

KEARNS: What started as an Israeli attack a few days ago, has not turned into a war and casualties. British jet bombers have attacked and burned in or near five key Egyptian cities and towns. Here in Cairo, the capitol, and Alexandria, Egypt's second city, and in a few towns along the Suez Canal - Port Said, Ismalia and Suez. This is official in an Egyptian communique. Their claim that seven persons were killed in the Cairo raid. Here in the capitol they have, with precision bombing, aimed at the key airfields around the city. Most of the bombs reportedly rioped Cairo's great international airport and nearby El Magra, the military airfield. Troops are on the desert of Cairo to the north just beyond suburban (unintelligible) Residents out there report the bombing set fire to an apartment building like a sever earthquake. The blasts of one were felt here in downtwon Cairo. During the blackout in the morning, considerable (unintelligible) bombs shattered the Egyptian night. Through the flames the red and white lights (unintelligible) and silhouetted the horizon like daylight. There is no panic - absolutely no panic. Cairo behaved like a veteran blitzed city but Cairo is a shocked and angry city tonight. Still no official comment, but unofficial comments from Egyptians is pure anger - anger laced with hate. They describe this as "pure, naked, ugly aggression," on one of the slimmest pretexts in history. "It's war now", one man said to me. "All out war. And if we lose the war, it will make Egypt a hell worse than Cyprus, Syria and Algeria rolled into one." Meanwhile no reports here as yet on whether the British and French are actually landing in Egypt. Now back to CBS News in New York.

MURROW: Immediately after this report was recorded, the Cairo transmitter went off the air, presumably because another raid was in progrsss. The British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd, told the House of Commons tonight that it is "untrue that Cairo proper has been bombed. Lloyd said the joint British-French operations were limited strictly to military targets, mainly airfields. The first official word of the attack came from the combined British and French headquarters on Cyprus. The announcement said : "An air offensive by bomber aircraft, under allied command, is at this moment being launched against military targets in Egypt." A few minutes later, the French Defense Ministry, in Paris, said attacks were being carried out against targets in the Suez Canal area at 6:40 p.m., Cairo time. That is 11:40 a.m., New York time. The French announcement spoke of a combined air and naval bombardment, indicating that warships, as well as aircraft, were involved. The bombardment began a little more than 14 hours after the Anglo-French ultimatum to Egypt and Israel expired.

Now, for a report on the action between Egypt and Israel from the Israeli point of view, we switch by recording to Winston Burdett in Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: The Israeli forces tonight are moving rapidly to cut off the Gaza Strip from Egypt and to complete the encirclement of the narrow panhandle on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean. There are 200,000 Arab refugees inside the Gaza area, and it's reported tonight that many of them are fleeing in panic down the coast road toward Port Said in Egypt, while others are trying to escape by boat before Israeli troops block the way. Military spokesmen here refused to confirm or deny this new Israeli thrust, but unofficial reports say that an Israeli tank force is striking toward the sea at the south end of the strip. Whether the Isrealis will invade the strip and occupy it, once they've surrounded it, we just don't know. What has happened to the Egyptian army? Where has it gone? That is the question that everyone here is asking. No major clash between Israeli and Egyptian troops has been reported here and yet the Israeli Radio said tonight that Egyptian resistance throughout the vast Sinai Peninsula, more than twice as big as Israel itself, has been liquidated. The Israeli still insist that their aim in this war is a limited aim, namely to wipe out all the Egyptian commando bases in the Sinai desert. If that is so, the Israelis will have no reason to go all the way to the Suez Canal . I asked an Israeli official tonight whether Israeli troops would go home after they have finished their job, or would they remain in the Sinai desert to make sure the Egyttians don't come back. His answer was, "That depends on circumstances." Unquote. This may be a limited war, but the Israelis are as uncertain as everyone else how it will end. In the port of Haifa today about 100 Americans boarded a naval transport and left for Greece with an escort of two destoryers. That brings to 500 the number of Americans who have left Israel in the past two days. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

In Hungary today, Russian troops tnd tanks began pulling out of Budapest under threat of attack by the Hungarian air force. The Hungarian news agency says rebel leaders are demanding that the government "denounce" the Warsaw Pact. The pact was drawn up last year as Moscow's answer to NATO.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The British andFrench are tyring to solve the Suez problem through force. This was not an easy decision to come by , right or wrong. Much patience was spent in fruitless negotiation. For as Alvin Johnson once remarked, "However bravely men may talk, they shrink from the appeal to force until there appears to be no other way out."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Thurs mor 1

This is the news

Israel announced tonight that its armed forces have seized the bulk of the Sinai Penninsula. An Israeli spokesman said Egyptian forces in the penninsula are in a state of general collapse---"a full and disorderly retreat of Nasser's forces is now in progress." /An Israeli communique says other Israeli troops... in the north... have cut off the Gaza Strip from the rest of Egypt./ Ten Egyptian jets are reported destroyed. / The Israeli air force is reported intact.

There is still no word that Egypt has been invaded by British and French troops. Such an invasion is expected. A communique... issued in Paris... said British and French aircraft carriers began moving toward the Suez Canal "in the course of the morning." The carriers are approaching the canal from both the north and south, in the Mediterranean and in the Red Sea. The carriers may be accompanied by troop transports. No mention of transports is made in the communique. ~~France's largest battleship... the Jean Bart... left [illegible] with parachute troops and naval co[illegible] on board.~~

British Prime Minister Eden has won a vote of confidence on the issue of military intervention in Egypt. The vote in the House of Commons was 324 to 255. Eden defended the Anglo-French move as a "police action", required to prevent an expansion of hostilities. Britain, he said, would gladly turn the physical task of maintaining peace in the Middle East over to the United Nations, once the Egyptian-Israeli armies have been separated, and the position "stabilized". The Labour Party leader, Hugh Gaitskell, attacked the action of the Conservative government. The bombing of Egypt, he said, was not carried out in self-defense. The action, Gaitskell charged, was in "clear defiance" of the United Nations Charter. He said millions of Britons were "profoundly shocked and ashamed."

At the United Nations tonight, the General Assembly... called into extraordinary session... voted to take up the question of a cease-fire in the Middle East. The only two votes opposing the action were cast by Great Britain and France. The meeting is still in progress and for that story, here is my friend Larry Lesueur.

Lesueur runs 2 mins

returns on cue: "---to Ed Murrow."

My colleague, Frank Kearns, reported two hours ago from Caire that the Egyptian government had just proclaimed martial law. /And that, he said, includes complete censorship. Kearns informed us that the last 14-hundred Americans are being evacuated tonight. He said Egypt has decided not to quit the United Nations. British and French property in Egypt has been confiscated.

In a broadcast to the Egyptian people today, President Nasser promised ultimate victory. He said, "Every one of you is a soldier. We will fight hard, we will never give up." Egypt, Nasser said, will fight "total war".

Kearns said the air attacks on Egypt are continuing. British aircraft today bombed and sank an Egyptian ship in the Suez Canal. The Egyptians say the cahal has been blocked. /This is questioned at Anglo-French headquarters on Cyprus. It expresses belief that the ship was sunk outside the channel proper. And it denies that the ship was sunk deliberately to block the canal.

An Egyptian communique says British planes made nine raids on Cairo today. None of the bombs fell on downtown Cairo. The Suez Canal Zone was raided three times. The Egyptians claim they shot down six British aircraft.

Egypt... as expected... broke off diplomatic relations today with Britain and France.

Iraq ordered total mobilization of its armed forces. Jordan announced it is severing diplomatic relations with France... and informed Britain it will not let British bases in Jordan be used for launching attacks against Egypt, or any other Arab state.

A broadcast is reported by what is called the "Free Egypt" radio. The broadcast... monitored in Paris... urged Egyptians to overthrow President Nasser and restore fprmer President Naguib.

Adlai Stevenson said tonight, in his reply to the President's speech of last night, that the Eisenhower Administration has given the Russians two great victories in the Middle East, and its policy is now at an absolute dead end. Stevenson contended that the Russians have achieved a foothold in the Middle East in a few months - something the Tsars couldn't do in centuries. The second communist victory, he said, was the breakdown of the Western Alliance - something the Russians have been trying to do for the last ten years.

14-8

THEN, BY RECORDING, HERE IS WHAT

And ~~then~~ Mr. Stevenson said:

Runs 3:50

Ends on cue: "That all is well in the world."

Russian troops have gone into action again in Hungary. Soviet forces reportedly are attacking three airfields on the outskirts of Budapest. My colleague, Earnest Leiser, reports by telephone from Budapest that he can hear the sound of machine-gun fire. It is impossible, he says, to tell... at this time... the scope of the Soviet attack. Premier Nagy told the Russian ambassador in Budapest today that Hungary has repudiated the Warsaw Pact. He also protested the arrival in Hungary of Soviet troop reinforcements, including tanks. Nagy then proclaimed the neutrality of Hungary and appealed to the United Nations for protection. He asked the General Assembly to take up the Hungarian question at the current extraordinary session. Specifically, he proposed that it consider a plan whereby Hungary's neutrality would be guaranteed through an agreement by the major powers.

Russia called today for another Bandung Conference to deal with the Middle East situation. Moscow proposed that the meeting be held immediately, and that it demand the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Egyptian territory. The proposal was made jointly to Prime Minister Nehru of India and President Sukarno of Indonesia. The original Bandung Conference... attended by the Asian-African countries... was held in Indonesia in April of last year. Israel was not invited.

Reports from New Delhi say that Prime Minister Nehru has sent a personal message to President Eisenhower. According to informed sources, the message proposes "something in the nature of joint action by the United States and India" to restore peace to the Middle East. In a public statement today, Nehru called the Anglo-French attack on Egypt "clear and naked aggression." He urged the United Nations to take "strong steps", in order... in his words... "to prevent the world from plunging into war."

Soviet Premier Bulganin has ALSO sent a note to President Eisenhower on the Egyptian situation. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, cables me from Moscow that Bulganin requested American support for a Russian cease-fire proposal in the United Nations. Under the Soviet proposal, foreign troops would withdraw from Egypt under the supervision of a special United Nations commission.

President Eisenhower conferred with Secretary of State Dulles twice today, before Mr. Dulles left Washington to attend the General Assembly session here in New York. The President also met for two hours with the National Security Council. The White House announced that Mr. Eisenhower has called off his campaign trip to Boston on Monday, in view of the critical Middle East situation. Mr. Eisenhower is making a political speech in Philadelphia tonight. The text of that speech has not been released.

~~Adlai Stevenson was [illegible] on the [illegible] and television networks tonight to [illegible] tonight.~~

George Bryant

Word for Today

American leadership has failed in the Middle East... primarily because we had ~~a policy~~ ~~for the Middle East, but~~ no constructive, workable plan. This is no new experience. Abraham Lincoln was once asked at the height of a crisis if he had a workable policy. "Indeed," he said, "I have none. I live in preventing the storm from blowing down the tent. I drive in the pegs as fast as they are pulled up."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Thursday, November 1, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... At the United Nations tonight, the General Assembly called into extraordinary session, voted to take up the question of a cease-fire in the Middle East. The only two votes opposing the action were cast by Great Britain and France. The meeting is still in progress and for that story, here is my friend, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: America's Secretary of State Dulles has just addressed the special emergency session of the 76-nation General Assembly. Secretary of State Dulles said thiscountry has revaluated its position with the greatest care at the highest level and we find ourselves, he said, on disagreement with Britain, France over principles. Mr. Dulles then noted pointedly the heavy rearming of Egypt and Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal. He said we're not blind to the fact that what has happened in the last two days came out of a murky background, but, he said, "this does not justify the resort to armed force, which," he said "is going on tonight." And at the next regular Assembly session Mr. Dulles thinks the justice of the Suez Canal seizure should be brought up. But force, he said, should never be used to correct injustice, or the world will return, he said, to anarchy.

Mr. Dulles than asked the Assembly, in a resolution, to note the breaking of agreements in the Middle East, and to note the fact that France and England are using force there, and also to note the blocking of passage through the Suez Canal. Then he called for an immediate cease-fire, the withdrawal of all forces and after the cease-fire to reopen the Suez Canal. Dulles said a recommendation for a cease-fire is not enough. He said we must have something better than the conditions which brought about this war. He added that if the Assembly said it was alright for the fighting to go on the war wound only spread and intensify. He said the UN should go after the condition that brought on this war.

Mr. Dulles received an ovation for this rather mild resolution which condemns no one. Not even Israel. But it calls only for a cease-fire and withdrawal of troops and a reopening of the Suez Canal, which must mean that the United States feels that Egypt too is not without blame. The Assembly has just recessed. And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - ADLAI STEVENSON

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Adlai Stevenson said tonight in his reply to the President's speech of last night, that the Eisenhower administration has given the Russians two great victories in the Middle East, and its policy ~~xxxxxx~~ is now at an "absolute dead end." Stevenson contended that the Russians have achieved a foothold in the Middle East in a few months, something the Tzars couldn't do in centuries. The second Communist victory, he said, was the breakdown of the Western alliance, something the Russians have been trying to do for the last ten years. And then, by recording, here is something else Mr. Stevenson said.

STEVENSON: Well, here's where we stand today. We have alienated our chief, our ancient, our strongest European allies. We have alienated Israel; we have alienated Egypt and the Arab countries; and in the United Nations, our main associate in Middle Eastern matters now appears to be the Soviet Union. In the very week when the Red army has been shooting down the brave people of Hungary and Poland. We have lost every point in the game and I doubt if ever before in our diplomatic history has any policy been such an ~~xxxxxxx~~ abysmal, such a complete, such a catastrpphic failure. It's bad enough to be responsible for such a disastrous policy. I think it's almost worse in a Democracy to try and conceal the truth from the people. But this is what the administration has also done - done systematically, with regard to the situation in the Middle East. It was only a few days ago, on October the 12th, that President Eisenhower himself said in a political telecast, "I'VE got the best announcement that I think I can possibly make to America tonight," he said. I quote him. "The progress made in the settlement of the Suez dispute this afternoon is most gratifying. It looks like there's a very great crisis that's behind us."

And the next day, Vice-President Nixon gave us his views. He said, "We have kept the peace and it appears that Mr. Eisenhower's tolerance and wisdom and leadership will serve to avert armed conflict in that part of the globe".

Either the President and the Vice-President didn't know how serious the situation was in the Middle East, or they didn't want the American people to know, at least until after the election. And then again, only last Sunday, just four days ago, the Sec. of State said in a television interview, that the United States, Britain and France have, I quote him, "have developed a common policy, and I think it's amazing the degree to which we have had a common policy. And the fact that there are certain minor, superficial difficulties as to details about just how you handle tolls, or how much is going to get paid to Egypt and how much isn't, doesn't detract from the fact that we have a common policy."

Well, the superficial difficulties that Mr. Dulles mentioned on Sunday became pretty formidable by Tuesday, when Britain and France broke with the United States in the United Nations. Now this is only a brief summary of this sorry chapter, but I think it demonstrates that the Middle East policy of our government in Washington has been blundering and has been mistaken; and that it has compounded its blunders by a consistant policy of misleading the American people into believing that all is well in the world.

Ed. trans. FAD

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 2, 1956

This is the news:

The Anglo-French invasion of Egypt appears imminent. The French Ministry of Defense announced today that the bombing of Egyptian airfields in preparation for the landings "is now practically over." A joint communique... issued on Cyprus... says that a hundred Egyptian aircraft have been caught on the ground---destroyed or made useless. Another communique... issued in Paris... says, "It can therefore be presumed that air and naval operations henceforth will aim at realizing the conditions necessary for temporary occupation of the Canal Zone." The British Admiralty warned all merchant shipping to stay clear of the approaches to the canal, both north and south. The British chancellor of the exchequer... Harold Macmillan... said cryptically, "Things will move rapidly in the next few days." British Canberra jets are reported to have knocked out Cairo's propaganda radio, "Voice of Arabia". The Egyptians say British and French bombers sank another ship in the Suez Canal, making two in all.

The Russians appear to be sealing off Hungary with troops and tanks. My colleague, Earnest Leiser, reports from Budapest that "very large" Soviet reinforcements have arrived in the country. Tank and machinegun fire was heard again in Budapest tonight, he says, after a quiet day. Leiser says the firing came from the western outskirts of the city. Other press reports say that Russian armored columns have blocked the main highway leading from Budapest to Austria. The roadblock is said to have been established six miles from the Austrian frontier. The United States Legation in Budapest reports that Russian troops refused to let a convoy of American diplomats... and their children... leave Hungary today. The legation says they were turned back at a point nine miles from the Austrian border.

The United Nations Security Council has met to consider "the critical situation in Hungary." The urgent meeting was requested by the United States, Britain and France. [redacted] The Hungarian premier... Imre [redacted] Nagy... appealed to the United Nations to protect Hungary's newly gained sovereignty, after repudiating the Warsaw Pact and demanding the withdrawal [redacted] of Soviet troops. In the Security Council tonight, Russia tried to block discussion of the Hungarian question... but was voted down, 10 to one. The American ambassador... Henry Cabot Lodge... then [redacted] proposed that Secretary General Hammarskjold ascertain all the facts in the Hungarian situation and [redacted] report back to the United Nations. The appeal from Nagy, he said, cannot be ignored. [redacted]

President Eisenhower today offered to send Hungary 20-million dollars' worth of food and medical supplies. The White House announcement referred to this as an "initial" offer, indicating there is more to come. Most of the food will consist of American farm suppluses.

French Foreign Minister Pineau flew to London today, to confer with British leaders. The conference concerned the call... by the United Nations General Assembly... for an immediate cease-fire. / In the House of Commons today, leaders of the Labour Party demanded that Prime Minister Eden tell them whether Britain would comply. / Eden said, he would have to be given an opportunity to study the United Nations resolution. / The House of Commons then decided to meet tomorrow in emergency session, to hear Eden's decision. London sources say the call for a cease-fire probably will be ignored. At the same time, the Conservative government is expected to announce its readiness to turn the policing of the Suez Canal Zone over to the United Nations, once the situation has been "stabilized". Canada already has endorsed such a proposal. Prime Minister Eden is making a special broadcast tomorrow night to the British people.

Now... let's switch by recording to Israel and my colleague, Winston Burdett.

Burdett runs 2:35
ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in NY."

The United Press quotes Arab sources in Washington tonight as saying that Jordan and Syria have decided to declare war, and will send their troops into action soon. This report... so far... is unconfirmed.

The United States today prohibited American arms shipments to Israel. The ban also applies to Egypt. The State Department took the action "in pursuance of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly, calling on member nations to refrain from introducing military goods in the area of hostilities." The development of new economic aid programs for Egypt and Israel has also been blocked by our government; so has the development of new aid programs for Syria and Jordan.

Two Republican congressmen... Scott of Pennsylvania and Curtis of Massachusetts... proposed today that President Eisenhower address the General Assembly. They also recommended that any economic sanctions applied to Israel be applied equally to Britain and France.

Indonesia today called for a meeting of the five Colombo Powers, as a first step toward a conference of Asian-African countries on the Middle East crisis. Such a conference was proposed yesterday by Russia. The Colombo Powers are Indonesia, Pakistan, Burma, India and Ceylon. India is said to favor taking all possible United Nations action first.

In Warsaw today, the Communist leadership issued a manifesto, warning the Polish people not to stage anti-Russian demonstrations, or call for the withdrawal of Soviet troops. The warning came from the central committee of the Polish Communist Party. "Reactionary elements," it said, "are again raising their voices against the Polish-Soviet alliance, and against the presence of Soviet forces." The central committee said these demonstrations constitute "a grave danger." Poland, it said, should not have the same kind of chaos as Hungary.

In East Germany, Premier Grotewohl also pointed to the "chaos" in Hungary, and said the Russians have 22 divisions in East Germany "to protect the democratic work of our people."

Adlai Stevenson suggested today that Soviet forces may have been "emboldened" to re-enter Hungary, due to what he called the "breakdown" of the Western alliance. Stevenson said... in a Cleveland speech... "The Communists have always been quick to exploit disunity in the free world."

Tonight, Vice President Nixon is making a nationwide speech... in reply to Stevenson's speech last night, attacking the Administration's foreign policy. Nixon told a Republican rally in Hershey, Pennsylvania today that Mr. Eisenhower is "the best man in America" to lead the country in a time of international crisis.

Collingwood — George Bryan

11

It is only a slight over-simplification to say that what has happened in the last few days went something like this: Israel, Britain and France "re-appraised," with what agony we do not know, American leadership of the free world. They decided it was not good enough, did not serve their national self-interests; so they decided to use force. President Eisenhower decided to let them stew in their own juice.

The difference in attitude about the Suez Canal can be easily summarized. For us it is a convenience; for the British and French it is a condition of economic and national survival.

Our government now speaks for itself. It no longer speaks as the leader of a coalition of free nations, for our two most powerful allies have rejected our leadership.

2

There was a time when the United States had what might have been called an "automatic majority" in the United Nations. Where we led, the majority of the U.N. membership was content to follow. We did not lose a single crucial contest in the United Nations until the General Assembly of 1953. Now things have changed. Our leadership is less respected and therefore less effective. Yesterday our two principal allies, Britain and France vetoed our resolution against the use of force in the Suez crisis. The future of the Western Alliance is now in the balance. The primary intention of Russian policy for ten years has been to split the Western alliance; and now, for the time being at least, it has at last been split, without any substantial help from the Russians.

Our policy in the Middle East has been bewildering. We justified the contradictions by saying we were trying to preserve the peace. We did more than any other nation to persuade the British to get out of Suez. That meant the abandonment of a position of power. We refused to sell arms to Egypt. The Egyptians told us they would buy them from Russia. We apparently thought the Egyptians were bluffing, but they weren't. The deal was made, and Russia for the first time had a firm foothold in the Middle East.

3

The Israelis wanted to buy defensive arms to offset the threat of the Communist weapons bought by Egypt. We delayed and discussed. We encouraged the French, the Canadians and the British to sell a few obsolete aircraft and weapons to Israel. Either it was right or it was wrong — either it was in our national self-interest or it wasn't, to see to it that Israel was not driven to desperation by the lack of defensive weapons. We did not make up our mind, but rather tried to ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ arrange for ~~them~~ Israel to get a few weapons under the counter.

We tried to bribe the Egyptians not to join the Soviet camp, by promising to help build the Aswan Dam. Presumably we had figured the odds as to whether Nasser could carry out his end of the deal. Then we abruptly withdrew the offer. Both the offer and the withdrawal were political.

Nasser's answer was to seize the Suez Canal. Nasser's stature increased in the Arab world. We rejected the use of force, and insisted that the British and French renounce it too. That meant that in the negotiations that followed, Nasser knew that force would not be used — that he was safe in rejecting any attempt to restore international control of the Canal.

Mr. Dulles created the User's Association, which is already forgotten. The matter came to the Security Council -- we voted with the British and French for international control; but the Russians vetoed it. It was stalemate. We had gained no friends in the Middle East, and had lost the friends we already had.

Now a word about what the British and French intend. They have announced that they want only a temporary occupation of the Canal zone. Sir Anthony Eden stressed the word "temporary" in his statement in Parliament. They do not want to go all the way back to the time of permanent occupation. They want international control, as advocated in the resolution the Soviet Union vetoed in the Council. They want a guarantee that Egypt will not be able to strangle their economies. They failed to get it following our lead. Now they are going their own way. ~~We~~ MANY AMERICANS consider their methods and devices reprehensible, but we already have agreed to their objective.

The British and French appear to be slow in undertaking their announced action. Both surprise and speed have been lacking. The effort to take out the Egyptian airfields did not start until twelve hours after the ultimatum expired. Egypt has been given an additional forty-eight hours to prepare for the amphibious and airborne operation. Apparently the convoys from Cyrpus and Malta were not ready to move on time. It is to be expected that the Anglo-French force can overwhelm organized resistance without too much difficulty. Then they will have to contend with guerilla warfare. And the precedents here are not promising. In Algeria about twenty thousand rebels have immobilized about four hundred thousand French troops. If the Egyptians are equally tough, the destruction of organized resistance may be only the beginning of Anglo-French difficulties. And the rupture in the Western Alliance may be only the beginning of our isolation from the rest of the free world.

Word for Today

The Communist leaders of Poland are anxious... lest the anti-Communist revolution that swept Hungary recur in their own land. Well they might be anxious. For as Sir Winston Churchill once remarked, "The soul of Poland is indestructible, and she will rise again like a rock which may for a time be submerged by a tidal wave but which remains a rock."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Anglo-French invasion of Egupt appears imminent. The French Ministry of Defense announced today that the bombin of Egyptian arifields in preparation for the landings "is now practically over." A joint communique--issued on Cyprus..says that a hundred Egyptian aircraft have been caught on the ground, destroyed or made useless. Another communique...issued in Paris..says, "It can therefore be presumed that air and naval operations henceforth will aid at realizing the conditions necessary for temporary occupation of the Canal Zone." The British Admiralty warned all merchant shipping to stay clear of the approaches to the canal, both north and south. The Brtisih chancellor of the exchequer...Harold MacMillan, said crypticly . "Things will move rapidly in the next few days." British Canberra jets are reported to have knocked out Cairo's propaganda radio, "Voice of Arabia." The Egyptians say British and French bombers sank another ship in the Suez Canal, making two in all.

The Russians appear to be sealing off Hungary with troops and tanks. My colleague, Earnest Leiser, reports from Budapest that "very large" Soviet reinforcements have arrived in the country. Tank and machinegun fire was heard again in Budapest tonight, he says, after a quiet day. Leiser says the firing came from the western outskirts of the city. Other press reports say that Russian armored columns have blocked the main highway leading from Budapest to Austria. The roadblock is said to have been establihhed six miles from the Austrian frontier. The United States Legation in Budapest reports that Russian troops refused to let a convoy of American diplomats..and their children..leave Hungary today. The legation says they were turned back at a point nine miles from the Austrian border.

The United Nations Security Council has met to consider "the critical situation in Hungary". The urgent meeting was requested by the United States, Britain and France. The Hungarian premier, Imre Nagy, appealed to the United Nations to protect Hungary's newly gained sovereignty, after reupdiating the Warsaw pact and demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops. In the Security Council tonight, Russia tried to block discussions of the Hungarian question. ..but he was voted down, 10 to one. The American ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge..then proposed that Secretary General Hammarskjold ascertain all the facts in the Hungarian situation and report back to the United Nations. The appeal from Nagy, he said, cannot be ignored.

President Eisenhower today offered to send Hungary 20-million dollar's worth of food and medical supplies. The White House announcement referred to this "initial" offer, indicating there is more to come. Most of the food will consist of American farm surpluses.

French Foreign Minister Pineau flew to London today to confer with British leasers. The conference concerned the call...by the United Nations General Assembly..for tn immediate cease-fire. In the House of commons today, leaders of the Labour Party demanded that Prime Minister Eden tell them whether Britain would comply Eden sa d he would have to be given an opportunity to study the United Nations resolution. The House of Commons then decided to meet tomorrow in emergency session to hear Eden's decision. London sources say the call for a cease-fire probably will be ingored. At the same time, the Conservative government is expected to announce its readiness to turn the policing of the Suez Canal Zone over to the United Nations, once the situation has been "stabilized." Canada already has endorsed such a proposal. Prime Minister Eden is making a special broadcast tomorrow night to the British people.

Now, let's switch by recording to Israel and my colleague Winston Bur-Burdett.

BURDETT: There are unconfirmed reports in Jerusalem and here in Tel Aviv tonight which, whould they prove true, would drastically change the situation in the Israeli war with Egypt. The reports say simply that Syrian troops have crossed the border southward into Jordan. No further explanation is given. It is not said whether this is an invasion of Jordan by her Arab neighbor or the the Syrian troops have moved at the invitation of the Jordanian government. To most observers here it seems unthinkable that Jordan would willingly receive Syrian troops on her territory, knowing that Israel would consider this a war-like provocation that might well involve Jordan herself in an expanding Israel-Arab war.

There are still other reports here, still equally unconfirmed that Iraqui troops have likewise crossed their border westward into Jordan. Iraq and Syria are arch rivals and the reports do not say whether it ias Iraq or Syria who moved first.

These reports may reflect nothing more than Israel's anxiety to keep the present war limited to a single front. When one Israeli officer heard the reports tonight he said "This would change everything." Certainly, one inevitable result of any such Arab military moves into Jordan would be the prolongation and extension of the war.

In a recent major policy speech, Prime Minister Ben Gurion said that the massing of the Iraqui troops on the Jordan frontier constituted a major change in the status quo. He specifically reserved Israel's complete freedom of action in meeting the change. During the past few days, Israel has made it repeatedly clear that she is doing everything the can to avoid a two- front war.

She has proclaimed her peaceful intentions toward her Arab neighbors to the east and north. Arab-language broadcasts from the Israeli government station have reiterated this point . But the presence of Syrian or Iraqui troops in Jordan would create a new and dangerous situation. Anxiety is further heightened here tonight by reports that Syria intends to honor immediately her mutual defense pact with Egypt. All these disturbing reports have come at the very climax of Israel's victorious fight against Egypt. The Israelis say tonight that practically the whole of the Sinai Peninsula and the whole of the Gaza Strip are in their hands, and that Egypt no longer has any effective forces in the field to the east of Suez. For this very reason some observers here find it hard to believe that Syria would take this moment to attack.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The United Press quotes Arab sources in Washington tonight as saying that Jordan and Syria have decided to declare war, and will send their troops into action soon. This report...so far..is unconfirmed.

The United States today prohibited American arms shipments to Israel. The ban also applies to Egypt. The State Department took the action "in pursuance of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly calling on member nations to refrain from introducing military goods in the area of hostilities." The development of new economic aid programs for Egypt and Israel has also been blocked by our government; so has the development of new aid programs for Syria and Jordan.

In Warsaw today, the Communist leadership issued a manifesto warning the Polish people not to stage anti-Russian demonstrations, or call for the withdrawal of Soviet troops. The warning came from the central committee of the Polish Communist Party. "Reactionary elements," it said, "are again raising their voices against the Polish Soviet alliance and against the presence of Soviet forces." The central committee said these demonstrations constitute "a grave danger." Poland, it said, whould not have the same kind of chaos as Hungary.

In East Germany, Premier Grotewohl also pointed to the "chaos" in Hungary and said the Russians have 22 divisions in East Germany "to protect the democratic work of our people."

Adlai Stevenson suggested today that Soviet forces may have been "emboldened to re-enter Hungary, due to what he called the "breakdown" of the Western alliance. Stevenson said..in a Cleveland speech.."The Communists have always been quick to exploit disunity in the free world."

Tonight, Vice President Nixon is making a nationwide speech...in reply to Stevenson's speech last night, attacking the Administration's foreign policy. Nixon told a Republican rally in Hershey, Pennsylvania today that Mr Eisenhower is "the best man in America" to lead the country in a time of international crisis.

It is only a slight over-simplification to say that what has happened in the last few days went something like this: Israel, Britain and France "reappraised", with what agony we do not know, American leadership of the free world. They decided it was not good enough, did not serve their national self-interests; so they decided to use force. President Eisenhower decided to let them stew in their own juice.

The difference in attitude about the Suez Canal can be easily summarized. For us, it is a convenience; for the British and French it is a condition of economic and national survival.

The primary intention of Russian policy for ten years has been to split the Western alliance; and now for the time being at least, it has at last been split without any substantial help from the Russians.

Our policy in the Middle East has been bewildering. We justified the contradictions by saying we were trying to preserve the peace. We did than any other nation to persuade the British to get out of Suez. That meant abandonment of a position of power. We refused to sell arms to Egypt. The Egyptians told us they would buy them from Russia. We apparently thought the Egyptians were bluffing, but they wern't . The deal was made, and Russia for the first time had a firm foothold in the Middle East.

The Israelis wanted to buy defensive arms to offset the threat of the Communist weapons bought by Egypt. We delayed and discussed. We encouraged the French, the Canadians and the British to sell a few obsolete aircraft and weapons to Israel. Either it was right or it was wrong- either it was in our national self- interest or it wasn't, to see to it that Israel was not driven to desperation by the lack of defensive weapons. We did not make up our mind, but rather tried to arrange for Israel to get a few weapons under the counter.

We tried to bribe the Egyptians not to join the Soviet camp, by promising to help build the Aswan Dam. Presumably we had figured the odds as to whether Nasser could carry out his end of the deal. Then we abruptly withdrew the offer. Both the offer and the withdrawal were political.

Nasser's answer was to seize the Suez Canal. Nasser's stature increased in the Arab World. We rejected the use of force, and insisted that the British and French renounce it too. That meant that in the negotiations that followed Nasser knew that force would not be used -- that he was safe in rejecting any attempt to restore international control of the Canal.

Mr. Dulles created the User's Association, which is already forgotten. The matter came to the Security Council -- we voted with the British and French for international control; but the Russians vetoed it. It was stalemate. We had gained no friends in the Middle East and had lost the firends we already had.

Now a word about what the British and French intend. They have announced that they want only a temporary occupation of the Canal Zone. Sir Anthony Eden stressed the word "temporary" in his statement in Parliament. They do not want to go all the way back to the time of permanent occupation. They want international control, as advocated in the resolution the Soviet Union vetoed in the Council. They want international control, as advocated in the resolution the Soviet Union vetoed in the Council. They want a guarantee that gypt will not be able to strangle their economies. They failed to get it following our lead. Now they are going their own way. Many Americans consider their methods and devices reprehensible, but we already have agreed to their objectiv..

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Communist leaders of Poland are anxious ..lest the anti-Communist revolution that swept Hunaary recur in their own land. Well they might be anxious. For as Sir Winston Churchill once remarked, "The soul of Poland is indestrubtible, and she will rise again like a rock which may for a time be submerged by a tidal wave, but which remains a rock."

Goodnight and good luck.

Collingwood for Murrow Mon., Nov. 5, 1956

Good evening:

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow has gone to the Middle East, and I shall be sitting in for him at this microphone while he is away. We shall have reports from him from time to time, and of course you will hear them on this program. He expects to be gone for about two weeks. He felt he had to go---it was too big a story to sit out in a broadcasting studio in New York.

The Anglo-French headquarters on Cyprus announced... about an hour ago... that the Egyptian garrison of Port Said had surrendered. Communique No. 24 stated, "The Egyptian troops have laid down their arms. A curfew is in force, and Egyptian police are functioning under Allied control." This announcement of the surrender of Port Said, to British and French parachute forces, came several hours after British Prime Minister Eden announced in the House of Commons that the Egyptian commander of Port Said had sued for terms... and that a cease-fire had been declared in the area. All afternoon, the Egyptian government had been denying that a surrender of the port city, at the northern terminus of the Suez Canal, was underway. Egyptian sources insisted the battle was not over. Now, just a few minutes ago, the British and French headquarters on Cyprus acknowledged that Port Said has not surrendered. It says... in another communique... that the Egyptians refused the surrender terms. And so, apparently, the battle for Port Said continues. British and French parachutists landed in the Suez Canal Zone today in two waves. Their commander acknowledges they ran into a "tough fight". So far, there is no official report of any landing in Egypt of ground forces. The amphibious task force is still somewhere off-shore.

Russia proposed today that American and Soviet air and naval forces be used jointly... under the United Nations... to stop the Middle East fighting.

27

~~United Nations... to stop the Middle East fighting.~~ Russia argued that American and Soviet forces, possessing all the most modern weapons, including the hydrogen bomb, could "guarantee" an end to the hostilities. The proposal was directed to the United Nations and to President Eisenhower. The Moscow radio said Premier Bulganin had told Mr. Eisenhower, in a personal message, "I expect a positive reply." It was proposed that the United States and Russia act jointly to stop "the aggressors" within 12 hours, or, roughly, by midnight tonight. Bulganin warned that the present conflict "contains the danger" of turning into World War Three. ~~So far,~~ there has been no reaction to this message from either the White House or the State Department. No formal reaction. Washington officials, however, make no secret of their coolness to the proposal. They point out that President Eisenhower has received no such message from Bulganin and that its publication, beforehand, by the Moscow radio shows the proposal up for what it is... an insincere communist maneuver.

~~Russia has asked for an urgent urgent meeting of the Security Council on the Middle East question. A council meeting scheduled for this afternoon~~

Tonight, Premier Bulganin sent ~~another~~ another round of messages to the British and French governments. Russia, he told them, is ready to join other members of the United Nations in sending naval and air forces to end the Anglo-French intervention in Egypt. The Bulganin message to the British and French ~~French~~ prime ministers ~~them~~ contained this paragraph, which we quote: "We are full of determination to crush the aggression and re-establish peace in the Middle East through the use of force. We hope," the paragraph continues, "that in this critical moment you will show due wisdom and draw the necessary conclusions." — a veiled threat, some thought, of intervention

~~Russia also [illegible] today to the Israeli government, announcing the recall from Tel Aviv [illegible] Russian ambassador.~~

4/6

The United States has [redacted] rejected the Soviet proposal. The White House issued a statement this afternoon, saying that before talking about a Middle East settlement, Russia has an obligation... first... to pull its forces out of Hungary. ~~This is a reference to the United Nations~~ resolution approved by the General Assembly last night by a vote of 50 to 8, with 15 abstentions. The resolution calls for the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Hungary, as well as for an end to armed attacks on the Hungarian people. It also asks Russia to let United Nations observers go into Hungary, to make an on-the-spot investigation. The Bulganin message... to President Eisenhower... was broadcast by the Moscow radio before it was received in Washington. This, according to Washington, [redacted] shows the proposal up for what it is---an insincere Communist maneuver. [redacted] ncil on the Middle East question. ~~A council meeting scheduled for this afternoon was not held. It was to have dealt with relations between Jordan and Israel, and had been arranged before the outbreak of hostilities, between Israel and Egypt.~~

Then... tonight... the White House issued a still stronger statement. It called Premier Bulganin's proposal "unthinkable". The Bulganin letter, it said, is " an obvious attempt to divert world attention from the Hungarian tragegy. It makes the unthinkable suggestion that the United States join with the Soviet Union in a bipartite employment of their military forces to stop the fighting in Egypt." The introduction of any new forces into Egypt under existing circumstances, the White House said tonight, "would violate the United Nations Charter, and it would be the duty of all United Nations members, including the United States, to oppose any such effort."

This afternoon, Russia asked for an urgent meeting of the Security Council on the Middle East question. The request was granted, and that meeting is due to start a few minutes from now---at 8 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. Russia, at this meeting, is expected to submit the proposal which the United States has already rejected in no uncertain terms.

73

Also) AN HOUR LATER, the United Nations General Assembly will meet in another emergency night session. The meeting was called to hear the British and French replies to the United Nations demand for a cease-fire in the Middle East. During the day, Britain and France filed a joint communication with Secretary General Hammarskjold, welcoming the idea of an international police force in the Middle East. But, at the same time, Britain and France made it plain that they would continue their present military action until Egypt and Israel also accept the U.N. police force proposal. That proposal was sponsored last night by Canada, Colombia and Norway... and approved, 57 to nothing. Nineteen countries abstained. Canada, New Zealand, Colombia, Norway and Pakistan already have promised to provide troops for the international police force. And Hammarskjold spent some time today talking to the representatives of other small powers, seeking further troop contributions. The United States... through Ambassador Lodge... has promised to help with supplies and transportation. Under the provisions of the resolution, none of the major powers is supposed to furnish troops.

In Hungary, rebel forces have defied the Russian ultimatum to lay down their arms. That ultimatum expired at noon, New York time. A rebel radio broadcast has been heard saying that revolutionary forces in the eighth district of Budapest "will fight to their last breath." And pockets of resistance are reported still holding out in other parts of the country. Another rebel broadcast said, "They have stood their ground with honor against the Russian troops." The situation is getting desperate, it said. "Little ammunition is left." The new government of Hungary... sponsored by Moscow.... promised the Hungarian people a new era of democracy, once order is restored. But it left no doubt that it meant democracy, Communist-style.

Hundreds of students... shouting "Freedom for Hungary!"... demonstrated today around the Soviet war memorial in West Berlin. The Russian memorial is only a hundred yards from the Soviet sector. It is inside the western sector, but Russian troops are allowed to stand continuous guard at the memorial as a matter of international courtesy. Today those Russian guards fingered their tommy-guns nervously as they heard the taunts of the demonstrators... but did not shoot. Earlier, the same students had appeared before British and French offices in West Berlin, denouncing "aggression against Egypt."

And there was a demonstration today in Moscow... a rare sight, but it was encouraged by the Russian authorities. Crowds made up mostly of young people appeared before the Israeli, British and French embassies, shouting pro-Egyptian slogans. CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr says no effort was made to break up the crowds because they help draw attention away from what is happening in Hungary.

The political campaign in this country in coming to an end. Tomorrow, more than 61-million Americans are expected to go to the polls. Eighty million are eligible to vote. President Eisenhower said today that however the election turns out, rejoicing should be limited because of the fate of freedom-loving peoples behind the Iron Curtain, and because of the threat [redacted] in Egypt to world peace. Adlai Stevenson will wind up his campaign tonight with a speech in Boston. [redacted] Earlier today... in a speech in Minneapolis... Stevenson accused President Eisenhower of "negligence on questions of war and peace." He said, "No one begrudges the President his recreation, but peace is a fulltime job."

think piece 5 november 1956

Let's return to politics for a moment. For the last few weeks I have been out and about in the country on an errand for CBS News -- investigating this nation's political state of mind in the days just before the election. I returned with masses of statistics and political lore, none of which, by the way, would lead me to challenge the consensus of political predictions. But tonight I don't want to talk about tomorrow night's winners. There'll be time enough for that after they're determined. Tonight I want to talk about the losers.

The dominant impression with which I have come back after talking to hundreds of candidates, leaders, party workers and voters is of the vitality of our political process. This is a year, we are told, which is colored by apathy and inertia. Perhaps so, in ideal terms, but wherever I went I found a multitude of men and women working long and diliegently for the party of their choice, most of them with nothing to gain but their concept of good government, and many of them without a chance in the world of seeing their party get in. In an election there can be only one winner for every job, but there wouldn't even be an election unless there was a loser for every winner.

This, then, is a piece for the losers, the also rans, the fighters who fought when they couldn't win.... I think of a Democratic County Chairman in inexorably Republican upstate New York who has labored in vain night and day and glows with pride when he says the automatic Republican majority in his county will be cut in half this year..... Of a Republican Congressional candidate in Democratic North Carolina who knows he won't win but counts it a triumph that he got his opponent on the same platform to debate with him..... Of a volunteer precinct worker who has striven in a district that has gone the other way since political statistics have been kept... These are people who work in politics without funds, without preferment, and without even the sweet afflatus of hope... Their cause is doomed, but they are the rich lifeblood of our democratic process.

For it is the essence of that process that there must always be a choice, there must always be an alternative. And that means that some will win and others must lose, but that the challenge is always kept alive no matter how dim the prospects of victory. The people who run for office and work for their side and argue their convictions even when they don't have a chance of success are what keep our politics healthy.

Therefore to all those aspirants who will be defeated tomorrow night for office high or low, to the unsuccessful candidates for Congress, mayor, surrogate, recorder of deeds, governor, assemblyman, school board, sheriff... and their supporters I say "All honor to you in your hour of defeat. You are what makes our democracy work."

... I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS..... BUT FIRST, HERE IS Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

Miss Anna Kethly, a member of the Hungarian government the Russians ~~ousted~~ deserted arrived in New York today. She is believed to be the only member of the Nagy government to escape to freedom. Miss Kethly was very tired. She said: " I don't want military assistance for Hungary. I want no more bloodshed. I have seen so much during the past ten days. But the Hungarian people must have hope that the United States will give us moral support."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, November 6, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This particular phase of this war is over. The Israelis control everything on this side of the canal. They aren't going anywhere else. At least not yet. The end came on a shirt-sleeve day, when people were bathing in the Mediterranean here at 7:00 o'clock this morning. And this afternoon a few Israeli troops were bathing in the Gulf of Aqaba, way down at the end of the Sinai Peninsula. They were mostly farmers and farmers' sons, called up under the reserve. In 48-hours they had started moving, one brigade, about 1800 men, across the desert to the Negev which is no bargain for track vehicles, and then they moved into the Sinai Desert. They had five days' supply of water. They had no armor at all. Just jeeps, four-by-fours and six-by-sixes - a few mortars. And the maps didn't tell them very much. That country is the most rugged I have ever seen. There was nothing like it in Korea. It all stands up on edge. There are no roads. They ~~climbed~~ traveled the wadis, the dry beds of streams cut by flash floods. The ...? colonel ? commanding had been a driver for the British 8th Army in the western desert in the late war. He cut the load from a six-by-sixes to two tons per vehicle. They hit sand dunes. And for 20-miles they had to push and pull the trucks by hand. They had one small-fire fight; lost four men killed. At one time a C-47 dropped them some gasoline. They ran short of water. They been a civilian a week before - but they had all had their 2½-yrs. of military service.

When they reached the dip of the peninsula, when the Egyptians had 6-inch naval guns covering the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, they had to come out of a ~~narrow wadi~~. The Egyptians were just starting to dig in, trying to put a stopper in the mouth of that narrow valley. The Israelis called for their air; it could operate unopposed because of the British and French destruction of Egyptian airfields. An Israeli pilot flying a Mystere Make (?) Four was hit by flak. He bailed out, started to run. The Egyptians were chasing him. Other Israeli fighters drove them off. And then a Pipe Cub came in and picked him up just (indistinct). And this afternoon, a brigade was formed on three sides of a hollow square. It was dusty and the flies were busy. On the fourth side of the square, stood a weapons' carrier, a nine foot bamboo pole lashed to the bumper. The blue-and-white Israeli flag was broken ? from that little pole. Moshe Dayan, Israel's Chief of Staff, made a littlespeech, standing on some ammunition boxes. He read a letter from Prime Minister Ben Gurion, giving the Israeli casualty figures: 150 killed, 700 wounded, and 20 taken prisoner by the Egyptians.

Down there at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula, there were no cheers, no demonstrations. Tne Israelis had been killed in this fantastic operation. There were about 700 Egyptian prisoners behind barbed wire and more coming in; those who had taken to the hills and came in when they were cold or thirsty.

That Israeli formation had traversed about 300-miles of desert. They were equipped with Bren guns, Sten guns, Italian machine guns, carbines, 45's. Some of them had tin helmets; some didn't. Some had stout leather boots; some wore sandals. Some were driving captured Egyptian vehicles, which are a lighter brown than the Israelis'. Someone from the Quartermaster Corps suggested that it would save tanks and money to paint all the Israeli vehicles the same color as the Egyptians'. There were no overt signs of emotion down there at the tip of the Peninsula today. The Gulf of Aqaba is now open to Israeli shipping. The 6-inch naval guns which controlled the entrance are silent. The farmers and their sons did it, a reserve outfit.

Men are not supposed to serve in the Reserve

here in Israel after the age of 45. But there were a lot of gray beards among those tired, dirty and unshaven men today. It was a little action. When I ventured to congratulate one of the officers on his small casualty list, he said "That will be small comfort for the mothers and fathers of those who were killed, both in Egypt and Israel."

We went down to film some of the Egyptian prisoners. An Israeli guard at the check point said "American tourists, already?" Those Israelis to whom I have talked today feel they have passed an examination. They thought their mobilization system was good. Now they know it is. It worked.

As for the future, they all say they just don't know. They have other frontiers that threaten. They are confident, but not cocky. Or at least so it seems to me. They don't pretend to know what the great powers will do. Out here the United Nations and the American elections seemed very far away indeed. The Israelis believe they have demonstrated to the Egyptians that murder does not pay. They have picked up a very considerable number of usable tanks and military stores.

It was a quick victory. Israeli casualties were almost unbelievably small. Most of the Israelis I have talked with today are inclined to think the other Arab States will not move, unless policy? probably stimulated and aided by Russia. But they have a victory. And they're not inclined to question the cause or the origins or the conflict. And are prepared to wait for the next move. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, November 6, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This particular phase of this war is over. The Israelis control everything on this side of the canal. They aren't going anywhere else. At least not yet. The end came on a shirt-sleeve day, when people were bathing in the Mediterranean here at 7:00 o'clock this morning. And this afternoon a few Israeli troops were bathing in the Gulf of Aqaba, way down at the end of the Sinai Peninsula. They were mostly farmers and farmers' sons, called up under the reserve. In 48-hours they had started moving, one brigade, about 1800 men, across the desert to the Negev which is no bargain for track vehicles, and then they moved into the Sinai Desert. They had five days' supply of water. They had no armor at all. Just jeeps, four-by-fours and six-by-sixes - a few mortars. And the maps didn't tell them very much. That country is the most rugged I have ever seen. There was nothing like it in Korea. It all stands up on edge. There are no roads. They climbed the wadis, the dry beds of streams cut by flash floods. The ...? commanding had been a driver for the British 8th Army in the western desert in the late war. He cut the load from a six-by-sixes to two tons per vehicle. They hit sand dunes. And for 20-miles they had to push and pull the trucks by hand. They had one small-fire fight; lost four men killed. At one time a C-47 dropped them some gasoline. They ran short of water. They been a civilian a week before - but they had all had their 2½-yrs. of military service.

When they reached the dip of the peninsula, when the Egyptians had 6-inch naval guns covering the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, they had to come out of a narrow wadi. The Egyptians were just starting to dig in, trying to put a stopper in the mouth of that narrow valley. The Israelis called for their air; it could operate unopposed because of the British and French destruction of Egyptian airfields. An Israeli pilot flying a Mystere Make (?) Four was hit by flak. He bailed out, started to run. The Egyptians were chasing him. Other Israeli fighters drove them off. And then a Pipe Cub came in and picked him up just (indistinct). And this afternoon, a brigade was formed on three sides of a hollow square. It was dusty and the flies were busy. On the fourth side of the square, stood a weapons' carrier, a nine foot bamboo pole lashed to the bumper. The blue-and-white Israeli flag was broken ? from that little pole. Moshe Dayan, Israel's Chief of Staff, made a littlespeech, standing on some ammunition boxes. He read a letter from Prime Minister Ben Gurion, giving the Israeli casualty figures: 150 killed, 700 wounded, and 20 taken prisoner by the Egyptians.

Down there at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula, there were no cheers, no demonstrations. Tne Israelis had been killed in this fantastic operation. There were about 700 Egyptian prisoners behind barbed wire and more coming in; those who had taken to the hills and came in when they were cold or thirsty.

That Israeli formation had traversed about 300-miles of desert. They were equipped with Bren guns, Sten guns, Italian machine guns, carbines, 45's. Some of them had tin helmets; some didn't. Some had stout leather boots; some wore sandals. Some were driving captured Egyptian vehicles, which are a lighter brown than the Israelis'. Someone from the Quartermaster Corps suggested that it would save tanks and money to paint all the Israeli vehicles the same color as the Egyptians'. There were no overt signs of emotion down there at the tip of the Peninsula today. The Gulf of Aqaba is now open to Israeli shipping. The 6-inch naval guns which controlled the entrance are silent. The farmers and their sons did it, a reserve outfit.

Men are not supposed to serve in the Reserve

here in Israel after the age of 45. But there were a lot of gray beards among those tired, dirty and unshaven men today. It was a little action. When I ventured to congratulate one of the officers on his small casualty list, he said "That will be small comfort for the mothers and fathers of those who were killed, both in Egypt and Israel."

We went down to film some of the Egyptian prisoners. An Israeli guard at the check point said "American tourists, already?" Those Israelis to whom I have talked today feel they have passed an examination. They thought their mobilization system was good. Now they know it is. It worked.

As for the future, they all say they just don't know. They have other frontiers that threaten. They are confident, but not cocky. Or at least so it seems to me. They don't pretend to know what the great powers will do. Out here the United Nations and the American elections seemed very far away indeed. The Israelis believe they have demonstrated to the Egyptians that murder does not pay. They have picked up a very considerable number of usable tanks and military stores.

It was a quick victory. Israeli casualties were almost unbelievably small. Most of the Israelis I have talked with today are inclined to think the other Arab States will not move, unless policy? probably stimulated and aided by Russia. But they have a victory. And they're not inclined to question the cause or the origins or the conflict. And are prepared to wait for the next move. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

-6 Nov 1956
51

MURROW TO CBS NY....
This is Tel Aviv....
This particular phase of this war is over.../...The Israelis controll everything on this side of the canal...They arent going anywhere else... at least not yet.//.The end came on a shirt sleeve day..when people were bathing in the Medditeranean here, at seven this morning...and this afternoon a few Israeli troops were bathing in the Gulf of Akaba...way down at the end of the Sinai Peninsula...They were mostly farmers and farmers sons..called up out of the reserve...In forty eight hours they had started moving...one brigade...about eighteen hundred men...across the desert of the Negev...which is no bargain for tracked vehicles...and then they moved into the Sinai Desert...they had five days supply of water. they had no armour at all...just jeeps...four by fours and six by sixes... ..a few mortars...the maps didnt tell them much...That country is the most rugged I have ever seen..there was nothing like it in Korea..It all stands on edge..there are no roads..they travelled the waddies..the dry beds of streams cut by flash floods.//.The Colonel commanding had been a driver for the eighth army in the western desert...he cut the loads on the six by sixes to two tons per vehicle...they hit sand dunes...and for twenty miles they had to push and pull the trucks..by hand...they had one small fire fight..lost four men killed...A C 47 dropped them some gas.... They ran short of water..[.They had been civilians a week before,but they had all had their two and a half years of military service.]..When they reached the tip of the peninsula...where the Egyptians had six inch naval guns covering the entrance to the Gulf Of Akaba,they had to come out of a narrow Waddy...The Egyptians were just starting to dig in..trying to put a stopper at the mouth of that narrow valley...The Israelis called for ~~their~~ their air..it could operate unoposed because of the British French destruction of Egyptian airfields...An Israeli pilot flying a Mistere mark four was hit by flack...bailed out...started to run..Egyptians were chasing him..other fighters drove them off...a piper cub came in and picked him up at last light.//.And this afternoon the brigade was formed on three sides of a hollow square...it was dusty..and the flies were busy... on the forth side of the square stood a weapons carrier..a nine foot bamboo pole lashed to the bumper...the blue and white Israeli flag was broken from that little pole...Moishe Dyan Israels chief of staff made a little speech..standing on some ammunition boxes..read a letter from Prime Minister Ben Gurion...There were no cheers..no demonstration...

150 killed - 700 wounded -
20 Israelis taken Prisoner by Egyptians

SCALL GEULELU
NUM. NO. II

C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1956

7:45:--8:00: P.M., E.S.T.

ELECTION NIGHT COVERAGE: EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS TIME SLOT INCLUDED THE FOLLOWING SPOT FROM ISRAEL:

This is Tel Aviv:

This particular phase of this war is over. The Israelis control everything on this side of the canal. They aren't going anywhere else. At least not yet. The end came on a shirt-sleeve day, when people were bathing in the Mediterranean here at 7:00 o'clock this morning. And this afternoon a few Israelis troops were bathing in the Gulf of Aqaba, way down at the end of the Sinai Peninsula. They were mostly farmers and farmers' sons, called up under the reserve. In 48-hours they had started moving, one brigade, about 1800 men, across the desert to the Negev which is no bargain for track vehicles, and then they moved into the Sinai Desert. They had five days' supply of water. They had no armor at all. Just jeeps, four-by-four and six-by-sixes - a few mortars. And the maps didn't tell them very much. That country is the most rugged I have ever seen. There was nothing like it in Korea. It all stands up on edge. There are no roads. They climbed (?) the wadis, and dry beds of streams cut by flash floods. The ...(?) commanding had been a driver for the British 8th Army in the western desert in the late war. He cut the load from a six-by- sixes to two tons per vehicle. They hit sand dunes. And for 10-miles they had to push and pull the trucks by hand. They had one small-fire fight; lost four men killed. At one time a C-47 dropped them some gasoline. They ran short of water. They been a civilian a week before but they had all had their 2½ years of military service.

When they reached the dip of the peninsula, when the Egyptians had 6- inch naval guns covering the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, they had to come out of a narrow wadi. The Egyptians were just starting to dig in, trying to put a stopper in the mouth of that narrow valley. The Israelis called for their air; it could operate unopposed because of the British and French destruction of Egyptian airfields. An Israeli pilot flying a Mystere Make Four (?) was hit by flak. He bailed out, started to run. The Egyptians were chasing him. Other Israeli fighters drove them off. And then a Pipe Cub came in and picked him up just (indistinct) . And this afternoon, a brigade was formed on three sides of a hollow square. It was dusty and the flies were busy. On the fourth side of the square, stood a weapons' carrier, a nine-foot bamboo pole lashed to the bumper. The blue-and-white Israeli flag was broken from that little pole. Moshe Dayan, Israel's Chief of Staff, made a little speech, standing on some ammunition boxes. He read a letter from Prime Minister Ben Gurion, giving the Israeli casualty figures: 150 killed, 700 wounded, and 20 taken prisoner by the Egyptians.

Down there at the tip of the Sinai Penninsula, there were no cheers, no demonstrations. The Israelis had been killed in this fastastic operation. There were about 700 Egyptian prisoners behind barbed wire and more coming in; those who had ' . . taken to the hills and came in when they were cold and thirsty

That Israeli formation had traversed a out 300 miles of desert. They were equipped with Bren guns, Sten guns, Italian Machine guns, carbines, 45's. Some of them had tin helmets; some didn't. Some had stout leather boots; some wore sandals. Some were driving captured Egyptian vehicles, which are a lighter brown than the Israelis'. Someone from the quartermasterCorps suggested that it would save tanks and money to paint all the Israeli vhhicles the same color as the Egyptians'. There were no overt signs of emotion down there at the rim of the Peninsula today. The Gulf of Aqaba is now open to Israeli shipping. The 6-inch naval guns which controlled the entrance are silent. The farmers and their sons did it, a reserve outfit.

Men are not supposed to serve in the Reserve here in Israel after the age of 45. But there were a lot of gray beards among those tired, dirty and unshaven men today. It was l little action. When I ventured to congratulate one of the officers on his small casualty list, he said "That will be small comfort for the mothers and fathers of those who were killed, both in Egypt and Israel."

We went down to film some of the Egyptian prisoners. An Israeli guard at the check point said "American tourists, already?" Those Israelis to whom I have talked today feel they have passed an examination. They thought their mobilization system was good. Now they know it is. It worked.

As for the future, they all say they just don't know. They have other frontiers that threaten. They are confident, but not cocky. Or at least so it seems to me. They don't pretend to know what the great powers will do. Out here the United Nations and the American elections seemed very far away indeed. The Israelis believe they have demonstrated to the Egyptians that murder does not pay. They have picked up a very considerable number of usable tanks and military stores.

It was a quick victory. Israeli causalties were almost unbelievably small. Most of the Israelis I have talked with today are inclined to think the other Arab states will not move, unless policy(?) probably stimulated and aided by Russia. But they have a victory. And they're not inclined to question the cause or the origins or the conflict. And are prepared to wait for the next move. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Nov. 7, 1956

Good evening:

For President Eisenhower, the day after re-election was a day devoted largely to dealing with world problems. One of his first actions was to summon congressional leaders... of both parties... to a meeting at the White House on Friday. News Secretary Hagerty said the President would review, with them, the serious international situation. At the present time, he said, Mr. Eisenhower has no plans to call a special session of Congress. For the next two years, of course, the President will be dealing with a Democratic Congress. That became certain this afternoon when Democratic Senator Alan Bible, of Nevada, won re-election over Republican Representative Clifton Young. The victory gave the Democrats their 49th seat and a clear majority in the Senate. They already had won a clear majority in the House. (Incidentally, only one Senate race remains in doubt---that in Kentucky between Democratic Senator Earle Clements and Thruston Morton. Late returns give ~~Clements~~ MORTON a small, inconclusive lead.

However Ohio's newly elected Democratic Senator Frank Lausche said some time ago that under certain circumstances he might vote with the Reps to organize the Senate. He hasn't said anything since election.

Tonight, President Eisenhower sent Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel an urgent appeal to pull Israeli troops out of Egypt. A brief White House statement said the President urged Ben Gurion "to act pursuant to the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations with respect to the prompt withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egyptian territory." Ben Gurion made a major policy speech today before the Israeli parliament and indicated that Israel intends to hold onto much, if not all, of the territory seized by Israeli forces last week. (We'll have a direct report on that from Tel Aviv in a few minutes).

Here in New York today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold told the General Assembly that Israel must withdraw its forces from Egypt, or face United Nations action. If, he said, Israel refuses to comply with the General Assembly resolution... requiring the withdrawal... it would then be his duty to bring the matter before the world organization "for such action as its members would decide upon." The General Assembly voted tonight to create an international police force for immediate use in the Middle East.

[redacted]

Egypt told the General Assembly today that the international police force... proposed for the battle area... is impracticable until British, French and Israeli forces get out of Egypt first. ~~"Nothing can be done," he said, "until the withdrawal is carried out."~~ [illegible] Egyptian position. ~~Hammarskjold pressed for quick action on creation of a United Nations police force...~~ Hammarskjold — and said negotiations with British, French and Egyptian authorities to arrange for the stationing of such a force in the Middle East, are underway. Two Russian satellite countries... Roumania and Czechoslovakia... offered today to contribute troops, making 12 nations that have offered to participate so far.

Today... in the British House of Commons... Prime Minister Eden refused to say whether British troops would leave Egypt, if the U.N. refuses to grant them participation in the police force. ~~Eden admitted that there had been "some shooting" in Port Said during the day, but minimized the action. He insisted that the cease-fire... ordered by Britain~~

~~and France... is still in force. A late eyewitness dispatch from Port Said speaks of Egyptian snipers and "occasional" bursts of gunfire from B~~ The Egyptian government insists that "heavy fighting" is in progress in Port Said... and it denies that Anglo-French forces have captured the city of Ismailia, situated on the Suez Canal about 50 miles south of Port Said. The capture of Ismailia was claimed last night by a French defense ministry spokesman in Paris. Indications are that the report may have been premature. It appears certain that French and British troops have advanced at least 30 miles southward along the canal.

The Cairo radio claimed tonight that British oil reservoirs have been blown up in Libya. There is no confirmation of this report.

~~In Indonesia... in the capital city of Jakarta... angry mobs ripped down the flags from the British and French embassies in protest against the Anglo-French invasion.~~

~~At the United Nations, a meeting of the general Assembly to take up the Hungarian question was postponed.~~

Russian troops are still meeting resistance in Hungary, four days after the Red Army launched its all-out drive to put down the rebellion by brute force. Reports reaching Vienna say the Russians conducted their heaviest shelling of Budapest last night, and that civilian casualties were "very heavy". One rebel strongpoint... still holding out... is reported to be the Killian barracks, which survived continuous Communist attack two weeks ago. The barracks is now described as "a virtual rubble", defended by women as well as men.

In Paris today, a mob... singing the "Marseillaise"... stormed the Communist Party headquarters and set it on fire. The crowd, which had been demonstrating at the Arch of Triumph against Soviet oppression in Hungary, suddenly swept toward the party headquarters, broke through a barrier of steel-helmeted police, and began running through the building in a scene reminiscent of the French Revolution, smashing everything in sight. Finally they set the wrecked furniture and scattered papers on fire. The firemen of Paris, it was noted, seemed in no hurry to put out the flames. And the damage was considerable.

Soviet Premier Bulganin sent India a note today on the Hungarian situation. The Indian government quotes Bulganin as saying that Russia will negotiate the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary ~~him~~ "when peace and order are restored." The note was in reply to an earlier message from Prime Minister Nehru expressing India's deep concern.

Moscow celebrated the anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution today with a military parade in Red Square. Western observers say no new weapons were displayed, and bad weather prevented participation by the Red air force. The Kremlin held a reception tonight... in honor of the anniversary... but CBS News Correspondent Dahiel Schorr reports that it was boycotted by many diplomats in protest against Russia's intervention in Hungary.

We have another report tonight from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv... also a report from Winston Burdett on that speech Prime Minister Ben Gurion made today before the Israeli parliament. So... for both those stories... we switch by recording now to Tel Aviv.

(Tape runs 5:45
Ends on cue: "--to CBS News in NY."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news
But first here is George Bryan

FOOTNOTE

The news we have been hearing tonight -- of fighting still going on in Hungary, more tension in the Middle East, hardly veiled threats and defiance -- this news is heard in Norway as well as here. Today the Nobel Prize committee announced in Norway that it had found no one worthy of receiving the Nobel Peace Prize this year. This is the second straight year in which no prize for peace seemed appropriate.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Wednesday, November 7, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Reporting from Israel these days means trying to say what you see. The big world is a big picture far away. In the course of this day's travels, no one asked about the Presidential election at home. Only the immediate is important over here. This morning, at a kibutz, a collective farm, right on the edge of what used to be the Gaza Strip, a youngster named Ori? was a little dazed by what had happened. It would no longer be necessary to man the watch towers every night. They could pull up the barbed wire and cultivate the perimeter around the buildings. They could become farmers and not part-time soldiers. And he said "It is so quiet." His cows, he said, hadn't minded the shelling last week - but the people had. He looked across at the hill in front of Gaza - Allenby had lost 10,000 British and Australian troops on that ridge in the first world war. Ori thought he would like to go to Gaza with us. So he did. Crossing the fertile little valley, there was no trouble. A couple of trucks blown up by a land mine. And the Israelis took the town last Friday. It is intact. I have never seen a city taken in war where there was so little damage. A few pock marks on walls from small arms fire, a few windows knocked out. A little bombing around the railway station. That was all. And at the railway station the reason for this cheap victory was apparent. The trucks were coming in with captured Egyptian equipment, rifles, machine guns, boxes of ammunition, land mines, mortars, a couple of British six pounders. None of the guns I saw had been damaged or destroyed. The Egyptians had just run away. There were helmets and shows, blankets and hand grenades, rifles and rations, jeeps with Egyptian markings on them. We saw a blood-red Oldsmobile, with Egyptian plates, driven by young smiling Israelis. Then came a Russian truck towed by an American jeep.

The booty was being unloaded by prisoners. Most of them had no shoes. They were glum and sullen, as prisoners always are. Not one wore even the remnants of a military uniform. Were they Egyptian officers in disguise or commando raiders? No one knew. Interrogation had not been completed. Meanwhile they worked. Were fed with Egyptian army rations captured by the Israelis.

We want to see the military governor of Gaza. He said his main job was the old one of any military governor, to restore order, medical facilities and work with the local authorities. Some of the local police, who had been there under the Egyptians, are back on the job, in a uniform. There is a curfew which comes down at 4:00 O'clock in the evening. About dusk the trucks start coming into town, loaded with Arabs. They're searched, provided with Egyptian army field rations, and the interrogation begins. It isn't comfortable for them. No one likes to stand with his hands over his head. But I saw no brutality, no one prodded with a bayonet, or clubbed on with a rifle butt. So far, about 2,000 Arabs have been brought into Gaza, most of them of military age. A few had been found to have small arms on their persons. They'll be held for further questioning.

So far as I could observe today in Gaza, the Israeli are determined to do what they can to avoid the outward signs of old fashioned imperialism. And then this afternoon, the Israelis did something which is difficult to understand. They literally beat down the doors of the United Nations truce observer's organization and took over the communication system. This means that the UN relief organization, responsible for feeding almost 300,000 Arab refugees from Palestine, now in Gaza, is without communication with the outside world. The director of UNRRA told me this afternoon that there is enough food on hand for another month. But he couldn't see why the Israeli forces had cut his communication link with the outside world. Now, here is Winston Burdett, who can tell you more of what Israel proposes to do about the rest of the world.

BURDETT: Prime Minister Ben Gurion made his victory speech today before the Israeli Parliament, and gave a very clear indication of Israel's long-term aims. In effect, Ben Gurion answered and rejected the major points of the United Nations General Assembly resolution. He denounced the armistice agreement with Egypt, said it was dead and buried, and that consequently, the armistice lines between Israel and Egypt are no longer valid. This means that Israel has no intention of pulling her forces back behind those lines as the Assembly requested. Secondly, Ben Gurion (indistinct) that Israel intends to hold permanently some of the territory she has conquered. He did not say what territory, but it's certain he means the entire Gaza Strip and presumably a sizeable part of the Sinai Peninsula. Thirdly, Ben Gurion made clear that Israel is unwilling to accept an international police force either on her own territory or on the territory she holds. ~~and~~ On no account, he said, will Israel agree to stationing there of a foreign force no matter how it is called. These were his terms, the terms of a victor who is confident that he's bargaining from strength.

Andnow back to CBS News in New York.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good Evening:

For President Eisenhower, the day after re-election was a day devoted largely to dealing with world problems. One of his first actions was to summon congressional leaders..of both parties..to a meeting at the White House on Friday. News Secretary Hagerty said the President would review , with them, the serious international situation. At the present time, he said, Mr. Eisenhower has no plans to call a special session of Congress. For the next two years, of course, the President will be dealing with a Democratic Congress. That became certain this afternoon when Democratic Senator Alan Bible, of Nevada, won re-election over Republican Representative Clifton Young. The victory gave Democrats their 49th seat and a clear majority in the Senate. However Ohio's newly elected Democratic Senator Frank Laushhe said some time ago that under certain conditions circumstances he might voted with the Republican to organize the Senate. He hasn't said anything since election. They already had won a clear majority in the House. (Incidentally, only one Senate race remains in doubt---that in Kentucky between Democratic Senator Earle Clements and Thurston Morton. Late returns give Morton a small, inconclusive lead.

Tonight, President Eisenhower sent Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel an uegent appeal to pull Israeli troopsout of Egypt. A brief White House statement siad the President urged Ben Gurion "to act pursuant to the resulution of the General Assembly of the United Nations with respect to the prompt withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egyptian territory."

Ben Gurion made a major policy speech today before the Israeli parliament and indicated that Israel intends to hold onto much, if not all, of the territory seized by Israeli forces last week. (We'll have a direct report on that from Tel Aviv in a few minutes.)

Here in New York today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold told the General Assembly that Israel must withdraw its forces from Egypt, or face United Nations action. If, he said, Israel refuses to comply with the General Assembly resolution..requiring the withdrawal..it would then be his duty to bring the matter before the world organization "for such action as its members would decide upon." The General Assembly voted tonight to create on international police force for immidiate use in the Middle East.

Egypt told the General Assembly today that the international police force.. proposed for the battle area..is impracticable until British, French and Israeli forces get out of Egypt first.

Hammarskjol said negotiations with British, French and Egyptian authorities to arrange for the stationing of such a force in the Middle East are underway. Two Russian satellite countries...Roumania and Czechoslovakia.. offered today to contribute troops, making 12 nations that have offered to participate so far.

Today...in the British House of Commons..Prime Minister Eden refused to say whether British troops would leave Egypt , if the U.N. refuses to grant them participation in the police force.

The Egyptian government insists that "heavy fighting" is in progress in Port Said..and it denies that Anglo-French forces have captured the city of Ismalia , situated on the Suez Canal about 50 miles south of Port Said. The capture of Ismalia was climed last night by a French defense ministry spokesman in Paris. Indications are that the report may have been premature. It appears certain that French and British troops have advanced at least 30 miles southward along the Canal.

The Cairo radio claimed tonight that British oil reservoirs have been blown up in Libya. There is no confirmation of this report.

Russian troops are still meeting resistance in Hungary, four days after the Red Army launched its all-out drive to put down the rebellion by brute force. Reports reaching Vienna say the Russians conducted their heaviest shelling of Budapest last night and that civilian casualties were "very heavy" One revel strongpoint...still holding out..is reported to be the Killian barracks, which survived continuous Communist attack two weeks ago. The barracks is now described as " a virtual rubble.", defended by women, as well as men.

In Paris today, a mob...singing the "Marsellaise."...stormed the Communist Party headquarters and set it on fire. The crowd, which had been demonstrating at the Arch of Triumph against Soviet oppression in Hungary, suddenly swept toward the part headquarters, broke through a barrier of steel-helmeted police and began running through the buildin in a scene reminiscent of the French Revolution, smashing everything in sight. Finally they set the wrecked furniture and scattered papers on fire. The firemen of Paris, it was noted, seemed in no hurry to put out the flames and the damage was considerable.

Moscow celebrated the anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution today with a military parade in Red Square. Western obserbers say no new weapons were displayed, and bad weather prevented participation by the Red Air Force. The Kremlin held a reception tonight..in honor of the anniversary...but CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr reports that it was boycotted by many diplomats in protest against Russia's intervention in Hungary.

We have another report tonight from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv...also a report from Winston Burdett on hat speech Prime Minister Ben Gurion made today before the Israeli parliament. So ...for both those stories, we switch by recording now to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Reporting from Israel these days means trying to say what you see. The big world is a big picture far away. In the course of this day's travels, no one asked about the Presidential election at home. Only the immediate is important over here. This morning, at a kibutz, a collecive farm, right on the edge of what used to be the Gaza Strip, a youngster named Ori (?) was a little dazed by what had happened. It would no longer be necessary to man the watch towers every night. They could pull up the barbed wire and cultivate the perimeter around the buildings. They could become farmers and not part-time soldiers. And he said "It is so quiet". His cows, he said, hand't minded the shelling last week - but the people had. He looked across at the hill in front of the Gaza -- Allenby had lost 10,000 British and Australian troops on that ridge in the first world war. Ori thought he would like to go to Gaza with us. So he did. Crossing the fert le little valley, there was no trouble. A couple of trucks blown up by a land mine. And the Israelis took the town last Friday. It is intact. I havenever seen a city taken in war where there was so little damage. A few pock marks on walls from small arms fire, a few windows knocked out. A little bombing around the railway station. That was all. And at the railway station the reason for this cheap victory was apparent. The trucks were coming in with captured Egyptian equipment, rifles, machine guns, boxes of ammunition, land mines, mortars, a couple of British six- pounders. None of the guns I saw had been damaged or destroyed. The Egyptians had just run away. There were helmets and shows, blankets and hand grenades, rifles and rations, jeeps with Egyptian markings on them. We saw a blood-red Oldsmobile, with Egyptian plates, driven by young smiling Israelis. Then came a Russian truck towed by an American jeep. The booty was being unloaded by prisoners. Most of them had no shoes. They were glum and sullen, as prisoners always are. Not one wore even the remnants of a military uniform. Were they Egyptian officers in disguise or commando raiders? No one knew.

Interrogation had not been completed. Meanwhile they worked. Were fed with Egyptian army rations captured by the Israelis.

We want to see the military governor of Gaza. He said his main job was the old one of any military governor, to restore order, medical facilities and work with the local authoritie.. Some of the local police, who had been there under the Egyptians, are back on the job, in a uniform. There is a curfew which comes down at 4:00 o'clock in the evening. About dusk the trucks start coming into town, loaded with Arabs. They're searched, provided with Egyptian army field rations, and the interrogation begins. It isn't comfortable for them. No one likes to stand with his hands over his head. But I saw no brutality, no one prodded with a bayonet, or clubbed on with a rifle butt. So far, about 2,000 Arabs have been brought into Gaza, most of them of military age. A few had been found to have small arms on their persons. They'll be held for further questioning.

So far as I could observe today in Gaza, the Israeli are determined to do what they can to a void the outward signs of old fashioned imperialism. And then this afternoon, the Israelis did something which is difficult to understand. They literally beat down the doors of the United Nations truce observer's organization and took over the communication system. This means that the UN relief organization, responsible for feeding almost 300,000 Arab refugees from Palestine, now in Gaza, is without communication with the outside world. The director of UNRAA told me this afternoon that there is enough foon on hand for another onth. But he couldn't see why the Israeli forces had cut his communication wink with the outside world. Now, here is Winston Burdett, who can tell you more of what Israel proposed to do about the rest of the world.

BURDETT: Prime Minister Ben Gurion made his victory speech today before the Israeli Parliament, and gave a very clear indication of Israel's long-term aims. In effect, Ben Gurion answered and rejected the major points of the United Nations General Assembly resolution. He denounced the armistice agreemen with Egypt, said it was dead and buried, and that consequently, the armistice lines between Israel and Egypt are no longer valid. This means that Israel has no intention of pulling her forces back behind those lines as the Assembly c requested. Secondly, Ben Gurion, (indistinct) that Israel intends to hold permanently some of the territory she has conquered. He did not say what territory, but it's certain he means the entire Gaza Strip and presumably a sizeable part of the Sinai Peninsula. Thirdly, Ben Gurion made clear that Israel is unwilling to accept an international police force either on her own territory or on the territory she holds. On no account, he said, will Israel agree to stationing there of a foreign force no matter how it is called. These were his terms, the terms of a victor who is onfident what he's bargaining from strength.

And now back to CBS News in New York.

COLLINGWOOD. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN.

COLLINGWOOD: The news we have been hearing tonight--of fighting still going on in Hungary, more tension in the Middle East, hardly veiled threats and defiance -- this news is heard in Norway as well as here. Today the Nobel Prize committee announced in Norway that it had found no one worthy of receiving the Nobel Peace Prize this year. This is the second striaght year in which no prize for peace seemed appropriate.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Nov. 8, 1956

Good evening:

Israel announced tonight that it will evacuate its forces from Egypt in compliance with the United Nations resolution calling for the withdrawal from Egyptian territory of all British, French and Israeli troops. The announcement was made... simultaneously... by the Israeli delegation at the United Nations and by the Israeli prime minister, David Ben Gurion, while speaking before the Israeli parliament. Edward R. Murrow heard the Ben Gurion speech, and here are Ed Murrow's impressions as he recorded them an hour ago.

(Tape runs one minute, ends on cue: "---of the Soviet Union."

~~Here is the text of the Israeli statement, as released at the~~ U.N.

~~"Ambassador Abba Eban," it said, "is transmitting to the secretary-general a letter from Foreign Minister Golda Meir, containing an undertaking for~~

Prime Minister Ben Gurion sent a letter to President Eisenhower on the Israeli decision. The President, you remember, had appealed to Israel to withdraw her troops. In his message to the President, Ben Gurion says, "We have never planned to annex the Sinai Desert. In view of the United Nations resolutions regarding the withdrawal of foreign troops from Egypt, we will---upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with this international force entering the Suez Canal area---willingly withdraw our forces." The Israeli prime minister goes on to say, "We must repeat our urgent request to the United Nations to call upon Egypt (which has consistently maintained that it is in a state of war with Israel) to renounce this position, to abandon its policy of boycott and blockade, to cease the incursions into Israeli territory of murder gangs, and to enter into direct peace negotiations with Israel." White House News Secretary Hagerty says Mr. Eisenhower will send a reply to the Israeli prime minister, expressing his appreciation for what has been done.

~~the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt and cooperation to that end~~ with the projected United Nations force about ~~to~~ be dispatched to Egypt." This is, of course, a reference to the so-called United Nations ~~"police force" which was authorized by the General Assembly last night.~~

The United Nations truce supervisor... General Burns... arrived in Cairo today to set up arrangements for stationing the U.N. police force on Egyptian territory. Burns talked with President Nasser and other high officials of the Egyptian government, and told reporters that Egypt had agreed to let a group of 10 United Nations cease-fire observers set up a headquarters in Egypt. Burns said he expected these observers, who will serve as the vanguard of the United Nations police force, to arrive in Egypt within the next 48 hours. Some of them, he said, will be stationed in Port Said, which British and French troops captured on Monday. Burns, incidentally, arrived in Egypt early this morning aboard the first overseas flight to land at Cairo Airport in 10 days. The Associated Press reports that Port Said was quiet today for the time time since it was captured.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd is reported to have told Conservative members of parliament that Britain is now willing to withdraw her forces from Egypt when the U.N. police force takes over. However, until then, Prime Minister Eden reiterated tonight, Britain and France "must go on with the job."

British colonial secretary...Lennox-Boyd... has hinted that Great Britain had a secret reason for intervening in Egypt. "When the whole story unfolds," he said, "there will be widespread recognition that the United Kingdom, as the center of the Commonwealth, was right to take the action it did." But another member of the Conservative Government resigned today in disagreement with the British action. He was Sir Edward Boyle, economic secretary to the Treasury. Minister of State Anthony Nutting resigned for the same reason on Saturday.

Tonight, the House of Commons gave the Conservative Government another vote of confidence. Prime Minister Eden won the test by a margin of 58 votes.

There is a rather alarming report tonight from Paris. Dispatches from THERE are quoting the French foreign minister... Christian Pineau... as saying that Russia has sent "an important formation" of military aircraft into Syria. These planes are identified as Mig-17 jet fighters.

Soviet Premier Bulganin has sent a message to President Eisenhower, rejecting Mr. Eisenhower's proposal that [redacted] Russian troops get out of Hungary. Bulganin said... bluntly... that the question of Soviet troop withdrawals is solely a matter between Russia and Hungary.

[redacted]

Tonight, President Eisenhower ordered the cutting of "red tape", so that 5-thousand Hungarian refugees may be admitted to this country.

In the United Nations [redacted] today, the General Assembly argued the Hungarian question. And, SIGNIFICANTLY [redacted] Yugoslavia joined the non-Communist countries in demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. The Yugoslav delegate said, "The Hungarian people are capable of solving their own problem." He did not, however, support the resolution calling for a United Nations investigation of the situation in Hungary.

"The less interference from whatever source," he said, "the better it is for the Hungarian people and the people of the world." Yugoslavia steered a middle course in today's General Assembly debate. The delegate from Hungary protested that the situation is none of the Assembly's business. He said he was "compelled" to make the protest on instructions from Budapest. Denmark promptly challenged his right to represent the Hungarian people, and the question was referred to the Assembly's credentials committee. Cuba accused Russia of committing genocide, in what he called the "assassination" of thousands of Hungarians at the hands of Soviet troops. And there is a report tonight that Secretary Genl Hammarskjold is going ahead with plans for investigating the Hungarian situation.

The Republican, Thruston Morton, appears to have won that close senatorial race in Kentucky. Latest returns show Morton leading Democratic Senator Earle Clements by 4-thousand, 500 votes. His apparent victory (less than a hundred precincts have still to report) means the Republicans now have 47 seats in the new Senate and the Democrats 49 seats. Democratic Governor Lausche of Ohio, who won election to the Senate, indicated some time ago that he might vote with the Republicans in organizing the Senate---he's quite an independent. That would mean a tie, with Vice President Nixon casting the deciding vote in favor of the Republicans. It would, in other words, give the Republicans control of the Senate. But now this appears highly unlikely. Lausche indicated today that he will stay on the job as governor of Ohio until his term expires. That won't be until January 14th. And, by that time, the organization of the Senate will have been completed. Barring unexpected developments, the Democrats will be in control.

A Navy balloon... manned by two scientists... set an altitude record today of 76-thousand feet. And them, more than 14 miles above the earth's surface, something went wrong and the balloon spun out of control. It began plummeting to earth. The two Navy scientists worked desperately to restore control, without success. Finally, at the last possible moment, they cut their pressurized gondola free from the big plastic bag and floated down in the gondola by means of a huge parachute. Neither of them was hurt. They had made the ascent FROM Rapid City, South Dakota. And they came down on a Nebraska farm, 140 miles from where they started.

In North Bergen, New Jersey, a twin-engine plane crashed into an UNUSED television tower, killing SEVEN persons, including the pilot AND CO-PILOT. After striking the 810-foot tower, the aircraft plunged into a five-story apartment house, shearing off the two top floors and setting it on fire. The plane was flying in heavy fog.

Earlier today... before the Ben Gurion announcement... Ed Murrow recorded another report for us from Tel Aviv, and here is that report now.

Tape runs 3:40
Ends on cue: "This is Ed Murrow
in Tel Aviv."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news

But first, Here is George Bryan

FOOTNOTE

As you know, Eire is one of the newest members of the United Nations and today the first Irish delegation to the General Assembly took off for New York. It is led by Liam Cosgrave, the Irish Minister of External Affairs. He said" We hope to play a constructive role... but not to be a pawn of any of the big delegations." ... No one who knows the Irish would think for a moment that they would be thepawn of anyone.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU LATER

Murrow to CBS....

This is Tel Aviv...

As viewed from this small piece of real estate...about the size of New Jersey...the rest of the world is pretty confused and divided... Here there is uncertainty about the future, but victory is a strong cement.. and there is no division or bickering in this little country. The western alliance has been dealt a blow which may or may not prove mortal..There is biterness between Washington on the one hand, and London and Paris on the other..then there is bickering between London and Paris. The British Commonwealth is divided as never before...The Russian Empire has shown signs of coming apart in Poland and Hungary...Old wounds have been opened in both east and west...nationalism and frustration and history have combined, to leave the free world divided,leaderless and confused... Contradictions in policy have become commonplace...Resoluteness has been replaced by hesitation and vacillation...The Unity of the west may be in some measure restored...for our common objectives outweigh our differences ...but it will never be the same. The Russians ,with terror,torture,and sheer weight of men and metal..may be able to hold their satelites in line...but their empire will never again be the same. Add to this the fact that recent events have demonstrated out here...Namely that the so called unity of the Arab world is a myth...Nassers neighbours didnt come to his aid...Add all these events together and you have a world situation which is more fluid and therefore more dangerous than at any time in the past ten years...It is a time for bluffing, and for maneuvre...also a time for leadership...The hard fact...the stubborn one that must be faced..and wont go away..is that the leadership in Russia.. in the west..and in the Arab world just hasnt worked..no one of them has achieved its objective..This means presumably that all will try again.. It may mean a wider realization that this planet may not long exist without an agreed body of international law and the means of enforcing it.. So far as the Israelis are concerned they appear determined to hold what they have, untill some general settlement has been made in this area...They think they have calculated the risks. There are elements of four arab armys now in Jordan ..and last night groups of terrorists were active along the Israeli border.. No Israeli casualties..but there are certainly enough Arab troops in that country to see to it that these provocations ceas..if they wanted them stopped...

מדינת ישראל
ארכיון מס' 11
מנהל לעתונות

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Thursday, November 8, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: I understand no Hebrew, but I listened carefully to Ben Gurion's speech tonight - it is a voice that I know well. He was a man who was obviously, tired, weary, depressed and infinitely sad. And as I listened to him, I watched the faces of Israelis who were listening to his speech, and suddenly it occurred to me that I had seen faces like that before - some Czechoslovakian friends of mine at the time of Munich. The world may be somewhat relieved at what has happened here, but the Israelis will suffer two hammer blows tomorrow morning. One, the announcement of the withdrawal and, two, the information that the United States does not choose to contribute to the United Nations police force. One thing is now clear, and that is that unless the United Nations does in fact develop an effective police force then the Middle East will come increasingly under the domination of the Soviet Union.

* * * * * * * *

As viewed from this small piece of real estate, about the size of New Jersey, the rest of the world is pretty confused and divided. Here there is uncertainty about the future, but victory is a strong cement. And there is no division or victory near this little country. The Western Alliance had been dealt a blow which may or may not prove mortal. There is bitterness between Washington on the one hand and London and Paris on the other. Then there is bickering between London and Paris. The British Commonwealth is divided as never before. The Russian empire has shown signs of coming apart in Poland and Hungary. Old wounds have opened in both east and west. Nationalism and frustration and history have combined to leave the free world divided, leaderless and confused. Contradictions in policy have become commonplace.

Resoluteness has been replaced by hesitation and vacillation. The unity of the West may be in some measure restored, for our common objectives outweigh our differences. But it will never be the same again. The Russians, with terror, torture and sheer weight of men and metal, may be able to hold their satellites in line. But their empire will never again be the same.

Add to this fact that recent events have demonstrated out here, namely, that the so-called unity of the Arab world is a myth. Nasser's neighbors did not come to his aid. Add all these events together and you have a world situation which is more fluid and therefore more dangerous than at any time in the past ten years. It is a time for bluffing and for maneuver. Also a time for leadership. The hard fact is a stubborn one that must be faced and won't go away, it is that the leadership in Russia, in the West and in the Arab world just has not worked. No one of them has achieved its objective. This means, presumably, that all will try again. It may mean a wider realization that this (indistinct(may not long exist without an agreed body of international law, and the means of enforcing it. There are elements of four Arab armies now in Jordan. And last night groups of terrorists were active along the Israeli border. No Israeli casualties. But there are certainly enough Arab troops in that country to see to it that these provocations cease - if they wanted them stopped. Apparently, one of Israel's most respected military figures is lost. Col. E. ...?, who led the Sinai campaign in the field, took off for (indistinct) in a Piper Cub. Is reported ... is unreported and presumed lost. A Jordan communique last night claimed the shooting down of a Cub by Jordanian anti-aircraft.

The Israeli government tonight released an Egyptian military document, which it says, was captured in a file of the Egyptian general at Gaza. It says - among other things - that every officer must prepare himself and his subordinates for the inevitable war with Israel, "with the object of realizing our noble aim, namely, the annihilation of Israel and her destruction, in the shortest possible time, and in the most brutal and cruel battle." This document is marked "Top Secret," which is rather unusual, inasmuch as Col. Nasser has said substantially the same thing in public.

Military logic indicates that the Arab States will not attack across the Jordanian frontier. But logic, military or otherwise, seems to be in short supply in vast areas of the world.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good Evening:

Israel announced tonight that it will evacuate its forces from Egypt in compliance with the United Nations resolution calling for the withdrawal from Egyptian territory of all British, French and Israeli troops. The announcement was made...simultaniously..by the Israeli delegation at the United Nation and by the Israeli prime minister, David Ben Grrion, while speaking before the Israeli Parliament. Edward R. Murrow who is in Tel Aviv, heard the Ben Gurion speech. U.N. Secretary General Hammarskjold said "We have arrived at a point where a new phase should begin. Here are Ed Murrow's impressions as he recorded them an hour ago.

MURROW: I understand no Hebrew, but I listened carefully to Ben Gurion's speech tonight -- it is a voice that I know well. He was a man who was obviously, tired, weary, depressed and infinitely sad. And as I listened to him, I watched the faces of Israelis who were listening to his speech, and suddenly it occurred to me that I had seen faces like that before -- some Czechoslovakian friends of mine at the time of Munich. The world may be somewhat relieved at what has happened here, but the Israelis will suffer two hammer blows tomorrow morning. One, the announcement of the withdrawal and, two, the information that the United States does not choose to contribute to the United Nations police force. One thing is now clear, and that is that unless the United Nations does in fact develop an effective police force then the Middle East will come increasingly under the domination of the Soviet Union.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion sent a letter to President Eisenhower on the Israeli decision. The President, you remember, had appealed to Israel to withdraw her troops. In his message to the President, Ben Gurion says, "We have never planned to annex the Sinai Desert. In view of the United Nations resolutions regarding the withdrawal of foreign troops from Egypt, we will-- upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with this international force entering the Suez Canal area -- willingly withdraw our forces. The Israeli prime ninister goes on to say, "We must repeat our urgent request to the United Nations to call upon Egypt (which has consistently maintained that it is in a state of war with Israel) to renounce this position, to abandon its policy of boycott and blockade, to cease the incursions into Israeli territory of murder gangs, and to enter into direct peace negotiations with Israel." White House News Secretary Hagerty says Mr. Eisenhower will send a reply to the Israeli prime minister, expressing his appreciation for what has been done.

The United Nations truce supervisor..General Burns..arrived in Cairo today to set up arrangements for stationing the U.N. police force on Egyptian territory. Burns talked with Presedent Nasser and other high officials of the Egyptian government and told reporters that Egypt had agreed to let a group of 10 United Nations cease-fire observers set up a headquarters in Egypt. Burns said he expected these observers, who will serve as the vanguard of the United Nations police force, to arrive in Egypt within the next 48 hours. Some of them, he said, will be stationed in Port Said, which British and French troops captured on Monday. Burns, incidentally, arrived in Egypt early this morning aboard the first overseas flight to land at Cairo Airport in 10 days. The Associated Press reports that Port Said was quiet today for the first time since it was captured.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd is reported to have told conservative members of parliament that Britain is now willing to withdraw her forces from Egypt when the U.N. police force takes over. However, until then, Prime Minister Eden reiterated tonight, Britain and France "must go on with the job." British colonial secretary..Lennox-Boyd has hinted that Great Britain had a secret reason for intervening in Egypt. "When the w hole story unfolds," he said, "there will be widespread recognition that the United Kingdom, as the center of the Commonwealth, was right to take the action it did. " But another member of the conservative Government resigned today in disagreement with the British action. He was Sir Edward Boyle, economic secretary to the Treasury. Minister of State Anthony Nutting resigned for the same reason on Saturday.

Tonight, the House of Commons gave the Conservative Government another vote of confidence. Prime Minister Eden won the test by a margin of 58 votes.

There is a rather alarming report tonight from Paris. Dispatches from there are quoting the French foreign minister..Christian Pineau..as saying that Russia has sent "an important formation of military aircraft into Syria. These planes are identified as Mig-17 jet fighters.

Soviet Premier Bulganin has sent a message to President Eisenhower, rejecting Mr. Eisenhower's proposal that Russian troops get out of Hungary. Bulganin said..bluntly..that the question of Soviet troop withdrawals is solely a matter between Russia and Hungary.

Tonight, President Eisenhower ordered the cutting of "red tape", so that 5-thousand Hungarian refugees may be admitted to this country.

In the United Nations today, the General Assembly argued the Hungarian question. And, significantly, Yugoslavia joined the non-Communist countries in demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. The Yugoslav delegate said, "The Hungarian people are capable of solving their own problem " He did not, however, support the resolution calling for a United Nations investigation of the situation in Hungary. "The less interference from whatever source", he said, "the better it is for the Hungarian people and the people of the world." Yugoslavia steered a middle course in today's General Assembly debate. The delegate from Hungary protested that the situation is none of the Assembly's business. He said he wad "compelled" to make the protest on instructions from Budapest. Denmark promptly challenged his right to represent the Hungarian people, and the question was referred to the Assembly credentials committee. Cuba accused Russia of committing genocide, in what he called the "assassination" of thousands of Hungarians at the hands of Soviet troops. And there is a report tonight that Secretary General Hammarskjol is going ahead with plans for investigating the Hungarian situation.

The Republican Thurston Morton, appears to have won that close senatorial race in Kentucky. Latest returns show Morton leading Democratic Senator Earle Clements by 4 - thousand , 500 votes. His apparent victory (less than a hundred precincts have still to report) means the Republicansn now have 47 seats in the new Senate and the Democrats 49 seats. Democratic GovernorLausche of Ohio, who won election to the Senate, indicated some time ago that he might vote with the Republicans in organizing the Senate --he's quite an independent. That would mean a tie, with Vice President Nixon casting the deciding vote in favor of the Repuclicans. It would, in other words, give the Republicans control of the Senate. But now this appears highly unlikely. Lausche indicated today that he sill stay on the job as governor of Ohio until his term expires. that won't be until January 14th. And, by that time, the organization of the Senate will have been completed. Barring unexpected developments, the Democrats will be in control.

A Navy balloon, manned by two scientists set an altitude record today of 76-thousand feet. And then, more than 14 miles above the earth's surface, something went wrong and the balloon spun out of control. It began plummeting to earth. The two Navy scientists worked desperately to restore control, without success. Finally, at the last possible moment, they cut their pressurized gondola free from the big plastic bag and floated down in the gondola by means of a huge parachute. Neither of them was hurt. They had made the ascent from Rapid City, South Dakota. And they came down on a Nebraska farm, 140 miles from where they started.

In North Bergen, New Jersey, a twin-engind plane crashed into an unused television tower, killing seven persons, including the pilot and co-pilot. After striking the 810-foot tower, the aircraft plunged into a five-story apartment house, shearing off the two top floors and setting it on fire. The plane as flying in heavy fog.

Earlier today...before the Ben Gurion announcement..Ed Murrow reco another report for us from Tel Aviv, and here is that report now.

MURROW: As viewed from this samll peace of real estate, about the size of New Jersey, the rest of the world is pretty confused and divided. Here there is uncertainty about the future, but victory is a strong cement. And there is no division or victory near this little country. The Western Alliance had been dealt a blow which may or may not prove mortal. There is bitterness between Washington on the one hand and London and Paris on the other. Then there is bickering beween London and Paris. The British Commonwealth is divided as neve before. The Russian empire has shown signs of coming apart in Poland and Hungary. Old wounds have opened in both east and west. Nationalism and frustration andhistory have combined to leave the free world divided, leaderless and confused. Contradictions in policy have become commonplace. Resoluteness has been replaced by hesitation and vacillation. The unity of the West may be in some measure restored, for out common objectives outweigh our differences. But it will neve be the same again. The Russians, with terror, torture and sheer weight of men and metal, may be able to hold their satellites in line. But their empire will never be the same.

Add to this fact taat recent events have demonstrated out here, namely, that so-called unity of the Arab world is a myth. Nasser's neighbors did not come to his aid. Add all these events together and you have a world situation which is more fluid and therefore more dangerous than at any time in the past ten years. It is a time for bluffing and maneuver. Also a time for leadership. The hard fact is a stubborn one that must be faced and won't go away, it is that the leadership in Russia, in the West and in the Arab world just has not worked. No one of them has achieved its objective. This means, presumably, that all will try again. It may mean a wider realization that this (indistinct) may not long exist without an agreed body of international law, and the means of enforcing it. There are elements of four Arab armies now in Jordan. And last night groups of terrorists were active along the Israeli border. No Israeli casualties. But there are certainly enough Arab groups in that country to see to it that these provocations cease -- if they wanted them stopped. Apparently, one of Israel's most respected military figures is lost. Colonel E.....(?) , who led the Sinai campaign in the field, took off for (indistinct) in a Piper Cub. Is reported..is unreported and presumed lost. A Jordan communique last night claimed the shooting down of a Cuby by Jordanian anti-aircraft.

The Israeli government tonight released an Egyptian military document, which, its says, was captured in a file of the Egyptian general at Gaza. It says - among other things - that every officer must prepare himself and his subordinates for the inevitable war with Israel, "with the object of realizing our noble aim, namely, the annihilation of Israel and her destruction, in the shortest possible time, and in the most brutal and cruel battle." This document is marked "Top Secret", which is rather unusual, inasmuch as Colonel Nasser has said substantially the same thing in public.

Military logic indicates that the Arab States will not attack across the Jordanian frontier. But logic, military or otherwise, seems to in in short supply in vast areas of the world.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: As you know, Fire is one of the newest members of the United Nations and today the first Irish delegation to the General Assembly took off for New York. It is led by Liam Cosgrave, the Irish Minister of External Affairs. He said, "We hope to play a contrucctive role...but not to be a pawn of any of the big delegation." No one who knows the Irish would think for a moement that they would be the pawn of anyone.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Fri., Nov. 9, 1956

Good evening:

A few minutes ago, the United Nations General Assembly passed a resolution condemning Russia's armed intervention in Hungary. ~~The vote was taken paragraph by paragraph. Each time, the paragraph passed by an overwhelming majority. The resolution expressed deep concern over Russia's refusal to withdraw its forces from Hungary, in compliance with the assembly order of November 4th. Russian~~ The Soviet intervention in Hungary, it said, "is an intolerable attempt to deny the Hungarian people freedom and independence." The resolution was sponsored by five countries--Cuba, Ireland, Italy, Pakistan and Peru.

And still the fighting in Hungary continues. For almost 48 hours the rebel radio stations were silent, and then... early today... one of the freedom stations went on the air to report that rebel forces holding out in Budapest had managed, somehow, to shoot down one of Russia's new jet bombers. Budapest Radio itself, under the control of the Communist puppet government, admits fighting is still going on in northwestern and central Hungary. And refugees, reaching Austria, report the blowing up of a uranium mine in Southern Hungary. Radio Budapest now says it will allow Red Cross relief shipments to be made into Hungary, if they come by way of Yugoslavia. Hungarian railway workers are still on strike.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that the vanguard of the U.N. police force... for the Middle East... would fly to a staging area in Italy "probably within 24 hours." These first troops will be from Colombia, Norway and Denmark. And the Defense Department in Washington says a U.S. Air Force plane will leave tonight for Bogota, to pick up the first contingent of Colombian troops.

The Navy announced today that its largest sea-based jet plane---the XP-6M---had crashed in Delaware on a test flight. Its 4-man crew parachuted to safety. So far as it known, the huge flying boat, called "The Seamaster", was the only one the Navy had. Its sister ship crashed last December.

President Eisenhower (+top administration officials) briefed Congressional leaders today on what ~~they~~ referred to... afterward... as the "grave" threat to peace. The meeting at the White House lasted two and a half hours. ~~And besides the 22 Congressional leaders of both parties, it was attended by some of the government's top brass, including Secretary of Defense Wilson, acting Secretary of State Herbert Hoover, Jr., and Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.~~ Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson told reporters, "It's obviously a very serious situation." And speaking for the Democrats, he said: "We will give responsible consideration to any suggestion from the Administration. We will not play politics with the foreign situation." There was no discussion, he said, of calling a special session of Congress. Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey told reporters, "We had a complete briefing of the world situation from all angles, particularly the desperate situation in Hungary and the Middle East." He said, "The whole gathering left me with a feeling of confidence." ~~Senate Republican Leader Knowland agreed that the meeting had been "constructive". House Speaker Rayburn said there was indication~~

→

~~that any drastic new steps are planned. Although Congress is not in session, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will meet on Monday.~~

White House News Secretary Hagerty commented today on reports that British Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Mollet may soon come to Washington for three-power talks. Hagerty said there are no plans "at present" for such a conference, although the possibility has been discussed.

The United States, he said, has received the Swiss proposal for a new "summit" conference to discuss the worsening international situation. ~~Switzerland suggested a meeting of the heads of state of Britain, Russia, India, France and the United States.~~ Hagerty said that, so far, neither President Eisenhower ~~nor~~ nor the State Department has made a reply.

In London tonight... at the annual Lord Mayor's banquet... Prime Minister Eden praised the Swiss proposal as both "generous and helpful". "Clearly," he said, "my response ~~nor~~ to this must depend on others beside myself. But for my part, I am prepared to go anywhere to meet anybody, to help in a situation of such danger to Europe and the Middle East."

The French government told Switzerland today that a new summit conference might be difficult to organize, due to what it called the present "instability" in the world situation.

→

But Premier Mollet... speaking at a press luncheon in Paris... said today that a general peace settlement in the Middle East is "necessary and possible." It will not be easy, he said. "Its success will depend first on the unity of free nations."

A similar plea ~~[illegible]~~ came in Paris today from General Gruenther, who said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization cannot endure---"if we permit ourselves the luxury of a lack of unity." The retiring NATO commander issued the warning in a farewell speech before the NATO Council. The Russians, he said, might "miscalculate" lack of unity as weakness.

Secretary of the Air Force Quarles said today... in a New York speech... that without "in any degree" condoning the actions of Great Britain, France and Israel, it should nevertheless be borne in mind that vital interests were involved... and that there had, indeed, been provocations.

~~Quarles warned that for the United States to turn toward isolationism,~~ or ~~the "de-emphasizing of atomic weapons would, in his words, "mean a fatal weakening of our national security."~~

President Nasser made a speech of explanation today to the Egyptian people. It is not true, he said, that the Egyptian air force has been destroyed. He said "dummy" planes were set out on the Egyptian airstrips and it was these wooden dummies, and not real planes, that were bombed and strafed by the British and French. Nasser claimed that three Arab countries---Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia---offered to send military aid to Egypt, but that he had declined because he didn't want to see them become involved in the fighting. He said the main force of the Egyptian Army was moving to deal Israel "a death blow", just when Britain and France struck. Russia and the United States, he said, are "with" Egypt, when Egypt defends itself. And Egypt, Nasser said, ~~will suffer no infringement of her sovereignty. Egypt~~ will not allow the Suez Canal to be cleared, as Britain has said it plans to do, "as long as there is a single foreign soldier on Egyptian soil." Altogether, the speech lasted two hours.

Iraq announced today that it is breaking off diplomatic relations with France... and that it will no longer meet with Britain in the five-nation Baghdad Pact. The Iraqi government charged Britain with aggression. "No single state," it said, "has a right to come forward suggesting its own solutions and... taking unilateral arbitrary action... to impose them on others."

Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel, suddenly, to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Penninsula... a move that constituted a complete reversal of policy. We switch now, for that report, to Tel Aviv.

Tape runs 6:15
Ends on cue: "--This is Ed Murrow
in Tel Aviv."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news
But first, Here is George Bryan

FOOTNOTE

The conflict in the Middle East is already having its effects on European oil supplies, so much of which moves through the Suez Canal. For instance, in France begins gasoline restrictions tomorrow night. And you can imagine the complications over who is to be allowed to drive freely and who is not. Everyone is limited to a certain range of travel except certain professions like doctors, journalists and, you wouldn't think of this, nomadic gypsies. in France

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU MONDAY.

~~WXYZ 1058~~ 35 TD-8-65

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Friday, November 9, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel suddenly to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Peninsula. We switch now for that report to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with thecutting off of aid. That's the way one Israeli described the events of last night - and if you strip both letters of its superfluous words, that's about what it comes down to. Bulganin's letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever (indistinct) from the hand of the butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation. Mr. Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in so many ways, and he asked Ben Gurion to make his decision in this context. The people of Tel Aviv appear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back with calm resignation but with no illusions. A few have remarked that "we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyptian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary." Mr. Eisenhower spoke of new and energetic steps to solve the problems of the Middle East. Certainly, they will have to be both new and energetic if they're to have a chance of succeeding.

A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here. All the urgent meetings, all the communications, have dealt only with Egypt. There is quiet on that frontier. But there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier. And the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course. There are elements of four Arab armies in that country. There is no peace in the Middle East. Merely a cease-fire between Egypt and Israel. The Egyptian dictator has been saved, mainly through Russian and American intervention.

You may be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that, claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of British, French and Israeli aggression. So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays. Nothing has happened to change Nasser's mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map. He has suffered a humiliating defeat, worse than in 1948, plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism.

The Russians are now in the Middle East. That is probably, in the long run, the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war. Suddenly more important than the taking of Czechoslovakia - because that caused the Western world to unite. Now, the West is divided, and not likely to reunite on this issue. The methods in the two cases were rather alike. They didn't move the Red Army into Czechoslovakia, they didn't need to. It was poised on the border. In this case, the Russian bombers were just over the border, and Israeli officials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree. Had they bombed, the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would've thought they were only bombing an aggressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighboring Arab states as well. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly, none is possible through the United Nations unless the Russians agree. And their practice, in such situations, is to prevent agreement, to prolong the confusion, to further divide the Western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can, and probably will, replace the military gear Nasser lost in the Sinai, and as a result of the Anglo-French bombings. Maybe it will all end up at this: there is no solution in the Middle East unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The confusion and the conflict in the Middle East has not been ended. It hasn't even been stopped temporarily, except between Egypt and Israel. It will go on and on. There will be moves and counter-moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertake this action, whether Britain and France were not the greater aggressors and with less reason. We might even agree that America can't buy her way out of tough decisions. But if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognize that the Russians are here - in strength; that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished; that the Western alliance has been dangerously weakened and Russian influence increased.

For the past two years, clearly (indistinct) reporters out here, and in Washington, have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is. Some American officials out here have confessed that they didn't know either. Unless the new and energetic steps of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applied, then Western influence in this area is finished and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude.

This area out here is generally called The Middle East. It ought to be called the middle ground, where two forces, freedom and dictatorship, or if you prefer - good and evil - are contending. And the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Texas as well as Tel Aviv. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: We'll be hearing more from Mr. Murrow from Israel next week. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Friday, November 9, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel suddenly to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Peninsula. We switch now for that report to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with thecutting off of aid. That's the way one Israeli described the events of last night - and if you strip both letters of its superfluous words, that's about what it comes down to. Bulganin's letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever (indistinct) from the hand of the butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation. Mr. Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in so many ways, and he asked Ben Gurion to make his decision in this context. The people of Tel Aviv appear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back with calm resignation but with no illusions. A few have remarked that "we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyptian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary." Mr. Eisenhower spoke of new and energetic steps to solve the problems of the Middle East. Certainly, they will have to be both new and energetic if they're to have a chance of succeeding.

A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here. All the urgent meetings, all the communications, have dealt only with Egypt. There is quiet on that frontier. But there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier. And the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course. There are elements of four Arab armies in that country. There is no peace in the Middle East. Merely a cease-fire between Egypt and Israel. The Egyptian dictator has been saved, mainly through Russian and American intervention.

You may be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that, claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of British, French and Israeli aggression. So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays. Nothing has happened to change Nasser's mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map. He has suffered a humiliating defeat, worse than in 1948, plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism.

The Russians are now in the Middle East. That is probably, in the long run, the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war. Suddenly more important than the taking of Czechoslovakia - because that caused the Western world to unite. Now, the West is divided, and not likely to reunite on this issue. The methods in the two cases were rather alike. They didn't move the Red Army into Czechoslovakia, they didn't need to. It was poised on the border. In this case, the Russian bombers were just over the border, and Israeli officials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree. Had they bombed, the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would've thought they were only bombing an aggressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighboring Arab states as well. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly, none is possible through the United Nations unless the Russians agree. And their practice, in such situations, is to prevent agreement, to prolong the confusion, to further divide the Western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can, and probably will, replace the military gear Nasser lost in the Sinai, and as a result of the Anglo-French bombings. Maybe it will all end up at this: there is no solution in the Middle East unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The confusion and the conflict in the Middle East has not been ended. It hasn't even been stopped temporarily, except between Egypt and Israel. It will go on and on. There will be moves and counter-moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertake this action, whether Britain and France were not the greater aggressors and with less reason. We might even agree that America can't buy her way out of tough decisions. But if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognize that the Russians are here - in strength; that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished; that the Western alliance has been dangerously weakened and Russian influence increased.

For the past two years, clearly (indistinct) reporters out here, and in Washington, have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is. Some American officials out here have confessed that they didn't know either. Unless the new and energetic steps of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applied, then Western influence in this area is finished and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude.

This area out here is generally called The Middle East. It ought to be called the middle ground, where two forces, freedom and dictatorship, or if you prefer - good and evil - are contending. And the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Texas as well as Tel Aviv. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: We'll be hearing more from Mr. Murrow from Israel next week. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Friday, November 9, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel suddenly to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Peninsula. We switch now for that report to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with thecutting off of aid. That's the way one Israeli described the events of last night - and if you strip both letters of its superfluous words, that's about what it comes down to. Bulganin's letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever (indistinct) from the hand of the butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation. Mr. Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in so many ways, and he asked Ben Gurion to make his decision in this context. The people of Tel Aviv appear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back with calm resignation but with no illusions. A few have remarked that "we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyptian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary." Mr. Eisenhower spoke of new and energetic steps to solve the problems of the Middle East. Certainly, they will have to be both new and energetic if they're to have a chance of succeeding.

A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here. All the urgent meetings, all the communications, have dealt only with Egypt. There is quiet on that frontier. But there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier. And the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course. There are elements of four Arab armies in that country. There is no peace in the Middle East. Merely a cease-fire between Egypt and Israel. The Egyptian dictator has been saved, mainly through Russian and American intervention.

You may be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that, claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of British, French and Israeli aggression. So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays. Nothing has happened to change Nasser's mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map. He has suffered a humiliating defeat, worse than in 1948, plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism.

The Russians are now in the Middle East. That is probably, in the long run, the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war. Suddenly more important than the taking of Czechoslovakia - because that caused the Western world to unite. Now, the West is divided, and not likely to reunite on this issue. The methods in the two cases were rather alike. They didn't move the Red Army into Czechoslovakia, they didn't need to. It was poised on the border. In this case, the Russian bombers were just over the border, and Israeli officials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree. Had they bombed, the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would've thought they were only bombing an aggressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighboring Arab states as well. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly, none is possible through the United Nations unless the Russians agree. And their practice, in such situations, is to prevent agreement, to prolong the confusion, to further divide the Western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can, and probably will, replace the military gear Nasser lost in the Sinai, and as a result of the Anglo-French bombings. Maybe it will all end up at this: there is no solution in the Middle East unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The confusion and the conflict in the Middle East has not been ended. It hasn't even been stopped temporarily, except between Egypt and Israel. It will go on and on. There will be moves and counter-moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertake this action, whether Britain and France were not the greater aggressors and with less reason. We might even agree that America can't buy her way out of tough decisions. But if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognize that the Russians are here - in strength; that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished; that the Western alliance has been dangerously weakened and Russian influence increased.

For the past two years, clearly (indistinct) reporters out here, and in Washington, have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is. Some American officials out here have confessed that they didn't know either. Unless the new and energetic steps of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applied, then Western influence in this area is finished and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude.

This area out here is generally called the Middle East. It ought to be called the middle ground, where two forces, freedom and dictatorship, or if you prefer - good and evil - are contending. And the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Texas as well as Tel Aviv. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: We'll be hearing more from Mr. Murrow from Israel next week. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

10 מאי
אוספי עתונות

70

Murrow tp CBS.....

"Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with the cutting off of aid."..Thats the way one Israeli described the events of last night..#.And if you strip both letters of superflous words, thats about what it comes down to.#.Bulganins letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever to come from the hand of the Butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation...Mr Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in somany ways...and asked Ben Gurion to make his decision "in this context".#.The people of Tel Aviv apear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back..with calm resignation but with no illusions.. A few have remarked that we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyptian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary.#.Mr Eisenhower spoke of new and energetic steps to sole the problems of the middle east...Certainly they will have to be both "new and energetic" if they are to have a chance of suceeding...A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here...All the urgent meetings, all the communications..have dealt only with Egypt..there is quiet on that frontier...but there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier...and the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course.(there are elements of four Arab armys in that country).#. There is no peace in the middle east..merely a cease fire between Egypt and Israel.#.The Egyptian dictator has been saved...mainly thru Russian and American intervention.#.You may be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that..Claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of Britain France and Israel...So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays.#.Nothing has happened to change Nassers mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map.#.He has suffered a humiliating defeat..worse than in nineteen forty eight..but that..plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism..

The Russians are now in the middle east.#.That is probably in the long run..the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war.. Certainly more important than the taking of Chekoslovakia..because that caused the western world to unite...now the west is divided..and not likely to re unite on this issue.The methods in the two cases were rather alike..They didnt move the red army into ~~Jugoslavia~~ Chekoslovakia..they didnt need to..it was poised on the border...In this case the Russian bombers were just over the border...and Israeli officials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree...Had they bombed the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would have thought they were only bombing an agressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighbouring Arab states. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly none is possible thru the United Nations unless they agree..and their practice in such situations is to prevent agreement...to prolong the confusion...to further divide the western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can ..and probably will replace the Military gear Nasser lost in the Sinai..and as a result of Anglo French bombing. Maybe it all ends up at this...There is no solution in the middle east unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union...

The confusion and the conflict in the middle east hasnt been ended... it hasnt even been stopped temporarily. (except between Egypt and Israel) It will go on and on...there will be moves and counter moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertake this action. whether Britain and France were not the greater agressors. (and with less reason). we might even agree that America cant buy her way out of tough decisions. if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognise that the Russians are here ..in strength...that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished. that the western alliance has been dangerously weakened, and Russian influence increased. For the past two years, fairly diligent reporters out here, and in Washington have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is... Some American officials have confessed that they didnt know either... Unless the "New and energetic steps" of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applied..~~then American~~ then western influence in this area is finished, and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude... This area out here is generally called the Middle east..it ought to be called the Middle Ground...where two forces...freedom and dictatorship... or if you prefer...good and evil are contending...and the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Tel Aviv as well as Texas...

ארכיון ישראל
אוסף מס. 10
מגזר לעתונות

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening: A few minutes ago, the United Nations General Assembly passed a a resolution condemning Russia's armed intervention in Hungary. The Soviet intervention in Hungary, it said, is "an intolerable attempt to deny the Hungarian people freedom and independence." The resolution was sponsored by five countries -- Cuba, Ireland, Italy, Pakistan and Peru.

And still the fighting in Hungary continues. For almost 48 hours the rebel radio stations were silent, and then...early today..one of the freedom stations went on the air to report that rebel forces holding out in Budapest had managed, somehow, to shoot down one of Russia's new jet bombers. Budapest Radio itself, under the control of the Communist puppet government, admits fighting is still going on in northwestern and central Hungary. And refugees, reaching Austria, report the blowing up of a uranium mine in Southern Hungary. Radio Budapest now says it will allow Red Cross relief shipments to be made into Hungary, if they come by way of Yugoslavia. Hungarian railway workers are still on strike.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that the vanguard of the U.N. police force...for the Middle East..would fly to a staging area in Italy "probably within 24 hours." These first troops sill be from Colombia, Norway and Denmark. And the Defense Department in Washington says a U.S. Air Force plane will leave tonight for Bogata, to pick up the first contingent of Colombian troops.

The Navy announced today that its largest sea - based jet place -- the XP-6-M had crashed in Delaware on a test flight. Its 4-man crew parachuted to safety. So far as it knows, the huge flying ost called "The Seamaster", was the only one the Navy had. Its sister ship crashed last December.

President Eisenhower and top administration officials briefed Congressional leaders today on that they referred to...afterward..as the "grave" threat to peace. The meeting at the White House lasted two and a half hours. Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson told reporters, "It's obviously a very serious situation." And speaking for the Democrats, he said: "We will give responsible consideration to any suggestion from the Administration. We will not play politics with the foreign situation." There was no discussion he said, of calling a special session of Congress. Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey told reporters, "We had a complete briefing of the world situation in Hungary and the Middle East." He said, "The whole gathering left me with a feeling of confidence."

White House News Secretary Hagerty commented today on reports that British Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Mollet may soon come to Washington for three-power talks. Hagerty said there are no plans "at present" for such a conference, although the possibility has been discussed.

The United States, he said, has received the Swiss proposal for a new "summit" conference to discuss the worsening international situation. Hagerty said that, so far, neither President Eisenhower nor the State Department has made a reply.

In London tonight...at the annual Lord Mayor's banquet..Prime Minister Eden praised the Swiss proposal as both "generous and helpful." "Clearly", he said, "my response to this must depend on others beside myself. But for my part, I am prepared to go anywhere to meet anybody, to help in a situation of such danger to Europe and the Middle East." The French government told Switzerland today that a new summit conference might be difficult to organize, due to what it called the present "instability" in the world situation.

Secretary of the Air Force Quarles said today..in a New York speech...that without "in any degree" condoning the actions of Great Britain, France and Israel, it should nevertheless be borne in mind that vital interests were involved...and that there had, indeed, been provocations.

President Nasser made a speech of explanation today to the Egyptian people. It is not true, he said, that the Egyptian air force has been destroyed. He said "dummy" planes were set out on the Egyptian airstrips and it was those wooden dummies, and not real planes, that were bombed and strafed by the British and French. Nasser claimed that three Arab countries--Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia -- offered to send military aid to Egypt, but that he had declined because he didn't want to see them become involved in the fighting. He said the main force of the Egyptian Army was moving to deal Israel " a death blow", just when Britain and France struck. Russia and the United States, he said, are "with" Egypt when Egypt defends itself. And Egypt, Nasser said, will not allow the Suez Canal to be cleared, as Britain has said it plans to do, "as long as there is a single foreign soldier on Egyptian soil." Altogether, the speech lasted two hours.

Iraq announced today that it is breaking off diplomatic relations wth France..and that it will no longer meet with Britain in the five nation Baghdad Pact. The Iraqui government charged Britain with aggression.

Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel, suddenly, to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Penninsula..a move that constituted a complete reversal of policy. We switch now, for that report, to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with the cutting off of aid. That's the way one israeli described the events of last night - and if you strip both letters of its superfluous words, that's about what it comes down to. Bulganin's letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever (indistinct) from the hand of the butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation. Mr. Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in so many ways, and he asked Ben Gurion to make his decision in this contex . The people of Tel Aviv appear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back with calm resignation but with no illusions. A few have remarked that "we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyprian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary." Mr. Eisenhower spoke of new energetic steps to solve the problems of the Middle East. Certainly, they will have to be both new and energetic if they're to have a chance of succeeding.

A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here. All the urgent meetings, all the communications, have dealt only with Egypt. There is quiet on that frontier. But there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier. And the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course. There are elements of four Arab armies in that country. There is no peace in the Middle East. Merely a cease-fire between Egypt and Israel The Egyptian dictator has been saved, mainly through Russian and American intervention. You man be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that, claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of British, French and Israeli aggression. So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays. Nothing has happened to change Nasser's mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map. He has suffered a humiliating defeat, worse than in 1948, plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism.

The Russians are now in the Middle East. That is probably, in the long run, the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war. Suddenly more important than the taking of Czechoslovakia - because that caused the Western world to unite. Now, the West is divided, and not likely to reunite on this issue. The methods in the two cases were rather alike. They didn't move the Red Army into Czeshoslovakia, they didn't need to. It was poised on the border. In this case, the Russian bombers were just over the border, and Israeli oificials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree. Had they bombed, the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would have thought they were only bombing an aggressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighboring Arab states as well. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly, none is possible throug the United Nations unless the Russians agree. And their practice, in such situations, is to prevent agreement, to prolong the confusion, to further divide the Western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can, and probably will, replace the military gear Nasser lost in the Siaai, and as a result of the Anglo-French bombings. Maybe it will all end up at this: there is no solution in the Middle East unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The confusion and the conflict in the Middle East has not been ended. It hasn't even been stopped temporarily, except between Egypt and Israel. It will go on and on. There will be moves and counter-moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertaken this action, whether Britain and France were not the greater aggressors and with less reason. We might even agree that America can't buy her way out of tough decisions. But if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognize that the Russians are here - in strength ; that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished; that the Western alliance has been dangerously weakened and Russian influence increased .

For the past two years, clearly (indistinct) reporters out here, and in Washington, have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is. Some American officials out here have confessed that they didn't know either. Unless the new and energetic steps of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applies, then Western influence in this area is finished and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude. This area out here is generally called the Middle East. It ought to be called the middle ground, where two forces, freedom and dictatorship , or if you prefer - good and evil are contending . And the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Texas as well as Tel Aviv. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: We'll be hearing from Mr. Murrow from Israel next week. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: The conflict in the Middle East is already having its effects on European oil supplies, so much of which moves through the Suez Canal. For instance, France begins gasoline restrictions tomorrow night. And you can imagine the complications over who is to be allowed to drive freely and who is not. Everyone is limited to a certain range of travel elxcep certain professions like doctors, journalists and, you wouldn't think of this, nomadic gypsies in France.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you Monday.

Collingwood for Murrow Mon. Nov. 12, 1956

Good evening:

The Cairo radio announced tonight that agreement for entry of a United Nations police force into Egypt had been reached "on all points." Then it proceeded to list the conditions it said are tacked onto that agreement. And the conditions are formidable. According to the Cairo announcement, the international police force will have no duties in Port Said... or anywhere else in the Suez Canal Zone... after the withdrawal of the British and French troops, ~~which must evacuate at once in compliance with the United Nations cease-fire." Another condition listed by the Cairo radio is that~~ The work of the international force will be confined to the demarcation line between Israel and Egypt as established by the 1949 armistice~~, and then, according to Cairo, only "so long as Egypt approves that these United Nations forces should stay."~~ Here are other conditions. Egypt's consent ~~is~~ is necessary for the participation of each country in the international police force and for the entry of that force into Egypt. Egypt's consent is necessary to determine the place where the international force is to be stationed. And, finally, at any time that the Egyptian Government withdraws its agreement, the international police force will withdraw immediately. As we said, quite a list of conditions.

The Israeli government announced today that it "adheres" to its decision to withdraw its force from Egypt "upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with the international force as stated last week." ~~The government said it was making the announcement "in reply to questions regarding reports published abroad about Israeli policy."~~ The announcement did not specify whether the withdrawal of Israeli troops would apply to the Gaza Strip. (Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and we will have another first-hand report from him in a few minutes).

The secretary general of the United Nations... Dag Hammarskjold... announced earlier today that Egypt had agreed to allow the entry of a United Nations police force. But he made no mention of conditions. Hammarskjold said he will leave New York tomorrow afternoon to help coordinate the operation---in his words, "to see that there are no unnecessary loose ends." ~~He said first units of the police force... made up of troops from Denmark, Norway and Colombia... might leave for Egypt as early as tomorrow. That is now definite.~~ The first group of about 200 men from Denmark, Norway + Colombia will take off from their staging area in Italy by noon tomorrow, Italian time.

Hammarskjold expects to reach Cairo ~~on~~ Thursday morning and return to New York on Sunday. He said that on the way back he might stop in Hungary---if United Nations observers were admitted into the country by that time. Well, tonight the puppet government of Hungary informed ~~them~~ Hammarskjold that it would refuse to admit these observers, including apparently Hammarskjold. ~~The Communist puppet government said, "Settlement of the situation lies exclusively within the internal legal competence of the Hungarian state." It called the United Nations resolution demanding an investigation of the Hungarian question... and the intervention of Soviet troops... "an interference of Hungary's internal affairs in contradiction with the principles of the United Nations Charter."~~

The United Nations General Assembly took no action on either the

→

Hungarian or Middle East questions, as it convened today for its regular annual session. Most of the action was routine... of an organizational character... but the newly elected assembly president, Prince Wan of Thailand, took note of the critical world situation in his inaugural speech when he said appealed to the delegates to work in a spirit of renewed dedication to the cause of peace. The importance of the occasion was also evident in the presence of 40 foreign ministers. ~~Never before has such a gathering of statesmen attended the opening of a General Assembly session. The general debate is expected to start late Wednesday or Thursday.~~

Reports coming out of Budapest say that a delegation of Soviet leaders---headed by no less a personage than Party Boss Khrushchev---have arrived at the Hungarian capital to take a hand in trying to end that bloody revolt. The word is that these Russian dignitaries are trying to persuade ex-Premier Nagy to join the puppet government, in the hope of gaining popular support. Nagy himself is reported to have taken refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda insisted today that the Russian people favor the sending of "volunteers" to help Egypt, if British, French and Israeli troops delay their departure from Egypt soil. "The Soviet people," said Pravda, "realize where the extension of a military conflict in Egypt might lead, if a rebuff is not given to the aggressors." ~~The Soviet news agency Tass said much the same thing on Saturday.~~

The Egyptian ambassador in Moscow claimed today that more than 50-thousand Russian reservists have volunteered to fight on Egypt's side. He said their applications had been forwarded to Cairo.

A Moscow broadcast called on workers in Arab countries to deny oil to the Egyptian "aggressors"---even, it said, "if this should mean blowing up oil installations." The broadcast also urged the blowing up of foreign bases in the Arab countries, "so that they cannot be used as bases of attack against Egypt."

The heads of five Arab states gathered today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, to discuss the Middle East crisis. Besides the president of Lebanon, the talks are attended by the president of Syria and the kings of Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Iraq. According to informed sources, these countries are worried---not only by the attacks on Egypt---but also by Russia's growing influence in the Middle East. ~~Tomorrow, the talks are being joined by representatives of Egypt, Libya and [illegible]~~ President Nasser is not attending. He will be represented by his ambassador.

~~King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, sent a message to President Eisenhower today... appealing to him to take the lead in averting "the danger of war." King Saud said, "If the United States fails to take positive action against the Anglo-French aggression, God only knows what the results would be." Today, Saudi Arabia called up its military reserves.~~

The prime ministers of India, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia discussed both the Egyptian and Hungarian situations today in New Delhi. An Indian Government spokesman says the talks may run through Wednesday.

~~So far, details [illegible]~~

Informed sources in Washington say that Prime Minister Nehru may make his delayed visit to this country, sometime next month. The main purpose of such a visit would be to confer with President Eisenhower.

A note from President Eisenhower was delivered in Paris today to Premier Mollet. CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun cables me that.. in his note... President Eisenhower agreed to a top-level meeting with Mollet and British Prime Minister Eden, but that Mr. Eisenhower believes the meeting should not be called "in haste." A similar note is reported to have gone to Eden. According to Washington sources, the President feels the United Nations General Assembly should be allowed further opportunity to act. ~~It is the same reason the administration gave over the week-end in turning down the Swiss bid for a new "summit" meeting that would include Russian Premier Bulganin. Eisenhower expressed his willingness to attend such a meeting if invited by Premier Mollet.~~

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was briefed on the situation today by Acting Secretary of State Hoover and other Administration leaders. ~~Senator Hickenlooper, a leading Republican member of the committee, a Democratic member of the committee--who does not wish to be quoted by name--says~~ Hoover was asked what this country planned ~~to do if Russia tried to move~~

→

~~ten or twenty thousand "volunteers" into Egypt. Hoover is quoted as replying that "that would be a matter for the U.N."~~ The committee briefing lasted four hours. ~~[illegible]~~ Chairman George said afterward, "I'm encouraged that the problem, although difficult, is one that can be worked out---and will be worked out." Democratic Senator Fulbright said, "We still have no affirmitive policy, no signs of any new ideas."

~~President Eisenhower began work today on the "State of the Union Message", which he will deliver to Congress in January. In the message, he will outline his program for the next four years. The President also called on Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital. He and Dulles were together for about fifty minutes... and discussed the world situation.~~

The White House announced today that General Gruenther, the retiring NATO commander, has been named president of the American Red Cross. The appointment is effective January first.

Postmaster General Summerfield underwent a successful throat operation today (in Ann Arbor, Michigan.) The Post Office Department says the operation was successful---"no malignancy was found." Mr. Summerfield is the third member of the cabinet to undergo major surgery in recent weeks. The other two, of course, are Secretary of Defense Wilson and Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Wilson already is back on the job.

And now here is that report we promised you from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv. He recorded it this evening, on returning from a trip to the Jordanian and Syrian frontiers.

(tape runs 4:42
ends on cue: "This is Ed Murrow
in Tel Aviv."

Mr. Murrow will remain in Israel for several days more and will continue his reports.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news

But first, here is George Bergan -

FOOTNOTE

In celebrating ~~On this~~ veterans day the thoughts of many have turned to the precarious international situation. In an address today Chief Justice Earl Warren dwelt on the world crisis and drew from it the lesson that we must be alert to intolerance and cruelty wherever it arises, at home as well as abroad, "in our states, in our cities, in our neighborhoods." "Unless we keep such acts of intolerance in our minds eye," he said, "freedom can be endangered."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

Murrow to CBS.....
This is Tel Aviv...

This might be called notes on a weekx end of wandering thru Isreal... Armageddon was quiet on Armistice day/.the small brown birds still fly in formation./.There is a hotel manager, near the sea of Gallilee, who wants me to tell you, that Israel remains a fine place for a winter holiday...He is right ..and you have been told/..Just across the lake there is a collective farm..a Kibutz..For most of the past two weeks the children have been sleeping in the air raid shelters...they dont mind it as much as the adults.(its an adventure).There is Bouganvillia growing around the entrance to the shelter,,,the kids get their exercise jumping over trenches and crawling under the barbed wire...the sheperds tend their flocks with rifles on their shoulders.(the place is a mile from the Syrian border).. There is no fishing in the sea of Gallilee right now..the men are standing watch.X.Up North, about fifteen miles..just below the Lake of Hula..the Syrian and Israeli lines are about Three hundred yards apart...barbed wire,mines,fxxx field telephones..trenches ..pillboxes..xxxxx.all the gear of war, except the shooting ..and occasionally at night there is a little bit of that...A day old newspaper says a spokesman of our defense department says violence on the Syrian Jordanian border may erupt at any time...He is quite right.X.At night you can hear the Syrian voices and the sound of digging...truck tires and horses Hoofs on the road to Damascus.. (Its a quiet front in Korea before the armistice)..The Israelis say they arent going to start anything up there..and they are exceedingly carefull not to do anything that might draw fire...There may be peace on the frontier with Egypt, but the silence is uneasy up north...

A fighter pilot tells you the Mystaire Mark four did very well against the Migs..at low altitude....tells you too that the original plan for disrupting telephone lines in Sinai didnt work..they were going to trail wires behind aircraft and pull them down,,it didnt work..so they flew old P 51s..right down on the deck and chewed up the lines

...he said it was good fun..and they didnt loose a plane... and the Egyptians lost their telephone lines.....

There was also time on this wandering week end to learn something of the big picture...All of it of course from the Israeli point of view.).Here is a summary of the way it looks...There will be no peace with Egypt, so long as that country is ruled by a dictator, who is under the complete domination of a foreign power..which means Russia.. Israel has made no decision about pulling out of the Gaza strip...in other words it remains a bargaining point.#.Meanwhile most of the Egyptian war material captured there ~~is being~~ HAS BEEN rushed back to Israel..# What is the most important thing to be donex right now?the recreation of some unity within the free world...For Israel feels herself a part of that world...realises that the Russians have won a great victory in the middle east ...and appreciates that the free world is now divided..and that time for the creating of a new joint policy is desperately short... The Israelis have won a small military victory..(they do not over rate its importance.).it has eased the pressure on one flank.#they are determined not to be provoked into attacking elsewhere...For they suspect that the Russians are merely waiting for such an excuse to intervene... At the same time they are apalled at the victory Russia has won in this area...The do not believe that this is the end of the road..they believe that Russia will now exploit western differences, and try to create a pretext..after a reasonable interval..for supporting and directing an attack against Israel.#.This Israeli army wants to go home...it doesnt think its going to soon... ~~Its~~ Israeli leaders dont think they have controll of the situation They believe that America might determine the outcome..but it must be reported, that Civilian and military leaders here dont think we will do it

12. XI. 1956
89
אוסף מס. 10

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, November 12, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This might be called notes from a week-end of wanderings through Israel. I can report that Armageddon was quiet on Armistice day. The small brown birds still fly in formation. There is a hotelman here near the Sea of Galilee, who wants me to tell you that Israel remains a fine place for a winter holiday. He is right, (indistinct) to have been told. Just across the lake there is a collective farm, a kibbutz. For most of the past two weeks, the children there have been sleeping in the air raid shelters. They don't mind it as much as the adults. It's something of an adventure. There is bougainvillia growing around the entrance to the air raid shelters. The kids get their exercise jumping over trenches and crawling under the barbed wire. The shepherds tend their flocks with rifles on their shoulders. The place is just about a mile from the Syrian border.

There is no fishing on the Sea of Galilee right now; the men are standing watch.

Up north, about fifteen miles, just below the Lake of Ulah? The Syrian and Israeli lines are about 300-yards apart. Barbed wire, mines, field? telephones, treaches, pill boxes, all the gear and paraphernalia of war, except the shooting. And occasionally at night, there's a little bit of that.

A day-old newspaper says a spokesman ~~for the~~ of our Defense Department says violence on the Syrian-Jordanian border may erupt at any time. He's quite right. At night, you can hear the Syrian ~~xxixxx~~ horses (indistinct) ... and horses' hoofs on the road to Damascus. It's a quiet front (indistinct) before the armistice. The Israelis say they are not going to start anything up there. And they are exceedingly careful not to do anything that might draw fire. There may be peace on the frontier with Egypt. But the silence is very uneasy up north. A fighter pilot tells you the Mystere ...? did very well against the MIGs, at low altitude. He tells you, too, that the original plan for disrupting telephone lines, in the Sinai, didn't work. They were going to trail wires and hooks behind aircraft and pull the wires down. But it didn't work. So they flew old P-51s, right down on the desert, and shoot up the lines with the propellers. He said it was (indistinct) - they didn't lose a plane. And the Egyptians lost their telephone lines.

There was also time on this wandering week-end to something of the big picture. All of it, of course, from the Israeli point of view. Here is a summary of the way it was: There will be no peace with Egypt so long as that country is ruled by a dictator, who is under the complete domination of a foreign power, which means Russia. Israel has made no decision about pulling out of the Gaza Strip, or about staying. In other words, it remains a bargaining point. Meanwhile, most of the Egyptian war material captured there has been rushed back to Israel.

What is the most important thing to be done right now? The answer given here is, - the recreation of some unity within the free world. For Israel feels herself a part of that world, realizes that the Russians have won a great victory in the Middle East, and appreciates that the free world is now divided and that time for the creation for a new joint policy is desperately short.

The Israelis have won small military victories. They do not overrate its importance. It has eased the pressure on one flank. They are determined not to be provoked into attacking elsewhere. For they suspect that the Russians are merely waiting for such an excuse to intervene. At the same time, they're appalled at the victory Russia has won in this area. They do not believe that this is the end of the road.

They believe that Russia will now exploit Western differences, and try to create a pretext, after a reasonable interval, for supporting and directing an attack against Israel.

This Israeli Army, like most armies, wants to go home. But it doesn't think it's going to soon. Israeli leaders do not think they have control of the situation. They believe that America might determine the outcome. And (indistinct) ~~thark~~ reported that civilian and military leaders here do not think that we will do it.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, November 12, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This might be called notes from a week-end of wanderings through Israel. I can report that Armageddon was quiet on Armistice day. The small brown birds still fly in formation. There is a hotelman here near the Sea of Galilee, who wants me to tell you that Israel remains a fine place for a winter holiday. He is right, (indistinct) to have been told. Just across the lake there is a collective farm, a kibbutz, For most of the past two weeks, the children there have been sleeping in the air raid shelters. They don't mind it as much as the adults. It's something of an adventure. There is bougainvillia growing around the entrance to the air raid shelters. The kids get their exercise jumping over trenches and crawling under the barbed wire. The shepherds tend their flocks with rifles on their shoulders. The place is just about a mile from the Syrian border.

There is no fishing on the Sea of Galilee right now; the men are standing watch.

Up north, about fifteen miles, just below the Lake of Ulah? The Syrian and Israeli lines are about 300-yards apart. Barbed wire, mines, field? telephones, trenches, pill boxes, all the gear and paraphernalia of war, except the shooting. And occasionally at night, there's a little bit of that.

A day-old newspaper says a spokesman ~~for the~~ of our Defense Department says violence on the Syrian-Jordanian border may erupt at any time. He's quite right. At night, you can hear the Syrian ~~voices~~ horses (indistinct) ... and horses' hoofs on the road to Damascus. It's a quiet front (indistinct) before the armistice. The Israelis say they are not going to start anything up there. And they are exceedingly careful not to do anything that might draw fire. There may be peace on the frontier with Egypt. But the silence is very uneasy up north. A fighter pilot tells you the Mystere ...? did very well against the MIGs, at low altitude. He tells you, too, that the original plan for disrupting telephone lines, in the Sinai, didn't work. They were going to trail wires and hooks behind aircraft and pull the wires down. But it didn't work. So they flew old P-51s, right down on the desert, and shoot up the lines with the propellers. He said it was (indistinct) - they didn't lose a plane. And the Egyptians lost their telephone lines.

There was also time on this wandering week-end to something of the big picture. All of it, of course, from the Israeli point of view. Here is a summary of the way it was: There will be no peace with Egypt so long as that country is ruled by a dictator, who is under the complete domination of a foreign power, which means Russia. Israel has made no decision about pulling out of the Gaza Strip, or about staying. In other words, it remains a bargaining point. Meanwhile, most of the Egyptian war material captured there has been rushed back to Israel.

What is the most important thing to be done right now? The answer given here is, - the recreation of some unity within the free world. For Israel feels herself a part of that world, realizes that the Russians have won a great victory in the Middle East, and appreciates that the free world is now divided and that time for the creation for a new joint policy is desperately short.

The Israelis have won small military victories. They do not overrate its importance. It has eased the pressure on one flank. They are determined not to be provoked into attacking elsewhere. For they suspect that the Russians are merely waiting for such an excuse to intervene. At the same time, they're appalled at the victory Russia has won in this area. They do not believe that this is the end of the road.

They believe that Russia will now exploit Western differences, and try to create a pretext, after a reasonable interval, for supporting and directing an attack against Israel.

This Israeli Army, like most armies, wants to go home. But it doesn't think it's going to soon. Israeli leaders do not think they have control of the situation. They believe that America might determine the outcome. And (indistinct) ~~kmax~~ reported that civilian and military leaders here do not think that we will do it.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

The Cairo radio announced tonight that agreement for entry of a United Nations police force into Egypt had been reached "on all points.". Then it proceeded to list the conditions it said are tacked onto that agreement. And the conditions are formidable. According to the Cairo announcement, the in- [illegible] police force will have no duties in Port Said..or anywhere else in the Suez Canal.Zone..after the withdrawal of the British and French troops. The work of the international force will be confined to the demarcation line between Israel and Egypt as established by the 1949 armistice.

Here are other contitions Egypt says she is imposing. Egypt's consent is necessary for the participation of each country in the international police force and the entry of that force into Egypt. Egypt's consent is necessary to determine the place where the international force is to be stationed. And, finally at any time that the Egyptian Government withdraws its agreement, the international police force will withdraw immediately. As we said, quite a list of conditions.

The Israeli government announced today that it "adheres" to its decision to withdraw its force from Egypt "upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with the international forces as we stated last week." The announcement did not specify whether the withdrawal of Israeli troops would apply to the Gaza Strip. (Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and we will have another first-hand report from hin in a few minutes.

The secretary general of the United Nations...Dag Hammarskjold..announced earlier today that Egypt had agreed to allow the entry of a United Nations police force. But he made no mention of conditions. Hammarskjold said he will leave New York tomorrow afternoon to help coordinate the operation--in his words, "to see that there are no unnecessary loose ends." The first group of about 200 men from Denmark, Norway and Colombia will take off from their staging area in Italy by noon tomorrow, Italian time.

Hammarskjold expects to reach Cairo Thursday morning and return to New York on Sunday. He said that on the way back he might stop in Hungary--if United Nations observers were admitted into the country by that time. Well, tonight the puppet government of Hungary informed Hammarskjold that it would refuse to admit these observers, including, apparently, Hammarskjold.

The United Nations General Assembly took no action on either the Hungarian or Middle East questions, as it convened today for its regular annual session. Most of the action was routine...of an organizational character... but the newly elected assembly president , Prince Wan of Thailand, took note of the critical world situation in his inaugural speech when he appealed to the delegates to work in a spirit of renewed dedication to the cause of peace. The importance of the occasion was also evident in the presence of 40 foreign ministers.

Reports coming out of Budapest say that a delegation of Soviet leaders--headed by no less a personage than Party Boss Khruschcev--have arrived at the Hungarian capital to take a hand in trying to end that bloody revolt. The word is that these Russian dignitaries are trying to persuade ex-Premier Nagy to join the puppet government, in the hope of gaining popular support. Nagy himself is reported to have taken refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda insisted today that the Russian people favor t e sending of "volunteers" to help Egypt, if British, French and Isreeli troops delay their departure from Egyptian soil. "The Soviet people, said Pravda, "realize where the extension of a military conflict in Egypt might lead, if a rebuff is not given to the aggresors."

The Egyptian ambassador in Moscow claimed today that more than 50-thousand Russiand reservists have volunteered to fight on Egypt's side. He said their applications had been forwarded to Cairo.

A Moscow broadcast called on workers in Arab countries to deny oil to the Egyptian "aggressors"--even, it said, "if this should mean blowing up oil installations." The broadcast also urged the blowing up of foreign bases in the Arab countries, "so that they cannot be used as bases of attack against Egypt."

The heads of five Arab states gathered today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, to discuss the Middle East crisis. Besides the president of Lebanon, the talks are attended by the president of Syria and the kings of Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Iraq. According to informed sources, these countries are worried -- not only by the attacks on Egypt--but also by Russia's growing influence in the Middle East. President Nasser is not attending. He will be represented by his ambassador.

The prime ministers of India, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia discussed both the Egyptian and Hungarian situations today in New Delhi. An Indian Government spokesman says the talks may run through Wednesday.

Informed sources in Washington say that Prime Minister Nehru may make his delayed visit to this country sometime next month. The main purpose of such a visit would be to confer with President Eisenhower.

A note from President Eisenhower was delivered in Paris today to Premier Mollet. CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun cables me that..in his note.. President Eisenhower agreed to a top-level meeting with Mollet and British Prime Minister Eden, but that Mr. Eisenhower believes the meeting should not be called "in haste." A similar note is reported to have gone to Eden.

According to Washington sources, the President feels the United Nations General Assembly should be allowd further opportunity to act.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was briefed on the situation today by Acting Secretary of State Hoover and other Administration leaders.

The committee briefing lasted four hours. Chairman George said afterward, "I'm encouraged that the problem, although difficult, is one that can be worked out -- and will be worked out." Democratic Senator Fulbright said, "We still have no affirmative policy, no signs of any new ideas."

The White House announced today that General Gruenther, the retiring NATO commander, has been named president of the American Red Cross. The appointment is effective January first.

Postmaster General Summerfield underwent a successful throat operation today in Ann Arbor Michigan. The Post Office Department said the operation was successful -- "no malignancy was found." Mr. Summerfield is the third member of the cabinet to undergo major surgery in recent weeks. The other two, of course, are Secretary of Defense Wilson and Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Wilson already is back on the job.

And now here is that report we promised you from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv. He recorded it this evening, on returning from a trip to the Jordanian and Syrian frontiers.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This might be called notes from a week-end of wanderings through Israel. I can report that Armageddon was quiet on Armistice Day. The small brown birds still fly in formation. There is a hotelman here near the Sea of Galilee, who wants me to tell you that Isreel remains a fine place for a winter holiday. He is right, (indistinct) to have been told. Just across the lake there is a collective farm, a kibbutz. For most of the past two weeks, the children there have been sleeping in the air raid shelters. They don't mind it as much as the adults. It's something of an adventure.

There is bougainvillia growing around the entrance to the air raid shelters. The kids get their exercise jumping over trenches and crawling under the barbed wire. The shepherds tend their flocks with rifles on their shoulders. The place is just about a mile from the Syrian border.

There is no fishing on the Sea of Galilee right now; the men are standing watch.

Up north, about fifteen miles, just below the Lake of Ulah.(?) the Syrian and Israeli lines are about 300-yards apart. Barbed wire, mines, field telephones, trenches, pill boxes, all the gear and paraphenalia of war, except the shooting. And occasionally at night, there's a little bit of that.

A day old newspaper says a spokesman of our Defense Department says violence on the Syrian-Jordanian border may erupt at any time. He's quite right. At night, you can hear the Syrian horses (indistinct) and horses' hoovs on the road to Damascus. It's a quiet front (indistinct) before the armistice. The Israelis say they are not going to start anything up there. And they are exceedingly careful not to do anything that might draw fire. There may be peace on the fronti r with Egypt. But the silence is very uneasy up north. A fighter pilot tells you the Mystere.. did very well against the MIG's, at low altitude. He tells you, too, that the original plan for disrupting telephone lines, in the Sinai, didn't work. They were going to trail wires and hooks behind the aircraft and pull the wires down. But it didn't work. So they flew old P-51's, right down on the desert, and shoot up the lines with the propellers. He said it was (indistinct) - they didn't lose a plane. And the Egyptians lost their telephone lines.

There was also time on this wandering week-end to (?) something of a big picture. All of it, of course, from the Israeli point of view. Here is a summary of the way it was: There will be no peace with Egypt so long as that country is ruled by a dictator, who is under the complete domination of a foreign power, which means Russia. Israel has made no decision about pulling out of the Gaza Strip, or about staying. In other words, it remains a bargaining point. Meanwhile, most of the Egyptian war material captured there has been rushed bask to Israel.

What is the most important thing to be done right now? The answer given here is, - the reareation of some unity within the free world. For Israel feels herself a part of that world, realized that the Russians have won a great victory in the Middle East, and appreciates that the free world is now divided and that time for the creation for a new joint policy is desperately short.

The Israelis have won small military victories. They do not overrate its importance. It has eased the pressure on one flank. They are determined not to be provoked into attacking elsewhere. For they suspect that the Russians are merely waiting for such an excuse to intervene. At the same time, they're appalled at the victory Russia has won in this area. They do not believe that this is the end of the road. They believe that Russia will now exploit Western differences, and try to create a pretext, after a reasonable interval, for supporting and directing an attack against Israel.

This Israeli Army, like most armies, wants to go home. But it doesn't think it's going to soon. Israeli leaders do not think they have control of the situation. They believe that America might determine the outcome. And (indistinct) reported that civilian and military leaders here to not think that we will do it.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: Mr. Murrow will remain in Israel for several days more and will continue his reports. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: In celebrating veterans day the thoughts of many have turned to the precarious international situation. In an address today Chief Justice Earl Warrem dwelt on the world cirsis and drew from it the lesson that we must be alert to intolerance and cruelty wherever it arises, at home, as well as abroad, "in our states, in our cities, in our neighborhoods." "Unless we keep such acts of intolerance in our minds eye", he said, "freedom can be endangered."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Tues., Nov. 13, 1956

Good evening:

Soviet Marshal Rokossovsky has been fired as [redacted] Polish minister of defense. He also loses his position as deputy premier. Rokossovsky was unpopular because of his pro-Russian ~~attitude~~ orientation, and his ouster from the new Titoist government of Poland had been widely predicted. He is succeeded by a Polish general who was imprisoned during the Stalin era and was only recently rehabilitated. Several other officials, including the minister of education, are also out. And in still another move, the Polish Parliament abolished the [redacted] secret police. In view of recent developments in [redacted] Hungary, the Polish government either showed great courage or Moscow has agreed to the further liberalization of a key satellite state.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold has postponed his trip to Cairo for 24 hours. He was to have left by air late this afternoon. Hammarskjold delayed his departure in order to confer with Hungarian officials, here in New York, on the question of U.N. relief for Hungary. The Hungarian puppet government spoke today of using United Nations assistance "on the spot", indicating that U.N. personnel may be allowed to ~~[illegible]~~ enter Hungary on a relief mission. ~~Only last night, the Hungarian government flatly refused to allow U.N. observers into Hungary.~~ But ~~that,~~ of course, was for the purpose of ~~investigating the intervention~~ of Russian troops and the ~~suppression of freedom~~ in Hungary.

→

~~Today... in the regular General Assembly... the steering committee voted to ~~[illegible]~~ have the assembly give prime consideration to the Hungarian question. The vote was 11 to 2, with Russia and Czechoslovakia opposed. The committee also voted to place the Middle East question on the assembly agenda. ~~[illegible]~~ ~~that~~ vote was unanimous.~~ The Hungarian + Middle East. The General ~~And the full~~ Assembly has now agreed to take up ~~both~~ these questions in its current regular session.

Reports persist tonight that a top-level Soviet delegation... headed by Nikita Khrushchev... is in Budapest, trying to effect a formula for saving the thoroughly despised puppet government. All day, the Budapest radio has been appealing to workers ~~[illegible]~~ to return to their jobs, but, so far, the appeal has gone unheeded. The rebels are fighting back the best way they know how---by means of a general strike. With few exceptions, the guns are silent.

The flight of Secretary General Hammarskjold to Egypt was delayed, and so was the departure... from Italy... of the first units of the United Nations police force. It's now reported that they will leave their staging area, for Egypt, a couple of hours from now at the earliest. The reason for the delay was given as "technical difficulties", but it's thought that the conditions imposed by Egypt for the operation of the international police force may have been a factor. The conditions... announced last night by the Cairo radio... were that the force would have no duties in the canal zone after the withdrawal of British and French troops, that its work would then be confined to the 1949 armistice line between Israel and Egypt, and that Egypt could say how long the U.N. police force might stay. French Foreign Minister Pineau said in Paris today that British and French troops will stay in the canal area "until they have been relieved by the international force at every essential point." In Washington, the French ambassador told reporters that his government does not recognize any conditions Egypt may have laid down. And British newspapers are calling the Egyptian conditions "impossible".

Meanwhile, the first United Nations observers... 12 in all... did arrive in Port Said today to supervise the cease-fire. They were brought in from Haifa and are not to be confused with members of the U.N. police force. Until today, they were part of the truce-observer corps in Palestine.

The government of Iraq called today for the elimination of Israel. The official Iraqi statement said Israel must be "removed" from the Middle East for the sake of security and peace.

Israel reported today that Arab commandos have stepped up their attacks during the past 24 hours. Several installations were blown up, and one Israeli was killed. In a minute or two, we will have another report from Edward R. Murrow in Tel Aviv. ~~In this report tonight, Murrow sums up the observations he has made in Israel during the past~~ WEEK AND A HALF.

In Washington, the Indian ambassador said today that Prime Minister Nehru "probably" will visit President Eisenhower before the end of the year. The ambassador made the statement after a brief call at the White House. He said an announcement... setting the exact date of the long-postponed meeting... will be made within a week.

The Senate Democratic leader... Lyndon Johnson... told a news conference today that the new 85th Congress will be "productive and responsible." He called the U.N. police force "a temporary expedient to prevent the outbreak of large-scale war." The real question, he said, is where we go from here. "Apparently we are still searching for a long-term policy." He said he regards Senator Mansfield of Montana as "an excellent choice" for Senate Democratic whip, succeeding Senator Clements who failed to win re-election. And there's not much doubt Mansfield will get that job.

Tomorrow morning, President Eisenhower will hold his first news conference since the election. Today, he accepted the resignation of his chief economic adviser, Dr. Arthur Burns, with "great reluctance". Burns said he was resigning for personal reasons.

ENFORCEMENT OF

Bus segregation in Alabama was outlawed today by the United States Supreme Court. The decision... upholding the ruling of a special lower court...was unanimous. The lower court had declared the laws requiring segregation on intra-state buses... and on the Montgomery, Alabama bus system... unconstitutional. The effect of the Supreme Court decision would seem to be the outlawing of segregation on all bus lines. The first reaction of state officials in both Alabama and Mississippi is SOMEWHAT DEFIANT. Governor Coleman of Mississippi said his state will continue to practice segregation on its public conveyances. "Our attitude," he said, "is the same as that regarding school segregation." Public schools in Mississippi are still segregated, notwithstanding the Supreme Court ruling of 1954, prohibiting such segregation.

In his report tonight, Edward R. Murrow sums up the observations he has made in Israel during the past week and a half. We switch now by recording to Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

(Tape runs 4:45
Ends on cue: "This is Ed Murrow
in Tel Aviv."

(folo murrow)

Yesterday Mr. Murrow had an interview with Israel's Prime Minister, David Ben Gurion. In the course of it he observed that it must have been a difficult decision to pull the Israeli forces out of Sinai. X Ben Gurion replied "It was not so difficult when I had the assurance, as I understood it, by the President of the United States, that international force will be placed in the zone of the canal and not allow the return of the assasins into the desert of Sinai to continue their murderous attacks." This is the first time Mr. Ben Gurion has ~~hinted~~ said that he believed he had such an understanding. The full recording of Mr. Murrow's frank and important conversation with the Prime Minister of Israel can be heard over most of these stations at five minutes past ten tonight, Eastern time.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

xxxxxx In London today a man was in court, charged with being drunk. He admitted it, but said "This is not a normal thing for me... You see, for a long time I was a member of the Communist Party."... He spoke of his sense of guilt over what happened in Hungary, and went on, "It has been said that alcholol is a great salver of conscience. I was drunk last night. Let that suffice." He was fined ten shillings -- the equivalent of a dollar forty.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, November 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. There is a saying in this country that in order to be a realist, you must believe in miracles. No miracles have happened out here recently. It was merely seven-day war, conducted by an army and Air Force that know how to plan, to gamble and to improvise. They even used old American pre-war trainers, carrying 16 rockets to bust Russian-bult tanks. The Egyptian Air Force put in what might be called a token appearance. None of their bombers were seen. This reporter has looked at every major battlefield and it's clear that the Egyptians were miserably led. In many cases didn't fight; and when they did it was frequently in the wrong place. But that as a war is over, and the leaders here are looking to the future. They have no idea what happened to the British and French (?) efforts at the canal. But they agree that the result will be a severe and perhaps fatal blow to the waning prestige of those two countries in the Middle East.

The military and political leaders of Israel have no illusions about the scope or magnitude of their victory. They realize that they are (indistinct) in terms of world opinion, that their future is in jeopardy. But that has been true since the days the state was created. Since July of 1950 the Israelis have lost more in killed and wounded as a result of border raids and terrorist activities than they lost in this seven-day war. But during this period it was a flickering fire between Israel and her neighboring Arab States, with the Big Powers either standing aloft or intervening only timidly and in a limited fashion. (indistinct) Israel was determined to exist - and the Arabs were determined that the State should be destroyed. That situation still exists. Only more so, on both sides. But something new has been added.

The Russians are in the Middle East - and the alliance of free nations is split wide open. For centuries the Russians have wanted a toehold in the Middle East. Now they are here with both feet. For ten years they have wanted to split the Western alliance - and that has been done. That is why the Israeli leaders now say that their fate is no longer in their own hands. They will fight if necessary. And it will be a horrifying example of human courage. But they do not expect a major miracle. They do not expect the Russians to quietly go away. They believe that Russia has won her greatest postwar victory ~~in~~ here in the Middle East and that the victory will be exploited. They expect increasing pressure on their frontiers with Jordan and Syria. They expect the Russians to use every propaganda device to place themselves in a position of the big brother to the Arabs, to try to provoke Israel into an attack where she can be branded as an aggressor.

The Israelis for their part are taking quite extraordinary measures to avoid an outbreak of open warfare on those fronts. But the Israeli leaders, military and political, do not delude themselves. People who are accustomed to look to their weapons each night do not hesitate to look at facts. And as they read the facts of recent weeks the Russians have won an incredible and inexpensive victory. The little Israeli military victory is of no importance compared to it. As these Israeli leaders see it, their course is chartered. The Russians are about to take over the Middle East. They (indistinct) a country out here which is free. The Russians are not interested in freedom, but in power, and they will have no hesitation in sacrificing Israel to Arab nationalism and Russian purposes.

No one here pretends to know if Israel can withstand the economic and military pressure which is just over the horizon. Maybe they can. Maybe a minor miracle will save them, temporarily. What they hope for is some kind of arrangement which will make it possible for them to live. They recognize and they admit, privately, that unless unity can be reestablished in the free world their prospect is to battle alone against Communist-dominated states. And they are inclined to think that's the way it will be.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Tuesday, November 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. There is a saying in this country that in order to be a realist, you must believe in miracles. No miracles have happened out here recently. It was merely seven-day war, conducted by an army and Air Force that know how to plan, to gamble and to improvise. They even used old American pre-war trainers, carrying 16 rockets to bust Russian-bult tanks. The Egyptian Air Force put in what might be called a token appearance. None of their bombers were seen. This reporter has looked at every major battlefield and it's clear that the Egyptians were miserably led. In many cases didn't fight; and when they did it was frequently in the wrong place. But that as a war is over, and the leaders here are looking to the future. They have no idea what happened to the British and French (?) efforts at the canal. But they agree that the result will be a severe and perhaps fatal blow to the waning prestige of those two countries in the Middle East.

The military and political leaders of Israel have no illusions about the scope or magnitude of their victory. They realize that they are (indistinct) in terms of world opinion, that their future is in jeopardy. But that has been true since the days the state was created. Since July of 1950 the Israelis have lost more in killed and wounded as a result of border raids and terrorist activities than they lost in this seven-day war. But during this period it was a flickering fire between Israel and her neighboring Arab States, with the Big Powers either standing aloft or intervening only timidly and in a limited fashion. (indistinct) Israel was determined to exist - and the Arabs were determined that the State should be destroyed. That situation still exists. Only more so, on both sides. But something new has been added.

The Russians are in the Middle East - and the alliance of free nations is split wide open. For centuries the Russians have wanted a toehold in the Middle East. Now they are here with both feet. For ten years they have wanted to split the Western alliance - and that has been done. That is why the Israeli leaders now say that their fate is no longer in their own hands. They will fight if necessary. And it will be a horrifying example of human courage. But they do not expect a major miracle. They do not expect the Russians to quietly go away. They believe that Russia has won her greatest postwar victory here in the Middle East and that the victory will be exploited. They expect increasing pressure on their frontiers with Jordan and Syria. They expect the Russians to use every propaganda device to place themselves in a position of the big brother to the Arabs, to try to provoke Israel into an attack where she can be branded as an aggressor.

The Israelis for their part are taking quite extraordinary measures to avoid an outbreak of open warfare on those fronts. But the Israeli leaders, military and political, do not delude themselves. People who are accustomed to look to their weapons each night do not hesitate to look at facts. And as they read the facts of recent weeks the Russians have won an incredible and inexpensive victory. The little Israeli military victory is of no importance compared to it. As these Israeli leaders see it, their course is chartered. The Russians are about to take over the Middle East. They (indistinct) a country out here which is free. The Russians are not interested in freedom, but in power, and they will have no hesitation in sacrificing Israel to Arab nationalism and Russian purposes.

No one here pretends to know if Israel can withstand the economic and military pressure which is just over the horizon. Maybe they can. Maybe a minor miracle will save them, temporarily. What they hope for is some kind of arrangement which will make it possible for them to live. They recognize and they admit, privately, that unless unity can be reestablished in the free world their prospect is to battle alone against Communist-dominated states. And they are inclined to think that's the way it will be.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

Soviet Marshal Rokossovsky has been fired as Polish minister of defense. He also losed his position as deputy premier. Rokossovsky was unpopular because of hse pro-Russian orientation, and his ouster from the new Titoist government of Poland had been widely predicted. He is succeeded by a Polish general who was imprisoned during the Stalin era and was only recently rehabilitated. Several other officials, including the minister of education, are also out. And in still another move, the Polish Parliament abolished the secret police. In view of recent developments in Hungary, the Polish government either showed great courage or Moscow has agreed to the further liberalization of a key satellite state.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarksjold has postponed his trip to Cairo 24 hours. He was to have left by air late this afternoon. Hammarskjold delayed his departure in order to confer with Hungarian officials, here in New York, on the question of U.N. relief for Hungary. The Hungarian puppet government spoke today of using United Nations assistance "on the spot", indicating that U.N. personnel may be allowed to enter Hungary on a relief mission.

The General Assembly has now agreed to take up both the Hungarian and middle eastern questions in its current regular session.

Reports persist tonight that a top-level Soviet delegation ..headed by Nikita Khrushchev..is in Budapest, trying to effect a formula for saving the thoroughly despised pupped government. All day the Budapest radio has been appealing to workers to return to their jobs, but so far, the appeal has gone unheeded. The rebels are fighting back the best way they know how -- by means of a general strike. With few excpetions, the guns are silent.

The flight of Secretary General Hammarskjold to Egypt was delayed, and so was the departure..from Italy..of the first unit of the United Nations police force . It's now reported that they will leave their staging ares, for Egypt, a couple of hours from now at the earliest. The reason for the delay was given as "technical difficulties." but it's thought that the conditions imposed by Egypt for the operation of the international police force may have been a factor. The conditions..announced last night by the Cairo radio---were that the force would have no duties in the canal zone after the withdrawal of the British and French troops, that its work would then be confined to the 1949 armistice line between Israel and Egypt, and that Egypt could say how long the U.N. police force might stay. French Foreign Minister Pineau said in Paris today that British and French troops will stay in the canal area "until they have been releived by the international force at every essential point." In Washington, the French ambassador told reporters that his govennment does not recognize any conditions Egypt may have laid down. AndBritish newspapers are calling the Egyptian condioions "impossible."

Meanwhile, the first United Nations observers...12 in all..did arrive in Port Said today to supervise the cease-fire. They were brought in from Haifa and are not to be confused with members of the U.N. police force. Until today, they were part of the truce-observer corps in Palestine.

The government of Iraq called today fro the elimination of Israel. The official Iraqui statement said Israel must be "removed" from the Middle East for the sake of security and peace.

Israel reported today that Arab commandos have stepped up their attacks during the past 24 hours. Several installations were blown up, and one Israeli killed. In a minute or two, we will have another report from Edward R. Murrow in Tel Aviv.

In Washington, the Indian ambassador said today that Prime Minister Nehru "probably" will visit President Eisenhower before the end of the year. The ambassador made the statement after a brief call at the White House. He said an announcement ..setting the exact date of the long- postponed meeting.. will be made within a week.

The Senate Democratic leader..Lyndon Johnson..told a news conference today that the new 85th Congress will be "productive and responsible." He called the U.N. police force "a temporary expedient to prevent the outbreak of large-scale war." The real question, he said, is where we go from here. "Apparently" we are still searching for a long-term policy." He said he regards Senator Mansfield of Montana as "an excellent choice" for Senate Democratic whip, succeeding Senator Clements who failed to win re-election. And there's not much doubt that Mansfield will get that job.

Tomorrow morning, President Eisenhower will hold his first news conference since the election. Today, he accepted the resignation of his chief economic adviser, Dr. Arthur Burns, with "great reluctance." Burns said he was resigning for personal reasons.

Enforcement of bus segregation in Alabama was outlawed today by the United States Supreme Court. The decision.. upholding the ruling af a special lower court..was unaminous. The lower court had declared the laws requiring segregation on intra-state buses..and on the Montgomery, Alabama bus system, unconstitutional. The effect of the Supreme Court decision would seem to be the outlawing of segregation on all bus lines. The first reaction of state officials in both Alabama and Mississippi is somewhat defiant.

In his report tonight, Edward R. Murrow sums up the observations he has made in Israel during the past week and a half. We switch now by recording to Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. There is a saying in this country that in order to be a realist, you must believe in miracles. No miracles have happened out here recently. It was merely seven-day war, conducted by an army and Air Force that know how to plan, to gamble and to improvise. They even used old American pre-war trainers, carrying 16 rockets to bust Russian built tanks. The Egyptian Air Force put in what might be called a token appearence. None of their bombers were seen. This reporter has looked at every major battlefield and it's clear that Egyptians were miserably led. In many cases didn't night; and when they did it was frequently in the wrong place. But that as a war is over, and the leaders here are looking to the future. They have no idea what happened to the British and French efforts at the canal. But they agree that the result will be a severe and perhaps fatal blow to the waning prestige of those two countries, in the Middle East.

The military and politidal leaders of Israel have no illusions about the scope of magnitude of their victory. They realize that they are (indistinct) in terms of world opinion, that their future is in jeopardy. But that has been true since the days the state was created. Since July of 1950 the Israelis have lost more men in killed and wounded as a result of border raids and terrorist activities than they lost in this seven-day war. But during this period it was a lickerin fire between Israel and her neighboring Arab States, with the Big Powers either standing aloft or invervening only timidly and in a limited fashion . (indistinct) Israel was determined to exist - and the Arabs were determined that the State should be destroyed. That situation still exists Only more so, on both sides. But something now has been added. The Russians are in the Middle East - and the alliance of free nations is split wide open. For centuries the Russians havd wanted a toehold in the Middle East. Now they are here with both feed. For ten years they have wanted to split the Western alliance - and that has been done. That is why the Israeli leaders now say that their fate is no longer in their own hands. They will fight if necessary. And it will be a horrifying example of human courage. But they do not expect a major miracle. They do not expect the Russians to quietly go away. They believe that Russia has won her greatest postwar victory here in the Middle East and that the victory will be exploited. They expect increasing pressure on their frontiers with Jordan and Syria. They expect the Russians to use every propagands device to lace themselves in a position of the big brother to the Arabs, to try to provoke Israel into an attack where she can be branded as an aggressor.

The Israelis for their part are taking quite extraordinary measures to avoid an outbreak of open warfare on those fronts. But the Israeli leaders, military and political, do not delude themselves. People who are accustomed to look the their weapons each night do not hesitate to look at facts. And as they read the facts of recent weeks the Russians have won an incredible and inexpensive victory. The little Israeli military victory is of no importance compared to it. As these Israeli leaders see it, their course is chartered. The Russians are about to take over the Middle East. They (indistinct) a country out here which is free. The Russians are not interested in freedom, but in power and they will have no hesitation in sacirficing Isreel to Arab nationalism and Russian purposes.

No one here pretends to know if Israel can withstand the economic and military pressure which is just over the horizon. Maybe they can. Maybe a minor miracle will save them, temporarily. What they hope for is some kind of arrangement which will make it possible for them to live. They recognize and they admit, privately, that unless unity can be reestablished in the free world their prospect is to battle alone againsst Communist - dominated states. And they are inclined to think that's the way it will be.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel viv.

COLLINGWOOD: Yesterday Mr. Murrow had an interview with Israel's Prime Minister, David Ben Gurion. In the course of it he observed that it must have been a difficult decision to pull the Israeli forces out of Sinai. Ben Gurion replied, "It was not so difficult when I had the assurance, as I understood it, by the President of the United States that international force will be placed in the zone of the canal and not allow the return of the assassins into the desert of Sinai to continue their murderous attacks." This is the first time Mr. Ben Gurion has said that he believed he had such an understanding. The full recording of Mr. Murrow's frank and important conversation with the Prime Minister of Israel can be heard over most of these stations at five minutes past tne tonight, Eastern time.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News, but first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: In London today a man was in court, charged with being drunk. He admitted it, but said "This is not a normal thing for me..You see, for a long time I was a member of the Communist Party"...He spoke of his sense of guilt over what happened in Hungary and went on, "It has been said that alachol is a great salver of conscience. I was drunk last night. Let that suffice." He was fined ten shillings -- the equivalent of a dollar forty.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Nov. 14, 1956

Good evening:

The Middle East situation may have taken a turn for the worse. President Nasser reportedly has appealed to Russia to send its volunteer forces to Egypt at once. The first report of this came from CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr in Moscow. Here is that first word as we received it by short-wave, here in New York.

Tape runs :40
Ends on cue: "The volunteers include 265--" then garble as Moscow censor cuts Schorr off.

Shprtly after that report, which... as you could hear... was cut off by the Moscow censor, there was another report from Moscow carried by the Associated Press. It reported substantially the same story as Schorr, that the Egyptian Embassy in Moscow had requested the immediate dispatch of Russian volunteers. The A.P. said only that it got its information from "an Arab source". There is no official confirmation of the report from wither the Egyptian or Soviet government. It is recalled, however, that the Egyptian ambassador to Moscow said earlier this week that 50-thousand Russians had volunteered to fight at Egypt's side. And tonight the Moscow radio said again that the Soviet government would not "prevent" the departure of Russian volunteers to Egypt. "The hearts of all the Soviet people," the broadcast said, "are throbbing with anger. The U.S.S.R. with its 200-million people, China with its 600-million, and many other peoples are behind you, dear Egyptian friends." This Moscow broadcast was beamed to the Middle East in Arabic. We had two reports today from Daniel Schorr in Moscow. The other report concerned the role being played in this by the Soviet press. Here is what Schorr said:

Tape runs :45
Ends on cue: "---how serious is her threat."

That time, Schorr was permitted to read through to the end of his piece. We were talking a little while ago with our correspondent, Frank Kearns, in Cairo. Kearns said there is no confirmation in Cairo of the report that Egypt has requested the immediate dispatch of Russian volunteers. But, he said, the Cairo radio tonight is giving full coverage to the remarks President Eisenhower made on this subject today at his news conference in Washington. In fact, the Cairo radio devoted almost half its 30-minute news report to what Mr. Eisenhower said. H ere, by recording, is the President's statement on the subject of volunteers, and what the United States proposes to do about it if, indeed, Russian volunteers are sent to Egypt. First, the reporter's question:

Tape runs 1:30
Ends on cue: "--it would depend upon the circumstances."

Mr. Eisenhower's statement that the United Nations "is not by any manner of means limited to resolutions and in one instance at least showed that it was not so limited" is taken as an unmistakable reference to United Nations intervention in Korea. The President went on to say that this is simply not the time for a summit meeting with Russia's leaders. The United Nations, he said, must be given the opportunity to work out a settlement. And he expressed conviction that once the current crisis in the Middle East is settled, the United States, Britain and France will emerge stronger allies than ever. The United States, he said, still wants to be friends with both Israel and the Arab states. He denied that American Middle East policy had been allowed to "drift". He said he knew no reason why the qualified offer of frontier guarantees made last year by Secretary of State Dulles should be withdrawn... indicating that that offer still stands. He had high praise for the peace efforts of Secretary General Hammarskjold. He praised him as a man of tremendous physical stamina who has proved his ability in diplomacy.

That skill in diplomacy will soon be given a new test. Early this evening, Hammarskjold left New York by air on a dramatic mission to the Middle East. His destination is Cairo, but he will stop off in Rome tomorrow for consultations with the commander of the United Nations police force, General Burns. Hammarskjold has ordered the first elements of that police force to start moving to Egypt. For the past three days they have been encamped at a staging area near Naples, waiting for that signal. The advance force... made up of troops from Norway and Denmark... is expected to take off BEFORE daybreak tomorrow. An Egyptian

SIN PLUG

Ed Murrow is going to have another special program from Israel tonight. Last night he presented an illuminating interview with Israel's Prime Minister Ben Gurion. Tonight he'll be discussing the military situation with Israel's top commanders. Y ou can hear this program, which was done with a special See It Now unit during Mr. Murrow's current visit to the Middle East, at five minutes past ten tonight, Eastern Standard Time, OVER MOST OF THESE STATIONS.

spokesman at the United Nations is quoted as saying that Egypt has agreed to all the necessary details. Still another report says a number of provisions remain to be worked out. This is a rather large question mark. We should soon know the answer. INSERT SIN

Shortly before his departure from New York, Hammarskjold called on Communist Hungary to reconsider its refusal to allow U.N. observers into the country. He also conferred... at United Nations headquarters... with the Hungarian foreign minister on whether he could accompany a United Nations relief mission into Hungary. And Hammarskjold... in an extremely busy day... held other hurried conferences with French Foreign Minister Pineau and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd.

In New Delhi today, the prime ministers of four Asian countries issued a joint communique condemning the Soviet action in Hungary... and what it called "the aggression and intervention by the great powers against weaker countries in the Middle East." The statement was an expression by Prime Minister Nehru of India and the prime ministers of Burma, Indonesia, [redacted]a and Ceylon. They stated that Soviet forces should be withdrawn from Hungary "speedily", so as to leave the Hungarian people free to decide their own future. They welcomed the establishment of a United Nations police force in the Middle East... but said it should be a temporary arrangement.

INSERT UP

The last armed resistance to the Russians ended today in Budapest. The gallant rebel force holding out on Csepel Island since Sunday laid down its arms after Soviet tanks had seized all strategic points. But the general strike continues. Workers refused to return to the factories and renewed their demands for withdrawal of the Red Army.

The Budapest radio... in a remarkably candid broadcast... confirmed that captured freedom-fighters are being shipped by train to Russia. Perhaps to Siberia. The Budapest radio did it in the course of an explanation of why Hungarian railroad workers are on strike.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the reported deportations are being given "urgent consideration". He did not say what steps... if any... this country may take.

At his news conference, President Eisenhower called the Soviet action in Hungary "a negation of all justice and right in the world." The American people, he said, are appalled by what has happened there. And he said the United States is doing everything possible to help... through the United Nations and by rushing relief aid. But the United States, he said, does not now.... and never has... advocated armed revolt against overwhelming odds.

→

A delegation of Polish leaders... including party boss Gomulka... left Warsaw today for consultations in Moscow. Gomulka is a champion of Polish independence (within limits) as well as a Communist. While in Moscow he is expected to try to have the number of Russian troops stationed in Poland reduced.

The news conference President Eisenhower held today was his first since the election, but no political question was asked until after it had been going on for more than a quarter of an hour. Mr. Eisenhower said that, in his view, the failure to elect a Republican congress showed Americans are not yet convinced that "modern Republicanism" is going to be the guiding philosophy of the Republican Party. He said in the next four years he would work "incessently"... through persuasion... to put his concept across.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news ——— But first, Here is George Bryson

FOOTNOTE

At his news conference today President Eisenhower gave his philosophy of leadership, a subject which had come up during the campaign. "I am not one of the desk-pounding type," he said "that likes to stick out his jaw and look like he is bossing the show. I would rather try to persuade a man to go along, because once I have persuaded him he will stick. If I scare him, he will stay just as long as he is scared, and then he is gone."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD..... SEE YOUTOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - SCHORR IN MOSCOW, AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

~~ANNOUNCER:~~ Schorr The Middle Eastern crisis has taken a grave new turn tonight. I am reliably informed that the Egyptian Embassy here has received orders from Cairo to ask for the volunteers that Russia has offered; and that this request is being relayed to the Soviet government. If the Soviet statements of recent days mean anything, the request will be complied with. There's reason to believe that the volunteers will be formed into units here and receive their equipment here. An Egyptian source told me "We don't have equipment for them in Egypt." The volunteers include 265 (unintelligible). As a buildup for any action that may be taken, the Soviet people were being told in the press tonight that France and Britain have no immediate intention of withdrawing their troops from Egypt; and that France and Britain are trying to seize the Suez Canal by setting up an international Canal Authority. The Soviet Union has threatened, in Premier Bulganin's letters to Eden, Mollet and Ben-Gurion, to act unless there is an immediate withdrawal. And now Russians are being told that there'll apparently be no immediate withdrawal. The meaning of this is plain. If anyone thought the Soviet threat to send so-called volunteers was a bluff, it is clear the time is now at hand when Russia will show how serious is her threat.

* * * * * * * * * *

REPORTER: As you have said that it is the duty of all United Nations members, including the United States, to oppose the intervention of any new forces in the Middle East, does this apply to the intervention on the side of Egypt by so-called volunteers from the Soviet Union or Communist China?

EISENHOWER: I believe we said that the introduction of any armed forces in the area of conflict, or arms or munitions, so - I am not going to say that the United States would make a unilateral determination of exactly what the offense was, if any. Again/we -- I believe I stated in that statement that it would be the duty of the United Nations, which would include the United States, to oppose such an effort. So that if the United Nations - we would again try to be their supporters in any such action.

REPORTER: Mr. President, Schwepp (?) of the United Press. How then would our - would our form of opposition to aggression in the Middle East, or the introduction of new armed forces in the Middle East, be more correct. What form would our opposition take, beyond simply subscribing to resolutions in the UN?

EISENHOWER: Well, I can't tell what it would be. But the United Nations, if you'll read its charter, is not by any manner of means limited to resolutions, and in one instance, at least, showed it was not so limited. So I don't know exactly what we'll do. It depends upon the circumstances.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - SCHORR IN MOSCOW, AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

ANNOUNCER: The Middle Eastern crisis has taken a grave new turn tonight. I am reliably informed that the Egyptian Embassy here has received orders from Cairo to ask for the volunteers that Russia has offered; and that this request is being relayed to the Soviet government. If the Soviet statements of recent days mean anything, the request will be complied with. There's reason to believe that the volunteers will be formed into units here and receive their equipment here. An Egyptian source told me "We don't have equipment for them in Egypt." The volunteers include 265 (unintelligible) As a buildup for any action that may be taken, the Soviet people were being told in the press tonight that France and Britain have no immediate intention of withdrawing their troops from Egypt; and that France and Britain are trying to seize the Suez Canal by setting up an international Canal Authority. The Soviet Union has threatened, in Premier Bulganin's letters to Eden, Mollet and Ben-Gurion, to act unless there is an immediate withdrawal. And now Russians are being told that there'll apparently be no immediate withdrawal. The meaning of this is plain. If anyone thought the Soviet threat to send so-called volunteers was a bluff, it is clear the time is now at hand when Russia will show how serious is her threat. * * * * * * * * * * *

REPORTER: As you have said that it is the duty of all United Nations members, including the United States, to oppose the intervention of any new forces in the Middle East, does this applmy to the intervention on the side of Egypt by so-called volunteers from the Soviet Union or Communist China?

EISENHOWER: I believe we said that the introduction of any armed forces in the area of conflict, or arms or munitions, so - I am not going to say that the United States would make a unilateral determination of exactly what the offense was, if any. Again/- we -- I believe I stated in that statement that it would be the duty of the United Nations, which would include the United States, to oppose such an effort. So that if the United Nations - we would again try to be their supporters in any such action.

REPORTER: Mr. President, Schwepp (?) of the United Press. How then would our - would our form of opposition to aggression in the Middle East, or the introduction of new armed forces in the Middle East, be more correct. What form would our opposition take, beyond simply subscribing to resolutions in the UN?

EISENHOWER: Well, I can't tell what it would be. But the United Nations, if you'll read its charter, is not by any manner of means limited to resolutions, and in one instance, at least, showed it was not so limited. So I don't know exactly what we'll do. It depends upon the circumstances.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good Evening:

The Middle East situation may have taken a turn for the worse. President Nasser reportedly has appealed to Russia to send its volunteer forces to Egypt at once. The first report of this came from CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr in Moscow. Here is that first word as we received it by short-wave, here in New York.

SCHORR: The Middle Eastern crisis has taken a grave new turn tonight. I am reliably informed that the Egyptian Embassy here has received orders from Cairo to ask for the volunteers that Russia has offered; and that this request is being relayed to the Soviet government. If the Soviet statements of recent days mean anything, the reuuest will be complied with. There's reason to believe that the volunteers will be formed into units here and receive their equipment here. An Egyptian source told me "We don't have equipment for them in Egypt." The volunteers include 265 (garbled as Moscow cesnsor cuts him off)

COLLINGWOOD: Shortly after that report, which...as you could hear..was cut off by the Moscow censor, there was another report from Moscow carried by the Associated Press. It reported substantially the same story as Schorr, that the Egyptian Embassy in Moscow had requested the immediate dispatch of Russian volunteers. The A.P. said only that it got its information from "an Arab source." There is no official confirmation of the report from either the Egyptian or Soviet government. It is recalled, however, that the Egyptian ambassador to Moscow said earlier this week that 50-thousand Russians had volunteered to fight at Egypt's side. And tonight the Moscow radio said again that the Soviet government would not "prevent" the departure of Russian volunteers to Egypt. "The hearts of all the Soviet people," the broadcast said, "are throbbing with anger. The U.S.S.R. with its 200-million people, China with its 600-million, and many other peoples are behind you, dear Egyptian friends." This Moscow broadcast was beamed to the Middle East in Arabic. We had two reports today from Daniel Schorr in Moscow. The other report concerned the role being played in this by the Soviet press. Here is what Schorr said:

SCHORR: As a buildup for any action that may be taken, the Soviet people were being told in the press tonight that France and Britain have no immediate intention of withdra in their troops from Egypt; and that France and Britain are trying to seize the Suez Canal by setting up an international Canal Authority. The Soviet Union has threatened, in Premier Bulganin's letters to Eden and Mollet and Ben-Gurion, to act unless there is an immediate withdrawal. The meaning of this is plain. If anyone thought the Soviet threat to send so-called volunteers was a bluff, it is clear the time is now at hand when Russia will show how serious is her threat.

COLLINGWOOD: That time, Schorr was permitted to read through to the end of his piece. We were talking a little while ago with our correspondent, Frank Kearns, in Cairo. Kearns said there is no confirmation in Cairo of the report that Egypt has requested the immediate dispatch of Russian volunteers. But, he said, the Cairo radio tonight is giving full coverage to the remarks President Eisenhower made on this subject today at his news conference in Washington. In fact, the Cairo radio devoted almost half its 30-minute news report to what Mr. Eisenhower said, Here, by recording, is the President's statement on the subejet of volunteers, and what the United States proposed to do about it if, indeed, Russian volunteers are sent to Egypt.

First, here is the reporter's question.

REPORTER: As you have said that it is the duty of all United Nations members, including the United States, to oppose the intervention of any new forces in the Middle East, does this apply to the intervention of the side of Egypt by so-called volunteers from the Soviet Union of Communist China?

EISENHOWER: I believe we said that the introduction of any armed forces in the area of conflict, or arms or munitions, so I am not going to say that the United States would make a unilateral determination of exactly what the offense was, if any. Again -- I believe I stated in that statement that it would be the duty of the United Nations, which would include the United States, to oppose such an effort. So that if the United Nations - we would again try to be their supporters in any such action.

REPORTER: Mr. President, Schwepp (?) of the United Press. How then would our - would our form of opposition to aggression in the Middle East, or the introduction of new armed forces in the Middle East, be more correct. What form would our oppostionn take, beyond simple subscribing to the resolutions in the UN?

EISENHOWER: Well, I can't tell what it would be. But the United Nations, if you'll read its charter, is not by any manner of means limited to resolutions, and in one instance, at least, showed it was not so limited. So I don't know exactly what we'll do. It depends upon the circumstances.

COLLINGWOOOD: Mr. Eisenhower's statement that the United Nations "is not by any manner of means limited to resolutions and in one instance at least showed that it was not so limited" is taken as an unmistakable reference to United Nations intervention in Korea. The President went on to say that this is simply not the time for a summit meeting with Russia's leaders. The United Nations, he said, must be given the opportunity wo work out a settlement. And he expressed conviction that once the current crisis in the Middle East is settled, the United States, Britain and France will emerge stronger allies than ever. The United States, he said, still wants to be friends with both Israel and the Arab states. He denied that American Middle East policy had been allowed to "drift" He said he knew no reason why the qualified offer of frontier guarantees made last year by Secretary of State Dulles should be withdrawn..indicating that that offer still stands. He had high praise for the peace efforts of Secretary General Hammarskjold. He praised him as a man of tremendous physical stamina who has proved his ability in diplomacy.

That skill in diplomacy will soon be given a new test. Early this evening, Hammarsjkjold left New York b air on a dramatic mission to Middl East. His destination is Cairo, but he will stop of in Rome tomorrow for consultations with the commander of the United Nations police force, General Burns. Hammarskjold has ordered the first elements of that police force to start moving to Egypt. For the past three days they have been encamped at a staging area near Naples, waiting for that signal. The advance force..made up of troops from Norway and Denmark..is expected to take off before daybreak tomorrow. An Egyptian spokesman at the United Nations is quoted as saying that Egypt has agreed to all the necessary details. Still another report says a number of provisions remain to be worked out. This is a rather large question mark We should soon know the answer.

Ed Murrow is going to have another special program from Israel tonight. Last night he presented an illuminating interview with Israel's Prime Minister Ben Gurion. Tonight he'll be discussing the military situation with Israel's top commanders. You can hear t is program, which was done with a special See It Now unit during Mr. Murrow's current visit to the Middle East, at five minutes past ten tonight, Eastern Time, over most of these stations.

Shortly before his departure from New York, Hammarskhold called on Communist Hungary to reconsider its refusal to allow U.N. observers into the country. He also conferred at United Nations headquarters..with the Hungarian foreign minister on whether he could accompany a United Nations relief mission into Hungary. And Hammarsjkjold..in an extremely busy day..held other hurried conferences with French Foreign Minister Pineau and the British foreign Secretary, Selwyn Lloyd.

In New Delhi today, the prime ministers of four Asian countries issued a joint communique condemning the Soviet action in Hungary..and what it called "the aggression and intervention by the great powers against weaker countries in the Middle East. The statement was an expression by Prime Minister Nehru of India, and the prime ministers of Burma, Indonesia, and Ceylon. They stated that Soviet forces whould be withdrawn from Hungary "speedily" , so as to leave the Hungarian people free to decide their own future. They welcomed the establishment of a United Nations police force in the Middle East..but said it whould be a temporary arrangement.

The last armed resistance to the Russians ended today in Budapest. The gallant rebel force holding out on Csepel Island since Sunday laid down its arms after Soviet tanks had siezed all strategic points. But the general strike continues, Workers refused to return to the factories and renewed their demands for wihdrawal of the Red Army.

The Budapest radio..in a remarkably candid broadcast...confirmed that captured freedom fighters are being shipped by train to Russia. Perhaps to Siberia. The Budapest radio did it in the course of an explanation of why Hungarian railroad workers are on strike.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the reported deportations are being given "urgent consideration." He did not say what steps..if any.. this ountry may take.

At his news conference, President Eisenhower called the Soviet action in Hungary "a negation of all justice and right in the world." The American people, he said, are appalled by what has happened there. And he said the United States is going everything possible to help..through the United Nations and by rushing relief aid. But the United States, he said, does not now... and never has..advocated armed revolt against overwhelming odds.

A delegation of Polish leaders..including party boss Gomulka..left Warsaw today for consultations in Moscow. Gomulka is a champion of Polish independence (within limits) as well as a Communist. While in Moscow he is expected to try to have the number of Russian troops stationed in Poland reduced.

The news conference President Eisenhower held today was his first since the election, but no political question was asked until after it has been going for more than a quarter of an hour. Mr. Eisenhower said that, in spite of his own landslide victory, in his view, the failure to elect a Republican congress showed Americans are not yet convinced that "modern Republicansim" is going to be the guiding philospphy of the Republican Party. He said in the nest four years he would work "incessently" ..thoough persuasion.... to put his concept across.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: At his news conference today President Eisenhower gave his philosophy of leadership, a subject which had come up during the campaign. "I am not one of the desk-pounding type," he said "that likes to stick out his jaw and look like he is bossing the show. I would rather try to persuade a man to go along, because once I have persuaded him he will stick. If I scare him, he will stay just al long as he is scared, and then he is gone."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Nov. 15, 1956

Good evening:

Soviet Premier Bulganin sent a new series of notes today to the British, French and Israeli governments. Bulganin expressed satisfaction over the cessation of hostilities... but demanded that Egypt be compensated for damage incurred in the fighting. "I believe," he said in his note to Prime Minister Eden, "that at the present moment our common aim is not to fan the conflict." Bulganin said Russia no longer opposes the idea of a U.N. police force. But... at the same time... he supported Egypt's demand that the police force be stationed, not in the canal zone, but along the armistice line drawn between Egypt and Israel in 1949. We're told that only in his note to Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel did Bulganin use language that was threatening. Bulganin demanded that Israel return to Egypt all the property it seized in the Sinai Penninsula. Israel's "aggression" against Egypt, he said, raises the question of the continued existence of Israel as a state. This is the language of the note to Ben Gurion according to an authoritative source in Moscow. But the Moscow radio... in broadcasting the text of the note... uses slightly different phraseology. It reports the note as saying Israel's policy is dangerous for the cause of peace and "most perilous" for Israel. In either case, there is the veiled threat. Bulganin again demanded the immediate withdrawal from Egypt of all British, French and Israeli troops---he made that demand in all three of the notes he got off today. But he made no mention of possible Soviet intervention. No mention of the possibility of sending in Russian "volunteers".

Last night, we had reliable reports that President Nasser had asked to have these volunteer forces sent to Egypt at once. The reports were based mmm on a statement made by an Arab diplomat in Moscow. Today a spokesman for the Egyptian Embassy in Moscow said there appeared to have been "a slight misunderstanding". The Egyptian spokesman said Egypt wants to abide by the United Nations decisions and will ask for the Soviet volunteers only if British, French and Israeli troops fail to withdraw promptly. He did not define "promptly".

In Paris tonight, a spokesman for the French Foreign Ministry said the Bulganin messages are designed to hamper United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold in his new Middle East mission. Hammarskjold arrived in Rome today on his way to Cairo. He conferred with General Burns, the commander of the U.N. police force, for more than two hours and then made an on-the-spot inspection of the staging area, near Naples, where members of the international police force are being airlifted to Egypt. He is due to take off for Cairo in the morning. Before then, he may confer with Hungarian representatives. The Hungarian government informed Hammarskjold today that its representatives would be willing to discuss the subject of United Nations relief for Hungary, while he was in Rome. The question of allowing U.N. observers into Hungary, to investigate the suppression of liberty there, might also be discussed.

A three-day meeting of Arab leaders ended today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. Eight Arab countries were represented by their heads of state. At the conclusion of their talks, they issued a joint communique demanding the "immediate and unconditional" withdrawal from Egypt of all invading forces. The communique warned that unless these forces pull out at once, the Arab countries will take "effective measures to the maximum of their capabilities." Behind the public display of unity there are reports of disunity. Informed sources say the conference disagreed on plans for a complete embargo on Anglo-French trade. Also, Iraq and Lebanon are said to have favored negotiations with the West out of fear that as long as the quarrel with Israel is not settled there will be danger of Russian penetration.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli cabinet met today to discuss what a government spokesman described as "urgent political questions". These questions may have concerned the new Bulganin note. At the United Nations, the Israeli ambassador... Abba Eban... described a captured Egyptian document which, he said, called for the destruction of Israel. The order allegedly instructed Egyptian Army commanders to prepare themselves for "fulfilling our exalted aim, the annihilation of Israel." Eban said the document was distributed to Egyptian Army officers in February.

The United States accused Britain and France today of using American military equipment in their attack on Egypt in violation of mutual defense agreements. The Defense Department said the equipment was supplied "for the defense of the North Atlantic Treaty area" and that representations have been made to the British and French governments for diverting it to the support of operations against Egypt.

Britain and France followed the lead of the United States today and turned down the Swiss proposal for a summit meeting to be attended by India as well as the "Big Four" powers. The western position is that the time is not ripe for such a meeting. Only Russia and India accepted the Swiss invitation.

The Yugoslav government has RELEASED the text of an important speech which Marshal Tito made on Sunday. Tito was addressing a group of party "activists"... and he said Russia's decision to use tanks against the Hungarian people was "a fatal error." Tito said that as recently as last month he had warned Soviet leaders of their "erroneous attitudes" regarding Hungary and Poland. He had warned, he said, that all traces of Stalinism would have to be eliminated. But this was not done. Tito expressed confidence that the Russian rulers would now profit from their unhappy experience. "I am deeply persuaded," he said, "that conrades in the Soviet Union will have their horizons cleared, and will see it is impossible to go on like this."

In Hungary tonight, the rebellion against the Communist puppet government goes on in the form of a general strike. A little while ago, CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reported from Vienna the desperation with which the Kadar regime is trying to retrieve the situation---through promises. Here is that recorded report:

Tape runs 1:50
Ends on cue: "---to C.C. in NY."

Polish Communist Party Chief Gomulka sat down with his advisers in Moscow today to negotiate with the Russian leaders. CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr has some pointed observations on that story, and so let's switch now by recording to Dan Schorr in Moscow.

Tape runs 2:16
Ends on cue: "--to C.C. in NY."

Ed Murrow has concluded his visit to the Middle East and will return to this microphone tomorrow. With the first-hand knowledge he has gained he will be able to discuss the unfolding drama of these days with special insight and understanding. As for me, it has been as always, a very real pleasure to take this chair while Mr. Murrow has been away.

But I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS G. Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

Even in a time of crisis, the small concerns of life are important. Thus, in the midst of the Middle Eastern turmoil the village elders of the town of Arufa IN ISRAEL turned aside from the drama which is engaging the attention of the world to forbid the sale of unshucked peanuts in movie theatres. Not only, they said, does the cracking of the shells make noise, but the floors get covered with shucks. Then they turned back to the danger on their borders.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... ED MURROW WILL SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM -

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

~~SCHORR:~~ Leiser: ... Promise them free elections; promise them non-Communist parties if the Soviet troops will withdraw as soon as order is restored; promise to abolish the secret police and deportations; promise them almost anything to end this passive resistance and stop calling world attention to Hungary. This seems to be the substance of Russia's order to its puppet Premier in Budapest, Janos Kadar, today. With the Soviets in full military possession of the country, it's the only way of explaining his amazing radio address this morning, a speech that offers concession after concession to end the Hungarian general strike. It was the fierce patriotism of the Hungarians that forced National Communist Imre Nagy to make similar concessions that ended in the break with Moscow. Now, even with Russian tanks planted all over the country, it's that same spirit that forced Kadar to say he'll carry out virtually all the promises Nagy had made.

On one promise, the most important, free elections, Kadar hedged today. Although he called for free and secret elections, he later said only those parties in what he called "principle agreement with Socialism" could be admitted to the ballot. Still it was incredible to hear him admit over the same Budapest radio that the Communists might expect a bloody beating at election. What Kadar promised today goes far beyond anything that National Communist Gomulka has offered the people of Poland, if the promises can be believed. But no reporter who watched the Soviet sack of Budapest can avoid a certain scepticism. As Kadar himself warned the people that Hungarian neutrality was what he called "a vain wish". But it's just that vain wish that is helping to keep the fighters of opposition burning in Hungary tonight. Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

MURROW PROGRAM - SCHORR IN MOSCOW

SCHORR: The front page editorial salutes about eternal friendship and the forging of closer ties, which are customary in the Soviet press when a foreign government delegation comes to Moscow, these were missing today as the representatives of the Polish government and party arrived here. Instead, the Soviet press suddenly shifted its main emphasis from the Middle East to reports of reactionary atrocities so-called, in Hungary, as though to provide an object lesson to Gomulka and his collegues. Gomulka, who stressed at the railway station that a solution must be found of international problems without war, hardly needed the hint. The Polish government has been under severe pressure, Soviet military pressure, in recent days. And Polish sources tell me that Gomulka's proposals to the Soviet leaders will be very modest, or as one Pole put it: "The things that we consider feasible." There will be no demand for withdrawal of Soviet troops from Poland, but a request that they be concentrated in specific places. It will be suggested that the Warsaw Pact powers be convened as soon as possible, and that Poland be permitted to benefit from any concessions made to Hungary. There'll be economic requests, a million tons of wheat on credit, a consolidation of outstanding short-term loans, some compensation for the coal that Poland has delivered to Russia until 1953 and an agreement that future trade will be at world market prices. Also they want some understanding that Poland will be able to get economic aid from the West. There will, of course, be emphasis on Polish independence and the right to pursue their own course toward Socialism. But Gomulka has no dream of this course making Poland a second Yugoslavia. He needs Soviet support to retain the territory that Poland acquired from Germany. He wants a little more elbow room within the Communist bloc but has no present aspirations of getting out. In the Polish delegation, especially after Hungary, the accent is on the words "feasible" and "practical". This is Daniel Schorr in Moscow, now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM -

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

~~SCHORR:~~ Leiser: ... Promise them free elections; promise them non-Communist parties if the Soviet troops will withdraw as soon as order is restored; promise to abolish the secret police and deportations; promise them almost anything to end this passive resistance and stop calling world attention to Hungary. This seems to be the substance of Russia's order to its puppet Premier in Budapest, Janos Kadar, today. With the Soviets in full military possession of the country, it's the only way of explaining his amazing radio address this morning, a speech that offers concession after concession to end the Hungarian general strike. It was the fierce patriotism of the Hungarians that forced Nationalist Communist Imre Nagy to make similar concessions that ended in the break with Moscow. Now, even with Russian tanks planted all over the country, it's that same spirit that forced Kadar to say He'll carry out virtually all the promises Nagy had made.

On one promise, the most important, free elections, Kadar hedged today. Although he called for free and secret elections, he later said only those parties in what he called "principle agreement with Socialism" could be admitted to the ballot. Still it was incredible to hear him admit over the same Budapest radio that the Communists might expect a bloody beating at election. What Kadar promised today goes far beyond anything that National Communist Gomulka has offered the people of Poland, if the promises can be believed. But no reporter who watched the Soviet sack of Budapest can avoid a certain scepticism. As Kadar himself warned the people that Hungarian neutrality was what he called "a vain wish". But it's just that vain wish that is helping to keep the fighters of opposition burning in Hungary tonight. Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

MURROW PROGRAM - SCHORR IN MOSCOW

SCHORR: The front page editorial salutes about eternal friendship and the forging of closer ties, which are customary in the Soviet press when a foreign government delegation comes to Moscow, these were missing today as the representatives of the Polish government and party arrived here. Instead, the Soviet press suddenly shifted its main emphasis from the Middle East to reports of reactionary atrocities so-called, in Hungary, as though to provide an object lesson to Gomulka and his collegues. Gomulka, who stressed at the railway station that a solution must be found of international problems without war, hardly needed the hint. The Polish government has been under severe pressure, Soviet military pressure, in recent days. And Polish sources tell me that Gomulka's proposals to the Soviet leaders will be very modest, or as one Pole put it: "The things that we consider feasible." There will be no demand for withdrawal of Soviet troops from Poland, but a request that they be concentrated in specific places. It will be suggested that the Warsaw Pact powers be convened as soon as possible, and that Poland be permitted to benefit from any concessions made to Hungary. There'll be economic requests, a million tons of wheat on credit, a consolidation of outstanding short-term loans, some compensation for the coal that Poland has delivered to Russia until 1953 and an agreement that future trade will be at world market prices. Also they want some understanding that Poland will be able to get economic aid from the West. There will, of course, be emphasis on Polish independence and the right to pursue their own course toward Socialism. But Gomulka has no dream of this course making Poland a second Yugoslavia. He needs Soviet support to retain the territory that Poland acquired from Germany. He wants a little more elbow room within the Communist bloc but has no present aspirations of getting out. In the Polish delegation, especially after Hungary, the accent is on the words "feasible" and "practical". This is Daniel Schorr in Moscow, now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

Soviet Premier Bulganin sent a new series of notes today to the British, French and Israeli governments. Bulganin expressed satisfaction over the cessation of hostilities..but demanded that Egypt be compensated for damage incurred in the fighting. "I believe", he said in his note to Prime Minister Eden, "that at the present moment our common aim is not to fan the conflict." Bulganin said Russia no longer opposes the idea of a U.N. Police force. But..at the same time ...he supported Egypt's demand that the police force be stationed, not in the canal zone, but along the armistice line drawn between Egypt and Israel in 1949. We're told that only in his note to Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel did Bulganin use language that was threatening. Bulganin demanded that Israel return to Egypt all the property it seized in the Sinai Punninsula. Israel's "aggression" against Egypt, he said, raises the question of the continued existence of Israel as a state. This is the language of the note to Ben Gurion according to an authoritative source in Moscow. But the Moscow radio...in broadcasting the text of the note..uses slightly different phraseology. It reports that the note as saying Israel's policy is dangerous for the cause of peace and "most serious" foe Israel. In either case, there is the veiled threat. Bulganin again demanded the immediate withdrawal from Egypt of all British, French and Israeli troops -- he made that demand in all three of the notes he got off today. But he made no mention of possible Soviet intervention. No mention of the possibility of sending in Russian "volunteers."

Last night, we had reliable reports that President Nasser has asked to have these volunteer forces sent to Egypt at once. The report were based on a statement made by an Arab diplomat in Moscow. Today a spokesman for the Egyptian Embassy in Moscow said there appeared to have been "a slight misunderstanding." The Egyptian spokesman said Egypt wants to abide by the United Nations decisions and will ask for the Soviet volunteers only if British, French and Israeli troops fail to withdraw promptly. He did not define "promptly."

In Paris tonight, a spokesman for the French Foreign Ministry said the Bulganin messages are designed to hamper United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold in his new Middle East mission. Hammarskjold arrived in Rome today on his way to Cairo. He conferred with General Burns, the commander of the U.N. police force, for more than two hours and then made an on-the-spot inspection of the staging area, near Naples, where members of the international police force are being airlifted to Egypt. He is due to take off for Cairo in the morning. Before then, he may confer with Hungarian representatives The Hungarian government informed Hammarskjold today that its representatives would be willing to discuss the subject of United Nations relief for Hungary, while he was in Rome. The question of allowing U.N. observers into Hungary to investigate the supression of liberty there, might also be discussed.

A three-day meeting of Arab leaders ended today in Beirut, the capital of Lebonon. Eight Arab countries were represented by their heads of state. At the conclusion of their talks, they issued a joint communique demanding the "immediate and unconditional" withdrawal from Egypt of all invading forces. The communique warned that unless these forces pull out at once, the Arab countries will take "effective measures to the maximum of their capabilites." Behind the public display of unity there are reports of disunity. Informed sources say the conference disagreed on plans for a complete embargo on Anglo-French trade. Also, Iraq and Lebanon are said to have favored negotiations with the West out of fear that as long as the quarrel with Israel is not settled there will be danger of Russian penetration.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli cabinet met today to discuss what a government spokesman described as "urgent political questions." These questions may have concerned the new Bulganin note. At the United Nations, the Israeli ambassador ..Abba Eban..described a captured Egyptian document which, he said, called for the destruction of Israel. The order allegedly instructed Egyptian Army commander to prepare themselves for "fulfilling our exalted aim, the annihilation of Israel." Eban said the document was distributed to Egyptian Army officers in February.

The United States accused Britain and France today of using Amrrican military equipment in their attack on Egypt in violation of mutual defense agreemnets. The defense Department said the equipment was supplied "for the defense of the North Atlantic Treaty area" and that representations have been made to the British and French governments for diverting it to the support of operations against Egypt.

Britain and France followed the lead of the United States today and turned down the Swiss proposal for a summit meeting to be attended by India as well as the "Big Four" powers. The western position is that the time is not ripe for such a meeting. Only Russia and India accepted the Swiss invitation.

The Yugoslav government has released the text of an important speech which Marshal Tito made on Sunday. Tito was addressing a group of party "activists" ...and he said Russia's decision to use tanks against the Hungarian people was "a fatal error." Tito said that as recently as last month he had warned Soviet leaders of their "erroneous attitudes" regarding Hungary and Poland. He had warned , he said, that all traces of Stalinism would have to be eliminated. But this was not done. Tito expressed confidence that the Russian rulers would now profit from their unhappy experience. "I am deeply persuaded," he said, "that comrades in the Soviet Union will have their horizons cleared, and will see it is impossible to go on like this."

In Hungary tonight, the rebellion against the Communist puppet government goes on in the form of a general strike. A little while ago, CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser reported from Vienna that desperation with which the Kadar regime is trying to retrieve the situation--through promises. Here is that recorded report:

LEISER: ...Promise them free elections; promise them non-Communist parties if the Soviet troops will withdraw as soon as order is restored; promise to abolish the secret police and deportations; promise them almost anything to end this passive resistance and stop calling world attention to Hungary. This seems to be the substance of Russia's order to its puppet Premier in Budapest, Janos Kadar, today. With the Soviets in full military possession of the country, it's the only way of explaining tis amazing radio address this morning, a speech that offers concession after concession to end the Hungarian general strike. It was the fierce patriotism of the Hungarians that forced National Communist Imre Nagy to make similar concessions that ended in the break with Moscow. Now, even with Russian tanks planted all over the country, it's that same spirit that forced Kadar to say he'll carry out virtually all the promises Nagy had made.

On one promise, the most important, free elections, Kadar hedged today. Although he called for free and secret elections, he later said only those parties in what he called "principle agreement with Socialism" could be admitted to the ballot. Still it was incredible to hear him admit over the same Budapest radio that the Communists might expect a bloody beating at election. What Kadar promised today goes far beyond anything that National Communist Gomulka has offered the people of Poland, if the promises can be believed. But no reporter who watched the Soviet sack of Budapest can avoid certain scepticism. As Kadar himself warned the people that Hungarian neutrality was what he called "a vain wish". But it's just that vain wish that is helping to keep the fires of opposition burning in Hungary tonight. Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: Polish Communist Party Chief Gomulka sat down with his advisers in Moscow today to negotiate with the Russian leaders. CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr has some pointed observations on that story, and so let's switch now by recording to Dan Schorr in Moscow.

SCHORR: The front page editorial salutes about eternal friendship and the forging of closer ties, which are customary in the Soviet press when a foreign government delegation comes to Moscow, these were missing today as the representatives of the Polish government and party arrived here. Instead, the Soviet press suddenly shifted its main emphasis from the Middle East to reports of reactionary atrocities so - called, in Hungary, as though to provide an object lesson to Gomulka and his colleagues. Gomulka, who stressed at the railway station that a solution must be found of international problems without war, hardly needed the hint. The Polish government has been under severe pressure, Soviet military pressure, in recent days. And Polish sources tell me that Gomulka's proposals to the Soviet leaders will be very modest, or as one Pole put it: "The things that we consider feasible." There will be no demand for withdrawal of Soviet troops from Poland, bur a request that they be concentrated in specific places. It will be suggested that the Warsaw Pact powers be convened as soon as possible, and that Poland be permitted to benefit from any concessions made to Hungary. There'll be economic requests, a million tons of wheat on credit, a consolidation of outstanding short-term loans, some compensation for the coal that Poland has delivered to Russia until 1953 and an agreement that future trade will be at world market prices. Also they want some understanding that Poland will be able to get economic aid from the West. There will, of course, be emphasis on Polish independence and the right to pursue their own course toward Socialism. But Gomulka has no dream of this course making Poland a second Yugoslavia. He needs Soviet support to retain the territory that Poland acquired from Germany. He wants a little more elbow room within the Communist bloc but has no present aspirations of getting out. In the Polish delegation, especially after Hungary, the accent is on the words "feasible" and practical." This is Daniel Schorr in Moscow, now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: Ed Murrow has concluded his visit to the Middle East and will return to this microphone tomorrow. With the first hand knowledge he has gained he will be able to discuss the unfolding drama of these days with special insight and understanding. As for me, it has been as always, a very real pleasure to take this chair while Mr. Murrow has been away.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News but first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

CLLLINGWOOD: Even in a time of crisis, the small concerns of life are important. Thus, in the midst of the Middle Eastern turmoil the village elders of the town of Arufa, in Israel, turned aside from the drama which is engaging the attention of the world to forbid the sale of unshucked peanuts in movie theatres. Not only they said, does the cracking of the shells make noise, but the floors get covered with shucks. They they turned back to the danger on their borders.

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow will see you tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 16, 1956

Karnow
Robert Osborn
Op-ed
77600
Kirkland

This is the news:

The United States today called on the United Nations General Assembly to take "an immediate initiative", to end the mass deportation of Hungarians to Russia. (CBS News learned reliably today, that 70-thousand Hungarians have been deported to the Soviet Union thus far). # Acting Secretary of State Hoover told the General Assembly, ~~on this policy speech~~ "We cannot remain silent while Hungarian men, women and children are forcibly deported because they dared to express their patriotic feelings." He described the Soviet deportations as "barbarism". And he indicated American support of a resolution introduced by Cuba, asking the Assembly to demand an end to the deportations, and the return from Russia of all Hungarian prisoners.

Mr. Hoover again warned Russia against sending "volunteer" troops to Egypt. ~~Such action~~ Such a move, he said, would... in fact... be a threat to the United Nations forces now entering the area. He said if Russian volunteers → were introduced into Egypt, the United Nations would be obligated to take "appropriate action". President Eisenhower, he said, has announced that the United States would fully support such action. This is a reference to the support Mr. Eisenhower expressed at his news conference on Wednesday. The President said... at that time... that action by the United Nations is not limited "by any manner of means" to subscribing to resolutions.

Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Egypt today and talked with President Nasser for an hour and 35 minutes. Hammarskjold told reporters afterward, "Today I am very silent." He will see Nasser again tomorrow and then fly back to New York. Presumably they are discussing the role to be played by the United Nations police force. The international police force in Egypt now totals 212---Colombians, Norwegians and Danes. Another 600 are standing by for take-off from Italy. And a Yugoslav contingent of 44 officers and men will be flown in tomorrow direct from Yugoslavia.

The British Foreign Office said tonight that the Egyptians have cut the water supply to Port Said. They accuse the Egyptians of breaching the Sweet Water Canal, which is the main source of drinking water in the city.

British authorities in Port Said announced that a joint Anglo-French command is being established to clear the Suez Canal. The announcement indicated that salvaging operations would be conducted beyond the immediate area of Port Said. For the Egyptian reaction to this development, we switch by recording to my colleague, Frank Kearns, in Cairo.

Tape runs 1:45
Ends on cue "--to Ed Murrow in NY."

35

~~CANAL CONDITIONS~~

~~TEL AVIV, ISRAEL, NOV. 16 (REUTERS)~~ The DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF THE ISRAELI DEFENSE MINISTRY ~~SHIMON PERES~~ TONIGHT LISTED THREE CONDITIONS FOR WITHDRAWAL OF ISRAELI FORCES FROM THE RECENTLY CAPTURED SINAI PENINSULA AND THE GAZA STRIP.

~~ADDRESSING A PUBLIC MEETING HERE, PERES, ONE OF THE CLOSEST AIDES OF PREMIER DAVID BEN GURION, SAID~~ THE CONDITIONS WERE:

1. A GUARANTEE THAT THE GAZA STRIP WOULD NOT BE USED AGAIN AS A BASE FOR FEDAYEEN (COMMANDOS) TO ATTACK ISRAEL.

2. A GUARANTEE THAT SINAI WOULD NOT BE REMILITARIZED AS A SPRING-BOARD FOR THE INVASION OF ISRAEL.

3. A GUARANTEE THAT EGYPT WOULD NOT RE-BLOCK THE ENTERPRISE CHANNEL, A NARROW STRAIT LINKING THE RED SEA AND THE GULF OF AKABA AND USED BY SHIPPING TO REACH THE ISRAELI PORT OF EILATH.

~~PERES TOLD REPORTERS THE ISRAELI THRUST SOUTHWARDS TWO WEEKS AGO WAS~~ "TO SECURE THE RIGHT OF ISRAEL TO SLEEP UNDISTURBED BY FEARS OF MURDEROUS GANGS, TO SECURE THE RIGHT OF ISRAELI SHIPS TO CROSS THE RED SEA STRAITS UNMOLESTED, AND TO DESTROY THE EGYPTIAN MILITARY SPRING-BOARD OF SINAI, FROM WHERE ~~THE OFFENSIVE AGAINST ISRAEL HAD BEEN PREPARED.~~"

MEANWHILE, AN ISRAELI ARMY SPOKESMAN ANNOUNCED THAT AT LEAST 10 ARABS WERE KILLED IN THE TOWNSHIP OF RAFFA IN THE SOUTHERN SECTOR OF THE GAZA STRIP WHEN ISRAELI TROOPS CLASHED WITH A RIOTING MOB LAST MONDAY.

THE SPOKESMAN, QUESTIONED ABOUT THE INCIDENT, SAID: "MOBS RIOTED IN THE TOWN APPARENTLY INCITED BY REMNANTS OF THE FEDAYEEN WHO PROMISED THE INHABITANTS THAT EGYPTIAN FORCES WERE ADVANCING TO OUST THE ISRAELIS FROM THE GAZA STRIP."

THE SPOKESMAN SAID THERE HAVE BEEN CASES OF FIRING AT ISRAELI SOLDIERS. THERE WAS ALSO RESISTANCE TO A SEARCH FOR ARMS.

THE SPOKESMAN SAID ISRAELI TROOPS HAD NO ALTERNATIVE BUT TO OPEN FIRE IN ORDER TO QUELL THE RIOTS.

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that the Anglo-French attack on Egypt "has let loose evil forces which are driving the world toward destruction." In apparent support of Egypt, Nehru said the "main task" of the international police force should be "to insure that Israel remains within the demarcation lines set by the old armistice agreement." He said the situation in Hungary deserves serious attention. "We are concerned," he said, "with the attack on freedom anywhere in the world."

In Tokyo, Foreign Minister Shigemitsu told the Japanese parliament that Britain and France had acted "in utter disregard of the universally accepted idea of not using war as an instrument of policy." He appealed to Russia to abide by the United Nations resolutions and end the suppression of freedom in Hungary.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly has put off the question of seating Red China for another year. The vote was 47 to 24, with eight abstentions. Krishna Menon of India had urged that the issue... whether the Chinese people should be represented by Communist or Nationalist China... be placed on the Assembly agenda for action at the current session. Speaking last night as a delegate for the United States, Senator Knowland said he was "shocked" that Menon had "apparently become the floor leader for the Soviet drive to bring Communist China into the United Nations." Today, Menon said that Knowland... in his remark... had done "a great disservice to the cause of international friendship."

President Eisenhower today held the first meeting of his cabinet since the election. White House News Secretary Hagerty said afterward that no mention of cabinet resignations was made while he was present. Cabinet members submit their resignations the day after election as a matter of custom.

The Navy said today that it will send another task force into the Atlantic on Monday for "training exercises" off the East Coast. The new aircraft carrier Saratoga will take part in the operation. The first task force... headed by the Forrestal... put to sea on November 7.

Attorney General Brownell today announced the indictment of 14 officials of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers on charges of conspiring to defraud the government. The union was expelled by the C.I.O. six years ago, on grounds it was Communist-dominated. According to the indictment, the union filed false affidavits, enabling it to secure the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

An estimated 60-thousand longshoremen went on strike today on the East and Gulf coasts, stranding more than 200 ships. The walkout is the result of a dispute between the International Longshoremen's Association, an independent union, and the New York Shipping Association, over wages, working rules, and length of a new contract. The old contract expired at midnight last night. Negotiations WILL RESUME TOMORROW.

Edward R. Murrow: November 16, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

At the time of the cessation of hostilities in the Middle East, Israeli leaders were convinced of three things: First, that the Russians without firing a shot had won their greatest post-war victory; second, that the only possibility of the free world regaining any substantial amount of its power or prestige in that area, was through a renewal or revival of free world unity; and third that the Russians could not afford a return to tranquility in the area. They expected that Russia, the Egyptians, Syria and Jordan would do everything possible to maintain tension, uncertainty and confusion. The Israelis said flatly that there could be no peace between Egypt and Israel so long as Egypt remained a dictatorship under the control of a foreign power, namely Russia.

The Egyptian press has been busily proclaiming that the puny U.N. force - equipped only with small arms - is there at the whim of Egypt; it must get out when Nasser says so. It is to be expected that Egypt will soon, with Russian backing, be demanding that Israel get out of Sinai and Gaza before the U.N. has sufficient forces available to act as traffic cops, much less patrol and maintain order on a long frontier.

It is not very helpful at this point to recall that the United Nations acted more promptly and vigorously in defense of the Egyptian dictator than it did on behalf of the Hungarian patriots. It contributes nothing to the solution of the present situation to remember that the Israelis were mercilessly provoked over a period of years, or that the British carried out one of the most fumbling and unco-ordinated military operations in their long history.

The fact is that no decision of a basic nature can now be taken in the Middle East without the consent of the Soviet Union. President Nasser remains in power, the future of the Canal in doubt - the Israelis cleared one frontier but may soon be subjected to increasing pressure and provocation on the others. Neither Britain, France nor Israel achieved their political or military objectives. The Russians attained theirs, both in the Middle East and in Hungary. Moreover, the isolation of the United States from its principal allies and its few remaining friends in the Middle East, has reached proportions that could not have been imagined one month ago. If the situation is to be retrieved, it will have to be done through the United Nations, for that apparently has become the chosen instrument of our policy.

The Russians may possibly have paid a price for their victory that is not yet apparent. Marshal Tito, who ought to have pretty good sources of information, thinks there is still a struggle going on inside the Kremlin between the Stalinists and those who want to take a gentler line. This may well be true, but the most apparent fact is that the Russians had to call on their army to put down the revolt in Hungary. No one knows whether the Red Army exacted a price for undertaking this butchery, but in the light of past practices in the Soviet Union it would not be surprising if they did. This could well mean an increase in the power of the army, and a possibility that Marshal Zhukov might do to Khrushchev what he has done to so many others.

There must also have occurred certain re-assessments of the purely military situation in Moscow. They have built up a huge armored striking force for use against the West. They apparently believed that the Hungarian armed forces and security police could maintain order. It is now estimated that two hundred thousand Hungarians in uniform defected. So the Russians had to use tanks . A Soviet armored division generally has only two thousand infantry with it, and these were frequently cut up or cut off . So the Russians now face the problem of either pulling back some of their armor and replacing it with infantry and motorized vehicles, or of risking the possibility of a similar outbreak. So they have both a military and political problem in Eastern Europe. That is another reason why they and their agents in the Middle East may be expected to keep the tension there as near the breaking point as they possibly can.

George Bryan

Word for Today

I was talking the other day with David Ben Gurion, the prime minister of Israel. Ben Gurion speaks quietly, lending force to his words in a manner of understatement, with restraint. He said quietly, "I am afraid that if peace will not be established in this area, I am not quite sure whether there will be peace in the world."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Friday, November 16, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

KEARNS: ... This is our seventeenth straight night of blackout in Cairo, and virtually all circles here are just as gloomy over tonight's report the British and French intend to start clearing the Suez Canal. President Nasser has already warned that no salvage operations will be permitted in the blocked waterway until the last foreign troops leave Egypt. And Egyptian quarters tonight point out that UN resolutions call upon all parties to help her (indistinct) to observe a strict cease-fire. Anglo-French forces might be able to start salvage operations at the northern end of the canal, they say, around the town of Port Said, which they hold. But the Egyptians warn any port in Suez one hundred miles to the south will be in for trouble. President Nasser has already ordered soldiers as well as armed civilians to open fire at once the minute British and French forces advance one inch. Also, if the British and French refuse to leave Egypt, if they in fact start moving towards Suez from the South or down the canal from the north Egyptians stress that seven other nations of the Arab world are pledged to come into the picture with force. And no source here discounts the possibility then of a long threatened Communist "volunteer" army pouring into Egypt.

One ominous postscript here tonight: according to an afternoon newspaper, still another Cairo embassy has decided to evacuate dependents, women who have children. The embassy - that of the Soviet Union.

This is Frank Kearns reporting from Cairo - now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States today called tn the United Nations General Assembly to take "an immediate initiative" to end the mass deportation of Hungarians to Russia. (CBS News learned reliably today that 70-thousand Hungarians have been deported to the Soviet Union thus far.

Acting Secretary of State Hoover told the General Assembly "We cannot remain silent while Hungarian men, women and children are forcibly deported because they dared to express their patriotic feelings." He described the Soviet deportations as "barbarism". And he indicated American support of a resolution introduced by Cuba, asking the Assembly to demand an end to the deportations and the return from Russia of all Hungarian prisoners.

Mr. Hoover again warned Russia against sending "volunteer" troops to Egypt. Such a move, he said, would..in fact..be a threat to the United Nations forces now entering the area. He said if Russian volunteers were introduced into Egypt, the United Nations would be obligated to take "appropriate action". President Eisenhower, he said, has announced that the United States would fully support such action. This is a reference to the support Mr. Eisenhower expressed at his news conference on Wednesday. The President said..at that time..that action by the United Nations is not limited "by any manner of means" to subscribing to resolutions.

Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Egypt today and talked with President Nasser for an hour and 35 minutes. Hammarskjold told reporters afterward, "Today I am very silent." He will see Nasser again tomorrow and then fly back to New York. Presumably they are discussing the role to be played by the United Nations police force. The international police force in Egypt now totals 212--Colombians, Norwegians and Danes. Another 600 are standing by for take-off from Italy. And a Yugoslav contingent of 44 officers and men will be flown in tomorrow, direct from Yogoslavia.

British authorities in Port Said announced that a joint Anglo-French command is being established to clear the Suez Canal. The announcement indicated that salvaging operations would be conducted beyond the immediate area of Port Said. For the Egyptian reaction to this development, we switch by re cording to my colleague, Frank Kearns, in Cairo.

KEARNS: This is our seventeenth straight night of blackout in Cairo, and virtually all circles here are just asl gloomy over tonight's report the British and French intend to start clearing the Suez Canal. President Nasser has already warned that no salvage operations will be permitted in the blocked waterway until the last foreign troops leave Egypt. And Egyptian quarters tonight point out that UN resolutions call upon all parties to help her (indistinct) to observe a strict cease-fire. Anglo-French forces might be able to start salvage operations at the northern end of the canal, they say, around the town of Port Said, which they hold. But the Egyptians warn any port in Suez one hundred miles to the south will be in for trouble. President Nasser has already ordered soldiers as well as armed civilians to open fire at once the minute British and French forces advance one inch. Also, if the British and French refuse to leave Egypt, if they in fact start moving towards Suez from the South or down the canal from the North Egyptians stress that seven other nations of the Arab world are pledged to come into the picture with force. An no source here discounts the possibility then of a long threatened Communist "volunteer" army pouring into Egypt.

One ominous postscript here tonight: according to an afternoon newspaper, still another Cairo embassy has decided to evacuate dependents, women who have children . The embassy -- that of the Soviet Union.

This is Frank Kearns reporting from Cairo--now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The director - general of the Israeli defense ministry tonight listed three conditions for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the recently captures Siana Peninsula and the Gaza strip. The conditions were: One, a guarantee that the Gaza Strip would not be used again as a base for Fedayeen (commandos) to attack Israel. Two, a guarantee that Sinai would not be remilitarized as a springboard for the invasion of Israel. Three, a guarantee that Egypt would not re-block the enterprise channel, a narrow strait linking the Red Sea and the gulf of Akaba and used by shipping to reach the Israeli port of Eilath.

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that the Anglo-French attack on Egypt "has let-loose evil forces which are driving the world toward destruction". In apparent support of Egypt, Nehru said the "main task" of the international police force should be "to insure that Israel remains within the demarcation lines set by the old armistice a reement." He said the situation in Hungary deserves serious attention. "We are concerned," he said, "with the attack on freedom anywhere in the world."

In Tokyo, Foreign Minister Shigemitsu told the Japanese parliament that Britain and France shd acted "in utter disragard of the universally accepted idea of not using war as an instrument of policy." He appealed to Russia to abide by the United Nations resolutions and end the suppression of freedom in Hungary.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly has put off the question of seating Red China for another year. The vote was 47 to 24, with eight abstentions. Krishna Menon of India had urged that the issue..whether Chinese the people should be represented by Communist or Nationalist China.. be placed on the assembly agenda for action at the current session. Speaking last night as a delegate for the United States, Senator Knowland said he was "shocked" that Menon had "apparently become the floor leader tor the Soviet drive to bring Communist China into the United Nations." Today, Menon said that Knowland ..in his remark..had done "a great disservice to the cause of international friendship."

An estimated 60-thousand longshormen went on strike today on the East and Gulf coasts, stranding more than 200 ships. The walkout is the result of a dispute between the International Longshoreman's Association, and an independent union, and the New York Shipping Association, over wages, working rules, and length of a new contract. The old contract expored at mignight last night. Negotiations will resume tomorrow.

At the time of the cessation of hostilities in the Middle East, Israeli leaders were convinced of three things: First, that the Russians without firing a shot, had won their greatest post-war victory; second, that the only possibility of the free wold regaining any substantial amount of its power or prestige in that area, was through a renewal or revival of free world unity; and third that the Russians could not afford a return to tranquility in the area. They expected that Russia, the Egyptians, Syrai and Jordan would do everything possible to maintain tension, uncertainty and confusion. The Israelis said flatly that there could be no peace between Egypt and Israel so long as Egypt remained a dictatorship under the control of a foreign power, namely Russia.

The Egyptian press has been busily proclaiming that the puny U.N. force - eq ipped only with small arms - is there at the whim of Egypt; it must get out when Nasser says so.

It is to be expected that gypt will soon, with Russian backing, be demanding that Israel get out of Sinai and Gaza before the U.N. has sufficient forces available to act as traffic cops, much less patrol and maintain order on a long frontier.

It is not very helpful at this point to recall that the United Nations acted more promptly and vigorously in defense of the Egyptian dicatotr than it did on behalf of the Hungarian patriots. It contributes nothing to the solution of the present situation to remember that the Israelis were mercilessly provoked over a period of years, or that the British carried out one of the most fumbling and uncoordinated military operations in their long history.

The fact is that no decision of a basic nature can now be taken in the Middle East without the consent of the Soviet Union. President Nasser remains in power, the future of the Canal in doubt - the Israelis cleared one frontier but may soon besubjected to increasing pressure and provocation on the others. Neither Britain, France nor Israel acheived their political or military objectives. The Russians atained theirs, both in the Middle East and in Hungary. Moreover, the isolation of the United States from itsprincipla allies and its few remaining friends in the Middle East, has reached proportions that could not have been imagined one month ago. If the situation is to be retrieved, it will have to be done through the United Nations for that apparently has become the chosen instrument of our policy.

The Russians may possible have paid a price for their victory that is not yet apparent. Marshal Tito, who ought to have pretty good sources of information, thinks there is still a struggle going on inside the Kremlin between the Stalinists and those who want to take a gentler line. This may well be true, but the most apparent fact is, that the Russians had to call on their army to put down the revolt in Hungary. No one knows whether the Red Army expected a price for undertaking this butchery but in the light of past practices in the Soviet Union, it would not be surprising if they did. This could well mean an increase in the power of the army, and a possibility that Marhsal Zhukov might do to Khrushchev what he has done to so many others.

There must also have occurred certain re-assessments of the purely military situation in Moscow. They have built up a huge armored striking force for use against the West. They apparently believed that the Hungarian armed forces and security police could maintain order. It is now estimated that two hundred thousand Hungarians in uniform defected. So the Russians had to use tanks. A Soviet armored division generally has only two thousand infantry with it, and there were frequently cut up, or cut off. So the Russians now face the problem of either pulling back some of their armor and replacing it with infantry and motorized vehicles, or of risking the possibility of a similar outbreak. So they have both a military and political problem in Eastern Europe. That is another reason why they and their agents in the Middle East may be expected to keep the tension there as near the breaking point as they possibly can.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: I was talking the other day with David Ben Gurion, the Prime Minister of Israel. Ben Gurion speaks quietly, lending force to his words in a manner of underatatement, with restraint. He said quietly, "I am afraid that if peace will not be established in this area, I am not quite sure whether there will be peace in the world."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Nov. 19, 1956

This is the news:

The United States accused Russia today... in the United Nations General Assembly... of deporting at least 16-thousand persons, in an effort to put down the Hungarian revolt. / American Ambassador Lodge said reports reaching the United States, indicate this movement is continuing, and he called on Russia to end the "inhumanity" at once. / Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov denied the reports... calling them an "outlandish invention". He said, if United Nations observers were allowed to enter Hungary to make a first-hand investigation, it could only endanger the peace. / Soviet troops will be withdrawn from Budapest, he said, as soon as the situation there is "normalized". / Lodge said that if Shepilov believed his own statement... that there were no deportations... then he should welcome an impartial United Nations investigation. Lodge, and other Western representatives, supported the Cuban resolution... ordering Russia to stop the mass deportation. The Cuban ambassador accused Russia of committing genocide. "Hungary," he said, "has become one big cemetery."

Dispatches from Hungary say that striking workers are going back to their jobs---not because they believe the promises of the puppet government but because of cold and hunger. Factory production is expected to be underway by the end of the week. "But," a western correspondent was told by one worker, "you can imagine what sort of production it will be."

Secretary General Hammarskjold returned to New York today, after two days of conferences with President Nasser in Cairo. Hammarskjold will report to the General Assembly on the outcome of these talks, probably tomorrow. He also conferred today with the commander of the United Nations police force, General Burns. Burns is scheduled to fly back to the Middle East tonight.

The cease-fire at Port Said was broken for about an hour today. The British-French command said the Egyptians fired on entrenched British and French troops in the same fashion as last night... when the action lasted for four hours. The Egyptians, for their part, have complained to the United Nations over alleged violations of the cease-fire by the British and French.

31

In Israel, the government is reported considering construction of an oil pipeline to by-pass the Suez Canal. The pipeline would be laid across Israel from the Gulf of Aqaba to the Mediterranean... and carry up to 20-million tons of oil a year. It would take about two years to build.

Marshal Tito was attacked today by the Soviet party newspaper Pravda for "tendencies to interfere in the affairs of other Communist states." Pravda cited Tito's speech of November 11th... calling for the elimination of all traces of Stalinism... and accused Tito of regarding Yugoslavia's "road to socialism" as the only true road. Pravda neglected to quote Tito's strongest statement---that the decision to call Soviet troops into Hungary was "a fatal error."

Reports from Belgrade say that Milovan Djilas, former Yugoslav vice president, has been arrested by the Tito government on charges of spreading hostile propaganda against the state. In a recent article in the New Leader Magazine, Djilas called the Hungarian revolution the beginning of the end of Communism. He said that Yugoslavia... by its example of independence... had initiated the "crisis of Soviet imperialism". Tito, on the other hand, has denied Yugoslav responsibility for the uprising in Hungary.

The British government announced tonight that Prime Minister Eden is suffering from "severe overstrain"... and has canceled his immediate public engagements. R.A. Butler, Lord Privy Seal, will preside over cabinet meetings in his absence.

Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce resigned today as American ambassador to Italy. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "great personal regret." Mrs. Luce requested that her retirement be made effective at the earliest convenient date. She said she needed "several months of real rest." ~~There is speculation that she may be succeeded by James Zellerbach, a San Francisco businessman who once served in Italy as an official of the Economic Cooperation Administration.~~

The White House announces that Prime Minister Nehru of India will arrive in Washington on December 16th. Nehru originally was scheduled to visit President Eisenhower in July... but the trip was postponed because of the President's attack of ileitis.

Attorney General Brownell today summoned the U.S. attorneys of 14 southern states to a conference in Washington on December 10th. The meeting is being held, Brownell said, to plan a course of "appropriate" action... on the basis of last week's Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation on public buses. The federal prosecutors were asked to bring copies of local or state laws relating to segregation... laws which Brownell said must now be regarded as "dead letter" because of the Supreme Court decision.

~~The Supreme Court today refused to hurry up its official notice of that decision, as requested by counsel for a Negro group in Montgomery, Alabama. The formal notice will go out by mail... as scheduled... around the middle of next month.~~

The White House called today for quick settlement of the dock strike. The walkout began last Friday on the East and Gulf coasts... as the result of a contract dispute between the International Longshoremen's Association and the New York shippers. The White House statement called on both sides "to recognize the obligations to their country and resolve their private differences over the bargaining table." West Coast longshoremen are conducting a 24-hour stoppage, as a demonstration of sympathy. The Association of American Railroads today embargoed all freight destined for shipment through the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, to prevent a pile-up of goods on the piers. The embargo does not apply to military freight.

~~[Rudolph Halley, former counsel for the Senate Crime Committee, died here in New York today of an acute digestive disorder. He was 43 years of age.]~~

Edward R. Murrow: November 19, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Whatever else is to be said about the Soviet disarmament proposals, they demonstrate that the Kremlin knows the art of distracting world attention to serve its own needs. The Soviet Union shocked friends and critics alike, by the way it crushed Hungary's fight for freedom. It shocked it in another way, by threatening rocket war against Britain and France, and proposing to flood the Middle East with volunteers. However guilty Britain, France and Israel may be of aggression, the Kremlin outbid them with threats of its own violence.

But with the twist of a wrist, the Soviet leaders change the picture, and make the world look at something else. This is known as "taking the diplomatic initiative." It is an art in which the Russians seem to excel.

The Kremlin must have unshakeable faith that people generally cannot understand the simplest elements of military power. For the disarmament proposals in the Soviet note, if the West accepted them, would give the Soviet Union the mastery over the land mass of Europe and most of Asia, and put Africa at its mercy. The West would become subservient without a single battle.

The one power deterring world conquest today, is atomic weapons. What would be the result if they were given up, as the Soviet government proposes? It would make the Soviet Union, with its numerically stronger and centrally-situated land forces, invincible. And even if the land forces were formally reduced, the ability of the Soviet Union and Red China to fight future wars with so-called volunteers, has made such reductions fairly meaningless.

The nature of war has changed in our time. It can become immediate world war by the unleashing of atomic weapons. But if atomic weapons are abolished, it can become localized war, in which the country with internal lines of communication, and the most population, is bound to win. That is what the Soviet Union offers. Not only does it want to wipe away all deterrent power, it proposes to put the fewer divisions of the West at the disadvantage of fighting without atomic weapons. That means going back to old-fashioned power, based solely on manpower and geography.

This is the crux of the Soviet offer. But its nature and meaning are kept well in the background of the Soviet note. In the foreground the Kremlin parades what looks like concessions. It starts by agreeing to what was originally a Western offer, the reduction of armed forces by the great powers, to a million or a million-and-a-half, of the second-rate powers to 650,000 and of the rest to 150,000 to 200,000. That in itself is no new offer. ~~New is~~ The proposal to reduce Western and Soviet forces in Germany by one-third in 1957 is new. In the same year the West is to reduce its forces in the NATO countries, the Soviet Union its forces in the Warsaw Pact countries. The note does not say how much, only that it shall be "a considerable reduction". Then in two years, all foreign military, air and naval bases in other states are to be abolished, which not only would be the end of deterrent power, but also of all collective military preparedness. And finally, there is to be a non-aggression pact between NATO and Warsaw pact countries, an idea which by itself is certainly unobjectionable.

The concession that is meant to loom largest, is in the field of inspection and control. There is a partial acceptance of the Eisenhower "open skies" plan. This, however, is a kind of diplomatic sleight of hand. The Kremlin would limit aerial photographic inspection to five hundred miles of territory on both sides of a demarcation line dividing East and West. This means inspection over most of Europe and none over the Soviet Union. It means inspection in a fairly de-militarized zone, not in an area where military forces are initially gathered, so as to give warning of preparations as they are begun, which was the purpose of the Eisenhower plan. So the Eisenhower plan has been accepted in name, but neither in purpose nor fact.

There is only one solid paragraph on controls in the note. That is, the language goes far enough, if the Soviet Union meant what it said. It proposes, in these words: "To establish for supervision over the fulfilment of the disarmament obligations assumed by the states, strict and effective international control, vested with all the powers and functions necessary for these purposes." However, experience has shown that when it comes to spelling out such language, the Soviet representative falls back on the veto power and unabridged sovereignty. There is no reason to expect more at this time.

However, the offer does inch the Soviet position forward a little, and for that reason it cannot be rejected out of hand. And, as in the past, it may take long and futile negotiations to find out whether the Kremlin is asking for everything, and giving up nothing, in terms of relative power, in making its offer.

George Bryan —

Word for Today

The latest Soviet proposal has little in it that is new. It stands up poorly under close scrutiny. But it cannot be ignored. Wendell Holmes took the long view. "The great thing in this world," he said, "is not so much where we are... but in what direction we are moving." Certainly in the field of disarmament, much patient negotiation lies ahead.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States accused Russia today..in the United Nations General Assembly..of deporting at least 16-thousand persons in an effort to put down the Hungarian revolt. American Ambassador Lodge said reports reaching the United States indicate this movement is continuing , and he called on Russia to end the "inhumanity" at once. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov denied the reports..calling them an "outlandish invention". He said if United Nations observers were allowed to enter Hungary to make a first-hand investigation, it could only endanger the peace. Soviet troops will be withdrawn from Budapest , he said, as soon as the situation there is "normalized." Lodge said that if Shepilov believed his own statement..that there were no deportations.. then he should welcome an impartial United Nations investigation. Lodge and other Western representatives supported the Cuban resolution..ordering Russia to stop the mass deportation. The Cuban ambassador accused Russia of committing genocide. "Hungary", he said, "has become one big cemetery."

Dispatches from Hungary say that striking workers are going back to their jobs -- not because they believe the promises of the puppet government, but because of cold and hunger. Factory production is expected to be underway by the end of the week. "But", a western correspondent was told by one worker, "you can imagine that sort of production it will be."

Secretary General Hammarskjold returned to New York today, after two days of conferences with President Nasser in Cairo. Hammarskjold will report to the General Assembly on the outcome of these talks, probably tomorrow. He also conferred today with the commander of the United Nations police force, General Burns. Burns is scheduled to fly back to the Middle East tonight.

The cease-fire at Port Said was broken for about an hour today. The British French command said the Egyptians fired on entrenched British and French troops in the same fashion at last night..when the action lasted for four hours. The Egyptians, for their part, have complained to the United Nations over alleged violations of the Cease-fire by the British and French.

In Israel, the government is reported considering construction of an oil pipeline to by-pass the Suez Canal. The pipeline would be laid across Israel from the Gulf of Aqaba to the Mediterranean..and carry up to 20-million tons of oil a year. It would take about two years to build.

Marshal Tito was attacked today by the Soviet party newspaper Pravda for "tendencies to interfere in the affairs of other Communist states." Pravda cited Tito's speech of November 11 h..calling for the elimination of all traces of Stalinism..and accused Tito of regarding Yugoslavia's "road to socialsim" as the only true road. Pravda neglected to quote Tito's strongest statement -- that the decision to call Soviet troops into Hungary was "a fatal error."

Reports from Belgrade say that Milovan Djilas, former Yugoslav vice president, has been arrested by the Tito government on charges of spreading hostile propaganda against the state. In a recent article in the New Leader Magazine, Djilas called the Hungarian revolution the beginning of the end of Communism. Hu said that Yugoslavia...by its example of independence..had initiated the "crisis of Soviet imperialism." Tito, on the other hand, has denied Yugoslav responsibility for the uprising in Hungary.

The British govennment announced tonight that Prime Minister Eden is suffering from "severe overstrain"...and has canceled his immediate public engatements. R. A. Butler, Lord Privy Seal, will preside over cabinet meetings in his absence.

Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce resigned today as American ambassador to Italy. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "great personal regret."

Mrs. Luce requested that her retirement be made effective at the earliest convenient date. She said she needed "several months of real rest."

The White House announces that Prime Minister Nehru of India will arrive in Washington on December 16th. Nehru originally was scheduled to visit President Eisenhower in July..but the trip was postponed because of the President's attack if ileitis.

Attorney General Brownell today summoned the U.S. Attorneys of 14 southern states to a conference in Washington on December 10th. The meeting is being held, Brownell said, to plan a course of "appropriate" action..on the basis of last week's Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation on public buses. The federal prosecutors were asked to bring copies of local or state laws relating to segregation..laws which Brownell said must now be regarded as "dead letter" because of the Supreme Court decision.

The White House called today for quick settlement of the dock strike. The walkout began last Friday on the East and Gulf coasts...as the result of a contract dispute between the International Longshoremen's Association and the New York shippers. The White House statement called on both sides "to recognize the obligations to their country and resolve their private differences over the bargaining table." West Coast longshoremen are conducting a 24-hour stoppage as a demonstration of sympathy. The Association of American Railroads today embargoed all freight destined for shipment through the Atlantic and Gulf coasts to prevent a pile-up of goods on the piers. The embargo does not apply to military freight.

Whatever else is to be said about the Soviet disarmament proposals, they domonstrate that the Kremlin knows the art of distracting world attention to serve its own needs. The Soviet Union shocked friends and critics alike, by the way it crushed Hungary's fight for freedom. It shocked it in another way, by threatening rocket war against Britain and France and proposing to flood the Middle East with volunteers. However guilty, Britain, France and Israel may be of aggression, the Kremlin outbid them with threats of its own violence.

But with the twist of a wrist, the Soviet leaders change the picture and make the world look at something else. This is known as "taking the diplomatic initiative." It is an art in which the Russians seem to excel.

The Kremlin must have unshakeable faith that people generally cannot understand the simplest elements of military power. For the disarmament proposals in the Soviet note, if the West accepted them, would give the Soviet Union the mastery over the land mass of Europe and most of Asia, and put Africa at its mercy. The West would become subservient without a single battle.

The one power deterring world conquest today is atomic weapons. What would be the result if they were given up, as the Soviet government proposes? It would make the Soviet Union, with its numerically stronger and centrally-situated land forces, invincible. And even if the land forces were formally reduced, the ability of the Soviet Union and Red China to fight future wars with so-called volunteers has made such reductions fairly meaningless.

The nature of war has changed in our time. It can become immediate world war by the unleashing of atomic weapons. But if atomic weapons are abolished, it can become localized war, in which the country with internal lines of communication, and the most population, is bound to win. That is what the Soviet Uionn offers. Not only does it want to wipe away all deterrent power, it proposes to put the fewer divisions of the west at the disadvantage of fighting without atomic weapons. That means going back to old-fashioned power based solely on manpower and geography.

This is the crux of the Soviet offer. But its nature and meaning are kept well in the background of the Soviet note. In the foreground the Kremlin parades what looks like concessions. It starts by agreeing to what was originally a Western offer, the reduction of armed forces by the great powers to a million or a million-and-a-half, of the second-rate powers to 650,000 and of the rest to 150,000 to 200,000. That in itself is no new offer. The proposal to reduce Western and Soviet forces in Germany by one-third in 1957 in new. In the same year the West is to reduce its forces in the NATO countries, the Soviet Union has forces in the Warsaw Pact countries. The note does not say how much, only that it shall be "a considerable reduction." Then in two years, all foreign military, air and naval bases in other states are to be abolished, which not only would be the end of deterrent power, but also of all collective military preparedness. And finally, there is to be a non-aggression pace between NATO and Warsaw pact countries, an idea which by itself is certainly unobjectionable.

The concession that is meant to loom largest, is in the field of inspection and control. There is a partial acceptence of the Eisenhower "open skies" plan. This, however, is a kind of diplomatic sleight of hand. The Kremlin would limit aerial photographic inspection to five hundred miles of territory on both sides of a demarcation line, dividing East and West. This means inspection over most of Europe and none over the Soviet Union. It means inspection in a fairly de-militarized zone, not in an area where military forces are initially gathered, so as to give warning of preparations as they are begun, which was the purpose of the Eisenhower plan. So the Eisenhower plan has been accepted in name, but neither in purpose nor fact.

However, the offer does inch the Soviet position forward a little, and for that reason it cannot be rejected out of hand. And, as in the past, it may take long and futile negotiations to find out whether the Kremlin is asking for everything, and giving up nothing, in terms of relative power, in making its offer.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The latest Soviet proposal has little in it that is new. It stands up poorly under close scrutiny. But it cannot be ignored. Wendell Holmes took the long view . "The great thing in this world," he said, "is not so much where we are...but in what direction we are moving." Certainly in the field of disarmament , much patient negotiation lies ahead.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Nov. 20, 1956

This is the news:

The report Secretary General Hammarskjold was to have made to the United Nations General Assembly today on the mission of the United Nations police force has been delayed. The secretary general is reported in disagreement with his advisory committee on the wording of the report. The wording... in one instance... is said to indicate that President Nasser would have the final say on where in Egypt the police force could be employed. It was reported earlier that Hammarskjold had agreed... in his talks with Nasser... to an Egyptian demand that the force leave the Suez Canal Zone after the British and French withdraw their troops. My colleague, Larry Lesueur (who is covering the story at United Nations headquarters) tells me that Britain and France have raised strong objection, that they feel that both the mission and the composition of the police force is being left in Nasser's hands. Lesueur says that... at this moment... some of the wording of Hammarskjold's report is being revised.

Today, (on the floor of the General Assembly,) Australia, New Zealand, Burma, Israel and Iraq urged that United Nations observers be allowed to enter Hungary. And a resolution demanding that the Hungarian government accede to that request, may be voted on late tonight. Such a resolution was introduced last night by Indonesia, India and Ceylon.

Secretary General Hammarskjold reported today that 34-thousand Hungarians have fled into Austria so far. Refugees, he said, are still crossing the frontier at the rate of 2-thousand a day. And he said at least 9-million dollars will be needed to care for them in the next six months.

The first Hungarian refugees to reach the United States will arrive at McGuire Air Force Base, New Jersey, around noon tomorrow. There will be 60 persons in the first group. Four other planeloads of refugees are expected before the end of the week.

STET

Dispatches from Budapest say that most workers who have gone back to the factories, are engaged in a sitdown strike. And the Budapest radio admits that guerrilla forces in northeastern Hungary are still operating at night.

Widespread violence broke out today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The French-owned Bank of Syria was bombed... and two unsuccessful attempts were made to blow up the presidential palace. / Last week, the president of Lebanon... Camille Chamoun... refused to break off diplomatic relations with Britain and France.

The Jordanian parliament today approved a recommendation that Jordan abrogate its 20-year defense treaty with Britain. / This is the treaty under which Britain has maintained bases in Jordan, and subsidized the Jordanian Army. The parliament also went on record as favoring establishment of diplomatic relations with Russia and Communist China.

In Egypt, the first contingent of the United Nations police force is about to move across no-man's-land from Egyptian-held territory, to the area of Port Said, which is held by the British and French. / The first group to take up actual policing duty, is composed of a company of Norwegian troops. They are due to take up their positions between the opposing forces in about five hours.

The British government today ordered a return to gasoline rationing, due to the blocking of oil shipments through the Suez Canal. / The order takes effect on December 17th. Motorists will be allowed only enough gasoline to drive 200 miles a month. Fuel oil for heating purposes will be cut 25 per cent as of December first.

Washington officials said today there will be no rationing of either gasoline or oil in the United States. But they conceded that an increased demand for American oil may result in higher prices.

The Italian ambassador conferred at the State Department today on the problem of stepping up American oil shipments to Western Europe. The Associated Press says Acting Secretary of State Hoover is "understood" to have promised 17 Western European countries help in meeting their emergency demands once they have outlined their specific requirements. Another Washington report is that the United States is waiting until such time as British and French troops withdraw from Egypt. Washington is reported fearful that shipment of American oil now would be interpreted by the Arab countries as support of the Anglo-French invasion... and that... in retaliation... oil installations in the Arab states might be destroyed.

Britain revealed today that on Thursday it will start demobilizing some of the reservists called up in connection with the Suez crisis. The government told the House of Commons that 6-thousand men will be released from service in the next three weeks.

Prime Minister Eden told Soviet Premier Bulganin today that Great Britain is "glad" that United Nations observers are on the scene in Port Said. Eden said: "The world would welcome similar action by the Soviet government in Hungary." Eden composed the brief message himself, despite doctors' orders for complete rest. (He was reported yesterday to be suffering from "severe overstrain"). The message was in reply to Bulganin's note of November 15th, demanding that Egypt be compensated for damage incurred in the fighting. Eden made no mention of compensation---ignored it completely.

General Norstad of the United States Air Force today took over as supreme commander of NATO... succeeding General Gruenther, who will become president of the American Red Cross. Norstad told a group of top NATO officers: "The Soviets have again demonstrated... perhaps more wantonly than ever before... that they understand only force. It is clear that our peaceful aims can be achieved only by maintaining our strength."

In Moscow today, Molotov... who is now first deputy premier... laid down the party line for Russian artists. He advised Soviet writers, musicians and painters to put in their creative work "a high level of Bolshevist content."

The Soviet government today ordered New York Times Correspondent Welles Hangen to leave Russia within a week. According to the Soviet news agency Tass, Hangen took pictures of some secret "hydro-technical" installations. ~~No comment yet from the Times correspondent.~~ Hangen says he had police permission

Today... in North Vietnam... the Communist-controlled radio said that "a number" of persons were killed or wounded last Tuesday in a clash between a group of villagers and Red troops. The villagers reportedly were protesting certain land-reform measures. This is the second time in a week that the North Vietnam radio has admitted unrest in that Communist state.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignations of two members of his official family---Roswell Perkins, assistant secretary of welfare, and William H. Jackson, his close adviser on matters pertaining to national security. Mr. Eisenhower accepted both resignations "with regret". WHite House News Secretary Hagerty hinted today that Governor Herter of Massachusetts may take an important position in the government after the first of the year. Herter's term as governor ends in January. There is speculation that Herter may succeed Winthrop Aldrich as ambassador to Britain, if [redacted] Aldrich steps out.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower is preparing to invoke the Taft-Hartley Act as a means of ending the five-day-old dock strike. The walkout [redacted] called by the [redacted] International Longshoremen's Association on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts is estimated to be costing the nation's economy 20-million dollars a day.

Not all the important or urgent issues are exposed in these days when history is being written at such speed -- we become involved with the urgent rather than the important. This was illustrated today when Rear Admiral Hyman Rickover, who has been properly called "The Father of the Atomic Navy", made a speech to the Thomas Edison Foundation.

Edward R. Murrow: November 20, 1956. 7:45 p.m.

Admiral Rickover declared that no matter what methods are chosen in the duel between the communist and the free world, education will determine the outcome, particularly the education of the talented child. "The Russian aim is to achieve world scientific and engineering supremacy" he said. "Someone has aptly called this the 'cold war of the classroom'. Russia will soon have a surplus of trained manpower which she can export. We have a shortage. Can we allow Russia to outdo us in aiding the neutrals? Can we let her become Big Brother to all the backward countries of the world?"

Admiral Rickover found our "democratic" school system, which tends to train all students alike regardless of their abilities, wasteful of talent at a time when talent is urgently needed. "Fifty years ago we needed a single engineer for every thousand workers; today we need one for every sixty-five workers, in some industries one for every twenty." ~~He also criticized the dilution of academic schooling by vocational training. High schools and preparatory schools, he said, are not the best place to acquire know-how. They should be the place for training minds. And in training minds, those who have the capacity to learn should not be held back by the students of average capacity.~~

Brilliant students, he said, can complete high school courses three to four years more quickly than the average. It would not be undemocratic, he said, to pay special attention to brilliant students, but would be undemocratic not to do so, since so many of them come from lower income homes.

He pointed to the Russian system which, he said, had found a way to inspire children to put forth their utmost mental efforts, doing it through what we think of as "capitalist" incentives. "The Russian child works hard and examinations are tough", he said. But ahead looms a professional career which is highly attractive, combining excellent salary with much honor, prestige and respect. Teachers are well paid and are highly regarded. Children are imbued with a love of intellectual endeavor through books in which the hero is a scientist or engineer who does valiant deeds that will benefit the country - not as in so many of our books, and even on radio and television, a cowboy or a space cadet. I doubt" he said, "whether you would find a counterpart in Russia of the one hundred American high school pupils who were recently queried on why they did not take mathematics and science courses. Their answers reflected disdain for scientists, who were described as 'squares', 'long hairs' and 'little men with beards' working in

~~musty laboratories".~~

In America, he pointed out, we seem to feel that education is worth no more than half of what we pay for recreation, or four percent of the national income. "Is money our problem" he asked. "Then what are we going to do with all our wealth? If an additional four billion dollars a year - one percent of our gross national product - makes the difference between good teachers and mediocre ones, good schools and poor ones, can we afford not to spend the sum? ~~Can we afford to make our talented children remain in school any longer than they have to, when the schools already are over-crowded and the teachers are so few?"~~

Admiral Rickover recommends that we lengthen the school year from 180 to 210 days a year. "There is no country of comparable civilization" he said, "where children go to school for only 180 days. This may have made sense when we were an agricultural country and children were needed to help on the farm. But our long vacations make no sense today, when we consider how rapidly knowledge is increasing, and how much a child must learn to become truly educated. The more we know, the more there is to know."

Admiral Rickover ended with a practical proposal to industry and foundations, which was to set up model secondary schools in perhaps twenty-five different centers in the United States. They should be on a par with our best secondary schools. They should be free and closed only to those unable to absorb an education. They should be staffed by teachers capable of teaching talented children, who should be paid salaries equal to those paid for comparable positions in industry. There should be one teacher for not more than twenty pupils. The schools should start with the fifth grade and prepare pupils for college at sixteen. The time should be shortened still more for those willing to take extra courses for three summers. The education should be controlled by a body independent of the donor, but he saw no reason that the school should not have the name of the industry or the labor union that financed it. "I estimate" he said, "the cost of operating each model school for five years would be about ten million dollars. At the end of that period, the community ought to have an option to take over the school, provided it agreed to continue its scholastic standards."

"Let us devise a way" he concluded" to make our schools as good as, and even better than, those of any other country. We have the ability to do it, and are rich enough to do it. All we need is the will to do it."

George Bryan -

Word for Today

Education may be the primary weapon [redacted] in our arsenal. John Adams [redacted] wrote a long time ago, "The prospect now before us ought to engage the attention of every man of learning to matters of power and of right. That we may be neither led nor driven blindfolded to irretrievable destruction, let every sluice of knowledge be opened and set aflowing."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1956
7:45--8:00 PM, E.S.T.

This is the news:

The report Secretary General Hammarskjold was to have made to the United Nations General Assembly today on the mission of the United Nations police force has been delayed. The secretary general is reported in disagreement with his advisory committee on the working of the report. The wording..in one instance.. is said to indicate that President Nasser would have the final say on where in Egypt the police force could be employed. It was reported earlier that Hammarskjold had agreed..in his talks with Nasser..to an Egyptian demand that the force leave the Suez Canal Zone after the British and French withdraw their troops. My colleague, Larry LeSueur, (who is covering the story at United Nations headquarters) tells me that Britain and France have raised strong objection that they feel that both the mission and the composition of the police force is being left in Nasser's hands. LeSueur says that..at this moment.. some of the working of Hammarskjold's report is being revised.

Today, (on the floor of the General Assembly), Asstralia, New Zealand, Burma, Israel and Iraq urged that United Nations observers be allowed to enter Hungary. And a resolution demanding that the Hungarian government accede to that request may be voted on late tonight. Such a resolution was introduced last night by Indonesia, India and Ceylon.

Secretary General Hammarskjold reported today that 34-thousand Hungarians have fled into Austria so far. Refugees, he said, are still crossing the frontier at the rate of 2-thousand a day. And he said at least 9-million dollars will be needed to care for them in the next six months.

The first Hungarian refugees to reach the United States will arrive at McGuir Air Force Base, New Jersey, around noon tomorrow. There will be 60 persons in the first group. Four other planeloads of refugees are expected before the end of the week.

Dispatches from Budapest say that most workers who have gone back to the factories are engaged in a sitdown strike. And the Budapest radio admits that guerilla forces in northeastern Hungary are sillll operating at night.

Widespread violence broke out today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The French-owned Bank of Syria was bombed..and two unsuccessful attempts were made to blow up the presidentaal palace. Last week, the president of Lebanon.. Camile Chamoun..refused to break off diplomatic relations with Britain and France.

Jordanian parliament today approved a recommendation that Jordan abrogate its 20-year devense treaty with Britain. This is the treaty under which Britain has maintained bases in Jordan and subsidized the Jordanian Army. The parliament also went on record as favoring establishment of diplomatic relations with Russia and Communist China.

In Egypt, the first contingent of the United Nations police force is about to move across no-man's - land from Egyptian - held territory to the area of Port Said, which is held by the British and French. The first group to take up actual policing duty is composed of a company of Norwegian troops. They are due to take up their positions between the opposing forces in about five hours.

The British government today ordered a return to gasoline rationing due to the blocking of oil shipments through the Suez Canal. The order takes effect on December 17th. Motorists will be allowed only enough gasoline to drive 200 miles a month. Fuel oil for heating purposes will be cut 25 per cent as of December first.

Washington officials said today there will be no rationing of either gasoline or oil in the United States. But they conceded that an increased demand for American oil may result in higher prices.

The Italian ambassador conferred at the State Department today on the problem of stepping up American oil shipments to Western Europe. The Associated Press says Acting Secretary of State Hoover is "understood" to have promised 17 Western European countries help in meeting their emergency demands once they have outlined their specific requirements. Another Washington report is that the United States is waiting until such time as British and French troops withdra from Egypt. Washington is reported fearful that shipment of American oil now would be interpreted by the Arab countries as support of the Anglo-French invasion..and that...in retaliation..oil installations in the Arab states might be destroyed.

Britain revealed today that on Thrusday it will start demobilizing some of the reservists called up in connection with the Suez crisis. The government told the House of Commons that 6 - thousand men will be released from service in the next three weeks.

Prime Minister Eden told Soviet Premier Bulganin today that Great Britain is "glad" that United Nations observers are on the scene in Port Said. Eden said; "The world would welcome similar action by the Soviet government in Hungary. Eden composed the brief message himself, despite doctors' orders for complete rest. (He was reportedyesterday to be suffering from "severe overstrain.") The message was in reply to Bulganin's note of November 15th, demanding that Egypt be compensated for damage incurred in the fighting. Eden made no mention of compensation -- ignored it completely.

General Norstad of the United States Air Force today took over as supreme commander of NATO succeeding General Gruenther, who will become president of the American Red Cross. Norstad told a group of top NATO officers: "The Soviets have again demonstrated..perhaps more wantonly than ever before..that they understand only force. It is clear that our peaceful aims can be achieved only by maintaining our strength."

In Moscow today, Molotov..who is now first deputy premier...laid down the party line for Russian artists. He advised Soviet writers, musicians and painters to put in their creative work "a high level of Bolshevist content."

The Soviet government today ordered New York Times Correspondent Welles Hangen to leave Russia within a week. According to the Soviet news agenccy Tass, Hangen took pictures of some secret "hydro-technical installations." Hangen says he had public permission.

Today in North Vietnam..the Communist controlled radio said that " a number" of persons were killed or wounded last Tuesday in a clash between a group of villagers and Red troops. The villagers reportedly were protesting certain land-reform measures. This is the second time in a week that North Vietnam radio has admitted unrest in that Communist state.

White House News Secretary Hagerty hinted today that Governor Herter of Massachusetts may take an important position in the government after the first of the year. Herter's term as governor ends in January. There is speculation that Herter may succeed Winthrop Aldrich as ambassador to Britain, if Aldrich steps out.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower is preparing to invoke the Taft-Hartly Act as a means of ending the five-day-old dock strike.

Not all the important or urgent issues are exposed tn these days when history is being written at such speed - we become involved with the urgent rather than the important. This was illustrated today when Rear Admiral Hyman Rickover who has been properly called "The Father of the Atomic Navy" , made a speech to the Thomas Edison Foundation."

Admiral Rickover declared that no matter what methods are chosen in the duel between the communists and the free world, education will determine the outcome, particularly the education of the talented child. "The Russian aim aim is to achieve world scientific and engineering supremacy" he said. "Someone has aptly called this the 'cold war of the classroom'. Russia will soon have a surplus of trained manpower which she can export. We have a shortage. Can we allow Russia to outdo us in aiding the Neutrals? Can we let her become Big Brother to all the backward countries of the world?"

Admiral Rickover found our democratic" school system, which tends to train all students alike, regardless of their abilities, wasteful of talent at a time when talent is urgently needed. "Fifty years ago we needed a single engineer for every thousand workers; today we need one for every sixty-five workers, in some industries one for every twenty."

He pointed to the Russian system which, he said, had found a way to inspire children to put forth their utmost mental effots, doing it through what we think of as "capitalist " incentives. "The Russian child works hard and examinations are tough." he said. But ahead looms a professional career which is highly attractive, combining excellent salary with much honor, prestige and respect. Teachers are well paid and are highly regarded Children are imbued with a love of intellectual endeavor through books in which the hero is a scientist or engineer who does valiant deeds that will benefit the country - not as in so many of our books, and even on radio and television, a cowboy or space cadet.

In America, he pointed out we seem to feel that education is worth no more than half of what we pay for recreation, or four percent of the national income. "Is money our problem" he asked. "Then what are we going to do with all our wealth? If an additional four billion dollars a year - one percent of our gross national product - makes the difference between good teachers and mediocre ones, good schools and poor ones, can we afford not to spend the sum?

Admiral Rickover recommends that we lengthen the school year from 180 to 210 days a year. "There is no country of comparable civilization ", he said, "where children go to school for only 180 days. This may have made sense when we were an agricultural country and children were needed to help on the farm. But our long vacations make no sense today when we consider how rapidly knowledge is increasing, and how much a child must learn to become truly educated. The more we know, the more there is to know."

Admiral Rickover ended with a practical proposal to industry and foundations which was to set up model secondary schools in perhaps twenty-five centers in the United States.

"Let us devise a way", he concluded" to make our schooss as good as, and even better than, those of any other country. We have the ability to do it, and are rich enough to do it. All we need is the will do do it."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Education may be the primary weapon in our arsenal. Joh Adams wrote a long time ago, "The prospect now before us, ought to engage the attention of every man of learning to matters of power and of right. That we may be neither led nor driven blindfolded to irretrievable destruction, let every sluice of knowledge be opened ans set aflowing."

Goodnight and good luck.

Murrow News — Wed., Nov. 21, 1956

Good Evening:

This is Larry Lesueur, pinchhitting for Ed Murrow. Mr. Murrow planned to originate the program tonight in Charlotte, North Carolina, but his plane has been delayed due to bad weather. - So here's what happened today.

171

Nov. 21, 1956

U R G E N T

[redacted]

URGENT
OPERATION	DATE CLR	TIME CLR	INITIALS
ORIG.	11/16	439P	R
	11/21	448P

[redacted]

~~This is the news:~~

[redacted] Moscow radio [redacted] announced that Vyacheslav Molotov has been appointed "minister of state control." The broadcast indicated that Molotov... who served Stalin for many years as foreign minister... also retains his present title of first deputy premier. According to the official Soviet encyclopedia, the minister of state control supervises government spending. Theoretically at least, Molotov is now in a position to influence the operation of other ministries. Recently, the office has received little attention. The man Molotov succeeds... Vassily Zhavoronkov... is a relative unknown. But it [redacted] a position Stalin held before taking over supreme power in 1922. Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia spoke last week of differences between a Stalinist faction in the Kremlin leadership and the faction led by Party Boss Khrushchev. Molotov is a Stalinist. The State Department in Washington has declined comment.

[redacted]

Edward R. Murrow
Station WBT
Charlotte, N.C.

RL SP

252

...

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a resolution demanding that Russia end the deportation of Hungarian citizens. The resolution... introduced by Cuba... also demanded that persons who have been deported be returned promptly to their homes. The vote was 55 to 10, with 14 abstentions. The 10 votes against the resolution were cast by the Soviet bloc, plus Yugoslavia. India was among the countries which abstained. But India had joined Indonesia and Ceylon in submitting a separate resolution, insisting that UN observers be allowed to enter Hungary. In appealing for passage of this resolution, India's Krishna Menon urged the Hungarian puppet government to cooperate with the United Nations. "The people," he said, "must have the right to decide their own destinies." Menon joined the west in demanding that Soviet forces be withdrawn immediately from Hungary. And this resolution was also passed, 58 to 7.

Reports from Vienna say that Russian troops have begun firing on refugees who try to escape from Hungary. Some persons crossing the frontier are suffering from bullet wounds. In Washington, the White House says more than 5-thousand refugees probably will be admitted to the United States, if that figure originally announced by President Eisenhower proves inadequate. Representative Walter, who is in Austria, has proposed that 17-thousand refugees be admitted to this country. The first planeload of Hungarian refugees to reach the United States arrived today at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey.

~~(more)~~

[redacted]

[redacted] Secretary General Hammarskjold reported to the United Nations General Assembly TODAY on his [redacted] mission to Cairo. Hammarskjold said Egypt has agreed to work out a basis for the maintenance of the United Nations police force on Egyptian territory, including its deployment and the question of lines of communication and supply. He asked the Assembly for broad powers to negotiate [redacted] an over-all agreement with Egypt, but emphasized that the police force can operate in Egypt only with the consent of the Egyptian government. The negotiations, he said, must [redacted] also be based on the principle that the United Nations will maintain its force in Egypt until the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops. Hammarskjold noted that... as yet... no withdrawals have taken place. He said he would report to the Assembly again "as soon as I receive clarifications from the governments concerned." Hammarskjold said he is negotiating with private [redacted] salvage companies with a view to clearing the Suez Canal in conformity with Egypt's request for United Nations assistance in that task. His report left unanswered the question how long the international police force will remain in Egypt and what other countries will be asked to contribute troops.

[redacted]

The first United Nations troops went on active duty today at Port Said. A company of Norwegian riflemen moved in by train to enforce the cease-fire between the Anglo-French occupation forces and the Egyptians. They were cheered by both sides.

The United Nations commander... General Burns... said today that the police force in Egypt is primarily a symbol. They did not go to Egypt, he said, to fight.

President Nasser issued a statement today on the aims of the Egyptian government. "The policy of Egypt," he said, "is the policy of national independence." He said this means both political and ideological — independence and vowed, "I will not become the stooge or satellite of anybody." Nasser denied he is trying to create an Arab empire. The basic objective, he said, remains the social and economic improvement of the Egyptian people.

~~Edward R. Murrow~~
~~Station WBT~~ ~~Charlotte~~

~~Third~~

Syria asked the United Nations today to stop what it described as a threat of imminent aggression from Israel, Britain and France. It said Israeli forces are massing on the frontier and that British and French planes have been flying over Syria for the past two weeks.

The closing of the Suez Canal threatens the European economy. Gasoline rationing has been ordered in Britain, effective December 17. And a fuel crisis has developed in France. For the developments in that story, we switch now by recording to David Schoenbrun in Paris. (Note: Schoenbrun tape runs five minutes twenty-five seconds and ends on cue quote now back to Edward R. Murrow unquote).

~~In Washington today, the Army issued a draft call for 17-thousand men in January. This is the same quote as announced for December.~~

In New York, the National Labor Relations Board has asked for a federal court injunction to end the dock strike, ~~[illegible]~~ charging

RECEIVED
1950 NOV 21 PM 6:01
F.C.C. SECTIONS DEPT. N.

the International Longshoremen's Association with unfair labor practices.

And in Chicago, the National Mediation Board has announced settlement of the wage dispute between the nation's railroads and the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen. Settlement was reached on the basis of a "package" amounting to a twenty-six and a half cent an hour increase over a period of three years. //

This is Larry Lesueur - I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today.

Pause - But first here is George Bryan

Word for today...

The United Nations is faced today with grave responsibilities.

E.B. White once gave this advice to delegates representing the United States. "When you sit down," he said, "sit down as an American if that makes you feel comfortable. But when you think with longing of the place where you were born, remember that the sun leaves it daily to go somewhere else."

As Ed Murrow would say -

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Wednesday, November 21, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris. A city without gasoline, coal, oil, soap or sugar. Motors and salad bowls are equally dry. The lack of fuel oil to motors is, of course, directly attributable to the blockage of the Suez Canal. The lack of salad oil, salt and sugar is, however, directly attributable to a disgraceful exhibition of selfish individualism, for which the French are famous but in which they've now surpassed their own worst record and because of which they may wreck their already endangered economy.

The real economic danger, due to the Suez crisis, is serious but not grave. It may, however, become disastrous because of the public panic, the hoarding by individuals and the speculation by merchants who are deliberately withholding stocks against an expected rise in prices rather than a real shortage.

The government here has done absolutely nothing to reassure the public and avoid the panic. A week ago the prime minister delivered a nationwide radio appeal to the people to keep calm. This proved to be exactly the wrong thing to do. The people over here have had enough experience of wars and world crises to know that when a government asks them to keep calm, that is perhaps precisely the moment to begin worrying. Had the French premier accompanied his appeal for calm and civic virtue with a frank statement of the true situation and a plan to assure a fair share of products for all, this panic may have been avoided. It can still be stopped if the government takes action. The nation's editorialists have already begun to denounce hoarders and their trying to shame people into showing a little decency and civic responsibility, as in Britain for example.

So far, however, the government here seems to be too engrossed in power politics and in putting down the rebellion in Algeria to concern itself with public morale and morality. France, and indeed, all of Europe, is living through a severe political, diplomatic and economic crisis. This European crisis can be seen and felt more clearly here in France than elsewhere because of the internal political division which keep the French at fever pitch. But the crisis, nonetheless, is severe throughout this entire continent.

On the diplomatic front there are severe strains on the Western alliance. The small nations of Europe, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, are furiouswith the French and the British for having gotten them all into this mess in the Middle East. Europe stands or falls on its supply of oil; and at the moment, Europe is going to fall hard this winter, unless urgent steps are taken to assure all supplies for industry and communications. The estimate now by experts of the European Economic Cooperation Organization is that there may be a cutback of 30% in economic and industrial production, which is nothing short of disaster. This is the gravest threat to Europe's economy since the winter crisis of 1947-48 when the Marshall Plan rescued Europe just in time.

Unless there's some kind of an oil Marshall Plan to furnish both the products and the dollars to pay for them, the economies that were saved may be lost.

Europeans are very worried that this time Americans will say "let them go and good riddance." They know over here that America has every reason, legal, moral and emotional, to let them stew in their own pot. There's also the fear that America may finally decide to help but only on condition that France and Britain pull out of Suez immediately and knuckle down to American policy directives. So far, both these fears are unjustified or at least premature. It is true that the United States has not yet rushed in with a rescue plan. But responsible officials over here know perfectly well that America has to move cautiously or risk Arab sabotage of the pipelines. America has also given its allies unofficial and discreet assurances that an emergency aid program will be carried out. There's no evidence that America is trying to exploit its advantage to dictate policy to the French and British. I have not heard a single government official make such a charge. Although it is heard freely in alarmist rumor mongering on the public place.

So far, therefore, the crisis over here is mostly artificial. Although, in a funny way, it is no less real for that. For rumors, add even lies, are sometimes more powerful than the truth, particularly when no one knows what the truth is. The situation tonight, therefore, is one that calls for frank and forthright action and the fullest information to the public to end the dangerous rumors that are spreading like wild fire throughout this continent.

It is a time, too, for patience and generosity on both sides of the Atlantic; for the alliance of the free nations has never been more seriously threatened. Recriminations may be justified but they can serve no useful purpose.

For the past eight years, under successive Democratic and Republican administrations, the basic principle of American foreign policy has been the inter-dependence of the United States and Eruope. America, of course, can survive without Europe. But it is a question as to whether survival would be worthwhile if we all had to live in lead-lined cellars behind a radar screen.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Wednesday, November 21, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris. A city without gasoline, coal, oil, soap or sugar. Motors and salad bowls are equally dry. The lack of fuel oil to motors is, of course, directly attributable to the blockage of the Suez Canal. The lack of salad oil, salt and sugar is, however, directly attributable to a disgraceful exhibition of selfish individualism, for which the French are famous but in which they've now surpassed their own worst record and because of which they may wreck their already endangered economy.

The real economic danger, due to the Suez crisis, is serious but not grave. It may, however, become disastrous because of the public panic, the hoarding by individuals and the speculation by merchants who are deliberately withholding stocks against an expected rise in prices rather than a real shortage.

The government here has done absolutely nothing to reassure the public and avoid the panic. A week ago the prime minister delivered a nationwide radio appeal to the people to keep calm. This proved to be exactly the wrong thing to do. The people over here have had enough experience of wars and world crises to know that when a government asks them to keep calm, that is perhaps precisely the moment to begin worrying. Had the French premier accompanied his appeal for calm and civic virtue with a frank statement of the true situation and a plan to assure a fair share of products for all, this panic may have been avoided. It can still be stopped if the government takes action. The nation's editorialists have already begun to denounce hoarders and their trying to shame people into showing a little decency and civic responsibility, as in Britain for example.

So far, however, the government here seems to be too engrossed in power politics and in putting down the rebellion in Algeria to concern itself with public morale and morality. France, and indeed, all of Europe, is living through a severe political, diplomatic and economic crisis. This European crisis can be seen and felt more clearly here in France than elsewhere because of the internal political division which keep the French at fever pitch. But the crisis, nonetheless, is severe throughout this entire continent.

On the diplomatic front there are severe strains on the Western alliance. The small nations of Europe, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, are furiouswith the French and the British for having gotten them all into this mess in the Middle East. Europe stands or falls on its supply of oil; and at the moment, Europe is going to fall hard this winter, unless urgent steps are taken to assure all supplies for industry and communications. The estimate now by experts of the European Economic Cooperation Organization is that there may be a cutback of 30% in economic and industrial production, which is nothing short of disaster. This is the gravest threat to Europe's economy since the winter crisis of 1947-48 when the Marshall Plan rescued Europe just in time.

Unless there's some kind of an oil Marshall Plan to furnish both the products and the dollars to pay for them, the economies that were saved may be lost.

Europeans are very worried that this time Americans will say "let them go and good riddance." They know over here that America has every reason, legal, moral and emotional, to let them stew in their own pot. There's also the fear that America may finally decide to help but only on condition that France and Britain pull out of Suez immediately and knuckle down to American policy directives. So far, both these fears are unjustified or at least premature. It is true that the United States has not yet rushed in with a rescue plan. But responsible officials over here know perfectly well that America has to move cautiously or risk Arab sabotage of the pipelines. America has also given its allies unofficial and discreet assurances that an emergency aid program will be carried out. There's no evidence that America is trying to exploit its advantage to dictate policy to the French and British. I have not heard a single government official make such a charge. Although it is heard freely in alarmist rumor mongering on the public place.

So far, therefore, the crisis over here is mostly artificial. Although, in a funny way, it is no less real for that. For rumors, add even lies, are sometimes more powerful than the truth, particularly when no one knows what the truth is. The situation tonight, therefore, is one that calls for frank and forthright action and the fullest information to the public to end the dangerous rumors that are spreading like wild fire throughout this continent.

It is a time, too, for patience and generosity on both sides of the Atlantic; for the alliance of the free nations has never been more seriously threatened. Recriminations may be justified but they can serve no useful purpose.

For the past eight years, under successive Democratic and Republican administrations, the basic principle of American foreign policy has been the inter-dependence of the United States and Eruope. America, of course, can survive without Europe. But it is a question as to whether survival would be worthwhile if we all had to live in lead-lined cellars behind a radar screen.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

Ed. trans. P. O. (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

Good Evening:

This is Larry Lesueur, pinchhitting for Ed Murrow. Mr. Murrow planned to originate the program tonight in Charlotte, North Carolina, but his plane has been delayed due to bad weather. So here's what happened today.

Moscow radio announced that Vyacheslav Molotov has been appointed "minister of state control". The broadcast indicated that Molotov..who served Stalin for many years as foreign minister also retains his present title of first deputy premier. According to the official Soviet encyclopedia, the minister of state control supervises government spending. Theoretically at least, Molotov is not in a position to influence the operation of other ministries. Recently, the office has received little attention. The man Molotov succeeds..Vassily Zhavoronskov..is a relative unknown. But it's a position Stalin held before taking over supreme power in 1922 Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia spoke last week of differences between a Stalinist faction in the Kremlin leadership and the faction let by Party Boss Khurshchev. Molotov is a Stalinist. The State Department in Washington has declined comment.

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a resolution demanding that Russia end the deportation of Hungarian citizens. The resolution.. introduced by Cuba..also demanded that persons who have been deported be returned promptly to their homes. The vote was 55 to 10, with 14 abstentions. The 10 votes against the resolution were cast by the Soviet bloc, plus Yugoslavia. India was among the countries which abstained. But India had joined Indonesia and Ceylon in submitting a separate resolution, insisting that UN observers be allowed to enter Hungary. In appealing for passage of this resolution, India's Krishna Menon urged the Hungarian puppet government to cooperate with the United Nations. "The people," he said, "must have the right to decide their own destinies." Menon joined the West in demanding that Soviet forces be withdrawn immediately from Hungary. And this resolution was also passed, 58 to 7.

Reports from Vienna say that Russian troops have begun firing on refugees who try to escape from Hungary. Some persons crossing the frontier are suffering from bullet wounds. In Washington, the White House says more than 5-thousand refugees probably will be admitted to the United States, if that figure, originally announced by President Eisenhower, proves inadequate. Representative Walter, who is in Austria, has proposed that 17-thousand refugees be admitted to this country. The first planeload of Hungarian refugees to reach the United States arrived today an McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey.

Secretary General Hammarskjold reported to the United Nations General Assembly today on his mission to Cairo. Hammarsjjold said Egypt has agreed to work out a basis for the maintenance of the Untied Nations police force on Egyptian territory, including its deployment and the question of lines of communication and supply. He asked the Assembly for broad powers to negotiate an over-all agreement wit Egypt, but emphasized that the police force can operate in Egypt only with the consent of the Egyptian government. The negotiations, he said, must also be based on the principle that the United Nations will maintain its force in Egypt until the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops. Hammarskjold noted that...as yet..no withdrawals have taken place. He said he would report to the Assembly again "as soon as I receive clarifications from the governments concerned." Hammarskjold said he is negotiating with private salvege companies with a view to clearing the Suez Canal in conformity with Egypt's request for United Nations assistance in the task. His report left unanswered the question how long the international police force will remain in Egypt and what other countries will be asked to contribute troops.

The first United Nations troops went on active duty today at Port Said. A company of Norwegian riflemen moved in by train to enforce the cease-fire between the Anglo-French occupation forces and the Egyptians. They were cheered by both sides.

The United Nations commander ..General Burns..said today that the police force in Egypt is primarily a symbol. They did not go to Egypt, he said, to fight.

President Nasser issued a statement today on the aims of the Egyptian government. "The policy of Egypt," he said, "is the policy of national independence." He said this means both political and ideological independence and vowed, "I will not become the stooge or satellite of anybody." Nasser denied he is trying to create an Arab empire. The basic objective, he said, remains the social and economic improvement of the Egyptian people.

Syria asked the United Nations today to stop what it described as a threat of imminent aggression from Israel, Britain and France. It said Israeli forces are massing on the frontier and that British and French planes have been flying over Syria for the past two weeks.

The closing of the Suez Canal threatens the European economy. Gasoline rationing has been ordered in Britain, effective December 17. And a fuel crisis has developed in France. For the developments in that story, we switch now, by recording to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris. A city without gasoline, coal, oil, soap or sugar. Motors and salad bowls are equally dry. The lack of fuel oil to motors is, of course, directly attributable to the blockage of the Suez Canal. The lack of salad oil, salt and sugar is, however, directly attributable to a disgraceful exhibition of selfish individualism, for which the French are famous but in which they've now surpassed their own worst record and because of which they may wreck their already endangered economy.

The real economic danger, due to the Suez crisis, is serious but not grave. It may, however, become disastrous because of the public panic, the hoarding by individuals and the speculation by merchants who are deliberately withholding stocks against an expected rise in prices rather than a real shortage.

The government has donw absolutely nothing to reassure the public and avoid panic. A week a go the prime minister delivered a nationwide radio appeal to the people to keep calm. This proved to be exactly the wrong thing to do. The people over here have had enough experience of wars and world crises to know that when a government asks them to keep calm, that is prehaps precisely the moment to begin worrying. Had the French premier accompanied his appeal for calm and civic virtue with a frank statement of the true situation and a plan to assure a fair share of products for all, this panic may have been avoided. It can still be stoppedif the government takes action. The nation's editoriaists have already begun to denounce the hoarders and their trying to shame people into a little decency and civic responsibility, as in Britain for example. So far, however, the government here seems to be too engrossed in power politics and in putting down the rebellion in Algeria to concern itself with public morale and morality. France, and indeed, all of Europe, is living through a severe political, diplomatic and economic crisis. This European crisis can be seen and felt more clearly here in France than elsewhere because of the internal political division which keep the French at feve pitch. But the crisis , nonetheless, is severe throughout this entire continent.

On the diplomati front there are severe strains on the estern alliance. The small nations of Europe, Belgium, Lenamrk, Italy, are furious with the French and British for having gotten them all into this mess in the Middle East. Europe stands or falls on its supply of oil; and at the moment, Europe is going to fall hard this winter, unless urgent steps are taken to assure all supplies for industry and communications. The estimate now by experts of the European economic Cooperation organization is that there may be a cutback of 30% in economic and industrial production, which is nothing short of disaster. This is the gravest threat to Europe's economy since the winter crisis of 1947-48 when the Marshall Plan rescued Europe just in time.

Unless there's some kind of an oil Marshall Plan to furnish both the products and the dollars to pay for them, the economies that were saved may be lost.

Europeans are very worried that this time Americans will say "let them go and good riddance." They know over here that America has every reason, legal, moral and emotionsl, to let them stew in their own pot. There's also the fear that America may finally decide to help but only on condition that France and Britain pull out of Suez immediately and knuckle down to American policy directives. So far, both these fears are unjustified or at least premature. It is true that the United States has not yet rushed in with a rescue plan. But responsible officials over here know perfectly well that America has to move cautiously or risk Arab sabotage of the pipelines America has also given its allies unofficial and discrete assurances that an emergency aid program will be carried out. There's no evidence that America is trying to exploit its advantage to dictate policy to the French and British. I havenot heard a single government official make such a charge. Although it is heard freely in alarmist rumor mongering on the public place.

So far, therefore, the crisis over here is mostly artificial. Although in a funny way, it is no less real for that. For rumors, add even lies, are sometimes more powerful than the truth, particularly when no one knows what the truth is. The situation tonight, therefore, is one that calls for frank and forthright action and the fullest information to the public to end the dangerous rumors that are spreading like wildfire throughout this continent. It is a time, too, for patience and generosity on both sides of the Atlantic; for the alliance of the free nations has never been more seriously threatened. Recriminations may be justified but they can serve no useful purpose.

For the past eight years, under successive Democratic and Republican administrations, the basic principle of American foreign policy has been the inter-dependence of the United States and Europe. America, of course, can survive without Europe. But it is a question as to whether survival would be worthwhile if we all had to live in lead-lined cellars behind a radar screen.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

LESUEUR: In Washington today, the army issued a draft call for 17-thousand men in January. This is the same quota as announced for December.

In New York, the National Labor Relations Board has asked for a federal court injunction to end the dock strike, charging the International Longshoremen's Association with unfair labor practices.

And in Chicago, the National Mediation Board has announced settlement of wage dispute between the nation's railroads and the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen. Settlement was reached on the basis of a "package" amounting to twenty-six and a half cent an hour increase over a period of three years.

This is Larry Lesuer. I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUEUR: The United Nations is faced today with grave responsibilities. E.B. White once gave this advice to delegates representing the United States. "When you sit down," he said, "sit down as an American if that makes you feel comfortable. But when you think with longing of thep place where you were born, remember that the sun leaves it daily to go somewhere else."

As Ed Murrow would say, Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Nov. 22, 1956

Good Evening:

~~This is the news:~~

This is Blair Clark substituting for Edward R. Murrow,

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov used the forum of the United Nations today, to urge support for Russia's latest disarmament proposals. In a major policy speech before the General Assembly, Shepilov claimed, that Russia already has "liquidated" its military bases abroad. /When the West closes down its foreign bases, he said, and withdraws all its forces from Western Germany, then Russia will pull its troops out of those countries where they are stationed under the Warsaw Pact. /Shepilov reaffirmed Russia's willingness to accept aerial inspection for 500 miles on each side of the line between Eastern and Western Europe... and called again for a non-agression treaty between the NATO countries, and the Warsaw Pact countries of the East. /American Ambassador Lodge told the Assembly, that the United States welcomes Soviet acceptance of the idea of aerial inspection. /But to be effective, he said, it should be applied over both the United States and Russia. He asked, "What is it in the Soviet Union that they want to conceal?" Lodge challenged as "inaccurate" Shepilov's statement that Russia no longer has any military bases abroad. And he cited Russia's bases in the satellite states, including Hungary.

→

The Soviet foreign minister characterized the Hungarian revolt as a plot supported from outside "to turn Hungary into a helpless satellite of the imperialist powers." With regard to the Middle East, Shepilov said there is "no guarantee" war will not break out again as long as British, French and Israeli troops remain on Egyptian soil.

The General Assembly was notified formally today that "some British, French and Israeli forces have been withdrawn from positions held in Egypt. Secretary General Hammarskjold submitted separate reports from the three powers to that effect. Israel said... in its report... that there has been a withdrawal of Israeli forces "for varying distances" along the entire Egyptian front. But Israel stated it will not withdraw all its forces until arrangements have been made "such as will ensure Israel against the threat of attack." The French report said, "The French government remains ready to proceed with the withdrawal of its forces as soon as the international force, which is being established, is in a position to discharge the functions entrusted to it." Great Britain informed Hammarskjold that its withdrawal would proceed "as the United Nations police force becomes effective."

In London today, the government made a similar statement to the House of Commons. The acting prime minister, R.A. Butler, said the British forces are ready to withdraw once there is a United Nations force "competent to discharge its task effectively." The United Nations force, he said, must be competent to guard the peace between Egypt and Israel, and competent to achieve the restoration of unhindered use of the Suez Canal. Butler reported to the House of Commons in the absence of Prime Minister Eden, who leaves tomorrow for a rest in the West Indies.

The General Assembly will meet again tomorrow to debate the Middle East question. The Associated Press says the United States will JOIN INDIA IN SPONSORING a new demand for Britain, France and Israel to withdraw their forces from Egypt at once.

The government of Israel today denied as "a complete fabrication" Syria's charge that Israeli troops are massing on the Syrian border.

An Israeli spokesman reported that Arab saboteurs entered Israel last night from Jordan, and blew up the rail line running from Beersheba to Tel Aviv.

In Paris, the Air Ministry admitted today that French fliers were in Israel during the recent Egyptian campaign... but denied that the fliers carried out missions against Egypt. The Air Ministry insisted that the French merely instructed the Israelis in the operation of jet aircraft.

The Belgrade radio said tonight that the former premier of Hungary, Imre Nagy, has left his refuge in the Yugoslav embassy in Budapest. The Yugoslav's say, Nagy has left the embassy and gone to his home. Reports from Vienna say the puppet government of Hungary has carried out a new wave of arrests. The flow of refugees from Hungary continues.

President Eisenhower invoked the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law today, in a move aimed at ending the dock strike. He named a fact-finding board to investigate the walkout on the East and Gulf coasts, and report back to him by Saturday. The President can then seek an injunction ending the walkout for 80 days.

Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower observed Thanksgiving by attending special services at the National Presbyterian Church. After church, they drove to Fort Belvoir, Virginia, for Thanksgiving dinner with their son, Major John Eisenhower, and his family.

Traditional turkey dinners were served to American forces stationed in Western Europe and around the world.

The Olympic games opened in Melbourne, Australia, with a parade of 45-hundred athletes from 67 countries. The largest ovation went to the team from Hungary.

A legislative program for the 85th Congress was ~~announced~~ PROPOSED today by six Democratic senators. The program consists of 16 points, based on the platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention. All the points deal with domestic problems, including health, education and civil rights.

→

One objective would be the abolishment of Senate Rule 22, which makes it difficult to stop a filibuster. Under Rule 22, a two-thirds majority vote is required to apply cloture and cut off Senate debate. ~~The six Democratic~~ (Stet.) senators ~~submitting this program are Humphrey of Minnesota, Morse of~~ Oregon, Douglas ~~of Illinois~~, McNamara of Michigan, Neuber~~ger of Oregon~~ and Murray ~~of Montana~~.

Edward R. Murrow: November 22, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Thanksgiving Day is an American holiday, and there are no end of reasons for an American to be thankful today, without pretending to himself that the work of building a sound and free society in this country is anywhere near finished. / But it would be much harder to be thankful for the present state of the world at large. Things have not often been more precarious in the times between wars. This certainly is no day for easy optimism about the world outlook.

But this reporter thinks he is justified in pointing to one change for which thanks are in order. / It is that world revolution, as a tremendous and identifiable social and political force, appears to be going from the scene. It no longer fills the horizons with its former menace. The Ten Days that Shook the World (when the Bolsheviks won in Russia), now are past history. The world no longer shakes on their account.

The world revolution began to die with the success of Tito in defying Communist discipline in 1946. Then came Moscow's abject apology to Tito. Then Gomulka's Poland was accepted by the Kremlin as an independent equal. And then finally came the shambles of Budapest, when Hungarian civilians were crushed by Soviet tanks and guns.

I am not saying that these events put an end to communism as an influence in world affairs. Far from it. But they did mark the passing of a great faith, something like a religious faith, that had the power to stir multitudes, awaken in them a sense of common aspirations, knit them together for common action in unity with all the components of the revolution the world over.

This world revolution reached its apex under the Communist leaders of the Soviet Union. With the backing of Soviet military and political power it planted its parties in one country after another, parties that had no thought but Moscow's thought, no aim but Russia's aim. Russian guns and troops were impressive on their own account, but they were impressive, too, because of the revolution with which this power was identified. No government in the world, it seemed, was wholly safe from conspiracy and subversion. No society was sealed off from the menace of revolution.

Today, in the place of this united revolutionary power, subject to Kremlin dictation, working in all the corners of the globe, we now see a divided Communist movement, and a changed Communist movement. To be sure, Moscow controls some of it behind the Iron Curtain, such as the parties in Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Albania. But it has lost command of Yugoslavia, and presumably of Poland and Hungary. Beyond the Iron Curtain, the Kremlin still dominates one big foreign Communist Party, in France. But it has lost an equally big one in Italy, and virtually all the smaller Communist parties abroad have left the fold. Events in Hungary nauseated them. So that today there is no vast body of men and women who feel united, and so can be galvanized into action at a single command from the Kremlin.

Obviously the more Communisms there are, the less is their world revolutionary force. What has changed in Communism itself, is that it has ceased to be first and always international. In Budapest, Warsaw, Belgrade, and in most capitals outside the Iron Curtain it has now become strictly national. I am not saying it always will remain national. Possibly some Communists will regress to their former discipline and subservience to Moscow. But what undid international communism was the fact that the Soviet Union itself came to use Communism, not for revolutionary ends but exclusively for its own national aims.

I repeat, this is not the end of Communism. The Chinese Reds, for one thing, are even more numerous than the Russian Reds, and they have Chinese communities abroad, which they can use for their political and economic designs. But Chinese Communism will hardly grow to be a threat from within, to the stability of governments everywhere, as Russian communism once was. Moreover, there may develop quite a difference between Moscow Communism and Peiping Communism, just as there is between the communisms of Moscow, Warsaw and Belgrade.

Soviet power is somewhat less than it might have been, because it no longer commands the mystic fervor, the faith and self-sacrifice that characterized the revolution not so long ago. And when the history of this critical year comes to be written, it may be that the damage done to the idea of world revolution will be set down as one of its far-reaching events.

I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's word for Today. But first here is George Bryan. BRYAN

George

Word for Today

On Thanksgiving Day, we remember the Pilgrims. They were, as Samuel Morison said, "poor in the goods of this world. They were not of gentle or noble blood. Yet these simple folk were exalted to the stature of statesmen and prophets in their limited sphere because they firmly believed, and so greatly dared, and firmly endured."

~~Goodnight and good luck!~~

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

7:45 - 8:00 pm
Thursday, November 22, 1956

Good Evening:

This is Blair Clark substituting for Edward R. Murrow. Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov used the forum of the United Nations today to urge support for Russia's latest disarmament proposals. In a major policy speech before the General Assembly, Shepilov claimed that Russia already has "liquidated" its military bases abroad. When the West closes down its foreign bases, he said, and withdraws all its forces from Western Germany, then Russia will pull its troops out of those countries where they are stationed under the Warsaw Pact. Shepilov reaffirmed Russia's willingness to accept aerial inspection for 500 miles on each side of the line between Eastern and Western Eurppe...and called again for a non-agression treaty between the NATO countries and the Warsaw Pact countries of the East. American Ambassador Lodge told the Assembly that the United States welcomes Soviet acceptance of the idea of aerial inspection. But to be effective, he said, it should be applied over both the United States and Russia. He asked, "What is it in the Soviet Union that they want to conceal?" Lodge challenged as "inaccurate" Shepilov's statement that Russia no longer has any military bases abroad. And he cited Russia's bases in the satellite states, including Hungary.

The Soviet foreign minister characterized the Hungarian revolt as a plot supported from outside "to turn Hungary into a helpless satellite of the imperialist powers." With regard to the Middle East, Shepilov said there is "no guarantee" war will not break out again as long as British, French and Israeli troops remain on Egyptian soil.

The General Assembly was notified formallyttoday that some British, French and Israeli forces have been withdrawn from positions held in Egypt. Secretary General Hammarskjold submitted separate reports from the three powers to that effect Israel said...in its report...that there has been a withdrawal of Israeli forces "for varying distances" along the entire Egyptian front. But Israel stated it will not withdraw all its forces until arrangements have been made "such as will ensure Israel against the threat of attack." The French report said, "The French government remains ready to proceed with the withdrawal of its forces as soon as the international force, which is being established, is in a position to discharge the functions entrusted to it." Great Britain informed Hammarskjold that its withdrawal would proceed "as the United Nations police force becomes effective."

In London today, the government made a similar statement to the House of Commons. The acting prime minister, R. A. Butler, said the British forces are ready to withdraw once there is a United Nations force "competent to discharge its task effectively." The United Nations force, he said, must be competent to guard the peace between Egypt and Israel, and competent to achieve the restoration of unhindered use of the Suez Canal. Butler reported to the House of Commons in the absence of Prime Minister Eden, who leaves tomorrow for a rest in the West Indies.

The General Assembly will meet again tomorrow to debate the Middle East question. The Associated Press says the United States will join India in sponsoring a new demand for Britain, France and Israel to withdrawt heir forces from Egypt at once.

The government of Israel today denied as "a complete fabrication" Syria's charge that Israeli troops are massing on the Syrian border. An Israeli spokesman reported that Arab saboteurs entered Israel last night from Jordan and blew up the rail line running from Beersheba to Tel Aviv.

In Paris, the Air Ministry admitted today that French fliers were in Israel during the recent Egyptian campaign...but denied that the fliers carried out missions against Egypt. The Air Ministry insisted that the French merely instructed the Israelis in the operation of jet aircraft.

The Belgrade radio said tonight that the former premier of Hungary, Imre Nagy, has left his refuge in the Yugoslave embassy in Budapest. The Yugoslavs say Nagy has left the embassy and gone to his home. Reports from Vienna say the puppet government of Hungary has carried out a new wave of arrests. The flow of refugees from Hungary continues.

President Eisenhower invoked the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law today in a move aimed at ending the dock strike. He named a fact-finding board to investigate the walkout on the East and Gulf coasts and report back to him by Saturday. The President can then seek an injunction ending the walkout for 80 days.

Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower observed Thanksgiving by attending special services at the National Presbyterian Church. After church they drove to Fort Belvoir, Firginia, for Thanksgiving dinner with their son, Major John Eisenhower, and his family.

Traditonal turkey dinners were served to American forces stationed in Western Europe and around the world.

The Olympic games opened in Melbourne, Australia, with a parade of 45-hundred athletes from 67 countries. The largest ovation went to the team from Hungary.

A legislative program for the 85th Congress was proposed today by six Democratic senators. The program consists of 16 points, based on the platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention. All the points deal with domestic problems, including health, education and civil rights. One objective would be the abolishment of Senate Rule 22, which makes it difficult to stop a filibuster. Under Rule 22, a two-thirds majority vote is required to apply cloture and cut off Senate debate.

Thanksgiving Day is an American holiday, and there are no end of reasons for an American to be thankful today, without pretending to himself that the work of building a sound and free society in this country is anywhere finished. But it would be much harder to be thankful for the present state of the world at large. Things have not often been more precarious in the times between wars. This certainly is no day for easy optimism about the world outlook.

But this reporter thinks he is justified in pointing to one change for which thanks are in order. It is that world revolution, as a tremendous and identifiable social and political force, appears to be going from the scene. It no longer fills the horizons with its former menace. The Ten Days that Shook the World (when the Bolsheviks won in Russia), now are past history. The world no longer shakes on their account.

The world revolution began to die with the success of Tito in defying Communist discipline in 1946. Then came Moscow's abject apology to Tito. The Gomulka's Poland was accepted by the Kremlin as an independent equal. And then finally came the shambles of Budapest, when Hungarian civilians were crushed by Soviet tanks and guns.

I am not saying that these events put an end to communism as an influence in world affairs. Far from it. But they did mark the passing of a great faith, something like a religious faith, that had the power to stir multitudes, awaken in them a sense of common aspirations, knit them together for common action in unity with all the components of the revolution the world over.

This world revolution reached its apex under the Communist leaders of the Soviet Union. With the backing of Soviet miliatry and political power it planted its parties in one country after another, parties that had no thought but Moscow's thought, no aim but Russia's aim. Russian guns and troops were impressive on their own account, but they were impressive, too, because of the revolution with which this power was identified. No government in the world, it seemed, was wholly safe from conspiracy and subversion. No society was sealed off from the menace of revolution.

Today, in the place of this united revolutionary power, subject to Kremlin dictation, working in all the corners of the globe, we now see a divided Communist movement, and a changed Communist movement. To be sure, Moscow controls some of it behind the Iron Curtain, such as the parties in Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Albania. But it has lost command of Yugoslavia, and presumably of Poland and Hungary. Beyond the Iron Curtain, the Kremlin still dominates one big foreign Communist Party, in France. But it has lost an equally big one in Italy, and virtually all the smaller Communist parties abroad have left the fold. Events in Hungary nauseated them. So that today there is no vast body of men and women who feel united, and so can be glavanized into action at a single command from the Kremlin.

Obviously the more Communisms there are, the less is their world revolutionary force. What has changed in Communism itself, is that it has ceased to be first and always international. In Budapest, Warsaw, Belgrade, and in most capitals outside the Iron Curtain it has now become strictly national. I am not saying it always will remain national. Possibly some Communists will regress to their former discipline and subservience to Moscow. But what undid international communism was the fact that the Soviet Union itself came to use Communism, not for revolutionarey ends but exclusively for its own national aims.

I repeat, this is not the end of Communism. The Chinese Reds, for one thing, are even more numerous than the Russian Reds, and they have Chinese communities abroad which they can use for their political and economic designs. But Chinese Communism will hardly grow to be a threat from within to the stability of governments everywhere, as Russian communism once was. Moreover, there may develop quite a difference between Moscow Communism and Peiping Communism, just as there is between the communisms of Moscow, Warsaw and Belgrade.

Soviet power is somewhat less than it might have been because it no longer commands the mystic fervor, the faith and self-sacrifice that characterized the revolution not so long ago. And when the history of this critical year comes to be written, it may be that the damage done to the idea of world revolution will be set down as one of its far-reaching events.

I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. First here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcement

CLARK: On Thanksgiving Day, we remember the Pilgrims. They were, as Samuel Morison said, "poor in the goods of this world. They were not of gentle or noble blood. Yet these simple folk were exalted to the stature of statesmen and prophets in their limited sphere because they firmly believed, add so greatly dared, and firmly endured." G

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Nov. 23, 1956

This is the news:

Former Premier Nagy of Hungary has disappeared. The puppet government of Hungary claims that Nagy has gone to Roumania, after expressing a wish to live in a "peoples' democracy". The Reuters news service quotes a reliable source in Budapest as saying he was arrested today by the Russians. Nagy headed the Hungarian government during the early stages of the anti-Communist revolt and then... after Russia took control... was replaced by puppet Premier Kadar. Nagy took refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy, along with more than 50 of his followers. Yesterday they left the embassy under a promise of immunity to go to their homes. Yugoslavia charged today that they never reached their homes, despite the safe-conduct guarantee issued by the Hungarian government. The Yugoslav foreign office warned that any interference with Nagy would be regarded as "a flagrant violation---not only of the existing friendly relations between HUNGARY and Yugoslavia---but also of international law." Tonight, Yugoslavia charged that Nagy had been "abducted" by Soviet security officers.

Austrian police today shot and killed a Russian soldier who crossed their frontier. Another Russian soldier was captured. Both Russians were pursuing a group of Hungarian refugees. According to Austrian authorities, the one Russian was shot while trying to escape. They said the incident took place 400 yards inside the Austrian border. ~~Austrian territory.~~

Today, the Soviet newspaper Pravda again accused Marshal Tito of interfering in the affairs of other Communist Parties. Pravda charged the Yugoslav leader with trying to set himself up as the only authority on Communism. The paper made no mention of Tito's recent statement that the Soviet leadership is divided on the issue of Stalinism... and that Red Army intervention in Hungary was "a fatal error". "We are convinced," Pravda said, "that the questions in dispute must be discussed and cleared up through a comradely exchange of views."

A Polish government paper today rejected as "non-sensical" Moscow's charge that the Hungarian revolt was the work of Western agents. It compared the revolt to the Poznan uprising of last June, when Polish workers fought in the streets for freedom and bread. [redacted]

Two hundred and thirteen more Hungarian refugees arrived by plane today in the United States.

The leaders of four Moslem countries have issued a joint communique, expressing alarm over what they called "the rising tide of subversion in the Middle East." (This is taken to be a reference to Soviet infiltration. The four countries... Turkey, Pakistan, Iran and Iraq... are [redacted] members of the Baghdad Pact). These countries also reaffirmed their view, that the Suez dispute should be negotiated under United Nations auspices "in such a way as to insure free passage through the canal, with full respect for Egyptian sovereignty."

The Israeli radio said tonight that an unsuccessful attempt has been made to assassinate the Iraqi prime minister. The broadcast quoted "reports received from Iraq".

Moscow newspapers today continued publishing reports of a buildup of British, French and Israeli troops on the Jordanian frontier, despite the fact that these reports have been vigorously denied.

Premier Mollet of France (has rejected) Soviet Premier Bulganin's proposal that France... together with Britain and Israel... pay compensation to Egypt for damage incurred in the fighting. Mollet said the responsibility for what has happened lies with President Nasser. And he called on Bulganin to obey the United Nations resolutions on Hungary.

British Prime Minister Eden left England today for a rest in the West Indies. A reporter asked him... at the airport... whether British policy in the Middle East had been revised. Eden said, "Our position has not changed." He will be gone about three weeks.

The British commander in the Middle East said today that a battalion of British troops will be withdrawn from Port Said ON MONDAY, B ritain told the United Nations General Assembly yesterday that such a withdrawal was planned, in compliance with the United Nations resolution demanding the withdrawal of invading troops from Egyptian territory. However, the B ritish foreign secretary... Selwyn Lloyd... told the Assembly today that Britain cannot withdraw its forces in large numbers until the United Nations police force is in a position to take effective command. The Egyptian foreign minister objected. The forces of Britain, France and Israel, he said, should pull out "in a matter of days." A resolution to this effect has been introduced by 21 Afro-Asian countries... and may be voted on tomorrow. In a moment, we will have a report on the Middle East question, direct from United Nations headquarters.

In India, more than a hundred persons were killed today, when a passenger train plunged over an embankment, south of Madras. At least 65 persons were injured.

A state of emergency was declared today in Erie, Pennsylvania, which was buried last night under two feet of snow. Nearly all business in Erie is at a standstill. Factories are closed, and almost no public transportation is available. National Guard troops have been mobilized to rescue stranded motorists, and help clear the main roads. Northeastern Ohio and Western New York also were hard hit.

The fact-finding board appointed by President Eisenhower in the dock strike, is expected to make its report to the White House late tonight. The Justice Department will then be able to seek an injunction, calling off the strike for 80 days. A last-minute effort to negotiate a settlement, collapsed this afternoon. The walkout on the East and Gulf coasts has now gone into its second week.

And now... for that recorded report from United Nations headquarters, here is my colleague, Larry Lesueur:

(Tape runs 5 mins
Ends on cue: "---to Ed Murrow."

That was a summing up of the situation at the United Nations, as it appears tonight.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Russians are finding the spirit of liberty in Hungary difficult to quench. It was the Hungarian hero Kossuth who said, "The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity. And in whatever part of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain for all who desire it."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Friday, November 23, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And, now, for that recorded report we mentioned earlier, the report from United Nations headquarters, here is my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: Despite some new disasters impending, the Middle East crisis has settled down here at the UN to a tug-of-war. The twenty-five Afro-Asian nations plus the Soviet bloc are hammering constantly at Britain, France and Israel to pull their forces out of Egypt. But those three powers are still hanging on grimly, in the hope that some start can be made to settle the conditions that prompted their triple invasion. Although the Soviet Union seems to have pulled in the horns of its threats of intervention with volunteers and atomic rockets, nevertheless, threats of imminent new outbreaks are still being tossed around rather lightly. Communist-infiltrated Syria speaks of defending itself from what it calls "new Anglo-French-Israeli concentrations" on its frontiers. And Jordan, which did not come to the aid of Egypt, still conjures up the ghost of a holy Arab war. But considering the events of the past month in the Middle East, not even the most callous correspondent will ever say again that the seemingly incredible can't happen.

The pressure is building up against Britain, France and Israel to withdraw, both inside and outside the UN. It's becoming increasingly clear that the longer Britain and France remain in the Suez Canal Zone, the greater will be the oil shortage. Not only in their own countries, but throughout the rest of Western Europe, especially among those nations which did not invade Egypt. And the attitude of the United States here at the UN is that there can be no compromising with principle. The British, French and Israelis must withdraw, they say, whether their mission was in the interests of this country or not. The gloom of the British and French over what they consider to be this country's immature idealism would be hard to underestimate. I've been told by Commonwealth spokesmen from Australia and New Zealand that the effect down under of what they call "lack of American support for its principal allies" will be incalculable. But to this every American representative shrugs his shoulders and says "What could we do?" By taking the law into their own hands, the British and French gave us no choice.

The fact of the matter, of course, is that Britain and France are being to withdraw without accomplishing their mission, the downfall of Nasser. And although the creation of a UN emergency force at first appeared to give them some hope of saving face, it now looks as though they'll be forced out of Egypt without any guarantee that a more powerful President Nasser will ever negotiate a Suez settlement that is fair to Europe's interests. As for the Israelis, the pressure on them to withdraw is tremendous, without any promise of any permanent peace settlement with Egypt or an end to the unbearable Suez blockade.

The British argument for clinging to their position at the mouth of the Suez Canal has been drowned in the flood of impassioned oratory from practically all sides. Even the British arguments seem to have lost conviction, now that discouragement has set in. But from the words of Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, the British are reluctant to pull out completely until the mission of the UN emergency force is clearly defined.

Now in diplomacy it's always difficult and perhaps unwise to state one's motives too bluntly. But the British desire seems to be that the UN emergency force should remain astride the Suez Canal, not only until the canal is cleared, but until the UN can help them get a just settlement for international control of the Suez Canal. But it's difficult to see at this state how a power military outfit like the UN emergency force can really help Britain work out a future political settlement for the canal and the Palestine question. But the British are reluctant to get out until they get this idea across to the United States at least. Which does have two proposals pending that look forward to a permanent Middle East settlement. Yet, if President Nasser has the right to dictate the functions of a UN emergency force, he'll certainly ask it to leave Egypt before the UN can ever settle the conditions that led to these unhappy events.

According to the Hammarskjold reports, the functions of the UN force, which also include the duration of its occupation, will be the subject of future negotiations between Nasser and the Secretary General. Now, while hope is not altogetherdead that Nasser may act reasnnably, the Hammarskjold report did stress the fact that Egypt's sovereign territorial rights hold priority. But to this I must add that the Hammarskjold report seemed deliberately vague on the subject. Apparently the UN Secretary General wants to get first things first; get the UN force into the Suez area first and talk about its functions and the length of its stay later. Possibly much later, when Nasser will talk sense about an overall Middle East settlement.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was a summing up of the situation ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Former Premier Nagy of Hungary has disappeared. The puppet government of Hungary claims that Nagy has gone to Roumania, after expressing a wish to live in a "people's democracy". The Reuters news service quotes a reliable source in Budapest as saying he was arrested today by the Russians. Nagy headed the Hungarian government douring the early stages of the anti-Communist revolt... and then..after Russia took control..was replaced by puppet Premier Kadar. Nagy took refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy, along with more than 50 of his followers. Yesterday they left the embassy under a promise of immunity to go to their homes. Yugoslavia charged today that they never reached their homes, despite the same conduct guarantee issued by the Hungarian government. The Yugoslav foreign office warned that any interference with Nagy would be regarded as "a flagrant violation"...not only og the existing friendly relations between Hungary and Yugoslavia -- but also of international law." Tonight, Yugoslavia charged that Nagy had been "abducted " by Soviet security officers.

Austrian police today shot and killed a Russian soldier who crossed their frontier. Another Russian soldier was captured Both Russians were pursuing a group of Hungarian refugees. According to Austrian authorities, The oen Russina was shot while trying to escape. They said the incident took place 400 yeards inside the Austrian border.

Today, the Soviet newspaper Pravda again accused Marshal Tito of interfering in the affairs of the other Communist Parties. Pravda charged the Yugoslav leader with trying to set himself up as the only authority on Communism. The paper made no mention of Tito's recent statement that the Soviet leadership is divided on the issue of Stalinism..and that Red Army intervention in Hungary was "a fateful error." "We are convinced," Pravda said, "that the questions in dispute must be discussed and cleared up through a comradely exchange of views."

A Polish government paper today rejected as "non-sensical" Moscow's charge that the Hungarian revolt was the work of Western agents. It compared the revolt to the Poznan uprising of last June, when Polish workers fought in the streets for freedom and bread.

Two hundred and thireten more Hungarian refugees arrived by plane today in the United States.

The leaders of four Moslem countries have issued a joint communique expressing alarm over what they called "the rising tide of subversion in the Middle East." (This is taken to be a reference to Soviet infiltration. The four countries...Turkey, Pakistan Iran and Iraq...are members of the Baghdad Pact. These countries also reaffirmed their view that the Suez Dispute should be negotiated under the United Nations auspices "is such a way as to isure free passage through the canal with full respect for Egyptian sovereignty."

The Israeli radio said tonight than an unsuccessful attempt has been made to assassinate the Iraqi prime minister The broadcast quoted "reports received from Iraq."

Moscow newspapers today continued publishing reports of a buildup of British, French and Israeli troops on the Jordanianfrontier, despite the act that these reports have been vigorously denied.

Premier Mollet of France has rejected Soviet Premier Bulganin's proposal that France, together with Britain and Israel..pay compensation to Egypt for damage incurred in the fighting. Mollet said the responsibility for what has happened lies with President Nasser. And he called on Bulganin to obey the United Nations resolutions on Hungary.

British Prime Minister Eden left England today for a rest in the West Indies. A reporter asked him..at the airport..whether British policy in the Middle East had been revised. Eden said, "Our position has not changed." He will be gone about three weeks."

The British commanded in the Middle East said today that a battalion of British troops will be withdrawn from Port Said on Monday. Britain told the United Nations General Assembly yesterday that such a withdrawl was planned, in compliance with the United Nations resolution demanding the withdrawal of invading troops from Egyptian territory. However, the British foreign secretary ..Selwyn Lloyd..told the Assembly today that Britain cannot withdraw its forces in large numbers until the United Nations police force is in a position to take protective command. The Egyptian foreign minister objected. The forces of Britain, France and Israel, he said, should pull out "in a matter of days." A resolution to this effect has been introduced by 21 Afro-Asian countries... and may be voted on tomorrow. In a moment, we will have a report on the Middle East question direct from United Nations headquarters.

In India, more than a hundred persons were killed today when a passenger train plunged over an embankment, south of Madras. At least 65 persons wer injured.

A state of emergency was declared today in Erie, Pennsylvania, which was buried last night under two feet of snow. Nearly all business in Erie is at a standstill. Factories are closed, and almost no public transportation is available. National Guard troops have been mobilized to resuee stranded motorists and help clear the main roads. Northeastern Ohio and Western New York also were hard bit.

The fact-finding board appointed by President Eisenhower in the dock strike is expected to make its report to the White House late tonight. The Justice Department will then be able to seek an injunction calling off the strike for 80 days. At last-minute effort to negotiate a settlement collapsed this afternoon. The walkout on the East and Gulf coasts has not gone into its second week.

And now, hor that recorded report we mentioned earlier, the report from United Nations headquarters, here is my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: Despite some new disasters impending, the Middle East crisis has settled down here at the UN to a tug-of-war. The twenty-five Afro-Asian nations plus the Soviet bloc are hammering constantly at Britain, France and Israel to pull their forces out of Egypt. But those three powers are still hanging on grimly, in the hope that some start can be made to settle the conditioun that prompted their triple invsiion. Although the Soviet Union seems to have pulled in the horns of its threats of intervention with volunteers and atomic rockets, nevertheless, threats of imminent new outbreaks are still being tossed around rather lightly. Communist infiltrates Syria speaks of defending itself from what it calls "new Anglo-French-Israeli concentrations." on its frontiers.. And Jordan, which did not come to the aid of Egypt, still conjures up the ghost of a holy Arab war. But considering the events of the past month in the Middle East, not even the most callous correspondent will ever say again that the seemingly incredible can't happen.

The pressure is building up against Britain, France and Israel to withdraw, both inside and outside the UN. It's becoming increasingly clear that the longer Britain and France remain in the Suez Canal Zone, the greater will be the oil shortage. Not only in their own countries, but throughout the rest of Western Europe, especially among those nations which did not invade Egypt. And the attitude of the United States here at the UN is that there can be no compromising with principle. The British, French and Israelis must withdraw, they say, whether their mission was in the interests of this country or not. The gloom of the British and French over what they consider to be this country's immature idealism would be hard to underestimate. I've been told by Commonwealth spokesmen from Australia and New Zealand that the effect down under of what they call "lack of American support for its principal allies" will be incalcuable. But to this every American representative shrugs his shoulders and says "What could we do?" By taking the law into their own hands, the British and French gave us no choice.

The fact of the matter, of course, is that Britain and France are beginning to withdraw without accomplishing their mission, the downfall of Nasser. And although the creation of an emergency force at first appeared to give them some hope of saving face, it now looks as though they'll be forced out of Egypt without any guarantee that a more powerful President Nasser will ever negotiate a Suez settlement that is fair to Europe's interests. As for the Israelis, the pressure on them to withdraw is tremendous, without any promise of any permanent peace settlement with Egypt or an end to the unbearable Suez blocade.

The British argument for clinging to their position at the mouth of the Suez Canal has been drowned in the flood of impassioned oratory from practically all sides. Even the British arguments seem to have lost conviction, now that discouragement has set in. But from the words of Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, the British are reluctant to pull out completely until the mission of the UN emergency force is clearly defined.

Now in diplomacy it's always difficult and perhaps unwise to state one's motives too bluntly. But the British desire seems to be that the UN emergency force should remain astride the Suez Canal, not only until the canal is cleared, but until the UN can help them get a just settlement forinternational control of the Suez Canal. But it's difficult to see at this state how a power military outfit like the UN emergency force can really help Britain work out a future political settlement for the canal and the Palestine question. But the British are reluctant to get out until they get this idea across to the United States at least. Which does have to proposals pending that look forward to a permanent Middle East settlement. Yet, if President Nasser has the right to dictate the function of a UN emergency force, he'll certainly ask it to leave Egypt before the UN can ever settle the conditions that led to these unhappy events.

Accoding to the Hammarskjold reports, the functionsof the UN force, which also include the duration of its occupation, will be the subject of future negotiations between Nasser and the Secretary General. Now, while hope is not altogether dead that Nasser may act reasonably, the Hammarskjold report did stress the fact that Egypt's sovereign territorial rights hold priority. But to this I must add that the Hammarsjjold report seemed deliberately vague on the subjedt. Apparently the UN Secretary General wants to get first things first; get the UN force into the Suez area first and then talk about its functions and the length of its stay later. Possibly much later, when Nasser will talk sense about an overall Middle East settlement.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thas was a suming up of the situation at the United Nations, as it appears tonight.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Russians are finding the spirit of liberty in Hungary difficult to quench. It was the Hungarian hero Kossuth who said, "The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity. And in whatever part of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain for all who desire it."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Good evening, everyone....

This is Larry Lesueur... sitting in for Ed Murrow, while he takes a well-earned vacation after his recent trip to the Middle East. Ed will be back next week.

Secretary of Defense Wilson has issued a sweeping order... aimed at settling the inter-service row over guided missiles. The order amounts to issuance of a set of ground rules, spelling out which service shall have jurisdiction over which weapons. It assigns to the Air Force control of all present and future missiles with a range of more than 200 miles. The Army... under this order... will have to surrender to the Air Force the Jupiter intermediate range missile, although the Army may be able to retain control of its Redstone missile. The announced range of the Redstone missile is about 200 miles. The Army will also be able to operate its own Nike and Talos missiles. Anti-aircraft missiles with a range of more than a hundred miles will become the responsibility of the Air Force. And Secretary Wilson declared that the 5-thousand-pound weight limit on Army planes must remain in effect. In fact... in his order... this limitation is extended to new experimental types, such as "vertical take-off" fixed wing aircraft. Speaking for Mr. Wilson, Deputy Defense Secretary Robertson said bluntly: "We are not going to create a separate air force within the Army."

The Russians have suddenly begun interferring with Allied rail traffic between Western Germany and Berlin. Last night, a British military train was forced to return to Berlin, after reaching the West German border. Soviet officers at the border checkpoint claimed the papers of the British passengers were "not in order". An American military train traveling in the opposite direction was held up for two hours... while each passenger was required to show his identity papers. The question arises, of course, whether these are isolated incidents... or the beginning of a new obstruction policy. No Allied spokesmen tonight would hazard a guess.

Turkey announced tonight that IT'S recalling its minister to Israel. The reason for this move is not clear. But reliable sources in Ankara are quoted as saying it may be a conciliatory gesture toward some of the Arab states.

Syria would be excluded. The Turkish radio accused Syria today of conniving with Russia in the Middle East... of accepting Soviet arms and of massing troops on the border of Lebanon. The Turkish broadcast also charged Egyptian agents with fomenting disturbances in Lebanon.

In Washington today, the Iraqi ambassador called at the State Department to request more "defensive" arms.

Reports that the Egyptian government has ordered the EXPULSION of British, French and Jewish residents of Egypt, has caused anxiety in a number of world capitals. An undisclosed number of Jews in Egypt are reported interned. The French cabinet met today to discuss these reports. And... in London... a government spokesman said Great Britain will not retaliate against the more than 1-thousand Egyptians there. "I am quite sure," he told the House of Commons, "that the country would not wish us to meet barbarism with barbarism." Here in New York, "the strongest possible representations" have been made to UN Secretary General Hammarskjold by the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. Mr. Lloyd also protested to the Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi. //

Meanwhile, Jewish residents of Port Said are [redacted] fleeing from Egypt as best they CAN. [redacted] Nearly a hundred of them escaped today on the French hospital ship "Marseillaise". Each of them left behind a member of his or her family. a hostage seized [redacted] by the Egyptian government just before the landing of Anglo-French forces on November fourth.

Here in New York tonight, the United Nations General Assembly approved a grant of 10-million dollars... to pay the initial costs of the [redacted] U.N. EMERGENCY [redacted] force in Egypt. The vote was 52 to 9, with 13 countries abstaining. The nine votes against the measure were cast by the Soviet bloc. [redacted] Russia had contended that the full expense [redacted] of the emergency force. as well as the cost of clearing the Suez Canal... should be borne entirely by Israel, Britain and France. The cost will now be borne by ALL UN MEMBERS, with this country paying its proportionate one-Third.

In Hungary, the leaders of the general strike have decided that the workers now have no alternative but to go back to their jobs. They feel it is better to return to work, so that they can earn money and buy food.

President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia today for a week or ten days of rest and relaxation. It's the President's first vacation in three months.

Shortly before taking off from Washington, Mr. Eisenhower was host at the White House to 12 of the Hungarian refugees who have reached this country. The President said the news from Hungary has been "shocking"... called the deportation of thousands of Hungarians, at bayonet point "the ultimate tyranny to a people." The refugees then had their pictures taken with the President in the White House Rose Garden. But three declined, lest the families they left behind in Hungary be endangered.

Reports circulating in Washington say that President Eisenhower will definitely appoint Ellsworth Bunker, retiring president of the American Red Cross, to be the new United States ambassador to India. Mr. Bunker would succeed John Sherman Cooper, The Republican senator elect from Kentucky.

The government reported today that living costs jumped one-half of one percent in October... to reach a new all-time High. Retail prices went up in all major categories except food. There was compensation for "some" [redacted] wage-earners: The average take-home pay of factory workers in October reached the highest level in history. ~~And the increase in the cost-of-living index means an automatic pay boost [redacted] for more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries.~~ For most of these workers, the automatic [redacted] increase amounts to two cents an hour.

Seaports [redacted] along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts... from Maine to Texas.. really bustled today as longshoremen went back to work under a court order ending their strike for at least 10 days. Federal mediators hope a settlement can be negotiated in the "cooling-off" period, which... under the Taft-Hartly Act... can be extended for 80 days.

The executives of the Democratic National Committee met in Washington today for a discussion of party problems. And right off they were told by Chairman Paul Butler that the Democratic national organization is more than ~~[redacted]~~ 8 hundred thousand dollars in debt. Butler told a Senate committee today ~~today~~ that the law ~~[redacted]~~ sets an "unrealistic" limit on campaign spending. The legal ceiling, he said, ought to be in the neighborhood of 9 or 10 million dollars. not 3-million dollars, as the present law prescribes.

The famous bandleader... Tommy Dorsey... died today at the age of 52. Apparently ~~[redacted]~~ he succumbed during the night in his sleep.

well

With President Eisenhower playing golf in Augusta Georgia, and British Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden sunning himself on the beaches of Jamaica in the nearby Caribbean, it would seem an appropriate time for the two Western leaders to get together for a quiet chat about repairing the vital Anglo-American alliance...But unfortunately that doesn't seem to be the case, or at least we haven't heard any news about either of these gentlemen hopping a plane, or even lifting up a telephone... //

In fact, there seems to be little or no contact between the representatives of the United States and Britain, except at lower levels, even at that gathering place of nations, the UN.. // They do attend each other's diplomatic receptions, but that seems to be as far as it goes...The news is no longer that this country and Britain are split, but that no attempt is being made to heal the breach...The American attitude is that the British and French must first withdraw their forces from the Suez Area, and then we'll be willing to talk to them again...We've also given hints that we are prepared to do something about the growing oil shortage in Britain, but we are also willing to wait until the oil ~~emergency~~ shortage forces Britain's hand...The British delegation here in New York, ~~headed by~~ Her Majesty's Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, ~~on~~, has not been complaining in public, but they're far from resigned to the present course of events.. They admit they made serious miscalculations in their Egyptian adventure, and that they probably should have informed the President of their intentions, but they do think that some things can still be done which would be in the interests not only of Britain, but of the United States as well..

They insist that its not only a matter of tactics but of long range strategy. With this country on the same side as Russia, the Arabs and the rest of the Asian-African bloc at the UN, pressing for an anglo-french withdrawal from Suez, The British are going to have to withdraw, there's no doubt about that, ~~for while they may be able to stand the oil shortage a little better than the rest of Western Europe~~, the pressure is getting too great to withstand... the British argument is not over the fact that they must play their withdrawal card eventually, ~~which is the presence of their forces in Suez,~~ but they're concerned over what they think is our stubborness over how they play that card...

The British have always said that they would withdraw once the UN Emergency Force is large enough to keep peace in the Middle East...And that stage of events should be reached in about ten days, when some five thousand UN troops will have arrived in the Suez Canal Zone. But their point is that they don't want to play their last card of withdrawal without getting something out of it, something that will not only be in their interests, but in ours, if we still consider the alliance to be of mutual advantage...The British want to get some kind of package plan, contingent on their withdrawal, a plan that will at least ensure some way of keeping President Nasser of Egypt from raising the Suez Canal tolls whenever he needs pocket-money---and to keep him from discriminating against the ships of those nations that he doesn't like at any given moment.. Without such an agreement, the British feel that their intervention, rash tho it may have been, will have been entirely thrown away, to our loss as well as theirs, not to mention the rest of free Europe...This kind of thinking, of course, is unsentimental realism...For the British feel, that once you're committed, soft-thinking has no place in the tactics of a card game.. Especially when you're losing, then they say you don't expect your partners to force your hand... The fact that Egypt now intends to expell All British subjects without their possessions, is not making the British any happier...

Before this week, a high British official may sound off on a subject they're usually quiet about---American Foreign Policy... What they consider to be the "drifting" of american policy away from its real allies, in favor of the weak countries of Asia and Africa...One British official said to to me today with a smile: All the satellites are in rebellion...Poland, Hungary, and now Britain...

This is L.L. I'll be back in a moment with a "Footnote to The News (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

Footnote to the News

The new edition of that famous military publication "Jane's Fighting Ships" appeared today in London. And it says Britain's Royal Navy... which ruled the waves for so many centuries... is now second in size to the navies of both Russia and the United States. The Soviet Union, it reports, is stressing construction -- more and more destroyers, cruisers and submarines of the conventional type... while the United States Navy is pioneering in rockets and atomic power.

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1956

7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone,

This is Larry Lesueur sitting in for Ed Murrow, while he takes a well-earned vacation after his recent trip to the Middle East. Ed will be back next week.

Secretary of Defense Wilson has issued a sweeping order...aimed at settling the inter-service row over guided missiles. The order amounts to issuance of a set of ground rules, spelling out which service shall have jurisdiction over which weapons. It assigns to the Air Force control of all present and future missiles with a range of more than 200 miles. The Army--under this order will have to surrender to the Air Force the Jupiter intermidiate range missile, although the Army may be able to retain control of its Redstone missile. The announced range of the Redstone missile is about 200 miles. The Army will also be able to operate its own Nike and Talos missiles. Anti-aircraft missiles with a range of more than a hundres miles will ecome the responsibility of the Air Force. And Secretary Wilson declared that the 5-thusand-pound weight limit on Army planes must remain in effect. In fact...in his order.. this limitation is extended to new experimental types, such as "vertical take-off" fixed wing aircraft. Speaking for Mr. ilson, Deputy Defense Secretary Robertson said bluntly: "We are not going to create a separate air force within the Army."

The Russians have suddenly begun interfearing with Allied rail traffic between Western Germany and Berlin. Last night, a British military train was forced to return to Berlin, after reaching the Western German border. Soviet officers at the border checkpoint claimed the papers of the British passengers were "not inorder." An American military train traveling in the opposite direction was held up for two hours..while each passenger was required to show his identity papers. The question arises, of course, whether these are isolated incidents..or the beginning of a new obstruction policy. No allied sopkesman tonight would hazard a guess.

Turkey announced tonight that its recalling its minister to Israel. The reason for this move is not clear. But reliable sources in Ankara are quoted as saying it may be a conciliatory gesture toward some of the Arab states.

Syria would be excluded. The Turkish radio accused Syria today of conviving with Russia in the Middle East..of accepting Soviet arms and of massing troops on the border of Lebanon The Turkish broadcast also charged Egyptian agents with fomenting disturbances in Lebanon.

In Washington today, the Iraqi ambassador called at the State Department to request more "defensive" arms.

Reports that the Egyptian government has ordered the expulsion of British, French and Jewish residents of Egypt, has caused anxiety in a number of world capitals. An undisclosed number of Jews in Egypt are reported interned. The French cabinet met today to discuss these reports And..in London..a government spokesman said Great Britain will not retaliate against the more than 1-thousand Egyptians there. "I am quite sure", he told the House of Commons, "that the country would not wish us tom meet barbarism with barbarism." Here in New York, "the strongest possible representations" have been made to UN Secretary General Hammarskjold by the British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd. Mr. Lloyd also protested to the Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi. Meanwhile, Jewish residents of Port Said are fleeing from Egypt as best they can. Nearly a hundred of them escaped today on the French hospital ship "Marseillaise". Each of them left behind a member of his or her family..a hostage seized by the Egyptian government just before the landing of Anglo-French forces on November fourth.

fourth.

Here in New York tonight, the United Nations General Assembly approved a grant of 10-million dollars to pay the initial costs of the U.N. Emergency force in Egypt. The vote was 52 to 9, with 13 countries abstaining. The nine votes against the measure were cast by the Soviet bloc. Russia had contended that full expense of the emergency force...as well as the cost of clearing the Suez Canal..should be borne entirely by Israel, Britain and France. The cost will not be borne by all U.N. members, with this country paying its proportional one-third.

In Hungary, the leaders of the general strike have decided that the workers now have no alternative, but to go back to their jobs. They feel it is better to return to work, so that they can earn money and buy food.

President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia today for a week or ten days of rest and relaxation. It's the President's first vacation in three months.

Shortly before taking off from Washington, Mr. Eisenhower was host at the White House to 12 of the Hungarian refugees who have reached this country. The President said the news from Hungary has been "shocking" ..called the deportation of thousands of Hungarians at bayonet point "the ultimate tyranny to a people." The refugees then had their pictures taken with the President in the White House Rose Garden.But others declined, lest the families they left behind in Hungary be endangered.

Reports circulating in Washington say that President Eisenhower will definitely appoint Elsworth Bunker, retiring president of the American Red Cross, to be the new United States ambassador to India. Mr. Bunker would succeed John Sherman Cooper. The Republican senator elect from Kentucky.

The government reported today that living costs jumped one-half of one percent in October..to reach a new all-time high. Retail prices went up in all major categories except food. There was compensation for "some" wage-earners: The average take-home pay of factory workers in October reached the highest level in history.

Seaports along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts..from Maine to Texas..really bustled today as longshoremen' went back to workunder a court order ending their strike for at least 10 days. Federal mediators hope a settlemennt can be negoiiated in the "cooling off period, which,,under the Taft-Hartley Act.. can be extended for 80 days.

The executives of the Democratic National Committee met in Washington today for a discussion of a party probelms. And right off they were told by Chairman Paul Butler that the Democratic national organization is more than 8 hundred thousand dollars in debt. Butler told a Senate committee today that the law sets an "unrealistic" limit on campaign spending. The legal ceiling, he said, ought to be in the neighborhood of 9 or 10 million dollars..not 3-million dollars, as the present law prescribes.

The famous bandleader..Tommy Dorsey..died today at the age of 52. Apparently he succumbed during thenight in his sleep.

With President Eisenhower playing golf in Augusta Georgia, and British Prime Minister Sir Anthony Eden sunning himself on the beaches of Jamaica in the nearby Caribbean, it wouls seem an apprppriate time for the two western leaders to get together for a quiet chat about repairing the vital Anglo-American alliance. But unfortuantely that doesn'st seem to be the case, or at least we haven't heard any news about either of these gentlemen hopping a plane, or even lifting up a telephone.

In fact, there seems to be little or no contact between the representatives of the United States and Britain, except at lower levels, even at the gathering place of nations, the UN. They do attend each other's diplomatic receptions, but that seems to be as far as it goes..the news is no longar that this country and Britain are split, but that no attempt is being made to heal the breach...the American attitude is that the British and French must first withdraw their forces from the Suez area, and then we'll be willing to talk to them again.. We've also given hints that we are prepared to do something about the growing oil shortage in Britain, but we are also willing to wait until the oil shortage forces Britain's hand. The British delegation here in New York headed by Her Majesty's Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, has not been complaining in public, but they're far from resigned to the present course of events. They admit they made serious miscalculations in their Egyptian adventure, and that they probably should have informed the President if their intentions, but they do think that some things can still be done which would be in the interests not only of Britain, but of the United States as well.

They insist that its not only a matter of tactics but of long range strategy . With this country on the same side as Russia, the Arabs and the rest of the Asian-African bloc at the UN, pressing for an Anglo-Frendh withdrawal from Suez, the British are going to have to withdraw, there's no doubt about that. The pressure is getting too great to withstand. The British argument is not over the fact that they must play their withdrawal card eventually, they're concerned over what they think is our stubbornness over how they play that card.

The British have always said that they would withdraw once the UN Emergency Force is large enough to keep peace in the Middle East ..and that stage of events should be reached in about ten days, when some five thousand UN troops will have arrived in the Suez Canal Zone. their point is that they don't want to play their last card of withdrawal without getting something out of it, something that will not only be in their interests, but in ours, if we still consider the alliance to be of mutual advantage. The British want to get some kind of 'package plan', contingent on their withdrawal, a plan that will at least ensure some way of keeping President Nasser of Egypt from raising the Suez Canal tolls whenever he needs pocket money -- and to keep him from discriminating against the ships of those nations that he doesn't like at any given moment. Without such an agreement, the British feel that their intervention, rash though it mah have been, will have been entirely thrown away, to our loss as well as theirs, not to mention the rest of free Europe. This kind of thinking, of course, is unsentimental realism. For the British feel, that once you're committed, soft-thinking has no place in the tactics of a card game. Especially when you're losing. Then they say you don't expect your partners to force your hand. The fact that Egypt now intents to expell all British subjects without their possessions, is not making the British any happier.

Before this week, a high British official may sound off on a subject they're usually quiet about -- American Foreign Policy. What they consider to be the "drifting" of American policy away from its real allies, in favor of the weak countries of Asia and Africa. One Britisher said to me today with a smile ..all the satellites are in rebellion...Poland, Hungary, and now Britain.

This is Larry Lesueur I'll be back in a moment with a "Footnote to The News." But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUEUR: The new edition of that famous military publication"Jane's Fighting Ships" appeared today in London. And it says Britain's Royal Navy which ruled the waves for so many centuries is now second in size to the navies of both Russia and the United States. The Soviet Union, it reports, is stressing construction -- more and more destroyers, cruisiers and submarines of the conventional type..while the United States Navy is pioneering in rockets and atomic power.

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Tues., Nov. 27, 1956

Good evening, everyone...

American FOREIGN policy was subjected to strong criticism today in the British House of Commons. More than a hundred Conservative members of Parliament signed a motion criticizing the American attitute toward the Middle East crisis. Also the attitude of the United Nations. The motion "deplores" both the resolution of the General Assembly calling for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of British and French troops from Egypt AND the attitude of the United States... which, it says, is "gravely endangering" the Atlantic Alliance. The United States supported the U.N. resolution, which also demanded the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory. The motion is signed by roughly one-third of the Conservative members of Parliament. It has not been put to a vote.

In Augusta, Georgia, President Eisenhower played another 18 holes of golf today... but he also kept in touch with the international situation. Mr. Eisenhower conferred by telephone with both Acting Secretary of State Hoover and Secretary Dulles, who is convalescing in Key West. News Secretary Hagerty announced afterward that Mr. Dulles will see the President in Augusta on Sunday. Besides the Middle East situation, they will review plans for American participation in a NATO meeting in Paris on December 11th. That will be a meeting of NATO council ministers, and Mr. Dulles will attend the talks.

President Eisenhower also issued a statement today... through News Secretary Hagerty... concerning America's relations with her principal allies---Britain and France. The statement acknowledged that "differences have arisen" and further declared, "These differences in no way should be construed as a weakening or disruption of the great bonds that have so long joined our nation with the United Kingdom and the Republic of France... and our other allies... in assuring that peace, justice and freedom shall prevail." In his statement, the President reaffirmed his faith in NATO. Nato is, he said... as always...

"a basic and indispensable element" of American defense against the continuing Soviet threat.

The Canadian foreign MINISTER... Lester Pearson... said today that the B ritish Commonwealth was, at one point, brought near dissolution by the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt. Mr. Pearson told the Canadian parliament that the United States is not "free of some responsibility" for the breakdown in [redacted] consultation and agreement AMONG the Western Alliance. "We felt," he said, "and we still feel that the thing to do is to get out of this crisis without a war... and without violating the United Nations Charter... and then draw the necessary conclusions so that the Western coalition would not collapse again in the day ahead."

Today... in the U.N. General Assembly... Egypt demanded definite information from Britain, France and Israel as to when they expect to withdraw their forces from Egyptian territory. Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi cited press reports that France... instead of pulling out its troops... has actually landed tank reinforcements. The Israeli foreign minister... Mrs. Golda Meier... charged that Egypt is forcing the deportation of all Jews. She made the charge in a letter to Secretary General Hammarskjold... and denounced the alleged deportation as a violation of the human rights provisions of the U.N. Charter.// Egypt denied today that it ever planned any "mass Expulsion" of British and French nationals.// .or Jews. However, a Greek ship reached Athens today with 400 Britons, Frenchmen and Jews aboard. And they said that HAD been expelled from Egypt.

Tonight, France ordered rationing of its dwindling supply of gasoline. The order goes into effect at noon Thursday. Britain has already ordered gasoline rationing, effective December 17th.

In Budapest, the Council of Workers has asked its members not to strike "in the interest of the Hungarian people." But there is no capitulation. A spokesman for the workers council says, "We will not yield. Imre Nagy has been... and remains... our first demand." The workers organization has insisted that former Premier Nagy, who was abducted by the Russians, be returned to power. In a speech last night, the new puppet premier... Janos Kadar... rejected the demand, as well as the demand for withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Here in New York today, United Nations sources expressed hope that Secretary General Hammarskjold will soon be allowed to go to Budapest. Hammarskjold has asked permission to visit Hungary in order to discuss relief measures... and arrange for the admission of U.N. observers. And his request is now said to be receiving serious consideration.

There is still considerable concern tonight about Syria. Syria is ruled by a pro-Soviet military clique. It has been subjecting Iraq to an ominous barrage of propaganda, and Iraq is fearful of attack. The State Department said today there is no doubt Russia has been sending arms to Syria, despite the United Nations embargo of November third. And the United States, it said, is "considering" the request Iraq made yesterday for defensive weapons, including anti-aircraft guns and planes.

In Moscow, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda charged today that the United States is trying to provoke an attack on Syria by Turkey and Iraq. Pravda claimed that... in such an attack... Syria wpuld be supported by all "peace-loving nations".

The premier of Jordan announced today that his country intends to abrogate its defense treaty with Britain... and remove all British troops from Jordanian soil. This is the treaty, signed in 1948, under which Great Britain has maintained bases in Jordan and... in return... subsidized the Jordanian Army. The premier made the announcement before the Jordanian parliament. A French government spokesman calls this "a grave and dangerous development". No reaction yet from London.

The Commerce Department reports that production of all goods and services... in the third quarter of this year... rose to an unprecedented annual rate of 414-billion dollars. And personal income, the department says, has reached an annual rate of 327-billion dollars---a gain of more than 4-billion over the second quarter. Auto production has tripled since the slack month of September. And the nation's steel mills are operating at 100 percent... or more... of rated capacity.

A Venezuelan airliner crashed into a mountain in Venezuela today, killing all 25 persons on board. The four-engine plane was en route from New York to Caracas... and was only minutes from its destination when the tragedy occurred. The plane carried 18 passengers and a crew of seven. Ten of the passengers were Americans, including the professional baseball player Charles Peete, his wife and their three children. Peete... who played for Omaha... led the American Association in batting this past season. Poor visibility was at least one factor... contributing to the accident. It was raining at the time, and the mountain was shrouded in fog.

Well, now that the dust is settling on the triple invasion of Egypt, Russia's troubles in Hungary and with Yugoslavia are again rising to the forefront. The diplomats I've talked to, are convinced that the repercussions of the upheavals in Eastern Eruope, will be EVEN more enduring than the Western split over the Middle East. For they are convinced that the leadership in Russia is now in a state of crisis... And that the crisis must endure until Russia becomes either more democratic or until a new stalin-type dictator emerges.

For those who know russia well, like Paul Henri Spaak, the socialist Belgian Foreign Minister, whose words are listened to by all statesmen, say that the collective rule of the Kremlin, can never succeed in a nation built around the dictatorship of a Stalin. They feel that Russia is now a dictatorship without a dictator. And also that the recent elevation of Molotov to a position where he can exert power, means that Party Leader Kruschyev is no longer the top voice in the Kremlin. IN Fact a shake-up has occurred in Moscow. The best information about Russia, they say, is in the ~~head~~ hands of Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia.. And when he talks back to the Kremlin now, he is no longer talking to his ~~[redacted]~~ friend Nikita Krushyev.. Tito ~~is~~ they say now addressing himself to ~~enemies.. like~~ Molotov and the Soviet Army old guard..

The Western world doesn't have too much information on what's happening inside the Kremlin, But ~~[redacted]~~ They say one thing is certain, Marshall Tito won't make any more flying trips ~~[redacted]~~ to Russia, not if he hopes to get back to ~~[redacted]~~ his wife and family in Belgrad again..

folo think piece XXXXXXX

For the past week, CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser has been in Belgrade, the capital of Yugoslavia. || We asked him today to record a report for us... by short-wave. He did, || but we observed a peculiar sound which makes the report a little difficult to listen to. // We are informed by radio engineers that the oscillation.. // which you will hear. //. MAY be due to "jamming" of Belgrad, presumably by the Russians. Here is Leiser's report.

→ Cue

~~Thank you Ernest Leiser in Belgrade~~
This is CBS

and I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news - (pause pause)

But first George Bryan

Footnote to the News

(10)

Miss Janet Myers, of New York, told a congressional committee today that the women of America are being [redacted] discriminated against... in having to pay a 10 percent luxury tax on lipstick, while MEN can buy razor blades without paying any federal tax at all. Lipstick, she said, is every bit as important to a woman as shaving is to a man. Miss Myers works for a New York cosmetics firm. "But," she said, "I speak for women everywhere."

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - ERNEST LEISER IN VIENNA

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

LEISER: A new technique seems to have been developed, Larry, among Communists who want to insult each other. You used to employ the most abusive language and vocabulary. Now you kill the other fellow with politeness and innuendo. That was the technique in the last attack by Moscow on Marshal Tito for presuming to "usurp" as they saw it, Russian leadership in East Europe. And that's the technique used today by Tito's party newspaper, Borba, in its counter-attack. The Yugoslav position is as strong as it was eight years ago when Tito was being read out of the Cominform by the Russians on Stalin's orders. Borba says, for instance, that the Soviets had only themselves to blame their policy of repression for the revolution in Hungary. It says flatly that Russia now has only two choices. Either going back to Stalinism or establishing democratic relations with each European country. And, says Borba, it's a pity that the Russians don't seem to see that this is the choice. But, obviously, under Tito's order, Borba is quite polite in its commentary and it professes to see elements of encouragement in the Soviet criticism of the Yugoslav talk (?). "We are very glad", says the Yugoslav paper, "that the principle of constructive criticism is recognized by the Russians. We welcome criticism", says Borba, "as long as it is well-intentioned." Actually, the Yugoslavs don't welcome Moscow's newest pact (?) with them any more than they welcomed any of the current crisesin eastern Europe. I just talked to one of the leading figures in the regime here and he candidly admitted that neither choice, says (?) Tito in Hungary today, is a very pleasing one. The Yugoslav Communists have no desire to see an anti-Communist freely elected government with (unintelliglble) political parties on their northern borders. The example, they fear, might be catching. Yet today they are even unhappier and uneasier at the prospect of huge Soviet armored forces squatting along that border, particularly at a time when Tito again is under Moscow's propagandic (unintellgible). This same official professed some optimism to me about future developments in eastern Europe. "These Russians will see," he said, "that they cannot go back to Stalinism in Poland, In Hungary or anywhere else. Circumstances will force them," he said, "to democratize their treatment of these countries. They simply are not strong enough to reinstate their absolute tyranny." But this official sounded to me like a man trying to convince himself at least as much as he was trying to convince me. Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - ERNEST LEISER IN VIENNA

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

LEISER: A new technique seems to have been developed, Larry, among Communists who want to insult each other. You used to employ the most abusive language and vocabulary. Now you kill the other fellow with politeness and innuendo. That was the technique in the last attack by Moscow on Marshal Tito for presuming to "usurp" as they saw it, Russian leadership in East Europe. And that's the technique used today by Tito's party newspaper, Borba, in its counter-attack. The Yugoslav position is as strong as it was eight years ago when Tito was being read out of the Cominform by the Russians on Stalin's orders. Borba says, for instance, that the Soviets had only themselves to blame their policy of repression for the revolution in Hungary. It says flatly that Russia now has only two choices. Either going back to Stalinism or establishing democratic relations with each European country. And, says Borba, it's a pity that the Russians don't seem to see that this is the choice. But, obviously, under Tito's order, Borba is quite polite in its commentary and it professes to see elements of encouragement in the Soviet criticism of the Yugoslav talk (?). "We are very glad", says the Yugoslav paper, "that the principle of constructive criticism is recognized by the Russians. We welcome criticism", says Borba, "as long as it is well-intentioned." Actually, the Yugoslavs don't welcome Moscow's newest pact (?) with them any more than they welcomed any of the current crisesin eastern Europe. I just talked to one of the leading figures in the regime here and he candidly admitted that neither choice, says (?) Tito in Hungary today, is a very pleasing one. The Yugoslav Communists have no desire to see an anti-Communist freely elected government with (unintelliglble) political parties on their northern borders. The example, they fear, might be catching. Yet today they are even unhappier and uneasier at the prospect of huge Soviet armored forces squatting along that border, particularly at a time when Tito again is under Moscow's propagandic (unintellgible). This same official professed some optimism to me about future developments in eastern Europe. "These Russians will see," he said, "that they cannot go back to Stalinism in Poland, In Hungary or anywhere else. Circumstances will force them," he said, "to democratize their treatment of these countries. They simply are not strong enough to reinstate their absolute tyranny." But this official sounded to me like a man trying to convince himself at least as much as he was trying to convince me. Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO N ETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...

American foreign policy was subjugated to strong criticism today in the British House of Commons. More than a hundred Conservative members of Parliament signed a motion criticizing the American attitude toward the Middle East crisis. Also the attitude of the United Nations. The motion "deplores" both the resolution of the General Assembly calling for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of British and French troops from Egypt and the attitude of the United States..which..it says, is "gravely endangering" the Atlantic Alliance. The United States supported the U.N. resolution, which also demanded the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory. The motion is signed by roughly one-third of the Conservative members of Parliament. It has not been put to a vote.

In Augusta, Georgia, President Eisenhower played aother 18 holes of golf today. but he also kept in touch with the international situation. Mr. Eisenhower conferred by telephone with both Acting Secretary of State Hoover and Secretary Dulles, who is convalescing in Key West. News Secretary Hagerty announced afterward that Mr. Dulles will see the President in Augusta so Sunday. Besides the Middle East situation, they will review plans for American participation in a NATO meeting in Paris on December 11th. That will be a meeting of NATO council ministers, and Mr. Dulles will attend the talks.

President Eisenhower also issued a statement today, through News Secretary Hagerty ..concerning America's relations with her principal allies--Britain and France. The statement acknowledged that "differences have arisen" and further declared, "these differences in no way should be construed as a weakening or disrupting of the great bonds that have so long joined our nation with the United Kingdom and the Republic of France and our other allies in assuring that peace, justice and freedom shall prevail." In his statement, the President reaffirmed his faith in NATO. NATO is, he said, as always, "a basic and indispensible element" of American defense against the continuing Soviet threat.

The Canadian foreign minister..Lester Pearson..said today that the British Commonwealth was, at one point, brought near dissolution by the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt. Mr. Pearson told the Canadian parliament that the United States is not "free so some responsibility" for the breakdown in consultation and agreement among the Western Alliance. "We felt", he said, "and we still feel that the t ing to do is to get out of this crisis without a war..and without violating the United Nations Charter..and then draw the necessary conclusions so that the Western coalition would not collapse again in the day ahead.

Today...in the United Nations General Assembly, Egypt demanded definite information from Britain, France and Israel as to when they expect to withdraw their forces from Egyptian territory. Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi cited press reports that France, inst ad of pulling out its troops, has acutally landed tank reinforcements. The Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meier, charged that Egypt is forcing the deportation of all Jews. She made the charge to Secretary General Hammarskjold, and enounced the alleged deportation as a violation of both human rights provisions of the U.N. charter. Egypt denied today that it ever planned any "mass expulsion" of British and French nationals ...or Jews. However, a Greek ship reached Athens today with 400 Britons, Frenchmen and Jews aboard. And they said they had been expelled from Egypt.

Tonight, France ordered rationing of its dwindling supply of gasoline. The order goes into effect at noon Thrusday. Britain has already ordered gasoline rationing effective December 17th.

In Budapest, the Council of Workers has asked its members not to strike "in the interest of the Hungarian people." But there is no capitulation. A spokesman for the workers council says, "We will not yield. Imre Nagy has been..and remains..our first demand." The workers organization has insisted that former Premier Nagy, who was abducted by the Russians, be returned to power. In a speech last night, the new puppet premier..Janos Kadar rejected the demand, as well as the demand for withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Here in New York today, United Nations sources expressed hope that Secretary General Hammarskjold will soon be allowed to go to Budapest. Hammarskjold has asked permission to visit Hungary in order to discuss relief measures..and arrange for the admission of UN observers. And his request is now said to be receiving serious consideration.

There is still considerable concern tonight about Syria. Syria is ruled by a pro-Soviet military clique. It has been subjecting Iraq to an ominous barrage of propaganda, and Iraq is fearful of attack. The State Department said today there is no doubt Russia has been sending arms to Syria, despite the United Nations embargo of November third. And the United States, is said, is "considering " the request Iraq made yesterday for defensive weapons, including anti-aircraft guns and planes.

In Moscow, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda charged today that the United States is trying to provoke an attack on Syria by Turkey and Iraq. Pravda claimed that..in such an attack..Syria would be supported by all "peace loving nations."

The premier of Jordan announced t day that his country intends to abrogate its defense treaty with Britain..and remove all British troops from Jordanian soil. This is the treaty, signed in 1948, under which Great Britain has maintained bases in Jordan and..in return.. subsidized the Jordanian Army. The premier made the announcement before the Jordanian parliament. A French government spokesman calls this "a grave and dangerous development." No reaction yet from London.

A Venezuelan airliner crashed into a mountain in Venezuela today, killing all 25 persons on board. The four-engine plane was en route from New York to Caracas..and was only minutes from its destination when tragedy occurred. The plane carried 18 passengers and a crew of seven. Ten of the passengeers wer Americans, including the professional baseball player Charles Peete, and his wife and their three children. Peete ..who played for Omaha, led the American Association in batting this past season. Poor visibility was at least one factor--contributing to the accident. It was raining at the time, and the mountain was shrouded in fog.

Well, not that the dust is settling on the triple invasion of Egypt, Russia's troubles in Hungary with Yugoslavia are again rising to the forefront. diplomats I've talked to, are convinced that the repercussions of the upheavals in Eastern Europe, will be envn more unduring than the Western split over the Middle East. For they are convinced that the leadership in Russia is in a state of crisis and that the crisis must endure until Russia becomes either more democratic or until a new Stalin-type dictator emerges.

For those who know Russia will, like Paul Henri Spaak, the socialist Belgian Foreign Minister, whose words are listened to byall statesmen, say that the collective rule of the Kremlin can neve succeed in a nation built around the dictatorship of a Stalin. They feel that Russia is now a dictatorship without a dictator and that the recent elevation of Molotov to a position where he can exert power, means that Party Leader Khrushchev is no longer the top voice in the Kremlin, in fact that a shake-up has occurred in Moscow. The vest information about Russia, they say, is in the hands of Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia. And when he talks back to the Kremlin now, he is no longer talking to his friend, Nikita Khrushchev. Theee they say is now addressing himself to enemies like Molotov and the Soviet Army old guard. The Western world doesn't have too much information on what's happening inside the Kremlin, but they say one thing is certain, Marshall Tito won't make any more flying trips to Russia, not is he hopes to get back to his wife and family in Belgrad again.

For the past week, CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser had been in Belgrade, the capital of Yugoslavia. We asked him today to record a report for us by short wave. He did, but we observed a puculiar sound which makes the report a little difficult to listen to. We are informed by radio engineers that the oscillation, which you will hear, may be due to "jamming" of Belgrade, presumably by the Russians. Here is Leiser's report.

LEISER: A new technique seems to have been developed, Larry, among Communists who want to insult each other. You used to employ the most abusive language and vocabulary. Now you kill the other fellow with politeness and innuendo. That was the technique in the last accack by Moscow on Marshal Tito for presuming to "usurp" as they saw it, Russian leadership in East Europe. And that's the technique used today by Tito's party newspaper, Borba, in its counter attack. The Yugoslav position is as strong as it was eight years ago when Tito was being read out of the Cominform by the Russians on Stalin's orders. Borba says, for instance, that the Soviets had only themselves to blame their policy of repression for a revolution in Hungary. It says flatly that Russia now has only two choices. Either going back to Stalinism or establishing Democratic relations with each European country. And, says Borba, it's a pity that the Russians don't seem to see that this is the choice. But, obviously, under Tito's order, Borba is quite polite in its commentary and professes to see elements of eccouragement in the Soviet critisims of the Yugoslav talk. "We are very glad", says the Yugoslav paper, "that the principle of constructive critisism is regocnized by the Russians. We welcome criticism", says Borba,

"as long as it is well intentioned." Actually, the Yugoslavs don't welcome Moscow's newest pact (?) with them any more than they welcomed any of the currunt crises in eastern Europe. I just talked to one of the leading figures in the regime here and he candidly admitted that neither choise, says (?) Tito in Hungary today, is a very pleasing one. The Yugoslav Communists have no desire to see an anti-Communist freely elected governwment (unintelligible) political parties on their northern borders. The example, they fear, might be catching. Yet today they are even unhappier and uneasier at the prospect of huge Soviet armored forces squatting along that border, particularly at a time when Tito again is under Moscow's propagandic (unintelligible). This same official professed some optimism to me about future developments in eastern Europe "These Russians will see," he said, "that they cannot go back to Stalinism in Poland, in Hungary or anywhere else. Circumstances will force them," he said, "to democratize their treatment of these countries. They simply are not strong enough to reinstate their absolute tyranny." But this official sounded to me like a man trying to convince himself at leas as much as he was trying to convince me. Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: And I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first.. George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUFUR: Miss Janet Myers, of New York, told a congressional committee today that the women of America are being discriminated against, in having to pay a 10 percent luxury tax on lipstick while men can buy razor blades without baying any federal tax at all. Lipstick, she said, is every bit as important to a woman as shaving is to a man. Miss Myers works for a New York cosmetics firm. "BUT", whe said, "I speak for women everywhere."

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Wed., Nov. 28, 1956

Good evening, everyone....

The United States Today accused Russia [redacted] of creating new tensions in the Middle East. The State Department spokesman... Lincoln White... told reporters the United States is concerned over Soviet arms shipments to Syria in recent months. He described these shipments as "substantial", and indicated they may be continuing. Mr. White did not specify the KINDS of weapons the Russians have sent into Syria. But according to informed sources, the shipments have included armored cars, machine guns, some artillery, and light tanks. The State Department spokesman took note of the strained relations between Syria and Iraq. And in answer to a question, he said it would not be right to rule-out the possibility that the United States will send arms to Iraq... in response to its recent request. "The tensions in this area," he said, "are not coming from Iraq."

Almost immediately after this statement was issued in Washington [redacted] in [redacted], the prime minister of Syria... in Damascus... denied that his country is receiving arms from Russia. And the Syrian ministry of foreign affairs delivered [redacted] a series of notes to the foreign embassies in Damascus.// defining what the ministry called Syria's "independent policy". A Foreign ministry spokesman [redacted] charged that Syria had been subjected to what he called "a campaign of false accusations and deceit by imperialist powers"..// that Syria "will defend her sovereignty"..//and that [redacted] reports of troops massing in Syria had been circulated to conceal Israeli troop concentrations along the Syrian and Jordanian frontiers. [redacted] The details of the notes were not disclosed. But doubtless they followed a similar vein. The stress on Syrian independence [redacted] and sovereignty may well be due to the fact that a group of army officers... described as pro-Soviet.// recently seized control in Syria.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov charged today that "imperialist states" have new plans of aggression against the Arab countries. And he identified the "imperialist states" as [redacted] Britain, France and Israel. Shepilov made the charge during a brief stop-over in Denmark,//on his way home to Moscow after attending the UN [redacted]s General Assembly meeting, here in New York. He claimed to have "incontestable" information that those [redacted] countries are planning to attack... not only Egypt... but Syria and Lebanon.

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament that Jews living in Egypt are being persecuted in the Nazi pattern. Thousands of stateless Jews, he said, are being expelled... and EGYPTIAN Jews are being deprived of their citizenship. The parliament [redacted] overwhelmingly approved a motion... introduced by Ben Gurion... calling on the United Nations to protect the Jews in Egypt. Israel, it said, would welcome Egypt's Jews "with open arms".

There is word from Geneva tonight that the International Red Cross is taking "special steps" to help the Jews in Egypt... threatened with internment and expulsion. The International Red Cross, however, has not issued any formal statement on its plans.

In Egypt today, the United Nations police force at Port Said was [redacted] reinforced by the arrival of 207 Danish infantrymen. They joined an advance task force of 190 Norwegians already patroling that city occupied by British and French troops. And at United Nations headquarters, Secretary General Hammarskjold announced that "virtually all elements" of a 4-thousand-man force will be deployed in Egypt within two weeks. and Hammarskjold said that... ultimately... the U.N. hopes to have a force of about 6-thousand men in the Middle East.

In the General Assembly today, France heatedly denied the Egyptian charge that it had landed tank reinforcements at Port Said... in violation of the U.N. resolution prohibiting the introduction of military equipment and troops in the area. The French delegate called the accusation "highly fanciful"... and said that, instead of building up its forces in Egypt. France in the past week has withdrawn an infantry company and some of its Navy commandos. President Nasser's chief political adviser...Ali Sabry... said tonight that Egypt has asked Hammarskjold to fix a time limit for the complete withdrawal of British, French & Israeli troops.

~~Both the British and French cabinets met today to discuss the Middle East situation. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told reporters, only the Communists can gain from the "acute difference of opinion" between Britain and the United States. And according to Washington reports,~~ President Eisenhower has sent a personal message to French Premier Mollet... reaffirming his faith in the Atlantic Alliance. The message is described as extremely cordial.

A French spokesman said today that Russia has offered to step up its oil shipments to France. The spokesman said no final figure has been arrived at, but that the monthly shipments MAY be increased to 100-thousand tons. Russia's oil shipments to France now total 20-thousand tons a month. There are [redacted] reports of Russia offering oil to OTHER OIL-SHORT countries, but these reports are not confirmed. A State Department spokesman said in Washington today that such oil shipments... from Russia... could amount to "only a mere trickle", due to its limited production and its own needs [redacted].

—7

1 min

President Eisenhower has named Ellsworth Bunker, retiring president of the American Red Cross, as the new [redacted] United States ambassador to India. Mr. Bunker is a Democrat. He succeeds [redacted] John Sherman Cooper, [redacted] a Republican, who was recently [redacted] elected senator from Kentucky.

~~The secretary of welfare... Marion Folsom... reported today that about 17-million doses of Salk polio vaccine are lying around unused. Folsom said "millions" of children should be receiving their second and third shots... and that adults, who [redacted] have had no vaccine at all, should now [redacted] start getting THEIR shots. President Eisenhower said... in a separate statement... that the report deserves the attention of every young adult... every parent... in America."~~

In Hungary today, the puppet government offered [redacted] 'amnesty' to those Hungarians who have fled the country because of the Soviet terror.

No harm will befall them, it said, if they return to their homes by the first of the year. //

For several weeks, CBS Newsman Dan Karasic has been covering the refugee story (as he has seen it personally on the Austrian ~~border~~ FRONTIER [redacted]) and at the refugee headquarters in Vienna. // We asked him to tell us what... in this tragic development... has impressed him most. Here is his recorded report:

Tape runs 5:30

Ends on cue: "---to L.L. in NY."

Thank you, Dan Karasic, for that [redacted] MOST moving account. from Vienna.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

Footnote to the News

For the Russians... down in Melbourne, Australia... this was their best day in the Olympics so far. The Soviet Union won three Gold Medals, while the United States picked up two. But... tonight... we're expected to have little difficulty beating the Russians in [redacted] basketball, [redacted] American observers say the Soviet team has been handicapped by being over-rated. Seems that even in their propaganda concerning basketball, the Russians love BRAVADO! [redacted]

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DAN KARASIK IN VIENNA

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

KARASIK: Here in Austria, along the Hungarian frontier, we are witnessing one of the epic migrations of human history. Some 90,000 refugees, one percent of the population of Hungary, who left behind them a homeland which had been crushed under the heavy tracks of Soviet tanks. We find it difficult to make this story have a meaning for someone who is not here to participate in this remarkable experience. Here we cannot think of that figure of 90,000 as a faceless mass of people. After spending some time at various point along the border, and especially on the frozen marshes near Handau (?), we no longer think in terms of thousands of refugees. Rather we think of individual tragedies.

Faces we have learned to recognize, respect and admire, emerge in (intelligible) day after day. So today, when we see a blond lad of 20 waiting patiently in a long line at the American Consulate, he reminds us of another boy we met last Friday and we wonder where that boy is tonight. He reminds us of a boy that we saw lunging through a shallow canal toward a marker of the Austrian border while Russian burp-gun fire whipped through the reeds in the field behind him. When he stumbled across the border, he told us how hundreds and hundreds of people were wandering around in the marshes on the Hungarian side. They were lost in the fields of tall reeds that were being swept by Russian machinegun fire. These people could not find their way to safety. Some were too terror stricken to move. With them were many women and children and the temperature was 10 or 12 degrees below freezing.

Now and again the wind carried to us the sound of frightened children crying and the voices of one group cautiously calling to another. This boy did not stay on the Austrian side of the frontier for long. While he stripped off his soaking shoes and stockings and changed into dry boots, he talked rapidly to one of the Austrian border guards. He asked about the peculiarities of the irregular border line and climbed to the high bank of the canal, from which he could study the surrounding land. The guard pointed out a route through the marsh which was dotted with treacherous ice-covered mud pools. Then the boy borrowed a red and white Maltese (?) Society arm band and dashed back into Hungary, the Hungary from which he had just escaped and into the field that was combed by Russian fire every few minutes.

All day long that boy led group after group to safety, not even stopping long enough to accept their thanks. Late in the afternoon, he was caught by a group (unintelligible) Hungary's secret police and marched back to the border. Fortunately, the Maltese Society arm band had them puzzled and after a short colloquy (?) they turned him loose. The secret police had not walked a hundred yards back into Hungary, when the boy crossed again into the field of reeds to continue his self-appointed duty of mercy.

It's odd today to try to single out stories and it's difficult, because there are so many of them. And still we remember the faces. We are waiting to hear from a man whom we met outside the shelter at Mandau. He asked if he might ride with us back to the frontier, seven miles away. The day before he had brought out his wife and three daughters, aged 3, 5 and 7. They were living in a hospital buiding which has cottages and now he wanted to go back to see if he might help in some way. Shortly after we arrived, there was a report of a man lying wounded so near the same field of wheat we have been talking about. But the only thing we could do for him was, the firing was unusually heavy at this time, and most of the group around the frontier were seeking the protection of the high bank around the canal. The man who crossed so carefully to bring his own family out, did not hesitate for a moment. He knew what he felt he had to do and he quickly disappeared over the bank and into Hungary. He came back alone, but only because he couldn't locate the man who was said to be wounded. That's what I mean about the faces. These aren't statistics, these are noble human beings. Each family had to make the difficult decision of leaving behind the whole life it had so carefully built. And in exchange was hardship, danger and possible death at the border. Let him who has forgotten the nobility of the unselfish man come to the frontiers of Austria to refresh his spirit (?) Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DAN KARASIK IN VIENNA

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

KARASIK: Here in Austria, along the Hungarian frontier, we are witnessing one of the epic migrations of human history. Some 90,000 refugees, one percent of the population of Hungary, who left behind them a homeland which had been crushed under the heavy tracks of Soviet tanks. We find it difficult to make this story have a meaning for someone who is not here to participate in this remarkable experience. Here we cannot think of that figure of 90,000 as a faceless mass of people. After spending some time at various point along the border, and especially on the frozen marshes near Handau (?), we no longer think in terms of thousands of refugees. Rather we think of individual tragedies.

Faces we have learned to recognize, respect and admire, emerge in (intelligible) day after day. So today, when we see a blond lad of 20 waiting patiently in a long line at the American Consulate, he reminds us of another boy we met last Friday and we wonder where that boy is tonight. He reminds us of a boy that we saw lunging through a shallow canal toward a marker of the Austrian border while Russian burp-gun fire whipped through the reeds in the field behind him. When he stumbled across the border, he told us how hundreds and hundreds of people were wandering around in the marshes on the Hungarian side. They were lost in the fields of tall reeds that were being swept by Russian machinegun fire. These people could not find their way to safety. Some were too terror stricken to move. With them were many women and children and the temperature was 10 or 12 degrees below freezing.

Now and again the wind carried to us the sound of frightened children crying and the voices of one group cautiously calling to another. This boy did not stay on the Austrian side of the frontier for long. While he stripped off his soaking shoes and stockings and changed into dry boots, he talked rapidly to one of the Austrian border guards. He asked about the peculiarities of the irregular border line and climbed to the high bank of the canal, from which he could study the surrounding land. The guard pointed out a route through the marsh which was dotted with treacherous ice-covered mud pools. Then the boy borrowed a red and white Maltese (?) Society arm band and dashed back into Hungary, the Hungary from which he had just escaped and into the field that was combed by Russian fire every few minutes.

All day long that boy led group after group to safety, not even stopping long enough to accept their thanks. Late in the afternoon, he was caught by a group (unintelligible) Hungary's secret police and marched back to the border. Fortunately, the Maltese Society arm band had them puzzled and after a short colloquy (?) they turned him loose. The secret police had not walked a hundred yards back into Hungary, when the boy crossed again into the field of reeds to continue his self-appointed duty of mercy.

It's odd today to try to single out stories and it's difficult, because there are so many of them. And still we remember the faces. We are waiting to hear from a man whom we met outside the shelter at Mandau. He asked if he might ride with us back to the frontier, seven miles away. The day before he had brought out his wife and three daughters, aged 3, 5 and 7. They were living in a hospital buiding which has cottages and now he wanted to go back to see if he might help in some way. Shortly after we arrived, there was a report of a man lying wounded so near the same field of wheat we have been talking about. But the only thing we could do for him was, the firing was unusually heavy at this time, and most of the group around the frontier were seeking the protection of the high bank around the canal. The man who crossed so carefully to bring his own family out, did not hesitate for a moment. He knew what he felt he had to do and he quickly disappeared over the bank and into Hungary. He came back alone, but only because he couldn't locate the man who was said to be wounded. That's what I mean about the faces. These aren't statistics, these are noble human beings. Each family had to make the difficult decision of leaving behind the whole life it had so carefully built. And in exchange was hardship, danger and possible death at the border. Let him who has forgotten the nobility of the unselfish man come to the frontiers of Austria to refresh his spirit (?) Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

Good Evening Everyone:

The United States today accused Russia of creating new tensions in the Middle East. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters the United States is concerned over Soviet arms shipments to Syria in recent months. He described these shipments as "substantial", and indicated they may be continuing. Mr. White did not specify the kinds of weapons the Russians have sent into Syria. But according to informed sources, these shipments have included armored cars, machine guns, some artillery, and light tanks. The State Department spokesman took note of the strained relations between Syria and Iraq. And in answer to a question, he said it would not be right to rule out the possibility that the United States will send arms to Iraq..in response to its recent request. "The tensions in this area", he said, "are not coming from Iraq."

Almost immediately after this statement was inssued in Washington, the prime minister of Syria ..in Damascus..denied that his country is receiving arms from Russia. And the Syrian ministry of foreign affairs delivered a series of notes to the foreign embassies in Damascus..defining what the ministry called Syria's "independent policy". A foreign ministry spokesman charged that Syria has been subjected to what he called "a campaign of false accusations and deceit by imperialist powers"..that Syria "will defend her sovereignty" ..and that reports of troops massing in Syria had been circulated to conceal Israeli troop concentrations along the Syrian and Jordanian frontiers. The details of the notes were not disclosed. But doubtless they followed a similar vein. The stress on Syrian independence and sovereignty may well be due to the fact that a group of army officers..described as pro-Soviet recently seized control in Syria.

Soviet Foreign Minister Shepilov charged today that "imperialist states" have new plans of aggression against the Arab countries. And he identified the "imperialist states" as Britain, France and Israel. Shepilov made the charge during a brief stop-over in Denmark, on his way home to Moscow after attending the UN General Assembly meeting, here in New York. He claimed to have "incontestable" information that those coutnries are planning to attack.. not only Egypt..but Syria and Lebanon.

In Jerusalem Prime Minister Ben Guriaon told the Israeli parliament that Jews living in Egypt are being persecuted in the Nazi pattern. Thousands of stateless Jews, he said, are being expelled..and Egyptian Jews are being deprived of their citizenship. The parliament overwhelmingly approved a motion introduced by Ben Gurion..calling on the United Nations to protect the Jews in Egypt. Israel, it said, would welcome Egypt's Jews "with open arms."

There is word from Geneva tonight that International Red Cross is taking "special steps" to help Jews in Egypt threatened with internment and expulsion The international Red Cross, however, has not issued any formal statement on its plans.

In Egypt today, the United Nations police force at Port Said was reinforced by the arrival of 207 Danish infantrymen. They joined an advance task force of 190 Norwegians already patrolling that city occupied by British and French troops. And at the United Nations headquarters, Secretary General Hammarsjold announced that "virtually all elements" of a 4-thousand-man force will be deployed in Egypt within two weeks, and Hammarskjold said that..ultimately ..the U.N. hopes to have a force of about 6 thousand men in the Middle East.

In the General Assembly today, France heatedly denied that Egyptian charge that it had landed tank reinforcements at Port Said in violation of the U.N. resolution prohibiting the introduction of military equipment and troops in the area. The French delegate called the accusation "highly fanciful" and said that, instead of building up its forces in Egypt..France in the past week has withdrawn an infantry company and some of its Navy commandos. President Nasser's chief political adviser..Ali Sabry..said tonight that Egypt has asked Hammarskjold to fix a time limit for the complete withdrawll of British, French and Israeli troops.

President Eisenhower has sent a personal message to French Premier Mollet reaffirming his faith in the Atlantic Alliance. The message is described as "extremely cordial."

A French spokesman said today that Russia has offered to step up its oil shipments to France. The spokesman said no final figure has been arrived at but that the monthly shipments may be increased to 100-thousand tons. Russia's oil shipments to France now total 20-thousand tons a month. There are reports of Russia offering oil to other oil-short countries, but these reports are not confirmed. A State Department spokesman said in Washington today that such oil shipments ..from Russia..could amount to "only a mere trickle", due to its limited production and its own needs.

President Eisenhower has named Ellsworth Bunker, retiring president of the American Red Cross, as the new United States ambassador to India. Mr. Bunker is a Democrat. He succeeds John Sherman Cooper, a Republican, who was recently elected senator from Kentucky.

In Hungary today, the puppet government offered 'amnesty' to those Hungarians who have fled the country because of the Soviet terror. No harm will befall them, it said, if they return to their homes by the first of the year.

For several weeks, CBS Newsman Dan Karasic has been covering the refugee story as he has seen it personally on the Austrian frontier and at the refugee headquarters in Vienna. We asked him to tell us what, in this tragic development has impressed him most. Here is her recorded report.

KARASIK: Here in Austria, along the Hungarian frontier, we are witnessing one of the epic migrations of human history. Some 90,000 refugees, one per ent of the population of Hungary, who left behind them a homeland which has been crushed under the heavy tracks of Soviet tanks. We find it difficult to make this story have a meaning for someone who is not here to participate in this remarkable experience. Here we cannot think, of thatfigure of 90,000 as a faceless mass of people. After spending some time at various point along the border, and especially on the frozen marshes near Handau(?), we no longer think in terms of thousands of refugees. Rather we think of individual tragedies.

Faces we have learned to recognize, respect and admire, emerge in (unintelligible) day after day. So today, when we see a blond lad of 20 waiting patiently in a long line at the American Consulate, he reminds us of another boy we met last Friday and we wonder where that boy is tonight. He reminds us of a boy that we saw lunging through a shallow canal toward a marker of the Austrian border while Russian burp-gun fire whipped through the reeds in the field behind him. When he stumbled across the border, he told us how hundreds and hundreds of people were wandering around in the marshes on the Hungarinn side. They were lost in the fields of tall reeds that were being swept by Russian machine gun fire. These people could not find their way to safety. some were too terror stricken to move. With them were many women and children and the temperature was 10 or 12 degrees below freezing.

Now and again the wind carried to us the sound of frightened children crying and the voices of one group cautiously calling to another. This boy did not stay on the Austrian side of the frontier for long. While he stripped off his soaking shoes and stockings and changed into dry boots, he talked rapidly to one of the Austrian border guards. He asked aobut the peculiarities of the irregular border line and climbed to the high bank of the canal, from which he could study the surr unding land. The guard pointed out a route through the marsh which was dotted with treacherous ice-covered mud pools. Then the boy borrowed a red and white Maltese (?) Society arm band and dashed back into Hungary, the Hungary from which he had just escaped and into the field that was combed by Russian fire every few minutes.

All day long that boy led group after group to safety, not even stopping long enough to accept their thanks. Late in the afternoon, he was caught by a group (unintelligible) Hungary's secret police and marched back to the border. Fortunately, the Maltese Society arm band had them puzzled and after a short colloquy (?) they turned him loose. The secret police had not walked a hundred back into Hungary, when the boy crossed again into the field of reeds to continue his self-appointed duty of mercy.

It's odd today to try to single out stories and it's difficult, because there are so many of them. And still we remember the faces. We are waiting to hear from a man whom we met outside the shelter at Handau. He asked if he might ride with us back to the frontier, seven miles away. The day before he had brought out his wife and three daughters, aged 3,5,and 7. They were living in a hospital building which has cottages and now he wanted to go back to see if he might help in some way. Shortly after we arrived, there was a report of a man lying wounded so near the same field of wheat we have been talking about. But the only thing we could do for him was, the firing unusually heavy at this time, and most of the group around the frontier were seeking the protection of the high bank around the canal. The man who crossed so carefully to bring his own family out , did not hesitate for a moment. He knew what he felt he had to do and he quickly disappeared over the bank and into Hungary. He came back alone, but only because he couldn't locate the man who was said to be wounded. That's what mean about the faces. These aren't statistics, these are noble human beings. Each family had to make the difficult decision of leaving behind the whole life it has so carefully built. And in exchange was hardship, danger and possible death at the border. Let him who has forgotten the nobility of the unselfish man come to the frontiers of Austria to refresh his spirit(?) Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: Thank you, Dan Karasic, for that most moving account from Vienna. This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. But first, George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUEUR: For the Russians, down in Melbourne, Australia, this was their best day in the Olympics so far. The Soviet Union won three Gold Medals while the United States picked up two. But tonight, we're expected to have little difficulty beating the Russians in basketball. American observers say the Soviet them has been handicapped by being over-rated. Seems that even in their propaganda concerning basketball, the Russians love bravado.

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Nov. 29, 1956

Good evening, everyone...

It is plain tonight that Great Britain does NOT PLAN immediate, TOTAL withdrawal of troops from Egypt. The British foreign secretary... Selwyn Lloyd... told the House of Commons today that "obviously" the build-up of the United Nations police force and a "phased" withdrawal of British and French troops must be related. Lloyd said that before announcing any final decision on withdrawal of their forces, Britain and France would have to hold further talks. French Foreign Minister Pineau, he said, is flying to London tomorrow for this purpose. He told the House of Commons that... besides the relationship between the U.N. police force and the phased withdrawal of Anglo-French troops... he and Pineau would discuss the matter of clearing the Suez Canal and the problem of a final settlement. Lloyd said he would report to Commons on those talks on Monday.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the United States is awaiting this report... by the British foreign secretary... with keen interest. Other officials hint that if a "definite" statement is made... to the effect that the troops WILL be withdrawn... then the United States will put in operation a program to help Europe meet the oil shortage. An emergency program is said to be set up--ready to go.

Red China's premier... Chou En-lai... told the Indian parliament today that Peiping is willing to work jointly with India to effect a complete withdrawal of "invading forces" from Egypt. Chou... who is in India on a state visit... said, "Peace in Egypt can in no way be regarded as [redacted] having been restored."

Egypt charged today that "enemy" jet aircraft had strafed Egyptian positions in the Suez Canal Zone, near Ismailia. No casualties were reported.

Yugoslav troops... for the U.N. police force... were landed by ship today at Port Said. There were 721 Yugoslav soldiers in all. And they constitute the first United Nations contingent to be brought in by sea. The other U.N. troops came in by ~~plane.~~ airlift

[redacted]

The United States warned today that it would view "with the utmost gravity" any threat to the territory... or political independence... of Turkey, Pakistan, Iran or Iraq. (All four countries are members of the Baghdad Pact). The warning... issued by the State Department... did not identify any potential aggressor by name. But Iraq has expressed fear of an attack by Syria. And only yesterday the State Department said that Syria has been receiving arms from Russia in "substantial" amounts.

The prime minister of Jordan won a vote of confidence today... in his move to scrap the 20-year defense treaty with Britain. Under the treaty, Britain has maintained bases in Jordan in return for an annual subsidy of 35-million dollars. The prime minister assured parliament that loss of the subsidy would be made-up through aid promised Jordan by other Arab states.

The Soviet newspaper Izvestia said today that Israel is following "a suicidal path". Israeli leaders, it warned, "should extract lessons from recent developments... as the very existence of Israel as a state is now at stake." And then... in still stronger language... Izvestia declared, "By hurling a challenge to the Arab nations, Israel is digging its own grave." ~~Israel's policy, it said, recalls Hitler's policy of Lebensraum, by which he sought to justify the annexation of neighboring states.~~

Parliamentary elections will be held in Poland (in about two months) and today Communist Party Leader Gomulka made a speech which, in effect, told the voters just how much... and how little... freedom they will be allowed. In Poland, he said, there is room only for Communist IDEOLOGY. "There will be no freedom for bourgeois parties." At the same time, he held out the possibility of "cooperation" with OTHER parties, including the Progressive Catholics. Gomulka spoke at a meeting of "political activists" in Warsaw, which went on record as endorsing his policies.

Widespread unrest is reported tonight in Communist Albania. Reports reaching Belgrade say police recently opened fire on a crowd of demonstrators in Tirana. Killing 20 persons... ~~and that 20 persons were killed.~~ There is no confirmation of these reports. But it is recalled that last week the Albanian government warned of "hostile elements" which, it said, were trying to impede "socialist progress".

Late reports from Vienna say that Russian troops have started mining the Austrian frontier... in an apparent effort to cut down the flow of refugees from Hungary. Less than a thousand refugees crossed the border today, compared to more than THREE thousand yesterday. In Moscow, the Communist newspaper Pravda says puppet premier Kadar has refused to let United Nations observers into Hungary for fear they might be mistaken for American troops! Pravda claims it was given this explanation by Kadar himself in an interview.

Today, every country represented at the United Nations... and a few countries which are NOT represented... received a telegram signed by Secretary General Hammarskjold and James Read, U.N. deputy high commissioner for refugees. The telegrams... all identical... said that at least another 10-million dollars, and additional offers of asylum, will be needed to provide sanctuary for the 92-thousand Hungarian men, women and children who have fled their homes... and for those who will inevitably follow their example. Of the 92-thousand who have escaped thus far, only 22-thousand have found new homes in other countries.

The American Red Cross launched an emergency drive today for 5-million dollars for Hungarian relief. President Eisenhower issued a statement, calling on Americans to give the campaign their unselfish support. The courage of the Hungarian people, he said, has been an inspiration. Mr. Eisenhower appointed Tracy Voorhees, former under-secretary of the Army, to coordinate the Hungarian relief program in the United States. (The program has been suffering from a lack of over-all direction). Mr. Voorhees will also determine... with other Government officials... whether the United States should admit MORE than 5-thousand refugees, as presently prescribed.

At the Olympic games, the United States now leads Russia... in the unofficial scoring... by 98 and a half points. Charley Jenkins of Villanova gave the United States its 18th gold medal... in winning the 400-meter run. And last night... in the basketball semi-finals... the Americans trounced the Russians, 85 to 55, BUT THIS DOESN'T ELIMINATE THE Russians FROM THE COMPETITION ~~meet again in the round-robin final.~~

During the years of the cold war, when this country and Soviet Russia were pitted against each other verbally, the language of diplomacy became the language of the calculated smear and the studied insult. But one thing could be said about that means of communication between nations. Those who hurled the insults were at least candid about their feelings... So its perhaps only natural that in the past ten years, people have been inclined to forget that there used to be an art to diplomacy, and part of that art was the use of fine talk to cover up the most selfish motives.

We are referring of course to the once revered art of diplomatic double-talk. It preactically dis-appeared during those cold war years, but now that America and Russia find themselves voting on the same side against our western allies, and free nations fighting free nations, the art of double-talk has been resurrected, and the public should again be cautioned against taking some of the fine talk issuing from the UN at its face value...

The practice of trying to read between the lines must be revived, and the old principle that "fine talk butters no parsnips." Kept constantly in mind.

For example, UN spokesmen have denied again and again, that Egypt HAS the right of veto over the composition of the UN Emergency Force that will occupy its terrritory...But in point of fact, Canadian and some other Commonwealth troops have been studiously ignored in the make-up of the UN force, under graciously worded statements that they just weren't needed at the moment, obviously in line with Nasser's wishes, just as the troop offers of Russia's satellites have been ignored to please the western powers...

And then there's this little matter of the timing of the British and French withdrawal... The British have now inferred that their policy is one of "phased-withdrawal" from Egypt...Which simply means that they will await the arrival of the UNited Nations troops in enough strength to get out without losing too much face...

This statement will certainly be received with well-publicized anguish by Egypt, and possibly by some of those nations like the United States which voted last Saturday for withdrawal "forthwith" since the word "immediate" had not sufficed...But in point of fact, when the UN Emergency Force was first created, it was American Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, who quickly interpreted the Assembly call for immediate withdrawal to mean a withdrawal "phased-in" with the arrival of UN troops.. Actually there never been any other idea on the part of The big canal using nations that Britain and France would get out until there was a United Nations force ready to take Their place, whether they voted for the words "immediate" or "forthwith" or any other synonym they may employ in the future!

Currently the Behind the scenes argument is over the Egyptian assumption, that President Nasser will have the right to dictate the future functions of the UN police force, especially whether it will be permitted to remain astride the Suez Canal or whether, As the Egyptians desire, whether it will be used to patrol the old Israeli armistice lines and President Nasser beleieves he retains the right as the ruler of a sovereign nation to say just when the UN Force should get out of his country...

But in truth these factors are still to be the subject of future negotiations between President Nasser and UN Secretary Dag Hammarshuld...

Hammarshuld has stated, and the Assembly resolutions have made it clear that no UN force can be stationed in any country without the consent of that country. But no matter what President Nasser asserts, the [redacted] functions of the UN force and the length of its stay in Egypt, will still depend to a large extent on his future negotiations with UN Secretary General Hammarshuld and his advisory committee of seven western nations..

[redacted], Mr. Hammarshuld has also politely stated that the UN Emergency Force must not remain in Egypt to put political pressure [redacted] on Nasser to bring about a settlement of the Suez Canal issue. The United States also holds to the view that the UN Emergency Force should not be used as a political weapon against Egypt [redacted]..

[redacted] But actually every diplomat realizes that very presence of a UN Army [redacted] in Egypt is [redacted] essentially a political force..They may repeat over and over again that it is not to be used as a political weapon.. But its very existance on [redacted] Egyptian soil [redacted] IS a political weapon for the [redacted] canal users, Egypt knows it, but [redacted] USED powerless to turn it down, and Britain and France know it otherwise they would not be [redacted] HINTING AT WITHDRAWAL in two weeks, when the UN force will be big enough to take their place... and The French have a saying: There's Nothing So Permanent as the temporary.

Footnote to the News

The British foreign secretary... Mr. Selwyn Lloyd... has made an eloquent appeal for Western unity in an interview with Roy Howard of the New York World-Telegram and Sun. In this hour of history, he said, "no disagreements over details, no disappointments over results, and no damage to the pride of political leaders, must be permitted to jeopardize... even momentarily... the British-American alliance, which is the greatest asset of the democratic world."

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING:

Good evening, everyone...

It is plain tonight that Great Britain does not plan immediate total withdrawal of troops from Egypt. The British foreign secretary..Selwyn Lloyd..told the House of Commons today that "obviously" the build-up of the United Nations police force and a "phased" withdrawal of British and French troops must be related. Lloyd said that before announcing any final decision on withdrawal of their forces, Britain and France would have to hold further talks. French Foreign Minister Pineau, he said, is flying to London tomorrow for this purpose. He told the House of Commons that..besides the relationship between the U.N. police force and the phased withdrawal of Anglo-French troops he and Pineau would discuss the matter of clearing the Suez Canal and the pronlem of a final settlement. Lloyd said he would report to Commons on those talks on Monday.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the United States is awaiting this report by the British foreign secretary with keen interest. Other officials hint that if a "definite" statement is made to the effect that the troops will be withdrawn, then the United States will put in operation a program to help Europe meet the oil shortage. An emergency program is said to be set up--ready to go.

Red China's premier..Chou en Lai, told the Indian parliament today thet Peiping is willing to work jointly with India to effect a complete withdrawal of "invading forces" from Egypt. Chou ..who is in India on a state visit.. said, "Peace in Egypt can in no way be regarded as having been restored."

Egypt charged today that "enemy" jet aircraft had strafed Egyptian positions in the Suez Canal Zone, near Ismailia. No casualties were reported.

Yugoslav troops..for the U.N. police force..were landed by ship today at Port Said. There were 721 Yugoslav soldiers in all. And they constitute the first United Nations contingent to be brought in by sea. The other U.N. troops came in by airlift.

The United States warned today that it would view "with the utmost gravity" any threat to the territory..or political independence of Turkey, Pakistan, Iran or Iraq. (All four countries are members of the Baghdad Pact.) The warning issued by the State Department did not identify any potential aggressor by name, But Iraq has expressed fear of an attack by Syria. And only yesterday the State Department said that Syria has been receiveng arms from Russia in "substantial amounts.

The prime minister of Jordan won a vote of confidence today in his move to scrap the 20 year dafense treaty iwht Britain. Under the treaty, Britain has maintained bases in Jordan in return for an annual subsidy of 35-million dollars. The prime minister assured parliament that loss of the subsidy would be made up through aid promised Jordan by other Arab states.

The Soviet newspsper Izvestia said today that Israel is following "a suicidal path" . Israeli leaders, it warned, "should extract lessons from recent developments as the very existence of Israel as a state is now at stake." And then, in still stronger language, Izvestia declared, "by hurling a challenge at the Arab nations, Israel is digging its own grave."

Parliamentary elections will be held in Poland (in about two months) and today Communist Party Leader Gomulka made a speech which, in effect, told the voters just how much, and how little freedom they will be allowed. In Poland, he said, there is room only for Communist ideology. "There will be no freedom fo rbourgeois parties." At the same time, he held out the possibility of "co-operation with other parties, including the Progressive Catholics. Gomulka spoke at a meeting of "political activists" in Warsaw, which went on record as endorsing his policies.

Widespread unrest is reported tonight in Communist Albania. Reports reaching Belgrade say police recently opened fire on a crowd of demonstrators in Tirania, killing 20 persons. There is no confirmation of these reports. But it is recalled that last week the Albanian government warned of "hostile elements" which, it said, were trying to impede "socialist progress."

Late reports frim Vienna say that Russian troops have started mining the Austrian frontier. in an apparent effort to cut down the flow of refugees from Hungary. Less than a thousand refugees crossed the border today, compared to more than three thousand yesterday. In Moscow, the Communist newspaper Pravda says puppet premier Kadar has refused to let United Nations observers in to Hungary for fear they might be mistaken for American troops! Pravda claims it was given this explanation by Kadar himself in an interview.

Today, every country represented at the United Nations and a few countries which are not represented...received a telegram signed by Secretary General Hammarskjold and James Read, U.N. deputy high commissioner for refugees. The telegram..all identical...said that at least another 10-million dollars, and additional offers of asylum, will be needed to provide sanctuary for the 92-thousand Hungarian men, women and children who have fled their homes..and for those who will inevitably follow their example. Of the 92-thousand who have escaped thus far, only 22-thousand have found new homes in other countries.

The American Red Cross launched an emergency drive today for 5-million dollars for Hungarian relief. President Eisenhower issued a statement calling on Americans to give the campaign their unselfish rupport. The courage of the Hungarian people, he said, has been an inspiration. Mr. Eisenhower appointed Tracy Voorhees, former under-secretary of the Army, to coordinate the Hungarian relief program in the United States. (The program has been suffering from a lack of over-all direction.) Mr. Voorhees will also determine, with other government officials, whether the United States should admit more than 5-thousand refugees, as presently prescribed.

At the Olympic games, the United States now leads Russia in the unofficial scoring by 98 and a half points. Charles Jenkins of Villanova gave the United States its 18th gold medal in winning the 400-meter run. And last night.. in the basketball semi-finals..the Americans trounced the Russians 85 to 55, but this doesn't eliminate the Russians from the competition.

During the years of the cold war, when this country and Soviet Russia were pitted against each other verbally, the language of diplomacy became the language of calculated smear the the studied insult. But one thing could be said about that means of communication between nations...those who hurled the insults were at least candid about their feelings so it's perhaps only natural that in the past ten years, people have been inclined to forget that there used to be an art to diplomacy, and part of that was the use of fine talk to cover up the most selfish of motives.

We are referring of course to the once revered art of diplomatic double-talk. It practically disappeared during those cold war years, but not hhat America and Russia find themselves voting on the same side against our western allies, and free nations fighting free nations, tha art of double-talk has been resurrected and the public should again be cautioned against taking some of the fine talk issuing from the UN at its face value. The practice of trying to read between the lines just be revived, and the old principle that "fine talk butters no parsnips" kept constantly in mind. For example, UN spokesmen have denied again and again, that Egypt has the right of veto over the composition of the UN Emergency Force that will occupy its territory . But in point of fact, Canadian and some other Commonwealth troops have been studiously ignored in the make-up of the UN force, under graciously worded statements that they just weren't needed at the moment, obviously in line with Nasser's wishes, just as the troop offers of Russia's satellites have been ignored to please the western powers.

And then there's this little matter of the timing of the British and French withdrawal. The British have now inferred that their policy is one of "phased - withdrawal" from Egypt..wiich simply means that they will await the arrival of the United Nations troops in enough strength to get out without losing too much face. This statement will certainly be received with well-publicized anguish by Egypt, possibly by some of those nations like the United States which voted last Saturday for withdrawal "forthwith." since the word "immediate" had not sufficed. But in point of fact, when the UN Emergency Force was first created, it was American Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge , who grandly interpreted the Assembly call for immediate withdrawal to mean a withdrawal "phased in" with the arrival of UN troops. Actually there's never been any other idea on the part of the big canal using nations that Britain and France would get out until there was a United Nations Force ready to take thiir place, whether they voted for the words "immediate" or "forthwith" or any other synonym they may employ in the future.

Currently the behind the scenes argument is over the Egyptian assumption that President Nasser will have the right to dictate the future functions of the UN police force, especially whether it will be permitted to remain astride the Suez Canal or whether, as the Egyptians desire, whether it will be used to patrol the old Israeli armistice lines. And President Nasser believes he retains the right as the ruler of a sovereign nation to say just when the UN Force should et out of his country. But in truth these factors are still to be the subject of future negotiations between President Nasser and UN Secretary Dag Hammarskjold.

Hammarskjold has stated, and the Assembly resolutions have made it clear that no UN force can be stationed in any country without the consent of that country. But no matter what President Nasser asserts, the functions of the UN Force and the length of its stay in Egypt will still depend ot a large extent his future negotiations with UN Secretary General Hammarskjold and his advisory committee of seven western nations.

Mr. Hammarskjold has also politely stated that the UN Emergency Force must not remain in Egypt to put political pressure on Nasser to bring about a settlement of the Suez Canal issue. The United States also holds to the view that the UN Emergency Force should not be used as a political weapon against Egypt.

But actually ever diplomat realizes that thry presence of a UN Army in Egypt is essentially a political force. They may repeat over and over again that it is not to be used as a political weapon. But its very existence on Egyptian soil is a political weapon for the canal users. Egypt knows it, but is powerless to turn it down, and Britain and France know it, otherwise they would not be hinting at withdrawal in two weeks when the UN force will be be enough to take their place and the French have a saying...There's nothing so permanent as the temporary.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with the Footnote to the News. But first...George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUFUR: The British foreign secretary ..Mr. Selwyn Lloyd..has made an eloquent appeal for Western unity in an interview with Roy Howard of the New York World Telegram and Sun. In this hour of history, he said, "no disagreements over details, no dispapointments over results, and no damage to the pride of political leaders, must be permitted to jeopardize..even momentarily..the British American alliance, which is the greatest asset to the democratic world."

This is Larry Sesueur. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Fri., Nov. 30, 1956

Good evening, everyone...

The United States has put in operation an emergency program... to help Western Europe meet the severe oil shortage caused by the closing of the Suez Canal. It is hoped that... under the program... the United States will be able to supply the European countries with at least half a million barrels of oil a day. The figure MAY go as high as one million barrels a day. Thirty-nine Government-owned tankers are being taken out of mothballs to speed up oil shipments. Oil PRODUCTION will also be stepped up in oil fields ranging from Venezuela to Texas. But the question of how the United States will assist in financing payment for the oil, was left open for the time being. The action... ordered by President Eisenhower... calls, in effect, for a pooling of the resources of the American petroleum industry. The [redacted] industry recently set up an emergency committee on a standby basis. That committee... representing fifteen oil companies... has now been activized, and is scheduled to meet in

--- I N S E R T --

A Democratic senator... O'Mahoney of Wyoming... demanded tonight that President Eisenhower call Congress into special session to review the emergency program. O'Mahoney said, "I can't help feeling that this matter should not have been turned over to a group of companies, principal members of which have been sued by the Government---[redacted] first, [redacted] for anti-trust violation... and, second, for overcharging the Navy for oil."

New York on Monday. The President's news secretary... James Hagerty... said today that the industry will coordinate its efforts to insure "the most efficient use of tankers and the maximum availability of petroleum products. The United States," Hagerty said, "desires to cooperate as fully as possible in lessening the effects of the present situation in both producing AND consuming countries."

— INSERT —

The emergency plan was set up last summer, after President Nasser seized the Suez Canal. The United States has delayed putting it in effect, pending definite word from Britain and France with regard to withdrawing their troops from Egyptian [redacted] territory. The United States apparently is now satisfied that a withdrawal WILL take place in conformity with the United Nations resolution of November 8th. The British foreign secretary... Selwyn Lloyd... spoke yesterday of a "phased" withdrawal. And the word from London tonight is that Britain and France may have most of their troops out of Egypt by Christmas. The British Admiralty says it has begun a partial withdrawal of British warships from the Mediterranean area. The announcement does not reveal the scope of the withdrawal. It says simply that "redispositions" are being taken in common with the Army and Air Force.

In London today, French Foreign Minister Pineau joined Selwyn Lloyd in an urgent discussion of the Middle East situation. They are believed to have discussed TERMS for an Anglo-French withdrawal... related to an over-all settlement. The British and French want insurance of unrestricted navigation through the canal.

In the Suez Canal Zone today, Danish infantrymen in UN blue helmets took up positions in the No Man's Land separating the opposing forces. The Danes are part of the United Nations police force... ordered to Egypt to enforce the cease-fire... and their action today is unparalleled in history. For this is the first time [redacted] international troops have ever gone in to serve as a buffer between opposing armies. There was a slight hitch at the beginning... when the Egyptian commander demanded further details related to the operation. But the misunderstanding was soon cleared up, and the Danes began moving in.

Syria said today that it has bought arms from "various" countries, including Communist Czechoslovakia. The statement was made at United Nations headquarters by Syrian Ambassador Zeineddine, who said Syria was forced to purchase the arms as "a defensive measure". (There have frequent reports of a build-up of Soviet arms in Syria. Our own State Department this week described the Soviet arms shipments as "substantial". Zeineddine made no mention of the Soviet Union---he used only the phrase "various countries", and allowed that one of them was Czechoslovakia. He also renewed Syrian charges that the British and French are stationing "threatening forces" in Israel. He accused ~~Britain~~ France of sending at least half a division of troops to Israel... and ~~the French of sending in~~ "some 100 planes".

One of the speakers before the General Assembly today was Liam Cosgrave, Ireland's minister of external affairs. Mr. Cosgrave warned both Syria and Egypt of the danger inherent in Soviet aid. And to illustrate his warning, he told this story:

#1 runs 50 seconds
ends on cue: "---whose terrible record is known to everyone."

Mr. Cosgrave went on to say that another question which keeps the Middle East in turmoil is, of course, the question of Israel. And then he made this wry observation:

#2 runs 40 seconds
ends on cue: "---to the cause of peace."

The Moscow radio today reiterated Soviet charges that Great Britain, France and Israel are hatching "new plans of aggression". And the Soviet naval magazine Red Fleet [redacted] charged that the presence of the United States Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean, is part of what it called an American policy to suppress "national liberation movements in the Arab world."

For her part, Turkey announced that she is beginning "routine" army maneuvers... and calling up "some" additional men [redacted] for military service.

The Austrian government [redacted] tonight officially denied Soviet charges that the United States plans to re-establish its air bases in Austria. The Moscow radio had claimed America [redacted] planned to do this... on the pretext of airlifting out Hungarian refugees.

Secretary General Hammarskjold... by the way... informed the General Assembly today that he still has not received permission to send U.N. observers into Hungary. But Mr. Hammarskjold said he has not given up hope.

There was a small revolution today in Cuba. The uprising appears to have centered in the city of Santiago de Cuba, on the southeast coast, where two police stations were attacked. The Batista government says the attack was carried out by a crowd of armed civilians... and that order was quickly restored. There were at least four deaths.

Here in New York, a Federal Court judge has extended the cooling-off period in the dock strike to 80 days. The original injunction... issued under THE Taft-Hartley LAW... was for 10 days. THAT order would have expired on Tuesday.

Reports from Washington say that the Government has decided to raise the interest rate on mortgages insured by the F.H.A. According to these unofficial reports, the order has been prepared and may be issued over the week-end.

[redacted] A House ways and means subcommittee TODAY continued its study of excise taxes. Republican Senator Potter of Michigan suggested that... as an experiment... the excise tax on new cars be suspended for six months. He predicted the Government would more than make up the loss in the form of income taxes and other revenues, due to stepped-up production and new jobs. George Trautman, president of the National Association of Professional Leagues, testified that minor league baseball may "go under", unless given relief from the federal admissions tax. And the band leader... Meyer Davis... complained of the caberet tax. The average wage earner, he said, can no longer afford an evening "out on the town".

In these days it's sometimes hard to remember, that not all the activities of the United Nations are devoted to Big Crises.. During less-hectic times, much of the UN's prestige is due to the fact that it works on small crises---small crises that loom big in the lives of ordinary people---It works in quiet unpublicized ways with little people, not nations--through its specialized agencies...One of these, especially to be remembered as we near the Christmas Season--is UNICEF--the United Nations Childrens Fund...And here in our studio tonight is a man who has become an unofficial Ambassador of the UN-- on behalf of the Children's Fund..

He's always been known as a great entertainer...now he's he's become famed throghout the world as a Humanitarian..

Its our own Danny Kaye...

Danny---how many countries have you visited on behalf of the Children's fund..

Why have you done this?

Do you think these have learned anything from your visits?

Have you learned anything Danny

Understand your going to appear on TV for the first time on Ed Murrow's SEEit Now on Sunday--~~for an hour and half--from 5 to~~ 6:30 ~~e.st.~~.. how many feet were shot--will people get any more out of this thatn just your famous entertainment Danny.

Footnote to the News

Just as well Lesueur didn't work on morning
ed

Sir Winston Churchill celebrated his 82nd birthday quietly today with his family. Yesterday, he posed with Lady Churchill for an official portrait. The photographer... as he focussed the camera... said: "Sir Winston, I hope to take your picture on your ONE HUNDREDTH birthday." The venerable statesman did not answer immediately. He looked at the photographer appraisingly for a few seconds, and then said: "I see no reason why you shouldn't, young man. You LOOK hale and hearty enough."

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DANNY KAYE

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

LESUEUR: In these days, it's sometimes hard to remember that not all the activities of the United Nations are devoted to big crises. During those hectic times, much of the UN's prestige is due to the fact that it works on small crises - small crises that loom big in the lives of ordinary people. It works in quiet, unpiblicized ways with little people, not nations, through its specialized agencies. One of these especially to be remembered as we near the Christmas season is UNICEF - The United Nations Children's Fund - and here in our studio tonight is a man who has become an unofficial ambassador of the UN on behalf of the Children's Fund. He's always been known as a great entertainer. Now he's become famed throughout the world as a humanitarian. It's our own Danny Kaye.

Danny, how many countries have you visited on behalf ~~his~~ of the UN Children's Fund?

KAYE: All in all, Larry, I would think throughout the last four years that it would probably be somewhere in the nature of 26 countries.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, why have you really done this? (laughter) What was your motivation?

KAYE: That's a question I was asked before, you know. It's a very very simple thing to talk about, Larry. I've always - most of the people in my profession are interested in some extracurricular activity, either cerebral palsy or spastic children. I've always worked with children ever since I could remember. And when Morris Pate asked me to make a trip and go around to some of the installations and come back and either write a magazine article or report on the radio to the people of the United States what UNICEF is doing for the children throughout the world, I was very honored and pleased indeed to be able to do that. It was one of the most inspiring things that ever happened in my life and to be able to go and make a television report to the people of the United States and to many other nations in the world, is one of the most rewarding things that's ever happened in my life.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, I understand you're going to appear on TV for the first time on Ed Murrow's See It Now - that's on Sunday.

KAYE: On Sunday, December 2nd, here at five o'clock, Eatern Standard Time, there will be 90 minutes of a show called "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye", which Mr. Murrow choose to call, and in his own words, I - he - he maintains that this is rather a unique combination of entertainment and information. And we do hope that the people of the United States and people throughout the world will get a far better idea of what a branch of the United Nations is doing for the children of the world.

LESUEUR: Well, thank you very much, Danny Kaye. I'm going to watch that myself. 5:30 - 5:00 to 6:30, Eastern Standard Time.

KAYE: That's right.

LESUEUR: Thank you again, Danny Kaye.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DANNY KAYE

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

LESUEUR: In these days, it's sometimes hard to remember that not all the activities of the United Nations are devoted to big crises. During those hectic times, much of the UN's prestige is due to the fact that it works on small crises - small crises that loom big in the lives of ordinary people. It works in quiet, unpiblicized ways with little people, not nations, through its specialized agencies. One of these especially to be remembered as we near the Christmas season is UNICEF - The United Nations Children's Fund - and here in our studio tonight is a man who has become an unofficial ambassador of the UN on behalf of the Children's Fund. He's always been known as a great entertainer. Now he's become famed throughout the world as a humanitarian. It's our own Danny Kaye.

Danny, how many countries have you visited on behalf ~~kkx~~ of the UN Children's Fund?

KAYE: All in all, Larry, I would think throughout the last four years that it would probably be somewhere in the nature of 26 countries.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, why have you really done this? (laughter) What was your motivation?

KAYE: That's a question I was asked before, you know. It's a very very simple thing to talk about, Larry. I've always - most of the people in my profession are interested in some extracurricular activity, either cerebral palsy or spastic children. I've always worked with children ever since I could remember. And when Morris Pate asked me to make a trip and go around to some of the installations and come back and either write a magazine article or report on the radio to the people of the United States what UNICEF is doing for the children throughout the world, I was very honored and pleased indeed to be able to do that. It was one of the most inspiring things that ever happened in my life and to be able to go and make a television report to the people of the United States and to many other nations in the world, is one of the most rewarding things that's ever happened in my life.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, I understand you're going to appear on TV for the first time on Ed Murrow's See It Now - that's on Sunday.

KAYE: On Sunday, December 2nd, here at five o'clock, Eatern Standard Time, there will be 90 minutes of a show called "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye", which Mr. Murrow choose to call, and in his own words, I - he - he maintains that this is rather a unique combination of entertainment and information. And we do hope that the people of the United States and people throughout the world will get a far better idea of what a branch of the United Nations is doing for the children of the world.

LESUEUR: Well, thank you very much, Danny Kaye. I'm going to watch that myself. 5:30 - 5:00 to 6:30, Eastern Standard Time.

KAYE: That's right.

LESUEUR: Thank you again, Danny Kaye.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 30, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

The United States has put in operation an emergency program to help Western Europe meet the severe oil shortage caused by the closing of the Suez Canal. It is hoped that under the program the United States will be able to supply the European countries with at least half a million barrels of oil a day. The figure may go as high as one million barrels a day. Thrity-nine Government- owned tankers are giing taken out of mothballs to speed up oil shipments. Oil production will also be stepped up, in oil fields ranging from Venezuela to Texas. But the question of how the United States will assist in financing payment for the oil was left open for the time being. The action, ordered by President Eisenhower calls, in effect, for a pooling of the resources of the American petroleum industry. The insustry recently set up an emergency committee on a standby basis. That committee, representing fifteen oil companies, has now been activized, and is scheduled to meet in New York on Monday. The President's news secretary, James Hagerty, said today that the industry will coordinate its efforts to insure "the most efficient use of tankers and the maximum availability of petroleum porcucts. The United States ," Hagerty said, "desires to cooperate as fully as possible in lessening the effects of the present situation in both producing and consuming countries."

A Democratic senatory..O'Mahoney of Wyoming, demanded tonight that President Eisenhower call Congress into special session to review the emergency program. O' ahoney said, "I can't help feeling that this matter should not have been turned over to a group of companies, principal members of which ave been sued by the Government first, for anti-trust violation and, second, for overcharging the Navy for oil."

The emergency plan was set up last summer, after President Nasser seized the Suez Canal. The United States has delayed putting it in effect, p ding definite word from Britain and France with retard to withdrawing their troops. from Egyptian territory. The United States apparently is not satisfied that a withdrawal will take place in conformity with the United Nations resolution of November 8th. The British foreign secretary.. Selwyn Lloyd, spoke yesterday of a "phased" withdrawal. And the word from London tonight is that Britain and France may have most of their troops out of Egypt by Christmas. The British Admiralty says it has begun a partial withdrawal of British warships from the Mediterranean area. The announcement does not reveal the scope of the withdrawal. It says simply that "redispositions" are being taken in common with the Army and Air Force.

In London today, French Foreign Minister Pineau joined Selwyn Lloyd in an urgent discussion of the Middle East situation. They are believed to have discussed turms for an Anglo-French withdrawal..related to an over-all settlement. The British and French want insurance of unrestricted na igation through the canal.

In the Suez Canal Zone today, Danish infantrymen in UN blue helmets took up positions in the No Man's Land separating the opposing forces. The Danes are part of the United Nations police force..ordered to Egypt to enforce the cease-fire and their action today is unparrallelled in history. For this is the first time international troops have ever gone in to serve as a buffer between opposing armies. There was a slight hitch at the beginning..when the Egyptian commander demanded further details related to the operation. But the misunderstanding was soon cleared up, and the Danes began moving in.

Syria said today that it has bought arms from "various" countries, including Communist Czechoslovakia. The Statement was made at United Nations headquarters by Syrian Ambassador Zeineddine, who said Syria was forced to purchase the arms as "a defensive measure". (There have been frequent reports of a build-up of Soviet arms in Syria. Our own State Department this week described the Soviet arms shipments as "substantial". Zeineddine made no mention of the Soviet Union , he used only the phrase "various countries", and allowed that one of them was Czechoslavakia . He also renewed Syrian charges that the British and French are stationing "threatening forces" in Israel. He accused France of sending at least half a division of troops to Inrael..and "some 100 planes."

One of the speakers before the General Assembly today was Liam Cosgrave, Ireland's minister of external affairs. Mr. Cosgrave warned both Syria and Egypt of the danger inherent in Soviet aid. And to illustrate his warning, he told this story:

COSGRAVE: There was once an Irish prince who, for reasons affecting his personal prestige and honour decided to invoke the military aid of friends from across the sea. His friends came very quickly, bit it took us more than seven hundred years to induce them todepart again. That prince's name was gone down in our history as Diarmuid na Gall - Dermot of the Foreigners. That is not the sort of appelation, and not the sort of place in history, that so noteworthy a patriot as President Nasser would wish to earn. I find it hard to believe, therefore, that he - or for that matter his Syrian neighbours - would incur the responsibility of deliberately drawing into their affairs a foreign powers whose terrible record is known to everyone.

LESUEUR: Mr. Cosgrave went on to say that another question which keeps the Middle East in turmoil is, of course, the question of Israel. And then he made this wry observation:

COSGRAVE: I can understand the feelings of the Arab world at the way in which the State of Israel came into being. I can understand the passions aroused by or even to purport to mediate, in the questions at issue between Israel and her neighbours - I may sau, in parenthesis, that my delegation's seat in this [illegible] and I sometimes feel that our presence in that place is a small but real Irish contribution to peace!

[illegible]

LESUEUR: The Moscow radio today reiterated Soviet charges that Great Britain France and Israel are hatching "new plans of aggression". And the Soviet naval magazine Red Fleet charged that the presence of the United States Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean is part of what it called an American policy to suppress "national liberation movements in the Arab world."

For her part, Turkey announed that she is beginning "routine" army maneuvers and calling up "some" additional men for military service. The Austrian government tonight officially denied Soviet charges that the United States plans to re-establish its air bases in Austria. The Moscow radiohad claimed America planned to do this , on the pretext of airlifting out Hungarian refugees.

Secretary General Hammarskjold, by the way, informed the General Assembly today that he still has not received permission to send U.N. observers into Hungary. But Mr. Hammarskjold said he has not given up hope.

There was a small revolution today in Cyba. The uprising appears to have centered in the city of Santiago de Cuba, on the southeast coast, where two police stations were attacked. The atista government says the attack was carried out b a crowd of armed civilians andt that order was quickly restored. There were at least four deaths.

Here in New York, a Federal Court judge has extended the cooling-off period in the dock strike to 80 days. The original injunction..issued under the Taft-Hartley law was for 10 days. That order would have expired on Tuesday.

A House ways and means subcommittee today continued its study of excise taxes. Republican Senator Potter of Michigan suggested that .. as an experiment ..the excise tax on new cars be suspended for six months. He predicted the government would more than make up the loss on the form of income taxes and other revenues, due to stepped-up production and new jobs. George Trautman, president of the National Association of Professional Leagues, testified that minor league baseball may "go under", unless given relief from the federal admissions tax. And the band leader..Meyer Davis..complained of the caberet tax. The average wage earner, he said, can no longer afford an evening "out on the town."

In these days, it is sometimes hard to remember that not all the activities of the United Nations are devoted to big crises. During those hectic times, much of the UN's prestige is due to the fact that it works on small crises - small crises that loom big in the lives of ordinary people. It works in quiet, uppublicized ways with little people, not nations, through its specialized agencies. One of these especially to be remembered as we near the Christmas season is UNICEF -- the United Nations Children's Fund - and here in our studio tonight, is a man who has become an unofficial ambassador of the UN on behalf of the Children's Fund. He's always been knows as a great entertainer. Now he's become famed throughout the world a s a humanitarian. It's our own Danny Kaye.

Danny, how many countries have you visited on behalf of the UN Children's Fund?

KAYE: All in all, Larry, I would think throughout the last four years that it would probably be somewhere in the nature of 26 countries.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, why have you really done this? What was your motivation?

KAYE: That's a question I was asked before, you know. It's verry very simple. thing to talk about, Larry. I've always - most of the people in my profession are interested in some extracurricultr activity, either cerebral palsy or spastic children. I've always worked with children ever since I could remember. And when Morris Pate asked me to make a trip and go around to some of the installations and come back and either write a magazine article or report on the radio to the people of the United States what UNICEF is doing for the children. throughout the world, I was very honored and pleased indeed to be able to do that. It was one of the most inspiring things that ever happened in my life and to be able to go and make a television report to the people of the United States and to many other nations in the world, is one of the most rewarding things that's ever happened in my life.

LESUEUR: Well, Danny, I understand you're going to appear on TV for the first time on Ed Murrow's See It Now - that's on Sunday.

KAYE: On Sunday, December 2nd, here at five o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, there will be 90 minutes of a show called "The Secret Live of Danny Kaye", which Mr. Murrow chose to call, and in his own words , I - he - he maintains that this is rather a unique combination of entertainment and information. And we do hop that the people of the United States and people throughout the world will get a far better idea of what a branch of the United Nations is doing for the children of the world.

LESUEUR: Well, thank you very much, Danny Kaye. I'm going to watch that myself. 5:00 to 6:30 , Eastern Standard Time.

KAYE: That's right.

LESUEUR: Thank you again, Danny Kaye. This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with the Footnote to the News. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUEUR: Sir Winston Churchill celebrated his 82nd birthday quietly today with his family. Yesterday, he posed with Lady Churchill for an official portrain. The photographer, as he focussed the camera, said :"Sir Winston, I hope to take your picuture on your one hundredth birthday." The venerable statesman did not answer immediately. He looked at the photographer appraisingly for a few seconds, and then said: "I see no reason why you shouldn't young man. You look hale and hearty enough.".....This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 3, 1956

This is the news:

The British foreign secretary... Selwyn Lloyd... told the House of Commons today that the British and French governments feel they can now withdraw their forces from Egypt "without delay". He said a time-table for complete withdrawal will be worked out with the United Nations commander, General Burns. The time-table, he said, would take into account the "practical problems" involved. Lloyd said negotiations on the future of the Suez Canal will be promoted as rapidly as possible on the basis of the six principles approved by the Security Council on October 13. One of these principles is that the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Lloyd proposed that the negotiations be carried out... here in New York... between Secretary General Hammarskjold and the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France. "With regard to the Gaza Strip," he said, "it is our view that Israel should withdraw from that also... and that the strip should be made a United Nations responsibility

Lloyd concluded his statement by saying the Anglo-French action has not been without positive results. "The extent of Soviet penetration," he said, "has been revealed. We have stopped a local war... and prevented it from spreading."

On Wednesday, the House of Commons will launch a two-day debate on the Lloyd statement. A vote of confidence is scheduled for Thursday night.

In Washington, the State Department welcomed the Anglo-French decision, and issued a statement pledging to support all measures required to make the United Nations police force "adequate and effective in its mission." The statement called on the United Nations to press for a solution of "underlying" Middle East problems.

In Egypt tonight, General Burns ordered a Yugoslav contingent of his "police force" to take up positions in the Sinai Desert, between the Israeli and Egyptian troops.

The puppet government of Hungary has again refused to allow United Nations observers into the country. It insisted... in a note to Secretary-General Hammarskjold... that recent events there "constitute exclusively the internal affairs of Hungary... and do not belong to the competence of any international organization." The note said Hammarskjold himself would be welcome in Budapest "at a later date". American Ambassador Lodge denounced the Hungarian position... and urged the General Assembly to approve a new resolution, demanding that Hungary agree by next Friday to let in United Nations observers. ~~The resolution... sponsored by the United States and 13 other countries... orders both Russia and Hungary to comply with other U.N. decisions, including withdrawal of Soviet troops and the stopping of deportations.~~

In Budapest today, a government spokesman admitted that Hungarians have been deported "in isolated instances". But he claimed all persons deported from Hungary have been returned. The spokesman had granted an interview to the few Western correspondents left in Budapest. He denied that fighting continues in Hungary... and then, under questioning, conceded that some resistance is being encountered in the provinces. "Only criminals," he said, "are still fighting."

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that the former ~~Hungarian premier Imre Nagy~~ Hungarian premier... Imre Nagy... is being held at

→

Se-nä-ē·ä
Sinaia, a health resort in south-central Romania. Nehru called the Soviet abduction of Nagy "a serious matter"... and said United Nations observers ought to be allowed to enter Hungary. ~~"Otherwise," he said, "people will begin to think the charges of deportations are true."~~ With regard to the Middle East, Nehru said a dangerous vacuum has been created there which could easily bring "a drift to war."

Russia today signed an agreement with Roumania, whereby Soviet troops will continue to be stationed on Roumanian soil. ~~In return, Russia will send Roumania nearly half a million tons of wheat during the next seven months. Roumanian debts. The payment of certain Roumanian debts is also deferred. Signing of the agreements marked the conclusion of Moscow talks between leaders of the two countries.~~

The United States has suspended its cultural exchange program with Russia. The State Department said the program is being reappraised "in view of recent developments. Cultural exchanges with Russia's European satellites are not affected. Nor does the suspension apply to exchanges conducted under private sponsorship.

~~Secretary of State Dulles reported back to work at his desk in Washington today, just one month after undergoing abdominal surgery.~~

~~President Eisenhower will hold a conference on Friday, dealing with the military budget for the next fiscal year. Secretary of Defense Wilson and Budget Director Brundage are among the top-level officials summoned to the meeting, which will be held in Aiken, Augusta.~~

The government today authorized the nation's federally insured commercial banks to raise their interest rate on savings accounts to 3 percent. The increase... amounting to one-half percent... is effective January 1st. The move is calculated to encourage savings, in the current "tight money" market.

The United States Supreme Court today "let stand" a lower court decision, requiring the "prompt" admission of Negro students to the high school in Mansfield, Texas. It rejected an appeal by the Mansfield Board of Education for a review of the decision. The ruling... returned by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans... was that the school board had not acted to effect desegregation with "all deliberate speed".

In Clinton, Tennessee, the County School Board has appealed to the Justice Department for help in enforcing a racial integration order at the high school there. The board said... in a letter to Attorney General Brownell... that it may have to close the school this week, unless it gets help from the Federal Government. The school has been the scene of occasional violence since early last September, when 12 Negro students were admitted.

At least 14 persons were killed today in a waterfront fire in Brooklyn. Police say more than 200 persons were injured. The fire started in mid-afternoon on the 17-hundred-foot pier used by the Luckenbach Steamship Company... then spread to three adjoining piers. An explosion rocked buildings two miles away. A nearby fireboat was demolished. Some persons, 11 blocks from the scene of the explosion, were injured by falling debris.

Edward R. Murrow: December 3, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The United States appears to have chosen, for the time being at least, the General Assembly of the United Nations as the main instrument of our foreign policy. This does not mean that our strength has increased, nor that Russian power has diminished. It does not necessarily mean that the prospects of peace with justice in the world have improved. It is true that a cease fire in Egypt was achieved through the United Nations. But we got the cease fire because Russia wanted it too. This means that the U.N. as an instrument of foreign policy will pay dividends only when the Soviet Union wants what we want. The proof of that is to be found in Hungary. There the Soviet Union does not want what we want, or what the great majority in the United Nations wants. The result is that the U.N. can't get the Red Army out of Hungary, can't get observers into the country; can't even get Secretary General Hammarskjold in except at the future convenience of the Hungarian Government.

In adopting the United Nations policy we have not increased our power, and we have considerably limited our freedom of maneuver. The limitation is very narrow even in Egypt. There we agree with the Russians on only one point — we are against violence. We don't agree with the Russians on the future of Israel; we don't agree with them on the methods or aims of President Nasser, and we don't want him to dominate the Middle East under the auspices of the Soviet Union.

As a matter of fact, historians will be arguing for a long time whether it was the United Nations or the threat of force by the Soviet Union, that stopped the war in Egypt. In any event, the British and French policy, born of desperation, ended in disaster.

We succeeded in getting our allies to quit in Egypt - we saved President Nasser, because that is what the Russians wanted to happen. But we are powerless to compel Russia or its puppet regime in Hungary to cease the slaughter and the deportations. We cannot even send in some nice neutrals, presumably in order that they might observe the butchery.

The President and Mr. Dulles are reported as being optimistic about the prospects for peace in the Middle East. This optimism is rather difficult to understand, since so far as we have been told, there has been no change in our policy in the Middle East, and inasmuch as our allies are frank to say they do not know what that policy is or has been. In terms of power our principal allies have lost more of it in less time than could have been imagined, and the Russians have gained more power and influence in the Middle East than they were able to achieve in two hundred years of trying. Tranquility in that area would not serve Russian interests. So we may be sure that the unrest and tension and the Russian penetration will continue.

It is not useful at this point to belabor our allies for mistakes in judgment or timing. It helps not at all to speculate what the situation might be had the state of Israel not been created. What should concern us now is the present balance sheet. It is true that we have increased our influence in certain Arab states; the Russians probably increased theirs more. It is too early to tell whether the Western alliance has been completely wrecked, but it may have been. And if so we are witnessing the not too gradual isolation of this country.

We tried to compose - to resolve the differences between our allies and their enemies. We took up a position between them, as a mediator. But when we mediate between our allies and their enemies we are bound to do so at the expense of our allies. There is no other way. But the power of our allies has been part of our power. So we have had to pay out part of our own power for such peace as we have obtained.

The United Nations has tried vainly for years to bring peace to the Middle East. It is true that the present crisis has created a U.N. Police Force, but it is also true that that force is in Egypt - at President Nasser's whim. There will be no peace in the Middle East so long as Egypt and her neighbors are intent upon the destruction of Israel; so long as nothing is done about the Arab refugees, or the waters of the Jordan.

This is a time that cries out, not for optimism but for a bold imaginative plan on which the free nations could unite, and which might possibly bring peace to the Middle East. Otherwise that area may become peaceful, but on Russian terms, as in Hungary.

There was wisdom in Mr. Churchill's words when he said, shortly after taking office in 1940, that if we spend too much time debating the past we shall lose the future.

George Bryan

A moment ago, I was quoting Churchill... his warning not to spend too much time debating the past. Sir Winston also said, "The price of greatness is responsibility. If the people of the United States had remained in a mediocre station, a factor of no consequence in the movements of the world, they might have remained forgotten and ~~disturbed,~~ undisturbed beyond their protecting ocean." But such is not the case.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The British foreign secretary ..Selwyn Lloyd..told the House of Commons today that the British and French governments feel they can now withdraw their forces from Egypt "without delay". He said a time-table for a complete withdrawal will be worked out with the United Nations commander, General Burns. The time-table, he said, would take into account the "practical problems" involved. Lloyd said negotiations on the future of the Suez Canal will be promoted as rapidly as possible on the basis of the six principles approved by the Security Countil on Ocotber 13. One of these principles is that the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Lloyd proposed that the negotiations be carried out here in New York..between Secretary General Hammarskjold and the foreign ministers of Egypt, Britain and France.

"With regard to the Gaza Strip", he said, "it is our view that Israel should withdraw from that also and that the strip should be made a United Nations responsibility.

Lloyd concluded his statmment by saying the Anglo-French action has not been without positive results. "The extent of Soviet penetrataion," he said, "has been revealed. We have stopped a local war..and prevented it from spreading."

On Wednesday, the House of Commons will launch a two-day debate on the Lloyd statement. A vote of confidence is scheduled for Thursday night.

In Washington, the State Department welcomed the Anglo-French decision and issued a statement pledging to support all measures required to make the United Nations police force "adequate and effective in its mission." The statement caled on the United Nations to press for a solution of "underlying Middle East problems.

In Egypt tonight, General Burns ordered a Yugoslav contingent of his "police force" to take up positions in the Sinai Desert, between the Israeli and Egyptian troops.

The puppet government of Hungary has again refused to allow United Nations observers into the country. It insisted..in a note to Secretary-General Hammarskjold, that recent events there "constitute exclusively the internal affairs of Hungary, and do not belong to the competence of any international organization." The note said Hammarskjold himself would be welcome in Budapest "at a later date". American Ambassador Lodge denounced the Hungarian position and urged the General Assembly to approve a new resolution, demanding that Hungary agree, by next Friday, to let in United Nations observers.

In Budapest today, a government spokesman admitted that Hungarians have been deported "in isolated instances." But he claimes all persons deported from Hungary have been returned. The spokesman had granted an interview to the few Western correspondents left in Budapest. He denied that fighting continues in Hungary, and then, under questioning, conceded that some resistance is being encountered in the provinces. "Only criminals", he said, "are still fighting."

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that the former Hungarian premier, Imre Nagy, is being held at Sinaia, a health resort in south-central Roumania. Nehru called the Soviet abduction of Nagy "a serious matter" and said United Nations observers ought to be allowed to enter Hungary. With regard to the Middle East, Nehru said a dangerous vacuum has been created there which could easily bring " a drift to war."

Russia today signed an agreement with Roumania, whereby Soviet troops will continue to be stationed on Roumanian soil.

The United States has suspended its cultrual exchange program with Russia. The State Department said the program is being reappraised "in view of recent developments. Cultural exchanges with Russia's European satellites are not affected. Nor does the suspension apply to exchanges conducted under private sponsorship .

The government today authorized the nation's federally insured commercial banks to raise their interest rate on savings accounts to 3 percent. The increase, amounting to one-half percent, is effective January 1st. The move is calculated to encourage savings in the current "tight money" market.

The United States Supreme Court today "let stand" a lower court decision requiring the "prompt" admission of Negro students to the high school in Mansfield Texas. It rejected an appeal by the Mansfield Board of Education for a review of the decision. The ruling, returned by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans, was that the school board had not acted to effect desegregation with "all deliberate speed."

In Clinton, Tennessee, the County School Board has appealed to the Justice Department for help in enforcing a racial integration order at the high school there. The board said, in a letter to Attorney General Brownell, that it may have to close the school this week unless it gets help from the Federal Government. The school has been the scene of occasional violence since early last September, when 12 Negro students were admitted.

At least 14 persons were killed today in a waterfront fire in Brooklyn. Police say more than 200 persons were injured. The fire started in mid-afternoon on the 17-hundred foot pier used by the Luckenbach Steamship Company then spread to three adjoining piers.

An explosion rocked buildings two miles away. A nearby fireboat was demolished. Some persons 11 blocks from the scene of the explosion were injured by falling debris.

The United States appears to have chosen, for the time being at least, the General Assembly of the United Nations as the main instrument of our foreign policy. This does not mean that our strength has increased, nor that Russian power has diminished. It does not necessarily mean that the prospects of peace with justice in the world have improved. It is true that a cease fire in Egypt was achieved through the United Nations. But we got the cease fire in Egypt because Russia wanted it too. This means that the U.N. as an instrument of foreign policy will pay dividends only when the Soviet Union wants what we want. The proof of that is to be found in Hungary. There the Soviet Union does not want what we want, or that the great majority in the United Nations wants. The result is that the U.N. can't get the Red Army out of Hungary, can't get observers into the country; can't even get Secretary General Hammarskjold in except at the future convenience of the Hungarian Government.

In adopting the United Nations policy we have not increased our power, and we have considerably limited our freedom of maneuver. The limitation is very narrow even in Egypt. There we agree with the Russians on only one point - we are against violence. We don't agree with the Russians on the future of Israel; we don't agree with them on the methods or aims of President Nasser, and we don't want him to dominate the Middle East under the auspices of the Soviet Union.

As a matter of fact, historians will be argueing for a long time whether it was the United Nations or the threat of force by the Soviet union that stopped the war in Egypt. In any event, the British and French policy, born of desperation, ended in disaster.

We succeeded in getting our allies to quit in Egypt - we saved President Nasser, beauuse that is what the Russians wanted to happen. But we are powerless to compel Russia or its puppet regime in Hungary to cease the slaughter and the deportations. We cannot even eend in some nice neutrals, presumably in order that they might observe the butchery.

The President and Mr. Dulles are reported as being optimistic about the prospects for peace in the Middle East. This optimism is rather difficult to understand, since so far as we have been told there has been no change in our policy in the Middle East, and inasmuch as our allies are frank to say they do not know what that policy is hor has been.

In terms of power our principal allies have lost more of it in less time than could have been imagined, and the Russians have gained more power and influence in the Middle East than they were able to achieve in two hundred years of trying. Tranquility in that area would not serve Russian interests. So we may be sure that the unrest and tension and the Russian penetration will continue.

It is not useful at this point to belabor our a lies for mistakes in judgement or timing. It helps not at all to speculate what the situation might be had the state of Israel not been created. What should concern us now is the present balance sheet. It is true that we have increased our influence in certain Arab states; the Russians probably increased theirs more. It is too early to tell whether the Western alliance has been completely wrecked, but it may have been. And if so we are witnessing the not too gradual isolation of this country.

We tried to compose - to resolve the differences between our allies and their enemies. We took up a position between them, as a mediator. But when we mediate between our allies and their enemies, we are bound to do so at the expense of our allies. There is no other way. But the power of our allies has been part of our power. So we have had to pay out part of our own power for such peace as we have obtained.

The United Nations has tried vainly for years to bring peace to the Middle East. It is true that the present crisis has created a U.N. Police Force, but it is also true that that force is in Egypt - at President Nasser's whim. There will be no peace in the Middle East so long as Egypt and her neighbors are intent upon the destruction of Israel; so long as nothing is done about the Arab refugees, or the waters of the Jordan.

This is a time that cries out, not for optimism but for a bold imaginative plan on which the free nations could unite, and which might possible bring peace to the Middle East. Otherwise that area may become peaceful, but on Russian terms, as in Hungary.

There was wisdom in Mr. Churchill's words when he said, shortly after taking office in 1940, that if we spend too much time debating the past we shall lose the future.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: A moment ago, I was quoting Churchill..his warning not to spend too much time debating the past. Sir Winston also said, "The price of greatness is responsibility. If the people of the United States had remained in a mediocre station, a factor of no consequence in the move ents of the world, they might have reamined forgotten and undisturmed beyond their protecting ocean." But such is not the case.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 4, 1956

This is the news:

Yugoslavia joined the Western powers in the United Nations General Assembly today in urging that Secretary General Hammarskjold be admitted to Hungary as soon as possible. The debate was on a resolution demanding that the puppet government of Hungary grant entry to United Nations observers. The Hungarian foreign minister... Imre Horvath... said he was prepared to meet Hammarskjold "at any time convenient to him", to discuss arrangements for the secretary general to visit Hungary. American Ambassador Lodge moved that the General Assembly adjourn, so that this discussion could take place. Hammarskjold and Horvath then met... and the word is that Hammarskjold said he would like to go to Budapest on December 16th. A announcement may be made when the Assembly reconvenes an hour and a half from now.

Today... in Budapest... thousands of women laid flowers on the tomb of Hungary's Unknown Soldier. / They carried out the gesture in defiance of Russian troops, who ordered them home. / At one point, the Russians opened fire over their heads... apparently as a warning... but a bullet hit one woman in the leg. "We have only flowers," the women shouted. "Why are you afraid?" Altogether, the demonstration lasted for three hours.

The British government today announced a sharp drop in gold and dollar reserves... and instituted measures to help meet the emergency. / Chancellor of the Exchequer Macmillan told the House of Commons, that reserves in the sterling area last month dropped 279-million dollars. / This has brought total reserves just under 2-billion dollars, which economists say, is the minumum essential for the safety of the pound. Macmillan also announced a trade deficit. / He said both the drop in reserves, and the trade deficit, began with Egypt's seizure of the Suez Canal. He promised that the pound sterling will be maintained at its present value. And this, he said, requires stringent measures. / An extra tax of one shilling (14 cents) is being put on every gallon of gasoline. / Britain has also asked the United States and Canada to waive the interest payments due the end of this month on their postwar loans. Commitments on repayment of principal will be kept. Britain will also try to buy dollars with sterling from the International Monetary Fund. And Macmillan warned that... eventually... British income taxes may again have to be increased.

→

The interest due the United States on the British loan is in the neighborhood of 82-million dollars. The State Department says it will view Britain's request to skip this interest payment "sympathetically". But, it adds, the final decision is up to Congress. ~~The State Department says it cannot determine... from the language of the loan agreement... whether either it or the Treasury Department has the authority to act.~~

About 2-thousand British troops are scheduled to sail from Port Said tomorrow, as the first step in the withdrawal from Egypt. Orders have also gone out for the French forces to start their withdrawal. Tomorrow, the United Nations commander, General Burns, will confer with British and French operations officers on final plans of departure. On Thursday, Burns will see Israeli representatives in Jerusalem with regard to evacuation of Israel's forces from the Sinai Peninsula.

President Eisenhower today chose Douglas MacArthur the Second to succeed John Allison as United States ambassador to Japan. MacArthur is the nephew of General MacArthur... and is a career diplomat, presently serving as counselor in the State Department. Allison is returning home for reassignment.

It was announced today that Mr. Eisenhower will meet Republican congressional leaders on December 31st, to discuss his legislative program. The Administration's foreign policy plans will be discussed at another meeting on New Year's Day... to be attended by Democratic, as well as Republican, leaders of Congress.

Today, the President conferred in Augusta, Georgia, with the director of the budget... Percival Brundage... regarding federal spending in the next fiscal year.

Adlai Stevenson announced today that he will not run again for the presidency. Stevenson said that although he is returning to the practice of law, his interest in the Democratic Party will continue undiminished. "I want to be of help," he said, "wherever I can." Mr. Stevenson issued his statement through Democratic national headquarters in Washington.

New violence has closed the high school in Clinton, Tennessee. A Baptist minister... who is white... was beaten up today after escorting six Negro students to the integrated school. He suffered cuts and bruises about the face. A suspect... also white... was arrested and held for federal authorities. The [redacted] county school board then ordered the school closed until further notice. The board appealed to the Justice Department yesterday for help in enforcing a court order integrating the school. Attorney General Brownell said tonight that the F.B.I. is [redacted] investigating the situation. The Federal Government, he said, will prosecute [redacted] all persons attempting to block integration of the Clinton school.

H ere in New York, Army ordnance officers have joined in the investigation of yesterday's fire on the Brooklyn waterfront, in which 10 persons were killed. Damage is estimated at 10-million dollars. [redacted] The most mysterious element in the disaster is the explosion, which tore a hole 75 feet wide through 28 inches of reinforced concrete. One ordnance expert called it "a high order detonation". "We couldn't have duplicated it," he said, "with a 4-thousand-pound bomb."

Edward R. Murrow: December 4, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

On the 16th of this month Premier Nehru of India is due in Washington for his postponed talks with President Eisenhower. At the moment Premier Chou En-lai of communist China is in India and has had long talks with Mr. Nehru. And when Mr. Nehru returns to New Delhi from Washington, Chou En-lai is coming back to be filled in on what President Eisenhower said.

Mr. Nehru thus shows himself to be a person with a unique status in world affairs. Who else would be able to confer with the President of the United States and the Premier of China, one after the other, and report to each what the other said? He does so as a friend of both, hoping that somehow his friendship will serve to reduce the strong antagonisms between the policies of the United States and Red China.

This opportunity is greatly to Nehru's liking. India is a nation with hardly any military power and very little wealth. But it has steadily risen under Nehru's guidance to be the most important "neutralist" country in the world. In the past it has seemed to us that he has leaned over backwards to be cordial to the Communists, and has never hesitated to scold the West whenever he felt like it. When Egypt was attacked, his condemnation of the West rose to towering heights, while at first his indignation over Soviet behavior in Hungary was quite mild. Krishna Menon, his representative at the U.N., actually opposed the first U.N. resolution on Hungary. But a transformation came over Nehru's thinking. For one thing, Indian opinion was outraged by Soviet brutality in Hungary. This opinion also was impressed by American firmness in denouncing the aggression against Egypt. Krishna Menon was instructed to reverse his position, and Mr. Nehru started publicly criticizing Moscow's behavior in Hungary. [Thus United States policy on Egypt visibly warmed Mr. Nehru's coolness toward this country. And he has been assuring Chou En-lai that Washington is going through a change of policy and is sincerely seeking to cultivate anti-colonial countries in Asia and the Middle East, something that Chinese Communists are reluctant to admit.]

It would be a mistake to regard Mr. Nehru as simply a go-between in his talks with President Eisenhower and Chou En-lai. Events not only have changed American policy, they have greatly added to India's influence, and in part to India's dangers. He comes to Washington at a fortunate time for him. Had he come last July, as originally planned, he would not have been the center of world attention. The Middle East crisis stepped up the value of India's friendship to both sides. And Nehru undoubtedly feels that as the disciple of Gandhi he can do more to pacify the world than he ever dreamed in the days when he sat in a British prison in India.

But the position of India has also been endangered by the catastrophe in Egypt. One significant feature has been high-lighted in Nehru's talks with Chou En-lai. The two have differed over Russia's conduct in Hungary. Chou has defended Moscow in Moscow's own terms. But Nehru has been arguing that the root of the trouble in Hungary has been the Soviet Union's inability to convert Hungarians to Communism. This shows Mr. Nehru interpreting events as a non-Communist, and aware that India is non-communist. He may feel that India's freedom to remain democratic is now in some jeopardy.

The Egyptian catastrophe has left a vacuum of military power in the Middle East which Washington is now belatedly hoping to keep the Soviet Union from filling. But it also left a vacuum of moral power, due to Britain and France disappearing from the scene as moral as well as military factors. This moral vacuum extends to the whole of free Asia. Washington is aware that the United States must fill the moral vacuum, if Asia is to be saved from ultimate communist domination. Presumably Mr. Nehru is in agreement.

But Mr. Nehru is expected to argue in Washington that we cannot fill this moral vacuum unless we can arrive at some kind of stabilized relations with Communist China, which is why he takes an interest in them. He will be able to report that he has tried to moderate Chou En-lai's attitude on the prisoners, and has made some progress. He will be able to say that he advised Chou not to expect to get United States recognition right away, or entry into the United Nations at an early date. He may report that he is more optimistic about early relaxation of trade restrictions, also that he did not find Chou En-lai bellicose on the subject of Formosa. Perhaps the only immediate concrete result that will come from the Nehru visit will be the release of the remaining American prisoners in China. In New Delhi Chou En-lai used the same phrase about them that he did before the American airmen were set free. He said that good behavior might lead to the shortening of their sentences. If the prisoners are released Washington presumably would have to lift its ban on the entry of American news men into China, which was imposed solely because Americans still were in the Communist prisons.

This certainly would not break the log-jam in Asia, but it might be the beginning of a thaw. And that, Mr. Nehru may argue, is the way to go about winning moral leadership. It would not be a startling beginning, but ~~fortunately for the free world, the Russians are putting up a thoroughly repulsive show in Hungary.~~ but it might be a beginning.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is a vacuum in the Middle East... both military and moral. And there is agreement between the Indian prime minister, and our own government, that it needs filling. Theodore Roosevelt said, "The American people abhor a vacuum." Let us hope, in this instance, that it is so. For truly, as Descartes wrote in his "Principles of Philosophy", a vacuum is repugnant to reason.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Yugoslavia joined the Western powers in the United Nations General Assembly today in urging that Secretary General Hammarskjold be admitted to Hungary as soon as possible. The debate was on a resolution demanding that the puppet government of Hungary grant entry to United Nations observers. The Hungarian foreign minister..Imre Horvath..said he was prepared to meet Hammarskjold "at any time convenient to him" to discuss arrangements for the secretary general to visit Hungary . American Ambassador Lodge moved that the General Assembly adjourn, so that this discussion could take place. Hammarskjold and Horvath thenm met and the world is that Hammarskjold said he would like to go to Budapest on December 16th. An announcement may be made when the Assembly reconvenes an hour and a half from now.

Today in Budapest thousands of women laid flowers on the tomb of Hungary's Unknown Soldier. They carried out the gesture in defiance of Russian troops, who ordered them home. At one point, the Russian opened fire over their heads, apparently as a warning, but a bullet hit one woman in the let. "We have only flowers," the women shouted. "Why are you afraid?" Altogether, the demonstration lasted for three hours.

The British government today announced a sharp drop in gold and dollar reserves and instituted measures to help meet the emergency. Chancellor of the Exchequer Macmillan told the House of Commons that reserves in the sterling area last month dropped 279 million dollars. This has brought total reserves just under 2-billion dollars, which economists say is the minimum essential for the safety of the pound. Macmillan also announced a trade deficit. He said both the drop in reserves and the drade deficit began with Egypt's seizure of the Suez Canal. He promised that the pound sterling will be maintained at its present value. And this, he said, requires stringent measures. An extra tax on one shilling (14 cents) is being put on every gallon of gasoline. Britain has also asked the United States and Canada to waive the interest payment due at the end of this month of their postwar loans. Commitments on repayment of the principal will be kept. Britain will also try to buy dollars with sterling from the International Monetary Fund. And Macmillan warned that, eventually, British income taxes may again have to be increased.

The interest due the United States on the British loan is in the neighborhood of 82-million dollars. The State Department says it sill view Britain's request to skip this nterest payment "sympathetically." But, it adds, the final decision is up to Congress.

About 2-thousand British troops are scheduled to sail from Port Said tomorrow, as the first step in the withdrawal from Egypt. Orders have also gone out for the French forces to start their withdrawal. Tomorrow, the United Nations commander, General Burns, will confer with British and French operations officers on final plans of departure. On Thursday, Burns will see Israeli representatives in Jersualem with regar to evacuation of Israel's forces from the Sinai Peninsula.

President Eisenhower today chose Douglas MacArthur the Second to succeed John Allison as United States ambassador to Japan. MacArthur is the nephew of General MacArthur and is a career diplomat, presently serving as counselor in the State Department. Allison is returning home for reassignment.

Adlai Stevenson announced today that he will not run again for the presidency . Stevenson said that although he is returning to the practice of law, his interest in the Democratic Party will continue undiminished. "I want to be of help", he said, "wherever I can." Mr. Stevenson issued his statement through Democratic national headquarters in Washington.

New violence has closed the high school in Clinton, Tennessee. A Baptist minister, who is white, was beaten up today after escorting six Negro students to the integrated school. He suffered cuts and bruises about the face. A suspect, also white, was arr sted and held for federal authorities. The county board then ordered the school closed until further notice. The board appealed to the Justice Department yesterday for help in enforcing a court order integrating the school. Attorney General Brownell said tonight that the F.B.I. is investigating the situation. The Federal Government, he said, will prosecute all persons attempting to block integration of the Clinton school..

Here in New York, Army ordnance officers have joined in the investigation of yesterday's fire on the Brooklyn waterfront, in which 10 persons were killed. Damage is estimated at 10-million dollars. The most mysterious element in the disaster is the explosion, which tore a hole 75 feet wide through 28 inches of reinforced concrete. One ordnance expert called it " a high order detonation." "We couldn't have duplicated it", he said, "with a 4-thousand - pound bomb."

On the 16th of this month Premier Nehru of India is due in Washingto for his postponed talks with President Eisenhower. At the moment Premier Chou En-lai of Communist Chine is in India had has had long talks with Mr. Nehru. An when Mr. Nehru returns to New Delhi from Washington, Chou En-lai is coming back to be filled in on what President Eisenhower said.

Mr. Nehru thus shows himself to be a person with a unique status in world affairs. Who else would be able to confer with the President of the United States and the Premier of China, one after the other, and report to each what the other said? He does so as a friend of both, hoping that somehow his friendship will serve to reduce the strong antagonisms between the policies of the United States and Red China.

This opportunity is greatly to Nehru's liking. India is a nation with hardly any military power and very little wealth. But it has staadily risen under Nehru's guidace to be the most important "neutralist" country in the world. In the past it has seemed to us that he has leaned over backwards to be cordial to the Communists, and has never hesitated to scold the West whenever he felt like it. When Egypt was attacked, his condemnation of the West rose to towering heights, while at first his indignation over Soviet behavior in Hungary was quite mild. Krishna Menon, his representative at the U.N., actually opposed the first U.N. resolution on Hungary. But a transformation came over Nehru's thinking. For one think, Indian opinion was outraged by Soviet brutality in Hungary. This opinion also was impressed by American firmness in denouncing the aggression against Egypt. Krishna Menon was instructed to reverse his position, and Mr. Nehru started publicly criticizing Moscow's behavior in Hungary.

It would be a mistake to regard Mr. Nehru as simply a go-between in his talks with President Eisenhower and Chou En-lai . Events not only have changed American policy, they have greatly added to India's influence, and in part to India's dangers. He comes to Washington at a fortunate time for him. Had he come last July, as originally planned, he would not have been the center of world attention. The Middle East crisis stepped up the value of India's friendship to both sides. And Nehru undoubtedly feels that as the disciple of Gandhi he can do more to pacify the world that he ever dreamed in the days when he sat in a British prison in India.

But the position of India has also been endangered by the catastrophe in Egypt, One significant feature has been high-lighted in Nehru's talks with Chou enLii. The two have differed over Russia's conduct in Hungary. Chou had defended Moscow in Moscow's own terms. But Nehru has been arguing that the root of the trouble in Hungary has been the Soviet Union's inability to Hungarians to Communism. This shows Mr. Nehru interpreting events as a non-Communist, and aware that India is non-communist. He may feel that India's freedom to remain democratic is now in some jeopardy.

The Egyptian catastrophe has left a vacuum of military power in the Middle East which Washington is now belatedly hoping to keep the Soviet Union from filling. But it also left a vacuum of moral power, due to Britain and France disappearing from the scene as moral as well as military factors. This moral vacuum extends to the whole of free Asia. Washington is aware that the United States must fill the moral vacuum, if Asia is to be saved from ultimate communist domination. Presumably Mr. Nehru is in agreement.

But Mr. Nehru is exected to argue in Washington that we cannot fill this moral vacuum unless we canarrive at some kind of stabilized relations with Communist China, which is why he taken an interest in them. He will be able to report that he has tried to moderate Chou En-lai's attitude on the prisoners had has made some progress. He will be able to say that he advised Chou not to expect to get United States recognition right away, or entry into the United Nations at an early date. He may report that he is more optimistic about early relaxation of trade resticctions, also that he did not find Chou En-lai belli - cose on the subject of Formosa. Perhaps the only immediate concrete result that will come from the Nehru visit will be the release of the remaining American prisoners in China. In New Delhi Chou En-lai used the same phrase about them that he did before the American airmen were set free. He said that good behavior might lead to theshortaningof their sentences. If the prisoners are released, Washington presumably would have to lift its ban on the entry of American news men into China, which was imposed solely because Americans still were in the Communist prisons.

This certainly would not break the log-jam in Asia, but it might be the beginning of a thaw. And that, Mr. Nehru may argue, is the way to go about winning moral leadership. It would not be a startling beginning, but it might be a beginning.

This is Ed Murrow. I' l be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is a vacuum in the Middle East, both military and moral. And there is agreement between the Indian prime minister and our own government that needs filling. Theodore Roosevelt said, "The American people abhor a vacuum." Let us hope, in this instance, that it is so. For truly, as Descartes wote in his "Principles of Philosophy", a vacuum is repugnant to reason.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 5, 1956

This is the news:

The Budapest radio said today that United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold cannot visit Hungary on December 16th... that the date is "not suitable". Hammarskjold told the General Assembly last night that he was going to Hungary on December 16th to stay for three days. He had consulted with Hungarian Foreign Minister Horvath... and Horvath had agreed to this arrangement. His only explanation tonight was: "Apparently my government does not agree with me." The puppet government of Hungary is still talking about a visit by Hammarskjold "at some later date".

American Ambassador Lodge has denounced the action as "an affront to the secretary general and to the whole civilized world." Last night, the Assembly approved a resolution giving Russia and Hungary until Friday to agree to let United Nations observers into Hungary. Lodge has asked Hammarskjold to appoint this team of observers "without delay".

There were new demonstrations in Budapest today, in defiance of Soviet troops and tanks. A crowd of men, women and children in front of the American legation was dispersed by police, who struck about them with their rifle butts. Some of the demonstrators were seized... and presumably carried off to police headquarters. At least three other demonstrations were held. The Russian tanks were spat on. And there are signs that tomorrow will see a new general strike.

Cardinal Mindszenty has disclosed, in an interview, that he was tortured by secret police for 29 days and nights... before he went on trial for treason in 1949. Mindszenty said he was stripped, beaten, and kept in a damp cell. The interview was granted to a correspondent for Look Magazine, at the American legation in Budapest, where the cardinal has been granted asylum.

The debate on Britain's Middle East policy, opened today in the House of Commons. Speaking for the Eden government, Foreign Secretary Lloyd denied that Britain "incited" Israel to attack Egypt. And he challenged the Labour opposition to deny that the Anglo-French action, in Egypt, had kept war from spreading through the Middle East. It was ~~the~~ issuance of the Anglo-French ultimatum of October 30, he argued, that made President Nasser decide not to involve the other Arab states in military operations. Lloyd said another "solid advantage"... resulting from the action... "is the existence in Egypt of a United Nations police force." And as a result of our operation, he said, "the magnitude of the Soviet penetration has been revealed." Lloyd denied that "acute differences of opinion" had jeopardized good relations between Britain and the United States. Indeed, he said, they may serve to "clear the air and make possible a closer alliance."

The new Labour Party spokesman... Aneurin Bevan... accused the Conservative government of changing its reasons for going into Egypt "from day to day". Prime Minister Eden, he said, had declared it Britain's purpose to separate the belligerents and secure free passage through the canal. Bevan called Lloyd's claim that the Anglo-French invasion had strengthened the United Nations absurd. "Hitler and Mussolini," he said, "had they thought of it, might have claimed that they had made war on the world in order to call the United Nations into being." Lloyd's speech today was an effort to save the Eden government. Motions of confidence... and censure... are due for a vote tomorrow night. Eden is confronted with a revolt within his own party. It's reported tonight that as many as 35 Conservative members of Parliament may abstain on the vote of confidence in his government. Normally, the Conservatives have a majority of 59 votes.

Today... in Egypt... more than 2-thousand British soldiers filed aboard a troop transport and sailed out of Port Said harbor. And Israel withdrew an additional artillery battalion from the Sinai Peninsula.

The foreign minister of Iraq said today... in Baghdad... "The time is ripe for regaining Palestine." Israel was built on aggression, he said. "Therefore its removal from the Middle East is essential."

In Washington, the ambassadors of Iraq... and three other Baghdad Pact countries... conferred with Secretary Dulles today at the State Department. The other countries represented at the meeting were Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. Their spokesman... Mohammed Ali of Pakistan... said they received personal assurance from Dulles that the United States would "do everything possible" to help preserve their independence. Last week, the State Department said any threat to these countries would be viewed in Washington "with the utmost gravity". It was noted that Russia had supplied arms to Syria... and that the Syrian government was making hostile gestures toward Iraq.

Secretary of State Dulles was told by his doctors today that he has made a "complete recovery" from his recent operation for intestinal cancer. A two-day check-up, they said, has shown Mr. Dulles "fit for full resumption of his normal duties."

~~It was announced today... in Augusta... that President Eisenhower will visit the drought-stricken areas of the Southwest around the middle of January. News Secretary Hagerty said the tour will help Mr. Eisenhower decide whether additional federal aid is required.~~

Democratic Chairman Butler today appointed a 20-man committee to help chart the course of the Democratic Party during the next four years. The action was in compliance with a resolution adopted last month by the executive body of the Democratic National Committee. Both former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson are members of the new advisory group.

In Clinton, Tennessee, federal marshals arrested 10 persons today, in connection with violence growing out of the racial integration of the Clinton High School. Yesterday, a white preacher was beaten up after escorting six Negro students to the school. Attorney General Brownell announced in Washington that such violence would not be tolerated... and that arrests would be made.

Edward R. Murrow: December 5, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The air is filled with talk of the need to repair our alliance with Britain and France. We are told that Secretary Dulles is going to the next NATO meeting ahead of his normal convalescence time so as to patch up the alliance.

It may not be appreciated that actually we have no alliance with Britain or France in a technical sense. If Mr. Dulles joins in a scheme to make prior consultation obligatory between NATO states that will create something formal that doesn't otherwise exist, and hasn't existed since the combined chiefs of staff were dissolved at the close of the war. President Eisenhower understood this when he refused to join in condemning the British and French invasion of Egypt as a breach of the alliance. He did call the invasion an error, but he said our friends had acted "within their manifest rights".

But if it is a mistake to speak of the alliance as though it were a binding contract, it is a far worse mistake to speak of it as though it didn't exist. An alliance is primarily a state of mind. It has to have conviction behind it if it is to have any real power. And the alliance with Britain and France, with Britain in particular, though only a state of mind, was one of the most important and real powers in world affairs. And it is this state of mind that now has to be restored.

Some opinion in this country - some of it within the State Department - holds that Britain and France shattered the alliance by going into Egypt without telling us about it, knowing we wouldn't approve. But opinion in Britain and France is that the alliance really collapsed before that event, and was shattered by the failure of Washington to do anything positive enough to guarantee the safety of Britain and France from the stranglehold of Nasser at Suez.

The debate now in progress in the House of Commons about Egyptian policy may, or may not, end in the replacement of Eden by another Conservative Prime Minister. But it will not end by improving relations with the United States, despite Foreign Secretary Lloyd's assurances about them. This will not only be due to what has just happened, but what is happening now.

The Daily Mirror, the largest circulation paper in Britain - and not a pro-government paper - complains today that the alliance is dead. "America's choice" it writes, "is to lead the Western Powers or to lose our allegiance." And it adds bitterly: "So far, all we have received is messages from a sickbed or a golf course."

British feelings for America aren't going to grow warmer now that the British government is bluntly admitting the high cost of the Egyptian policy. To start with, there will be a prolonged fuel shortage, which means inadequate heating for British homes. It also means the highest price for gasoline in the country's history, around eighty-one cents a gallon, and rationed at that. These may be no more than major inconveniences, but they are accompanied by foreboding symptoms in the British economy.

The House of Commons was shocked when the Chancellor of the Exchequeur announced that gold and dollar reserves dropped by two hundred and seventy-nine million last month, (the largest fall in a single month since January 1952.) [The total balance on hand is now below two billion dollars, less than at any time since December '52. [The news was greeted with low whistles of dismay in the crowded house.] And it had to listen to Mr. MacMillan predicted a possible increase in the income tax, which already starts with a base rate of forty-two-and-a-half percent. 3

Tightening the belt in Britain is not simply a show for others to watch. It affects the United States immediately. The British already have asked us to forego the payment of interest due this month on the British loan, which would cost us EIGHTY-TWO million. This they are entitled to do under terms of the loan, though it takes an act of Congress to put the waiver into effect. The Administration will ask Congress to concur, and Washington observers believe Congress will go along.

Mr. MacMillan has also asked the International Monetary Fund to be allowed to draw against the British quota of the fund, which can bring two hundred ~~XXXXXXXX~~ and thirty-six million dollars at once, and another three hundred and twenty-five million in the near future. He told the House that Britain has sold over half of its sixty million holdings of United States government short-term securities. American business men will be relieved to learn that he does not intend to sell the holdings in American long-term securities, which amount to three-quarters to a billion dollars. These are to be pledged against a loan Britain expects to make through an American government agency. Were these securities to be put on the market, Wall Street prices would sink, and our own economy would reflect the drop.

It remains to be seen how much the oil shortage will depress economies of all Western European countries. The winter looks anything but promising. If there is a widespread business decline this country will feel it too. So on both sides of the Atlantic, the alliance - as a state of mind - will be the harder to build up. But for that very reason the need for it will be correspondingly greater. Only Russia stands to gain if the Alliance is not restored.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The future of the United States and Britain is bound together. We cannot safely go separate ways. The ~~noted~~ British editor, Henry Hodson, expressed this well. "In this new world," he said, "as in the world that the H-bomb has destroyed, it remains true that divided we fall. And we have seen enough to know that this objective cannot be won by pious hopes."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Budapest radio said today that United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold cannot visit Hungary on December 16th that the date is "not suitable". Hammarskjold told the General Assembly last night that he was going to Hungary on December 16th to stay for three days. He had consulted with Hungarian Foreign Minister Horvath..and Horvath has agreed to this arrangement. His only explanation tonight was: "Apparently my government does not agree with me." The puppet government of Hungary is still talking about a visit by Hammarsjkold "at some later date."

American Ambassador Lodge has denounced the action as "an affront to the secretary general and to the whole civilized world." Last night, the Assembly approved a resulution giving Russia and Hungary until Friday to agree to let United Nations observers into Hungary. Lodge has asked Hammarskjold to appoint this team of observers "without delay."

There were new demonstrations in Budapest today in defiance of Soviet troops and tanks. A crowd of men, women and children in front of the American legation was dispersed by police who struck about them with their rifle butts. Some of the demonstrators were seized and presumably carried off to police headquarters. At least three other demonstrations were held. The Russian tanks were spat on. A t there are signs that tomorrow will see a new general strike.

Cardinal Mindszenty has disclosed, in an interview, that he was tortured by secret police 29 days and nights before he went on trial for treason in 1949. Mindszenty said he was stripped, beaten, and kept in a damp cell. The interview was granted to a correspondent for Look Magazine, at the American legation in Budapest, where the cardinal has been granted asylum.

The debate on Britain's Middle East policy opened today in the House of Commons. Speaking for the Eden government, Foreign Secretary Lloyd denied that Britain "incited" Israel to attack Egypt. And he challenged the Labour opposition to deny that the Anglo French action in Egypt has kept war from spreading through the Middle East. It was issuance of the Anglo-French ultimatum of October 30, he argued, that made President Nasser decide not to involve the other Arab states in military operations. Lloyd said another "solid advantage" resulting from the action, "is the existence in Egypt of a United Nations police force."

The Labour Party spokesman, Aneurin Bevan, accused the Conservative government of changing its reasons for going into Egypt "from day to day." Prime Minister Eden, he said, had declared it Britain's purpose to separate the belligerants and secure free passage through the canal. Bevan called Lloyd's claim that the Anglo French invasion has strengthened the United Nations absurd. "Hitler and Mussolini", he said, ("had they thought of it) might have claimed that they had made war on the world in order to call the United Nations into being."

Lloyd's speech today was an effort to save the Eden government. Motions of confidence and censure, are due for a vote tomorrow night. Eden is confronted with a revolt within his own party Its reported tonight that as many as 35 Conservative members of Parliament may abstain on the vote of confidence in his government. Normally, the Conservatives have a majority of 59 votes.

Today in Egypt, more than 2 thousand British soldiersfiled aboard a troop transport and sailed out of Prot Said harbor. And Israel withdrew and additional artillery battalion from the Siani Peninsula.

The Foreign minister of Iraq said today in Baghdad "The time is ripe for regaining Palestine." Israel was built on aggression, he said, "Therefore its removal from the Middle East is essential."

In Washington, the ambassadors of Iraq and three other Baghdad Pace countries conferred with Secretary Dulles today at the State Department. The other countries represented at the meeting were Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. Their spokesman, Mohammed Ali of Pakistan, said they received personal assurance from Dulles that the United States would "do everhthing possible" to help preserve their independence. Last week, the State Department said any threat to these countries would be viewed in Washington "with the utmost gravity". It was noted that Russia had supplied arms to Syria and that the Syrian government was making hostile gestures toward Irac.

Secretary of State Dulles was told by his doctors today that he has made a "complete recovery" from his recent operation for intestinal cancer. A two-day check-up, they said, has shown Mr. Dulles "fit for full resumption of his normal duties."

Democratic Chairman Butler today appointed a 20-man committee to help chart the course of the Democratic Party during the next four years. The action was in compliance with a resolution adopted last month by the executive body of the Democratic National Committee. Both former President Turman and Adlai Stevenson are members of the new advisory group.

In Clinton, Tennessee, federal marshals arrested 10 persons today, in connection with violence growing out of the racial integration of the Clinton High School. Yesterday, a white preacher was beaten up after escorting six Negro students to the school. Attorney General Brownell announced in Washington that such violence would not be tolerated and that arrests would be made.

The air is filled with talk of the need to repair our alliance with Britain and France. We are told that Secretary Dulles is going to the next NATO meeting ahead of his normal convalescence time so as to patch up the alliance.

It may not be appreciated that actually we have no alliance with Britain or France in a technical sense. If Mr. Dulls joins in a scheme to make prior consultation obligatory between NATO states, that will create something formal that doesn't otherwise exist, and hasn't existed since the combined chiefs of staff were dissolved at the close of the war. President Eisenhower understood this when he refused to join in condemning the British and French invasion of Egypt as a breach of the alliance. He did call the invasion an error, but he said our friends had acted "within their manifest rights."

But if it is a mistake to speak of the alliance as though it were a binding contract, it is a far worse mistake to speak of it as though it didn't exist. An alliance is primarily a state of mind. It has to have conviction behind it if it is to have any real power. And the alliance with Britain and France, with Britain in particular, though only a state of mind, was one of the most important and real powers in world affairs. it is this state of mind that now has to be restored.

Some opinion in this country - some of it within the State Department - holds that Britain and France shattered the alliance by going into Egypt without telling us about it, knowing we wouldn't approve. But opinion in Britain and France is that the alliance really collapsed before that event, and was shattered by the failure of Washington to do anything positive enough to guarantee the safety of Britain and France from the stranglehold of Nasser as Suez.

The debate now in progress in the House of Commons about Egyptian police may, or may not, end in the replacement of Eden by another Conservative Prime Minister. But it will not end by improving relations with the United States, despite Foreign Secretary Lloyd's assurances about them. This will not only be due to what has just ahppened, but what is happening now.

The Daily Mirror, the largest circulation paper in Britain - and not a pro-government paper - complains today that the alliance is dead. "America's choice" it writes, "is to lead the Western Powers or to lose our allegiance." And it adds bitterly: So far, all we have received is messages from a sickbed or a golf course."

British feelings for America aren't going to grow warmer now that the Britishgovernmentis bluntly admitting the high cost of the Egyptian policy. To start with, theee will be a prolonged fuel shortage, which means inadequate heating for British homes. It also means the highest price for gasoline in the country's history, around eighty-one cents a gallon, and rationed at that. These may be no more than major inconveniences, but they are accompaniedl by foreboding symptoms in the British economy.

The House of Commons was shocked when the Chancellor of the Exchequer nnounced that gold and dollar reserves dropped by two hundred and seventy nine million last month, the largest fall in a single month since January 1952. Mr. Mac Millan predicted a possible increase in the income tax, which already starts with a base rate of forty-two-and-a-half percent.

Tightening the belt in Britain is not simply a show for others to watch. It affects the United States immediately. The British already have asked us to forego the payment of interest due this month on the British loan, which would cost us eighty-two million. This they are entitled to do under terms of the loan, though it takes an act of Congress to put the waiver into effect. The Administration will ask Congress to concur, and Washington observers believe Congress will go along.

Mr. MacMillan has also asked the International Monetary Fund to be allowed to draw against the British quota of the fund, which can bring two hundred and thirty - six million dollars at once, and another three hundred and twenty-five million in the near future.

It remains to be seen how much the oil shortage will depress economies of all Western European countries. The winter looks anything but promising. If there is a widespread business decline this country will feel it too. So on both sides of the Atlantic, the alliance - as a state of mind - will be the harder to build up. But for that very reason the need for it will be correspondingly greater. Only Russia stands to gain if the Alliance is not restored.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, a word from George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The future of the United States and Britain is bound together. We cannot safely go separate ways. The British editor, Henry Hodson, expressed this well. "In this new world," he said, "as in the world that the H-bomb has destroyed, it remains true that divided we fall. And we have seen enough to know that this objective cannot be won by pious hopes."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 6, 1956

This is the news:

Prime Minister Eden won a vote of confidence tonight in the British House of Commons. / The vote was 312 to 260. Earlier, a Labour motion of censure was defeated, 327 to 260. In both instances, the issue was military intervention in Egypt. / (In a few minutes we'll have a direct report on this development from Howard K. Smith in London).

Eighteen hundred more British and French troops left Egypt today... in the withdrawal announced by their governments on Monday. And another troopship is being loaded for departure this week-end.

The United Nations commander... General Burns... flew today to El Arish, in the Sinai Peninsula, to confer with General Dayan, the Israeli Army commander. / Today's conference was confined to working out "technical details" for the advance of United Nations forces in the Sinai. Burns said the Israelis have agreed to furnish him with information on minefields in the area.

Vice President Nixon SAID in a New York speech tonight, that it is in the interest of the United States to grant financial aid to Britain "in this hour of difficulty." He predicted there will be strong bi-partisan support in Congress for granting such assistance. / Nixon said that Britain and France might have won a military victory in Egypt, if the United States had supported their action. "But," he said, "they... and we... would have lost the moral support of the whole world." / With regard to Hungary, Mr. Nixon expressed conviction that the events there will prove "a major turning point in the struggle to defeat world communism without war."

President Eisenhower today announced an emergency sea and air lift... to bring Hungarian refugees to this country "with the utmost possible speed." It is planned... when the program is in high gear... for U.S. Navy transports, and Air Force planes, to bring in 500 refugees a day. News Secretary Hagerty said it will be the "largest such operation in peacetime history." The first aircraft leaves for Germany tomorrow.

Today... in Budapest... there was a clash between two groups of demonstrators---one carrying the red flag of the Communist puppet government, the other, the new Hungarian flag of freedom. Soviet tanks came to the assistance of the Reds and began firing... sometimes over the heads of the anti-Communists, sometimes not. / At least two of them were killed. The workers council forestalled plans for a new general strike, on grounds it would only help the Kádar government. But a dozen factories were shut down, due to resentment over the arrest last night of 50 workers suspected of anti-Communist activity.

The United States today protested the presence ~~[illegible]~~ of Soviet tanks yesterday on the sidewalk in front of the American legation in Budapest. / The tanks had gone onto the sidewalk to break up an anti-Russian demonstration. The protest was made personally by Deputy Undersecretary of State Murphy to the Soviet charge d'affairs in Washington. Murphy said the incident was minor in itself, but one which nevertheless reflects "the deplorable situation in Hungary." / The lives of helpless civilians, he said, were endangered by the unwarranted Soviet action.

The United States has also protested Russia's interference yesterday with an American military convoy... traveling from Berlin to West Germany. The officer in charge of the convoy refused a Soviet request to inspect the cargo, and the convoy returned to Berlin. The State Department called the request "inconsistent with existing procedures." American Army authorities in Berlin say the Russians have agreed to cancel the new requirements.

The State Department said today that Iceland has dropped its demand for the withdrawal of American troops, based in Iceland. A department spokesman said it was conceded that "recent developments in world affairs" make it necessary to maintain defense forces in Iceland under the 1951 agreement. The spokesman said the phrase "recent developments" refers primarily to Russian intervention in Hungary. A joint committee is being set up between the United States and Iceland to deal with mutual problems as they arise.

Today... in Clinton, Tennessee... United States marshals completed a roundup of 16 persons accused to interfering with racial integration of the Clinton High School. The charge... specifically... is contempt of a court order for integration of the school. Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor said they will be brought to trial "within 10 days." A 17th person was arrested today for distributing segregationist literature in the federal courtroom... and SENTENCED TO 30 DAYS IN JAIL, ~~charged with criminal contempt.~~

Secretary of Welfare Folsom today urged Congress to work "harmoniously" to pass a federal aid bill for schools. "We are hopeful," he said, "that the complex problems of school integration will not undermine a construction program designed to benefit children of all races."

Here in New York, a Federal Court jury has convicted three hoodlums of conspiracy in the acid-blinding of labor columnist Victor Riesel. They face a possible maximum sentence of five years. Four other defendants... including racketeer Johnny Dio... are still to be tried. They are all charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice, in trying to intimidate Russel from testifying in a Grand Jury investigation.

At the Olympic Games, the Russian team has moved out in front of the Americans... in the unofficial scoring... by 132 points. The Russians earned 172 points today... mostly in gymnastics and wrestling...while the Americans picked up only 20 points. Thirty-six members of the Hungarian team are said to have decided definitely not to go home. Some of them hope to come to the United States.

For a first-hand report on what happened today in the British House of Commons, we switch now to my colleague Howard K. Smith in London.

Tape runs 5:05
Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in New York."

That was Howard K. Smith... summing up the two test votes today in the House of Commons. Eden remains in office at least for the time being.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

(pause) But first, here is ~~George Bryan.~~ Bernie Bennett

Word for Today

The political struggle in Britain recalls an incident reported by Lewis Carroll in "Through the Looking Glass." "You will observe the Rules of Battle, of course?" the White Knight remarked, putting on his helmet. "I always do," said the Red Knight, and they began banging away at each other with such fury that Alice got behind a tree to be out of the way of the blows.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - HOWARD K. SMITH

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

SMITH: As every schoolboy knows, politics in Britain and politics in France have always been different from one another in almost every respect, but tonight, all of a sudden, one important feature has arisen that is common to politics in both countries. In France, as is well known, Premier Guy Mollet has remained in power a long time, almost entirely because nobody else wanted the job. In Britain tonight, the Eden government won a vote of confidence from Parliament on its conduct of the Suez crisis and seems firmly in power once more, for just about the same reason.

When the moment of decision came, there was nobody around anxious to replace it. For five furious weeks here, the Labor opposition has rattled the rafters of the House of Commons with the fury of its attacks on the Conservative government on the Suez question. But yesterday and today, when there has been a two-day port mortem debate on that question, suddenly Labor began, in the words of one member of Parliament "pummeling the government with compliments," as when today's chief Labor speaker opened his speech with a warm expression of his, to quote his words, "personal affection for Prime Minister Eden, his opponent."

Instead of bitterness that has pervaded the atmosphere of politics here for weeks, an almost kindly humor has dominated this debate. As today, when one Labor opposition speaker said he did not like John Foster Dulles' 'brinkmanship' but he much preferred it to Sir Anthony Eden's 'over-the-brinkmanship'. The reference there, in case you've forgotten, was to a statement attributed to Mr. Dulles according to which the art of diplomacy was to come to the brink of war but not go over it. This kind of remark today in the Commons brought nice little waves of laughter, a big contrast to the hoots of derisi...

that had been standard in the House of Commons since the Suez invasion.

Altogether, the Labor Party's attack seemed aimed to tease rather than to pain the government. It was made pretty clear that the Labor opposition had no strong wish to come to power in the present deepening economic crisis. When Labor last came to power, it had to preside over the austerity of the post-war period. It does not, a friend said to me tonight, want to get a reputation with the people by coming now to preside over the austerity of the post-Suez period.

Over the past few weeks, Laborites on the left of Eden's government then have been angry because the government went into Suez. On the government's right, the substantial Imperial wing of the Conservative Party has been even more furious because the government is getting out of Suez. And it was there, on the right wing of politics that trouble was expected tonight. A hundred and twenty right wing members of the Conservative Party recently put their names to a highly critical motion. Many of those have indicated to reporters, like myself, that they would demand at least that Eden himself give up the Premiership as a price for their casting their votes tonight and saving the government. If just half of that number of 120 members of Parliament had ~~insisted~~ insisted on those terms, it would certainly have either forced Eden or the government out of power.

However, when the moment of decision came in the debate tonight, the right wing Tory rebels did not rebel after all, that is not in numbers that would embarrass the government. The reason was many things. One of the big reasons was that they too could see nobody around to replace Eden. In going away to Jamaica for this crucial three week's period, Eden forced his fellow Cabinet Ministers, even those like R. A. Butler, who were reputed to be cool to his policies, he forced them to defend and carry out those same policies. Thus, the whole

Cabinet is, so to speak, tarred with the same brush, and there's no moral alternative to the present Prime Minister. In the view of government spokesmen, tonight's vote of confidence closes off the British political crisis that resulted from the Suez venture. In the view of most independent observers and many partisan ones too on both sides here, that is probably a misreading. The crisis is not ended, but suspended. After a period for face-saving, it is likely to be revived.

Many Tories have made it clear that they will never forgive Eden for leaving the country when it was undertaking what is called "the most humiliating British retreat since the loss of the American Colonies." Time is now needed to save face and time is needed to seek out new leadership, probably from the ranks of the Junior Conservative Ministers. Names like Duncan Fanns (?), Churchill's son-in-law, barely known outside Britain are being mentioned in this connection.

The summary of the situation that I have found most people agree with is that which Laborite Aneurin Bevin ended his speech yesterday. Looking to the silent, brooding Conservative members of Parliament across from him, he said, "You will vote your confidence in thegovernment, but in your heart, you will feel that it does not deserve your confidence." Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - HOWARD K. SMITH

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

SMITH: As every schoolboy knows, politics in Britain and politics in France have always been different from one another in almost every respect, but tonight, all of a sudden, one important feature has arisen that is common to politics in both countries. In France, as is well known, Premier Guy Mollet has remained in power a long time, almost entirely because nobody else wanted the job. In Britain tonight, the Eden government won a vote of confidence from Parliament on its conduct of the Suez crisis and seems firmly in power once more, for just about the same reason.

When the moment of decision came, there was nobody around anxious to replace it. For five furious weeks here, the Labor opposition has rattled the rafters of the House of Commons with the fury of its attacks on the Conservative government on the Suez qqestion. But yesterday and today, when there has been a two-day port mortem debate on that question, suddenly Labor began, in the words of one member of Parliament "pummeling the government with compliments," as when today's chief Labor speaker opened his speech with a warm expression of his, to quote his words, "personal affection for Prime Minister Eden, his opponent."

Instead of bitterness that has pervaded the atmosphere of politics here for weeks, an almost kindly humor has dominated this debate. As today, when one Labor opposition speaker said he did not like John Foster Dulles' 'brinkmanship' but he much preferred it to Sir Anthony Eden's 'over-the-brinkmanship'. The reference there, in case you've forgotten, was to a statement attributed to Mr. Dulles according to which the art of diplomacy was to come to the brink of war but not go over it. This kind of remark today in the Commons brought nice little waves of laughter, a big contrast to the hoots of derision that had been standard in the House of Commons since the Suez invasion.

Altogether, the Labor Party's attack seemed aimed to tease rather than to pain the government. It was made pretty clear that the Labor opposition had no strong wish to come to power in the present deepening economic crisis. When Labor last came to power, it had to preside over the austerity of the post-war period. It does not, a friend said to me tonight, want to get a reputation with the people by coming now to preside over the austerity of the post-Suez period.

Over the past few weeks, Laborites on the left of Eden's government then have been angry because the government went into Suez. On the government's right, the substantial Imperial wing of the Conservative Party has been even more furious because the government is getting out of Suez. And it was there, on the right wing of politics that trouble was expected tonight. A hundred and twenty right wing members of the Conservative Party recently put their names to a highly critical motion. Many of those have indicated to reporters, like myself, that they would demand at least that Eden himself give up the Premiership as a price for their casting their votes tonight and saving the government. If just half of that number of 120 members of Parliament had ~~insisted~~ insisted on those terms, it would certainly have either forced Eden or the government out of power.

However, when the moment of decision came in the debate tonight, the right wing Tory rebels did not rebel after all, that is not in numbers that would embarrass the government. The reason was many things. One of the big reasons was that they too could see nobody around to replace Eden. In going away to Jamaica for this crucial three week's period, Eden forced his fellow Cabinet Ministers, even those like R. A. Butler, who were reputed to be cool to his policies, he forced them to defend and carry out those same policies. Thus, the whole

Cabinet is, so to speak, tarred with the same brush, and there's no moral alternative to the present Prime Minister. In the view of government spokesmen, tonight's vote of confidence closes off the British political crisis that resulted from the Suez venture. In the view of most independent observers and many partisan ones too on both sides here, that is probably a misreading. The crisis is not ended, but suspended. After a period for ~~fxxxx~~ face-saving, it is likely to be revived.

Many Tories have made it clear that they will never forgive Eden for leaving the country when it was undertaking what is called "the most humiliating British retreat since the loss of the American Colonies." Time is now needed to save face and time is needed to seek out new leadership, probably from the ranks of the Junior Conservative Ministers. Names like Duncan Fanns (?), Churchill's son-in-law, barely known outside Britain ~~xx~~ are being mentioned in this connection. ~~I~~

The summary of the situation that I have found most people agree with is that which Laborite Aneurin Bevin ended his speech yesterday. Looking to the silent, brooding Conservative members of ~~Rrx~~ Parliament across from him, he said, "You will vote your confidence in thegovernment, but in your heart, you will feel that it does not deserve your confidence." Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Prime Minister Eden won a vote of confidence tonight in the British House of Commons. The vote was 312 to 260. Earlier, a Labour motion of censure was defeated, 327 to 260. In both instances, the issue was military intervention in Egypt. (In a few minutes we'll have a direct report on this development from Howard K Smith in London).

Eighteen hundred more British and French troops left Egypt today in the withdrawal announced by their governments on Monday. And another troopship is being loaded for departure this week-end.

The United Nations commander..General Burns..flew today in El Arish, in the Sinai Peninsula, to confer with General Dayan, the Israeli Army commander. Today's conference was confined to working out "technical details" for the advance of United Nations forces in the Sinai. Burns said the Israelis have agreed to furnish him with information on minefields in the area.

Vice President Nixon said in a New York speech tonight that it is in the interest of the United States to grant financial aid to Britain "in this hour of difficulty." He predicted there will be strong bi-partisan support in Congress for granting such assistance. Nixon said that Britain and France might have won a military victory in Egypt, if the United States had supported their action. "But" he said, "They ..and we..would have lost the moral support of the whole world." With regard to Hungary, Mr. Nixon expressed conviction that the events there will prove "a major turning point in the struggle to defeat world communism without a war."

President Eisenhower today announced an emergency sea and air lift to bring Hungarian refugees to this country "with the utmost possible speed."

It is planned..when the program is in high gear..for U.S. Navy transports and air Force planes to bring in 500 refugees a day. News Secretary Hagerty said it will be the "largest such operation in peacetime history." The first aircraft leaves for Germany tomorrow.

Today in Budapest there was a clash between two groups of demonstrators, one carrying the red flag of the Communist puppet government the other, the new Hungarian flag of freedom. Soviet tanks came to the assistance of the Reds and began firing ..sometimes over the heads of the anti-Communists, sometimes not. At least two of them were killed. The workers' council forestalled plans for a new general strike, on grounds it would only help the Kadar government. But a dozen factories were shut down, due to resentment over the arrest last night of 50 workers suspected of anti-Communist activity.

The United States today protested the presence of Soviet tanks yesterday on the sidewalk in front of the American legation in Budapest. The tanks had gone onto the sidewalk to break up an anti-Russian demonstration. The protest was made personally by Depyty Undersecretary of State Murphy to the Soviet charge d'affairs in Washington. Murphy said the incident was minor in itself., but one which nevertheless reflects "the depolrable situation in Hungary." The lives of helpless civilians, he said, were endangered by the unwarrented Soviet action.

The United States has also protested Russia's interference yesterday with an American militar convoy traveling from Berlin to West Germany. The officer in charge of the convoy refused a Soviet request to inspect the cargo and the convoy returned to Berlin. The State Department called the request "inconsistent with existing procedures." American Army authorities in Berlin say the Russians have agreed to cancel the new requirements.

The State Department said today that Iceland has dropped its demand for the withdrawal of American troops, based in Iceland. A department spokesman said was conceded that "recent developments in world affairs" make it necessary to maintain defense forces in Iceland under the 1951 agreement. The spokesman said the phrase "recent developments" refers primarily to Russian intervention in Hungary. A joint committee is being set up between the United States and Iceland to deal with mutual problems as they arise.

Today, in Clinton, Tennessee, United States marshals completed a roundup of 16 persons accused to interfering with racial integration of the Clinton High School. The charge, specifically, is contempt of a court order for integration of the school. Federal Judge Robert L. Taylor said they will be brought to trial "within 10 days." A 17th person was arrested today for distributing segregationist literature in the federal courtroom and sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom today urged Congress to work "harmoniously" to pass a federal aid bill for schools. "We are hopeful," he said, "that the complex problems of school integration will not undermine a construction program designed to benefit children of all races."

Here in New York, a Federal Court jury has convicted three hoodlums of conspiracy in the acid-blinding of labor columnist Victor Riesel. They face a possible maximum sentence of five years. Four other defendants, including racketeer Johnny Dio , are still to be tried. They are all charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice, in trying to intimidate Reisel from testifying in a Grand Jury investigation.

At the Olympic Games, the Russian team has moved out in front of the Americans..in the unofficial scoring by 132 points. The Russians earned 172 points today , mostly in gymnastics and wrestling while the Americas picked up only 20 points. Thirty-six members of the Hungarian team are said to have decided definitely not to go home. Some of them hope to come to the United States.

For a first hand report on what happened today in the British House of Commons, we switch now to my colleague Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: As every schoolboy knows, politics in Britain and politics in France have always been different from one another in almost every respect, but tonight, all of a sudden, one important feature has arisen that is common to politics in both countries. In France, as is well known, Premier Guy Mollet has remained in power a long time, almost entirely because nobody else wanted the job. In Britain tonight, the Eden government won a vote of confidence from Parliament on its conduct of the Suez crisis and seems firmly in power once more, for just about the same reason.

When the moment of decision came, where was nobody around anxious to replace it. For five fu ious weeks here, the Labor opposition has rattled the rafters of the House of Commons with the fury of its attacks on the Conservative government on the Suez question. But yesterday and today, when there has been a two-day post mortem debate on that question, suddenly Labor began, in the words of one member of Palriament "pummeling the government with compliments", as when today's chief Labor speaker opened his speech with a warm expression of his, to quote his words, "personal affection for Prime Minister den, his opponent."

Instead of bitterness that has pervaded the atmosphere of politics here for weeks, an almost kindly humor has dominated this debate. As today, when one Labor opposition speaker said he did not like John Foster Dulles' 'brinkmanship'. The reference there, in case you've forgotten, was to a statement attributed to Mr. Dulles according to which the art of diplomacy was to come to the brink of war but not go over it. This kind of remark today in the Commons brought nice little waves of laughter, a big contrast from the hoots of derision that had been standard in the house of Commons since the Suez invasion.

Altogether, the Labor Party's attack seemed aimed to tease rather than to pain the government. Is was made pretty clear that the Labor opposition had no strong wish to come to power in the present deepening economic crisis. When Labor last came to power, it has to preside over the austerity of the post-war period. It does not, a friend said to me tonight, want to get a reputation with the people by coming now to preside over the austerity of the post-Suez period.

Over the past few weeks, Laborites on the left of Eden's government then have been angry because the government went into Suez. On the government's right, the substantial Imperial wing of the Conservative Party has been even more furious because the government is getting out of Suez. And it was there, on the right wing of politics, that trouble was expected tonight. A hundred and twenty right wing members of the Conservative Party recently put their names to a highly critical motion. Many of these have indicated to reporters, like myself, that they would dmeand at least that Eden himself give up the Premiership as a price for their casting their votes tonight and saving the government. If just half of that number of 120 members of Parliament had insisted on those terms, it would certainly have either forced Eden or the government out of power.

However, when the moment of decision came in the debate tonight, the right wing Tory rebels did not rebel after all, that is not in numbers that would embarrass the government. The reason was many things. One of the big reasons was that they too could see nobody around to replace Eden. In going away to Jamaica for this crucial three week's period, Eden forced his fellow Cabinet ministers, even those like R. A. Butler, who were reputed to be cool to his policies, he forced them to defend and carry out those same policies. Thus, the whole Cabinet is, so to speak, tarred with the same brush, and there's no moral alternative to the present Prime Minister. In the view of government spokesmen, tonight's vote of confidence closes off the British political crisis that resulted from the Suez venture. In the view of most independent observers and many partisan ones too on both sides here, that is probably a misreading. The crisis is not ended, but suspended. After a period of face-saving, it is likely to be revived.

Many Tories have made it clear that they will never forgive Eden for leaving the country when it was undertaking what is called "the most humiliating British retreat since the loss of the American Colonies." Time is now needed to save face and time is needed to seek out new leadership, probably from the ranks of the Junior Conseaviatve Ministers. Names like Duncan Fanns (?) , Churchill's son-in-law, barely known outside Britain are being mentioned in this connection.

The summary of the situation that I have found most people agree with is that which Laborite Aneurin Bevan ended his speech yesterday. Looking to the silent, brooding Conservative members of Paliament across from him, he said, "You will vote your confidence in the government, but in your heart, you will feel that it does not deserve your confidence." Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Howard K. Smith, summing up the two test votes today in the House of Commons. Eden remains in office, at least for the time being.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Lord for Today. But first, here is Bernie Bennet.

BENNET:

MURROW: The political struggle in Britain recalls an incident reported by Lewis Carroll in "Through the Looking Glass." "You will observe the rules of battle, of course?" the White Knight remarked, putting on his helmet. "I always do," siad the Red Knight, and they began banging away at each other with such fury that Alice got behind a tree to be out of the way of the blows. Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Dec. 7, 1956

This is the news:

The United States Treasury says it will borrow one billion dollars, in order to meet its financial obligations in the next few months. A major reason for the move is Britain's request for dollar aid, due to the closing of the Suez Canal. Because of its economic crisis, Britain has asked the United States to waive the interest due THIS MONTH on its postwar loan. The British also plan to draw on the International Monetary Fund, for perhaps as much as 500-million dollars. The United States will have to make up most---if not all---of this amount. The Treasury will borrow the billion dollars by offering investors a series of "bills". Corporations can buy the bills, starting next Wednesday, and then use them in payment of income taxes, due on March 15th. Rate of interest will depend on the bidding. This borrowing, on a short-term basis, will push the federal debt above 277-billion dollars... close to the legal ceiling set by Congress.

There were reports today of a major review of Administration policy which might lead to a long-range program of economic aid to Western Europe. (Vice President Nixon spoke last night of helping other countries solve their economic problems.) There is tonight, however, no evidence that such a full-scale review has yet begun.

Secretary of Defense Wilson conferred in Augusta, Georgia, today with President Eisenhower on the military budget for the next fiscal year. Wilson told reporters afterwards that "it certainly looks" at the moment as though defense spending will have to be increased. A reporter asked if he was shooting at a figure in the neighborhood of 38-billion dollars. Mr. Wilson refused to be pinned down. "I am shooting," he said, "at getting a good job done for the country." He said he expects no "substantial" change in the strength of the armed forces.

Tomorrow, Wilson will go to Paris... to attend next week's NATO Council meeting. So, of course, will Secretary of State Dulles. (In a few minutes, we will have an interview with Lord Ismay, the secretary-general of NATO, in which he discusses the prospects for next week's meeting with my colleague, David Schoenbrun).

Today in Paris, French sources said the United States has agreed "in principle" to a Big Three meeting of heads of state. All that remains, they say, is for President Eisenhower to set the time and place.

The United Nations General Assembly today elected the Philippines to a one-year term on the Security Council. Russia supported the candidacy of Czechoslovakia, despite its agreement... a year ago... that the Philippines would succeed Yugoslavia in the council seat. Yugoslavia's term expires the end of this month. The vote was, the Philippines 51, Czechoslovakia 20. Only one ballot was required.

Last Tuesday, the General Assembly passed a resolution giving the puppet government of Hungary until midnight tonight to agree to allow United Nations observers into the country. So far, the resolution has been ignored. And the United States, and 17 other countries, conferred today on possible next steps. One proposal under discussion, calls for expulsion of the present Hungarian delegation. The delegation denied today that the Hungarian foreign minister... Imre Horvath... had sought to deceive Secretary General Hammarskjold. On Wednesday, Horvath led Hammarskjold to believe he could visit Budapest on December 16th. Later, the Hungarian government said this date was "not suitable"... and that Hammarskjold should not make the trip.

In Budapest today, the central workers council told the puppet government to end the wave of arrests... or assume responsibility for new violence. The warning was in the form of a proclamation. "If the arrests continue," it said, "the workers will turn against the government for good... and the end will be a general strike, bloodshed, and a new national tragedy." No reply yet from the Kádar government.

The government of Poland announced tonight that it has settled many of its differences with the Catholic Church. The Warsaw government says that... under a new set of principles... the children of Poland will have full freedom to receive religious instruction in state schools. (The settlement reportedly calls for complete religious tolerance.)

Now... for the interview we spoke of between Lord Ismay, secretary general of NATO, and David Schoenbrun... we switch to Paris. The first voice you hear will be that of Schoenbrun putting the first question.

(Tape runs 6:25
Ends on cue :"---at your headquarters."

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, interviewing Lord Ismay, secretary general of NATO, on the eve of next week's NATO meeting.

George Bryan

The United States will seek at this next NATO meeting to mend some international fences... for we have realized again our need for allies. It was on this subject of inter-dependence that Stephen Vincent Benet once said, "If our brothers are oppressed, we are oppressed. If they hunger, we hunger. If their freedom is taken away, our freedom is not secure."

Goodnight and good luck!

INTERVIEW BETWEEN DAVID SCHOENBRUN AND LORD ISMAY

SCHOENBRUN: Lord Ismay, could you tell us what the principal business of this forthcoming NATO meeting will be?

ISMAY: Well, there's a most awful lot to be done. It's the most important meeting that we've had since Lisbon in '52.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, sir, there's been a lot of talk frankly that the Alliance in the last few weeks has been practically falling apart. Is that what you mean by the most important meeting?

ISMAY: I wouldn't say falling apart. I say there's been a very deep rift in it - the West - that I've ever known, but it certainly is the business of that meeting to heal the wounds, to try and take steps to insure they - that sort of thing doesn't happen again and in every way to strengthen the Alliance in the political and economic fields.

SCHOENBRUN: In what specific way do you hope to go about it in this meeting?

ISMAY: Well, as you know, there's the report of the three Ministers, which was set up by the Council last April or May --

SCHOENBRUN: You mean, sir, The Three Wise Men?

ISMAY; The Three Wise Men, they're called. Italy, Mr. Martino, Canada - Mr. Pearson, and Norway - Mr. Lange. They were set up by the Council to advise how the same sort of cooperation could be achieved in the political and economic fields as already exists in the military field. Their report is ready and it will be taken by Ministers as almost the first item on the agenda.

SCHOENBRUN: You've seen that report, I assume, sir?

ISMAY: I have.

SCHOENBRUN: I know you probably can't make it public this early, but do you feel satisfied that real progress can be made in these fields?

ISMAY: It all depends on governments. If governments are prepared to prove their sovereignty, to a great extent that they have in the past, if they're really prepared to consult each other on all matters that affect the foreign policy of the Alliance, whether they occur outside or inside the NATO area, then that would be the most extraordinary advance in our history.

SCHOENBRUN: [redacted] you correctly, Lord Ismay, what you are saying, and I suppose [redacted] general, by pooling [redacted] of sovereignty, you mean that [redacted] ought to be prepared to give up some measure of their sovereignty [redacted]

ISMAY: [redacted] when I say pooling sovereignty I mean [redacted] this: that supposing there're [redacted] fifteen members sitting around the table and eleven of them think one way and four the other. You cannot say to those four - you've lost this by [redacted] majority vote - but what this four can say is - to their eleven friends - we think you're wrong. On the other hand, in the interest of sovereignty I think we're prepared to come along with you. That is what I call "pooling your sovereignty".

SCHOENBRUN: [redacted] Do you have any hopes that something like this may be ahead for the Atlantic community?

ISMAY: I feel that the events of the last two months have been so serious they've given such a warning, that it is not unreasonable to hope that in time - in time we will get much nearer that combination of sovereignty than we have in the past.

SCHOENBRUN: Sir, you've been talking about events in the past few months. There have been two groups of events, of course. One - the rift among the allies on their Middle Eastern policy and the other, of course, the actions of the Soviets in Hungary and behind the Iron Curtain. What comment do you have as Sec. Gen. of NATO on these Russian events, and most particularly, sir, Moscow's proposal that you should scrap the NATO Alliance and they will scrap their Warsaw Pact?

SMAY: Well, on the first point: Hungary - I would say that it has been a clear proof that their so-called new look, the good will visits, the smooth words, the smiles, the talk of co-existance is all just a sham; and they've come out in their true colors. They have shown that they're still desirous of world domination, determined to have it. They have shown that there is no outrage against the laws of God or man from which they would shrink. And on the second POINT— [redacted]

SCHOENBRUN: [redacted]

ISMAY: [redacted] there is no similarity between the two pacts. NATO is a pact voluntarily entered into by 15 like-minded people, all retaining their sovereignties who have pledged themselves to maintain and increase their individual and collective capacity towards aggression. The Warsaw Pact isn't a pact at all. It's just a sham. It is one master, Soviet Russia, and several eight (?) slaves, euphemistically called satellites. They have no resemblance and to talk of bartering one against the other appears to be ? major nonsense.

SCHOENBRUN: Does that mean, sir, that there will be no consideration or discussion of general European security possibilities?

ISMAY; Oh, I wouldn't say, that. I'm sure there will be such discussion and they're going to be held in a very private way.

H

Hitherto there's always been rather too big a - I won't say always - but there's often been far too big an attendance at these meetings for really frank discussions. But this time, Prime Ministers are going to meet practically alone so as to be able to take their hair down and talk to each other completely freely.

SCHOENBRUN: If I understand you correctly, sir, then you are not closing the door on any exploration that could be made of European security or Russian withdrawal on reasonable terms.

ISMAY: I would never close the door against that. In fact, if it could be brought about in any way on which one could rely, it would be like waking up from a bad nightmare.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, thank you so much, Lord Ismay, for having talked to us today. You said some very exciting things. I wish you luck on your new meeting and thanks for letting us come here to the Palais de Chaillot at your headquarters.

[illegible] Ed's going to be delighted with this. You must be say something to him. You sure he'd-

ISMAY: Yes, I would.

SCHOENBRUN: like to hear directly from you.

ISMAY: Hello, Ed. I hear this is going over to you. I wish we could do another piece together. When are you coming over this way? Far too long since you've been. I can't get over there - there's too much something, something work. Good luck, Ed.

SCHOENBRUN: Ed, we've got a message for you, too. Your question to Lord Ismay, as the former Sec. of State for Commonwealth Relations -- I'm afraid I left that question out. Lord Ismay was giving us what I felt was so exciting and at the same time [illegible] discussion of very great problems that I would not allow you, Ed. Murrow, to use your provincial ~~Brxxx~~ Britishism to come in with Commonwealth questions on at such an important moment. (laughter) But right we'll be there [illegible] Cooper.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States Treasury says it will borrow one billion dollars in order to meet its financial obligations in the newt few months.

A major reason for the move is Britain's request for dollar aid, due to the closing of the Suez Canal. Because of its economic crisis, Britain has asked the United States to waive the interest due this month on its post war loan. The British also plan to draw on the International Monetary Fund for perhaps as much as 500-million dollars. The United States will have to make up most of -- if not all--of this amount. The Treasury will borrow the billion dollars by offering investors a series of "bills." Corporations can buy the bills, starting next Wednesday, and then use them in payment of income taxes, due on March 15th. Rate of interest will depend on the bidding. This borrowing on a short-term basis will push the federal debt above 277-billion dollars, close to the legal ceiling set by Congress.

There were reports today of a major review of Administration policy which might lead to a long-range program of economic aid to Western Europe. Vice President Nixon spoke last night of helping other countries solve their economic problems. There is tonight, however, no evidence that such a full-scale review has yet begun.

Secretary of Defense Wilson conferred in Augusta, Georgia, today with President Eisenhower on the military budget for the next fiscal year. Wilson told reporters afterwards that "it certainly looks" at the moment as though defense spending will have to be increased. A reporter asked if he was shooting at a figure in the nieghborhood of 38-billion dollars. Mr. Wilson refused to be pinned down."I am shooting", he said, "at getting a good job done for the country." He said he expects no "substantial" change in the strength of the armed forces.

Tomorrow, Wilson will go to Paris to attend next week's NATO council meeting. So, of course, will Secretary of State Dulles. (In a few minutes, we will have an interview with Lord Ismay, the secretary general of NATO, in which he discusses the prospects for next week's meeting with my colleague, David Schoenbrun.)

Today in Paris, French sources said the United States has agreed "in principle" to a Big Three meeting of heads of state. All that remains, they say, is for President Eisenhower to set the time and place.

The United Nations General Assembly today elected the Philippines to a one-year term on the Security Council. Russia supported the candidacy of Czechoslovakia, despite its agreement a year ago that the Philippines would succeed Yugoslavia in the council seat. Yugoslavia's term expires the end of this month. The vote was the Philippines 51, Czechoslovakia 20. Only one ballot was required.

Last Tuesday, the General Assembly passed a resolution giving the puppet government of Hungary until midnight tonight to agree to allow United Nations observers into the country. So far, the resolution has been ingored. And the United States and 17 other countries conferred today on possible next steps. One proposal under discussion calls for expulsion of the present Hungarian delegation. The delegation denied today that the Hungarian foreign minister .. Imre Horvath..had sought to deceive SecretaryGeneral Hammarskjold. On Wednesday, Horvath let Hammarskjold to believe he could visit Budapest on December 16th. Later, the Hungarian government said this date was "not suitable" and that Hammarskjold should not make the trip.

In Budapest today, the central workers council told the puppet government to end the wave of arrests..or assume responsibility for new violence. The warning was in the form of a proclamation. "If the arrests continue", it said, "the workers will turn against the government for good and the end will be a general strike, bloodshed, and a new national tragedy." No reply yet from the Kadar government.

The government of Poland announced tonight that it has settled many of its differences with the Catholic Church. The Warsaw government says that under a new set of principles, the children of Poland will have full freedom to receive religious instruction in state schools. The settlement report -- edly calls for complete religious tolerance.

Now for the interview we spoke of between Lord Ismay, secretary general of NATO and David Schoenbrun, we switch to Paris. The first voice you hear will be that of Schoenbrun putting the first question.

SCHOENBRUN: Lord Ismay, could you tell us what the principal business of this forthcoming NATO meeting will be?

ISMAY: Well, there's a most awful lot to be done. It's the most important meeting that we've had since Lisbon in '52.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, sir, there's been a lot of talk frankly that the Alliance in the last few weeks has been practically falling apart. Is that what you meen by the most important meeting?

ISMAY: I wouldn't say falling apart. I say there's been a very deep rift in it - the West - that I've ever known, but it certainly is the business of that meeting to heal the wounds, to try and take steps to insure they - that sort of thing doesn't happen again and in every way to strengthen the alliance in the political and economic fields.

SCHOENBRUN: In what specific way do you hope to go about it is this - meeting?

ISMAY: Well, as you know, there's the report of the three Ministers, which was set up by the Council last April or May--

SCHOENBRUN: You mean, sir the Three Wise Men?

ISMAY: The Three Wise Men, they're called. Italy, Mr. Martina, Canada, Mr. Pearson, and Norway - Mr. Langer. They were set up by the Council to advise how the same sort of cooperation could be achieved in the political and economic fields as already exists in the military field. Their report is ready and it will be taken by Ministers as almost the first item on the agenda.

SCHOENBRUN: You've seen that report, I assume, sir?

ISMAY: I have

SCHOENBRUN: I know you probably can't make it public this early, but do you feel satisfied that real progress can be made in these fields.?

ISMAY: It all depends of governments. If governments are prepared to pool their sovereignty, to a great extent that they have in the past, if they're really prepared to consult each other on all matters that affect the foreign policy of the Alliance, whether they occur outside or inside the NATO area, then that would be the most extraordinary advance in our history. When I say pooling of sovereignty I mean this: that supposing there were fifteen members sitting around the table and eleven of them think one way and four the other. You ca not say to those four - you've lost t is by majority vote - but what this four can say is - to their eleven friends - we think you're wrong. On the other hand in the interest of sovereignty I think we're prepared do come along with you. That is what I call "pooling your sovereignty."

SCHOENBRUN Do you have any hopes that something like this may ahead for the Atlantic community?

ISMAY: I feel that the events of the last two months have been so serious they've given such a warning, that it is not unreasonable to hope that in time - in time we will get much nearer that combination of severeignty than we have in the past.

SCHOENBRUN: Sir, you've been talking about events in the past few months. There have been two groups of events, of course . One - the rift among the allies on their Middle Eastern policy and the other, of course, the actions of the Soviets in Hungary and behind the Iron Curtain. What comment do you have as Secretary General of NATO on these Russian events, and most particularly, sir, Moscow's proposal that you should scrap the NATO alliance and they will scrap the Warsaw Pact?

ISMAY Well, on the first point: Hungary - I would say that it has been a clear proof that their so-called new look, the good will visits, the smooth words, the smiles, the talk of co-existence is all just a sham; and they've come out in their true colors. They have shown that they're still desirous of world domination, determined to have it. They have shown that there is no outrage against the laws of God or man from which they would shrink. And on the second point. There is no similarity between the two pacts. NATO is a pact voluntarily entered into by 15 like-minded people, all retaining their sovereignties who have pledged themselves to maintain and increase their individual and collective capacity towards aggression. The Warsaw Pact isn't a pact at all. It's just a sham. It is one master, Soviet Russia, and several eight(?) slaves, euplemistically called satellites. They have no resemblance and to talk of bartering one against the other appears to me major nonsense.

SCHOENBRUN: Does that mean, sir, that there will be no consideration of discussion of general European security possibilities?

ISMAY: Oh, I wouldn't say that. I'm surethere will be such discussion and they're going to be held in a very private way. Hitherto there's always been rather too big a - I won't say always - but there's often been far too big an attendance at these meetings for really frank discussions. But this time, Prime Ministers are going to meet practically alone so as to be able to take their hair down and talk to each other completely freely.

SCHOENBRUN: If I understand you correctly, sir, then you are not closing the door on any exploration that could be made of European security or Russian withdrawal on reasonable terms.

ISMAY: I would never close the door against that. In fact, if it could be brought about in any way on which one could rely, it would be like waking up from a bad nightmare.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, thank you so much, Lord Ismay, for having talked to us today. You said some very exciting things. I wish you luck on your new meeting and thanks for letting us come here to the Palais de Chaillot at your headquarters.

MURROW: That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, interviewing Lord Ismay, secretary general of NATO, on the eve of next week's NATO meeting.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, her is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The United States will seek at this next NATO meeting, to mend some international fences for we have realized again our need for allies. It was on this subject of inter-dependence that Setphen Vincent Benet once said, "If our brothers are oppressed, we are oppressed. If they hunger, we hunger. If their freedom is taken away, our freedom is not secure.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 10, 1956

This is the news:

A two-day general strike was scheduled to start in Hungary less than two hours ago. / There is no word, so far, on the effectiveness of the strike. But sporadic fighting is reported. / One report... which is unconfirmed... tells of a pitched battle with Soviet troops in the hills, north of Budapest. / According to another report, 80 demonstrators have been massacred in a mining community in northern Hungary. This incident... we are told... took place on Saturday. / The Kádar government has proclaimed martial law. / In Budapest, Russian troops made a house-to-house search today for hidden arms... a "crime" punishable by death. Pedestrians were stopped and searched on the streets. / Reports reaching Yugoslavia say Budapest has been encircled again by Soviet tanks, though the city itself is described as "relatively calm". During most of the day, telephone communications with Hungary were cut off. And... tonight... the United States protested the interruption of telegraphic facilities between the State Department and the American Legation in Budapest. "The United States," the note says, "expects that the Hungarian authorities will prevent such interruptions in the future."

Here in New York today, the Hungarian question was again debated in the United Nations General Assembly. Sixteen countries have now declared their support of the American resolution, condemning Russia for aggression in Hungary. Late today, India submitted a separate resolution. This motion urges... as a last resort... that Secretary General Hammarskjold be sent to Moscow, to engage in direct negotiations for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. Tomorrow, the debate will continue.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Dulles conferred separately with French Foreign Minister Pineau, and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd... on the eve of the NATO Council meeting that opens tomorrow. Lloyd called his meeting with Dulles "highly satisfactory". Dulles' meeting with Pineau is said to have been both cordial and constructive. But no formal announcement of the outcome of these preliminary talks was made. Mr. Dulles is reported... unofficially... to have agreed on the need for giving top priority to the opening of the Suez Canal.

A British patrol was ambushed in Port Said today by the Egyptian underground. One soldier was wounded. And Egypt assured General Burns, commander of the United Nations police force, there would be no repetition of the incident.

In French politics today, the Mollet government won a series of six votes of confidence in its budget proposals. Mollet has now been in power for 10 months.

Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada will fly to Augusta, Georgia, tomorrow to see President Eisenhower. St. Laurent has been vacationing in Florida. News Secretary Hagerty says the visit will be "entirely social".

The Chinese Communist premier... Chou En-Lai... arrived in Burma today for a state visit. During his stay, Chou will confer with Burmese leaders on the border dispute between Burma and Red China.

The International Monetary Fund announced tonight that a loan has been arranged whereby Britain will obtain 1-billion, 300-million dollars to help it through its economic crisis.

A program of low-interest loans for under-developed countries was recommended today by Christian Sonne, chairman of the National Planning Association. Sonne said... in a New York speech... that the "spread" between American living standards and those of most other countries is "dangerous large". (The loans would be used to step up production in those countries). Poverty may be abolished in the United States in the next 20 years, he said, "if peace is maintained and we use our resources wisely." The National Planning Association is a private, non-profit organization, made up of representatives of the professions, industry and labor.

A Treasury Department spokesman told Congress today he sees "no basis" for a tax cut at this time. The testimony was given before a House committee by Dan Throop Smith, special adviser to Secretary Humphrey on tax policy. He estimated total revenue requirements for the coming year to be in the neighborhood of 70-billion dollars... indicating an increase in federal spending of about 4-billion dollars.

The government reported today that unemployment rose "sharply" in November. Half a million more persons were looking for work than in October.

But weekly earnings of factory workers averaged 82 dollars and 42 cents, a new record high.

The Supreme Court ruled today that a labor union may not be deprived of benefits under the Taft-Hartley Law when an officer of the union files a false non-Communist oath. The court held... in a unanimous decision... that only the guilty officer can be punished. The decision was returned in test cases involving two unions---the International Fur and Leather Workers and the International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Eight Negro students returned to the integrated high school in Clinton, Tennessee today without incident. The school had been closed since last Tuesday, when a white minister who accompanied several Negro students to their classes was attacked. In Knoxville today, a federal judge set January 28th for the trial of 16 white men and women charged with interfering with integration of the Clinton school. Interference with orderly integration of the school had been prohibited by a federal injunction.

In Washington, Attorney General Brownell conferred today with the federal prosecutors of 14 southern states... primarily on measures for putting an end to segregation on intra-state buses and trains. Brownell said the government will work first for "voluntary compliance". He did not say what steps the government will take if voluntary compliance fails.

The missing Trans-Canada Airlines plane is presumed down "somewhere in British Columbia." The aircraft... with 62 persons aboard... disappeared last night in a snowstorm, while on a flight from Vancouver to Montreal. The last radio report from the pilot reported trouble in the No. 2 engine. ~~Military and civilian planes~~ the area without success.

Edward R. Murrow: December 10, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

With world attention focused on the violation of human rights in Hungary, the eighth anniversary of the Human Rights Declaration of the United Nations today is timely. President Eisenhower made eloquent use of it in his denunciation of Soviet conduct. But it needs to be borne in mind that the Declaration of Human Rights is rhetoric and not law. It never has been implemented, and the efforts to give it legal power in the United Nations have been successfully blocked by opposition in which the United States itself has taken part.

There is a tragic reason for using the available rhetoric in discussing the fate of Hungary. It is that the United Nations is paralyzed when it comes to doing anything in terms of law. The Soviet Union forbids it.

The Hungarian issue is first of all a legal one. The Russians are guilty of aggression. They are guilty according to their own definition of aggression. Aggression is a violation of the charter, not merely disregard of a U.N. resolution.

There is a danger that world opinion will slip into the error of thinking there is a difference between the aggression of Britain, France and Israel against Egypt and of the Soviet Union against Hungary. But both are legally in the same class. The difference between them is that in one case the United Nations induced the aggressors to stop fighting and withdraw their forces, and in the other the United Nations has been flouted.

A bulletin of the International Commission of Jurists sets forth the case that the Soviet Union is an aggressor in Hungary. Russia first defined aggression in a League of Nations disarmament conference in 1933. It re-introduced the definition in the United Nations in 1950 and expanded it in the United Nations in 1953. The definition leaves no possible misunderstanding of the nature of the Soviet action in Hungary.

The Soviet government calls it aggression if there "is an invasion by the armed forces of a state even without a declaration of war.... or the landing or leading of its land, sea or air forces inside the boundaries of another state without the permission of the latter.... or the violation of the condition of such permission, particularly as regards the length of their stay."

The definition goes on to say that a state may not justify sending its forces into another state because of internal conditions in that state, "as for example, any revolutionary or counter-revolutionary movement, civil war, disorders or strikes."

This is plain language and the Soviet Union has resorted to two arguments to save itself from admitting guilt under its own definition. One is that Russian troops were present in Hungary with Hungarian consent, the other is that the Hungarian government asked the help of these troops to preserve order. But both arguments are specious, as the International Jurists show. It is true that Russian troops were present in Hungary under the Warsaw Pact, and so with the consent of the Hungarian government. But the pact is a strictly limited covenant, and permits the use of the Russian forces only in common defense. The suppression of a people's uprising is not listed among the contingencies in which defense is involved. The use of the troops became an aggression the moment they were used for a purpose exceeding the Warsaw pact.

Then what about the Hungarian government's request for the help of the troops? The jurists' commission is not sure that a legitimate government made this request. It was announced at about the same time Premier Nagy took over, on October 24th. Nagy broadcast that he had not signed the appeal, and he at once began negotiations with the Soviet government for the withdrawal of the troops. He announced that their withdrawal had been agreed to for October 31st. Then on November 1st fresh Soviet troops invaded Hungary, and on November 3rd a final conference between Soviet and Hungarian representatives took place, from which some of the Hungarians never returned. They were seized. Nagy was overthrown and the puppet regime of Kadar was set up.

Even if the request for help from the Soviet troops had been made by a legitimate government, the unquestionably legitimate government of Premier Nagy withdrew the request, as it had every right to do. Thereafter, Soviet action in remaining and fighting in Hungary constituted aggression. And the result of this aggression was the overthrow of Nagy and the imposition of Kadar.

That is the legal position. The Soviet Union violated the charter and yet has kept the United Nations from doing anything about it. Whatever strength may have flowed to the United Nations by the compliance of Britain, France and Israel in regard to Egypt, cannot make up for the impotence of the United Nations in the face of the aggression against Hungary. Whenever we talk of American policy henceforth being tied to the United Nations, we need to be clear just what it means. So far it means our own acceptance of the double standard of legality and morality imposed by the Soviet Union. And it means our reliance on nothing stronger than rhetoric in dealing with the Soviet aggression.

Great Bazooka!

Word for Today

The resistance of the Hungarian people has won the admiration and sympathy of the whole world. Archibald MacLeish has made an observation on this, which we might all do well to remember. "We should not forget," he said, "in all the suffering and pain, that we owe the people of Hungary more than our pity. We owe them also pride and praise."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A two-day general strike was scheduled to start in Hungary less than two hours ago. There is no word, so far, on the effectiveness of the strike. But sporadic fighting is reported. One report ..which is unconfirmed..tells of a pitched battle with Soviet troops in the hills, north of Budapest. According to another report, 80 demonstrators have been massacred in a mining community in Northern Hungary. This incident, we are told, took place on Saturday. The Kadar government has proclaimed martial law. In Budapest, Russian troops made a house-to-house search today for hidden arms..a "crime" punishable by death. Pedestrians were stopped and searched on the streets =Reports reaching Yugoslavia say Budapest has been encircled again by Soviet tanks, though the city itself is described as "relatively calm." During most of the day, telephone communications with Hungary were cut off. And, tonight, the United States protested the interruption of telegraphic facilities between the State Department and the American Legation in Budapest. "The United States," the note says, "expects that the Hungarian authorities will prevent such interruptions in the future."

Here in New York today, the Hungarian question was again debated in the United Nations General Assembly. Sixteen countries have now declared their support of the American resolution condemning Russia for aggression in Hungary. Late today, India submitted a separate resolution. This motion urges..as a last resort..that Secretary General Hammarskjold be sent to Moscow to engage in direct negotiations for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. Tomorrow, the debate will continue.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Dulles conferred separately with French Foreign Minister Pineau and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd on the eve of the NATO Council meeting that opens tomorrow. Lloyd called his meeting with Dulles "highly saitsfactory." Dulles' meeting with Pineau is said to have been both cordial and constructive. But no formal announcement of the outcome of these preliminary talks was made. Mr. Dulles is reported unofficially to haveagreed on the need for giving top priority to the opening if the Suez Canal.

Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada will fly to Augusts, Georgia, tomorrow to see President Eisenhower. St. Laurent has been vacationing in Florida. News Secretary Hagerty says the visit will be "entirely social."

The International Monetary Fund announced tonight that a loan has been arranged whereby Britain will obatin 1-billion, 300-million dollars to help it through its economic crisis.

A Treasury Department spokesman told Congress today he seen "no basis" for a tax cut at this time. The testimony was given before a House committee by Dan Throop Smith, special adviser to Secretary Humphrey on tax policy. He estimated total revenue requirements for the coming year to be in the neighborhood of 70-billion dollars, indicating an increase in federal spending of about 4-billion dollars.

The government reported today that unemployment rose "sharply" in November. half a million more persons were looking for work than in October.

But weekly earnings of factory workers averaged 82 dollars and 42 cents, a newr record high.

The Supreme Court ruled today that a labor union may not be deprived of benefits under the Taft-Hartley Law when an officer of the union files and a false non-Communist oath. The court held ..in a unanimous decision..that only the guilty officer can be punished. The decision was returned in test cases involving two unions -- the International Fur and Leather Workers and the International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Eight Negro students returned to the integrated high school in Clinton, Tennessee today without incident. The school had been closed since last Tuesday, when a white minister who accompanied several Negro students to their classes was attacked. In Knoxville today, a federal Judge set January 28th for the trial of 16 white men and women charged with interfering with integration of the Clinton school. Interference with orderly integration of the school had been prohibited by a federal injunction.

In Washington, Attorney General Brownell conferred today with the federal prosecutors of 14 southern states primarily on measures for putting an end to segretation on intra-state buses and trains. Brownell said the government will work first for "voluntary compliance." He did not say what steps the government will take if voluntary compliance fails.

The missing Trans-Canada plane is prusumed down "somewhere in British Columbia." The aircraft..with 62 persons aboard..disappeared last night in a snowstorm, while on a flight from Vancouver to Montreal. Tha last radio report from the pilot reported trouble in the number 2 engine.

With world attention focused on the violation of human rights in Hungary, the eighth anniversary of the Human Righ s Declaration of the United Nations today is timely. President Eisenhower made eloquent use of it in his denunciation of Soviet conduct. But it needs to be born in mind that the Declaration of Human Rights is rhetoric and not law. It never has been implemented and the efforts to give it legal power in the United Nations have been successfully blocked by opposition in which the United States itself has taken part.

There is a tragic reason for using the available rhetoric in discussing the fate of Hungary. It is that the United Nations in paralyzed when it comes to doing anything in terms of law. The Soviet Union forbids it.

The Hungarian issue is first of all a legal one. The Russians are guilty of aggression. They are guilty according to their own definition of aggression. Aggression is a violation of the charter, not merely disregard of a U.N.

resolution.

There is a danger that world opinion will slip into the error of thinking there is a difference between the aggression of Britain, France and Israel against Egypt and of the Soviet Union against Hungary. But both are legally in the same class. The difference between them is that in one case the United Nations induced the aggressors to stop fighting and withdraw their forces, and in the other the United Nations has been flouted.

A bulletin of the International Commission of Jurists sets forth the case that the Soviet Union is an aggressor in Hungary. Russia first defined aggression in a League of Nations disarmament conference in 1933. It re-introduced the the definition in the United Nations in 1950 and expanded it in the United Nations in 1953. The definition leaves no possible misunderstanding of the nature of the Soviet action in Hungary.

The Soviet government calls it aggression if there "is an invasion by the armed forces of a state even without a declaration of war..or the landing or leading of its land, sea or air forces inside the boundaries of another state without the permission of the latter, or the violation of the condition of such permission, particularly as regards the length of their stay."

The definition goes on to say that a state may not justify sending its forces into another state because of internal conditions in that state, "as for example, any revolutionary or counter-revolutionary movememt, civil war, disorders or strikes."

This is plain language and the Soviet Union has resorted to two arguments to save itself from admitting guilt under its own definition. One is that Russian troops were present in Hungary with Hungarian consent, and the other is that the Hungarian government asked the help of these troops to preserve order. But both arguments are specious, as the International Jurists show. It is true that Russian troops were present in Hungary under the Warsaw Pact, and so with the consent of the Hungarian government. But the pact is a strictly limited covenant, and permits the use of the Russian forces only in common defense. The suppression of a people's uprising is not listed among the contingencies in which defense is involved The use of the troops became an aggression the moment they were used for a purpose exceeding the Warsaw pact.

Then what about the Hungarian gover ment's request for the help of the troops? The jurists' commission is not sure that a legitimate government made this request. It was announced at about the tame time Premier Nagy took over on October 24th. Nagy boradcast that he had not signed the appeal, and he at once began negotiations with the Soviet government for the withdrawal of the troops. He announced that their withdrawal had been agreed to for October 31st. Then on November 1st fresh troops invaded Hungary, and on November 3rd a final conference between Soviet and Hungarian representatives took place, from which some of the Hungarians never returned. They were seized Nagy was overthrown. and the puppet regime of Kadar was set up.

Even if the request for help from the Soviet troops had been made by a legitimate government, the unquestionably legitimate government of Premier Nagy withdrew the request, as it had every right to do. Thereafter, Soviet action in remaining and fighting in Hungary constituted aggression. And the result of this aggression was the overthrow of Nagy and the imposition of Kadar.

That is the legal position. The Soviet Union violated the charter and yet kas kept the nited Nations from doing anything about it. hatever strength may have flowed to the United Nations by the compliance of Britain, France and Israel in regard to gypt, cannot make p for the impotence or the United Nations in the face of the aggression against Hungary Whenever we talk of American policy henceforth being tied to the United Nations, we need to be clear just what it means. So far it means our own acceptance of the double standard legality and morality imposed by the Soviet Union. Andi it means our reliance or on nothing stronger than rhetoric in dealing with Soviet aggression.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN

MURROW: The resistance of the Hungarian people has won the admiration and sympathyof the whole world. Archibald MacLeish has made an observation on this which we might all do well to remember. "We should not forget," he said, "in all the suffering and pain, that we owe the people of Hungary more than our pity. We owe them also pride and praise."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Dec. 11, 1956

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles addressed the opening session of the NATO Council meeting today in Paris. / Dulles said the Communist system is disintegrating. / And the process, he said, can be speeded up if Western countries adhere strictly to the principles of the United Nations Charter and renounce force as an instrument of national policy. This was reference... however indirect... to the military intervention in Egypt by Britain and France. / Dulles added, however, that in complying with the cease-fire, the British and French set a "moral example" the Russians cannot match. Dulles said the trouble Russia is having in the satellite states may, in itself, present a danger---Soviet leaders may take risks jeopardizing the peace. And for that reason, he urged that NATO's military capabilities be unimpaired. He also referred to "pressures within Russia." But reporters... at the briefing session afterwards... were given no details.

→

The other speakers included French Foreign Minister Pineau and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. In explaining Anglo-French intervention in Egypt, they cited Egyptian provocation and Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Pineau urged a further coordination of policy among the 15 NATO countries. This afternoon, British and American leaders met behind closed doors. Foreign Secretary Lloyd said a reappraisal of British defense policy was discussed.

In Washington, the government today issued its master plan for the emergency "oil lift" to Europe. Routes were outlined and procedures set forth for handling an additional 850-thousand barrels of oil a day, to compensate for the closing of the Suez Canal. Companies that pool their resources will be exempted... temporarily... from anti-trust action.

Today... in Port Said... a British lieutenant was kidnapped by the Egyptian underground. The lieutenant aided in the arrest yesterday of seven Egyptian commandos. The underground said tonight that he is dead.

~~In Hungary, the chief 48 hour general strike against the puppet government has gone through its first day. All major factories were closed, and the only stores that were open were those that sold food. Hungarian police~~

A report from Paris tonight says that Britain and France are moving for a meeting with Egypt, to seek a settlement of the Suez dispute. According to this report... relayed by the Associated Press... United Nations Secretary Hammarskjold would sit in on the conference, possibly in Geneva. Britain and France are said to have indicated that they will accept something less that full international control of the canal.

In Hungary, the 48-hour general strike against the puppet government has gone through its first day. All major factories were closed. And the only stores that were open were those that sold food.

Hungarian police are reported to have fired into a crowd of demonstrators in one of the suburbs, but this report is unconfirmed. Another demonstration in downtown Budapest was broken up by police who laid about them with their rifle butts.

Radio Budapest announced that the Kádar government will confiscate the property of all persons who have fled from Hungary, unless they return by March 31st.

Here in New York, the Hungarian foreign minister... Imre Horvath... led his delegation out of the United Nations General Assembly, which has been debating the Hungarian question. Horvath claimed that the United Nations was interferring in the internal affairs of a sovereign state. Hungary, he said, will return to the assembly when it moves on to another question. The assembly has before it a resolution... sponsored by the United States... condemning Soviet aggression in Hungary.

A riot against Soviet domination took place today in the Polish port of Stettin. A crowd smashed the windows of the Russian consulate. Tonight, the Communist government of Poland apologized for the incident. And a late dispatch from Warsaw says "scores" of the rioters have been placed under arrest. Student Newspapers Suppressed ~~My colleague Richard C. [illegible] to~~

~~broadcast from Warsaw today, without success. Short-wave reception was excellent. Apparently the Polish authorities did not want him to broadcast.~~

The Russians are also confronted with unrest in Lithuania. The first secretary of the Lithuanian Communist Party is quoted as saying that "reactionaries" are becoming active in ~~Hungary~~ Lithuania... that "former anti-peoples parties, exploiting nationalist elements... have begun to raise their heads." The quotation is from a Lithuanian newspaper that appeared today in Moscow.

The United States protested to Czechoslovakia today over the stationing of extra police details outside the American embassy in Prague. The United States ~~said~~ called the police action "totally unwarranted".

The premier of Communist China... Chou En-lai... told a meeting of political leaders in Burma today that the border dispute between Red China and Burma can be settled "with justice". A big, newly established country like ~~Russia~~ Communist China, Chou said, is "apt to arouse suspicion." But he expressed confidence that the suspicions... in the case of Burma... will be allayed. Chou is in Burma on a 10-day state visit.

President Eisenhower was visited in Augusta, Georgia today by the Canadian prime minister, Louis St. Laurent. During the purely social visit, the president and prime minister played nine holes of golf. We are told that they ended up with identical scores.

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission today announced a program for stepping up nuclear power development in the United States. Under the proposed program, the commission would give private industry first opportunity to build the plants. But, if "acceptable proposals" are not made, the commission would... in Strauss' words... "take prompt and positive steps to build the reactors on its own initiative." Mr. Strauss also proposes that the government assume a greater share of the cost of research and development, as distinct from actual construction costs. ~~Both public and private programs for building reactors... for the generation of electricity... would be increased. Strauss presented his proposals before a meeting of the American Nuclear Society in Washington.~~

Edward R. Murrow: December 11, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

Last week the government of Iceland decided to allow American forces to continue to man the vital air and radar base which NATO maintains in that country. This morning President Eisenhower rejected the Tariff Commission's recommendation for an increase in the tariff on frozen fish fillets. These two facts happen to have a close relation. It may sound far-fetched to link American security with the price of fish. But Mr. Eisenhower's rejection of the tariff increase had a bearing on our being allowed to stay at the airbase in Iceland. The Iceland government knew the tariff decision was coming, before it announced that the Americans might stay on at that big air base.

Nothing could be further from the truth, however, than to believe that the tariff decision alone saved the vital base for us. It was at best a negative decision. By refraining from raising the tariff, we were ~~not~~ MERELY cutting down Iceland's exports to us. But this helped, and the Icelanders were grateful for it.

What actually saved the base for us was Soviet behavior in Hungary. This suddenly shocked Icelanders into realizing that the interlude of relaxed tensions after the death of Stalin was only temporary. Iceland had a coalition government with communist members, and it took seriously the peace propaganda of the new Khrushchev era. It thought Iceland was not in danger, as it had been in the Second World War, so it didn't need the air base for its own safety. The fate of Hungary woke up Icelanders from this pleasant dream. They are tolerant and a pacific people. But on the anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution last month, students pelted with eggs and tomatoes their fellow-Icelanders, who attended the reception in the Soviet Embassy. The reversal of the policy on the air base was due chiefly to the sudden dread of dangers ahead.

But to say this is not to eliminate fish fillets from the story. Iceland has to export to live, and 97 percent of its exports are fish. One reason Iceland came to trust the Soviet Union so completely, was the fact that Moscow began buying large quantities of Iceland fish. Soviet purchases rose from zero to thirty percent of the total supply by last July. Moscow had come into the market to fill a vacuum left by the British, who had imposed an embargo on Iceland fish imports. The British had been the biggest buyers, but they took offense when Iceland extended its coastal waters, in an attempt to protect fish breeding grounds. This shut out British trawlers, and the owners of the trawlers, who belong to a powerful trust or cartel, retaliated, by clamping on the embargo. It wasn't a government embargo, but as the cartel was a big contributor to Conservative party funds, the government somehow showed little interest in the far-away Icelanders. And this was the start of Soviet preoccupation with Iceland. The Russians didn't particularly need the fish, but they jumped at the chance to pry Iceland loose from NATO, and to get us excluded from the air base.

We must not think that since Iceland has changed its mind, and since we are not cutting down on our imports of Iceland fish, the situation is permanently redeemed. Iceland still lives from selling fish. And the Russians have upped their share of the export market from 30 percent last July to 35 percent last month. They are doing their best to offset the damage that Hungary has done to their interests in Iceland.

Here is a situation where we and our Allies should be able to muster even more interest in Iceland than the Russians. For one thing, the British might be induced to end the embargo on Iceland fish, for it is still in effect. Even better, NATO might be expanded, and given the economic functions, of which there has been so much talk. Then it could sponsor a program for selling frozen fillets from Iceland in Africa, where a market has already been opened with great promise. Here the United States could be chief instigator and financier, that is, if it is as interested and alert as the Soviet Union.

We need to bear in mind that when Iceland was losing its foreign trade by the action of its allies, the Soviet Union stepped in and saved the day for that country. And it nearly cost us and NATO a vital base. That can happen again. President Eisenhower's ruling on tariffs on frozen fish fillets won't prevent it. All it does is to give us time to free Iceland altogether from reliance on Soviet purchases.

Need to do something together

George Bryan

Word for Today

We saved a base in Iceland, thanks to Russian aggression in Hungary. And Russia won friends in Iceland, through ~~British~~ their willingness to buy fish. In both cases, there was a cashing in on opportunities. Nor, with regard to Iceland, has opportunity been exhausted. William Penn said, "Opportunities should never be lost because they can hardly be regained."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M.,E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles addressed the opening session of the NATO Council meeting today in Paris. Dulles said the Communist system is disintegrating. And the process, he said, can be speeded up if Western countries adhere strictly to the principles of the United Nations Charter and renounce force as an instrument of national policy. This was reference, however indirect, to the military intervention in Egypt by Britain and France. Dulles added, however, that in complying with the cease-fire, the British and French set a "moral example" the Russians cannot match. Dulles said the trouble Russia is having in the satellite states may, in itself, present a danger Soviet leaders may take risks jeopardizing the peace. And for that reason, he urged that NATO's military capabilities be unimpaired. He also referred to "pressures within Russia". But reporters at the briefing session afterwards were given no details.

The other speakers included French Foreign Minister Pineau and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. In explaining Anglo-French intervention in Egypt, they cited Egyptian provocation and Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Pineau urged a further coordination of policy among the 15 NATO countries. This afternoon, British and American leaders met behind closed doors. Foreign Secretary Lloyd said a reappraisal of British Defense policy was discussed.

In Washington, the government today issued its master plan for the emergency "oil lift" to Europe. Routes were outlined and procudures set forth for handling an additional 850 thousand barrels of oil a day, to compensate for the closing of the Suez Canal. Companies that pool their resources will be exempted, temporarily, from anti-trust action.

Today in Port Said a British lieutenant was kidnapped by the Egyptian underground. The lieutenant aided in the arrest yesterday of seven Egyptian commandos. The underground said tonight that he is dead.

A report from Paris tonight says that Britain and France are moving for a meeting with Egypt to seek a settlement of the Suez dispute. According to this report, relayed by the Associated Press, United Nations Secretary Hammarskjold would sit in on the conference, possibly in Geneva. Britain and France are said to have indicated that they will accept something less that full international control of the canal.

In Hungary, the 48-hour general strike against the puppet government has gone through its first day. All major factories were closed. And the only stores that were open were those that sold food. Hungarian police are reported to have fired into a crowd of demonstrators in one of the suburbs, but this report is unconfirmed. Another demonstration in downtown Budapest was broken up by police who laid about them with their rifle butts.

Radio Budapest announced that the Kadar government will confiscate the property of all persons who have fled from Hungary, unless they return by March 31st. Here in New York, the Hungarian foreign minister,,Imre Horvath.. led his delegation out of the United Nations General Assembly, which has been debating the Hungarian question. Horvath claimed that the United Nations was interfereing in the internal affairs of a sovereign state. Hungary, he said, will return to the assembly when it moves on to another question. The assembly has before it a resolution sponsored by the United States condemning Soviet a gression in Hungary.

A riot against Soviet domination took place ioday in the Polish port of Stettin. A crowd smashed the windows of the Russian consulate. Tonight, the Communist government of Poland apologized for the incident. And a late dispatch from Warsaw says "scores" or the rioters have been placed under arrest . Student newspapers supressed it.

The Russians are also confronted with unrest in Lithuania. The first secretary of the Lithuanian Communist Party is quoted as saying that "reactionaries" are becoming active in Lithuania...that "former anti-peoples parties, exploiting nationalist elements, have begun to raise their heads." The quotation is from a Lithuanian newspaper that appeared today in Moscow.

The United States protested to Czechoslovkaia today over the stationing of extra police details outside the American embassy in Prague. The United States called the police action "totally unwarrented."

The premier of Communist China..Chou En-lai..told a meeting of the political leaders in Burma today that the border dispute between Red China and Burma can be settled "with justice." A big, newly established country like Communist China, Chou said, is " apt to arouse suspicion ." But he expressed confidence that the suspicion in the case of Burma, will be allayed. Chou is in Burma an a 10-day state visit.

President Eisenhower was visited in Augusta, Georgia today by the Canadian prime minister, Louis St. Laurent. During the purely social visit, the president and prime minister played nine holes of golf. We are told that they ended up with identical scores.

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission today announced a program for stepping up nuclear power development in the United States. Under the proposed program, the commission would give private industry first opportunity to build the plants. But, if "acceptable proposals" are not made, the commission would..in Strauss' words.."take prompt and positive steps to build the reactors on its own initiative." Mr. Strauss also proposes that the government assume a greater share of the cost of research and development as distinct from acutal construction costs.

Last week the government of Iceland decided to allow American forces to continue to man the vital air and radar base which NATO raintains in that country. This morning President Eisenhower rejected the Tariff Commission's recommentation for an increase in the tariff of frozen fish fillets. These two facts happen to have a close relation. It may sound far-fetched to link American security with the price of fish. But Mr. Eisenhower's rejection of the tariff increase had a bearing on our being aloowed to stay at the airbase in Iceland. The Iceland government knew the tariff decision was coming, before it announced that the Americans might stay on that big air base.

Nothing could be further from the truth, however, than to believe that the tariff decision alone saved the vital base for us. It was at best a negative decision. By re raining from raising the tariff, we were merely not cutting down Iceland's exports to us. But this helped, and the Icelanders were grateful for it.

What acutally saved the base for us was Soviet behavior in Hungary. This suddenly shocked Icelanders into realizing that the interlude of relaxed tensions after the death of Stalin was only temporary. Iceland had a coalition government with communist members, and it took seriously peace propaganda of the new Khrushchev era. It thought Iceland was not in danger is it had been in the second World War, so it didn't need the air base for its own safety. The fate of Hungary woke up Icelanders from this pleasant dream. They are tolerant and a pacific people. But on the anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution last month, students pelted with eggs and tomatoes their fellow-Icelanders who attended the reception in the Soviet Embassy. The reversal of the policy on the air base was due chiefly to the sudden dread of dangers ahead.

But to say this is not to eliminate fish fillets from the story. Iceland has to export to live, and 97 percent of its exports are fish. One reason Iceland came to trust the Soviet Union so completely, was the fact that Moscow began buying large quantities of Iceland fish. Soviet purchases rose from zero to thirty percent of the total supply by last July. Moscow had come into the market to fill a vacuum left by the British, who had imposed an embargo on Icland fish imports. The British had been the biggest buyers, but they took offense when Iceland extended its coastal waters in an attempt to protect fish breeding grounds. This shut out British trawlers, and the owners of the trawlers, who belong to a powerful trust or cartel, retaliated by clamping on the embargo. It wans't a government embargo, but as the cartel was a big contributor to Conservative party funds, the government somehow showed little interest in the far-away Icelanders. And this was the start of Soviet preoccupation with Iceland. The Russians didn't particualrly need the fish, but they jumped at the chance to pry Iceland loose from NATO, and to get us excluded from the air base.

We must not think that since Iceland has changed it mind, and since we are not cutting down on our imports of Iceland fish, the situation is permanently redeemed. Iceland still lives from selling fish. And the Russians have upped their share of the export market from 30 percent last July to 35 percent last month. They are doing their best to offset the damage that Hungary has done to their interssts in Iceland.

Here is a situation where we and our allies should be able to muster even more interest in Iceland that the Russians. For one thing, the British might be induced to end the embargo on Iceland fish, for it is still in effect. Even better, NATO might be expanded and given the economic functions, of which there has been so much talk. Then it could sponsor a program for selling frozen fillets from Iceland in Africa, where a market has already been opened with great promise. Here the United States could be chief instigator and financier, that is, if it is as interested and alert as the Soviet Union.

We need to bear in mind that when Iceland was losing its foreign trade by the action of its allies, the Soviet Union stepped in and saved the day for that country. And it nearly cost us and NATO a vital base. That happen again. President Eisenhower's ruling on tariffs on frozen fish fillets won't prevent it. All it does is to give us time to free Iceland altogether from reliance on Soviet purchases.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: We saved a base in Iceland, thanks to Russian aggression in Hungary. And Russia won friends in Iceland through their willingness to buy fish. In both cases, there was a cashing in on opportunities. Nor, with regard to Iceland, has opportunity been exhausted. William Penn said, "Opportunities should never be lost because they can hardly be regained."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 12, 1956

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly tonight condemned Russia for its aggression in Hungary. The American-sponsored resolution was approved paragraph by paragraph. The final vote was 55 in favor and 8 opposed. There were 13 abstentions. India was among those countries which abstained, but MANY other Asian countries... such as Burma and Ceylon... voted for the resolution. India then withdrew the motion which it had sponsored, deploring the Russian action---not condemning it---and proposing that Secretary General Hammarskjold go to Moscow, if necessary, to seek a settlement. The American-sponsored resolution... as it was finally passed... asks Hammarskjold "tp take any initiative he may deem helpful in relation to the Hungarian problem." It also calls on Russia... for the third time... to get its troops out of Hungary.

The puppet government of Hungary today prescribed the mandatory death penalty for all persons convicted of crimes listed under its decree of martial law. These crimes include illegal possession of firearms, looting, and damage to public plants and utilities. / The 48-hour general strike was due to end a little more than an hour ago. / And reports from Budapest say it was 80 to 90 percent effective. There were more street demonstrations today... and some fighting, apparently on a small scale. The government radio confirmed tonight that the president of the Central Workers Council in Budapest has been placed under arrest.

The first Hungarian refugees flown to this country by the Air Force, under "Operation Safe Haven" arrived today at Camp Kilmer, New Jersey. Two hundred refugees arrived in four aircraft... the vanguard of 9-thousand, 7-hundred, who will be flown in by the end of the month. Others are bring brought over by ship.

Vice President Nixon will fly to Austria next week, for a first-hand look at the refugee problem. On his return, Mr. Nixon will report to the President AND CONGRESS on how the United States can extend further aid.

[redacted]

In Poland today, the representatives of 30-thousand steelworkers passed a resolution condemning Soviet intervention in Hungary. The workers demanded that Russian forces leave Hungary... and be replaced by troops belonging to other Warsaw Pact countries, including Poland. The resolution reportedly was in the name of all the steelworkers of Poznan, the scene of "bread and freedom" riots last June. The action came even as the government of Poland warned that further "provocative" demonstrations would be suppressed with "the utmost severity". ON MONDAY NIGHT, there was an anti-Russian riot in Stettin.

Communist leaders of East Germany warned today that only "truly dedicated" followers will be permitted to study in East Germany's colleges and universities. In the words of Communist Party Boss Walter Ulbright, "Anyone who tries to preserve or restore capitalism, will be shattered."

The former vice president of Yuglsoavia... Milovan Djilas... was tried and convicted in Belgrade today, on charges of making hostile propaganda against the state. He was sentenced to serve three years at hard labor. Djilas recently wrote an article... criticizing the Yugoslav government for not denouncing Soviet intervention in Hungary. The trial today was held behind closed doors.

Milovan Djilas

At the NATO Council meeting today... in Paris... the so-called "three wise men" outlined their recommendations for strengthening the North Atlantic alliance. The report... submitted by Foreign Ministers Martino of Italy, Lange of Norway and Pearson of Canada... was not acted on, however, due to the desire of some countries to offer amendments. The report recommends that "before any new policy is adopted which might affect NATO, or a political pronouncement is made, there should be consultations." Secretary of State Dulles is said to have approved the report... in its bread outlines.... but to have made it plain that the United States reserves full freedom of action in defense of its vital interests without consulting its NATO allies in advance. Dulles is reported to have told the foreign ministers that the United States has defense arrangements with 30 countries, besides the members of NATO, and that it would not be fair to them if the United States made a "hierarchy" of its NATO friends.

Prime Minister Nehru of India said today that the United States should "take the bull by the horns"... and settle its differences with Russia regarding the Middle East. This would ease tension, Nehru said, and contribute to solution of the Middle East problem. He said the power vacuum there must be filled by the Middle East countries themselves.

Prime Minister Nehru will arrive in Washington on Sunday for a four-day visit with President Eisenhower. The prime minister will make a nationwide speech over radio and television next Tuesday night.

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today for the admission of Japan to the world organization. Assembly approval making Japan the U.N.'s 80th member is expected next week.

In Tokyo today, documents were exchanged... ratifying the agreement ending the 11-year state of war between Russia and Japan. The two countries are now resuming diplomatic relations.

Here in New York today, the government filed a civil anti-trust suit aimed at blocking the proposed merger of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation with Youngstown Sheet and Tube. The suit charges that the merger would "substantially" reduce competition in the iron and steel industry.

Edward R. Murrow: December 12, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

The NATO conference so far has been repeating most of the phrases heard at all previous meetings. It is a temptation to call them cliches. It always has been NATO dogma that the organization exists for defense only, and that it lives in a world in which moral pressure and not force should be used to settle international disputes. For Secretary Dulles to stress, as he did yesterday, that only moral pressure can be brought against the Soviet Union is familiar language. But this is a unique NATO session. It comes on the heels of the disaster of the West in Egypt, and at a time when Moscow is crushing Hungarian independence with the most ruthless brutality seen since the war. The Western alliance is at a low point in effectiveness, and the fuses are sputtering that may blow up an even greater explosion than Hungary. So what NATO ministers say and decide to do in this hour counts more than it did in the quieter past. The platitudes have to be taken at their face value.

Dr. Heinrich von Brentano, West German foreign minister, is reported to have said at Paris that if East Germany rises against Soviet tyranny it will be difficult to restrain West Germans from sending military help. This pointed up the danger that everybody at Paris was thinking about. It is not clear whether Mr. von Brentano said this before or after Mr. Dulles' homily. But they were addressing themselves to the same theme.

To go on to quote Mr. Dulles further, he said that the future presents both a great opportunity and a great danger, and he was not sure which should be stressed more. The danger, as he saw it, arose from what he called the deterioration of the Soviet structure, which might cause Russia's leaders to take risks that increased the chances of war. So he urged the NATO states, while keeping up their military strength and resolution, to maintain their moral pressure, since this was helping to undermine the communist systems in Russia and China. He argued that the British and French acceptance of United Nations opinion had enabled the immorality of Soviet conduct in Hungary to be exposed. He admitted the resulting double standard of conduct in the United Nations was hard for some nations to take, but said that this double standard could not go on for ever.

Mr. Dulles's words, urging reliance on moral pressure to overcome Soviet despotism were interpreted, according to Harold Callender in the New York Times, "as an assurance to Moscow that the West would not make war to liberate even a rebellious satellite."

However, Herr von Brentano's warning makes it clear that the ingredients of danger in Europe are much like those in Egypt, only far more explosive. Ever since events came to a head in Poland and Hungary, the danger of an uprising in East Germany has frightened every foreign office in the free world. The fires in Poland and Hungary could conceivably be kept from leaping the Iron Curtain. But if East Germany rises, the flames cannot be so easily controlled. The Germans of the Bonn Republic will not be patient, will not be content with moral pressure, or hope for the day when the double standard in the United Nations will pass away. The fire in Egypt could be put out because the United States turned against its allies and insisted on their fulfilling their charter pledges. A fire in East Germany could not be extinguished in the same way. We had power against Britain and France. Our only power against the Soviet Union, other than our moral influence, is our ability to strike immediately at the heart of Russia if the Kremlin decides to risk world war.

So far the NATO conference has produced nothing that measures up to the magnitude of the danger. It is interesting to note that India, Ceylon and Indonesia, who sense the same danger, want Secretary General Hammarskjold to go right away to Moscow to try to get Soviet troops out of Hungary by negotiation. The United States is working night and day at the U.N. for a condemnation of Soviet aggression. But these measures skirt the danger; they don't grapple with it.

The Soviet Union has troops in East Germany, we and our Allies have troops in West Germany. If the fire bursts in Europe these forces are likely to clash, and if they clash the world war will be on. This situation would appear to propose its own initial remedy. Somehow the troops on both sides should be withdrawn. But this requires negotiations at the highest level, as ~~the withdrawal~~ would have to be part of a wider settlement, with far-reaching concessions by both sides. A summit meeting would be the only way to deal with the crisis. If Mr. Dulles's assurances to the Kremlin that we won't go to war to help a rebellious satellite are meant to help make such a settlement possible, they serve a purpose. But that purpose can only be served if there is a determination on both sides of the curtain to grapple with the danger, once and for all, and do it before it is too late.

George Bryan

It behooves NATO to decide... ~~now~~ and soon... what to do in the event of a revolt in East Germany. For here, indeed, is a powder-keg. Franklin D. Roosevelt once said, "When peace has been broken anywhere, peace of all countries everywhere is in danger." Nowhere is the warning of the indivisibility of peace more true than in East Germany today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly tonight condemned Russia for its aggression in Hungary. The American-sponsored resolution was approved paragraph by paragraph. The final vote was 55 in favor and 8 opposed. There were 13 abstentions. India was among those countries which abstained, but many other Asian countries, such as Burma and Ceylon, voted for the resolution. India then withdrew the motion which it has sponsored, deploring the Russian action, not condemning it, and proposing that Secretary General Hammarskjold go to Moscow, if necessary, to seek a settlement. The American - sponsored resolution as it was finally passed, asks Hammarskjold "to take any initiative he may deem helpful in relation to the Hungarian problem." It also calls on Russia for the third time, to get its troops out of Hungary.

The puppet government of Hungary today prescribed the mandatory death penalty for all persons convicted of crimes listed under its decree of martial law. These crimes include illegal possession of firearms, looting, and damage to public plants and utilities. The 48-hour general strike was due to end a little more than an hour ago. And reports from Budapest say it was 80 to 90 percent effective. There were more street demonstrations today and some fighting, apparently on a small scale. The government radio confirmed tonight that the president of the Central Workers Council in Budapest was been placed under arrest.

Vice President Nixon will fly to Austria next week for a first-hand look at the refugee problem. On his return, Mr. Nixon will report to the President and Congress on how the United States can extend further aid.

In Poland today, the representatives of 30-thousand steelworkers passed a resolution condemning Soviet intervertion in Hungary. The workers demanded that Russian forces leave Hungary and be replaced by troops belonging to other Warsaw Pact countries, including Poland. The resolution reportedly was in the name of all the steelworkers of Poznan, the scene of "bread and freedom" riots last June. The action came even as the government of Poland warned that further "provocative " demonstrations would be suppressed with "the utmost severity". On Monday night there was an anti-Russian riot in Stettin.

Communist leaders of East Germany warned todaythat only "truly dedicated" followers will be permitted to study in East Germany's colleges and universities In the worlds of Communist Party Boss Walter Ulbright, "Anyone who tires to preserve or restore capitalism will be shattered."

The former vice president of Yugoslavia, Milovan Djilas..was tried and convicted in Belgrade today on charges of making hostile propaganda against the state. He was sentenced to serve three years at hard labor. Djilas recently worte an article criticizing the Yugoslav government for not denouncing Soviet intervention in Hungary. The trial today was held behind closed doors.

At the NATO Council meeting today..in Paris..the so-called "three wise men" outlined their recommentations for strengthening the north Atlantic alliance. The report, submitted by Foreign Minister Martino of Italy, Lange of Norway and Pearson of Canada, was not acted on, however, due to the desire of some countries to offer amendments. The report recommends that "before any new policy is adopted which might affect NATO, or a political pronouncement is made, there whould be consultations." Secretary of State Dulles is said to have approved the report in its broad outlines, but to have made it plain that the United States reserves full freedom of action in defense of its vital interests without consulting its NATO allies in advance. Dulles is reported to have told the foreign ministers that the United States had defense arrangements with 30 countries, besides the members of NATO, and that it would not be fair to them if the United States made a "hierarchy" of its NATO friends.

Prime Minister Nehru of India said today that the United States should "take the bull by the horns" and settle its differences with Russia regarding the Middle East. This would ease tension, Nehru said, and countribute to solution of the Middle East problem. He said the power vacuum there must be filled by the Middle East countries themselves. Prime Minister Nehru will arrive in Washington on Sunday for a four-day visit with President Eisenhower. The Prime Minister will make a nationwide speech over radio and television next Tuesday night.

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today for the admission of Japan to the world organization. Assembly approval makeing Japan the U.N.'s 80th member is expected next week.

In Tokyo today, documents were exchanged , ratifying the agreement ending the 11- year state of war between Russia and Japan. The two countries are now resuming diplomatic relations.

here in New York today, the government filed a civil anti-trust suit aimed at blocking the proposed merger of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation with Youngstown Sheet and Tube. The suit charges that the merger would "substantially" reduce competition in the iron and steel industry.

THE NATO conference so far has been repeating most of the phrases heard at all previous meetings. It is a temptation to call them cliches. It always has been NATO dogma that the organization isists tor defense only, and that it lives in a world in which moral pressure and not force should be used to settle international disputes. For Secretary Dulles to stress, as he did yesterday, that only moral pressure can be brought against the Soviet Union is familiar language. But this is a unique NATO session. It comes on the heels of the disaster of the est in Egypt, and at a time when Moscow is crushing Hungarian independence with the most ruthless brutality seen since the war. The Western alliance is at a low point in effectiveness, and the fuses are sputtering that may blow up an even greater explosion than Hungary. So what NATO ministers say and decide to do in this hour counts more than it did in the quieter past. The platitudes have to be taken at their face value.

Dr. Heinrich von Brentano, West German foreign minister, is reported to have said at Paris that if East Germany rises against Soviet tyranny it will be difficult to restrain West Germany from sending military help.

This pointed up the danger that everybody at Paris was thinking about. It is not clear whether Mr. von Brentano said this before or after Mr. Dulles homily. But they were addressing themselves to the same theme.

To go on to quote Mr. Dulles further, he said that the future presents both a great opportunity and a great danger, and he was not sure which should be stressed more. The danger, as he saw it, arose from what he called the deterioration of the Soviet structure, which might cause Russia's leaders to take risks that increased the chances of war. So the urged the NATO states, while keeping up their military strength and resolution, to maintain their moral pressure, since this was helping to undermine the communist systems in Russia and China. He argued that the British and French acceptance of United Nations opinion had enabled the immorality of Soviet conduce in Hungary to be exposed. He admitted the resulting double standard of conduct in the United Nations was hard for some nations to take, but said that this double standard could not go on forever.

Mr. Dulles's words, urging reliance on moral pressure to overcome Soviet despotism were interpreted, according to Harold Callander in the New York Times. "as an assurance to Moscow that the West would not make war to liberate even a rebellious satellite."

However, Herr von Brentano's warning makes it clear that the ingredients of danger in Europe are much like those in Egypt, only far more explosive. Ever since events came to a head in Poland and Hungary, the danger of an uprising in East Germany had frightened every foreign office in the free world. The fires in Poalnd and Hungary could conceivably be kept from leaping the Iron Curtain. But if East Germany rises, the flames cannot be so easily controlled. The Germans of the Bonn Republic will not be patient, will not be content with moral pressure, or hope for the day when the double standard in the United Nations will pass away. The fire in Egypt could be put out because the United States turned against its allies and insisted on their fulfilling their charter pledges. A fire in East Germany could not be extinguished in the same way. We had power against Britain and France. Our only power against the Soviet Union. other than our moral influence, is our ability to strike immediately at the heart of Russia, if the Kremlin decides to risk world war.

So far the NATO conference has produced nothing that measures up the the magnitude of the danger. It is interesting to note that India, Cyelon and Indonesia, who sense the same danger want Secretary General Hammarskjold to go right away to Moscow to try to get Soviet troops out of Hungary by negotiation. The United States is working night and day at the U.N. for a condemnation of Soviet aggression. But these measures skirt the danger; they don't grapple with it

The Soviet Union has troops in East Germany, we and our Allies have troops in West Germany. If the fire bursts in Europe these forces are likely to clash and if they clash the world war will be on. This situation would appear to propose its own initial remedy. Somehow the troops on both sides should be withdrawn. But this requires negotiations at the highest level, as the withdrawal would have to be part of a wider settlement, with far-reaching concessions by both sides. A summit meeting would be the only way to deal with the crisis. If Mr. Dulles's assurances to the Kremlin that we won't go to war th help a rebellious satellite are meant to help make such a setllement possible, they serve a purpose. But that purpose can only ce served if there is a determination on both sides of the curtain to grapple with danger, once and for all, and do it before it is too late.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: It behooves NATO to decide and soon what to do in the event of a revolt in East Germany . For here, indeed is a powder-keg. Franklin D. Roosevelt once said, "When peace has been broken anywhere, peace of all countries everywher is in danger." Nowhere is the warning of the indivisibility of peace more true than in East Germany today.

Goodnight and good luck

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 13, 1956

This is the news:

NATO representatives were warned today that Russia has increased its military capabilities "significantly" in all spheres, including the field of nuclear weapons. The warning was given by General Leon Johnson of the United States, chairman of NATO's standing group in Washington. He also told the NATO Council meeting in Paris that recent events in Eastern Europe have increased the danger of a new world war "by miscalculation". A similar warning was reiterated today by Heinrich von Brentano, the foreign minister of West Germany. Von Brentano urged the free world to use "great caution" in dealing with the entire question of satellite unrest. He said if a revolt broke out in East Germany, it was "inconceivable" that West Germany would not become involved. He presented a resolution prescribing national independence for the countries of Eastern Europe and... at the same time... renouncing military intervention. This is interpreted as reassurance to Russia that the West will not engage in a war of liberation.

America's NATO allies proposed today that they be granted access to tactical atomic weapons. Only the United States is in a position to supply these weapons. And this is possible only if Congress changes existing laws.

In still another move, the NATO Council voted to give its secretary general, Lord Ismay, enlarged powers for mediating disputes among its members.

Vice President Nixon today visited United Nations headquarters, here in New York. He conferred with Secretary General Hammarskjold regarding his trip next week to Austria where he will look into the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon told reporters he will make no attempt to go to Hungary.

The Moscow radio charged tonight that Mr. Nixon is going to Austria "to stir up Hungarian counter-revolutionaries."

Factory workers in Budapest have again gone on strike. The general strike ended last night... on schedule... but workers promptly joined a new walkout protesting the arrest of their leaders by the government.

There are increasing reports that the puppet premier... Janos Kádar... is being removed from office. According to one report, Kadar will be succeeded by the foreign minister, Imre Horváth, who has been representing Hungary in the United Nations. (Horváth is leaving New York tomorrow on the liner Liberte.) Another story is that General Serov, the head of Russia's secret police, has taken over control of the government.

New violence is reported from Poland. Warsaw newspapers tell of a new anti-Soviet demonstration in Stettin. More trouble is reported in Krakow, and Polish troops have been ordered out to guard all Soviet legations. The Soviet legation in Stettin was attacked on Monday.

Turkish newspapers say the Russians are sending troop reinforcements to Bulgaria... and that Soviet tanks are patrolling the streets of Sofia, the Bulgarian capital.

Two U.S. senators said today that if Russia continues to defy the United Nations resolutions on Hungary, the world organization should apply sanctions. Republican Senator Knowland... and Democratic Senator Humphrey... said the sanctions could be economic as well as of a diplomatic nature. Both emphasized that they were expressing their personal views.

Moscow announced today that all Japanese prisoners in Russia are being released. The action is being taken, Moscow said, "in view of the end of the state of war between the two countries."

Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi insisted today that Egypt should be compensated for the "great losses" it incurred in the recent hostilities. He complained that "much" is being said about granting economic aid to "the aggressors"---Britain and France. Fawzi made his remarks before the National Press Club in Washington. Egypt, he said, has deported "only" 280 stateless Jews. He refused to say whether his government would allow Israeli ships to pass through the Suez Canal, once it is cleared.

Today... in London... a government spokesman said that British salvage ships used in clearing the canal must be manned by British crews. And here in New York, the British United Nations delegation charged that the canal remains uncleared... a month after the cease-fire... because Egypt has been "obstructive".

President Eisenhower flew back to Washington today after a 17-day vacation in Augusta, Georgia. The President's personal physician, Major General Snyder, said the vacation had done Mr. Eisenhower good... that

Present

The United States is reported tonight to be supporting a move, that will allow Great Britain to count on an additional 2-billion dollars for its gold-dollar reserves. The British chancellor of the exchequer, Harold Macmillan, discussed aspects of this problems with American representatives today in Paris. Details of their talks were not disclosed.

his health is excellent.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced today that American production of uranium concentrate more than doubled this year. The raw material for atomic bombs... and nuclear fuels... is now being produced by the United States at the rate of 8-thousand tons a year. Production last year was 4-thousand tons.

Two of my colleagues... David Schoenbrun and Ernest Leiser... have been covering the NATO meeting in Paris at first-hand, and so we will switch to them now for a comprehensive report. The first voice you hear will be that of David Schoenbrun.

Tape runs 4:40
Ends on cue: "---military side today was pretty gloomy."

Hope

That was David Schoenbrun and Ernest Leiser... reporting from Paris on the important developments that took place at today's NATO Council session....

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is ~~George Hagan.~~ Bern Bennet.

Word for Today

Like Will Rogers, Fred Allen always looked upon international conferences with a jaundiced eye. "A conference," Allen said, "is a gathering of important people who singly can do nothing but together can decide that nothing can be done." It is to be hoped that this is not true in the case of the meeting now being held in Paris.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, December 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SCHOENBRUN: The news blackout was lifted at NATO today and the reporters were dazzled by the floodlights of stories that almost blinded us after a few days of darkness. Any one of the developments revealed today would have been important enough by itself for a fullsome comment. But at least a half dozen major revelations were exposed all at once.

Perhaps the most dramatic was the appeal by the European allies, to the United States, to supply them with tactical atom weapons to meet a double threat: the Soviet military menace and the internal economic crisis in Western Europe.

Soviet superiority in manpower and conventional weapons is overwhelming and the only answer to it, the Europeans say, is the atom bomb.

It was not only impressive. It was positively startling to hear minister after minister quoted on the need for tactical atomic weapons. The Dutch Defense Minister, Strauss, said it was the principal defense of the West. Germany's Minister, Mr. Strauss, called the atom bomb "the decisive factor". And France's Minister of National Defense, Bourges-Maunoury, said it was the "shield of freedom." The Turks, the British and the Italians all arose, turn-by-turn and called for atomic weapons; these nations which once feared the atom bomb and once warned America against counting too much upon a terror weapon because this emphasis might lead us to use it exclusively and make atomic war inevitable, these same nations now bless the atom bomb as the major deterent to war and the principal shield of freedom. They were all obviously talking to the United States. For our country along produces tactical atomic weapons. Thus, all eyes were on America's

Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, when he arose to face the Atlantic Council. Everyone in the room knew that this was going to be a tough problem for Mr. Dulles, since American legislation has put a tight lock on our stocks of atom bombs.

Dulles told the Council that he agreed with the Allies on the deterrent value of nuclear weapons. He pointed out that the production of such weapons was a very heavy burden for the United States economy; they're very costly to make. He also pointed out that America has great expenses in the maintenance of bases overseas, bases which are vitally necessary for the defense of the West. "Therefore," said Mr. Dulles, "since America is doing all of these things in the interest of all of the countries, we might expect our allies to give us a maximum of assistance on the bases and," he said, "to show good will towards America and American troops stationed outside of their country (indistinct)." Mr. Dulles then solemnly promised the fourteen allies of America that the United States government would keep its defense forces on the alert around the world and would keep them on the continent of Europe despite the great cost to the American people, for we believe that "freedom is indivisible." It was a truly remarkable reversal of recent history today, to hear these speakers quoted by spokesmen at NATO; Europeans no longer telling America to go home or to stop making atom bombs. No. Now they're asking us to stay here and to give them atom bombs, too. This is the result of the Soviet rape of Hungary and the Russian infiltration of the Middle East. All the members of NATO are now in agreement that the Soviet threat is as great or greater than ever. And the most dangerous area is East Germany. A discussion of this peril point was the highlight of the morning meeting here at the Palais de Chaillot. And for a report on that threat in the heart of Europe, Germany, let's hear now from CBS News correspondent Ernest Leiser, who covers Central and Eastern Europe normally and who's been here with us in Paris at the NATO meeting this week. Ernie!

LEISER: Thank you, Dave. Well, the Germans are scared, very scared, at the outlook along the Iron Curtain borders ~~of~~ that split their country. The fears were expressed here today, first, in a warning by Foreign Minister von Brentano, against stirring up any new uprisings in Eastern Europe, because of the "possible disastrous consequences" - as he put it, to the satellite people themselves, and because of the possibility that it might push Russia to the point of world war. And the second German expression of fear was this demand of Defense Minister Franz Josef Strauss that all the NATO forces be equipped right down to divisional level with atomic - tactical atomic - weapons. Von Brentano's warning, by the way, was supported by an intelligence estimate, given the NATO Council this afternoon by U.S. General Leon Johnson. Johnson said that thousands of new long-range, fast-moving, heavily-armored Russian tanks - presumably the latest JS-3s - had been moved into East Germany by the Russians during the past few weeks.

The Council was also told that the danger certainly existed that a miscalculation, an unpredictable incident on either side could trigger off the nervous Russians into attack.

Von Brentano had earlier let it be known that he regards East Germany as "alarmingly near to explosion," and he said Bonn was trying to do what it could to calm the population down.

All in all the description of the situation given on the military side today was pretty gloomy. (Pause)

SPEAKER: Did it, Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: No, it didn't. Politically, there's a good deal of argument about it and I hope we'll be ableto talk to our colleagues in New York on this very point. There's a feeling here among many of the political observers that events in Eastern Europe have proved that Russia is weaker than she ever was; because she can no longer count upon the satellite armies or the satellite peoples; that her lines of communication have been endangered and that now more than ever Russia cannot afford a war.

Ed. trans. - P.O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, December 13, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SCHOENBRUN: The news blackout was lifted at NATO today and the reporters were dazzled by the floodlights of stories that almost blinded us after a few days of darkness. Any one of the developments revealed today would have been important enough by itself for a fullsome comment. But at least a half dozen major revelations were exposed all at once.

Perhaps the most dramatic was the appeal by the European allies, to the United States, to supply them with tactical atom weapons to meet a double threat: the Soviet military menace and the internal economic crisis in Western Europe.

Soviet superiority in manpower and conventional weapons is overwhelming and the only answer to it, the Europeans say, is the atom bomb.

It was not only impressive. It was positively startling to hear minister after minister quoted on the need for tactical atomic weapons. The Dutch Defense Minister, Strauss, said it was the principal defense of the West. Germany's Minister, Mr. Strauss, called the atom bomb "the decisive factor". And France's Minister of National Defense, Bourges-Maunoury, said it was the "shield of freedom." The Turks, the British and the Italians all arose, turn-by-turn and called for atomic weapons; these nations which once feared the atom bomb and once warned America against counting too much upon a terror weapon because this emphasis might lead us to use it exclusively and make atomic war inevitable, these same nations now bless the atom bomb as the major deterent to war and the principal shield of freedom. They were all obviously talking to the United States. For our country along produces tactical atomic weapons. Thus, all eyes were on America's

Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, when he arose to face the Atlantic Council. Everyone in the room knew that this was going to be a tough problem for Mr. Dulles, since American legislation has put a tight lock on our stocks of atom bombs.

Dulles told the Council that he agreed with the Allies on the deterrent value of nuclear weapons. He pointed out that the production of such weapons was a very heavy burden for the United States economy; they're very costly to make. He also pointed out that America has great expenses in the maintenance of bases overseas, bases which are vitally necessary for the defense of the West. "Therefore," said Mr. Dulles, "since America is doing all of these things in the interest of all of the countries, we might expect our allies to give us a maximum of assistance on the bases and," he said, "to show good will towards America and American troops stationed outside of their country (indistinct)." Mr. Dulles then solemnly promised the fourteen allies of America that the United States government would keep its defense forces on the alert around the world and would keep them on the continent of Europe despite the great cost to the American people, for we believe that "freedom is indivisible." It was a truly remarkable reversal of recent history today, to hear these speakers quoted by spokesmen at NATO; Europeans no longer telling America to go home or to stop making atom bombs. No. Now they're asking us to stay here and to give them atom bombs, too. This is the result of the Soviet rape of Hungary and the Russian infiltration of the Middle East. All the members of NATO are now in agreement that the Soviet threat is as great or greater than ever. And the most dangerous area is East Germany. A discussion of this peril point was the highlight of the morning meeting here at the Palais de Chaillot. And for a report on that threat in the heart of Europe, Germany, let's hear now from CBS News correspondent Ernest Leiser, who covers Central and Eastern Europe normally and who's been here with us in Paris at the NATO meeting this week. Ernie!

LEISER: Thank you, Dave. Well, the Germans are scared, very scared, at the outlook along the Iron Curtain borders mf that split their country. The fears were expressed here today, first, in a warning by Foreign Minister von Brentano, against stirring up any new uprisings in Eastern Europe, because of the "possible disastrous consequences" - as he put it, to the satellite people themselves, and because of the possibility that it might push Russia to the point of world war. And the second German expression of fear was this demand of Defense Minister Franz Josef Strauss that all the NATO forces be equipped right down to divisional level with atomic - tactical atomic - weapons. Von Brentano's warning, by the way, was supported by an intelligence estimate, given the NATO Council this afternoon by U.S. General Leon Johnson. Johnson said that thousands of new long-range, fast-moving, heavily-armored Russian tanks - presumably the latest JS-3s - had been moved into East Germany by the Russians during the past few weeks.

The Council was also told that the danger certainly existed that a miscalculation, an unpredictable incident on either side could trigger off the nervous Russians into attack.

Von Brentano had earlier let it be known that he regards East Germany as "alarmingly near to explosion," and he said Bonn was trying to do what it could to calm the population down.

All in all the description of the situation given on the military side today was pretty gloomy. (Pause)

SPEAKER: Did it, Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: No, it didn't. Politically, there's a good deal of argument about it and I hope we'll be ableto talk to our colleagues in New York on this very point. There's a feeling here among many of the political observers that events in Eastern Europe have proved that Russia is weaker than she ever was; because she can no longer count upon the satellite armies or the satellite peoples; that her lines of communication have been endangered and that now more than ever Russia cannot afford a war.

Ed. trans. - P.O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

NATO representatives were warned today that Russia has increased its military capabilities "significantly" in all spheres, including the field of nuclear weapons. The warning was given by General Leon Johnson of the United Statss, chairman of NATO's standing group in Washington. He also told the NATO Council meeting in Paris that recent events in Eastern Europe have increased the danger of a new world war "by miscalculation." A similar warning was reiterated today by Heinrich von Brentano, the foreign minister of West Germany. Von Brentano urgedthe free world to use "great cuation" in dealing with the entire question of satellite unrest. He said if a revolt broke out in East Germany, it was "inconceivable" that West Germany would not become involved. He presented a resolution prescribing national independence for the countries of Eastern Europe and..at the same time..renouncing military intervention. This is interpreted as reassurance to Russia that the West will not engage in a war of liberation.

America's NATO allies propos d today they they be granted access to tactical atomic weapons. Only the United States is in a position to supply these weapons. And this is possible only if Congress changes existing laws. In still another move, the NATO Council voted to give its secretary general Lord Ismay, enlarged powers for mediating disputes among its members.

Vice President Nixon visited United Nations headquarters, here in New York. He conferred with Secretary General Hammarkjold regarding his trip nest week to Austria where he will look into the Hungarinn refugee problem. Nixon folt reporters he will make no attempt to go to Hungary.

The Moscow radio charged tonight that Mr. Nixon is going to Austria "to stir up Hungarian counter-revolutionaries."

Factory workers in Budapest have again gone on strike. The general strike ended last night..on schedule..but workers promptly joined a new walkout protesting the arrest of their leaders by the government. There are increasing reports that the puppet premier..Janos Kadar is being removed from office. According to one report, Kadar will be succeeded by the foreign minister, Imre Horvath, who has been representing Hungary in the United Nations. Horvath is leaving Ner York tomorrow on the liner Liberte. Another story is that General Sorov, the head of Russia's secret police, has taken over control of the government.

New violence is reported from Poland. Warsaw newspapers tell of a new anti-Soviet demonstration in Stettin. More trouble is reported in Krakow, and Polish troops have been ordered out to guard all Soviet legations. The Soviet legation in Stettin was attacked on Monday.

Turkish newspapers say the Russians are sendingtroop reinforcements to Bulgaria..and that Soviet tanks are patrolling the streets of Sofia, the Bularian capital.

Two U.S. Senators said today that if Russia continues to defy the United Nations resolutions on Hungary, the world organization should apply sanctions. Republican Seantor Knowland, and Democratic Senator Humphrey...said the sanctions could be economic as well as of a diplomatic nature. Both emphasized that they were expressing their personal views.

Moscow announced today that all Japanese prisoners in Russia are being released. The action is being taken, Moscow said, "in view of the end of the state of war between the two countries. "

Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi insisted today that Egypt should be compensated for the "great losses" it incurred in the recent hostilities he complained t at "much" is being said about granting economic aid to " the aggressors"--Britain and France. Fawzi made his remarks before the National Press Club in Washington. Egypt, he said, has deposed "only" 280 stateless Jews. He refused to say whether his government would allow Israeli ships to pass through the Suez Canal, once it is cleared.

Today..in London..a government spokesman said that British salvage ships used in clearing the canal must be manned by British crews. And here in New York, the British United Nations delegation charged that the canal remains uncleared a month after the cease-fire because Egypt has been "obstructive".

President Eisenhower flew back to Washington today after a 17-day vacation in Augusta, Georgia. The President's personal physician, Major General Snyder, said the vacation had done Mr. Eisenhower good..that his health is excellent.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced today that American production of uranium concentrate more than doubled this year. The raw material for atomic bombs ..and nuclear fuels..is now being produced by the United States at the rate of 8-thousand tons a year. Production last year was 4-thousand tons.

Two of my colleagues..David Schoenbrun and Ernest Leiser..have been covering the NATO meeting in Paris at first-hand, and so we will switch th them now for a comprehensive report. The first voice you hear will be that of David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The news blackout was lifted at NATO today and the reporters were dazzled by the floodlights of stories that almost blinded us after a few days of darkness. Anyone of the developments revealed today would have been important enough by itself for a fullsome comment. But at least a half dozen major revelations were expose all at once.

Perhaps the most dramatic was the appeal by the European allies, to the United States, to supply them with tactical atom weapons to meet a double threat: the Soviet military menace and the internal economic crisis in Western Europe.

Soviet superiority in manpower and conventional weapons is overwhelming and the only answer to it, the Europeans say, is the atom bomb.

It was not only impressive, it was positively startling to hear minister after minister quoted on the need for tactidal atomic weapons. The Dutch Defense Minister, Strauss, said it was the principal defense of the West. Germany's Minister, Mr Strauss, called the atom bomb "the decisive factor." And France's Minister of National Defense, Bourges-Maunorry, said it was the "shield of freedom." The Turks, the British and the Italians all arose, turn-by-turn and called for atomic weapons; these nations which once feared the atom bomb and once warned America against counting too much upon the terror weapons because this emphasis might lead us to use it exclusively and make atomic war inevitable, these same nations now bless the atom bomb as the major deterent to war and the principal shield of freedom. They were all obviously talking to the United States. For our country alone produces tactical atomic weapons. Thus, all eyes were on America's Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, when he arose to face the Atalntic Council. Everyone in the room knew that this was going to be a tough problem for Mr. Dulles, since American legislation has put a tight lock on our stocks of atom bombs.

Dulles told the Council that he agreed with the Allies on the deterrent value of nuclaear weapons. He pointed the production of such weapons was a very heavy burden for the United States economy; they're very costly to make. He also pointed out that America has great expenses in the maintenance of bases overseas, bases which are vitally necessary for the defense of the West. "Therefore", said Mr. Dulles, "since America is doing all of these things in the interest of all the countries we might expect our allies to give us a maximum of assistance on the bases and," he said, "to show good will towards America and American troops stationed outside of their country (indistinct)". Mr. Dulles then solemnly promised the fourteen allies of America that the United States government would keep its defense forces on the alert around the world and would keep them on the continent of Europe despite the great cost to the American people, for we believe that "freedom is indivisible." It was a truly remarkable reversal of recent history today, to hear these speakers quoted by the spokesman of NATO; Europeans no longer telling America to go home or to stop making atom bombs. No. Now they're asking us to stay here and to give them atom bombs, too. This is the result of the Soviet rape of Hungary and the Russian infiltration of the Middle East. All the members of NATO are now in agreement that the Soviet threat is as great or greater than ever. And the most dangerous area os East Germany. A discussion of this peril point as the highlight of the morning meeeting here at the Palais do Chaillot.. And for a report on that threat in the heart of Europe, Germany, let's hear now from CBS News correspondent Ernest Leiser, who covers Central and Eastern Europe normally and who's been here with us in Paris at the NATO meeting this week. Ernie!

LEISER: Thank you, Dave. Well, the Germans are scared, very scared, at the outlook along the Iron Curtain borders that split their country. The fears were expressed here today, first, in a warning by Foreign Ministers von Brentano, against stirring up any new uprisings in Eastern Europe, because of the "possible disastrous consequences" - as he put it, to the satellite people themselves, and because of the possibility that it might push Russia to the point of world war. And the second German expression of fear was this demand of Defense Minister Franz Josef Strauss that all the NATO forces be equipped right down to divisional level with atomic - tactical atomic - weapons. Von Brentano's warning, by the way, was supported by an intelligence estimate, given the NATO Council this afternoon by U.S. General Leon Johnson. Johnson said that thousands of new long-range, fast-moving , heavily-armored Russian tanks - presumably the latest JS-3's had been moved into East Germany by the Russians during the past few weeks.

The Council was also told that the danger certainly existed that a miscalculation, an unpredictable incident on either side could trigger off the nervous Russians into attack.

Von Brentano had earlier let it be known that he regerds East Germany as "alarmingly near to explosion," and he said Bonn was trying to do what it could to calm thepopulation down.

All in all the description of he situation given on the military side today was pretty gloomy.

SPEAKER: Did it, Dave(??)

SCHOENBRUN No, it didn't. Politically, there's a good deal of argument about it and I hope we'll be able to talk to our colleagues in New York on this very point. There's a feeling here among many of thepolitical observers that events in Eastern Europe have proved that Russia is weaker than she ever was; because she can no longer count upon the satellite armies of the satellite peoples; that her lines of communication have been endangered and that now more than ever Russia cannot afford a war.

MURROW: That was David Schoenbrun and Ernest Leiser..reporting from Paris on the important developments that took place at today'd NATO Council session.

The United States is reported toinght to be supporting a move that will allow Great Britain to count on an additional 2-billion dollars for its gold-dollar reserves. The British Chancellor of the exchequer, Harold MacMillan, discussed aspects of this problems ofth American representatives today in Paris. Details of their talks were not disclosed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Bern Bennet.

BENNET:

MURROW: Like Will Rogers, Fred Allen always looked upon international conferences with a jaundiced eye. "A conference," allen said, "is a gathering of important people who singly can do nothing, but together can decide that nothing can be done." It is to be hoped that this is not tuue in the case of the meeting now beingheld in Paris.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Dec. 14, 1956

This is the news:

The NATO ministers ended their meeting in Paris today by issuing a joint communique. It says that during their four days of talks the ministers discussed the Soviet penetration in the Middle East and agreed to keep developments in the area "under close and continuing observation." The ministers, it says, "emphasized in particular" the need for rapid progress in clearing the Suez Canal... and the need for a permanent political settlement between Israel and the Arab states, including an equitable solution of the Arab refugee problem. Agreement was also reached on the need for wider and more intimate consultation among members of NATO. A directive was approved taking into account Russia's increased military capabilities. The United States agreed to supply its NATO allies with modern weapons capable of firing atomic charges, but pointed out that, under existing law, possession of atomic warheads must be retained by the United States. ~~These are weapons of dual capacity: they can fire explosives of either the conventional or another type.~~ This was in reply to a request by our European allies yesterday, that they be supplied with tactical atomic weapons. The communique says the NATO countries have followed the course of events in Hungary with "shock and revulsion." The United Nations, it says, should continue its efforts... through the pressure of world opinion... to induce Russia to withdraw its forces from Hungary "and ~~mak~~ right the wrongs done to the Hungarian people." The final communique states that the peoples of Eastern Europe should have the right to choose their own governments.

The biggest steel plant in Hungary was shut down today by a new sitdown strike. The Csepel steel works... near Budapest... is reported surrounded by Soviet tanks. Other factories in Budapest are still idle, as the result of walkouts protesting the arrest of labor leaders. The puppet government announced that... henceforth... all persons taking part in public meetings without permission, will be subject to arrest. Under this decree, demonstrators can be imprisoned up to five years. The government said passports to leave Hungary will be denied all men under the age of 50.

The Soviet press today continued its attacks on the United States. Pravda said American leaders are trying to incite "the fascist remnants" in Hungary... and set up in the center of Europe "a new hot-bed of war". In East Germany, the party newspaper accused the United States... and its NATO allies... of plotting another world war.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly has voted to debate Soviet charges of American interference in the satellite states. The charges will be taken up by the special political committee, early next year.

The United States today called on Syria "to take immediate steps" to repair the pipeline which carries oil from Iraq... across Syria... to the Mediterranean coast. The protest was lodged with the Syrian ambassador in Washington. The pipeline was sabotaged by Syrian nationalists early in November. Normally, it carries half a million barrels of oil a day.

Thirty thousand Egyptian troops paraded in Cairo today, in celebration of the withdrawal of British and French forces from Port Said. The Cairo radio says the last Anglo-French unit may leave tonight. Other sources say the final withdrawal probably will not take place FOR A FEW DAYS. ~~before Sunday.~~

Prime Minister Eden returned to London today, from a three-week rest in the West Indies. Eden said he would stay on as prime minister "to face the difficulties we know lie ahead." He defended Anglo-French intervention in Egypt... and expressed the view that there is "growing understanding" in the United States that Britain and France did what they had to do.

The government of Northern Ireland moved today to invoke wartime security regulations... in an effort to cope with continuing border raids staged by the Irish Republican Army, otherwise known as the I.R.A. The outlawed "army" has announced as its goal, the liberation of Northern Ireland, which is under British rule. In its latest ~~attack~~ raid... last night... the I.R.A attacked three police barracks. No casualties are reported.

President Eisenhower conferred with his cabinet today for the first time in three weeks. The meeting lasted two and a half hours. The President accepted... with regret... the resignation of Clarence A. Davis as undersecretary of the interior. Davis said he is leaving the government because of "personal considerations".

A federal judge today fined attorneys John Neff and Elmer Patman 25-hundred dollars each for failing to register under the Lobbying Act. Their employer... the Superior Oil Company... was fined 10-thousand dollars for "aiding and abetting" their failure to register. Charges that they sought by offering a 25-hundred-dollar campaign contribution to Senator Francis Case to influence his vote on the Natural Gas Bill were dropped. Disclosure of the offer came from Case himself, who later voted against the measure. Both attorneys also received a suspended sentence of 12 months in jail.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has been covering the NATO conference which was faced with, a greater variety of problems than at any time since its creation at the start of the cold war. And, certainly, the problems were never more grave. For the observations of a reporter who covered the meeting at first-hand, we switch now to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

Tape runs 5:50
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

These were the observations of David Schoenbrun on the NATO Council meeting which ended today in Paris.

(pause)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

Jan Masaryk once told this reporter that in a world where there is no security for little nations, there is no security for big nations. The NATO ministers were concerned with this. For there is nothing in the situation in Eastern Europe... or in the Middle East... that would disprove the wisdom of these words spoken ~~nearly~~ more than ten years ago.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - SCHOENBRUN

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

SCHOENBRUN: What had been billed in advance as the most critical meeting of the Atlantic Alliance has now come to an end, and the Ministers of the 15 NATO countries have already begun to leave Paris to get back in a hurry to their own capitals and their own national problems. Mr. John Foster Dulles is, at this moment, winging his way back to Washington, via the South Atlantic route because of storms on the North Atlantic, a not inappropriate symbolism of this meeting. Mr. Dulles wasted no time getting out of here. He left within a few hours of approving the final communique. He was anxious to report to President Eisenhower before the arrival on Sunday of Mr. Nehru of India.

Mr. Dulles is concerned about the Nehru visit. He wants it to go off smoothly, with a maximum of courtesy. American officials here are well aware of the acute sensitivity of Asian leaders and Mr. Dulles has stressed this in the NATO meeting. He told his allies that every effort must be made to reassure the non-committed peoples of Asia and Africa that NATO members were not taking unilateral decisions on world affairs without first taking into account the interests of peoples who are not members of NATO. Mr. Dulles' anxiety about this resulted in a delay and a change in the final communique of this meeting.

The original draft had included a paragraph about a NATO decision to tighten the alliance through a system of consultations and then it went on to state NATO's aim in the Middle East. Mr. Dulles objected to the wording. He argued that it might offend some of the Middle East nations who would resent NATO taking decisions about their area without first considering the interests of the nations most directly involved.

Now this incident was, in itself, of little importance for the point was quickly settled and the communique was redrafted in good time and in good spirit, but it is illustrative of one of the major developments of this meeting and indeed of world affairs. It illustrates the fact that the world has changed this year - changed in a most extraordinary way; and even the greatest powers and the greatest alliances must now be sensitive to the desires, to the fears and to the aspirations of the very small nations. This has been a year of small nations defying big nations, a year of the turning of the worm in every corner of the globe.

In the past few weeks, the entire world seems to have turned topsy-turvy and inside out. The Soviet Empire, once regarded as a monolithic bloc, has begun to disintegrate violently in Hungary, in Poland and even the first signs of a fissure in the monolithic Communist bloc inside the Soviet Union. However, this once hoped for development did not bring the joy of victory that the West might have been expected to experience, for it coincided with a similar disintegration of the NATO Alliace, during the period of Russia's own difficulties.

The West also suddenly realized that the explosion in Hungary and Poland might send shock waves into East Germany and involve us all in a Third World War. So, instead of welcoming and encouraging the brave Hungarians, the West has found itself humiliated, impotent and fearful. We did not go to their rescue and indeed the Western nations have done everything to make clear to the Poles and to the East Germans that we do not want them to follow the Hungarian lead. This has been one of the most outspoken, one of the clearest decisions of this NATO meeting - a common agreement not to encourage rebellion, not to hold out any hope of armed intervention or help for the enslaved peoples.

The United States delegation, led by Mr. Dulles, who once talked of rolling back the Iron Curtain and liberating the peoples, is now urging the peoples of Eastern Europe to be patient, urging them not to strike for freedom lest they destroy the world and all hope of freedom.

This question of what's happening in Eastern Europe and of a possible new approach to the Russians in their own dilemma has been one of the principal and most exciting items under study at this meeting. From it emerges two schools of thought, which on the surface seems to be in direct contradiction, but which, perhaps, supplement each other. One school argues that the Russians faced with revolt in their empire and unable to solve their own problems will launch a war to divert attention from their troubles and to siphon off the surplus energies and protests of their own people. Many people here believe that this was the primary source of World War I, that it happened that way because the Russians ~~Taxx~~ Tzar and the Austro-Hungarian monarchy couldn't solve its internal problems.

There's another school of thought here, however, which discounts this as unreal theorizing. This school says that in the atomic age every government, even the most ruthless, knows perfectly well that a war cannot solve any problem now, it will simply destroy the entire world. As for a limited, non-atomic war, if such a thing were still possible, Russia today is in a much worse position to start that kind of war than ever before, for Russia can no longer count on the satellite armies. In fact any war may be the signal for mass uprisings against the Communists. And so, two theories today, both of them complimentary in fact; and that is, as one American official has put it: "This is a time of great danger, but also a time of great hope; of unparalleled opportunitees for wisdom or for mischief."

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris; I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM - SCHOENBRUN

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

SCHOENBRUN: What had been billed in advance as the most critical meeting of the Atlantic Alliance has now come to an end, and the Ministers of the 15 NATO countries have already begun to leave Paris to get back in a hurry to their own capitals and their own national problems. Mr. John Foster Dulles is, at this moment, winging his way back to Washington, via the South Atlantic route because of storms on the North Atlantic, a not inappropriate symbolism of this meeting. Mr. Dulles wasted no time getting out of here. He left within a few hours of approving the final communique. He was anxious to report to President Eisenhower before the arrival on Sunday of Mr. Nehru of India.

Mr. Dulles is concerned about the Nehru visit. He wants it to go off smoothly, with a maximum of courtesy. American officials here are well aware of the acute sensitivity of Asian leaders and Mr. Dulles has stressed this in the NATO meeting. He told his allies that every effort must be made to reassure the non-committed peoples of Asia and Africa that NATO members were not taking unilateral decisions on world affairs without first taking into account the interests of peoples who are not members of NATO. Mr. Dulles' anxiety about this resulted in a delay and a change in the final communique of this meeting.

The original draft had included a paragraph about a NATO decision to tighten the alliance through a system of consultations and then it went on to state NATO's aim in the Middle East. Mr. Dulles objected to the wording. He argued that it might offend some of the Middle East nations who would resent NATO taking decisions about their area without first considering the interests of the nations most directly involved.

Now this incident was, in itself, of little importance for the point was quickly settled and the communique was redrafted in good time and in good spirit, but it is illustrative of one of the major developments of this meeting and indeed of world affairs. It illustrates the fact that the world has changed this year - changed in a most extraordinary way; and even the greatest powers and the greatest alliances must now be sensitive to the desires, to the fears and to the aspirations of the very small nations. This has been a year of small nations defying big nations, a year of the turning of the worm in every corner of the globe.

In the past few weeks, the entire world seems to have turned topsy-turvy and inside out. The Soviet Empire, once regarded as a monolithic bloc, has begun to disintegrate violently in Hungary, in Poland and even the first signs of a fissure in the monolithic Communist bloc inside the Soviet Union. However, this once hoped for development did not bring the joy of victory that the West might have been expected to experience, for it coincided with a similar disintegration of the NATO Alliace, during the period of Russia's own difficulties.

The West also suddenly realized that the explosion in Hungary and Poland might send shock waves into East Germany and involve us all in a Third World War. So, instead of welcoming and encouraging the brave Hungarians, the West has found itself humiliated, impotent and fearful. We did not go to their rescue and indeed the Western nations have done everything to make clear to the Poles and to the East Germans that we do not want them to follow the Hungarian lead. This has been one of the most outspoken, one of the clearest decisions of this NATO meeting - a common agreement not to encourage rebellion, not to hold out any hope of armed intervention or help for the enslaved peoples.

The United States delegation, led by Mr. Dulles, who once talked of rolling back the Iron Curtain and liberating the peoples, is now urging the peoples of Eastern Europe to be patient, urging them not to strike for freedom lest they destroy the world and all hope of freedom.

This question of what's happening in Eastern Europe and of a possible new approach to the Russians in their own dilemma has been one of the principal and most exciting items under study at this meeting. From it emerges two schools of thought, which on the surface seems to be in direct contradiction, but which, perhaps, supplement each other. One school argues that the Russians faced with revolt in their empire and unable to solve their own problems will launch a war to divert attention from their troubles and to siphon off the surplus energies and protests of their own people. Many people here believe that this was the primary source of World War I, that it happened that way because the Russians ~~xxxx~~ Tzar and the Austro-Hungarian monarchy couldn't solve its internal problems.

There's another school of thought here, however, which discounts this as unreal theorizing. This school says that in the atomic age every government, even the most ruthless, knows perfectly well that a war cannot solve any problem now, it will simply destroy the entire world. As for a limited, non-atomic war, if such a thing were still possible, Russia today is in a much worse position to start that kind of war than ever before, for Russia can no longer count on the satellite armies. In fact any war may be the signal for mass uprisings against the Communists. And so, two theories today, both of them complimentary in fact; and that is, as one American official has put it: "This is a time of great danger, but also a time of great hope; of unparalleled opportunities for wisdom or for mischief."

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris; I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1956
7:45--8:00P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The NATO ministers ended their meeting in Paris today by issuing a joint communique. It says that during their four days of talks the ministers discussed the Soviet penetration in the Middle East and agreed to keep developments in the area "under close and continuing observation." The ministers , it says, "emphasized in particular" the need for rapid progress in clearing the Suez Canal..and the need for a permanent political settlement between Israel and the Arab states, including an equitable solution of the Arab refugee problem. Agreement was also reached on the need for wider and more intimate consultation among members of NATO. A directive was approved taking into account Russia"s increased military capabilities. The United States agreed to supply its NATO allies with modern weapons capable of firing atomic charges, but pointed out that, under existing law, possession of atomic warheads must be retained by the United States. This was in reply to a request by our European allies yesterday that they be supplied with tactical atomic weapons . The communique says the NATO countries have followed the course of events in Hungary with "shock and revulsion". The United Nations, it says, should continue its efforts through the pressure of world opinion..to induce Russia to withdraw its forces from Hungary "and right the wrongs done to the Hungarian people." The final communique states that the peoples of Eastern Europe should have the right to choose their own governments.

The biggest steel plant in Hungary was shut down today by a new sitdown strike. The Csepel steel works..near Budapest..is reported surrounded by Soviet tanks. Other factories in Budapest are still idle as the result of walkouts protesting the arest of labor leaders. The puppet government announced that..henceforth ..all persons taking part in public meetings without permission will be subject to arrest. Under this decree, demonstrators can be imprisoned up to five yesrs. The government said passports tto leave Hungary will be denied all men under the age of 50.

The Soviet press today continued its attacks on the United States. Pravda said Americnn leaders are trying to incite "the fascist remanats" in Hungary .. and set up in the center of Europe "a new hot-bed of war". In East Germany, the party newspaper accused the United States ..and its NATO allies ..of plotting another world war.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly has voted to debate Soviet charges of American interference in the satellite states. The charges will be taken up by the special political committee early next year.

The United States today called on Syria "to take immediate steps " to repair the pipeline which cariies oil from Iraq ..across Syria ..to the Mediterranean coast. The protest was lodged with the Syrian ambassador in Washington. The pipeline was sabotaged by Syrian nationalists early in November. Normally, it carries half a million barrels of oil a day.

Thirty thousand Egyptinn troops paraded in Cairo today in celebration of the withdrawal of British and French forces from Port Said. The Cairo radio says the last Anglo-French unit may leave tonight. Other sources say the final withdrawal probably will not take place for a few day.

Prime Minister Eden returned to London today from a three - week rest in the West Indies. Eden said he would stay on as prime minister "to face the difficulties we know lie ahead." He defended Anglo-French intervention in Egypt and expressed the view that there is "growing understanding" in the United States and Britain and France did what they had to do.

The government of Northern Ireland moved today to invoke wartime security regulations ..in an effort to cope with continuing border raids staged by the Irish Republican Army, otherwise known as the I.R.A. The outlawed "army" has as its goal the liberation of Northern Ireland, which is under British rule. In its latest raid ..last night..the I.R.A. attacked three police barracks. No casualties are reported.

President Eisenhower conferred with his cabinet today for the first time in three weeks. The meeting lasted two and a half hours. The President accepted ..with regret..the resignation of Clarence A. Davis as undersecretary of the interior. Davis said he is leaving the government because of "personal considerations."

A federal judge today fined attorneys John Neff and Elmer Parman 25-hundred dollars each for failing to register under the the Lobbying Act. Their employer..the Superior Oil Company..was..fined 10-thousand dollars for "aiding and abetting" their failure to register. Charges that they sought by offering a 25-hundred-dollar campaign contribution to Senator Francis Case to influence his vote on the Natural Gas Bill were dropped. Disclosure of the offer came from Case himself, who later voted against the measure. Both attorneys also received a suspended sentence of 12 months in jail.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has been covering the NATO conference which was faced with a greater variety of problems than at any time since its creation at the start of the cold war. And, certainly, the problems were never more grave. For the observations of a reporter who covered the meeting at first hand, we switch now to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: What had been billed in advance as the most critical meeting of the Atlantic Alliance now has come to an end, and the Ministers of the 15 NATO countries have already begun to leave Paris to get back in a hurry to their own capitals and their own national problems. Mr. John Foster Dulles is, at this moment, winging his way back to Washington, via the South Atlantic route because of storms on the North Atlantic, a not inappropriate symbolism of this meeting. Mr. Dulles wasted no time getiing out of here. He left within a few hours of approving the final communique. He was anxious to report to President Eisenhower before the arrival on Sunday of Mr. Nehru of India.

Mr. Dulles is concerned about the Nehru visit . He wants it to go off smoothly, with a maximum of courtesy. American officials here are well aware of the acute sensitivity of Asian leaders and Mr. Dulles has stressed this in the NATO meeting. He told his allies that every effort must be made to re - assure the non-committed peoples of Asia and Africa that NATO members were not taking unilateral decisions on world affairs without first taking into account the interests of peoples who are not members of NATO. Mr. Dulles' anxiety about this resulted in a delay and a change in the final communique of this meeting.

The original draft had included a paragraph about a NATO decision to tighten the alliance through a system of consultations and then it went on to state NATO's aim in the Midde East. Mr. Dulles objected to the wording. He argued that it might offend some of the Middle East nations who would resent NATO taking decisions about their area without first considering the interests of the nations most directly involved.

Now this incident was, in itself, of little importance for the point was quickly was redrafted in good time and in good spirit, bit it is illustrative of one of the major developments of this meeting and indeed of world affairs. It illustrates the fact that the world has changed this year- changed in a most extraordinary way; and even ihe greatest powers and the greatest alliances must now be sensitive to the desires, to the fears and to the aspirations of the very samll nations defying big nations, a year of the turning of the worm in every corner of the globe.

In the past few weeks, the entire world seems to have turned topsy-turby and inside out. The Soviet Empire, once regarded as a monolithic bloc, has begun to disintegrate violently in Hungary, in Poland and even ihe first signs of a fissure in the monolithic Communist bloc inside the Soviet Union. However, this once hoped for development did not bring the joy of victory that the West might have been expected to experience, for it coincided with a similar disintegration of the NATO Alliance, during the period of Russia's own difficulties.

The West also suddenly realized that the explosion in Hungary and Poland might send shock waves into East Germany and involve us all in a Third World War. So, instead of welcoming and encouraging the brave Hungarians, the West has found itself humiliated, impotent and fearful. We did not go to their rescue and indeed the Western nations have done everything to kake clear to the Poles and to theEast Germans that we do not want them to follow the Hungarian lead. This has been one of the most outspoken, one of the clearest decisions of this NATO meeting - a common agreement not to encourage rebellion, not to hold out any hope of armed intervention or help for the enslaved peoples.

The United States delegation, led by Mr. Dulles, who once talked of rolling back the Iron Curtain and liberating the peoples, is not urging the poeples of Eastern Europe to be patient, urging them not to strike for freedom lest they destroy the world and all hope of freedom.

This question of what's happening in Eastern Enrope and of a possible new approach to the Russians in their own dilemma has been one of the principal and most exciting items under study at this meeting. From it emerges two schools of thought, which on the surface seems to be in direct contradiction, but which, perhaps, supplement each other. One school argues that the Russians faced with revolt in their empire and unable to solve their own problems will launch a war to divert attention from their troubles and to siphon off the surplus energies and protests of their own people. Many people here believe that this was the primary source of World War I, that it happened that way because the Russian Tzar and the Austro-Hungariann monarchy couldn't solve its internal problems.

There's another school of thought here, however, which discounts this as unreal theorizing. This shcool says that in the atomic age every government, even the most ruthless, knows perfectly well that a war cannot solve any problem now, it will simply destroy the entire world. As for a limited, non-atomic war, war, is such a thing were still possible, Russia today is in a much worse position to start that kind of war than ever before, for Russia can no longer count on the satellite armies. In fact any war may be the signal for mass uprisings against the Communists. And so, two theories today, both of them complimentary in fact' and that is, as one American official has put it: "This is a time of great danger, but also a time of great hope; of unparalleled opportunities for wisdom or for mischief."

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Those were the observations of David Schoenbrun on the NATO Council meeting which ended today in Paris.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Jan Masaryk once told this reporter that in a world where there is no security for little nations, there is no security for big nations. The NATO ministers were concerned with this. For there is nothing in the situation in Eastern Europe..or in the Middle East..that would disprove the wisdom of these words, spoken more than ten years ago.

Good Night and good luck.

Collingwood for Murrow Mon., Dec. 17, 1956

Good evening:

Russia and Poland have signed an agreement, governing the deployment of Soviet troops on Polish territory. The text of this agreement... signed today in Warsaw... has not been released. But CBS News Correspondent Richard C. Hottelet (who is in Warsaw) describes it as a bill of particulars, a treaty boiling down the broad principles agreed on in negotiations in Moscow last month. In these talks (between Soviet leaders and the Polish Titoist, Wladyslaw Gomulka) it was agreed that Soviet troops would not be shifted about in Poland without the approval of the Warsaw government, that they would not be used as an instrument of political pressure, and that when off base, these Russian soldiers... and their families... would be subject to Polish law. These are the principles incorporated in the new agreement signed today. Moscow promises not to infringe on Polish sovereignty. But the most important fact, Hottelet says, is that Russian troops are going to stay in Poland under the Warsaw Pact.

→

The Soviet foreign minister, Dmitri Shepilov, flew to Warsaw today to sign the accord. So did the Soviet defense minister, Marshal Zhukov. And their absenge from Moscow apparently has postponed the meeting of Russia's powerful Communist Party central committee, which was expected to get underway today. Reports from Moscow say the meeting has been delayed for at least three days and may not be held until next month.

Today... in Rome... Palmiro Togliatti was re-elected secretary general of the Italian Communist Party. The vote by the party central committee was unanimous, and Togliatti... as for so many years in the past... appears in firm control. The party itself is weaker in Italy than it has been for a long time.

Today... in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania... two world leaders sat down together to discuss the international situation. The two statesmen, of course, are President Eisenhower and Jawaharlal Nehru, the prime minister of India. For a first-hand report on their meeting today... at the President's Gettysburg farm... we are going to switch now to Charles van Fremd in Gettysburg. (runs 2 mins, returns to C.C. in N.Y.)

Russia has rejected an American protest against the stationing of Soviet tanks in front of the United States Legation in Budapest. The American protest was made on December 6th. In Washington today, the Soviet charge d'affaires called the protest "an unjustified attempt to intervene in relations between the U.S.S.R. and the Hungarian Peoples' Republic." The State Department said afterward that the American protest "still stands". ~~It was pointed out to the Soviet diplomat that Russia would not want foreign tanks on the sidewalk in front of the Soviet mission in Washington.~~ The Department, ~~for its part,~~ rejected the Soviet charge that "outsiders" are stirring up the Hungarian revolt. It said the cause of the revolt would be "very evident" if United Nations observers were allowed to visit Hungary.

Inside Hungary, two more freedom-fighters have been sentenced to death. Both were charged with taking part in a shooting incident in Budapest last week. Indications are that the general strike has ended, but factory production is still crippled by shortages of coal and electricity. A small passport office in Budapest was swamped by older men trying to leave the country. The puppet government will only allow men over 55 to apply.

In the United Nations General Assembly today, Russia threatened to block the expansion of the Security Council to thirteen members... unless Red China is admitted to the U.N. The Latin American countries feel that the Security Council... and other United Nations groups... should be expanded, to keep pace with the growth of the world organization, which will have 80 members tomorrow with the expected admission of Japan. The Security Council now has eleven members.

Gasoline rationing went into effect in Britain today, as a result of the closing of the Suez Canal. And in France, the government ordered ~~[illegible]~~ gas and oil prices increased by 9 percent. A gallon of gas in Paris now costs 79 cents.

British Prime Minister Eden made his first appearance in Parliament today, after returning to England from a three-week rest cure in Jamaica. Sir Anthony was roundly applauded by the Conservatives (while the Labourites maintained stony silence), but he took little part in today's proceedings. The main speech was made by Foreign Secretary Lloyd, who told the House of Commons that arrangements for clearing the Suez Canal "are not going as well as I had hoped." Lloyd said that British and French salvage ships could clear the canal in seven weeks, if given the chance. But he insisted that the ships be operated by their own crews... and that their safety be guaranteed. CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun quotes an informed source in Paris as saying that Britain and France will pull their salvage equipment out of Port Said on Wednesday, unless they receive formal assurance of United Nations protection by tomorrow night. Schoenbrun says the source cited the action of Egyptian guerrillas over the week-end as evidence that real danger exists.

Sir Hugh Stockwell, the commander of Anglo-French forces in Port Said, told correspondents today that 27 guerrillas... and one British officer... were killed in that action. He said he has "every hope " the withdrawal will be completed without further interruption. But tonight a sniper's bullet killed a French soldier as he was going on board an L.S.T. ~~will be completed without further interruption.~~ According to the latest unofficial word, the last British-French contingent will leave Port Said late Wednesday or Thursday.

→

~~Three hundred and eighty-four Italian civilians sailed from Port Said today on the passenger ship Argentina. Many Europeans have been anxious to leave Egypt before the departure of the last British and French troops.~~

The United Nations commander, General Burns, announces that tomorrow Israeli troops in the Sinai will pull back another 15 and a half miles, making 46 miles in all that they will have withdrawn from the east bank of the Suez Canal. Burns said his forces will leave Port Said as soon as possible after the Anglo-French withdrawal.

~~Egypt was the scene today of a two-hour general strike, protesting the continued membership of Iraq in the pro-Western Baghdad Pact. Only last night, the premier of Iraq told his people over the Baghdad Radio that cries of dissent from other Arab countries are aimed "solely to destroy Iraq." Iraq, he said, has three enemies: Communism, "aggressive zionism", and France. In Jordan, Syria and Lebanon the protest strike lasted the whole day. All these countries have accused Iraq of following a pro-British line.~~

In Washington, the Supreme Court has refused to reconsider its decision of November 13th, banning racial segregation on bus lines in Montgomery, Alabama. Official notice of the decision will now be served.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has announced an increase in railroad freight rates. Eastern railroads are granted permission to raise their freight rates by 7 percent; a 5 percent boost in freight rates was authorized for railroads operating west of the Mississippi.

53:40

collingwood think 17 December 1956

It would have been fascinating to have been in Gettysburg today, an invisible witness to the intimate conversations between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Nehru. For this is surely one of those meetings which symbolizes and brings into focus the main currents of our contemporary history. It is so right that these two men should know each other, for each is so representative of so much in our world. Eisenhower, with the map of the United States written on his face, and, on Nehru's, the map of Asia. Each typifies with admirable fidelity the image which a large part of the world likes to hold of itself... Eisenhower, frank and open, impulsive and emotional, no intellectual but instinctively separating first things from second things, radiating goodwill, tending to express himself in, and to test his ideas by, the tried and true maxims (some would say the clichés) of western morality...

Nehru, much more complicated, and much more self-contained, all subtlety, and sensitivity, seeing things in grays instead of black and white, an intellectual, full of doubt and re-appraisal, but full of earnestness, too, and idealism .... encompassing in his personality, no less than Eisenhower in his, the attitudes his part of the world finds admirable.... It would be instructive to watch the confrontation of these two, and a good deal may depend on what they make of each other.

Those in each entourage who pass out tips and hints say that each respects the other and is prepared to like him very much. They would probably be making those hints, whatever the true case, but there is plenty of reason to believe that the mutual regard is genuine enough. After all, different as they are, Eisenhower and Nehru have a good deal in common. They are both of an age -- Eisenhower is 66, Nehru, 67. Both possess great personal charm They are both supremely effective politicians within the context of their own environment, not through mastery of traditional techniques, but because politics is a natural extension of their personalities. They both wield immense moral power and are conscious of doing so. They are both dedicated to apeaceful solution of the world's outstanding problems. And, as important as anything, each has an unshakable faith in the power of words, ideas and gestures as influences upon events.

There are, of course, many things which would tend to make Eisenhower and Nehru suspicious of one another. There are real differences of outlook and interest, and there are the myths about each other to which, in some degree, each must be subject. There is an Asiatic myth about Eisenhower, that he's an agent of Imperialism, and that his anti-Russian stubborness is leading the world to war. There is a Western myth about Nehru, that his independence in foreign affairs is only a mask for a position that is actually pro-Communist.

Each has ~~done things~~ taken positions which must have seemed to the other consistent with the myth, but each is man of the world enough ~~to~~ and politician enough to understand why. ~~They~~ These two have had enough to do with persons and issues to take each other as they are.

Certainly, the forces of history are such as to exert pressure toward an atmosphere of mutual understanding between the two men. For Nehru, Eisenhower's America must inevitably be regarded as a factor working towards the kind of world ~~he~~ Nehru wants. And ~~to~~ for Eisenhower, Nehru's India, with all its exasperating obliqueness of direction, must be considered as aprimary bulwark against the spread of Communism in the East. The time is fortuitous for real understanding between the two. Both worlds have reason to hope that it is taking place.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Dryer.

FOOTNOTE

Louis Armstrong, in London to play his horn for Hungarian relief, was greeted at the airport by no less a personage than the Honorable Gerald Lascelles, first cousin to the Queen. Said Satchmo to the Honorable Gerald, "Thank you, Daddy." A British reporter, under the impression that Armstrong was a university man, asked what he had taken in college. "Everything," said Armstrong "that wasn't nailed down."

THIS IS C.C..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW NEWS - CHARLES VON FREMD FROM GETTYSBURG

MONDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: Today in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania two world leaders sat down together to discuss the international situation. The two statesmen, of course, are President Eisenhower and Jawaharial Nehru, the Prime Minister of India. For a first hand report on their meeting today at the President's Gettysburg farm, we're going to switch now to Charles Von Fremd in Gettysburg.

VON FREMD: This has been a long and busy day and probably a very important one in Gettysburg. President Eisenhower and Indian Prime Minister Nehru have been in almost continuous consultation under most unusual conditions. Unusual because they are the only two men involved in this conference that joins East and West. In complete solitude they discussed the many international problems in a glassed-in porch at the rear of the President's farmhouse overlooking the historic battlegrounds, the site of the turning point of the Civil War.

There was only one short break in their conference. Early in the afternoon, they bowed to the pleas of the picture industry to pose for a horde of American and Indian photographers. White House correspondents are accustomed to President Eisenhower's riding on the scene in a jeep with a fringe on the top. He looks right at home that way. But Nehru, sitting by the Chief Executive's side, seemed out of place. He appeared a trifle uncomfortable, clad in a sand-colored Ghandi cap and jodhpurs. Yet he managed a rather embarrassed smile throughout the twenty minute photo session.

Later, the two men went on a private tour of the President's farm, then traveled by station wagon to the battlegrounds and the statue of the famous Confederate general, Robert E. Lee. Mr.

Eisenhower explained briefly Picket's Charge, then it was back to the serious problems of today.

Before they retire, late this evening, the two leaders will have talked together for close to fifteen hours. A veil of secrecy surrounds their talks. Official spokesmen for the two countries give no indication of how the meeting is going, probably because they don't know. This is a two-man conference, highly informal, but most personal and secret in nature. A popular Broadway show song of a few years back was "Getting To Know You". That's what the President and Prime Minister are doing. The measure of their success will have important repercussions on the world scene in the days ahead.

Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW NEWS - CHARLES VON FREMD FROM GETTYSBURG

MONDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1956
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: Today in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania two world leaders sat down together to discuss the international situation. The two statesmen, of course, are President Eisenhower and Jawaharial Nehru, the Prime Minister of India. For a first hand report on their meeting today at the President's Gettysburg farm, we're going to switch now to Charles Von Fremd in Gettysburg.

VON FREMD: This has been a long and busy day and probably a very important one in Gettysburg. President Eisenhower and Indian Prime Minister Nehru have been in almost continuous consultation under most unusual conditions. Unusual because they are the only two men involved in this conference that joins East and West. In complete solitude they discussed the many international problems in a glassed-in porch at the rear of the President's farmhouse overlooking the historic battlegrounds, the site of the turning point of the Civil War.

There was only one short break in their conference. Early in the afternoon, they bowed to the pleas of the picture industry to pose for a horde of American and Indian photographers. White House correspondents are accustomed to President Eisenhower's riding on the scene in a jeep with a fringe on the top. He looks right at home that way. But Nehru, sitting by the Chief Executive's side, seemed out of place. He appeared a trifle uncomfortable, clad in a sand-colored Ghandi cap and jodhpurs. Yet he managed a rather embarrassed smile throughout the twenty minute photo session.

Later, the two men went on a private tour of the President's farm, then traveled by station wagon to the battlegrounds and the statue of the famous Confederate general, Robert E. Lee. Mr.

Eisenhower explained briefly Picket's Charge, then it was back to the serious problems of today.

Before they retire, late this evening, the two leaders will have talked together for close to fifteen hours. A veil of secrecy surrounds their talks. Official spokesmen for the two countries give no indication of how the meeting is going, probably because they don't know. This is a two-man conference, highly informal, but most personal and secret in nature. A popular Broadway show song of a few years back was "Getting To Know You". That's what the President and Prime Minister are doing. The measure of their success will have important repercussions on the world scene in the days ahead.

Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Russia and Polald have signed an agreement, governing the deployment of Soviet troops on Polish territory. The text of this agreement..signed today in Warsaw..has not been released. But CBS News Correspondent Richard Hottelet (who is in Warsaw) describes it as a bill of particulrrs, a treaty boiling down the broad principles agreed on in negotiations in Moscow last month. In these talks, (between Soviet leaders and the Polish Titoist, Wladyslaw Gomulka) it was agreed that Soviet troops would not be shifted about in Poland without the approval of the Warsaw government, that they would not be used as an instrument of [illegible] pressure, and that when off base, these Russian soldiers ...and their families..would be subject to Polish law. These are thee principles incorporated in the new agreement signed today. Moscow promises not to infringe on Polish sovereignty. But the most important face, Hotelet says, is that Russian troops are going to stay in Poalnd under the Warsaw Pact.

The Soviet foreign minister, Dmitri Shepilov, flew to Warsaw today to sign the accord. So did the Soviet defense minister, Marshal Ahukov. And their absence from Moscow apparently has postponed the meeting of Russia's powerful Communist Party central committee, which was expected to get underway today. Reports from Moccow say the meeting has been delayed for at least three days and may not be held until next month.

Today in Gettysburg, Pnnnsylvania, two world leaders sat down together to discuss the international situation. The two statesmen, of course, are President Eisenhower and Jawaharlal Nehru, the prime minister of India. For a first-hand report on their meeting today..at the President's Gettysburg farm..we are going to switch not wo Charles von Fremd in Gettysburg.

VON FREMD: This has been a long and busy day and probably a very important one in Gettysburg. President Eisenhower and Indian Prime Minister Nehru have been in almost continuous consultation under most unusual conditions. Unusual because they are the only two men involved in this conference that joins East and West. In complete solitude they discussed the many international problems in a glassed-in porch at the rear of the President's farmhouse overlooking the historic battlegrounds, the site of the turning point of the Civil War.

There was only one short break in their conference. Early in the afternoon, they bowed to the pleas of the picture industry to pose for a horde of American and Indian photographers. White House correspondents are accustomed to President Eisenhower*s riding in the scene in a jeep with a fringe on top. He looks right at home that way. But Nehru, sitting by the Chief Executive's side, seemed out of place. He appeared a trifle uncomfortable, clad in sand-colored Ghandi cap and jodhpurs. Yet he managed a rather embarassed smile throughout the twenty minute photo session .

Later, the two men went on a private tour of the President's farm, then traveled by station wagon to the battlegrounds and the stature of the famous Condederate general, Robert E. Lee. Mr. Eisenhower explained briefly Pickett's Charge, then it was back to the serious problems of today.

Before they retire, late this evening, the two leaders will have talked together for close to fifteen hours. A veil of secrecy surrounds their talks. Official spokesmen for the two countries give no indication of how the meeting is going, probably because they don't know. This is a two-man conference, highly informal, but most personal and secret in nature. A popular Broadway show song of a few years back was "Getting to Know You". That's what the President and Prime Minister are doing. The measure of their success will have important repercussions on the world scene in the days ahead.

Now back to Charles Collingwood in New York.

Russia has rejected an American protest against the stationing of Soviet tanks in front of the United States Legation in Budapest. The American protest was made on December 6th. In Washington today, the Soviet charge d'affaires called the protest "an unjustified attempt to intervene in relations between the U.S.S.R. and the Hungarian Peoples' Republic." The State Deartment said afterwards that the American pootest "still stands." The Department rejected the Soviet charge that "outsiders" are stirring up the Hungarian revolt. It said the cause of the revolt would be "very evident" if United Nations observers were allowed to visit Hungary.

Gasoline rationing went into effect in Britain today, as a result of the closing of the Suez Canal. And in France, the government ordered gas and oil prices increased by 9 percent. A gallon of gas in Paris now costs 79 cents.

British Prime Minister Eden made his first appearance in Parliament today, after returning to England from a three-week rest cure in Jamaica. Sir Anthony was roundly applauded by the Conservatives (while the Labourites maintaine a stony silence), but he took little part in today's proceedings. The main speech was made by Foreign Secretary Lloyd, who told the House of Commons that arrangements for clearing the Suez Canal "are not going as well as I had hoped." Lloyd said that British and French salvage ships could clear the canal in seven weeks, if given the chance. But he insisted that the ships be operated by their own crews..and that their safety be guaranteed. CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun quotes an informed source in Paris as saying that Britain and France will pull their salvage equipment out of Port Said on Wednesday, unless they receive formal assurance of United Nations protection by tomorrow night. Schoenbrun says the source cited the action of Egyptian guerrillas over the weekend as evidence that real danger exists.

Sir Hugh Stockwell, the commander of Antlo-French forces in Port Said , told correspondents today that 27 guerrillas..and one British officer..were killed in that action. He said he was "every hope" the withdrawal will be completed without further interruption. But tonight a sniper's bullet killed a French soldier as he was going on board an L.S.T.. According to the latest unofficial word, the last British - French contingent will leave Port Said late Wednesday or Thursday.

The United Nations commander, General Burns, announces that tomorrow Israeli troops in the Sinai will pull back another 15 and a half miles, making 46 miles in all that they will have withdrawn from the east bank of the Suez Canal. Burns said his forces will leave Port Said as soon as possible after the Anglo-French withdrawal.

In Washington, the Supreme Court has refused to reconsider its decision of November 13th banning racial segregation on bus lines in Montgomery, Alabama. Official notice of the decision will now be served.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has announced an increase in railroad freight rates. Eastern railroads are granted permission to raise their freight rates by 7 percent; a 5 percent boost in freight rates was authorized for railroads operating west of the Mississippi.

It would have been fascinating to have been in Gettysburg today, an invisible witness to the intimate conversations between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Nehru. For this is surely one of these meetings which symbolizes and brings into focus the main currents of our contemporary history. It is so right that these two men should know each other, for each is to represnntative of so much in our world. Eisenhower, with the map of the United States written on his face, and, on Nehru's , the map of Asia. Each typifies with admirable fidelity the image which a large part of the world likes to hold of itself. Eisenhower, frank and open, impulsive and emotional, no intellectual, but instinctively separating first things from second things, radiating goodwill, tending to express himself in, and to test his ideas by, the tried and true maxims , (some would say cliches), of western morality. Nehru, much more complicated and much more self-contained all subtelty and sensitivity , seeing things in grays instead of black and white, in intellectual, full of doubt and re-appraisal, but full of earnastness, too, and idealism..encompassing in his personality, no less than Eisenhower in his, the attitudes his part of the world finds admirable. It would be instructive to watch the confrontation of these two, and a good deal may depend on what they make of each other.

Those in each entourage who pass out tips and hints say that each respects the other and is prepared to like him very mcuh They would probably be a making those things whatever the true case, but there is plenty of reason to believe that the mutual regard is genuine enough. After all, different as they are, Eisenhower and Nehru have a good deal in common. They are both of an age--Eisenhower is 66 and Nehru is 67. Both possess great personal charm. They are both supremelyeeffective politicians within the context of their own enviornment, not through mastery of traditional techniques, but becaus politics is a natural extension of their personalities. They both wield immense moral power and are conscious of doing so. They are both dedicated to a peaceful solution of the world's outstanding problems. And, as impot ant as anything, each has an unshakable faith in the power of words, ideas and gestures as influence upon events.

There are, of cuurse, many things which would tend to make Eisenhower and Nehru suspicious of one another. There are real differences of outlook and interest, and there are the myths about each other to which, is some degree, each must be subject. There is an Asiatic myt about Eisenhower, that he's an agent of Imperialism, and that his anti-Russian stubborness is leading the world into war. There is a Western myth about Nehru, that his independence in foreign affairs is only a mask for a position that is actually pro-communist. Each has tkken positions which must have seemed to the other consistent with the myth, but each is man of the world enough and politician enough to understand why. These two have had enough to do with persons and issues to take each other as they are.

Certainly, the forces of history are such as to exert pressure toward an atmosphere of mutual understanding between the two men. For Nehru, Eisenhower's America must inevitably be regarded as a factor working towards the kind of world Nehru wants. And for Eisenhower, Nehru's India, with all its exasperating obliqueness of direction, must be considered as a primary bulwark against the spread of Communism in the East. The time is fortuitous for real understanding between the two. Both worlds have reason to hope that it is taking place.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: Louis Armstrong, in London to play his horn for Hungarian relief, was greeted at the airport by no less a personage than the Honorable Gerlald Lascelles, first cousin to the Queen. Said Satchmo to the Honorable Gerald, "Thank you, Daddy." A British reporter, under the impression that Armstrong was a university man, asked what he had taken in college."Everything",said Armstrong, "that wasn't nailed down."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.....SEE YOU TOMORROW.

Collingwood for Murrow Tues., Dec. 18, 1956

Good evening:

Three and a half hours from now, Prime Minister Nehru of India will speak to the American people from Washington. The text of the speech already has been released. Nehru will say that he has "greatly profited" from his talks with President Eisenhower... that India's [redacted] policy, of neutrality, follows from its determination to maintain friendly relations with all countries. "Such a policy," he will say, "does not mean submission to what we consider evil." Nehru will say that what has happened in Egypt and Hungary shows that "the most powerful countries cannot revert to old colonial methods, or impose their domination over weak countries." He will warn of the danger of war... and express conviction that "peace will triumph." The address will be carried by CBS Radio at 11:15 tonight, Eastern Standard Time.

The United Nations General Assembly voted unanimously today to admit Japan as its 80th member. And then, 11 years after he signed the articles of surrender on the battleship Missouri in Tokyo Bay, Foreign Minister Shigemitsu took his seat as head of the Japanese delegation. In a maiden speech, Shigemitsu called for an early ban on nuclear weapons. "As the only country which has experienced the horrors of the atomic bomb," he said, "Japan knows its tragic consequences." ~~He praised the U.N. for its action in the Middle East...and called the creation of an international police force an "epochal" development. "No one," he warned, "can say with certainty that a situation like that in the Middle East will not arise again." Shigemitsu said the economic development of Asia can promote peace and, for that reason, Japan welcomes any effort to promote the freer flow of goods across national boundaries. The Japanese people, he said, "cannot but feel deep sympathy for the plight of the people of Hungary."~~

Late today... in the General Assembly... Britain and France accused Egypt of violating human rights in its treatment of British and French nationals. The charges included expulsion and confiscation of property. Egypt ~~[illegible]~~ reacted by circulating a memorandum... charging that Egyptian nationals are being mistreated in Britain and France. Egypt Also said that in recent days "no less than 30 persons" have been killed by the Anglo-French forces in Port Said.

A tentative agreement was reached today on one phase of clearing the Suez Canal. This is a touchy problem, and the agreement reached in Port Said today was between British naval authorities and two United Nations representatives---General Burns, commander of the U.N. police force, and AMERICAN General Wheeler, who is representating the U.N. in the whole salvage operation. Under the agreement, the British and French salvage ships would fly the United Nations flag. The ships would be operated by British and French crews in civilian clothes. And the United Nations would provide armed sentries for the protection of these crews against attack. The agreement, as we said, is tentative. It still has not been approved by Secretary General Hammarskjold, and it must have the approval of President Nasser. An Egyptian spokesman said tonight that he would not comment on the agreement until the last British and French soldier leaves Egyptian soil. The British and French, of course, have said their salvage ships will pull out with the last troops, unless there is an agreement beforehand. And so, at the moment, the outlook is not good.

Secretary of State Dulles held his first news conference today in two months... and, as you might expect, it covered a wide field. One question concerned speculation that the United States might pull its forces out of Western Europe---if Russia did the same in the satellite states. Dulles said there has been no change in Eastern Europe sufficient to justify reappraisal of the situation. There is no plan, he said, to reduce our military strength in Europe, although some units may be streamlined to give them greater mobility. He suggested that a review of the situation might be justified if the satellites ever became genuinely independent. But the United States, he said, in wishing their independence does not want to see Russia surrounded by a ring of unfriendly states. He would like to reassure Soviet leaders on this score.

Dulles said that if world tensions have increased, it is the fault of these same men in the Kremlin. Russia, he said, tore up the agreement to unify Germany---it is responsible for the tragic events in Hungary, and it has made every effort to stir up trouble in the Middle East. Dulles said the Suez Canal must be cleared as soon as possible. The United States stands by its offer to underwrite a permanent settlement between Israel and the Arab states, but Dulles thinks it highly unlikely such a settlement can be worked out under the present circumstances.

He said that... in his opinion... relations between the United States, Britain and France were much improved by last week's NATO meeting in Paris. Right now, a NATO committee is studying President Eisenhower's answer to Soviet Premier Bulganin's latest disarmament proposals. In response to another question, Dulles said he is unaware of any proposal for a "little" Marshal Plan for Western Europe. And the United States, he said, is still firmly opposed to admitting Communist China to the U.N. He said sympathetic consideration is being given the idea of inviting Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia to visit Washington. A Tito visit might be useful, he said, but no decision has been made.

British Prime Minister Eden told the House of Commons today that his desire to visit the United States "is very well known". Eden made the statement in expressing his government's hope that confidence and cooperation between the United States and Britain will soon be restored. The Labour Party has scored Eden for damaging Anglo-American relations by invading Egypt.

Vice President Nixon took off for Austria this afternoon, for a first-hand study of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon told reporters at the airport, "I hope my mission will contribute to the cause of freedom of people who want to be free, wherever they are." In Austria, he will explore the possibility of admitting more Hungarian refugees to the United States. The quota is now set at 21-thousand, 500.

Today, the Communist-controlled Budapest Radio denounced Nixon as "a leading representative of the big stick policy in the United States."

In Washington, Attorney General Brownell said that 40 Olympic athletes, who refuse to return to their homes in the satellite countries, will be granted asylum in the United States. Brownell said the athletes... who took part in the Olympic Games in Melbourne... are Hungarians, Roumanians and Czechs.

The Subversive Activities Control Board ruled today... for the second time... that the Communist Party in the United States is under the domination of Moscow. A second ruling was required because the Supreme Court had questioned the reliability of the testimony of several witnesses, including Harvey Matusow. The board expunged this testimony but decided that, without it, the evidence still supported its original ruling, handed down three years ago.

→

The Democratic National chairman... Paul Butler... said today that he is going ahead with plans for setting up a special committee to advise the party on legislative matters. Butler expressed regret that Democratic congressional leaders like House Speaker Rayburn and Senate Majority Leader Johnson had said they would boycott the committee. There was no intention, Butler said, to infringe on the party's leadership in Congress. On the other hand, he said, he took exception to the proposition that when a party is out of power, leadership is restricted to members of Congress. He said the advisory committee will hold its first meeting on January 4th.

think collingwood 18 December 1956

This being the Christmas season, one's mind turns naturally to Christmas gifts (if it hasn't already, it had better!... There are only five more shopping days). This is the time of the dog-eared list, the snippets of excess colored paper on the floor, the close calculation of parcel post schedules, and what do you give an eight-month old baby anyway?

You wouldn't know it from the crowded aisles, but the department stores, traditional barometers of Christmas giving, are running behind last year's selling pace. Various explanations are advanced for this, from the weather to the uncertainties of the international situation. But a friend of mine, his outlook jaundiced in the effort to fill a long Christmas list, has advanced the novel explanation that people aren't sending so much this year because the process of saturation has set in -- that after so many years of prosperity everybody has everything, and potential donors are giving up in despair.

Well, I doubt if that theory would hold water, but it is true that this year's purveyors of gift possibilities are concentrating on items which no one could possibly need and which require a stretched imagination to think of anyone even using. A man I know named Bliss has made a study of some of these gift suggestions. His favorite is an item proposed by Brooks Brothers, the well known gentlemen's haberdashers. They're pushing a "yard of ale," a sort of glass trumpet, 36 inches long, which in days gone by is said to have been used as an instrument of justice. If a man could drink its contents of ale he was adjudged innocent. If not, guilty. Brooks Brothers describes this as a unique party enlivener. Well, its ~~unique, all right~~ theirs party! Costs 20 dollars.

Abercrombie and Fitch would like to tempt you with an electric fishscaler. Full of moving parts, it can also be used for sharpening knives, polishing reels, and, says Abercrombie and Fitch, for removing burrs from golf clubs. This costs a nickel less than the yard of ale or 19.95.

Then there's an outfit in Pittsburgh that's advertising shrunken heads. Not real ones, just replicas at a dollar and a half a copy. What a novel idea, to find a shrunken head in your Christmas stocking!

B. Altman and Co. suggests for the man who has everything, a little miniature wine press that runs by a clockwork mechanism. It was given to a friend by the Duchess of Orleans in 1742 and costs five hundred dollars. If the man who has everything doesn't like that, Altmans has a little sundial with a little burning glass that fires a little cannon at the stroke of noon. That's a little less.

If you really want to spend money, Tiffany is advertising a diamond necklace for 63 thousand 8 hundred dollars -- thats tax included. If that's too much they have some ear rings for 28 thousand 6 hundred.

Of course, practical gifts are suggested, too. You just might not think of them. Like the little block and tackle Abercrombie and Fitch sells to get cars out of ditches. Weighs a pound, costs 11.98. Mark Cross, the distinguished leather goods people, want you to look at their line of fire extinguishers. Remington Rand has a flashlight that never needs batteries, recharges by plugging into a wall socket. And the Bell Telephone System thinks that an extra telephone would make a perfect gift.

After all these choices (and the subsequent bills) perhaps the most thoughtful suggestion of all comes from Good Housekeeping which suggests that a wife might give her husband a "paid up medical check-up at a good clinic."..... Or maybe a paid up course with a good psychiatrist.

Perhaps in revolt against all this, a group called Christmas For Kids has sprung up in New York. The idea here is that the giver makes a contribution to one of a list of ~~Christmas~~ children's charities in the name of

After all these choices (and the subsequent bills) perhaps the most thoughtful suggestion of all comes from Good Housekeeping which suggests that a wife might give her husband a "paid up medical check-up at a good clinic."....Or maybe a paid up course with a good psychiatrist.

Perhaps in revolt against all this, a group called Christmas for Kids has sprung up in New York. The idea here is that the giver makes a contribution in the name of a list of children's Charities in the name of the recipient, who gets a letter of thanks -- and presumably the staisfaction of not getting something he didn't want plus the knowledge that a little bit of good had been done in his name.

Come to think of it, something like that's not a bad idea for the man who has everything -- or even for the man who doesn't, but, like most of us, has enough.

FOOTNOTE

A poet took off today on the state of literature in our times. Randall Jarrell, who is serving as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress, deplored the modern taste for "instant literature, ready mixed literature." "The professional users of words," he says "process their product as if it were baby food, and we babies: all we have to do is open our mouths and swallow."

THIS IS C.C..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:
Three and a half hours from now, Prime Minister Nehru of India will speak to the American people from Washington. The text of the speech already has been released. Nehru will say that he has "greatly profited' from his talks with President Eisenhower..that India's policy, of neutrality, follows from its determination to maintain friendly relations with all countries."such a policy," "he will say, " does not mean submission to what we consider evil." Nehru will say that what has happened in Egypt and Hungary shows that "the most powerful countries cannot revert to old colonial methods, or impose their domination over weak countries." He will warn of the danger of war...and express conviction that "peace will triumph." The address will be carried by CBS Radio at 11:15 tonight, Eastern Standard Time.

The United Nations General Assembly voted unanimously today to admit Japan as its 80th member. And then, 11 years after he signed the articles of surrender on the battleship Missouri in Tokyo Bay, Foreign Minister Shigemitsu took his seat as head of the Japanese delegation. In a maiden speech, Shigemitsu called for an early ban on nuclear weapons. "as the only country which has experienced the horrors of the atomic bomb, he said, "Japan knows its tragic consequences."

Late today ..in the General Assembly..Britain and France accused Egypt of violating human rights in its treatment of British and French nationals. The charges included expulsion and confiscation of property. Egypt reacted by circulating a memorandum..charging that Egyptian nationals are being mistreated in Britain and Grance. Egypt also said in recent days that "no less than 30 persons" have been killed by the Anglo-French forces in Port Said.

A tentative agreement wasreached today on one phase of clearing the Suez Canal. This is a touchy problem, and the agreement reached in Port Said today was between British naval authorities and two United Nations representatives--General Burns, commander of the U.N. police force, and American General Wheeler, who is representing the U.N. in the whole salvage operation. Under the agreement, the British and French salvage ships would fly the United Nations flag. The ships would be operated by British and French crews in civilian clothes. And the United Nations would provide armed sentries for the protectoon of these crews against attack. The agreement, as we said, is tentative. It still has not been approved by Secretary General Hammarskjold, and it must have the approval of President Nasser. An Egyptian spokesman said tonight that he would not comment on the agreement until the last British and French soldier leaves Egyptian soil. The British an French, of course, have said their salvage ships will pull out with the last troops, unless there is an agreement beforehand. And so, at the moment, the outlook is not good.

Secretary of State Dulles hald his first news conference today in two months..and, as you might expect, it covered a wide field. One question concerned speculation that the United States might pull its forces out of Western Europe if Russia did the same in the satellite states. Dulles said there has been no change in Eastern Europe sufficient to justify reappraisal of the situation. There is no plan, he said, to reduce our military strength in Europe, although some units may be streamlined to give them greater mobility. He suggested that a review of the situation might be justified if the satellites ever became gunuinely independent. But the United States, he said, in wishing them independence, does not want to see Russia surrounded by a ring of unfriendly states. He would like to reassure Soviet leaders on this score.

Dulles said that if world tensions have increased, it is the fault of these same men in the Kremlin. Russia, he said, tore up the agreement to unify Germany--it is responsible for the tragic events in Hungary, and it has made every effort to stir up trouble in the Middle East. Dulles said the Suez Canal must be cleared as soon as possible. The United States stands by its offer to underwrite a permanent settlement between Israel and the Arab states, but Dulles things it highly unlikely such a settlement can be worked out under the present circumstances. He said that..in his opinion..relations between the United States, Britain and France were much improved by last week's NATO meeting in Paris. Right now, a NATO committee is studying President Eisenhower's answer to Soviet Premier Bulganin's latest disarmament proposals. In response to another question, Dulles said he is unaware of any proposal for a "little" Marshal Plan for Western Europe. And the United States, he said, is still firmly opposed to admitting Communist China to the U.N. He said sympathetic consideration is being given the idea of inviting Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia to visit Washington. A Tito visit might be useful, he said, but no decision has been mdde.

British Prime Minister Eden told the House of Commons today that his desire to visit the United States "is very well known" Eden made the statement in expressing his government's hope that confidence and cooperation between the United States and Britain will soon be restored. The Labour Party has scored Eden for damaging Anglo-American relations by invading Egypt.

Vice President Nixon took off for Austria this afternoon, for a first-hand study of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon told reporters at the airport, "I hope my mission will contirbute to the cause of freedom of people who want to be free, wherever they are." In Austria, he will explore the possibility of admitting more Hungarian refugees to the United States. The quota is now set at 21-thousand, 500.

Today, the Communist - controlled Budapest Radio denounced Nixon as " a leading representative of the big stick policy in the United States."

In Washington, Attorney General Brownell said that 40 Olympic athletes, who refuse to return to their homes in the satellite countries, will be granted asylum in the United States. Brownell said the athletes,.who took part in the Olympic Games in Melbourne..are Hungarians, Roumanians and Czechs.

The Subversive Activities Control Board ruled today , for the second time, that the Communist Party in the United States is under the domination of Moscow. A second ruling was required because the Supreme Court had questioned the reliability of the testimony of several witnesses, including Harvey Matusow. The board expunged this testimony but decided that, without it, the evidence still supported its original ruling, handed down trhee years ago.

The Democratic National chairman..Paul Butler..said today that he is going ahead with plans for setting up a special committee to advise the party on legislative matters. Butler expressed regret that Democratic congressional leaders like House Speaker Rayburn and Senate Majority Leader Johnson had said they would boycott the committee. There was no intention, Butler said, to infringe on the party's leadership in Congress. On the other hand, he said, he took exception to the proposition that when a party is out of power, leadership is restricted to members of Congress. He said the advisory committee will hold its first meeting on January 4th.

This being the Christmas season, one's mind turns naturally to Christmas gifts (if it hasn't already, it had better..There are only five more shopping days). This is the time of the dog-eared list, the snippets of excess colored paper on the floor, the close calculation of parcel post schedules, and what do you give an eight-month old baby anyway?

You wouldn't know it from the crowded aisles, but the department stores, traditional barometers of Christmas giving, arer running behind last year's selling pace. Various explanations are advanced for this, from the weather to the uncertainties of the international situation. But a friend of mine, his outlook jaundiced in the effort to fill a long Christmas list, has advanced the novel explanation that people aren't sending so much this year because the process of saturation has set in--that after so many years of prosperity everybody has everything, and potintial dolors are giving up in despair.

Well, I doubt if that theory would hold water, but it is true that this year's surveyors of gift possibilities are concentrating on items which no one could possibly need and which require a stretched imagination to think of anyone even using. A man I know named Bliss has made a study of some of these gift suggestions. Hss favorite is an item proposed by Brooks Brothers, the well known gentlemen's haberdashers. They're pushing a "yard of ale," a sort of glass trumpet, 36 inches long, which in days gone by is said to have been used as an instrument of justice. If a man could drink its contnets of ale he was adjuced innocent. If not, guilty. Brooks Brothees describes this as a unique Party enlivener. Well, its their party. Costs 20 dollars.

Abercrombie and Fitch would like to tempt you with an electric fishscaler. Full of moving parts, it can also be used for sharpening knives, polishing reels, and, says Abercrombie and Fitch, for removing burrs from golf clubs . This costs a nickel less than the yard of ale or 19.95.

Then there's an outfit in Pittsburgh that's advertising shrunken heads. Not real ones, just replicas at a dollar and a half a copy. What a novel idea, to find a shrunken head in your Christmas stocking.

B. Altman and Co. suggests for the man who has everything, a little miniature wine press that runs by a clockwork mechanism. It was given to a friend by the Duchess of Olreans in 1742 and costs five hundred dollars. If the man who has everything doesn't like that Altmans has a little sundial with a little burning glass that fires a little cannon at the stroke of noon. That's a little less.

It you really want to spend money, Tiffany is advertising a diamond necklace for 63 thousand 8 hundred dollars--thats tax included. If that's too much they have some ear rings for 28 thousand 6 hundred.

Of course, practical gifts are suggested, too. You just might not think of them. Like the little block and tackle Abercrombie and Fitch sells to get cars out of ditches. Weighs a pound, costs 11.98. Mark Cross, the distinguished leather goods people, want you to look at their line of fire extinguishers. Remington Rand has a flashlight that never needs batteries, recharges by plugging into a wall socket. And the Bell Telephone System thinks that an extra telephone would make a perfect gift.

After all these choices (and the subsequent bills) perhaps the most thoughtful suggestion of all comes from Good Housekeeping which suggests that a wife might give her husband a "paid up medical check-up at a good clinic.." or maybe a paid up course with a good psychiatrist.

Perhaps in revolt against all this, a group called Christmas For Kids has sprung up in New York. The idea here is that the giver makes a contribution to one of a list of children's charities in the name of the recipient, who gets a letter of thanks-- and presumably the satisfaction of not getting something he didn't want plus the knowledge that a little bit of good had been done in his name.

Come to think of it, something like that's not a bad idea for the man who doesn't, but, like most of us, has enough.

I'l be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News, but first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: A poet took off today on the state of literature in our times. Randall Jarrell, who is serving as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress, deplored the modern taste for "instant literature, ready mixed literature". "The professional users of words," he says "process their product as if it were baby food, and we babies: all we have to do is open our mouths and swallow."

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD. SEE YOU TOMORROW.

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Dec. 19, 1956

Good evening:

Great Britain has proposed a new constitution for Cyprus, giving the people of that island a larger measure of home rule. As outlined in the House of Commons, the constitution would allow Greek and Turkish Cypriots to elect a general assembly. They would have their own cabinet. But foreign affairs... and matters pertaining to internal security, such as the police force... would remain under firm British control. ~~The British colonial secretary, Alan Lennox-Boyd, suggested that Cyprus may ultimately be granted the right of self-determination, with a possibility this might mean partition of the island between the Greek and Turkish populations.~~ The initial Greek Cypriot reaction is no better than luke-warm. A Greek Cypriot spokesman calls the proposed constitution "not as monstrous as press leakages led us to believe... ~~and~~ but not as liberal as the government had suggested." ~~And~~ In Athens tonight, the Greek foreign minister says the proposed constitution is unacceptable in at least seven respects. Three-fourths of the inhabitants of the island are of Greek descent.

Indian Prime Minister Nehru concluded his formal talks today with President Eisenhower in Washington. Their last White House session lasted an hour and 40 minutes and... afterwards... Mr. Nehru made the comment: "I think that India and America will get along very well in the future, in international affairs." Earlier, at a news conference, the prime minister had said that... as a result of the talks... he had "a much better understanding of American policy and of the President's thinking." He said that he had relayed to Mr. Eisenhower the views of the Chinese Communist premier, Chou En-lai, with whom he had conferred last month in India. It was Chou's feeling, he said, that Communist China had gone "several steps forward" toward improving relations with the United States... and that now it was time for this country to take comparable steps. Nehru emphasized that he was merely repeating what Chou had said---that he wasn't saying whether was right or wrong. Nehru told reporters it seems to him that the United States and Russia are not far apart in working out a world-wide disarmament system. The great difficulty, he said, is a lack of confidence, and there is an urgent need for measures to create confidence. He expressed the view that the changes which have taken place in Russia since the death of Stalin are fundamental. "Obviously," he said, "there are many things going on in the Soviet Union with which I do not agree." (He called Soviet domination of its satellites "a bad thing.") ~~A reporter asked why India voted against condemning Russia's intervention in Hungary.~~

~~"It is not a question of condemning anybody,"~~ Nehru said. "It is a question whether we are going to do more than condemn, by putting forward a constructive proposal." The Indian prime minister said he "hopes" Communist China will release the 10 Americans held in that country. He suggested that the Communist regime should be recognized as the real government of China---"the Formosan government is at most the Formosan government." And he expressed the view that the Suez Canal should be open to the shipping of all countries. It is a question, he said, which could be taken to the World Court.

There is still no agreement tonight on the procedure for clearing the Suez Canal. The United Nations secretary general, Dag Hammarskjold, conferred on the problem during the day with British representatives at the U.N. Britain is willing to lend its salvage ships to the U.N. for clearing the canal, but insists that they be manned by their regular crews. Hammarskjold prefers that the work be done by crews belonging to neutral countries, like Denmark and Belgium. Meantime, the evacuation of British and French troops from Port Said continues.

→

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that "under no circumstances" will Israel agree to let Egypt have the Gaza Strip. Israel has agreed to yield the Sinai Peninsula to the United Nations police force. But it has contended all along that the Gaza Strip never was, legitimately, a part of Egypt.

The secret trial of five political leaders has ended in Iraq. One defendant... the former minister of economics... was sentenced to three years at hard labor. The other defendants were placed on probation for a year. The charges against the five have never officially been announced. Reportedly, they were accused of trying to overthrow the Baghdad government.

Republican Sentor Flanders proposed today that President Nasser of Egypt... and Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia... both be invited to visit the United States. (Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday that a visit by Tito might serve a useful purpose, and that President Eisenhower is considering extending such an invitation.) Well-informed sources in Cairo say that if Nasser were invited to come to Washington, he would accept.

→

Vice President Nixon arrived in Austria today to make a personal survey of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon will do more than look into the possibility of receiving more refugees in the United States. He will also obtain estimates on the financial assistance Austria needs for dealing with the refugee problem. Nixon said at the Vienna airport, "We recognize that much remains to be done, and we are fully determined to do our full share." (The Austrians have taken in more than 140-thousand refugees since October).

In Hungary today, the puppet government sought to lure workers back into the mines and factories by authorizing pay increases up to 10 percent. Due to shortages of coal and electricity, the steel industry has gone on a three-day week.

In Johannesburg, South Africa, 152 persons went on trial today for treason. The defendants include Negroes, Indians and whites, and persons of mixed blood, those referred to there as coloured. The basic issue is South Africa's apartheid policy---racial segregation. And in London today, the British Labour Party denounced the proceedings as constituting ~~[illegible]~~ an arbitrary use of executive power, to intimidate any South African citizen who actively opposes racialism and white domination.

In Dallas, Texas, a United States district court judge ruled today that the public schools in Dallas do not have to be integrated at this time. Judge William Atwell argued that the Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in public schools was "based NOT ON law but ON modern psychological knowledge." The attorney for the parents of 19 Negro children... who originally brought suit... says Judge Atwell's decision will be appealed.

Dan Schorr, the CBS News correspondent in Moscow, is back in this country tonight for a brief stay (he will join six other correspondents in the special year-end program on December 30th, with Ed Murrow) and I've asked Dan if he would brief us on the situation in Russia, as he has seen it at first-hand. Dan?

Tape runs 5:30
Ends on cue: "---we can only call "unforseeable consequences."

That was my colleague: Daniel Schorr, CBS News Correspondent in Moscow - etc -

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news
But first, here is George Bryan

Murrow (Collingwood)

Dec.19,1956

Dan Schorr cut-in

A few days ago, in Moscow, a Russian writer said to me, "Don't think we don't sense what's happening in Hungary, I am ashamed today to be a Russian." And a factory worker said, "If Britain and Frabce get out of Egypt when the Un tells them to, why don't we get out of Hungary when the UN tells us to?" These things were said to me while walking around the block--a favorite occupation of correspondents in Moscow. For one does not say such things in hotel rooms, and even less so now, that the climate has begun to become chillier again. I doubt that these opinions are representative, but that they exist at all is amazing, after the smokescreen that the Soviets have laid down for the people about events in Hungary...a smokescreen about a Fascist plot instigated by the West, mainly by the United States, being fought--and successfully--by the Hungarian nation with the aid of Soviet troops.

Other unusual things have happened. Students have walked out on party lecturers who wouldn't tell them the truth about Hungary. Hand-written leaflets have been distributed in a Moscow institute in the name of the "Socialist Party of the USSR," suggesting that there should be more than one party in Russia, Bulletin board newspapers in universities and institutes have challenged the official line, relaying news about Hungary from BBC and other sources. In Moscow alone there are reported to have been a hundred expulsions and suspensions of students.

The intellectual life of Russia is a ferment, and the official press has expressed official concern about it in terms that mean a crackdown is in store. But it hasn't been only the intellectuals. I am informed that in the past three months there have been at least a dozen strikes in Soviet factories--the first in at least a decade. The causes were economic--protests a new wage system that cut the take-home pay of many. But the strikes, impossible a year ago, were influenced by the post-Hungary, post-Poland climate. Exaggerated reports have spread of Communist leaders like Foreign Minister Shepilov and No. 1 woman Communist Ekaterina Furtseva being shouted down by factory workers. But it is apparently true that they met something less than an enthusiastic response.

Now the party central committee is meeting today in the Kremlin, considering what to do about all this. And indications are that the answer will be a carrot--in the form of more consumer goods and stepped up housing construction.....and a stick--in the form of a crackdown on dissidents. The word has already gone out that writers, who've been turning out unorthodox works, lampooning bureaucracy and demanding freedom from controls...that such writers must hew more closely to the line in the future or face unspecified penalties. A shake-up is in prospect in the universities, and Old Bolshevik Molotov has been named to "straighten out" the unruly intellectuals and students. But still the writers and artists are champing at the bit, letting off steam, reluctant to submit to new controls.

I do not think all this should be exaggerated. The puffs of steam do not mean an explosion, and Russia is still under control. But the ferment has gone far enough to cause serious concern in the Kremlin, and is bound to have its internal effects.

A few weeks ago rumors were spreading among Russians of changes at the top--Khrushchev to go out as party chief, to be replaced maybe by Molotov...Bulganin to be succeeded as Premier by Malenkov. When I left Moscow these rumors had died down. Now it seems more likely that Communist leaders, anxious to avoid an appearance abroad of disarray, are more likely to shift power without shifting titles. Khrushchev's stock has gone down; it is clear that Malenkov, who foresaw the dangers of too tight controls on consumer goods, and Molotov, who warned of too loose controls on people,...that their influence has gone up.

The line-up of Communist leaders in pictures is not as significant as it used to be, but still one cannot help noting that in a recent photo of the Communist leadership, taken at a party rally, most of the top men looked depressed. But Malenkov and Molotov, sitting close to the center, sat erect and confident.

An unknown quantity is how the bankruptcy of Soviet policy on Hungary and the ferment in Russia will affect Soviet foreign policy. Already, there has been the classic Communist psychological defense--an attempt to whip up sentiment against the West, espedially the United States... the press harping on the theme of an imperialist "conspiracy." This does not mean that any basic Soviet policy has changed; fundemntally Soviet leaders still recognize that they could not survive a general war and there is no sign that they want a war. But, they are dealing now from weakness, not strength...and weakness with power is a dangerous commodity. As the crisis of Communism becomes deeper, the danger is that desperation will lead to anti-Western actions which could get out of control...that there could be a miscalculation. For example, the Soviets apparently calculated, when they threatened to send volunteers to Egypt, that they would not have to. And they were right. But if some time they had to back up such a threat, there would be what we can only call "unforeseeable consequences."

be

(This is Daniel Schorr. Reporting from Washington, Charles Collingwood.)

FOOTNOTE

Something new -- besides its 80th member, Japan -- has been added to the United Nations.... A Christmas tree, bright with all the 80 flags of the member nations. There's been no Christmas tree at the U.N. before because officials didn't want to offend non-Christian nations, who are in the majority, of course. But now the tree is up and the diplomats, no matter where they come from, think it looks just fine.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

Wednesday, December 19, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Dan Schorr, the CBS News correspondent in Moscow, is back in this country tonight for a brief stay. I've asked Dan if he would brief us on the situation in Russia as he has seen it at first hand. Dan!

SCHORR: A few days ago, in Moscow, a Russian writer said to me "Don't think we don't sense what's happening in Hungary. I'm ashamed today to be a Russian." And a factory worker said "If Britain and France get out of Egypt, when the UN tells them to, why don't we get out of Hungary when the UN tells us to?" These things were said to me while walking around the block, a favorite occupation of correspondents in Moscow, for one does not say such things in hotel rooms; and even less so now that the climate has begun to chill again. I doubt these opinions are representative. But that they exist at all is amazing after the smoke screen that the Soviets have laid down for the people about events in Hungary. A smoke screen about a Fascist plot instigated by the West, mainly by U.S., being fought - and successfully, they say - by the Hungarian nation with the aid of Soviet troops.

Other unusual things have happened: Students have walked out on party lecturers who wouldn't tell them the truth about Hungary. Hand-written leaflets have been distributed in a Moscow institute, in the name of the Socialist Party of the U.S.S.R., suggesting that there should be more than one party in Russia. Bulletin-board newspapers in universities and institutes have challenged the official line, relaying news about Hungary from BBC and other sources. In Moscow alone there were reported to have been a hundred expulsions and suspensions of students.

The intellectual life of Russia is in ferment.

And the official press has expressed official concern about it in terms that mean a crack-down is in store. But it hasn't been only the intellectuals. I'm informed that in the past three months there've been at least a dozen strikes in Soviet factories, the first in at least a decade. The causes were economic, protests against a new wage system that cut the take-home pay of many. But these strikes - impssible a year ago - were influenced by the post-Hungary, post-Poland climate.

Exaggerated reports have been spread of Communist leaders, like Foreign Minister Shepilov, and the number one woman Communist, Ekaterina Furtseva, being shouted down by factory workers. But it's apparently true that they met something less than an enthusiastic response.

Now the party's Central Committee is meeting soon in the Kremlin, considering what to do about all this. And indications are that the answer will be a carrot, in the form of more consumer goods and stepped up housing construction, and a stick, in the form of a crack-down on dissidents. The word has already gone out that writers who've been turning out unorthodox works lampooning bureaucracy and demanding freedom from controls, that such writers must hew more closely to the line in the future or face unspecified penalties.

A shakeup is in prospect in the universities. And old Bolshevik Molotov has been named to straighten out the unruly intellectuals and students. But still the writers and the artists are chapping at the bit, letting off steam, reluctant to submit to new controls.

I don't think all this should be exaggerated. The puffs of steam don't mean an explosion and Russia is still very much under control. But the ferment has gone far enough to cause serious concern in the Kremlin and is bound to have its internal effects.

A few weeks ago rumors were spreading among Russians of changes at the top: Khrushchev to go out as party chief, to be replaced, maybe, by Molotov; Bulganin to be succeeded as Premier by Malenkov. When I left Moscow these rumors had died down. Now it seems more likely that Communist leaders, anxious to avoid an appearance abroad of disarray, are more likely to shift power without shifting titles. Khrushchev's stock has gone down. It's clear that Malenkov, who foresaw the dangers of too-tight controls on consumer goods, and Molotov, who warned of too-loose controls on people, that their influence has gone up.

The lineup of Communist leaders in pictures is not as significant as it used to be. But still one cannot help noting that in a recent photo of the Communist leadership taken at a party rally, most of the top men looked depressed. But Malenkov and Molotov, sitting close to the center, sat erect and confident.

An unknown quantity is how the bankruptcy of Soviet policy on Hungary and the ferment inside Russia will affect Soviet foreign policy. Already there's been the classic Communist psychological defense: an attempt to whip up sentiment against the West, especially the U.S., the press harping on the theme of an "imperialist conspiracy." This doesn't mean that any basic Soviet policy has changed. Fundamentally, Soviet leaders still recognize they could not survive a general war and there's no sign they want a war. But they're dealing now from weakness not strength. And weakness, with power, is a dangerous commodity. As the crisis of communism becomes deeper, the danger is that desperation will lead to anti-Western actions which could get out of control; that there could be a miscalculation.

For example, the Soviets apparently calculated when they threatened to send volunteers to Egypt, that they would not have to. And they were right. But if sometime they had to back up such a threat there would be what we can only call "unforeseeable consequences."

COLLINGWOOD: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, CBS News correspondent in Moscow, back from the Soviet Union to join six other correspondents in CBS News special year-end program, on Dec. 30th, with Ed Murrow who'll be back from the Far East of course by that time.

I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

Wednesday, December 19, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... Dan Schorr, the CBS News correspondent in Moscow, is back in this country tonight for a brief stay. I've asked Dan if he would brief us on the situation in Russia as he has seen it at first hand. Dan!

SCHORR: A few days ago, in Moscow, a Russian writer said to me "Don't think we don't sense what's happening in Hungary. I'm ashamed today to be a Russian." And a factory worker said "If Britain and France get out of Egypt, when the UN tells them to, why don't we get out of Hungary when the UN tells us to?" These things were said to me while walking around the block, a favorite occupation of correspondents in Moscow, for one does not say such things in hotel rooms; and even less so now that the climate has begun to chill again. I doubt these opinions are representative. But that they exist at all is amazing after the smoke screen that the Soviets have laid down for the people about events in Hungary. A smoke screen about a Fascist plot instigated by the West, mainly by U.S., being fought - and successfully, they say - by the Hungarian nation with the aid of Soviet troops.

Other unusual things have happened: Students have walked out on party lecturers who wouldn't tell them the truth about Hungary. Hand-written leaflets have been distributed in a Moscow institute, in the name of the Socialist Party of the U.S.S.R., suggesting that there should be more than one party in Russia. Bulletin-board newspapers in universities and institutes have challenged the official line, relaying news about Hungary from BBC and other sources. In Moscow alone there were reported to have been a hundred expulsions and suspensions of students.

The intellectual life of Russia is in ferment.

And the official press has expressed official concern about it in terms that mean a crack-down is in store. But it hasn't been only the intellectuals. I'm informed that in the past three months there've been at least a dozen strikes in Soviet factories, the first in at least a decade. The causes were economic, protests against a new wage system that cut the take-home pay of many. But these strikes - impssible a year ago - were influenced by the post-Hungary, post-Poland climate.

Exaggerated reports have been spread of Communist leaders, like Foreign Minister Shepilov, and the number one woman Communist, Ekaterina Furtseva, being shouted down by factory workers. But it's apparently true that they met something less than an enthusiastic response.

Now the party's Central Committee is meeting soon in the Kremlin, considering what to do about all this. And indications are that the answer will be a carrot, in the form of more consumer goods and stepped up housing construction, and a stick, in the form of a crack-down on dissidents. The word has already gone out that writers who've been turning out unorthodox works lampooning bureaucracy and demanding freedom from controls, that such writers must hew more closely to the line in the future or face unspecified penalties.

A shakeup is in prospect in the universities. And old Bolshevik Molotov has been named to straighten out the unruly intellectuals and students. But still the writers and the artists are chapping at the bit, letting off steam, reluctant to submit to new controls.

I don't think all this should be exaggerated. The puffs of steam don't mean an explosion and Russia is still very much under control. But the ferment has gone far enough to cause serious concern in the Kremlin and is bound to have its internal effects.

A few weeks ago rumors were spreading among Russians of changes at the top: Khrushchev to go out as party chief, to be replaced, maybe, by Molotov; Bulganin to be succeeded as Premier by Malenkov. When I left Moscow these rumors had died down. Now it seems more likely that Communist leaders, anxious to avoid an appearance abroad of disarray, are more likely to shift power without shifting titles. Khrushchev's stock has gone down. It's clear that Malenkov, who foresaw the dangers of too-tight controls on consumer goods, and Molotov, who warned of too-loose controls on people, that their influence has gone up.

The lineup of Communist leaders in pictures is not as significant as it used to be. But still one cannot help noting that in a recent photo of the Communist leadership taken at a party rally, most of the top men looked depressed. But Malenkov and Molotov, sitting close to the center, sat erect and confident.

An unknown quantity is how the bankruptcy of Soviet policy on Hungary and the ferment inside Russia will affect Soviet foreign policy. Already there's been the classic Communist psychological defense: an attempt to whip up sentiment against the West, especially the U.S., the press harping on the theme of an "imperialist conspiracy." This doesn't mean that any basic Soviet policy has changed. Fundamentally, Soviet leaders still recognize they could not survive a general war and there's no sign they want a war. But they're dealing now from weakness not strength. And weakness, with power, is a dangerous commodity. As the crisis of communism becomes deeper, the danger is that desperation will lead to anti-Western actions which could get out of control; that there could be a miscalculation.

For example, the Soviets apparently calculated when they threatened to send volunteers to Egypt, that they would not have to. And they were right. But if sometime they had to back up such a threat there would be what we can only call "unforeseeable consequences."

COLLINGWOOD: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, CBS News correspondent in Moscow, back from the Soviet Union to join six other correspondents in CBS News special year-end program, on Dec. 30th, with Ed Murrow who'll be back from the Far East of course by that time.

I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Great Britain has proposed a new constitution for Cyprus, giving the people of that island a larger measure of home rule. As outlined in the House of Commons, the constitution would allow Greek and Turkish Cypriots to elect a general assembly. They would have their own cabinet. But foreign affairs..and matters pertaining to internal security, such as the police force..would remain under firm British control. The initial Greek Cypriot reaction is no better than luke warm. A Creek Cypriot spokesman calls the proposed constitution "now as monstrous as press leakages led us to believe...but not as liberal as the government has suggested." In Athens tonight, the Greek foreign minister says the proposed constitution is unacceptable in at least seven respects. Three-fourths of the inhabitants of the island are of Greek descent.

Indian Prime Minister Nehru concluded his formal talks today with President Eisenhower in Washington. Their last White House session lasted an hour andd 40 minutes and..afterwards,Mr. Nehru made the comment:"I think that India and America will get along very well in the future, in international affairs." Earlier, at a news conference, the prime minister has said that..as a result of the talks..he had "a much better understanding of American policy and of the President's thinking," He said that he had relayed to Mre. Eisenhower the views of the Chinese Communist premier, Chou en-lai, with whom he had conferred last month in Inida. It was Chou's feeling, he said, that Communist China had gone "several steps forward" toward improving relations with the United States...and thatt now it was time for this country to take comparable steps. Nehru emphasized that he was merely repeating what Chou ahd said---that he wasn't saying whether it was right or wrong. Nehru told repotters it seems to him that the United States and Russia are not far apart in working out a world-wide disarmement system. The great difficulty, he said, is a lack of confidence, add there is an urgent need for measures to create confidence. He expressed the view that the changes which have taken place in Russia since the death of Stalin are fundamental."Obviously," he said, "there are many things going on.

He called Soviet domination of its satellites "a bad thing." There is still no agreement tonight on the procedure for clearing the Suez Canal. The United Nations secretary general, Dag Hammarskjold, conferred on the problem during the day with British representatives at the U. N. Britain is willing to lend its salvage ships to the U.N. for clearing the canal, but insists that they be manned by their regular crews. Hammarskjold prefers that the work be done by crews belonging to neutral countries, like Denmark and Belgium. Meantime, the evacuation of British and French troops from Port Said continues.

Prime Minister Ben Gurian told the Israeli parliament today that "under no circumstances" will Israel agree to let Egypt have the Gaza Strip. Israel has agreed to yield the Sinai Peninsula to the United Nations police force. But it has contended all along that the Gaza Strip never was, legitimately, a part of Egypt.

Republican Senator Flanders proposed today that President Nasser of Egypt and Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia....both be invited to visit the United States. Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday that a visit by Tito might serve a useful purpose, and that President Eisenhower is considering extending such an invitation. Well-informed sources in Cairo say that if Nasser were invited to come to Washington, he would accept.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Austria today to make a personal survey of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon Will do more than look into the possilility of receiving more refugees in the United States. He will also obtain estimates on the financial assistance Austria needs for dealing with the refugee problem. Nixon said at the Vienna airport. "We recognize that much remains to be done, and we are fully determined to do our full share." (The Austrians have taken in more than 140-thousand refugees since October.)

In Hungary today, the puppet government sought to lure workers back into the mines and factories by authorizing pay increases up to 10 percent. Due to shortages of coal and electricity, the steel industry has gone on a three-day week.

In Johannesburg, South Africa, 152 persons went on trial today for treason. The defendants include Negroes, Indians and whites, and persons of mixed blood, those referred to there as coloured. The basic issue is South Africa's aparthied policy--racial segregation. And in London today, the British Labour Party denounced the proceedings as constituting an arbitrary use of executive power, to intimidate any South African citizen who actively opposes racialism and white domination.

In Dallas, Texas, a United States district court judge ruled today that the public schools in Dalles do oot have to be integrated at this time. Judge William Atwell argued that the Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in public schools was "based not on law but on modern psychological knowledge". The attorney for the parents of 19 Negro Children...who originally brought suit.. says Judge Atwell's decision will be appealed.

Dan Schorr, the CBS News correspondent in Moscow, is back in this country tonight for a brief stay (he will join six other correspondents in the special year-end program on December 30th, with EdMurrow) and I've asked Dan if he would brief us on the situation in Russia, as he ... seen it first-hand. Dan?

SCHORR: A few days ago, in Moscow, a Russian writer said to me,"Don't think we don't sense what's happening in Hungary, I am ashamed today to be a Russian." And a factory worker said, "If Britain and France get out of Egypt when the UN tells them to, why don't we get out of Hungary when the UN tells us to?" Where things were said to me while walking around the block---a favorite occupation of correspondents in Moscow. For one does not say such things in hotel rooms, and even less so now, that the climate has begun to become chillier again. I doubt that these opinions are representative, but that they exist at all is amazing , after the smoke screen that the Soviets have laid down for the people about events in Hungary...a smokescreen about a Fascist plot instigated by the West mainly by the United States, being fought--and successfully---by the Hungarian nation with the aid of Soviet troops.

Other unusual things have happened. Students have walked out on party lecturers who wouldn't tell them the truth about Hungary. Hand written leaflets have been distributed in a Moscow institute in the name of the "Socialist Party of the USSR," suggesting that there should be more than one party in Russia, bulletin board newspapers in universities and institutes have challenged the official line, relaying news about Hungary from BBC and other sources. In Moscow alone there are reported to have been a hundred expulsions and suspensions of students.

The intellectual life of Russia is a ferment, and the official press has expressed ofiicial concern about it in terms that mean a crackdown is in store. But it hasn't been only the intellectuals. I am informed that in the past three months there have been at least a dozen strikes in Soviet factories- the first in at least a decade. The causes were economic--protests a new wage system that cut the take-home pay of many. But the strikes, impossible a year ago, were influenced by the post-Hungary , post-Poland climate. Exaggerated reports have spread of Communist leaders like Foreign Minister Shepilov and number one Woman Communist Ekaterina Furtseva being shouted down by factory workers. But it is apparently true that they met something less than an enthusiastic response.

Now the party central committee is meeting soon in the Kremlin, considering what to do about all this. And indications are that the answer will be a carrot-- in the form of more consumer goods and then stepped up housing construction..

and a stick--in the form of a crackdown on dissidents. The word has already gone out that writers, who've been turning out unorthodox works, lampooning buueaucracy and demanding freedom from controls..that such writers must hew more closely to the line in the future or face unspecified penalties. A shake-up is in prospect in the universities, and Old Bolshevik Molotov has been named to "straighten out"the unruly intellectuals and students. But still the writers and artists are champing at the bit, letting off steam, reluctant to submit to new controls.

I do not think all this should be exaggerated. The puffs of steam do not mean an explosion, and Russia is still under control. But the ferment has gone far enough to cause serious concern in the Kremlin, and is bound to have its internal effects.

A few weeks ago rumors were spreading among Russians of changes at the top Khrushchev to go out as party chief, to be replaced maybe by Molotov..Bulganin to be succeeded as Premier by Malenkov. When I left Moscow these rumors had died down. Now it seems more likely that Communist leaders, anxious to avoid an appearance abroad of disarray, are more likely to shift power without shifting titles. Khrushchev's stock has gon down; it is clear that Malenkov, who foresaw the dangers of too tight controls on consumer goods, and Molotov, who warned of too loose controls on people..that their influence has gone up.

The line-up of Communist leaders in pictures is not as significant as it used to be, but still one cannot help noting that in a recent photo of the Communist leadership, taken at a party rally, most of the top men looked depressed. But Malenkov and Molotov, sitting close to the center, sat erect and confident.

An unknown quantity is how the bankruptcy of Soviet policy on Hungary and the ferment in Russaa will affect Soviet foreign pollcy. Already, there has been the classic Communist psychological defense -- an attempt to whip up sentiment against the West, especially the United States..the press harping on the theme of an imperialist "conspiracy". This does not mean that any basic Soviet policy has changed; fundamentally Soviet leaders still recognize that they could not survive a general war and there is no sign that they want a war. But, they are dealing now from weakness, not strength..and weakness with power is a dangerous commodity. Ad the crisis of Communism becomes deeper, the danger is that desperation will lead to anti-Western actions which could get out of control..that there could be a miscalculation. For example, the Soviets apparently calculated, when they threatened to send volunteers to Egypt, that they would not have to. And they were right. But if some time they had to back up such a threat, there would be what we can only call "unforseeable consequences."

COLLINGWOOD: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, CBS News correspondent in Moscow. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: Something new--besides its 80th member, Japan, has been added to the United Nations..a Christmas tree, bright with all the 80 flags of the member nations. There's been no Christmas tree at the U.N. before because officials didn't want to offend non-Christian nations, who are in the majority, of course. But now the tree is up and the diplomats, no matter where they come from, think it looks just fine.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD. SEE YOU TOMORROW.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Dec. 20, 1956

Good evening:

The United States is going to take the initiative in trying to reach a disarmament agreement. American Ambassador Lodge told the United Nations today, "We are aware of the difficulties, but we are determined with sincerity and persistence to seek agreement. We are ready," he said, "to consider thoughtfully the proposals of all governments, and we will take further initiative to reach an agreement which would advance the prospects of a just and lasting peace." Lodge proposed that the five major atomic powers start a new round of disarmament talks in March. He did not say what plan the United States may advance at such a meeting. But the Administration is said to have drafted a set of new proposals calling ... among other things... for the outlawing of long-range missiles and step-by-step "open skies" inspection. The five major atomic powers are the United States, Russia, Canada, Britain and France.

The United Nations Information Office in Cairo says that plans are now ready to start clearing the Suez Canal, just as soon as the last British and French troops have left Port Said. (The final evacuation may come at any time. The last R.A.F. plane left this morning). A British admiral says all crews of the British salvage fleet have agreed to stay behind for the clearing operation. They are prepared, he says, to work under the protection of U.N. troops. Secretary General Hammarskjold has been reported, all along, as favoring the use of salvage vessels belonging to countries not involved in the recent fighting. And it is not clear tonight just what arrangements have been made. Apparently negotiations are still going on.

In Paris, the National Assembly approved Premier Mollet's Suez policy today by a vote of 332 to 213. It was in fact an informal vote of confidence. Mollet indicated... before the balloting... that he would resign if his policy of intervention was not approved. The assembly also passed OVERWHELMINGLY a resolution condemning Soviet pepression in Hungary.

That repression is showing no signs of let-up. If anything, it's getting worse. Today the puppet government of Janos Kadar issued a decree whereby a person... any person... can be held by the police for as long as six months without formal arrest or trial. The government also took new measures to halt the flow of Hungarian refugees to Austria, by requiring identity cards issued by the Budapest chief of police for persons entering the frontier region. And the grim announcement tonight... by the Budapest radio... that two more Hungarians have been put to death for concealing weapons.

On Cyprus, the pro-Greek underground has called a 24-hour general strike for tomorrow, as a protest against Britain's latest proposals for limited home rule. A new constitution... proposed by Britain yesterday... would give the Cypriots more self-government but keep the control of such matters as internal security and defense in British hands. More than a thousand students marched today through the streets of Famagusta, on the east coast, shouting, "Down with the constitution!" Police shot and wounded the 17-year-old leader of the demonstration when he tried to escape. Twenty-three other demonstrators were captured and taken to police headquarters.

The Japanese parliament has elected Tanzan Ishibashi, the son of a Buddist priest, to succeed Ichiro Hatoyama as prime minister. Ishibashi favors expanded trade with Communist China and the subsidizing of Japanese industry, and tonight he's trying to form a government that will be sympathetic to these views. He has the support of several factions, and he may have trouble giving them all the representation they want.

In Austria today, Vice President Nixon visited several refugee camps near the Hungarian border. He interviewed many of the refugees, ate with them, and... at one reception center... served as Santa Claus and distributed gifts. Nixon also conferred during the day with Austrian Chanceller Raab. He gave the chancellor a letter from President Eisenhower, praising Austria's humanitarian action in accepting the refugees... and promising that the United States will do everything in its power to help solve the refugee problem. Mr. Nixon will confer with other Austrian officials tomorrow, and return to the United States over the week-end.

The Soviet press kept up its attacks today on the Nixon visit, calling it proof that so-called "reactionary circles" in the United States are largely responsible for what happened in Hungary.

The Communist parties of East Germany and Czechoslovakia issued a joint communique today... denouncing "nationalistic tendencies" in the satellite states. All talk of national communism, it said, is a contradiction. The communique acknowledges Russia as the leader of all ~~socialist~~ COMMUNIST states and calls the Warsaw Pact "a mighty bulwark" against the "dark designs" of the West. The denunciation of national communism seems aimed principally at Yugoslavia and Poland. In fact, the wording is so strong there's speculation that East Germany and Czechoslovakia would like to see a revival of the Cominform, which was disbanded only this year under the de-Stalinization program.

→

In Washington today, a joint communique was issued summing up the four days of talks between President Eisenhower and Indian Prime Minister Nehru. The conversations between these two world leaders, it said, "will facilitate the constant efforts of India and the United States toward the achievement of peaceful and friendly intercourse among nations." The talks, it said, had been "full and frank", confirming a broad area of agreement. The communique also stated that the policies of both countries are based on "respect for the dignity of man." As is customary with such communiques, the document went into no detail. And after it was issued, the prime minister came here to New York for a round of receptions and a visit with friends at United Nations headquarters. He will start home over the weekend, with stop-overs scheduled for Ottawa and London.

The World Bank announced today that a private steel company in India has been granted a 20-million-dollar loan. The loan is for a term of 11 years. It bears 5 percent interest, and it was made to help India's program of stepped-up steel production.

think collingwood 20 december 1956

In this season of Christmas there can hardly be an armchair philosopher who has not remarked on the contrast between the ancient celestial injunction -- "Peace on earth, goodwill to men" -- and the state of affairs as they are. This year, as we watch the agony of Hungary and the convulsions in the Middle East, that contrast is particularly present to us all.

We haven't had a Christmas for a long time from which we could survey the future with any great degree of confidence, yet, withal the tremors and alarums that have followed each other with such depressing regularity since the end of World War II, the worst has not happened. At this time, toward Christmas and the end of the year, when we all do a little summing up, it might not be amiss to take a look around and try to judge how close we really are to the worst this time.

The other day in Washington Prime Minister Nehru observed that the danger of war is indeed very present, but that, in his view, peace would triumph. Leaders of nations would no doubt have to say things like that, no matter how they felt, since ~~xxxx~~ pessimism about the future seldom engenders popular support, but the fact is that this is undoubtedly the way Nehru feels. Its also the way Eisenhower feels, and Dulles, and Eden, and Guy Mollet, and, if one reads the signs aright, its even the way the leaders behind the walls of the Kremlin feel. They may all be deluding themselves, of course, but the very fact that in spite of high levels of military expenditure, their countries are not actively preparing for hostilities on an all-out scale, is a factor militating against an early outbreak of war.

Last night, CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr, back on a quick visit from Moscow, surveyed for us the situation as he sees it from there. In his view, the greatest danger of war, is the possibility of a Russian miscalculation of how much they can get away with in the present and foreseeable situation. That conforms, too, with the prevailing view of the experts.

The hardest thing in the world to evaluate is the chance of such a miscalculation. In theory it could come at any time. In practise there are usually certain psychological and physical pre-conditions present before a nation miscalculates itself and the world into war. The question is, are those pre-conditions present now?.... Once again, most of those who watch these things most closely think not... they think it hesitantly, without being willing to bet too much on it -- except their lives, which in a sense we're all betting on it -- but they think it nonetheless.

It has been argued that the Russians, tormented by their troubles in the satellites, might embark on a military adventure as a way of re-establishing their control and diverting attention from the stirrings of independence. It could happen, of course, but Soviet policy has traditionally been a great deal more cautious than that, —long before the turbulence in the satellites— and the very instability of the satellite system must make war with the west a great deal less attractive than it was before. Some official sources have pointed out the dangers that could follow from an uprising in Communist Germany, right on the borders of the west and NATO. It doesn't require too lively an imagination to conjure up the perils that might arise from a Hungarian-type Soviet effort to put down such an uprising in East Germany. But it doesn't require too great an imagination, either, to conceive of the West's so conducting itself that the ultimate holocaust need not ensue. ... In the Middle East the situation seems easier for awile, at least, and though the opportunities for stumbling into pitfalls there are still great, they are not nearly as great as they were.

There are, in sum, many traps and dangers before us, but none that in a sober estimate appears unavoidable.... We are, as anyone can see, a long way from that vision the angels held up ... of "Peace On Earth, Goodwill to Men."..... But we are not, perhaps, as close to the absolute negation of all that as the gloomiest estimates might lead one to believe.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Bryan,

FOOTNOTE

This evening President Eisenhower lit the National Christmas tree in Washington. Before he pushed the switch to illuminate the towering spruce, the President said that the true test of the Christmas spirit comes when the trees are down and the lights put away -- whether the inspiration of Christmas is kept alive. "We must proceed by faith, he said, knowing the light of Christmas is eternal, though we cannot always see it."

THIS IS C.C..... SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1956
7:45''8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

The United States is going to take the initiative in trying to reach a a disarmament agreement. American Ambassador Lodge told the United Sations today, "We are aware of the difficulties, but we are determined with sincerity and persistence to seek agreement. We are ready," he said, "to consider thoughtfully the proposals of all governments, and we will take further initiative to reach an agreement which would advance the prospects of a just and lasting peace." Lodge proposed that the five major atomic powers start a new round of disarmament talks in March. He did not say what plan the United States may advance at such a meeting. But the administration is said to have drafted a set of new proposals calling..among other things..for the outlawing of long-range missiles. and step-by-step "open skies" inspection. The five major powers are the United States Russia, Canada, Britain and France.

The United Natoons Information Office in Cairo says that plans are now ready to start clearing the Suez Canal, just as soon as the last British and French troops have left Port Said. (The final evacuation may come at any time. The last R.A.F. plane left this morning.) A British admiral says all crews of the British salvage fleet have agreed to stay behind for the clearing operation They are prepared, he says, to work under the protection of U.N. troops.Secretary General Hammarskjold has been reported, all along, as favoring the use of salvage vessels belonging to countries not involved in the recent fighting. And it is not clear tonight just what arrangements have been made.Apparently negotiations are still going on.

In Paris, the National Assembly approved Premier Mollet's Suez policy today by a vote of 332 to 213. It was in face an informal vote of confidence. Mollet indicated ..before balloting..that he wuuld resign if his policy of intervention was not approved. The assembly also passed overwhelmingly a resolution condemning Soviet repression in Hungary.

That repression is showing no signs of let-up. If anything, it's getting worse. Today the puppet government of Janos Kadar issued a degree whereby a person..any person..can be held by the police for as long as six months without formal arrest or trial. The government also took new measures to halt the flow of Hungarian refugees to Austria, by requiring identity cards issued by the Budapest chief of police for persons entering the frontier region. And the grim announcement tonight..by the Budapest radio..that two more Hungarians have been put to death for concealing weapons.

On Cyprus,, the pro-Greek underground has called a 24-hour general strike for tomorrow, as a protest against Britain's latest proposals for limited home rule. A new constitution..proposed by Britain yesterday..would give the Cypriots more self-government but keep the control of such matters as internal security and defense in British hands. More than a thousand students marched today through the streets of Famagusta, on the east coast, shouting,"Down with the constitution!" Police shot and woulded the 17-year-old leader of the demonstration when he tried to escape. Twenty-three other demonstrators were captured and taken to police headquarters.

The Japanese parliament has elected Tanzan Ishbashi, the son of a Buddhist priest, to succeed Ichiro Hatoyama as prime minister. Ishibashi favors expanded trade with Communist China and the subsidizing of Japanese industry, and tonight's he's trying to form a government that will be sympathetic to these views. He has the support of several factions, and he may have trouble giving them all the representation they want.

In Austria today, Vice President Nixon visited several refugee camps near the Hungarian border. He interviewed many of the refugees, ate with them, and.. at one reception center..served as Santa Claus and distributed gifts. Nixon also conferred during the day with Austrian Chancellor Raab. He gave the chancellor a letter from President Eisenhower, praising Austria's humanitarian action in accepting the refugees...and promising that the United States will do everything in its power to help solve the refugee problem. Mr. Nixon will confer with other Austrian officials tomorrow, and return to the United States over the week -end.

The Soviet press kept up its attacks today on the Nixon visit, calling it proof that so-called "reactionary circles" in the United States are largely responsible for what happened hi Hungary.

The Communist parties of East Germany and Czechoslovakia issued a joint commonique today...denouncing "nationalistic tendencies" in the satellite states. All talk of national communism, it said, is a contradiction. The communique acknowledges Russia as the leader of all Communist states and calls the Warsaw Pact "a mighty bulwark" against the "dark designs of the West. The denunciation of national communism seems aimed principally at Yugoslavia and Poland. In fact, the wording is so strong there's speculation that East Germany and Czechoslovkia would like to see a revival of the Cominform, which was disbanded only this year under the de-Stalinization program.

In Washington today, a joint communique was issued summing up the four days of talks between President Eisenhower and Indian Prime Minister Nehru. The conversations between these two world leader, it said, "will facilitate the constant efforts of India and the United States toward the achievement of peaceful and friendly intercourse among nations." The talks, it said, had been "full and frank", confirming a broad area of agreement. The communique also stated that the policies of both oountries are based on "respect for the dignity of man". As is customary with such communiques, the document went into no detail. And after it was issued, the prime minister came here to New York for a round of receptions and a visit with friends at United Natoons headquarters. He will start home over the week end, with stop-overs scheduled for Ottawa and London.

The World Bank announced today that a private steel company in India has been granted a 20-million-dollar loan. The loan is for a term of 11 years. It bears 5 percent interest, and it was made to help India's program of stepped-up steel production.

In this season of Christmas there can hardly been an armchair philosopher who has not remarked on the contrast between the ancient celestial injunction--"Peace on earth, goodwill to men"--and the state of fffairs as they are. This year, as we watch the agony of Hungary and the convulsions in the Middle East, that contrast is particularly present to us all.

We haven't had a Christmast for a long time anom which we could surveyy the future with any great degree of confidence, yet, withal the tremors and alarmums that have followed each other with such depressing regularity since the end of World War II, the world has not happened. At this time, toward Christmas and the end of the year, when we all do a little summing up, it might not be amiss to take a look around and try to judge how close we really are to the worst this time.

The other day in Washington Prime Minister Nehru observed that the danger of war is indeed very present, but that, in his view, peace would triumph. Leaders of nations would no doubt have to say things like that, no matter how they felt since pessimism about the future seldom engenders popular support, but the fact is that this is undoubtedly the way Nehru feels. Its also the way Eisenhower feels, and Dulles, and Eden, and Guy Mollet, and if one reads the signs aright, its even the way the leaders behind the walls of the Kremlin feel. They may all be deluding themselves, of course, but the very fact that in spite of the high levels of military expenditure, their countries are not actively preparing for hostilities on an all-out scale, is a factor militating against an early outbreak of war.

Last night, CBS News Correspondent, Daniel Schorr, back on a quick visit from Moscow, surveyed for us the situation as he sees it from there. In his view, the greatest danger of war, is the possibilbiy of a Russian miscalculation of how much they can get away with in the present and foreseeable situation. That conforms, too, with the prevailing view of the experts.

The hardest thing on the world to evaluate is the chance of such a miscalculation. In theory it could come at any time. In practice there are usually certain psychological and physical pre-conditions present before a nation miscalculates itself and the world into war. The question is, are those preconditions present now? once again, most of those who watch these things most closely think not...they think it hesitantly, without beign willing to bet roo much on it--except their lives, which in a sense we're all betting on it--but they think it nonetheless.

It has been argued that the Russians, tormented by their troubees in the satellites, might embark on a military adventure as a way of re-establishing their control and diverting attention from the stirrings of independence. It could happen, of course, but Soviet policy has traditionally been a great deal more cautious than that, long before ther turbulence in the satellites, and the very instability of the satellite system must make war with the west a great deal less attractive than it was before. Some official sources have pointed out the dangers that could follow from an uprising in Communist Germany, right on the borders of the west and NATO. It doesn't require too lively an imagination to conjure up the perils that might arise from a Hungarian-type Soviet effort to put down such an uprising in East Germany. But it doesn't require too great an imagination, either, to conceive the West's so conducting itself that the ultimate holocaust need not ensue..In the Middle East the situation seems easier for awile, at least, and though the opportunities for stumbling into pitfalls there are still great, they are not nearly as great as they were.

There are, in sum, many traps and dangers before us, but none that in a sober estimate appears unavoidable. We are, as anyone can see, a long way from that vision the angels held up..of "Peace on Earth, Goodwill to Men"... but we are not, perhaps, as close to the absolute negation of all that as the gloomiest estimates might lead one to believe.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN

COLLINGWOOD: This evening, President Eisenhower lit the National Christmas tree in Washington. Before he pushed the switch to illuminate the towering spruce, the President said that the true test of the Christmas spirit comes when the trees are down and the lights put away--whether the inspiration of Christmas is kept alive. "We must proceed by faith, he said, knowing the light of Christmas is eternal, though we cannot always see it."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Fri., Dec. 21, 1956

Good evening:

The United States loaned Britain 500-million dollars today to help ease it through the economic crisis caused by the closing of the Suez Canal. The loan is in the form of a credit extended by the Export-Import Bank, and the British government can draw on it any time during the next 12 months. A good deal of this money will be used to buy American oil. The loan runs for seven and a half years, with interest payable at four and a half percent.

The work of clearing the Suez Canal may soon begin. What appear to be the final arrangements were announced today by General Wheeler, the American officer directing the U.N. salvage operation. Twelve British vessels, he said, will take part in the project. They will carry their own crews (in civilian clothes) and fly the United Nations flag. And they will be protected by United Nations troops. The British vessels will be joined by the salvage ships of other countries, including Sweden, Germany, Italy and France. The first of these ships have entered the Suez Canal. In fact, we're told that four of them already have reached the town of El Cap, 23 miles south of Port Said. There has been no public announcement that the Egyptian government has approved this arrangement. There might still be a hitch. But one roadblock definitely was removed today when the Anglo-French command handed over 386 Egyptian prisoners of war. The Egyptians, for their part, surrendered 450 British civilians who had been interned at the start of hostilities. It now appears that the last British-French troops may pull out of Port Said tomorrow. And the U.N. information office in Cairo indicates that actual salvage operations may be underway by the middle of next week.

In London today, the British government released a "white paper" estimating that 650 Egyptians were killed in the Anglo-French invasion. Approximately 2-thousand Egyptians are listed as wounded. These casualty estimates are four or five times higher than those figures the British put out last month.

~~In the United Nations General Assembly, two Arab countries... Syria and Jordan... today denied charges that Egypt had carried out mass arrests and~~ deportations of foreign nationals. Jordan accused Israel of committing genocide while attacking Egypt... and proposed that Secretary General Hammarskjold make a report on the progress of Israel's withdrawal from Egyptian territory.

There are reports tonight... none of them official... that President Tito of Yugoslavia has been invited to visit the United States. Secretary of State Dulles said in a news conference Tuesday that such an invitation was under consideration. Today, a Republican congressman... O'Konski of Wisconsin... told reporters an invitation has been extended to Tito and that it has been accepted. In Belgrade, the Yugoslav foreign office would say only that an invitation has been extended "in principle". The United Press quotes Administration sources as saying "some contacts" regarding a Tito visit have been made, but that issuance of a formal invitation is still under consideration. And there apparently... at the moment... the matter rests.

Vice President Nixon revealed today that he made a secret trip during the night to the Hungarian border. Nixon apologized to reporters for not letting them know beforehand... but said he wanted to attract as little attention as possible. He called it "the most thrilling experience of my life." Nixon conferred again today with Austrian officials and is said to have assured them of financial aid in dealing with the refugee problem. He is also quoted as expressing confidence that more Hungarian refugees will be admitted to the United States. "The United States," he said, "must do more than it has already done."

In Budapest today, police launched a drive against the black market, in which eggs are being sold for 45 cents apiece. Reports reaching Vienna say the puppet government has yielded to workers' demands and set free one of the two labor leaders arrested early this month. The government is said to have released Sandor Bari, of the central workers' council, but not the chairman of the council, Sandor Racz. It was the central workers council which called the recent 48-hour general strike. Another report says the coal miners of Hungary have told the puppet premier, Janos Kadar, that if he wants full coal production, he will have to resign.

Still other reports... reaching Sweden... say that anti-Soviet feeling is being more openly expressed in the ANNEXED Baltic States---in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania---and that to curb this unrest, Russia is planning a new mass deportation.

In Washington, President Eisenhower met for the second consecutive day with the National Security Council. Speculation is that the meetings have been concerned, not with any special emergency, but with the preparation of the President's budget and state of the union messages.

A federal judge ruled today that the State Department has the right to turn down passport applications on the basis of confidential information withheld from the applicant. The ruling was made in the case of Weldon Dayton, a physicist who has been trying since 1954 to get a passport to India. The State Department contends it has evidence indicating Dayton once headed a Communist front organization. Dayton has denied ever being a Communist, and insists on the right to confront his accusers. Last year, the United States Court of Appeals ruled that if the secretary of state refuses to issue a passport, he must state whether his finding was based on evidence openly produced, or on secret information not disclosed to the applicant. Dayton contends that refusal to disclose this information ~~deprives him of the due process of law guaranteed~~ under the Constitution.

Racial integration on public buses went into effect in Montgomery, Alabama today without major incident. One Negro woman said she was slapped by a white man after she got off a bus. Negroes had been boycotting the city buses in Montgomery for more than a year. Segregation on intra-state buses recently was declared unconstitutional by a Federal Court. The city of Montgomery appealed the decision to the Supreme Court. And last week the Supreme Court turned the decision down, so integration on the buses began today

The cost of living has reached another new all-time high. The government announced today that living costs in November went up one-tenth of one percent, setting a new record for the fifth time in the last six months. The latest increase is due mainly to higher prices for automobiles, fuels, services and home furnishings. And it means an automatic pay boost of one to three cents an hour for 900-thousand workers whose wages are tied to the cost-of-living index.

Another CBS News correspondent arrived in New York today for the special year-end program presented each year by CBS News. He is my friend, Bob Pierpoint. Bob, I understand that lately you have been wandering far afield from your usual beat in Asia.

Tape runs 5:06
Ends on Cue: "---for taking advantage of this opportunity."

5'6" Charlie: Here's my feeble effort. Bob

DEC. 21, 1956

CBS SPECIAL FOR COLLINGWOOD...BOB PIERPOINT

(MURROW SHOW...RADIO NEWS)

CUE FROM COLLINGWOOD...BOB, I UNDERSTAND THAT LATELY YOU'VE BEEN WANDERING FAR AFIELD FROM YOUR USUAL BEAT IN ASIA.

THAT'S RIGHT CHARLIE. FOR THE PAST MONTH OR SO IV'E BEEN MOVING AROUND THE ARAB COUNTRIES OF THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN...LEBANON, SYRIA, AND JORDAN. AND A NUMBER OF THINGS HAVE IMPRESSED ME IN THIS AREA THAT I'D LIKE TO TALK ABOUT. ~~MENTION. YOU KNOW HOW IT IS...I WAS THERE SO SHORT A TIME THAT I CAN GET MYSELF INTO DEEP WATER WITHOUT REALLY KNOWING IT.~~ BY THE WAY...I APPRECIATE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO HAVE MY SAY BEFORE MOST OF THE OTHER CBS NEWS CORRESPONDENTS COME HOME CHARLIE...THE REAL MIDDLE EAST EXPERTS LIKE WINSTON BURDETT AND HOWARD K. SMITH AREN'T EVEN ABLE TO ARGUE WITH ME...YET. SO...HERE GOES.

PROBABLY THE THING THAT IMPRESSED ME MOST ABOUT THE COUNTRIES I VISITED IN THE MIDDLE EAST WAS THE OVERHWHELMING POPULARITY OF EGYPT'S COLONEL GAMAL ABDEL NASSER. IT'S SIMPLY AMAZING THAT ONE MAN CAN BE SO UNIVERSALLY RESPECTED THROUGHOUT THE ARAB WORLD...AND RESPECTED IS A MILD WORD. IT'S ACTUALLY MORE THAT NASSER IS REVERED...HE CAN DO NO WRONG, IN THE EYES OF THE ARABS. HIS PICTURE IS EVERYWHERE...PLASTERED ON WALLS, PASTED ON THE BACKS OF CARS...HANGING IN ALMOST EVERY SHOP WINDOW. THIS IS TRUE ALL IN THE COUNTRIES I VISITED...LEBANON... SYRIA...AND JORDAN. PERHAPS THE ONLY SMALL EXCEPTION TO NASSER'S POPULARITY IS AMONG THE CHRISTIAN'S OF HALF*CHRISTIAN...HALF MOSLEM...LEBANON. THERE I DID TALK TO A FEW CHRISTIAN LEBANESE WHO PRIVATELY ADMITTED THAT THEY WERE AFRAID OF NASSER'S TREMENDOUS POWER OVER THE MOSLEM WORLD...AND THAT THEY WOULD LIKE TO SEE HIM CUT DOWN A BIT. BUT THEY NEVER SAY THESE THINGS OPENLY...AND BEG YOU NOT TO QUOTE THEM.

I'D LIKE TO GIVE JUST A COUPLE OF EXAMPLES OF COLONEL NASSER'S POPULARITY. IN SYRIA, THE STRONGEST GROUP OF LEADERS ARE A YOUNG CLIQUE OF ARMY OFFICERS. THEY ARE INTENSELY NATIONALISTIC...VERY ANTI-ISRAELI...DEVOTED TO WHAT THEY CONSIDER THE GOOD OF THEIR COUNTRY. ONE OF THEM SAID TO ME ONE DAY, 'TO US, EGYPT'S COLONEL NASSER IS MORE THAN OUR LEADER...HE IS OUR GOD!' THIS...FROM A SYRIAN.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE....I WAS EATING MY LUNCH IN A RESTAURANT IN AMMAN...THE CAPITAL OF JORDAN, WHEN ONE OF THE WAITERS CAME UP TO ASK IF I WAS AN AMERICAN NEWSMAN. WHEN I REPLIED THAT I WAS, HE AND OTHER WAITERS CROWDED AROUND TO TALK WITH ME. FINALLY ONE OF THEM ASKED ME WHAT I PERSONALLY THOUGHT OF EGYPT'S COLONEL NASSER. TRYING TO BE DIPLOMATIC, I TOLD THEM THAT I HAD MET NASSER ONCE IN EGYPT, AND THAT HE SEEMED LIKE A RATHER PLEASANT PERSON. IMMEDIATELY THEY ALL BROKE INTO SMILES, AND ONE OF THEM SAID WITH GREAT SERIOUSNESS, 'THANK YOU SIR...THANK YOU VERY MUCH.' IN MY OPINION THERE IS SIMPLY NO QUESTION BUT THAT AT THE PRESENT TIME COLONEL NASSER IS TO THE ARABS JUST ABOUT WHAT THE SYRIAN OFFICER SAID...MORE THAN A LEADER...A KIND OF GOD. NOW, WHETHER THIS NASSER WORSHIP EXTENDS TO THE LEADERS OF THE THESE ARAB COUNTRIES IS ANOTHER THING. UNDOUBTEDLY SOME THOUGH NOT BY ANY MEANS ALL... OF THEM ARE A BIT JEALOUS OF NASSER...AND ALSO SOME OF THEM PROBABLY FEAR HIM. AT THE MOMENT, HOWEVER, THEY CERTAINLY COULD NOT SPEAK UP AGAINST HIM, EVEN IF THEY WANTED TO. NASSER'S POWER IS WITH THE PEOPLE...WITH THE MOB, IF YOU WANT TO CALL IT THAT...AND THIS IS A FACT THE WESTERN WORLD MUST RECOGNIZE IN FUTURE DEALINGS WITH THE ARAB WORLD.

SECOND AMONG MY IMPRESSIONS OF THE MIDDLE EAST IS THE RISING POPULARITY OF AMERICA. FROM THE PARTITION OF PALESTINE BACK IN 1947, UNTIL LAST MONTH, AMERICA WAS NOT... TO SAY THE LEAST...VERY POPULAR IN THE ARAB WORLD. THE ARABS...RIGHTLY OR WRONGLY...FELT THAT AMERICA WAS LARGELY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE BIRTH OF ISRAEL...AND THUS TO SOME EXTENT INDIRECTLY, FOR ALL THE TROUBLES BETWEEN ISRAEL AND THE ARABS. FURTHERMORE, THE ARABS WHO WERE NOT UPSET WITH AMERICA OVER THE ISRAELI QUESTION...THOSE FEW WHO DID NOT BLAME AMERICA FOR THEIR TROUBLES...FELT AT THE LEAST THAT THE UNITED STATES WAS SHIRKING ITS RESPONSIBILITY IN THE MIDDLE EAST, AND ALLOWING GREAT BRITAIN AND FRANCE TO DICTATE POLICY THERE. AMONG THE EDUCATED ARABS WERE SOME WHO FELT THAT AMERICA BASICALLY IS AGAINST COLONIALISM... BUT SOMEHOW AFRAID TO SAY SO IN THE ARAB TERRITORIES OF BRITISH AND FRENCH INTERESTS. NOW ALL THIS HAS CHANGED...AT LEAST TEMPORARILY. DURING THE SUEZ CRISIS, THE ARABS SAW THE UNITED STATES TAKE AN INCREASINGLY FIRM STAND AGAINST THE ARAB ENEMIES...THE ISRAELIS, THE BRITISH, AND THE FRENCH. THE ARABS WERE PARTICULARLY IMPRESSED BY PRESIDENT

EISENHOWER'S STRONG SUPPORT FOR THE UNITED NATIONS. FOR THE FIRST TIME, I THINK, THEY GOT THE FEELING THAT AMERICA WAS NOT IGNORING THEIR SIDE OF AN ARGUMENT. AS A RESULT, AMERICA HAS NEVER BEEN AS POPULAR AS IT IS TODAY AMONG THE ARABS. AMERICAN OFFICIALS SAY THAT THEY ARE AMAZED AT HOW FRIENDLY THE ARABS HAVE BECOME. MANY TIMES DURING MY BRIEF WEEKS IN THE MIDDLE EAST I WAS STOPPED IN THE STREETS...IN RESTAURANTS.. IN MY HOTEL...AND ASKED IF I WERE BRITISH OR AMERICAN. SOMETIMES THE QUESTION WAS NOT ASKED IN A FRIENDLY MANNER...BUT THE ANSWER 'AMERICAN' ALWAYS BROUGHT A FRIENDLY RESPONSE. WHILE THE ARABS TODAY ARE NOT NECESSARILY PRO-WESTERN...THEY ARE DEFINITELY MORE PRO-AMERICAN THAN THEY'VE BEEN IN A LONG TIME. AND THAT IS AN OPPORTUNITY WHICH I THINK AMERICA SHOULD TAKE ADVANTAGE OF...IN AS MANY WAYS AS POSSIBLE. IT MAY NOT LAST...THE ARABS ARE A VERY VOLATILE...CHANGEABLE PEOPLE.. BUT WHILE IT'S HERE, I THINK AMERICA SHOULD TRY TO ENCOURAGE THIS FRIENDLY FEELING...TRY TO DEVELOP IT INTO SOME KIND OF PARTNERSHIP, IF AT ALL POSSIBLE.

ONE LAST WORD...PERHAPS THE ONLY PEOPLE IN THE WORLD WHO ARE MORE POPULAR AMONG THE AR ABS TODAY THAN THE AMERICANS...ARE THE RUSSIANS. THAT IN ITSELF OUGHT TO GIVE US GOOD REASONS FOR TAKING ADVANTAGE OF THIS OPPORTUNITY.

FOLLOW PIERPOINT

That was Bob Pierpoint, CBS News Correspondent in Asia, who stopped off to report part of the crisis in the Middle East on his way here. Pierpoint and other CBS News correspondents are coming home FOR a year-end review with Ed Murrow on December 30-- and incidentally to be home for Christmas. Ed Murrow will be home for Christmas, too. He'll get back from his current trip to the Far East in time to preside over this program again on Monday.

I'LL BE BACK WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

Communist China's Premier Chou En Lai -- whom, as you may have heard, Ed Murrow interviewed during his current trip to Southeast Asia -- cut open a pigeon pie today with extraordinary results. It was in Karachi, Pakistan, and when Chou En Lai made his slice, out flew six white doves. They flapped around and lit on the heads of Karachi's leading citizens. Seemed their tails had been heavily painted in Pakistan's national colors and they weren't airworthy.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... ED MURROW WILL SEE YOU MONDAY

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1956
7:45-8:00 PM EST

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good evening:

The United States loaned Britain 500-million dollars today to help ease it through the economic crisis caused by the closing of the Suez Canal. The loan is in the form of a credit extended by the Export-Import Bank, and the British government can draw on it any time during the next 12 months. A good deal of this money will be used to buy American oil. The loan runs for seven and a half years, with interest payable at four and a half percent.

The work of clearing the Suez Canal may soon begin. What appear to be the final arrangements were announced today by General Wheeler, the American officer directing the U.N. salvage operation. Twelve British vessels, he said, will take part in the project. They will carry their own crews (in civilian clothes) and fly the United Nations flag. And they will be protected by United Nations troops. The British vessels will be joined by the salvage ships of other countries, including Sweden, Germany, Italy and France. The first of these shdps have entered the Suez Canal. In fact, we're told that four of them already have reached the town of El Cap, 23 miles south of Port Said. There has been no public announcement that the Egyptian government has approved this arrangement. There might still be a hitch. But one roadblock definitely was removed today when the Anglo-French command handed over 386 Egyptian prisoners of war. The Egyptians, for their part, surrendered 450 British civilians who had been interned at the start of hostilities. It now appears that the last British-French troops may pull out of Port Said tomorrow. And the U.N. information office in Cairo indicates that actual salvage operations may be underway by the middle of next week.

In london today, the British government released a "white paper" estimating that 650 Egyptians were killed in the Anglo-French invasion. Approximately 2-thousand Egyptians are listed as wounded. These casualty estimates are four or five times higher than those figures the British put out last month .

There are reports tonight...none of them official...that President Tito of Yugoslavia has been invited to visit the United States. Secretary of State Dulles said in a news conference Tuesday that such an invitation was under consideration. Today, a Republican congressman...O'Konski of Wisconsin...told reporters an invitation has been extended to Tito and that it has been accepted. In Belgrade, the Yugoslav foreign office would say only that an invitation has been extended "in principle". The United Press quotes Administration sources as saying "some contacts" regarding a Tito visit have been made, but that issuance of a formal invitation is still under consideration. And there apparently...at the moment...the matter rests.

Vice President Nixon revealed today that he made a secret trip during the night to the Hungarian border. Nixon apologized to reporters for not letting them know beforehand...but said he wanted to attract as little attention as possible. He called it "the most thrilling experience of my life." Nixon conferred again today with Austrian officials, and is said to have assured them of financial aid in dealing with the refugee problem. He is also quoted as expressing confidence that more Hungarian refugees will be admitted to the United States. "The United States," he said, "must do more than it has already done."

In Budapest today, police launched a drive against the black market, in which eggs are being sold for 45 cents apiece. Reports reachdng Vienna say the puppet government has yielded to workers' demands and set free one of the two labor leaders arrested early this month. The government is said to have released Sandor Bari, of the central workers' council, but not the chairman of the Council, Sandor Racz. It was the central workers council which called the recent 48-hour general strike. Another report says the coal miners of Hungary have told the puppet premier, Janos Kadar, that if he wants full coal production, he will have to resign.

In Washington, President Eisenhower met for the second consecutive day with the National Security Council. Speculation is that the meetings have been concerned, not with any special emergency, but with the preparation of the President's budg t and state of the union messages.

Racial integration on public buses went into effect in Montgomery, Alabama today without major incident. One Negro woman said she was slapped by a white man after she got off a bus. Negroes had been boycotting the city buses in Montgomery for more than a year. Segregation on intra-state buses recently was declared unconstitutional by a Federal Court. The city of Montgomery appealed the decision to the Supreme Court. And last week the Supreme Court turned down the decision. So integration on the buses began today.

The cost of living has reached another new all-time high. The government announced today that living costs in November went up one-tenth of one percent, setting a new record for the fifth time in the last six months. The latest increase is due mainly to higher prices for automobiles, fuels, services and home furnishings. And it means an automatic pay boost of one to three cents an hour for 900-thousand workers whose wages are tied to the cost-of-living index.

Another CBS News correspondent arrived in New York today for the special year-end program presented each year by CBS News. He is my friend, Bob Pierpoint. Bob, I understand that lately you have been wandering far afield from your usual beat in Asia.

PIERPOINT: That's right, Charlie. For the past month or so I've been moving around the Arab countries of the Eastern Mediterranean...Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan. And a number of things have impressed me in this area that I'd like to talk about. By the way...I appreciate this opportunity to have my say before most of the other CBS News correspondents come home, Charlie... the real Middle East experts like Wdnston Burdett and Howard K. Smith aren't even able to argue with me...yet. So...here goes.

Probably the thing that impressed me most about the countries I visited in the Middle East was the overwhelming popularity of Egypt's Colonel Gamal Abdel Nasser. It's simply amazing that one man can be so universally respected throughout the Arab world...and respected is a mild word. It's It's actually more that Nasser is revered. He can do no wrong, in the eyes of the Arabs. His picture is everywhere...plastered on walls, pasted on the backs of cars...hanging in almost every shop window. This is true in all the countries I visited...Lebanon...Syria...and Jordan. Perhaps the only small exception to Nasser's popularity is among the Christian's of half'Christian...half-Moslem...Lebanon. There I did talk to a few Christian Lebanese who privately admitted that they were afraid of Nasser's tremendous power over the Moslem World...and that they would like to see him cut down a bit. But they never say these things openly...and beg you not to quote them. I'd like to give just a couple of examfles of Colonel Nasser's popularity. In Syria, the strongest group of leaders are a young clique of Army officers. They are intensely Nationalistic...very Anti-Israeli... devsted to what they consider the good of their country. One of them said to me one day, 'To us, Egypt's Colonel Nasser is more than our leader...he is our God!' This...from a Syrian. Another example...one day I was eating my lunch in a restaurant in A mman...the capital of Jordan, when one of the waiters came up to ask if I was an American newsman. When I replied that I was, he and other waiters crowded around to talk with me. Finally one of them asked m e what I personally thought of Egypt's Colonel Nasser. Trying to be diplomatic, I told them that I had met Nasser once in Egypt, and that he seemed like a rather pleasant person. Immediately they all broke into smiles, and one of them said with great seriousness, 'thank you, sir...thank' you very much.' In my opinion there is simply no question but that at the present time Colonel Nasser is to the Arabs just about what the Syrian officer said...more than a leader...kind of a God... Now, whether this Nasser worship extends to the leaders of these Arab countries is another thing. Undoubtedly some, though not by any means all...of them are a bit jealous of Nasser...and also some of them probably fear him. At the moment, however, they certainly could not speak up against him, even if they wanted to. Nasser's power is with the people...with the mob, if you want to call it that... and this is a fact the western world must recognize in future dealings with the Arab World.

Second, among my impressions of the Middle East is the rising popularity of America. From the partition of Palestine back in 1947, until last month, America was not...to say the least...very popular in the Arab World. The Arabs...rightly or wrongly...felt that America was largely responsible for the birth of Israel...and thus to some extent indirectly, for all the troubles between Israel and the Arabs.. Furthermore, the Arabs who were not upset with America over the Israeli question...those few who did not blame America for their troubles...felt at the least that the United States was shirking its responsibility in the Middle East, and allowing Great Britain and France to dictate policy there. Among the educated Arabs were some who felt that America basically is against colonialism... but somehow afraid to say is so in the Arab territories of British and French interests. Now all this has changed... at least temporarily. During the Suez crisis, the Arabs saw the United States take an increasingly firm stand against the Arab enemies...the Israelis, the British, and the French. The Arabs were particularly impressed by President Eisenhower's strong support for the United Nations. For the first time, I think, they got the feeling that America was not ignoring their side of an argument. As a result, America has never been as popular as it is today among the Arabs. American officials say that they are amazed at how friendly the the Arabs have become. Many times during my brief weeks in the Middle East I was stopped in restaurants...in my hotel...in the streets...and asked if I were British or American. Sometimes the question was not asked in a friendly manner...but the answer 'American' always brought a friendly response. While the Arabs today are not necessarily pro-Western....they are definitely more pro-American than they've been in a long time. And that is an opportunity which I think America should take advantage of...in as many ways as possible. It may not last...the Arabs are a very volatile...changeable people...But while it's here, I think America should try to encourage this friendly feeling... try to develop it into some kind of partnership, if at all possible.

One last word...perhaps the only people in the world who are more popular among the Arabs today than the Americans...are the Russians. That in itself ought to give us good reasons for taking advantage of this opportunity .

COLLINGWOOD: That was Bob Pierpoint, CBS News Correspondent in Asia, who stopped off to report part of the crisis in the Middle East on his way here. Pierpoint and other CBS News correspondents are coming home for a year-end review with Ed Murrow on December 30...and incidentally to be home for Christmas. Ed Murrow will be home for Christmas, too. He'll get back from his current trip to the Far East in time to preside over this program again on Monday. I'LL be back with a footnote to the news, but first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: Communist China's Premier Chou En Lai -- whom, as you may have heard, Ed Murrow interviewed during his current trip to Southeast Asia-- cut open a pigeon pie today with extraordinary results. It was in Karachi, Pakistan, and when Chou En Lai made his slice, out flew six white doves. They flapped around and lit on the heads of Karachi's leading citizens. Seemed their tails had been heavily painted in Pakistan's national colors and they weren't airworthy.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD...ED MURROW WILL SEE YOU MONDAY.

1372 PAID DAY LETTER CHG LOWELL THOMAS, BROADCAST ACCOUNT (MURROW)

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

DEC 24 1956

December 24, 1956

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

Vice President Nixon today returned from his trip to Austria, where he made a first-hand study of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon said the visit convinced him that "much more" must be done to help refugees from behind the Iron Curtain. The United States, he said, will do its "full share". Nixon told reporters that as a result of the sacrifices of the Hungarian people, international communism had been dealt a mortal blow. "The whole world," he said, "knows now that Communism can maintain its hold only by force." Nixon will make his specific recommendations to President Eisenhower next week. ~~And these recommendations apparently will be in three parts. In addition to Nixon's oral report to the President, other reports will be made by John Hollister, director of the International Cooperation Administration, and Deputy Attorney General William Rogers. The recommendations submitted by Rogers will concern~~

LT 1

(more)

101

WB5158

~~possible revision of the immigration law to allow more refugees into the country. Hollistania reports will deal with Premier Kiro and to Austria. Both officials accompanied Kiro on his trip.~~

~~More than 170 thousand Hungarians have entered Austria since October. This has put a strain on the Austrian economy and incurred the disapproval of Moscow. Nevertheless, Chancellor Raab told the Austrian people in a Christmas message, "We will continue to do our duty."~~

Seven hundred and fifty-two refugees crossed the Austrian frontier last night, including a Russian soldier who asked for asylum. Lighted Christmas trees are marking the Austrian side of the border tonight.

In Budapest today, the party newspaper said 200-thousand workers may soon be unemployed in Hungary, due to an acute shortage of coal. The military curfew has been lifted for tonight only, so that church-goers may attend midnight services.

The Indian ambassador to Moscow arrived in Budapest today, to confer with Hungarian leaders in and out of the government. There are reports that he may be feeling out the non-Communist parties on their terms for joining a coalition government.

MB 5191

113

Prime Minister Nehru of India conferred for three hours today with British Prime Minister Eden, at Eden's country home outside London. No details were divulged, but Nehru is thought to have filled Eden in on his recent talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. Nehru will be in England until Thursday, when he will fly to Duesseldorf for a brief conference... at the airport... with West German Chancellor Adenauer. It is now reported unlikely that the Indian prime minister will stop off in Cairo, on his way home, to see President Nasser.

The task of clearing the Suez Canal has not begun, although the last British and French troops left Egypt on Saturday. General Wheeler, the American officer in charge of the United Nations operation, says he has not received permission from the Egyptian authorities to begin clearing the waterway. Egypt has opposed the use of British and French salvage ships... and crews. As a compromise, the British and French agreed that the crewmen should wear civilian clothes and that the ships should fly the United Nations flag. Egypt is now balking at this procedure. An official of the Egyptian Canal Authority said that Secretary General Hammarskjold is expected to go to Cairo to discuss the situation. But in New York, a United Nations spokesman told reporters this afternoon that Hammarskjold has no plan to visit Cairo at this time. General Wheeler says the situation at the moment is in "a very critical state".

(more)

An Egyptian crowd in Port Said today destroyed the statue of Ferdinand de Lesseps, the French engineer who directed construction of the Suez Canal. They began attacking the base of the statue yesterday with axes and crow-bars, and today... when it fell... they finished breaking it to bits.

Israel today accused Egypt of renewing its commando raids on Israeli territory. The Israeli Foreign Ministry cited the time-bombing of a clinic at Yokneam village over the week-end, and said it is "only a miracle" that doctors, nurses and patients were not killed. The foreign ministry charged Egypt with deliberate violation of the United Nations cease-fire.

The Warsaw radio today announced that Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai will visit Poland around the middle of next month. Chou will also visit Moscow next month for talks designed, according to the Soviet news agency Tass, "to reinforce the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two states." For several weeks, the Chinese premier has been touring

212 (more) MB 532P

South Asia. In Karachi today, he joined Prime Minister Shurawardy of Pakistan in noting an increase in international tension, and calling for "constant vigilance and constructive action" in the cause of peace. They say... in their joint communique... that the "divergence of views" between their two countries should not prevent friendly relations. Pakistan is a member both of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization and the Baghdad Pact.

An American correspondent... William Worthy... entered Communist China today for the purpose of interviewing Americans who are still in that country. He crossed the border at Hong Kong, after being granted a 30-day visa by the Peiping government. Last summer, Communist China invited a group of American correspondents to visit the Chinese mainland, and the State Department forbade them to accept on grounds that it was "against the best interests of the United States." The Department cited the fact that American citizens ARE being held in Red China "as political hostages." Today, the State Department reaffirmed its stand... and said it "deplores" Worthy's decision. Worthy is a reporter for the Baltimore Afro-American and a Nieman Fellow at Harvard. He has, on occasion, done some overseas reporting for CBS News. Worthy said in Hong Kong today that he has signed papers... waiving any claims which might arise against the United States government, due to injury or detention in the course of his trip.

(more)

156

MB 539P

Reports from Indonesia say that President Sukarno may declare a state of war, in an effort to stamp out the revolt in Sumatra. The military command in Northern Sumatra today defied a government order to dismiss the officer who seized control of that part of the island LAST WEEK. Central Sumatra has also fallen to the insurgents, leaving only the southern district under government control.

Note: Schoenbrun is writing piece now. Will be taped so he can get some rest. Details later. Couple more stories to come, including report on meeting of Soviet central committee. Also word. Will telephone after last copy moves. Bliss

178

HB 545

PR 1-2345

EPT 477

Ed Bliss

December 24, 1956

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

This is the news:

The Moscow Radio chose Christmas Eve to announce a plenary session of the Communist Party central committee. As customary, the meeting was announced at its conclusion. Premier Bulganin reported to the committee on the current five-year plan. According to Bulganin, production of consumer goods in Russia is up nine percent over a year ago.... and over-all industrial production up eleven percent. He stressed that the "material welfare" of the Soviet people in the past year had improved... that both economic and military power had grown. At the same time, Bulganin conceded that the quota for coal production had not been met. The central committee also discussed Soviet foreign policy and the problem of unrest in the satellite states. It passed a resolution approving the de-Stalinization program. "The decisions of the 20th Congress of the Communist Party," it said, "have met with the unanimous approval of the whole Soviet people."

156 NB 65

The following two stories precede Schoenbrun tape piece.....

In Tallahassee, Florida, the city commission tonight directed the local bus company to enforce racial segregation. The order was issued after Negroes in Tallahassee ended a seven-month boycott of the bus line today and began sitting wherever there was a vacant seat. Segregation on buses in Montgomery, Alabama was ended last week by court order. No specific decision has been handed down in the case of Tallahassee.

Traffic accidents are continuing to take a heavy toll. So far, on this Christmas week-end, 442 persons have died on the nation's highways.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has just arrived in New York from Paris. He will take part in the annual Years of Crisis broadcast, but he came early--- and for a good reason. I give you David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs five minutes and five seconds. Ends on cue quote more curious and kinder America in the new year ahead unquote. This means, Ed, that you should go into tape at seven fifty-one fifty-five, leaving ten seconds to round out before going into word, which follows: There are those in other lands who see America as a country full of faith. Thoreau said, "The smallest seed of faith is better than the largest seed of happiness." Not even at Christmas is happiness an end in itself. And George Washington counseled us to observe good faith and justice with all nations. "Cultivate peace and harmony," he said, "with all." Goodnight and good luck.

190 (more) MB 753

Much regret entire script 25 lines over.

Bliss

MB 705P

69

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Dec. 24, 1956

This is the news:

The Moscow Radio chose Christmas Eve to announce a plenary session of the Communist Party central committee. As customary, the meeting was announced at its conclusion. Premier Bulganin reported to the committee on the current five-year plan. According to Bulganin, production of consumer goods in Russia is up nine percent over a year ago.... and over-all industrial production up eleven percent. He stressed that the "material welfare" of the Soviet people in the past year had improved... that both economic and military power had grown. At the same time, Bulganin conceded that the quota for coal production had not been met. The central committee also discussed Soviet foreign policy and the problem of unrest in the satellite states. It passed a resolution approving the de-Stalinization program. "The decisions of the 20th Congress of the Communist Party," it said, "have met with the unanimous approval of the whole Soviet people."

94

[redacted]

1A

[redacted]

Vice President Nixon today returned from his trip to Austria, where he made a first-hand study of the Hungarian refugee problem. Nixon said the visit convinced him that much more must be done to help refugees from behind the Iron Curtain. The United States, he said, will do its "full share". Nixon told reporters that as a result of the sacrifices of the Hungarian people, international communism had been dealt a mortal blow. "The whole world," he said, "knows now that Communism can maintain its hold only by force." Nixon will make his specific recommendations to President Eisenhower next week. [redacted] of [redacted] Attorney General William Rogers. [redacted]

(more)

~~possible revision of the immigration law to allow more refugees into the country. Ministers reports will [illegible] financial aid to Austria. Both critics [illegible] visit on his trip.~~

~~More than [illegible] Hungarians have entered Austria since October. This has put a strain on the Austrian economy and incurred the disapproval of Moscow. Nevertheless, Chancellor Raab told the Austrian people in a Christmas message, "We will continue to do our duty."~~

Seven hundred and fifty-two persons crossed the frontier last night, including a Russian soldier who asked for asylum.

In Budapest today, the party newspaper said 200-thousand workers may soon be unemployed in Hungary, due to an acute shortage of coal. The military curfew has been lifted for tonight only, so that church-goers may attend midnight services.

The Indian ambassador to Moscow arrived in Budapest today to confer with Hungarian leaders in and out of the government. There are reports that he may be feeling out the non-Communist parties on their terms for joining a coalition government.

Prime Minister Nehru of India has spent the day conferring with British Prime Minister Eden, at Eden's country home outside London. No details were divulged, but Nehru is thought to have filled Eden in on his recent talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. Nehru will be in England until Thursday, when he will fly to Duesseldorf for a brief conference... at the airport... with West German Chancellor Adenauer. It is now reported unlikely that the Indian prime minister will stop off in Cairo, on his way home, to see President Nasser.

The task of clearing the Suez Canal has not begun, although the last British and French troops left Egypt on Saturday. General Wheeler, the American officer in charge of the United Nations operation, says he has not received permission from the Egyptian authorities. Egypt has opposed the use of British and French salvage ships... and crews. As a compromise, the British and French agreed that the crews should wear civilian clothes and that the ships should fly the United Nations flag. Egypt is now balking at this procedure. An official of the Egyptian Canal Authority said that Secretary General Hammarskjold is expected to go to Cairo to discuss the situation. But in New York, a United Nations spokesman says Hammarskjold has no plan to visit Cairo at this time. General Wheeler says the situation at the moment is in "a very critical state".

(more)

An Egyptian crowd in Port Said today destroyed the statue of Ferdinand de Lesseps, the French engineer who directed construction of the Suez Canal. They began attacking the base of the statue yesterday with axes and crow-bars, and today... when it fell... they finished breaking it to bits.

Israel today accused Egypt of renewing its commando raids on Israeli territory. The Israeli Foreign Ministry cited the time-bombing of a clinic at Yokneam village over the week-end, and said it was "only a miracle" that doctors, nurses and patients were not killed. The foreign ministry charged Egypt with deliberate violation of the United Nations cease-fire.

The Warsaw radio today announced that Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai will visit Poland around the middle of next month. Chou will also visit Moscow next month for talks designed, according to the Soviet news agency Tass, "to reinforce the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two states." For several weeks, the Chinese premier has been touring

(more)

South Asia. In Karachi today, he joined Prime Minister Shurawardy of Pakistan ~~[illegible]~~ in noting an increase in international ~~[illegible]~~ tension and calling for "constant vigilance and constructive action" in the cause of peace. They say... in their joint communique... that the "divergence of views" between their two countries should not prevent friendly relations. Pakistan is a member both of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization and the Baghdad Pact.

(An American correspondent... William Worthy... entered Communist China today for the purpose of interviewing Americans who are still in that country. He crossed the border at Hong Kong, after being granted a 30-day visa by the Peiping government. This action was against the regulations of the State Department. ~~[illegible]~~ ~~invited a group of American correspondents to visit the Chinese mainland,~~ ~~and the State Department refused [illegible] on grounds that it was "against the best interests of the United States." The State Department cited the fact that American citizens are being held in Red China "as~~

(more)

political hostages." Today, the State Department reaffirmed its stand... and said it "deplores" Worthy's decision. Worthy is a reporter for the Baltimore Afro-American and a Nieman Fellow at Harvard. He has, on occasion, done some overseas reporting for CBS News.

Worthy said in Hong Kong today that he has signed papers... waiving any claims which might arise against the United States government due to Indonesian detention in Bangkok in the course of his trip.

Reports from Indonesia say that President Sukarno has declared a state of war, in an effort to stamp out the spreading revolt in Sumatra.

The military command in Northern Sumatra, [illegible] dismiss [illegible] officers who last week seized control of [illegible] Sumatra. Sukarno has also given [illegible] commands, leaving only the southern districts in government control.

-gt-

Note: Bangkok [illegible] press now. Will be taped to AP wire get some rest. Tuesday lobby. Female news stories to come, including report on meeting of Soviet central committee. Also word. Will telephone after last copy moves. Bliss

~~The following two stories precede Schoenbrun tape piece.....~~

~~In Tallahassee, Florida, the city commission tonight discontinued local~~ ~~bus service in order to avoid racial segregation. The order~~ ~~was issued after Negroes in Tallahassee ended a seven-month boycott of~~ ~~the bus line by refusing to ride. There was a recent court decision~~ ~~ordering the end of segregated seating on buses in Montgomery, Alabama. The order came~~ ~~a week by a court order. No specific decision has been made in the case of~~ ~~Tallahassee.~~

~~Traffic accidents are mounting to new heights this Labor Day. So far~~ ~~on this holiday weekend, 422 persons have died in traffic accidents.~~

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has just arrived in New York from Paris. He will take part in the annual Years of Crisis broadcast, but he came ~~[illegible]~~ early--- and for a good reason. Now here is ~~[illegible]~~ David Schoenbrun.

~~(Tape runs five minutes and five seconds. Pair on one quote seems curious~~ ~~and [illegible] This means, Ed, that~~ ~~you should go [illegible] is~~ ~~to cover the Berlin story. [illegible]~~ word. ~~[illegible]~~ There are those in other lands who see America as a country full of faith. Thoreau said, "The smallest seed of faith is better than the largest seed of happiness." Not even at Christmas is happiness an end in itself. And George Washington counseled us to observe good faith and justice with all nations. "Cultivate peace and harmony," he said, "with all." Goodnight and good luck.

(more)

105

5:05 7:51:55

Good evening this is not the news---this is a newsman who has come home for Christmas for the first time im more yyears than he csres to remember... and deeply interested in and who is what is happening to his fellow Americans as the year 1956 draws to a close .Tonight I have no interest in Paris,or Algiers or Saigon or any of the places where i normally roam and report to you...tonight,if you will bear with me I would like to report to you about a country that I know too little about--that I visit only too rarely--but which I see and hear about through the eyes and ears of other peoples in other countries--for America is a matter of deep interest and concern to hundreds of millions of people all around the world.

There was a French lawyer on the plane from Paris to New York this morning who talked to me about America. .. She is a very lovely Parisienne and a very good lawyer..succcessful,popular,and very French. She told me she thought she might become an American...had been thinking about it for the past two to three years. This isnt the first time Ive heard people in Europe--successful people--say they were thinking of leaving and becoming American...One of the top editors of an important French magazine--the righthand man of a major political personality in London--an engineer in Munich--a designer in Milan---- dozens of men and women in many countries are once again looking to America as a dreamland.. This French lawyer on the plane talked of America for an hour and more- I wish you all had been there to hear her talk about our country and our people--not about Americas size or strength--or wealth or way of life--none of the things we think people envy us or admire us for...No,she talked about the kindness of Americans--the youth and beauty and health of the people and the land-- and the culture of America... something that Americans themselves rarely talk about or think about.

She said: We French pride ourselves on our culture and console ourselves about our loss of power by saying that after all we are still the artistic leaders of the world..but you know,said this Frenchwoman,that is no longer true. Even in the field of culture America is among the leaders of the world: Hemingway,Faulkner,Oneill--these are great writers--take music--good music for the people--no country in the world has as many fine symphony orchestras,as much interest in music as America and the Americans. Take the theatre she said--the five top plays in Paris this week are American--from Broadway .

Take the new modern arts--radio ,television --where have they been developed as they are in America..Yes,I know,she said,there is much that is vulgar and cheap and superficial- - but there is much that is superb. And above all, there is hope and faith in the future. The hope and faith of Americans is one of their greatest qualities.I pray that you will never lose it,that you will never grow old and cynical and disillusioned. And,she said,that you will always stay as curious and kind as you are. I asked her what she meant by curious and kind and she replied: You want to know what makes things tick,you are curious about the world and about people and you are kind to people.The first reaction of an American when he meets someone strange is to smile and to hope that it will be a new friend..We in Europe are not like that any more--we are suspicous of strangers,suspicious of of anything new--Dont become like us I beg you.

I was ,needless to say,very moved by this profession of faith in America. Ive been thinking about it all day...We reporters spend much of our time on politics and international affairs--the crises of the world--that we see a different projection of America--an America that is either hated or loved for its power and size--an America that is more often envied,criticized and disliked... an America that sometimes is not curious or smiling or kind-- It was good this morning to talk about the other America and to know that there are people in Europe and in Asia and Africa who see projedtions of America other than the political or military--who know that Americans can be as gentle as they are crude, as cultured as they are powerful --an America that Americans themselves rarely think about, rarely appreciate. I wanted to tell you about that America tonight on Christmas Eve and to wish you all the best of holidays and an ever better, younger, more curious and kinder America in the New Year ahead.

Chg Lowell Thomas Broadcast acct

DEC 25 1956

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

1075 DL Pd

December 25, 1956

458p

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

HT
JC 526

This is the news:

The Soviet government today dismissed Maxim Saburov, chairman of the state economic commission, because of incompetence. He retains his position as first deputy premier. The action apparently is due to dissatisfaction with progress being made under the sixth five-year plan.

Yesterday, the Communist Party central committee reported that while over-all production this year was up 11 percent over 1955, quotas were unfilled in such vital industries as coal, metal and cement. As a result, the party Presidium ordered a shake-up of the economic commission and an all-out drive against inefficiency and waste. The commission will have at least five new members and be headed by Mikhail Pervukhin, who... like Saburov... is a first deputy premier.

(more)

125

1 LT/2 TC 530P

In Budapest today, Cardinal Mindszenty celebrated Christmas mass at the American Legation, where he took refuge after the second Russian intervention. The churches of Budapest were filled. Soviet troops and tanks made themselves as inconspicuous as possible. THERE ARE REPORTS THAT THE PUPPET GOVERNMENT OF HUNGARY IS SEEKING A 100-MILLION-DOLLAR LOAN FROM THE WORLD BANK.

(Note to Mr. Murrow: Nixon's report to American people on Hungarian refugee problem will be inserted here. Text has not moved on wires).

Mr. Nixon will make specific recommendations to President Eisenhower on Wednesday. These recommendations apparently will be in three parts. In addition to Nixon's overall report to the President, other reports will be made by John Hollister, director of the International Cooperation Administration, and Deputy Attorney General William Rogers. The recommendations submitted by Rogers will concern possible revision of the immigration law, to allow more refugees into the country. Hollister's report will deal with financial aid to Austria and to international agencies dealing with relief for displaced persons. Both officials accompanied Nixon on his trip.

(more)

125

1/3 LT TC 534

On Thursday, the vice president will visit the reception center at Camp Kilmer, New Jersey.

President Eisenhower today sent personal greetings to the refugees who are spending Christmas at Camp Kilmer. Each greeting... written in Hungarian on White House stationery... welcomed the recipient to American soil. "We realize," the President said, "that you ardently hope for a time when all Hungarians can enjoy the blessings of individual freedom in their mother country. We join in that hope." Mr. Eisenhower went on, in his message, to assure the refugees that if... when that time comes... they decide to go back home, the United States will do its best to help them return. "The courageous spirit of the Hungarian people," he said, "inspire free people everywhere."

President and Mrs. Eisenhower are spending Christmas at the White House. They were joined this afternoon by their four grandchildren, and there was a great unwrapping of gifts.

Traffic accidents are continuing to take a heavy toll. So far, on this four-day holiday, MORE THAN 600 persons have died on the nation's highways.

(more)

185

December 25, 1956

636p

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

Two United Nations officials [redacted] LEFT for the Middle East tonight, to speed up clearance of the Suez Canal. They are Andrew Cordier, executive assistant to Secretary General Hammarskjold, and [redacted] the deputy undersecretary, Alfred Katzen. They will confer with Egyptian authorities, as well as with United Nations officers in charge of clearing the canal. [redacted] In the past, Egypt has balked at the participation of British and French ships in the salvage operation. But now they are [redacted] demanding the withdrawal of all Israeli troops from Egypt, before work is begun.

[redacted]

(more)

636

90

A motion to debate the question of withdrawing Israeli troops from the Gaza Strip was defeated today in the Israeli parliament. Parliament TOOK THE COUNSEL of Prime Minister Ben Gurion, who said a discussion of the issue was not in the public interest at this time. Ben Gurion refused to amplify his recent statement that Israel will never allow Egypt to reoccupy Gaza.

AN OIL pipeline is receiving attention in Israel tonight, and for that story we switch to Michael Elkins in Jerusalem.

Note: Tape runs 2:27
Returns on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

In Indonesia, President Sukarno has placed most of eastern Sumatra under a state of siege. He also ordered the leader of the Army coup in North Sumatra dismissed from his command. Leaders of the revolt have stressed that they are not rebelling against Sukarno but against the prime minister.

640 RPC

(more)

145

Chancellor Adenauer told the German people today... in his annual Christmas message... that 1947 may bring the reunification of Germany within reach. "But the wound of division," he said, "still smarts, and the time until reunification seems too long and hard." Adenauer called the return of the Saar to Germany on January first "a great joy for us all."

Queen Elizabeth was mindful of refugees in her annual Christmas message. "Let us remember," she said, "those who, like the Holy Family before them, have been driven from their homes. Let us see that for them and their children, there is room at the inn." The queen's message took cognizance of the strain placed on the British Commonwealth by the invasion of Egypt. And with these words she appealed for unity and mutual understanding.

Note: Tape runs 3 minutes
Ends on cue: "to you all upon this Christmas Day."

That was the appeal of Queen Elizabeth for Commonwealth unity, contained in her annual Christmas message. It could apply as well to unity in the world. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is George Bryan.

(more)

187

647 P

Word for today as follows....

The old message, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a [redacted] saviour, which is Christ the Lord," is still the heart of Christmas. As Peter Marshall said, this message can neither be changed nor quite forgotten, although there are many things that tend to make us forget. Goodnight and good luck.

Note to Mr. Murrow. The script should come out right on the nose. Earlier stories had Nixon speaking at six. He will not speak until [redacted] eight, right after your show, as part of a special Hungarian refugee program. I suggest this line be [redacted] inserted after the Budapest story. Quote Vice President Nixon will [redacted] report what he saw [redacted] (LAST WEEK IN) the refugee camps [redacted] in Austria, [redacted] DURING a special Hungarian refugee program to be carried by most of these stations, immediately after this broadcast. Unquote. Then pick[redacted] up line [redacted] Mr. Nixon will make specific recommendations to President Eisenhower on Wednesday. Tapes [redacted] all set. I think Liz will be effective.

Bliss

164

Word for today as follows....

The old message, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord," is still the heart of Christmas. As Peter Marshall said, the message neither be changed nor quite forgotten, although there are many things that tend to make us forget. Goodnight and good luck.

Note to Mr. Murrow. The script should come out right on the nose. Earlier stories had Nixon speaking at six. He will not speak until eight, right after your show, as part of a special Hungarian refugee program. I suggest this line be inserted after the Budapest story. Quote Vice President Nixon will announce that he saw at the refugee camps in Austria last week, in a special Hungarian refugee program to be carried by most of those stations, immediately after this broadcast. Unquote. Then picking up line that Mr. Nixon will make specific recommendations to President Eisenhower on Wednesday. Tapes are all set. I think this will be effective.

Brian

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW NEWS - MIKE ELKINS, JERUSALEM

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: An oil pipeline is receiving attention in Israel tonight, and for that story, we switch to Michael Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: In a few days, Israel is expected to open a diplomatic offensive for the internationalization of two islands most of the world has never heard of. The islands are the Island of Kiran (?) and they nominally belong to Saudi Arabia. They are at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula. They were never inhabited until six years ago, when Egyptian artillery units moved its three-inch guns onto them. Since then, the Gulf of Aquaba has been closed to Israel's shipping and Israel's southern port of Elath has had no access to the outside world. According to Israel's Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, this blockade and the denial of the Suez Canal to Israel's shipping has cost Israel 30 million dollars a year.

On November 6th, an Israeli long-range desert group struck down along the Sinai Coast and captured the Kiran islands. The Gulf was opened and the port of Elath came alive. With the opening of the port of Elath, Israel immediately began building an eight-inch oil pipeline, intended ultimately to stretch 200 miles from Elath to Israel's oil refineries in Haifa. The reason is simple.

If oil tankers can enter the Gulf of Aqaba and unload into the Elath-Haifa pipeline, instead of making the long journey around the bulge of North Africa, it would save Israel many millions of dollars every year. It would guarantee Israel a way to get the vital oil even if the Suez Canal should again be closed to Israel's shipping. The eight-inch pipeline, now being built, can carry 800,000 tons of crude oil annually, enough to let Israel exist. But at the same time, it can now be revealed that the Ben-Gurion government is quietly negotiating with France and perhaps with Britain for international financing for a 30-inch pipeline that could, if fulfilled, take the place of the Suez Canal in supplying the oil upon which Europe's industrial life depends.

Recent events show how quickly the Egyptians can close the Canal by sabotage. But the islands of Kiran control the Gulf of Aqaba, and Israel holds the islands. It looks now as though Israel will give them up, if at all, only to some kind of international control that will guarantee to keep the Gulf of Aqaba open so that the new pipeline, which can be called "Israel's lifeline", will never be cut. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW NEWS - MIKE ELKINS, JERUSALEM

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: An oil pipeline is receiving attention in Israel tonight, and for that story, we switch to Michael Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: In a few days, Israel is expected to open a diplomatic offensive for the internationalization of two islands most of the world has never heard of. The islands are the Island of Kiran (?) and they nominally belong to Saudi Arabia. They are at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula. They were never inhabited until six years ago, when Egyptian artillery units moved its three-inch guns onto them. Since then, the Gulf of Aquaba has been closed to Israel's shipping and Israel's southern port of Elath has had no access to the outside world. According to Israel's Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, this blockade and the denial of the Suez Canal to Israel's shipping has cost Israel 30 million dollars a year.

On November 6th, an Israeli long-range desert group struck down along the Sinai Coast and captured the Kiran islands. The Gulf was opened and the port of Elath came alive. With the opening of the port of Elath, Israel immediately began building an eight-inch oil pipeline, intended ultimately to stretch 200 miles from Elath to Israel's oil refineries in Haifa. The reason is simple.

If oil tankers can enter the Gulf of Aqaba and unload into the Elath-Haifa pipeline, instead of making the long journey around the bulge of North Africa, it would save Israel many millions of dollars every year. It would guarantee Israel a way to get the vital oil even if the Suez Canal should again be closed to Israel's shipping. The eight-inch pipeline, now being built, can carry 800,000 tons of crude oil annually, enough to let Israel exist. But at the same time, it can now be revealed that the Ben-Gurion government is quietly negotiating with France and perhaps with Britain for international financing for a 30-inch pipeline that could, if fulfilled, take the place of the Suez Canal in supplying the oil upon which Europe's industrial life depends.

Recent events show how quickly the Egyptians can close the Canal by sabotage. But the islands of Kiran control the Gulf of Aqaba, and Israel holds the islands. It looks now as though Israel will give them up, if at all, only to some kind of international control that will guarantee to keep the Gulf of Aqaba open so that the new pipeline, which can be called "Israel's lifeline", will never be cut. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 pm, E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Soviet government today dismissed Maxim Saburov, chairman of the state economic commission, because of incompetence. He retains his position as first deputy premier. The action apparently is due to dissatisfaction with progress being made under the sixth five-year plan. Yesterday, the Communist Party central central committee reported that while over-all production this year was up 11 per cent over 1955, quotas were unfilled in such vital industries as coal, metal and cement. As a result, the party Presidium ordered a shake-up of the economic commission and all-out drive against inefficiency and waste. The commission will have at least five new members and be headed by Mikhail Pervukhin, who...like Saburov...is a first deputy premier.

In Budapest today, Cardinal Mindszenty celebrated Christmas mass at the American Legation, where he took refuge after the second Russian intervention. The churches of Budapest were filled. Soviet troops and tanks made themselves as inconspicuous as possible. There are reports tonight that the puppet government is seeking a 100-million dollar loan from the World Bank.

Vice President Nixon will report what he saw last week in the refugee camps in Austria, in a special Hungarian refugee program to be carried over most of these stations, immediately after this broadcast.

Mr. Nixon will make specific recommendations to President Eisenhower on Wednesday. These recommendations apparently will be in three parts. In addition to Nixon's over-all report to the President,other reports will be made by John Hollister, Director of the International Cooperation Administration, and Deputy Attorney General William Rogers. The recommendations submitted by Rogers will concern possible revision of the immigration law, to allow more refugees into the country. Hollister's report will deal with financial aid to Austria and to internationaal agencies dealing with relief for displaced persons. Both officials accompanied Nixon on his trip.

On Thursday, the Vice President will visit the reception center at Camp Kilmer, New Jersey.

President Eisenhower today sent personal greetings to the refugees who are spending Christmas at Camp Kilmer. Each greeting...written in Hungarian on White House stationery...welcomed the recipient to American soil. "We realize," the President said, "that you ardently hope for a time when all Hungarians can enjoy the blessings of individual freedom in their mother country. We join in that hope." Mr. Eisenhower went on, in his message, to assure the refugees that if...when that time comes...they decide to go back home, the United States will do its best to help them return. "The courageous spirit of the Hungarian people," he said, "inspires free people everywhere."

President and Mrs. Eisenhower are spending Christmas at the White House. They were joined this afternoon by their son, daughter--in-law and four grandchildren, and there was a great unwrapping of gifts.

Traffic accidents are continuing to take a heavy toll. So far, on this four-day holiday, more than 600 persons have died on the nation's highways.

The United Nations officials left for the Middle East tonight, to speed up clearance of the Suez Canal. They are Andrew Cordier, executive assistant to Secretary General Hammarskjold, and the deputy undersecretary, Alfred Katzen. They will confer with Egyptian authorities, as well as with United Nations officers in charge of clearing the canal. In the past, Egypt has balked at the participation of British and French ships in the salvage operation. But now they are said to be demanding the withdrawal of all Israeli troops from Egypt, before work is begun.

A motion to debate the questions of withdrawing Israeli troops from the Gaza Strip was defeated today in the Israeli parliament. Parliament members followed the lead of Prime Minister Ben Gurion, who said a discussion of the issue was not in the public interest at this time. Ben Gurion refused to amplify his recent statement that Israel will never allow Egypt to reocupy Gaza.

An oil pipeline is receiving attention in Israel tonight, and for that story we switch to Michael Elkins in Jerusalem.

ELKINS: In a few days, Israel is expected to open a diplomatic offensive for the internationalization of two islands most of the world has never heard of. The islands are the Island of Kiran and they nominally belong to Saudi Arabia. They are at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula. They were never inhabited until six years ago, when Egyptian artillery units moved its three-inch guns onto them. Sinc then, the Gulf of Aquaba has been closed to Israel's shipping and Israel's southern port of Elath has had no access to the outside world. According to Israel's Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, this blockade and the denial of the Suez Canal to Israel's shipping has cost Israel 30 million dollars a year.

On November 6th, an Israeli long-range desert group struck down along the Sinai Coast and captured the Kiran islands. The Gulf was opened and the port of Elath came alive. With the opening of the port of Elath, Israel immediately began building an eight-inch oil pipeline, intended ultimately to stretch 200 miles from Elath to Israel's oil refineries in Haifa. The reason is simple.

If oil tankers can enter the Gulf of Aqaba and unloan into the Elath-Haifa pipeline, instead of making the long journey around the bulge of North Africa, it would save Israel many millions of dollars every year. It would guarantee Israel a way to get the vital oil even if the Suez Canal should again be closed to Israel's shipping. The eight-inch pipeline, now being built, can carry 800,000 tons of crude oil annually, enough to let Israel exist. But at the same time, it can now be revealed that the Ben-Gurion government is quietly negotiating with France and perhaps with Britain for international financing for a 30-inch pipeline that could, if fulfilled, take the place of the Suez Canal in supplying the oil upon which Europe's industrial life depends.

Recent events show how quickly the Egyptians can close the Canal by sabotage. But the islands of Kiran control the Gulf of Aqaba, and Israel will give them up, if at all, only to some kind of international new pipeline, which can be called "Israle's lifeline", will never be cut. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Indonesia, President Sukarno has placed most of eastern Sumatra under a state of siege. He also ordered the leader of the Army coup in North Sumatra dismissed from his command. Leaders of the revolt have stressed that they are not rebelling against Sukarno but against the prime minister.

Chancellor Adenauer told the German people today...in his annual Christmas message...that 1957 may bring the reunification of Germany within reach. "But the wound of division," he said, "still smarts, and the time until reunification seems too long and hard." Adenauer called the return of the Saar to Germany on January first "a great joy for us all."

Queen Elizabeth was mindful of refugees in her annual Christmas message. "Let us remember," she said, "those who, like the Holy Family before them, have been driven from their homes. Let us see that for them and their children, there is room at the inn." The queen's message took cognizance of the strain placed on the British Commonwealth by the invasion ofEgypt. And with these words she appealed for unity and mutual understanding.

QUEEN ELIZABETH: I believe that the way in which our Commonwealth is developing represents one of the most hopeful and imaginative experiments in international affairs that the world has ever seen. If, as its head, I can make any real personal contribution towards this progress, it must surely be to promote its unity. We talk of ourselves as a family of nations, and perhpps our relations with one another are not so very different from those which exist between members of any family. We all know that these are not always easy, for there is no law within a family which binds its members to think or act or be alike. And, surely, it is this very freedom of choice and decision which gives exceptional value to friendship in times of stress and disagreement. Such friendship is a gift for which we are truly and rightly grateful.

Nonetheless, deep and acute differences, involving both intellect and emotion are bound to arise between members of a fmily and also between friend and friend; and there is neither virtue nor value in pretending that they do not. In all such differences, however, there comes a moment when, for the sake of ultimate harmony, the healing power of tolerance, comradeship and love must be allowed to play its part. I speak of a tolerance which is not indifferent, but is rather a willingness to recognize the possibility and right in others; of a comradeship which is not just of sentimental memories of good days past, but the certainty that the tried and staunch friends of yesterday are still, in truth, the same people today; of a love that can rise above anger and is ready to forgive.

That each one of us should give this power a chance to do its work is my heart-felt message to you all upon this Christmas Day.

MURROW: That was the appeal of Queen Elizabeth for Commonwealth unity, contained in her annual Christmas message. It could apply as well to unity in the world. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcement

MURROW: The old message, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a saviour, which is Christ the Lord," is still the heart of Chrstmas. As Peter Marshall said, this message can neither be changed nor quite forgotten, although there are many things that tend to make us forget. Goodnight and Good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Dec. 26, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower decided today to give "top priority" to the Hungarian refugee problem. The question of expanding American aid to persons fleeing Communist oppression will be the first subject discussed next Tuesday, when the President holds his scheduled meeting with Congressional leaders. And the White House has taken steps to insure that there will be no interruption in the relief program, while the Administration and Congress work out a course of action. Late today, the President ordered the processing of Hungarian refugees continued "on a tentative basis" after the present American quota of 21-thousand, 5-hundred has been filled. This processing-order applies to refugees... still in Austria... who are seeking admission to the United States. Mr. Eisenhower was briefed this morning by Vice President Nixon, who flew to Austria last week and made a first-hand study of the refugee problem. Mr. Nixon said a definite decision on whether to raise the American quota will depend on what he learns tomorrow while visiting the reception center at Camp Kilmer, in New Jersey, and on the outcome of President Eisenhower's conference with congressional leaders. He said that in addition to increasing the quota for Hungarians, the United States may open its doors to more escapees from other Iron-Curtain countries. Mr. Eisenhower will also discuss with congressional leaders (of both parties) the question of financial aid. Nixon said that reports of lagging public contributions have caused the President "particular concern".

Eugene Black, president of the World Bank, today ruled out the possibility of a loan to the puppet Hungarian government. Hungary, he said, is ineligible for a loan because it is not a member of the World Bank. And he said he would not recommend one if it were. Hungary is reported seeking a 100-million-dollar loan from the bank to bolster its economy. Today, in Budapest, it's reported that Premier Kádar will soon announce a program for broadening his government by the inclusion of non-Communists. No details of the program were announced.

An official Egyptian source in Cairo said today that agreement has been reached, on an operational basis, for clearing the Suez Canal. This source... which is not identified... is quoted as saying that the agreement was reached, here in New York, in conversations between the Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi, and United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold. According to this source, orders for clearing the canal have been issued to General Wheeler, who was named by the United Nations to direct the salvage operations. There is no information that work of clearing the canal has actually begun. An official of the Egyptian Canal Authority said yesterday that the project could not be undertaken until all Israeli forces were withdrawn from Egyptian soil. A further complication is reported by the Associated Press. It quotes an Egyptian source today as saying Egypt will no longer negotiate a long-range settlement on the basis of the "six principles" agreed upon by all parties on October 12. Those principles called... among other things... for use of the canal by ships of all nations without discrimination and for insulation of canal operations "from the politics of any country." A.P. quotes the source as saying these principles no longer hold because of the military intervention by the British and French.

The commander of the United Nations police force... General Burns... conferred today with the Israeli chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan, on the next phase of the Israeli withdrawal. Israeli troops have now pulled back to a line 46 miles east of the Suez Canal. Among the technical problems discussed is the stationing of United Nations air units in the Sinai. These aircraft would be used for airlifting United Nations troops.

The Israeli government has filed a note in Washington, urging the United States to do what it can to stop Arab commando raids on Israeli territory. Israel alleges that 19 of these raids have been carried out in the past three weeks. The State Department says the note is "being studied".

Also in Washington, the government has turned down an appeal by the steel industry for special treatment to help it meet the demand for more steel plates in building oil tankers. Specifically, the Office of Defense Mobilization refused to give the industry a priority on scarce steel plates and certain tax benefits in relation to a plant expansion program. To rule otherwise, the agency said, could lead to a controlled economy in peacetime.

The coalition government of Indonesia refused to yield today to demands that it resign, over the army revolt in Sumatra. The decision was taken after an eight-hour emergency meeting of the cabinet... whereupon the minister of foreign affairs quit. /The government has cancelled all Army leaves.

The United States Army (IN EUROPE) said today that, man for man, it posseses "more killing power than any other army in the world. The statement is made in the year-end review issued by United States Army headquarters in Europe. And it cites the reinforcement achieved, during the year, by the arrival of more guided missiles and atomic cannon. At the same time, it is reported unofficially in Washington that the goal of the Air Force will be cut back by about 10 wings, in the military budget the Administration will present to Congress next month. The present goal is 137 wings.

(1)

MURROW: We try, on this program, to keep ~~fully~~ abreast of the news. Most often events speak for themselves. But on occasion it seems useful to put many details together and have a closer look at the pattern they form. Richard C. Hottelet, who has spent many years in Central Europe, has just returned from a trip to Germany, Poland and Austria. - Dick, what is going on there in the heart of Europe?

HOTTELET: My strongest impression, Ed, is of what's happening in Poland. A cold revolution is in progress there - an experiment in freedom - the transformation of a soviet satellite into a largely independent and sovereign state.

MURROW: That's a tall order. How about spelling it out.

HOTTELET: The communist party and the government of Poland seem to be throwing overboard some of the most important attributes of a satellite. They've ignored the warnings and the threats of Soviet Russia and set about building what they call "humane socialism" based on the interests of the Polish nation. ------ These things don't happen overnight, and the Polish picture has been developing over many many months. The dramatic break came last June when the workers of ~~Poznan~~ Poznan rose up in rebellion and cried out for freedom and bread. ~~The uprising was~~ The uprising was directed against the whole intolerable system of soviet communism; and the grievances were so real that there would have been civil war if they had not been recognized and met. The people of Poland were tired of what was really colonial exploitation at the hands of the Soviet Union. They were tired of working like dogs for a soviet plan, of being lied to by their government, and hounded by the secret police. ---- Since June the party and government have relaxed restrictions to ~~an astonishing~~ an astonishing degree. I had conversations in Warsaw with students, newspapermen, party officials and industrial managers that would have been impossible six months ago. I've heard public discussions that made my hair stand on end. --- A week ago last friday, I attended a pre-election rally in the big auditorium of Warsaw University. The speakers were two young men who were competing for a place on the official ballot. One of them was a young communist, editor of a student newspaper that has led the struggle for liberalization. He called for a change in the system. As far as freedom of speeh and freedom of thought are concerned, he said, we are far behind civilized nations. We must overcome our backwardness. He said that the dead weight of the party apparatus must be removed from the state administration and party leaders shaken up to weed out the stalinists. He made no bones of his sympathy for the Hungarian people - and he described Soviet influence on Poland as blackmail. ----- This was surprising enough. But the second young speaker was far more outspoken. His main argument was against the one-party system. "The one-party system", he said, "means the end of justice. .... If there is only one party many people join it to enjoy privileges. ... One cannot assert that only one ideology is wise and right. We consider only those wise who can lead us to a better life and better times. ... Different ideologies must compete and give us a chance to select the best one. We will accept the program of those people who can lead us to freedom and a better life. What this young man had in mind was a system of two or three competing parties in a humane socialist state. --- He was roundly applauded by the audience of about 200 students.

MURROW: But what happened to him after the meeting?

HOTTELET: That's interesting too. Nothing happened to him - but he had no need to fear the secret police - this kind of free speech is permitted. But the government does not encourage freedom in such strong doses - and the young man did NOT get his name on the ballot. - Whereupon several thousand of his fellow students at the technical university held a protest meeting - said they wanted to nominate their own candidates for parliament and not have official favorites rammed down their throats.

(3)

MURROW: Well, Dick, students have always been way out in fron when it comes to freedom --- how about the ordinary citizens?

HOTTELET: The same applies to them. They criticize the communist system and the highest communist leaders bitterly and publicly at the drop of a hat. I've had party officials, whom I couldn't have met six months ago, talk about the struggle going on inside the Politburo and attack party leaders by name. --There are no taboos in private conversation. No one conceals his distrust and dislike of Soviet Russia. Everybody pays lip service to socialism - but soviet communism (and much of marxism too) has been thrown overboard. Warsaw has none of the dingy slogans you see festooned all over the other peoples democracies. The old claptrap about class warfare and dictatorship of the proletariat has been abandoned. --Workers are organizing factory councils to displace the burocrats of the central planning commission. On the land seven thousand of the ten thousand collective farms have already been dissolved --- and the whole structure of prices and retail trade is swinging back to private enterprise. --- In the schools, come January Russian will no longer be compulsory; and the textbooks are already being revised to teach children what really happened instead of what the communist party sazs happened. -- Western radio broadcasts are heard freely and openly; western newspaperw and books are beginning to come in - and Poles are crowding trains and planes to visit friends and relatives in the west.

MURROW: Where will this end? Will the Russians let Poland become a free country?

4

HOTTELET: That is what the Poles are asking too. So far they've [redacted] Just last week an unprecedented treaty [redacted] stood up to the Soviets,. [redacted] made the strength and movements of soviet [redacted] troops at least nominally subject to Polish approval. -- [redacted] The Poles [redacted] hope that the Soviet Union will tolerate a [redacted] sovereign, independent Poland with a modified socialist system and a policy of friendship toward the Soviet Union. But they are afraid that Moscow may still try to turn back the clock to satellite communism --- and in that case there is no doubt the Poles will fight.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Polish people have achieved a considerable degree of freedom against tremendous odds, because they have dared. They have a tradition of freedom... and they have given it a rebirth. Southey said, "Easier were it to hurl the rooted mountain from its base, than force the yoke of slavery upon men determined to be free."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower decided today to give "top priority" to the Hungarian refugee problem. The question of expanding American aid to persons fleeing Communist oppression will be the first subject discussed next Tuesday, when the President holds his scheduled meeting with Congressional leaders. And the White House has taken steps to insure that there will be no interruption in the relief program, whfle the Administration and Congress work out a course of action. Late today, the President ordered the processing of Hungarian refugees continued "on a tentative basis" after the present American quote of 21-thousand, 5-hundred has been filled. This processing order supplies to refugees...still in Austria...who are seeking admission to the United States. Mr. Eisenhower was briefed this morning by Vice President Nixon, who flew to Austria last week and made a first-hand study of the refugee problem. Mr. Nixon said a definite decision on whether to raise the American quota will depend on what he learns tomorrow while visiting the reception center at Camp Kilmer, in New Jersey, and on the outcome of President Eisenhower's conference with congressional leaders. He said that in addition to increasing the quota for Hungarians, the United States may open its doors to more escapees from other Iron-Curtain countries. Mr. Eisenhower will also discuss with congressional leaders (of both parties) the question of financial aid. Nixon said that reports of lagging public contributions have caused the President "particular concern".

Eugene Black, president of the World Bank, today ruled out the possibility of a loan to the puppet Hungarian government. Hungary, he said, is ineligible for a loan because it is not a member of the World Bank. And he said he would not recommend one if it were. Hungary is reported seeking a 100-million-dollar loan from the bank to bolster its economy. Today, in Budapest, it's reported that Premier Kadar will soon announce a program for broadening his government by the inclusion of non-communists. No details of the program were announced.

An official Egyptian source in Cairo said today that agreement has been reached, on an operational basis, for clearing the Suez Canal. This source...which is notidentified...is quoted as saying that the agreement was reached, here in New York, in conversations between the Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi, and United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold. According to this source, orders for clearing the canal have been issued to General Wheeler, who was named by the United Nations to direct the salvage' operations. There is no information that work of clearing the canal has actually begun. An official of the Egyptian Canal Authority said yesterday that the project could not be undertaken until all Israeli forces were withdrawn from Egyptian soil. A further complication is reported by the Associated Press. It quotes an Egyptian source today as saying Egypt will no longer negotiate a long-range settlement on the basis of the "six principles" agreed upon by all parties on October 12. Those principles called...among other things...for use of the canal by ships of all nations without discrimination and for use of the canal by shdps of all nations without discrimination and for insulation of canal operations "from the politics of anf country." A.P. quotes the source as saying these princidles no longer hold because of the military intervention by the British and French.

The commander of the United Nations police force...General Burns... conferred today with the Israeli chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan, on the next phase of the Israeli withdrawal. Israeli troops have now pulled back to a line 46 miles east of the Suez Canal. Among the technical problems discussed is the stationing of United Nations air units in the Sinai. These aircraft would be used for airlifting United Nations troops.

The Israeli government has filed a note in Washington, urging the United States to do what it can to stop Arab commando raids on Israeil territory. Israel alleges that 19 of these raids have been carried out in the past three weeks. The State Department says the note is "being studied".

Also in Washington, the government has turned down an appeal by the steel industry for special treatment to help it meet the demand for more steel plates in building oil tankers. Specifically, the Office of Devense Mobilization refused to give the industry a priority on scarce steel plates and certain tax benefits in relation to a plant expansion program. To rule otherwise, the agency said, could lead to a controlled economy in peacetime.

The coalition government of Indonesia refused to yield today to demands that it resign, over the army revolt in Sumatra. The decision was taken after an eight-hour emergency meeting of the cabinet...whereupon the minister of foreign affairs quit. The government has cancelled all Army leaves.

The United States Army in Europe said today that, man for man, it possesses "more killing power than any other army in the world." The statement is made in the year-end review issued by United States Army headquarters in Europe. And it cites the reinforcement achieved, during the year, by the arrival of more guided missiles and atomic cannon. At the same time, it is reported unofficially in Washington that the goal of the Air Force will be cut back by about 10 wings, in the military budget the Administration will present to Congress next month. The present goal is 137 wings.

We try, on this program, to keep abreast of the news. Most often events speak for themselves, But on occasion it seems useful to put many details together and have a closer look at the pattern they form. Richard C. Hottelet, who has spent many years in Central Europe, has just returned from a trip to Germany, Poland and Austria. - Dick, what is going on there in the heart of Europe?

HOTTELET: My strongest impression, Ed, is of what's happening in Poland. A cold revolution is in progress there - an experiment in freedom - the transformation of a soviet satellite into a largely independent and sovereign state.

MURROW: That's a tall order. How about spelling it out.

HOTTELET: The communist party and the government of Poland seem to be throwing overboard some of the most important attributes of a satellite. They've ignored the warnings and the threats of Soviet Russia and set about building what they call "humane socialism" based on the interests of the Polish nation. These things don't happen overnight, and the Polish picture has been developing over many many months. The dramatic break came last June when the workers of Poznan rose up in rebellion and cried out for freedom and bread. The uprising was directed against the whole intolerable system of Soviet Communism; and the grievances were so real that there would have been civil war if they had not been recognized and met. The people of Poland were tired of what was really colonial exploitation at the hands of the Soviet Union. They were tired of working like dogs for a Soviet plan, of being lied to by their government, and hounded by the secret police. Since June the party and government have relaxed restrictions to an astonishing degree. I had conversations in Warsaw with students, newspapermen, party officials and industrial managers that would have been impossible six months ago. I've heard public discussions that made by hair stand on end. A week ago last Friday, I attended a pre-election rally in the big auditorium of Warsaw University. The speakers were two young men who were competing for a place on the official ballot. One of them was a young communist, editor of a student newspaper that has led the struggle for liberalization. He called for a change in the system. As far as freedom of speech and freedom of thought are concerned, he said, we are far behind civilized nations. We must overcome our backwardness. He said that the dead weight of the party apparatus must be removed from the state administration and party leaders shaken up to week out the Stalinists. He made no bones of his sympathy for the Hungarian people - and he described Soviet influence on Poland as blackmail. This was surprising enough. But the second young speaker was far more outspoken. His main argument was against the one-party system. "The one-party system", he said, "means the end of justice. If there is' only one party many people join it to enjoy privileges. One cannot assert that only one ideology is wise and right. We consider only those wise who can lead us to a better life and better times. Different ideologies must compete and give us a chance to select the best one. We will accept the program of those people who can lead us to freedom and a better life." What this young man had in mind was a system of two or three competing parties in a humane socialist state. He was roundly applauded by the audience of about 200 students.

MURROW: But what happened to him after the meeting?

HOTTELET: Nothing happened to him - but that's interesting too. He had no need to fear the secret police - this kind of free speech is permitted. But the government does not encourage freedom in such strong doses - and the young man did NOT get his name on the ballot. Whereupon several thousand of his fellow students at the technical university held a protest meeting - said they wanted to niminate their own candidates for parliament and not have official favorites rammed down their throats.

MURROW: Well, Dick, students have always been way out in front when it comes to freedom -- how about the ordinary citizens?

HOTTELET: The same applies to them. They criticize the communist system' and the highest communist leaders bitterly and publicly at the drop of a hat. I've had party officials, whom I couldn't have met six months ago, talk about the struggle going on inside the Politburo and attack party leaders by name. There are no taboos in private conversation. No one conceals his distrust and dislike of Soviet Russia. Everybody pays lip service to socialism - but soviet communism (and much of marxism too) has been thrown overboard. Warsaw has none of the dingy slogans you see festooned all over the other peoples democracies. The old claptrap about class warfare and dictatorship of the proletariat has been abandoned. Workers are organizing factory councils to displace the bureaucrats of the central planning commission. On the land seven thousand of the ten thousand collective farms have already been dissolved - and the whole structure of prices and retail trade is swinging back to private enterprise. In the schools, come January Russian will no longer be compulsory; and the textbooks are already being revised to teach children what really happened instead of what the communist party says happened. Western radio broadcasts are heard freely and openly; western newspaper and books are beginning to come in - and Poles are crowding trains and planes to visit friends and relatives in the west.

MURROW: Where will this end? Will the Russians let Poland become a free country?

HOTTELET: That is what the Poles are asking too. So far they've stood up to the Soviets. Just last week an unprecedented treaty made the strength and movements of Soviet troops at least nominally subject to Polish approval. The Poles hope that the Soviet Union will tolerate a sovereign, independent Poland with a modified socialist system and a policy of friendship toward the Soviet Union. But they are afraid that Moscow may still try to turn' back the clock to satellite communism - and in that case there is no doubt the Poles will fight/

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. But first here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Polish people have achieved a considerable degree of freedom' against tremendous odds, because they have dared. They have a tradition of freedom...and they have given it a rebirth. Southey said, "Easier were it to hurl the rooted mountain from its base, than force the yoke of slavery upon men determined to be freed."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Dec. 27, 1956

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Winthrop Aldrich as United States ambassador to Britain, with "utmost regret". Mr. Eisenhower appointed John Hay Whitney, the New York financier, to take over the London post. Aldrich said he wanted to resign "for personal reasons". The resignation will not take effect for several weeks.

Vice President Nixon today inspected the reception center for Hungarian refugees at Camp Kilmer, in New Jersey. He also conferred... at Camp Kilmer... with the President's committee on Hungarian refugee relief. He also talked, here in New York, with former President Hoover... whom Nixon described as "the greatest expert in the world on handling refugees." Mr. Hoover said, after the meeting, that the admission of [redacted] freedom-loving Hungarians "will help the country." Mr. Nixon is preparing a written report for President Eisenhower on the refugee problem.

A special committee set out from Washington today on a world tour to check on the effectiveness of America's foreign aid program. The citizens committee... headed by Benjamin Fairless, former board chairman of U.S. Steel... was appointed by President Eisenhower last fall. Fairless said today that he is starting out on the trip with "no preconceived ideas." The committee is scheduled to report back to the President in March.

Clearance of the Suez Canal is due to start tomorrow on a small scale. Two salvage vessels... one Swedish, the other Egyptian... are scheduled to start work at the southern end of the canal. General Wheeler, the United Nations officer in charge of salvage operations, had expressed hope the work could begin today. "But," he said, "Egyptian authorities have informed us they must clear mines before we can proceed with clearance work." In Cairo, my colleague... Frank Kearns... quotes an Egyptian spokesman as ~~saying~~ serving notice there will be "trouble" if Israel continues to refuse to pull out of the Gaza Strip. The spokesman called the refusal "a flagrant violation of United Nations resolutions."

Israel today offered Egypt an unconditional exchange of all prisoners of war. Israel says it holds more than 5-thousand Egyptian prisoners, which it is willing to swap for only four Israelis known to be held by the Egyptians. The offer was announced in Tel Aviv by a representative of the International Red Cross.

Tev Aviv newspapers said today that Israel has established a naval base at Elath, a port on the Gulf of Aqaba, opening onto the Red Sea. This gives Israel two naval bases. The other base is at Haifa, on the Mediterranean.

Two Israeli settlements north of Tel Aviv were reported attacked today by Arab commandos. No report of casualties.

India's Prime Minister Nehru stopped off in West Germany today for a brief conference with Chancellor Adenauer. Nehru is on his way back to India from his talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. He and Adenauer conferred privately for an hour and a half at the Duesseldorf airport. It is reported only that they "reviewed world problems, including the problem of the Middle East."

Russia admitted today that some of its young people have "unhealthy" political tendencies. The Moscow Radio said some students in Soviet universities have been infected with "alien ideas". It called the defects in student training "serious"... and said the indoctrination program is being given close study by Communist leaders.

The Indonesian government said today that the revolt in North Sumatra has been crushed. The leader of the revolt, it said, has given himself up. There is, however, no direct confirmation that the central government is in control in North Sumatra. And new unrest is reported elsewhere in Indonesia---in South Sumatra, Borneo and the Celebes.

In Washington, the Army announced tonight that it has a plan for cutting the numerical strength of its combat divisions, to give them the mobility required for the atomic age. Under the plan, a division would be made up of five combat groups, instead of the present three regiments. In an infantry division, it would mean a reduction to about 14-thousand men. The present infantry division numbers around 17 and a half thousand men. Reductions in the strength of an armored division would be "minor". The plan must still get the approval of the Defense Department.

The Defense Department announced today that 14-thousand men will be drafted for the Army in February---3-thousand less than the draft quota for the preceding four months. The cut is attributed to higher enlistments.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks predicted today that "barring grave emergency", the national economy as a whole in 1957 "should set new records." Business may expand at a slower rate, he said, and inflation remains a problem.

In Tallahassee, Florida, Negro leaders have called off their plan to ignore the local law requiring segregation on the public buses. A jeering crowd of about 200 white persons gathered at a downtown transfer point, and the demonstration of non-segregated riding was called off to prevent violence. The manager of the Cities Transit Company... and nine drivers... in Tallahassee, were arrested on charges of operating without a franchise. The city commission suspended the franchise last night because the buses were being operated on a de-segrated basis. In Birmingham, The White Citizens Council of North Alabama threatened today to put what it called "minutemen" on city buses. So far, no report that this action has been taken. Negroes continued to ride in white sections of buses in Birmingham, but to a lesser extent.

How much have the Russians increased their influence in the Middle East?

In one word-- immeasurably. Until very recently, the Russians were outsiders in the Middle East. Today, they are a Mideast power. Until recently, the ~~entire~~ Arab world was a western sphere of influence, the almost exclusive preserve of Britain and the United States; and France still aspired nostalgically to regain a place of ~~influence~~ power. Today, both Britain and France have destroyed their ~~influence~~ power in the Arab world; and as their positions have collapsed, the Russians have moved in. That is the measure of the change that has taken place, a drastic change in the ~~midpoint~~ balance of power. The ~~turbulent~~ events of this year have left a vacuum that only the United States and Russia can fill.

The way the Russians gained a foothold in the Arab countries was bold and simple. They allied themselves with Arab nationalism, and endorsed its aims. The overriding aim of Arab nationalism is to expel the western powers from all their positions of power in the region, including their military bases. This, the Russians said, was all that they themselves desired: their aims and Arab aims were therefore identical. To prove it, the Russians responded immediately to the Egyptian request for arms: and we now know how generously they responded, for we have seen the great quantity of Communist arms, of the highest quality and most modern type, which the Egyptians abandoned when the Israelis overran the Sinai desert. Every Arab country wants a big modern army: and so others were eager to emulate the Egyptians; ~~follow Egyptian example;~~ Syria sought guns and tanks from Moscow, and now little Jordan is following suit, and checking on the possibilities.

This year, at the critical moment, the Russians proved that they were prepared to face the consequences of their new Mideastern role. When Israel attacked Egypt, and the British and French landed at Port Said, the Russians intervened. There was the so-called Bulganin ultimatum to Israel, and the rough Bulganin warning to Britain and France. There was the threat of Russian ~~assembled~~ volunteers fighting in the Middle East. In short, Moscow was apprently ready to push the crisis to the brink of general war. The voice of power is respected in the Arab world, and in Arab eyes it is the Russians who take most of the credit for halting the ~~M~~ Anglo-French invasion.

There are many high-placed Arabs who have their misgivings about this alignment with Russia and this dependence on Russian arms. But the Russians are in a strong position, an ideal position for making trouble. For example: Nasser, to consolidate his position at home and in the Arab world, must rebuild his shattered army. He must turn to the Russians to do that. All ~~of Israel's enemies~~ the Arab states now know that they can only hope ~~to gain a position of military strength with Soviet arms. There is no other easy way. The Russian formula for expansion in the Middle East is therefore very simple: to keep the Arab-Israeli conflict burning,~~ to ~~embroil~~ bugger Israel with Soviet arms. For that reason, The Russian formula for expansion in the Middle East is, ~~therefore~~ to keep the Arab-Israeli conflict burning.

To what extent has Nasser's position been altered?

The amazing fact is that Nasser has suffered a humiliating military defeat, his forces in the field ~~in Sinai were~~ have been smashed and much of his air force knocked out on the ground, his country has been weakened and its national economy wrecked; and yet, Nasser's own position in Egypt and his prestige in the Arab world are ~~almost~~ as high as ever. He has managed to turn a military defeat into a political triumph. In great part, this is due to his superb propaganda machine. Nasser has told his people that Egypt was not beaten by Israel for the simple reason that she never fought Israel. She withdrew her forces to the Suez Canal in order to fight the Anglo-French invasion. The Egyptians have been told that their ~~proud~~ army was about to crush the invaders and hurl them into the sea when the United Nations stepped in and saved them from this disaster. Nasser's propaganda has pictured Port Said as a kind of Egyptian Stalingrad, and the rather spotty Egyptian resistance in that city has been built up into a legend of heroic defense. In Cairo ten days ago, I saw a twenty-five minute newsreel purporting to ~~present~~ tell the story of the Suez Canal campaign. Among other things, it showed warships being bombed and sunk right and left in heavy seas. The narrator said that this was what the Egyptian air force had done to the British fleet off Port Said. Actually, the scenes were filmed by top-notch combat photographers of World War Two, and the warships that went down were not British but Japanese and German. There were other shots of enemy fighters hitting the earth in burst of flame, and the crowd in the movie-house cheered as each one came crashing down. They did not know that the planes, far from being British Meteors or Vampires, were Japanese Zeroes of World War Two.

This is totalitarian propaganda on an incredible scale applied to a generally gullible and ~~uncritical~~ ignorant people. Nasser's story of the war is believed, I am convinced, by the great majority of Egyptians. It is believed not only in Egypt but in the Arab world at large, even by some sophisticated people. Only a few insiders appear to know what really happened.

Among high-placed insiders in the Egyptian army, there has been sharp discontent and grumbling, which could cause trouble later. But for the moment, Nasser has ridden out the storm miraculously unscathed.

Is there any prospect of a settlement of the really key question- the conflict with Israel?

No, Ed, I don't believe there is. The one prediction that I would confidently make about 1957 is that it will bring no settlement between the Arab states and Israel. ~~No Arab government can propose a peace settlement and survive; the emotional nationalism of the Arab masses~~. The Israeli attack on Egypt has made that more improbable than ever; it has deepened the Arab bitterness and desire for revenge; it has made it impossible for any Arab government to propose peace negotiations with Israel and survive. No western power seems prepared to bring pressure on the Arabs to negotiate, for fear of antagonizing the whole Arab world. Nasser himself, in a recent interview, said that he would never make peace with Israel. Even if he agreed to recognize the Israeli government, he said, he would never open his borders, he would never live with Israel as a neighbour, he would never relent. An Arab-Israeli settlement would be a great prize for the west, a great boon for the Middle East, and a great setback for Russia, but I don't think we are going to get it in 1957.

Word for Today

History is not always tidy, and all conclusions certain. Certainly the problem of the Suez Canal has got about as confused as it can get. It is difficult to know what should be done. But, ultimately, there must be action. For as Edmund Burke said, "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil, is that good men do nothing."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Winthrop Aldrich as United States ambassador to Britain with "utmost regret". Mr. Eisenhower appointed John Hay Whitney, the New York financier, to take over the London post. Aldrich said he wanted to resign "for personal reasons". The resignation will not take effect for several weeks.

Vice President Nixon today inspected the reception center for Hungarian refugees at Camp Kilmer, in New Jersey. He also conferred...at Camp Kilmer...with the President's committee on Hungarian refugee relief. He also talked, here in New York, with former President Hoover...whom Nixon described as "the greatest expert in the world on handling refugees." Mr. Hoover said after the meeting that the admission of freedom-loving Hungarians "will help the country." Mr. Nixon is preparing a written report for President Eisenhower on the refugee problem.

A special committee set out from Washington today on a world tour to check on the effectiveness of America's foreign aid program. The citizens committee...headed by Benjamin Fairless, former board chairman of U.S.Steel...was appointed by President Eisenhower last fall. Fairless said today that he is starting out on the trip with "no preconceived ideas." The committee is scheduled to report back to the President in March.

Clearance of the Suez Canal is due to start tomorrow on a small scale. Two salvage vessels...one Swedish, the other Egyptian, are scheduled to start work at the southern end of the canal. General Wheeler, the United Nations officer in charge of salvage operations, had expressed hope the work could begin today. "But," he said, "Egyptian authorities have informed us they must clear mines before we can proceed with clearance work." In Cairo, my colleague...Frank Kearns...quotes an Egyptian spokesman as serving notice there will be "trouble" if Israel continues to refuse to pull out of the Gaza Strip. The spokesman called the refusal "a flagrant violation of United Nations resolutions."

Israel today offered Egypt an unconditional exchange of all prisoners of war. Israel says it holds more than 5-thousand Egyptian prisoners, which it is willing to swap for only four Israelis known to be held by the Egyptians. The offer was announced in Tel Aviv by a representative of the International Red Cross.

Two Israeli settlements north of Tel Aviv were reported attacked today by Arab commandos. No report of casualties.

India's Prime Minister Nehru stopped off in West Germany today for a brief conference with Chancellor Adenauer. Nehru is on his way back to India from his talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. He and Adenauer conferred privately for an hour and a half at the Duesseldorf airport. It is reported only that they "reviewed world problems, including the problem of the Middle East."

Russia admitted today that some of its young people have "unhealthy" political tendencies. The Moscow Radio said some students in Soviet universities have been infected with "alien ideas". It called the defects in student training "serious",...said the indoctrination program is being given close study by Communist leaders.

The Indonesian government said today that the revolt in North Sumatra has been crushed. The leader of the revolt, it said, has given himself up. There is, however, no direct confirmation that the central government is in control in North Sumatra. And new unrest is reported elsewhere in Indonesia -- in South Sumatra, Borneo and the Celebes.

In Washington, the Army announced tonight that it has a plan for cutting the numerical strength of its combat divisions, to give them the mobility required for the atomic age. Under the plan, a division would be made up of five combat groups, instead of the present three regiments. In an infantry division, it would mean a reduction to about 14-thousand men. The present infantry division numbers around 17 and a half thousand men. Reductions in the strength of an armored division would be "minor". The plan must still get the approval of the Defense Department.

The Defense Department announced today that 14-thousand men will be drafted for the Army in February - 3-thousand less than the draft quota for the preceding four months. The cut is attributed to higher enlistments.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks predicted today that "barring grave emergency", the national economy as a whole in 1957 "should set new records." Business may expand at a slower rate, he said, and inflation remains a problem.

In Tallahassee, Florida, Negro leaders have called off their plan to ignore the local law requiring segregation on the public buses. A jeering crowd of about 200 white persons gathered at a downtown transfer point, and the demonstration of non-segregated riding was called off to prevent violence.. The manager of the Cities Transit Company...and nine drivers...in Tallahassee, were arrested on charges of operating without a franchise. The city commission suspended the franchise last night because the buses were being operated on a de-segregated basis. In Birmingham, the White Citizens Council of North A labama threatened today to put what it called "minutemen" on city buses. So far, no report that this action' has been taken. Negroes continued to ride in white sections of buses in Birmingham, but to a lesser extent.

My colleague, Winston Burdett, just back from the Middle East is here in the Studio tonight and I would like to pose him some questions. How much have the Russians increased their influence in the Middle East?

BURDETT: In one word -- immeasurably. Until very recently, the Russians were outsiders in the Middle East. Today, they are a Mideast power. Until recently, the Arab world was a western sphere of influence, the almost exclusive preserve of Britain and the United States; and France still aspired nostaligically to regain a place of power. Today, both Britain and France have destroyed their power in the Arab world; and as their positions have collapsed, the Russians have moved in. That is the measure of the change that has taken place, a drastic change in the balance of power. The events of this year have left a vacuum that only the United States and Russia can fill.

The way the Russians gained a foothold in the Arab countries was bold and simple The allied themselves with Arab nationalism, and endorsed its aims. The overriding aim of Arab nationalism is to expel the western powers from all their positions of power in the region, including their military bases. This, the Russians said, was all that they themselves desired: their aims and Arab aims were therefore identical. To prove it, the Russians responded immediately to the Egyptian request for arms: and we now know how generously they responded, for we have seen the great quantity of Communist arms, of the highest quality and most modern type, which the Egyptians abandoned when the Israelis overran the Sinai desert. Every Arab country wants a big modern army; and so others were eager to simulate the Egyptians; Syria sought guns and tanks from Moscow, and now little Jordan is following suit, and checking on the possibilities.

This year, at the critical moment, the Russians proved that they were prepared to face the consequences of their new Mideastern role. When Israel attacked Egypt, and the British and French landed at Port Said, the Russians intervened. There was the so-called Bulganin ultimatum to Israel, and the rough Bulganin warning to Britain and France. There was the threat of Russian "volunteers" fighting in the Middle East. In short, Moscow was apparently ready to push the crisis to the brink of general war. The voice of power is respected in the Arab world, and in Arab eyes it is the Russians who take most of the credit for halting the Anglo-Fren invasion.

b

There are many high-placed Arabs who have their misgivings about this alignment with Russia and this dependence on Russian arms. But the Russians are in a strong position, an ideal position for making trouble. For example; Nasser, to consolidat his position at home and in the Arab world, must rebuild his shattered army. He must turn to the Russians to do that. All the Arab states now know that they can only hope to fight Israel with Soviet arms. For that reason, the Russian formula for expansion in the Middle East is, to keep the Arab-Israeli conflict burning.

MURROW: To what extent has Nasser's position been altered?

BURDETTE: The amazing fact is that Nasser has suffered a humiliating military defeat, his forces in the field have been smashed and much of his air force knocked out on the ground, his country has been weakened and its national economy wrecked; and yet, Nasser's own position in Egypt and , and his prestige in the Arab world are as high as ever. He has managed to turn a military defeat into a political triumph. In great part, this is due to his superb propaganda machine. Nasser has told his people that Egypt was not beaten by Israel for the simple reason that she never fought Israel. She withdrew her forces to the Suez Canal in order to fight the Anglo-French invasion. The Egyptians have been told that their army was about to crush the invaders and hurl them into the sea when the United Nations stepped in and saved them from this disaster. Nasser's propaganda has pictured Port Said as a kind of Egyptian Stlaingrad, and the rather spott Egyptian resistance in that city has been built up into a legend of heroic defense. In Cairo ten days ago, I saw a twenty-five minute newsreel purporting to tell the story of the Suez Canal campaign. Among other things, it showed warships being bombed and sunk right and left in heavy seas. The narrator said that this was what the Egyptian air force had done to the British fleet off Port Said. Actually, the scenes were filmed by top-notch combat photographers of World War Two, and the warships that went down were not British but Japanese and German. There were other shots of enemy fighters hitting the earth in bursts of flame, and the crowd in the movie-house cheered as each one came crashing down. They did not know that the planes, far from being British Meteors or Vampires, were Japanese Zeroes of World War Two.

This is totalitarian propaganda on an incredible scale applied to a generally gullible and ignorant people. Nasser's story of the war is believed, I am convinced by the great majority of Egyptians. It is believed not only in Egypt but in the Arab world at large, even by some sophisticated people. Only a few insiders appear to know what really happened.

Among high-placed insiders in the Egyptian army, there has been sharp discontent and grumbling, which could cause trouble later. But for the moment, Nasser has ridden out the storm miraculously unscathed.

MURROW: Is there any prospect of a settlement of the really key question -- the conflict with Israel?

BURDETTE: No, Ed, I don't believe there is. The one prediction that I would confidently make about 1957 is that it will bring no settlement between the Arab states and Israel. The Israeli attack on Egypt has made that more improbable than ever; it has deepened the Arabs' bitterness and desire for revenge; peace negotiations with Israel and survive. No western power seems prepared to bring pressure on the Arabs to negotiate, for fear of antagonizing the whole Arab world. Nasser, himself, in a recent interview, said that he would never live with Israel as a neigbor, he would never relent. An Arab-Israeli settlement would be a great prize for the west, a great boon for the Middle East, and a great setback for Russia, but I don't think we are going to get it in 1957.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcement

MURROW: History is not always tidy and all conclusions certain. Certainly the problem of the Suez Canal has got about as confused as it can get. It is difficult to know what should be done. But, ultimately, there must be action. For as Edmund Burke said, "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil, is that good men do nothing." Goddnight and good luck!

Dec. 28, 1956.

This is the news.

The Communist government in Hungary, struggling to get the country back on its feet economically, ran into fresh trouble today. Radio Budapest announced that miners have shut down the coal mines again by taking a "paid vacation." The miners claim they have the holiday coming because their normal vacation times came when they were on strike.

At the same time, the official government newspaper admitted that Hungary's Communist governments have been lying for years to conceal the much higher living standards and technical advances of the West. And it appealed to Russia and the West for expert technical as well as financial aid to pull the country out of its backwardness.

Hungary's state prosecutor is preparing an indictment against Mihaly Farkas and his son - two notorious purgers of the Stalin era - and several former high officers of the secret police. Along with former [redacted] Communist party bosses Erno Gerge and Matyas Rakosi, they are accused of many [redacted] sins against individuals and the nation.

[redacted]

[redacted]

Communist China's ruling body---the Politburo---gave backing today to Russia's intervention in Hungary. The Politburo said it was "righteous action." And it sided with the Kremlin in its controversy with Yugoslavia's President Tito over the independence issue---said such policies as Tito advocates could only destroy the Communist movement.

[redacted]

Communist China's Premier, Chou en-Lai, arrived in Dacca, East Pakistan on the last leg of his 10-day visit to the country. He called for the unity of Asians and Africans to safeguard world peace.

[redacted]

In~~cidentally~~, Our State Department has revoked the passports of three American newsmen who entered Communist China despite the Department's orders to the contrary. Their cases also are being called to the attention of the Justice Department in view of what are termed "the relevant provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act." The three newsmen include William Worthy of the Baltimore Afro-American, and a reporter-photographer team from Look Magazine.

In the Middle East, the clearing of the Suez Canal was delayed again today---apparently because Egyptian Canal authorities at Suez had not received formal orders to proceed with the job. [redacted]

[redacted]

There is a new threat of trouble in Indonesia. There have been scattered revolutionary efforts all week on the big island of Sumatra. Now both the army and political leaders reportedly have threatened armed rebellion unless the Premier [redacted] dismisses his Cabinet. The Premier has called his Ministers into emergency session to study the matter.

France's Foreign Minister Pineau made a bid tonight for West European unity-----said in a nationwide radio address that it is perhaps "a question of life or death for France." Unless the nations of Western Europe do unite their efforts and objectives, he said, "sooner or later they will become involved in one of the two blocs which tend to divide the world without guaranteeing peace."

French officials in Paris joined with Americans today in a ceremony commemorating the 100-th anniversary of the birth of our World War One President, Woodrow Wilson. At the Hotel Crillon where Wilson and other delegates to the Versailles peace conference drew up the League of Nations charter in 1919, a plaque was installed in Wilson's honor. Maurice Faure, representing France, praised Wilson for his "defense of right, law and justice." And our Ambassador Dillon read a statement from President Eisenhower, hailing Wilson as a symbol of the enduring friendship between France and the United States. He said we are still dedicated to that idea, as well as to Wilson's concept of a great family of nations, living peacefully together and ruled with justice under law.

At home, President Eisenhower flew to Augusta during the day for a weekend of golf and relaxation. With him were his son John and his wife and General Snyder, the President's personal physician.

Before he left Washington, Mr. Eisenhower pinned the Distinguished Service Medal on his one-time aide and long-time friend, General Alfred Gruenther. After 38-years of military service, Gruenther will retire Monday to become President of the American Red Cross. The President said that of all such ceremonies he has attended, no one was more deserving of the honor than Gruenther.

Four Southern Representatives recommended today that schools in the nation's capitol return to a [redacted] segregated basis. They contend that integration has [redacted] seriously damaged the public schools there---that it has lessened educational opportunities for both races, created [redacted] appalling delinquency and disciplinary problems, and was a major factor in the exodus of many white residents of Washington to Virginia and Maryland. The Congressmen who made the recommendation---Davis of Georgia, Williams of Mississippi, Jones of North Carolina and Broyhill of Virginia,---make up the majority of the House Investigating Subcommittee which has held public hearings on [redacted] Washington school integration. Two committee members, Miller of Nebraska and Hyde of Missouri, who refused to go along with the report, accused the committee staff of selecting witness opposed to integration---said those in favor were not given full and fair opportunity to be heard.

[redacted]

Howard K. Smith, David Schoenbrun —

How much has Western Alliance been damaged?

What can be done to Reestablish unity? —

Prospects for anything better than return to status quo in Middle East. —

Word for Today

Woodrow Wilson was born 100 years ago today. His great dream, of course, was the League of Nations. Now we have the United Nations. Its achievements have been considerable. But we have still to establish what ~~Woodrow~~ Wilson called "a reign of law, based on the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW - DAVID SCHOENBRUN - H. K. SMITH

Friday, December 28, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Two of my colleagues from Europe are with me tonight, Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, and David Schoenbrun, who is basedin Paris. I would liketo put to both of them the same questi@n: How much has the Western alliance been damagedby the events at Suez? Why don't you start, Howard Smith?

SMITH: Well, I think it has been straineda great deal, Ed. The British ... I don't think there will ever be the mutual trust that we had before, or there won't be for a long time. The British are certainly going to be much less willing to provide the large number of troops that the North Atlantic alliance has required. They say, in effect, that they tried to be a big power, they tried to go it alone, they weren't even able to swing us alongside them, so why pretend they're a big power and spend all this money that it takes to be one? They're going to cut down their forces in Europe.

However, after these strains haveall been lifted, I still think that the alliance is still there and it will recover. In the long run I think mutual interest and geography are the dominating factors. I've always felt that the alliance can be more or less effective but it's bound to go on existing as long as Britain stays where she is geographically.

MURROW: How does the damage look as viewed from Paris, Schoenbrun?

SCHOENBRUN: I feel pretty much the same way as Smith does, although I wouldadd to geography and mutual interest that there's a common civilization, which is involved in France, America and Britain. They're really members of a family, which can get angry with one another but cannot, I think, ever really split apart. Therefore, I think as Howard does, and

I'm sure as you do, Murrow, that the alliance has undergone great strains; I think they know now that they are not an alliance which will agree on every issue, there'll be divisions in the future. I think on majorevents, however, you will always find America, France and Britain together.

MURROW: Then basically the unity stems from a desire on the part of all three nations to live in the same kind of world, doesn't it?

SMITH: And to go on surviving, yes.

MURROW: That's right. Well, now, since you agree thatthe damage has not been severe but, nevertheless, it has occurred, what can be done orshouldbe done to re-establish the unity that existed before Suez? Smith!

SMITH: Well, I think several things couldbe done and one of them is rather difficult to say. It's a very sensitive question. Possessing several million dollars does not preclude a man from being a good diplomat; but it does not automatically make him one. Yet, that is the principle on which we've proceeded in appointing ambassadors to Britain, for a very long time, and wetend to look ... to see whetherthe man has enough money to pay for all the social activities he must indulge in as ambassador, ratherthan has theright qualities that the post calls for. There's been a great deal of criticism in the British press, of the fact that they don't feel we have had that kind of representation duringthis crisis.

MURROW: Of course, that applies to nations as well, doesn't it, Howard, that money is no substitude for policy.

SMITH: Quite.

MURROW: Schoenbrun!

SCHOENBRUN: This question of money is a very interesting one, particularly as it effects relations with France. You knowthe whole question of North Africa is ... involved the future of France itself, and the question of Morocco, which the French have made independent and which turned towards the United States as a substitute for France, a weakened France. Now, I don't think it's any great secret nowthatthe Foreign Minister of the new Moroccan government came here with the Sultan's son, to see Prdsident Eisenhower and thought that they were going to have America pick up the check for the Moroccan economy and cut the French out. And I think for once, really, ourgovernment acted very wisely andtoldthe Moroccans that we are not in the business of replacing our allies, the French, in North Africa, "we want you to get together; and what we'll do is we will match the money thatthe French give you; but you go to the French first - and don't think that America is acountry you can come and buy friendship from." I think that's abig plus for American foreign policy. And that's the sort of thing that wecan do in the future to keep this alliance together. Not use our money to win friends away from our own allies.

SMITH: Well, I think, Ed, the main thing we have to do is to have a policy and to make it fairly clear to ourallies what it is. No one has been able to find out what America's policy has been, in the Middle East, for a long time. And this confusion goes on. Recently, I understandthat Mr. Stassen gave some reporters a kind of abriefing on America's plans for disarmament, and some of those - the most important ones - were later contradicted on a very high level; and no one in Europe knows exactly what we stand for in the future.

SCHOENBRUN: Oh, I agree with Howard. That was one of the most important things atthe NATO meeting. They went into an absolute tail-spin in Paris, it was on a Friday, the last day of the NATO meeting, when

Mr. Dulles had just gotten through assuring Selwyn Lloyd and Pineau of France that America was going to stay in Europe, thatthe alliance was together again and that we were going to have a united front against the Russians. And that very day, an inspired story came out of Washington indicating that we would deal with the Russians on disarmament and perhaps pull out of Europe. That sort of double-play is, I think, very dangerous to the alliance.

SMITH: Well, the point is that I think that we have to know what we want and then also make it very clear to our friends and allies. That has been the main British complaint about policy in the Middle East. And I think that ... to that extent they're justified.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think perhaps one more thing, if I may add it very quickly, I think we should stop dealing in foreign policy on moral bases and make kind of ... speeches about who is righteous. For example - we professed our shock at the fact that France and Britain went intothe Middle East against the advice and ignorance ofthe United States. But, really, we did the same thing in Korea and in Formosa. And the kind of sanctimoniousness which has been associated with foreign policy adds, I think, to the bitterness of the differences.

MURROW: Gentlemen, I would like to assure you that your lack of information about American policy in the Middle East is in no sense due to distance. Because those of us who commute around the world and from here to Washington had been equally bewildered and uncertain as to exactly what the policy is.

Thank you very much, Howard Smith and David Schoenbrun for being with me this evening. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: ...

Ed. trans. P. Olszewska.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NE TWORK

DECEMBER 28, 1956
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Communist government in Hungary, struggling to get the country back on its feet economically, ra into fresh trouble today. Radio Budapest announced that miners have shut down the coal mines again by taking a "paid vacation". The miners claim they have the holiday coming because their normal vacation times came when they were on strike.

At the same time, the official government newspaper admitted that Hungary's Communist governments have been lying for years to conceal the much higher living standards and technical advances of the West. And it appealed to Russia and the West for expert technical as well as financial aid to pull the country out of its backwardness.

Communist China's ruling body - the Politburo - gave backing today to' Russia's intervention in Hungary. The Politburo said it was "righteous action". And it sided with the Kremlin in its controversy with Yugoslavia's President Tito over the independence issue - said such policies as Tito advocates could only destroy the Communist movement.

Communist China's Premier, Chou en-Lai, arrived in Dacca, East Pakistan on the last leg of his 10-day visit to the country. He called for the unity of Asians and Africans to safeguard world peace.

Our State Department has revoked the passports of three American newsmen who entered Communist China despite the Department's orders to the contrary. Their cases also are being called to the attention of the Justice Department in view of what are termed "the relevant provisidns of the trading-with-the-enemy act." The three newsmen include William Worthy of the Baltimore Afro-American, and a reporter-photographer team from Look Magazine.

In the Middle East, the clearing of the Suez was delayed again today - apparently because Egyptian Canal : authorities at Suec had not received formal orders to proceed with the job.

There is a new threat of trouble in Indonesia. There have been scattered revolutionary efforts all week on the big island of Sumatra. Now both the army and political leaders reportedly have threatened armed rebellion unless the Premier dismisses his Cabinet. The Premier has called his Ministers into emergency session to study the matter.

France's Foreign Minister Pineau made a bid tonight for West European unity - said in a nationwide radio address that it is perhaps "a question of life or death for France." Unless the nations of Western Europe do unite their efforts and objectives, he said, "sooner or later they will become involved in one of the two blocs which tend to divide the world without guaranteeing peace."

French officials in Paris joined with Americans today in a ceremony commemorating the 100th anniversary of the birth of our World War One President, Woodrow Wilson. At the Hotel Crillon where Wilson and other delegates to the Versailles peace conference drew up the League of Nations charter in 1919, a plaque was installed in Wilson's honor. Maurice Faure, representing France, praised Wilson for his "defense of right, law and justice." And our Ambassador Dillon read a statement from President Eisenhower, hailing Wilson as a symbol of the enduring friendship between France and the United States. He said we are still dedicated to that idea, as well as to Wilson's concept of a great family of nations, living peacefully together and ruled with justice under law.

At home, President Eisenhower flew to Augusta during the day for a weekend of golf and relaxation. With him were his son John and his wife and General Snyder, the President's personal physician.

Before he left Washington, Mr. Eisenhower pinned the Distinguished Service Medal on his one-time aide and long-time friend, General Alfred Gruenther. After 38-years of military service, Gruenther will retire Monday to become President of the American Red Cross. The President said that of all such ceremonies he has attended, no one was more deserving of the honor than Gruenther.

Four Southern Representatives recommended today that schools in the nation's capitol return to a segregated basis. They contend that integration has seriously damaged the public schools there - that it has lessened educational' opportunities for both races, created appalling delinquency and disciplinary problems, and was a major factor in the exodus of many white residents of Washington to Virginia and Maryland. The Congressmen who made the recommendation - Davis of Georgia, Williams of Mississippi, Jones of North Carolina and Broyhill of Virginia - make up the majority of the House Investigating Subcommittee which has held public hearings on Washington school integration. Two committee members, Miller of Nebraska and Hyde of Missouri, who refused to go along with the report, accused the committee staff of selecting witness opposed to integration - said those in favor were not given full and fair opportunity to be heard.

Two of my colleagues from Europe are with me tonight, How rd K. Smith, our chief European correspondent, and David Schoenbrun, who is based in Paris. I would like to put to both of them the same question: How much has the Western alliance been damaged by the events at Suez? Why don't you start, Howard Smith?

SMITH: Well, I think it has been strained a great deal, Ed. The British...I don't think there will ever be the mutual trust that we had before, or there won't be for a long time. The British are certainly going to be much less willing to provide the large number of troops that the North Atlantic alliance has required. They say, in effect, that they tried to be a big power, they tried to go it alone, they were't even able to swing us alongside them, so why pretend they're a big power and spend all this money that it takes to be one? They're going to cut down their forces in Europe.

However, after these strains have all been lifted, I still think that the alliance is still there and it will recover. In the long run I think mutual interest and geography are the dominating factors. I've always felt that the alliance can be more or less effective but it's bound to go on existing as long as Britain stays where she is geographically.

MURROW: How does the damage look as viewed from Paris, Schoenbrun?

SCHOENBRUN: I feel pretty much the same way as Smith does, although I would add to geography and mutual interest that there's a common civilization, which is involved in France, America and Britain. They're really members of a family, which can get angry with one another but cannot, I think, ever really split apart. Therefore, I think as Howard does, and I'm sure as you do, Murrow, that the alliance has undergone great strains; I think they know now that they are not an alliance which will agree on every issue, there'll be divisions in the future. I think on major events, however, you will always find America, France and Britain together.

MURROW: Then basically the unity stems from a desire on the part of all three nations to live in the same kind of world, doesn't it?

SMITH: And to go on surviving, yes.

MURROW: Thats right. Well, now, since you agree that the damage has not been severe but, nevertheless, it has occurred, what can be done or should be done to re-establish the unity that existed before Suez? Smith.

SMITH: Well, I tnink several things could be done and one of them is rather difficult to say. It's a very sensitive question. Possessing several million' dollars does not lreclude a man from being a good diplomat; but it does not automatically make him one. Yet, that is the principle on which we've proceeded in appointing ambassadors to Britain, for a very long time, and we tend to look to see whether the man has enough money to pay for all the social activities he must indulge in as ambassador, rather than has the right qualities that the post calls for. There's been a great deal of criticism in the British press, of the fact that t ey don't feel we have had that kind of representation duing this crisis.

MURROW: Of course, that applies to nations as well, doesn't it, Howard, that money is no substitute for policy.

SMITH: Quite.

MURROW: Schoenbrun?

SCHOENBRUN: This question of money is a very interesting one, particularly as it effects relations with France. You know the whole question of North Africa is...involved the future of France itself, and the question of Morocco, which the French have made independent and which turned towards the United States as a substitute for France, a weakened France. Now, I don't think it's any great secret now that the Foreign Minister of the new Moroccan government came here with the Sultan's son, to see President Eisenhower and thought that they were going to have America pick up the check for the Moroccan economy and cut the French out. And I think for once, really, our government acted very wisely and told the Moroccans that we are not in the business of replacing our allies, the French, in North Africa, "we want you to get together; and what we'll do is we will match the money that the French give you; but you go to the French first - and don't think that America is a country you can come and buy friendship from." I think that's a big plus for American foreign policy. And that's the sort of think that we can do in the future to keep this alliance together. Not use our money to win friends away from our own allies.

SMITH: Well, I think, Ed, the main thing we have to do is to have a policy and to make it fairly clear to our allies what it is. No one has been able to find out what America's policy has been, in the Middle East, for a long time. And this confusion goes on. Recently, I understand that Mr. Stassen gave some reporters a kind of a briefing on America's plans for disarmament, and some of those - the most important ones - were later contradicted on a very high level; and no one in Europe knows exactly what we stand for in the future.

SCHOENBRUN: Oh, I agree with Howard. That was one of the most important things at the NATO meeting. They went into an absolute tail-spin in Paris, it was on a Friday, the last day of the NATO meeting, when Mr. Dulles had just gotten through assuring Selwyn Lloyd and Pineau of France that America was going to stay in Europe, that the alliance was together again and that we were going to have a united front against the Russians. And that very day, an inspired story came out of Washington indicating that we would deal with the Russians on disarmament and perhaps pull out of Europe. That sort of double-play is, I think, very dangerous to the alliance.

SMITH: Well, the point is that I think that we have to know what we want and then also make it very clear to our friends and allies. That has been the main British complaint about policy in the Middle East. And I think that...to that extent they're justified.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think perhaps one more thing, if I may add it very quickly, I think we should stop dealing in foreign policy on moral bases and make kind of...speeches about who is righteous. For examfle - we professed our shock at the fact that France and Britain went in to the Middle East against the advice and ignorance of the United States. But, really, we did the same thing' in Korea and in Formosa. And the kind of sanctimoniousness which has been associated with foreign policy adds, I think, to the bitterness of the differences.

MURROW: Gentlemen; I would like to assure you that your lack of information about American policy in the Middle East is in no sense due to distance. Because those of us who commute around the world and from here to Washington had been equally bewildered and uncertain as to exactly what the policy is. Thank you very much, Howard Smith and David Schoenbrun for being with me this evening. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Woodrow Wilson was born 100 years ago today. His great dream, of course, was the League of Nations. Now we have the United Nations. Its achievements have been considerable. But we have still to establish what Wilson called "a reign of law based on the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind." Goodnight and good luck.

996 Pd DL
dly Lowell Thomas Bd cst acct

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

DEC 31 1956

(VIA WESTERN UNION) December 31, 1956

EDWARD R. MURROW
PAWLING, N.Y.

12.51

This is the news:

Syria today got a new coalition government, more favorable to the Soviet Union than the government that resigned a week ago. The new cabinet... named by Premier Assali... includes members of the Nationalist and Socialist parties. Both these groups favor accepting Russian aid, military and economic. The Populist Party, which opposes involvement with Russia, had three members in the old cabinet. In the new government it is without representation.

In Washington, the Syrian ambassador today voiced his country's strong opposition to the Administration plan for asking Congress for standby authority to take military action, if necessary, in the Middle East. Ambassador Zeinneddine told the State Department that... in the view of his government...the United Nations is the only body which should try to guarantee peace in the Middle East. If there is a vacuum due to the decline of British and French influence, he said, it should not be filled by outside forces. He contended the vacuum should be filled by the Middle East countries themselves.

127 (more) M3535P

Secretary of State Dulles has issued a year-end statement declaring that the United States must accept "an increasing responsibility to assist the free nations of the Middle East, and elsewhere, to maintain their freedom and develop their welfare." Dulles said the United States has "a major responsibility" to help prevent the spread of Soviet imperialism in the Middle East. The Hungarian people, he said, have demonstrated that Soviet Communism is not any "wave of the future."

Mr. Dulles conferred at length today with United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold in New York. Dulles told reporters afterward, "United States policies must be such as will fit into United Nations policies." It is necessary, he said, that the United States "further develop its policies in relation to the Middle East." He said nothing has been "finalized"---many points of view will need to be considered.

(more)

187

WB 5305

Dan Schorr, my colleague based in Moscow, has been studying Soviet policy for the past fifteen months... and he also has tried, from that distance, to understand American policy toward Russia. Now he is back in the United States, and he has SPENT SOME time inquiring into United States policy at close hand. Here is SCHORR'S report. Following tape runs three minutes fifteen seconds and ends on cue "Now back to Edward R. Murrow."

Tomorrow, President Eisenhower will brief congressional leaders... of both parties... on the Administration plan for KEEPING RUSSIA OUT OF the Middle East. Mr. Dulles will join that discussion.

Today, the President conferred with Republican congressional leaders on his legislative program for the next session of Congress. The White House news secretary... James Hagerty... told reporters Mr. Eisenhower will press for action on his civil rights proposals, despite the prospect of a filibuster. One of these proposals calls for creation of a special civil rights division in the Justice Department. Hagerty said the Administration is thinking in terms of a balanced budget---the possibility of a tax cut was not discussed. A plan was outlined for building more schools.

184 (more) MB 5 34P

More to come. ALSO SIN SCRIPT.

Bliss

13

B5375

5

December 31, 1956

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

EDWARD R. MURROW

PAWLING, N.Y.

7036

THE FOURTH United States Circuit Court of Appeals TODAY upheld lower court orders demanding immediate de-segregation of the public schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Virginia.

In Montgomery, Alabama, a bullet hit a de-segregated bus. No one was HURT.

The Agriculture Department SAYS farm prices went up one percent in the month ending December fifteenth. That's the first increase in farm prices in six months.

Great Britain today paid the United States 56-million dollars, the annual installment due on Britain's postwar debt. Because of the economic crisis in Britain, payment of interest was deferred. The final decision on whether to suspend interest payments is up to Congress.

110 (more)

IN PARIS TODAY,

[redacted] gunmen entered a cafe frequented by Algerians and began shooting. When they left, at least two persons were dead. [redacted]

[redacted]

French Premier Mollet said today... in a New Year's message... that Israel can count on the support of France "to obtain the peace that she deserves." World opinion, he said, "is convinced that a general peace settlement... conforming to right and justice... must be established in the Middle East." [redacted]

The Saar today became politically united with West Germany, under terms of a treaty with France. However... for the next three years... the Saar coal complex remains under joint German-French control.

(more)

103

~~In Budapest, Soviet tanks have withdrawn from the [redacted] of the Hungarian parliament for the first time in more than a month. And the Communist Party [redacted] of [redacted] Soviet troops in Hungary "offends the national pride of the people."~~

In India, the Communist premier, Chou En-lai, continued his visit with Prime Minister Nehru. Today, they inspected a hydro-electric dam, north of New Delhi. Chou is cutting his visit short, and tomorrow will fly back to ~~Peiping~~ Peiping. He's due in Moscow on January seven.

Piece by White to runs two and half to three minutes.

Word for Today as follows... The fix the world is in calls for statesmanship, in the best sense of the ~~[redacted]~~ word. James Thurber once asked his father, "Poppa, what's the difference between a statesman and a ~~[redacted]~~ politician?" The elder Thurber thought a moment and said, "The statesman is a politician in a position to get us all into trouble... and, if we're lucky, out of it." Goodnight and good luck. Then there is the old good one... "It was in London, back in 1940, that I first had occasion... on a less peaceful New Year's Eve... to quote a few brief words written by a German, Heinrich Heine. They go like this: "The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding. And for the understanding, a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich and a little bread for the poor. But, above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New YEAR Goodnight and good luck!"

(more)

Note...Friendly says he has already phoned up the Clinton bit for recording right after the show. Radio script is just right if White runs two-thirty. If he runs three minutes, we are over six or seven lines. Will let you know.

Bliss

2038

133

back in 1940. Had I first had occasion... on a lean peaceful New Year's Eve... to quote a few brief words written by a German, Heinrich Heine. They go like this: "The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding. And for the understanding, a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich and a little bread for the poor. But, above all, I wish that we may disengaged each other as little as possible during the New York Herald Tribune Goodnight and good luck!"

Note...Friendly says he has already phoned up the Clinton bit for recording right after the show. Radio script is just right if White runs two-thirty. If he runs three minutes, we are over six or seven lines. Will let you know.

Elias

January 1, 1957

EDWARD R. MURROW
PAWLING, N.Y.

LT 1550

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will go before Congress... in the next five or six days... to outline his proposals for countering Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower revealed this today in a conference with congressional leaders of both parties. Those who attended the meeting SAY the Administration program does not appear to be in its final form. It is expected that when the President appears before Congress, he will ask for legislation giving him standby authority to use force, if necessary. He may also propose economic aid to the Middle East countries. This special personal appearance of Mr. Eisenhower before Congress will come before January tenth, when he again goes up to Capitol Hill to deliver his state of the union message.

126

(more)

1868 ~~[illegible]~~ RDL
chg Lowell Thomas Broadcast acct.

January 1, 1957

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

EDWARD R. MURROW
PAWLING, N.Y.

3229

LT 1 — 6038

Lead to come...

In Moscow today, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda called the Administration proposal "a plan for strengthening American colonial domination." The United States, Pravda said, wants to grab the wealth Britain and France were forced to give up in the Middle East. (I should like to discuss this subject further in a few minutes).

Secretary of Welfare Folsom said today that Congress will be asked to help finance the building of medical laboratories and classrooms in this country. Under the proposal, medical institutions would match federal funds allocated by the Government. Last year, Congress voted money to provide facilities for research... but refused to ~~[illegible]~~ subsidize facilities for medical instruction. Folsom said, "Unless effective action is taken now... to provide more laboratories and classrooms... the shortage of medical scientists will be acute in the years ahead."

137

(more)

Democratic Governor Roberts of Rhode Island today won re-election on the basis of a ruling by the state supreme court. The election apparently was won... on November sixth... by the Republican candidate, Christopher Del Sesto, by 427 votes. Roberts challenged the results on grounds that civilian absentee ballots for Del Sesto were cast before Election Day. The governor of Rhode Island was scheduled to be inaugurated at noon today, but the ceremony was held up while the court decided the case... as it turned out, in favor of Roberts. There was no immediate announcement of an appeal.

Vice President Nixon recommended to President Eisenhower today that the American quota for admitting Hungarian refugees be "substantially" raised. (He did not recommend any specific increase over the present quota.) Nixon said... in a 25-hundred-word report... that it "would not be wise" for the United States to be committed to a fixed number, that there is too much uncertainty in the situation. "But the United States and other free nations," he said, "must take substantially more refugees than they have agreed to take up to this time." Nixon reported the quality of the people who fled Hungary as "of the highest order." There is "no question", he said, that the American economy can easily assimilate the Hungarian refugees who are entering the United States. He said all countries should share in the resettling of refugees "to the extent of their capabilities." Mr. Eisenhower submitted a copy of this report at the meeting this afternoon with congressional leaders. Any increase in the present quota of 21-thousand, 500 refugees would require legislative action.

(more)

Radio Budapest announced today: "There was some shooting during the night by irresponsible elements." Foreign correspondents in Budapest heard intermittent small arms fire for about an hour. The cause of the shooting was not determined.

The Communist president of Czechoslovakia... Antoin Zapotocky... took public cognizance today of anti-Communist activity in Czechoslovakia. He appealed... in a New Year's Day message... for an end to arson and absenteeism in factories. He said, "Attempts have been made to create disorder in Czechoslovakia, and to drive a wedge into the unity of the nations of the Socialist camp."

(more)

148

An interesting piece of news has come out of Moscow. Communist Party Boss Khrushchev is quoted as having said last night, at a Kremlin reception, "Stalin was a great fighter against imperialism. Well, when it comes to fighting imperialists, we are all Stalinists." Asian diplomats who attended the reception say Khrushchev praised Stalin as "a great Marxist". He is also quoted as saying that Stalin did so much good, "one must overlook his mistakes."

100

Egypt today abrogated its 1954 treaty with Great Britain. Under this treaty, British troops evacuated the Suez Canal Zone last June. It provided, however, THAT British armed forces could return to the canal zone if an outside power ever attacked Turkey or an Arab state. Egypt says the treaty is now VOID because of the recent Anglo-French intervention.

(more)

151

Swing 6 minutes

(5)

¶ The new Middle East policy looks very much like a New Year's resolution by the Administration. Like other New Year's resolutions, it's one that need not have been made this year if it had been made last year and lived up to. And like other resolutions, it means more as a 50 state of mind than (as a promise of future accomplishment). I think it sums up this state of mind to say that we recognize that we can't leave our foreign policy to the United Nations. We can work through the United Nations and intend to. But we are not 100 going to subject our national interests to a Soviet veto. We assert that it is in our national interest that communist power shall not expand in the Middle East, and if necessary we shall prevent it.

¶ The new policy is having trouble 150 getting properly named. It is being called the Eisenhower doctrine, the Dulles doctrine, a revival of the Truman doctrine, even a kind of Monroe doctrine. Actually it isn't a doctrine. Certainly it isn't a Monroe doctrine. The Monroe doctrine ordered Europe not to expand in our part of the world. The new Middle East policy orders the Soviet Union 200 and any of its satellites not to expand in the Middle East, which is their part of the world. If the new policy works, it is sure to

176

Following three stories, including bowl games, wind up hard news...

The International News Service says Leonard Hall will resign as Republican national chairman on January nineteenth. According to this report, Hall will be succeeded by Fred Scribner, Jr., who is now general counsel in the Treasury Department. There is speculation Hall may run for governor of New York in 1958.

In Tallahassee, Governor Collins has ordered city bus service suspended in an effort to halt racial violence. Negroes in Tallahassee are campaigning for integrated seating on buses. Today windows in the home of a leader of the campaign were smashed with rocks. And a store owned by a Negro was fired on.

Here are some football scores...

In the Orange Bowl, Colorado 27, Clemson 21... In the Cotton Bowl, Texas Christian 28, Syracuse 27.... In the Sugar Bowl, Baylor 13, Tennessee 7. And in the Rose Bowl (score to come).

Allowing six minutes for think piece, timing should be right if Folsom and Czechoslovakia stories are dropped.

Bliss

(6)

be named after President Eisenhower. If it (DOESN'T,) it will be attributed to Mr. Dulles. But it will have much more chance of acceptance here and abroad if it carries the name of Mr. Eisenhower from the start. Though one of the reasons for the new pronouncement is to demonstrate 50 that Mr. Eisenhower isn't a pacifist, his popularity as a man of peace will help him convince people abroad that we are not talking about military force so as to build up our own power.

¶ The accent on military force in the policy is receiving the most attention, both here 100 and in Russia. Many congressmen will be reluctant to authorize the use of American servicemen in the Arab world for any reason whatever. Moscow is resenting the suggestion that it intends to commit aggression in the Middle East. The only state in that area adjoining Soviet territory is Iran, 150 and while during the Suez crisis Russian troops were reported to be massing on the Iranian border, no activity developed on that frontier. Washington is not worried so much about old-fashioned invasion by the Soviet Union, as it is about the possibility of an Arab state being led by Moscow 200 into attacking another Middle Eastern country. This, it hopes, the warning will make less likely.

200

(7)

Washington also is concerned with the idea that a vacuum of power now exists in the Middle East and that it mustn't be filled by the Soviet Union, either first-hand or through satellites. The new Syrian government, which has moved definitely to the left, already is leading the opposition to the new Washington policy, on the theory that it is for Arab states themselves to fill the vacuum, but without saying how they can do so without outside help.

But not all Arab statesmen follow this line. Dr. Charles Malik, foreign minister of Lebanon, said in a New York Times interview today: "It is not possible that a vacuum of power can remain unfilled for long. Consequently, if the United States should now move in to help fill that vacuum, it would be serving the cause of peace and helping to reestablish the equilibrium that has been upset."

The power side of the new policy is perhaps being exaggerated. We shall not have the power to prevent the Soviet Union from gaining decisive influence, for example, in Syria's internal affairs, or from establishing a military base in that country, or doing the same in Egypt or any other country in the area. The policy will give us no power to take overt action against infiltration and subversion. ~~These are the methods the Soviet Union~~

(220)

(8)

~~is using to establish itself in the Middle East.~~

This inability to deal with the real menace of the Soviet advance is drawing the chief criticism of the policy by the British. They ~~naturally are relieved that we are moving in where they had to move~~ out, for the ir ~~propsperity depends on Middle Eastern oil. They are not being too unpleasant about telling us~~ that if we had adopted the new policy a ~~year~~ before or even less the Suez crisis would never ~~have taken place~~. They are ~~simply~~ warning us not to believe our new policy of itself will stop the Soviet advance.

Washington probably doesn't need the warning, for it knows it must count on economic aid to accomplish what it wants done. The Soviet Union has built itself up in the Middle East by economic aid, given more or less without conditions. Our aid has been skimpy and tied up with seve re restrictions. Now we are undertaking to improve economic conditions, knowing it is the only way to combat infiltration and subversion. But economic policy needs time, and time may be running out. What the Middle East needs right ~~most of all~~ is a basic settlement, one that includes a just solution of the Suez dispute and peace between Israel and its neighbors.

(150)

(9)

The new policy is not designed to keep the Soviet Union out of the negotiations for a basic settlement, ~~which will proceed under the United Nations~~. The Soviet Union is in the Middle East at last and is there to stay. And ~~[illegible]~~ it apparently believes it has more to gain from stirring up trouble than in helping the United Nations make peace.

So the new policy isn't of itself promising early stability or quiet in the Middle East. What it does--perhaps all it does--is to give us belatedly the responsibility in this region which we shirked when we shared it with Britain and France. End think piece.

~~[illegible]~~ Word for Today as follows...

We enter the New Year, beset by problems. And we must try to solve them, no matter how difficult they may be. Robert Frost once said, "I don't hold with people who say what's the use. I wouldn't get up in the morning if I thought we didn't have a direction to go in. Despite our fears and our worries, life continues. It goes on." Goodnight and good luck.

~~[illegible]~~ Lead to come. Probably ~~[illegible]~~ will be Ike's meeting with congressional leaders.

Bliss

194

LT 603

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, January 1, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday, at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Assisting Mr. Murrow in bringing the news to you quickly and accurately, is the CBS News staff of correspondents covering events in our own country and overseas. By short wave radio, telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world, their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens. And their many years' of experience assure the accuracy and authenticity of their reporting. Now, here is Edward R, Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. President Eisenhower will go before Congress in the next five or six days, to outline his proposals for countering Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower revealed this today in a conference with Congressional leaders of both parties. Those who attended the meeting say the Administration program does not appear to be in its final form. It is expected that when the President appears before Congress, he will ask for legislation giving him standby authority to use force if necessary. He may also propose economic aid to the Middle East countries. This special personal appearance of Mr. Eisenhower before Congress will come before January 10th, when he again goes up to Capitol Hill to deliver his State of the Union message.

In Moscow today, the Communist party newspaper "Pravda," called the Administration proposal a plan for strengthening American colonial domination. The United States, Pravda said, wants to grab the wealth Britain and France were forced to give up in the Middle East. I should like to discuss this subject further in a few minutes.

Democratic Governor Roberts of Rhode Island, today won re-election on the basis of a ruling by the State Supreme Court. The election, apparently, was won on Nov. 6th, by the Republican candidate, Christopher Delsesto, by 427 votes. Roberts challenged the results on grounds that civilian absentee ballots for Delsesto were cast before Election Day. The Governor of Rhode Island was scheduled to be inagurated at noon today. But the ceremony was held up while the court decided the case. As it turned out, in favor of Roberts.

Vice President Nixon recommended to President Eisenhower today that the American quota for admitting Hungarian refugees be substantially raised. He did not recommend any specific increase over the present quota. Nixon said, in a 2500-word report, that it would not be wise for the United States to be committed to a fixed number, that there is too much uncertainty in the situation. But the United States and other free nations, he said, must take substantially more refugees than they have agreed to take up to this time. Nixon reported the quality of the people who fled Hungary as of the highest order. "There is no question," he said, "that the American economy can easily assimilate the Hungarian refugees who are now entering the United States." He said "all countries should share in the resettling of refugees to the extent of their capabilities." Mr. Eisenhower submitted a copy of this report at the meeting this afternoon with Congressional leaders. Any increase in the present quota of 21,500 refugees would require legislative action. The President said that, meanwhile, refugees will continue to be admitted.

Radio Budapest announced today there was some shooting during the night by what it called irresponsible elements. Foreign correspondents in Budapest heard intermittent small arms fire for about an hour. The cause of the shooting was not determined.

An interesting piece of news has come out of Moscow. Communist party boss Khrushchev is quoted as having said last night at a Kremlin reception Stalin was a great fighter against imperialism. Well, when it comes to fighting imperialist we are all Stalinists. Asian diplomats who attended the reception say Khrushchev praised Stalin as a great Marxist. He is also quoted as saying that Stalin did so much good "one must overlook his mistakes."

Egypt today abrogated its 1954 treaty with Great Britain. Under this treaty British troops evacuated the Suez Canal zone last June. It provided, however, that British armed forces could return to the canal zone if an outside power ever attacked Turkey or an Arab State. Egypt says the treaty is now void because of the recent Anglo-French intervention.

The International News Service says Leonard Hall will resign as Republican National Chairman on January 19th. According to this report, Hall will be succeeded by Fred Scribner Jr., who is now general counsel in the Treasury Department. There is speculation that Mr. Hall may run for governor of New York in 1958.

In Tallahassee, Governor Collins has ordered city bus service suspended in an effort to halt racial violence. Negroes in Tallahassee are campaigning for integrated seating on buses. Today windows in the home of a leader of the campaign were smashed with rocks. And a store owned by a Negro was fired on.

Here aresome football scores: In the Orange Bowl, Colorado 27, Clemson 21. In the Cotton Bowl, Texas Christian 28, Syracuse 27. In the Sugar Bowl, Baylor 13, Tennessee 7. And in the Rose Bowl, Iowa 35, Oregon State 19.

The United States new Middle East policy looks very much like a New Year's resolution by the Administration. Like other New Year's resolutions, it's one that need not have been made this year if it had been made last year and lived up to. And like other resolutions, it means more as a state of mind than as a promise of future accomplishment. I think it sums up this state of mind to say that we recognize that we can't leave our foreign policy to the United Nations. We can work through the United Nations and, apparently, we intend to. But we are not going to subject our national interests to a Soviet veto. We assert that it is in our national interest that Communist power shall not expand in the Middle East and, if necessary, we shall prevent it.

The new policy is having trouble getting properly named. It is being called the Eisenhower doctrine, the Dulles doctrine, a revival of the Truman doctrine, even a kind of Monroe Doctrine. Actually, it is not a doctrine at all. Certainly, it is not a Monroe Doctrine. The Monroe Doctrine ordered Europe not to expand in our part of the world. The new Middle East policy orders the Soviet Union, and any of its satellites, not to expand in the Middle East, which is their part of the world. If the new policy works, it is sure to be named after President Eisenhower. If it doesn't, it will be attributed to Mr. Dulles. But it will have much more chance of acceptance - here and abroad - if it carries the name of Mr. Eisenhower from the start.

Though one of the reasons for the new pronouncement is to demonstrate that Mr. Eisenhower isn't a pacifist, his popularity as a man of peace will help him convince people abroad that we are not talking about military force so as to build up our own power. The accent on military force in the policy is receiving the most attention, both here and in Russia.

Many Congressmen will be reluctant to authorize the use of American servicemen in the Arab world for any reason whatever. Moscow is resenting the suggestion that it intends to commit aggression in the Middle East. The only state in that area adjoining Soviet territory is Iran. And while during the Suez crisis Russian troops were reported to be massing on the Iranian border, no activity developed on that frontier. Washington is not worried so much about old fashioned invasion by the Soviet Union as it is about the possibility of an Arab State being led by Moscow into attacking another Middle Eastern country. This - it hopes - the warning will make less likely.

Washington also is concerned with the idea that a vacuum of power now exists in the Middle East, and that it must not be filled by the Soviet Union. Either first-hand or through satellites. The new Syrian government, which has moved definitely to the Left, already is leading the opposition to the new Washington policy, on the theory that it is for Arab States themselves to fill the vacuum, but without saying how they can do so without outside help. But not all Arab statesmen follow this line. Dr. Charles Malik, Foreign Minister of Lebanon, said in a New York Times interview today, "It is not possible that a vacuum of power can remain unfilled for long. Consequently, if the United States should now move in to help fill that vacuum, it would be serving the cause of peace and helping to re-establish the equilibrium that has been upset. The power side of the new policy is perhaps being exaggerated. We shall not have the power to prevent the Soviet Union from gaining decisive influence, for example, in Syria's internal affairs, or from establishing military bases in that country. Or to prevent them from doing the same thing in Egypt. Or any other country in the area. But the policy will give us no power to take over action against infiltration and subversion. This inability to deal with the real menace of the Soviet advance is drawing chief criticism of the policy by the British. They are warning us not to believe our new policy of itself will stop the Soviet advance. Washington probably does not need the warning - for it knows it must count on economic aid to accomplish what it wants done.

The Soviet Union has built itself up in the Middle East by economic aid, given more or less without conditions. Our aid has been skimpy, and tied up with severe restrictions. Now we're undertaking to improve economic conditions, knowing it is the only way to combat infiltration and subversion. But economic policy needs time; and time may be running out. What the Middle East needs right off is a basic settlement, one that includes a just solution of the Suez dispute and also peace between Israel and its neighbors. The new policy is not designed to keep the Soviet Union out of the negotiations for a basic settlement.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: New Year's is a time for making resolutions. If you expect you and your loved ones to live through this death-ridden holiday week-end, you'd better make a resolution right now and stick to it; resolve to be a safe and sane driver. Every time you're tempted to step on the gas, remember that somebody else stepped on the gas too hard last week-end and as a result, more than 700 people lost their lives in traffic accidents.

You may think that just one little drink won't hurt. But before you put the glass to your lips, think of those 700 people who were killed, many of them as the result of drunken driving. Then either don't take that drink or turn your car keys and the wheel over to someone who didn't drink. Just this once you may get away with it, and just this once may be the time that you're killed or injured.

It's high time for safety at home, too. Christmas has been past for a week. So get that dried out tree out of the house today, and possibly save yourself a costly fire. Don't try to burn it yourself either. Let the trash man do it after he's carted it away. Only by being sensible, cautious and courteous can we make this a safe and happy year. It's up to you! Now, here is Ed Murrow with the word for today.

MURROW: We enter the New Year beset by many problems, and we must try to solve them no matter how difficult they may be. Robert Frost once said: "I don't hold with people who say 'What's the use?' I wouldn't get up in the morning if I thought we didn't have a direction to go in. Despite our fears and our worries, life continues. It goes on." Good Night and Good Luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday-through-Friday at this time, over most of these stations, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts brought you each day by CBS News. Regularly heard are such other distinguished reporters as Eric Sevareid, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Robert Trout, Bill Downs, Dallas Townsend, Blair Clark and Bill Shadel with up-to-the-minute reports. And they all rely on other CBS News correspondents assigned to news centers throughout the world.

THIS IS THE CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Tuesday, January 1, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 pm EST

This is the news. President Eisenhower will go before Congress in the next five or six days, to outline his proposals for countering Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower revealed this today in a conference with Congressional leaders of both parties. Those who attended the meeting say the Administration program does not appear to be in its final form. It is expected that when the President appears before Congress, he will ask for legislation giving him standby authority to use force if necessary. He may also propose economic aid to the Middle East countries. This special personal appearance of Mr. Eisenhower before Congress will come before January 10th, when he again goes up to the Capitol Hill to deliver his State of the Union message.

In Moscow today, the Communist party newspaper "Pravda," called the Administration proposal a plan for strengthening American colonial domination. The United States, Pravda said, wants to grab the wealth Britain and France were forced to give up in the Middle East. I should like to discuss this subject further in a few minutes.

Democratic Governor Roberts of Rhode Island, today won re-election on the basis of a ruling by the State Supreme Court. The election, apparently, was won on Nov. 6th by the Republican candidate, Chrstopher Delsesto, by 427 votes. Roberts challenged the results on grounds that civilian absentee ballots for Delsesto were cast before Election Day. The Governor of Rhode Island was scheduled to be inaugurated at noon today. But the ceremony was held up while the court decided the case. As it turned out, in favor of Roberts.

Vice President Nixon recommended to President Eisenhower today that the American quota for admitting Hungarian refugees be substantially raised. He did not recommend any specific increase over the present quota. Nixon said, in a 2500-word report that it would not be wise for the United States to be committed to a fixed number, that there is too much uncertainty in the situation. But the United States and other free nations, he said, must take substantially more refugees than they have agreed to take up to this time. Nixon reported the quality of the people who fled Hungary as of the highest order. "There is no question," he said, "that the American economy can easily assimilate the Hungarian refugees who are now entering the United States." He said "all countries should share in the resettling of refugees to the extent of their capabilities." Mr. Eisenhower submitted a copy of this report at the meeting this afternoon with Congressional leaders. Any increase in the present quota of 21,500 refugees would require legislative action. The President said that, meanwhile, refugees will continue to be admitted.

Radio Budapest announced today there was some shooting during the night by what it called irresponsible elements. Foreign correspondents in Budapest heard intermittent small arms fire for about an hour. The cause of the shooting was not determined.

An interesting piece of news has come out of Moscow. Communist party boss Khrushchev is quoted as having said last night at a Kremlin reception Stalin was a great fighter against imperialism. Well, when it comes to fighting imperialist we are all Stalinists. Asian diplomats who attended the reception say Khrushchev praised Stalin as a great Marxist. He is also quoted as saying that Stalin did so much good "one must overlook his mistakes."

Egypt today abrogated its 1954 treaty with Great Britain. Under this treaty British troops evacuated the Suez Canal zone last June. It provided, however, that British armed forces could return to the canal zone if an outside power ever attacked Turkey or an Arab State. Egypt says the treaty is now void because of the recent Anglo-French intervention.

The International News Service says Leonard Hall will resign as Republican National Chairman on January 19th. According to this report, Hall will be succeeded by Fred Scribner Jr., who is now general counsel in the Treasury Department. There is speculation that Mr. Hall may run for governor of New York in 1958.

In Tallahassee, Governor Collins has ordered city bus service suspended in an effort to halt racial violence. Negroes in Tallahassee are campaigning for integrated seating on buses. Today windows in the home of a leader of the campaign were smashed with rocks. And a store owned by a Negro was fired on.

Here are some football scores: In the Orange Bowl, Colorado 27, Clemson 21. In the Cotton Bowl, Texas Christian 28, Syracuse 27. In the Sugar Bowl, Baylor 13, Tennessee 7. And in the Rose Bowl, Iowa 35, Oregon State 19.

The United Statew new Middle East policy looks very much like a New Year's resolution by the Administration. Like other New Year's resolutions, it's one that need not have been made this year if it had been made last year and lived up to. And like other resolutions, it means more as a state of mind than as a promise of future accomplishment. I think it sums up this state of mind to say that we recognize that we can't leave our foreign policy to the United Nations. We can work through the United Nations and, apparently, we intend to. But we are not going to subject our national interests to a Soviet veto. We assert that it is in our national interest that Communist power shall not expand in the Middle East and, if necessary, we shall prevent it.

The new policy is having trouble getting properly named. It is being called the Eisenhower doctrine, the Dulles doctrine, a revival of the Truman doctrine, even a kind of Monroe Doctrine. Actually, it is not a doctrine at all. Certainly, it is not a Monroe Doctrine. The Monroe Doctrine ordered Europe not to expand in our part of the world. The new Middle East policy orders the Soviet Union, and any of its satellites, not to expand in the Middle East, which is their part of the world. If the new policy works, it is sure to be named after President Eisenhower. If it doesn't, it will be attributed to Mr. Dulles. But it will have much more chance of acceptance - here and abroad - if it carries the name of Mr. Eisenhower from the start.

Though one of the reasons for the new pronouncement is to demonstrate that Mr. Eisenhower isn't a pacifist, his popularity as a man of peace will help him convince people abroad that we are not talking about military force so as to build up our own power. The accent on military force in the policy is receiving the most attnetion, both here and in Russia.

Many Congressmen will be reluctant to authorize the use of American servicemen in the Arab world for any reason whatever. Moscow is resenting the suggestion that it intends to commit aggression in the Middle East. The only state in that area adjoining Soviet territory is Iran. And while during the Suez crisis Russian troops were reported to be massing on the Iranian border, no activity developed on that frontier. Washington is not worried so much about old fashioned invasion by the Soviet Union as it is about the possibility of an Arab State being led by Moscow into attacking another Middle Eastern country. This - it hopes - the warning will make less liekly.

Washington also is concerned with the idea that a vacuum of power now exists in the Middle East, and that it must not be filled by the Soviet Union. Either first-hand or through satellites. The new Syrian government, which has moved definitely to the Left, already is leading the opposition to the new Washington policy, on the theory that it is for Arab States themselves to fill the vacuum, but without saying how they can do so without outside help. But not all Arab statesmen follow this line. Dr. Charles Malik, Foreign Minister of Lebanon, said in a New York Times interview today, "It is not possible that a vacuum of power can ramain unfilled for long. Consequently, if the United States should now move in to help fill that vacuum, it would be serving the cause of peace and helping to re-establish the equilibrium that has been upset. The power side of the new policy is perhaps being exaggerated. We shall not have the power to prevent the Soviet Union from gaining decisive influence, for example, in Syria's internal affairs, or from establishing military bases in that country. Or to prevent them from doing the same thing in Egypt. Or any other country in the area. But the policy will give us no power to take over action against infiltration and subversion This inability to deal with the real menace of the Soviet advance is drawing chief criticism of the policy by the British. They are warning us not to believe our new policy of itself will stop the Soviet advance. Washington probably does not need the warning - for it knows it must count on economic aid to accomplish what it wants done.

The Soviet Union has built itself up in the Middle East by economic aid, given more or less without conditions. Our aid has been skimpy, and tied up with severe restriction. Now we're undertaking to improve economic conditions, knowing it is the only way to combat infiltration and subversion. But economic policy needs time; and time may be running out. What the Middle East needs right off is a basic settlement, one that includes a just solution of the Suez dispute and also peace between Israel and its neighbors. The new policy is not designed to keep the Soviet Union out of the negotiations for a basic settlement.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcement

MURROW: We enter the New Year beset by many problems, and we must try to solve them no matter how difficult they may be. Robert Frost once said: "I don't hold with people who say 'What's the use?' I wouldn't get up in the morning if I thought we didn't have a direction to go in. Despite our fears and our worries, life continuss. It goes on." Good night and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, January 1, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday, at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Assisting Mr. Murrow in bringing the news to you quickly and accurately, is the CBS News staff of correspondents covering events in our own country and overseas. By short wave radio, telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world, their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens. And their many years' of experience assure the accuracy and authenticity of their reporting. Now, here is Edward R, Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. President Eisenhower will go before Congress in the next five or six days, to outline his proposals for countering Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower revealed this today in a conference with Congressional leaders of both parties. Those who attended the meeting say the Administration program does not appear to be in its final form. It is expected that when the President appears before Congress, he will ask for legislation giving him standby authority to use force if necessary. He may also propose economic aid to the Middle East countries. This special personal appearance of Mr. Eisenhower before Congress will come before January 10th, when he again goes up to Capitol Hill to deliver his State of the Union message.

In Moscow today, the Communist party newspaper "Pravda," called the Administration proposal a plan for strengthening American colonial domination. The United States, Pravda said, wants to grab the wealth Britain and France were forced to give up in the Middle East. I should like to discuss this subject further in a few minutes.

Democratic Governor Roberts of Rhode Island, today won re-election on the basis of a ruling by the State Supreme Court. The election, apparently, was won on Nov. 6th, by the Republican candidate, Christopher Delsesto, by 427 votes. Roberts challenged the results on grounds that civilian absentee ballots for Delsesto were cast before Election Day. The Governor of Rhode Island was scheduled to be inagurated at noon today. But the ceremony was held up while the court decided the case. As it turned out, in favor of Roberts.

Vice President Nixon recommended to President Eisenhower today that the American quota for admitting Hungarian refugees be substantially raised. He did not recommend any specific increase over the present quota. Nixon said, in a 2500-word report, that it would not be wise for the United States to be committed to a fixed number, that there is too much uncertainty in the situation. But the United States and other free nations, he said, must take substantially more refugees than they have agreed to take up to this time. Nixon reported the quality of the people who fled Hungary as of the highest order. "There is no question," he said, "that the American economy can easily assimilate the Hungarian refugees who are now entering the United States." He said "all countries should share in the resettling of refugees to the extent of their capabilities." Mr. Eisenhower submitted a copy of this report at the meeting this afternoon with Congressional leaders. Any increase in the present quota of 21,500 refugees would require legislative action. The President said that, meanwhile, refugees will continue to be admitted.

Radio Budapest announced today there was some shooting during the night by what it called irresponsible elements. Foreign correspondents in Budapest heard intermittent small arms fire for about an hour. The cause of the shooting was not determined.

An interesting piece of news has come out of Moscow. Communist party boss Khrushchev is quoted as having said last night at a Kremlin reception Stalin was a great fighter against imperialism. Well, when it comes to fighting imperialist we are all Stalinists. Asian diplomats who attended the reception say Khrushchev praised Stalin as a great Marxist. He is also quoted as saying that Stalin did so much good "one must overlook his mistakes."

Egypt today abrogated its 1954 treaty with Great Britain. Under this treaty British troops evacuated the Suez Canal zone last June. It provided, however, that British armed forces could return to the canal zone if an outside power ever attacked Turkey or an Arab State. Egypt says the treaty is now void because of the recent Anglo-French intervention.

The International News Service says Leonard Hall will resign as Republican National Chairman on January 19th. According to this report, Hall will be succeeded by Fred Scribner Jr., who is now general counsel in the Treasury Department. There is speculation that Mr. Hall may run for governor of New York in 1958.

In Tallahasee, Governor Collins has ordered city bus service suspended in an effort to halt racial violence. Negroes in Tallahassee are campaigning for integrated seating on buses. Today windows in the home of a leader of the campaign were smashed with rocks. And a store owned by a Negro was fired on.

Here aresome football scores: In the Orange Bowl, Colorado 27, Clemson 21. In the Cotton Bowl, Texas Christian 28, Syracuse 27. In the Sugar Bowl, Baylor 13, Tennessee 7. And in the Rose Bowl, Iowa 35, Oregon State 19.

The United States' new Middle East policy looks very much like a New Year's resolution by the Administration. Like other New Year's resolutions, it's one that need not have been made this year if it had been made last year and lived up to. And like other resolutions, it means more as a state of mind than as a promise of future accomplishment. I think it sums up this state of mind to say that we recognize that we can't leave our foreign policy to the United Nations. We can work through the United Nations and, apparently, we intend to. But we are not going to subject our national interests to a Soviet veto. We assert that it is in our national interest that Communist power shall not expand in the Middle East and, if necessary, we shall prevent it.

The new policy is having trouble getting properly named. It is being called the Eisenhower doctrine, the Dulles doctrine, a revival of the Truman doctrine, even a kind of Monroe Doctrine. Actually, it is not a doctrine at all. Certainly, it is not a Monroe Doctrine. The Monroe Doctrine ordered Europe not to expand in our part of the world. The new Middle East policy orders the Soviet Union, and any of its satellites, not to expand in the Middle East, which is their part of the world. If the new policy works, it is sure to be named after President Eisenhower. If it doesn't, it will be attributed to Mr. Dulles. But it will have much more chance of acceptance - here and abroad - if it carries the name of Mr. Eisenhower from the start.

Though one of the reasons for the new pronouncement is to demonstrate that Mr. Eisenhower isn't a pacifist, his popularity as a man of peace will help him convince people abroad that we are not talking about military force so as to build up our own power. The accent on military force in the policy is receiving the most attention, both here and in Russia.

Many Congressmen will be reluctant to authorize the use of American servicemen in the Arab world for any reason whatever. Moscow is resenting the suggestion that it intends to commit aggression in the Middle East. The only state in that area adjoining Soviet territory is Iran. And while during the Suez crisis Russian troops were reported to be massing on the Iranian border, no activity developed on that frontier. Washington is not worried so much about old-fashioned invasion by the Soviet Union as it is about the possibility of an Arab State being led by Moscow into attacking another Middle Eastern country. This - it hopes - the warning will make less likely.

Washington also is concerned with the idea that a vacuum of power now exists in the Middle East, and that it must not be filled by the Soviet Union. Either first-hand or through satellites. The new Syrian government, which has moved definitely to the Left, already is leading the opposition to the new Washington policy, on the theory that it is for Arab States themselves to fill the vacuum, but without saying how they can do so without outside help. But not all Arab statesmen follow this line. Dr. Charles Malik, Foreign Minister of Lebanon, said in a New York Times interview today, "It is not possible that a vacuum of power can remain unfilled for long. Consequently, if the United States should now move in to help fill that vacuum, it would be serving the cause of peace and helping to re-establish the equilibrium that has been upset. The power side of the new policy is perhaps being exaggerated. We shall not have the power to prevent the Soviet Union from gaining decisive influence, for example, in Syria's internal affairs, or from establishing military bases in that country. Or to prevent them from doing the same thing in Egypt. Or any other country in the area. But the policy will give us no power to take over action against infiltration and subversion. This inability to deal with the real menace of the Soviet advance is drawing chief criticism of the policy by the British. They are warning us not to believe our new policy of itself will stop the Soviet advance. Washington probably does not need the warning - for it knows it must count on economic aid to accomplish what it wants done.

The Soviet Union has built itself up in the Middle East by economic aid, given more or less without conditions. Our aid has been skimpy, and tied up with severe restrictions. Now we're undertaking to improve economic conditions, knowing it is the only way to combat infiltration and subversion. But economic policy needs time; and time may be running out. What the Middle East needs right off is a basic settlement, one that includes a just solution of the Suez dispute and also peace between Israel and its neighbors. The new policy is not designed to keep the Soviet Union out of the negotiations for a basic settlement.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: New Year's is a time for making resolutions. If you expect you and your loved ones to live through this death-ridden holiday week-end, you'd better make a resolution right now and stick to it; resolve to be a safe and sane driver. Every time you're tempted to step on the gas, remember that somebody else stepped on the gas too hard last week-end and as a result, more than 700 people lost their lives in traffic accidents.

You may think that just one little drink won't hurt. But before you put the glass to your lips, think of those 700 people who were killed, many of them as the result of drunken driving. Then either don't take that drink or turn your car keys and the wheel over to someone who didn't drink. Just this once you may get away with it, and just this once may be the time that you're killed or injured.

It's high time for safety at home, too. Christmas has been past for a week. So get that dried out tree out of the house today, and possibly save yourself a costly fire. Don't try to burn it yourself either. Let the trash man do it after he's carted it away. Only by being sensible, cautious and courteous can we make this a safe and happy year. It's up to you! Now, here is Ed Murrow with the word for today.

MURROW: We enter the New Year beset by many problems, and we must try to solve them no matter how difficult they may be. Robert Frost once said: "I don't hold with people who say 'What's the use?' I wouldn't get up in the morning if I thought we didn't have a direction to go in. Despite our fears and our worries, life continues. It goes on." Good Night and Good Luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday-through-Friday at this time, over most of these stations, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts brought you each day by CBS News. Regularly heard are such other distinguished reporters as Eric Sevareid, Lowell Thomas, Allan Jackson, Robert Trout, Bill Downs, Dallas Townsend, Blair Clark and Bill Shadel with up-to-the-minute reports. And they all rely on other CBS News correspondents assigned to news centers throughout the world.

THIS IS THE CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 2, 1957

This is the news:

Washington today was the scene of last-minute jockeying in preparation for the opening tomorrow of the 85th Congress. House Democrats re-elected all officers of the last Congress. Sam Rayburn is still the speaker of the House... and John McCormack of Massachusetts, majority leader. It was decided not to "purge" Representative Powell of New York, who broke ranks to support President Eisenhower in the fall election. In the House, the Democrats have a clear-cut majority. But the composition of the Senate is close---49 Democrats and 47 Republicans. Democratic Governor Lausche of Ohio... who was elected to the Senate in November... has said that in organizing the Senate, he ~~may~~ might vote for Republican control. If he did, the Senate vote for control would be tied, 48 to 48, with Vice President Nixon casting the deciding vote in favor of the Republican Party. Democratic anxiety on this score was relieved after the election, however, when Lausche said he would probably STAY on as Ohio governor until his term expires on January 14th. In that case, he would not be able to take part in organizing the Senate. But today Lausche said he would resign as governor as of noon tomorrow and he declared his intention to take part in the Senate organization. Again the Democrats became anxious... and again their anxiety was dispelled---the Republican senator-elect from New York, Jacob Javits, announced that he does not expect to arrive in Washington for another week. So it appears... as of this moment... that the Democrats are sure of control.

Secretary of State Dulles testified before several congressional committees today on the Administration plan for opposing Soviet penetration of the Middle East. And House Speaker Rayburn said President Eisenhower "probably" will present that plan to a joint session of Congress on Friday. Broadly speaking, the Administration seeks standby authority to use force, if necessary, to stop any Soviet aggression in the area. It also proposed an expanded program of economic aid to the Middle East countries to block expansion of Soviet influence. Mr. Eisenhower will present his proposals in person. Democratic Representative

Gordon of Illinois said today that former President Hoover... and former President Truman... will be asked to testify on the new Middle East program. (Gordon takes over tomorrow as chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.)

House Speaker Rayburn today rejected as "premature" the suggestion by the Administration that he help draft the program. Rayburn said he takes the position that it is "not proper" for him to give such advice. Leaders of the move to curb filibusters in Congress met during the day and said that, in seeking to change Senate rules, they would try not to obstruct action on the President's Middle East proposals.

The work of clearing the Suez Canal gathered momentum today. A sunken tug was raised in Port Said harbor. And the salvage ships of half a dozen countries... leased by the United Nations... began clearing other wreckage south of Port Said.

Yemen charged today that British troops have attacked its frontier... and that the action is continuing. Yemen called on Secretary General Hammarskjold to use his good offices to stop what it held to be "aggression".

And the government of Jordan declared it will pursue a policy of neutrality between East and West.

A Soviet magazine said today that attacks on Stalinism have gone too far. "There are those," it said, "who have denied all the theoretical statements made by Stalin, including some that were right." This defense of Stalin theory appeared in the magazine "Questions of Philosophy", which is under the direct control of Molotov. It complained that Soviet art has been too little concerned with ideology... and it repudiated one of its own recent articles which had complained of the "stagnation" of Soviet drama during the days of Stalin.

The United States today joined Great Britain and France in turning down Premier Bulganin's proposal... of November 11th... for a five-power "summit" conference on disarmament. President Eisenhower, however, kept the door open for such a meeting in the future, "whenever circumstances make it seem likely to accomplish a significant result." The President believes that... at present... deliberations should proceed "within the framework of the United Nations." Mr. Eisenhower looked with guarded favor on Bulganin's expressed willingness to consider some form of aerial inspection.

Today... in Budapest... more than a thousand women rushed a state-owned department store, in a panic caused by reports that consumer prices in Hungary may soon get out of hand. The riot was put down by members of the Hungarian militia, who used clubs. Two hours later, a similar riot broke out at the same store with the same result... except that this time the police drove a truck into the crowd to make it disperse. No serious injuries are reported in either incident.

Edward R. Murrow: January 2, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Nothing could better illustrate the present uneasiness of the world, than the flutter caused by Khrushchev's toast on New Year's Eve, praising Stalin. The reaction is not hard to understand. This same Khrushchev, made a speech denouncing Stalin at the last all-Soviet congress that had tremendous consequences, including a revolution in Hungary, and the establishment of a semi-independent regime in Poland. At the time of that speech, observers didn't at first grasp how important it was, and they aren't to be caught napping again. So they are saying, that this is a reversal in recent trends toward moderation. But whether this is right, can only be said when the changes in policy actually appear.

Khrushchev didn't erase what he said about Stalin, as much as he shifted his emphasis. He shifted it drastically, but still not enough to change de-Stalinization into RE-Stalinization. However, the Kremlin's soft policy toward Tito has hardened, and he is being told he cannot claim to be running a communist state, if he relies on the economic aid of capitalist America. The suppression of the Hungarian uprising was Stalinism pure and simple. The arts are being scolded officially for having deviated too far from the party line. But all Soviet policy hasn't reverted to Stalinism. Gomulka still is tolerated in Warsaw as a semi-independent. A handsome foreign-currency loan has been given Hungary for purchases in the West, and it looks as though every effort is being made to buy peace in Hungary by putting moderates into the Kadar ministry.

Soviet policy may or may not be going through a complete reversal, but what nobody can question is that the Soviet Union is going through a painful retrenchment. While most of the current talk about Russia is ideological, Russia is experiencing a serious economic crisis.

First evidence of it was a quiet sale of Soviet gold in Switzerland at the time of the initial settlement with Gomulka. The Kremlin hadn't sold gold in Switzerland for a long time. Suddenly it started buying sterling. This was a godsend to the British. But the Kremlin needed sterling to balance its books with Poland. Polish independence wasn't simply political and ideological. The Kremlin had had to cancel enormous sums Poland was to pay into the Soviet economy. The Russians not only had to do without their usual tribute from Poland, they had to find elsewhere the coal and other materials Poland had sent to their own factories. And now they have to make good to East Germany what Poland has stopped sending to that country. That is what a top East German communist delegation is in Moscow today to ask.

The recent meeting of the Communist Central Committee ended with a fairly clear indication of the severity of the economic crisis. Nothing whatever was said in its communique about Stalinization or De-Stalinization. But a new planner was put in charge of the managerial side of Soviet production; it was announced that the five-year plan was to be overhauled, and that there had to be a reduction in capital investment. This obscure phrase suggested that the upheavals in Poland and Hungary are symptoms of a general condition throughout the Soviet Union, which has put Soviet economy under unexpected strain. All the satellites are reaching out for more independence, and within Russia itself both workers and students are showing signs of discontent. For the satellites the remedy will have to be straight economic relief. For the home public it will have to be a larger supply of consumer goods. And this can only be done by shaking down the whole economic program.

One thing this means is that the Soviet Union can't throw its weight around economically in foreign countries as it has been doing. It won't have to cut off foreign aid altogether, but it will have to reduce it, at a significant loss of prestige and power. The Kremlin may well find this one of the most deplorable results of the events in Hungary and Poland.

Communist China undoubtedly is well aware of the economic crisis in Russia, and may be deeply concerned about getting the capital goods on which its own industrial development depends. It relies altogether on Russia for them, and if Russia is cutting down on capital investments it may have to cut down on its China program. ~~So this would be no time to expect Peiping to advertise any differences with the Kremlin over such things as the fate of Hungary. A few weeks ago Peiping was talking about Poland with the warmest kind of sympathy, and agreeing heartily that there could be more than one road to socialism. Chou En-lai promised to visit Warsaw when he went to Moscow this year.~~ No stauncher defense of Soviet ruthlessness in Hungary has come from anywhere than the Peiping radio. It came as well from Chou En-lai in his interview on the SEE IT NOW program on Sunday. Obviously China's espousal of stark suppression in Hungary will postpone the day of its reconciliation with America. But it looks as though the Chinese Reds feel they have to pay this price if they are to save their imports from Russia.

Whatever the significance of the Khrushchev toast praising Stalin, so far it hasn't been reported by the Moscow radio. That is, if Stalin is being rehabilitated, we know more about it than the Russians.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is talk of a reversal of Soviet policy. This is by no means certain, but... if there were... there would be no novelty in it. Lenin said long ago, "The strictest loyalty to the ideas of Communism must be combined with the ability to make all the necessary compromises--- to tack, make agreements, zig-zag, and retreat."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 2, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news;

Washington today was the scene of last-munute jockeying in preparation for the opening tomorrow of the 85th Congress. House Democrats re-elected all officers of the last Congress. Sam Rayburn is still the speaker of the House..and John McCormack of Massaahusetts, majority leader. It was decided not to "purge" representative Powell of New York, who broke ranks to support President Eisenhower in the fall election. In the House, the Democrats have a clear-cut majority. But the composition of the Senate is close -- 49 Democrats and 47 Republicans. Democratic Governor Lausche of Ohio..who was elected to the Senate in November.. has said that in organizing the Senate, he might vote for Republican control. If he did, the Senate vote for control would be tied, 48 to 48, with Vice President Nixon casting the deciding vote in favor of the Republican Party. Democratic anxiety on this score was relieved after the election, however, when Lausche said he woudd probably stay on as Ohio governor until his term expires on January 14th. In that case, he would not be able to take part in organizing the Senate. But today Lausche said he would resign as governor as of noon tomorrow and he declared his intention to take part in the Senate organization. Again the Democrats became anxious..and again their anxiety was dispelled--the Rppublican senator-elect from New York, Jacob Javits, announced that he does not expect to arrive in Washington for another week. So it appears..as of this moment..that the Democrats are sure of control.

Secretary of State Dulles testified before several congressional committees today on the Administration plan for opposing Soviet penetration of the Middle East. And House Speaker Rayburn said President Eisehower "probably" will present that plan to a joint session of Congress on Friday. Broadly speaking, the Administration seeks standby authority to use force, if necessary, to stop any Soviet aggression in the area. It also proposed an expanded program of economic aid to the Middle East countries to block expansion of Soviet influence. Mr. Eisenhower will present his proposals in person. Democratic Representative Gordon of Illinois said today that former President Hoover..and former President Truman..will be asked to testify on the new Middle East program. Gordon takes over tomorrow as chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. House Speaker Rayburn today rejected as "premature" the suggestion by the Administration that he help draft the program. Rayburn said he takes the position that it is "not proper" for him to give such advice.

Leaders of the move to curb filibusters in Congress met during the day and said that, in seeking to change Senate rules, they would try not to obstruct action on the President's Middle East proposals.

The work of clearing the Suez Canal gathered momentum today. A sunken tug was raised in Port Said harbor. And the salvage ships of half a dozen countries, leased by the United Nations..began clearing other wreckage south of Port Siid.

Yemen charged today that British troops have attacked its frontier..and that the action is continuing. Yemen called on Secretary General Hammarskjold to use his good offices to stop what it held to be "aggression".

And the government of Jordan declared it will purus e a policy of neutrality between East and West.

A Soviet magazine said today that attacks on Stalinism have gone too far. "There are those," it said, "who have denied all the theoretical statements made by Stalin, including some that were right." This defense of Stalin theory appeared in the magazine "Questions of Philosophy", which is under the direct control of Molotov. It compalined that Soviet art has been too little concerned with ideology., and it repudiated one of its own recent articles which had complained of the "stagnation" of Soviet drama during the days of Stalin.

The United States today joined Great Britain and France in turning down Premier Bulganin proposal..of November 11th..for a five-power "summit" conference on disarmament. PresidentEisenhower, however, kept the door open for such a meeting in the future "whenever circumstances make it seem likely to accomplish a significant result." The President believes that..at present.. deliberations should proceed "within the framework of the United Nations." Mr. Eisenhower looked with guarded favor on Bul'ganin's expressed willingness to consider some form of aerial inspeciion.

Today..in Budapest..more than a thousand womed rushed a state-owned department store, in a panic caused by reports that consumer prices in Hungary may soon get out of hand. The riot was put down by members of the Hungarian militia, who used clubs. Two hours later, a similar riot roke out at the same store with the same result..except that this time the police drove a truck into the crowd to make it disperse. No serious in uries are reported in either incident. Nothing could better illustrate the presnet uneasiness of the world than the flutter caused by Khrushchev's toast on New Year's Eve praising Stalin. The reaction is not hard to understand. This same Khrushchev made a speech denouncing Stalin at the last all-Soviet congress that had tremendous consequences, including a revolution in Hungary and the establishment of a semi-independent regime in Poland. At the time of that speech observers didn't grasp how important it was, and they wern't ho be caught napping again. So they are saying that this is a reversal in recent trends toward moderation. But whether this is right, can only be said when the changes in policy actually appear.

Khrushchev didn't erase what he said about Stalin, as much as he shifted his emphasis. He shifted it drastically but still not enough to change de-Stalinization into RE-Stalinization. However, the Kremlin's soft policy toward Tito has hardened and he is being told he cannot claim to be running a communist state, if he relies on the economic aid of capitalist America. The suppression of the Hungarian uprising was Stalinism pure and simple. The arts are being scolded officially for having deviated too far from the party line. But all Soviet policy hasn't reverted to Stalinism. Gomulka still is tolerated in Warsaw as a semi-independent. A handsome foreign-currency loan has been given Hungary for purchases in the West, and it looks as though every effort is being made to buy peace in Hungary by putting moderates into the Kadar ministry.

Soviet policy may or may not be going through a complete reversal, but nobody can question is that the Soviet Union is going through a painful retrenchment. While most of the current talk about Russia is ideological, Russia is experiencing a seriouse economic crisis.

First evidence of it was a quiet sale of Soviet gold in Switzerland at the time of the initial settlement with Gomulka. The Kremlin hadn't sold gold in Switzerland for a long time. Suddenly it started buying sterling. This was a godsend to the British. But the Kremlin needed sterling to balance its books with Poland. Polish independence wasn't simply political and ideological. The Kremlin had had to cancel enormous sums Poland was to pay into the Soviet economy. The Russians not only had to do without their usual tribute from Poalnd, they had to find elsewhere the coal and other materials Poland had sent to their own factories. And now they have to make good to East Germany what Poland has stopped sending to that country. That is what a top East German communist delegation is in Moscow today to ask.

The recent meeting of the Communist Committee ended with a fairly clear indication of the severity of the economic crisis. Nothing whatever was said in its communique about Stalinization or de-Stalinization. But a new planner was put in charge of the managerial side of Soviet production; it was announced that the five-year plan was to be overhauled, and that there had to be a reduction in capital investment. This obscure phrase suggested that the upheavals in Poland and Hungary are symptoms of a general condition throughout the Soviet Union, which has put Soviet economy under unexpected strain. All the satellites are reaching out for more independence, and within Russia itself both workers and students are showing signs of discontent. For the satellites, the remedy will have to be straight economic relief. For the home public it will have to be a larger supply of consumer goods. And this can only be done by shaking down the whole economic program.

One thing this means is that the Soviet Union can't throw its weight around economically in foreign countries as it has been doing. It won't have to cut off foreign aid altogether, but it will have to reduce it, at a significant loss of prestige and power. Ther Kremlin may well find this one of the most deplorable results of the events in Hungary and Poland.

Communist China undoubtedly is well aware of the economic crisis in Russia and may be deeply concerned about getting the capital goods on which its own industrial development depends. It relies altogether on Russia for them, and if Russia is cutting down on capital investments it may have to cut down on its China program. No stauncher defense of Soviet ruthlessness in Hungary has come from anywhere than ihe Peiping radio. It came as well from Chou en-lai in his interview on the SEE IT NOW program on Sunday. Obviously China's espousal of stark suppression in Hungary will postpone the day of its reconciliation with America. But it looks as though the Chinese Reds feel hhey have to pay this price if they are to save their imports from Russia.

Whatever the significance of the Khrushchev toast praising Stalin,so far is hasn't been reported by the Moscow radio. That is, if Stalin is being rehabilitated, we know more about it than the Russians.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is talk of a reversal of Soviet policy. This is by no means certain, if there were... there would be no novelty in it. Lenin said long ago, "The strictest loyalty to the ideas of Communism must be combined with the ability to make all the necessary compromises -- to tack, make agreements, zig-zag, and retreat."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R.Murrow Thurs., Jan. 3, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will go before a joint session of Congress on Saturday, to outline his plan for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. / The President will make his appearance at 12:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. The plan has still to be put in final form, but---in addition to economic aid for the Middle East countries---Mr. Eisenhower is expected to ask for standby authority to use troops, if necessary, to resist Soviet attack. Indications are that Democratic members of Congress will give the program a going-over---and then join in approving it / in the final vote. Adlai Stevenson said today that Mr. Eisenhower is "trying frantically to fill the vacuum (in the Middle East) his own policies helped create."

The 85th Congress reconvened today, after a five-month recess. Democratic Senator Lausche of Ohio ended the suspense... and voted with the Democrats in organizing the Senate, thus ensuring that the Senate... as well as the House... stays under Democratic control. ~~The party line-up in the Senate is close, and Lausche had once said he might vote with the Republicans.~~ The Democrats again chose Senator Lyndon Johnson as floor leader... and selected Senator Mansfield of Montana as party whip. The Senate Republicans re-elected Senator Knowland as their floor leader, and chose Senator Saltonstall of Massachusetts Republican conference chairman. Senator Dirksen of Illinois was elected to succeed Saltonstall as party whip---reportedly by a 27-to-17 vote over Senator Thye of Minnesota. Sam Rayburn is still the speaker of the House.

→

The Senate will meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow to take up a motion designed to curb filibusters. The motion was offered today by Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico and calls for adoption of new Senate rules. Anderson... and other senators favoring civil rights legislation... want to change the rule that requires a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership to shut off debate. Opponents... led by Senator Russell of Georgia... will try tomorrow to table Anderson's motion. A vote is scheduled for tomorrow night.

A federal judge ruled today that statutes requiring segregated seating on city buses in Miami are unconstitutional. U.S. District Judge Emmett Choate based his ruling on the recent Supreme Court decision banning segregated buses in Montgomery, Alabama. Miami city officials have 10 days in which to file an answer.

The United States Court of Appeals ruled today that Congress may inquire into the political beliefs of witnesses, if the question "is regarded by Congress as having value in the exercise of legislative duty." The court rejected the contention of Lloyd Barenblatt, a former teacher, that Congress... through its committees... lacks authority to require a witness to answer questions as to his beliefs and associations. Barenblatt refused in 1954 to tell the House Committee on Un-American Activities whether he was a member of the Communist Party. He was later convicted of contempt of Congress and sentenced to serve six months in jail.

The Court of Appeals also affirmed the contempt of Congress conviction of New York attorney Harry Sacher. In 1955, Sacher refused to tell Senate investigators whether he was a Communist, on grounds that compulsory disclosure of his thoughts and beliefs was "incompatible with the dignity of the individual." He denied membership in any organization which, to his mind, advocated ~~the~~ violent overthrow of the government. The court today held that Sacher's willingness to testify about political associations "in the colors of his own beliefs" tended to cast doubt on the genuineness of his protest. Sacher said he will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The House Merchant Marine Committee today released a report on the sinking of the Andrea Doria last summer off Nantucket Light. The report... prepared by marine experts... says the collision between the Stockholm and the Andrea Doria "would have been prevented, if the information provided by radar had been properly used." The report disclaims any intention of fixing responsibility for the accident. But it suggests the Doria might not have sunk, if its builders had met safety requirements "by a wider margin". "There obviously is need," the report states, for searching international study of the case", with the view of possible revision of current international standards.

The Post Office Department said today that it is "considering" raising the postage rate on letters from three to five cents.

Reports from Hungary say the former Stalinist premier... Ernoe Geroe... is about to be removed from the ruling presidential council. Budapest Radio does not say why, but Géroe is highly unpopular with the Hungarian people. It was he who called in Soviet tanks to crush the November revolt.

Some refugees were fired on today, as they tried to cross the Hungarian frontier. One of the refugees... a 50-year-old woman... was killed. Whether the border guards who fired the shots were Hungarian or Russian, is not known.

A delegation of East German leaders arrived in Moscow today, to discuss political and economic problems. Premier Grötewohl told Soviet officials who greeted him, the bond between Russia and East Germany "cannot be broken." The actual talks are expected to start tomorrow.

~~West German Chancellor Adenauer is reported drafting a new note to Moscow, on the subject of German unification. The United States, Britain, and France will be consulted before the note is put in final form.~~

~~In Algeria, Arab nationalists attacked a train during near Oran. Three Europeans were killed. Ten other Europeans are missing.~~

In India today, the leaders of Prime Minister Nehru's Congress Party drafted a resolution calling for a new approach to world problems. This new approach, it said, should be based---"not on threats or use of armed forces in other countries, but on recognition that each country must have freedom to live its own life." The resplution... to be submitted to the Congress Party convention... calls specifically for the withdrawal of "foreign forces" from Hungary.

~~Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai returned to Peiping today, after breaking off his Southeast Asia tour. Next week, he will go to Moscow.~~

Edward R. Murrow: January 3, 1956. 7.45 p.m.

With the opening of the Eighty-fifth Congress, the American people are turning over a new leaf in dealing with their national affairs. But a study of its legislative program will quickly dispose of the idea that the new leaf will show anything basically new. There has been a national election, in the course of which the electorate is presumed to have examined issues and come to conclusions about them. But judged from the present program of the new congress, all that has been decided is to go on as before, discuss the same subjects and the same remedies.

Aside from the question whether the Democrats would be able to organize the Senate, the opening of Congress today was on the dull side, and the outlook for any brightening is not very good. There will be the eventful appearance of President Eisenhower to present the new Middle East policy, but this policy should be called belated rather than new. Otherwise Congress prepares to go through much of what it has gone through before, with its own forces in about the same balance.

There will be an early attack by northern congressmen on the filibuster, with effective southern resistance to it, so that the outlook for civil rights legislation of any potency does not seem much better than in the last session. Events in Hungary will undoubtedly gain congressional approval for entry of an increased number of Hungarian refugees. But the fight to re-write the McCarran-Walter immigration act faces the same obstruction as before.

The vast fiscal problems of the nation are not going to receive much attention. The Administration will ask temporary extension of the debt limit. ~~Democrats will oppose the Treasury's plan to budget for a considerable surplus so as to reduce the debt, and they will fight for tax reductions instead, though without much faith of success.~~

The defense budget will be about two billion dollars more this year than last. This assures bi-partisan support, since it was mainly Democrats who were disturbed about the safety of cutting military expenditure last year. Democrats may fight again for a larger air force, and there probably will be controversy over plans to reduce the number of men in army divisions to take account of the higher weapon power. ~~But it is not to be expected that Congress will get a full look at the future of armaments and the nature of future warfare, so as to plan for the maximum of security in the strange new world of H-bombs and inter-continental missiles.~~ for legislation, and will again take up a full quota of time in Congress. But they will not develop a flood of new ideas. In the farm question, the Administration will try to lessen price supports and increase the allotment of acreage for corn. Housing is being hampered by high interest rates, and this will bring demands for greater federal support of the mortgage markets. No far-reaching program is expected concerning health insurance through federal support of the private insurance systems. The long-standing conflict between public and private power will center this year on the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Administration's proposal to give the Treasury a veto over the T.V.A.'s issuance of bonds to build steam plants.

Farm policy, housing, health and power have become standard headings

All this sounds almost boringly familiar. But the absence of fright and fever in the new Congress obviously can count as a kind of testimonial to the soundness and strength of America's political and economic condition. If there is no change, there may be no need for change. And of course it is true that with business and employment at a peak we are blessed among all nations.

But there is one item on the Congressional program that might well give a conscientious Congressman fright and fever. That is what is being done about education. The forecast of the school program for this session is only of rival Administration and Democratic programs for federal aid for school construction.

The shortage of school buildings is only part of the plight of education. We are not going to be able to put all the upcoming American youngsters into school rooms. But worse than that, we shall not have enough teachers to teach them, and many of the teachers we have are not capable of preparing them for life in the world of tomorrow. Our colleges already cannot cope with the student crowds that knock at their doors, and many of them are financially incapable of caring adequately for those they take in. Our scientific and technical training not only is failing to supply us enough experts to staff our own economy a few years from now, it is not foreseeing the need for technical personnel we must send abroad if we are to keep the leadership of the world.

This may not be a crisis as of today, but nothing seems more sure than that it will be a crisis tomorrow. And one thing that is making it sure is the indifference of Congress.

George Bryan.

Word for Today

Congress has reconvened. And even in a routine session, a certain amount of fireworks is to be expected. John Adams explained this a long time ago when he said, "Every man in Congress is a great man--- an orator, a critic, a statesman. Therefore every man upon every question must show his oratory, his criticism, and his political abilities."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will go before a joint session of Congress on Saturday, to outline his plan for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. The President will make his appearance at 12:30 PM Eastern Standard Time. The plan has still to be put in final form, but - in addition to economic aid for the Middle East countries - Mr. Eisenhower is expected to ask for standby authority to use troops, if ne essary, to resist Soviet attack. Indications are that Democratic members of Congress will give the program a going-over, and then join in approving it in the final vote. Adlai Stevenson said today that Mr. Eisenhower is "trying frantically to fill the vacuum (in the Middle East) his own policies helped create."

The 85th Congress reconvened today, after a five-month recess. Democratic Senator Lausche of Ohio ended the suspense...and voted with the Democrats in organizing the Senate, thus ensuring that the Senate...as well as the House...' stays under Democratic control. The Democrats again chose Senator Lyndon Johnson as floor leader...and Selected Senator Mansfield of Montana as party whip. The Senate Republicans re-elected Senator Knowland as their floor leader, and chose Senator Saltonstall of Massachusetts Republican conference chairman/ Senator Kirksen of Illinois was elected to succeed Saltonstall as party whip - reportedly by a 27-to-17 vote over Senator Thye of Minnesota. Sam Rayburn is still the speaker of the House.

The Senate will meet at 10 AM tomorrow to take up a motion designed to curb filibusters. The motion was offered today by Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico and calls for adoption of new Senate rules. Anderson...and other senators favoring civil rights legislation...want to change the rule that requires a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership to shut off debate.

Opponents...led by Senator Russell of Georgia...will try tomorrow to table Anderson's motion. A vote is scheduled for tomorrow night.

A federal judge ruled today that statutes requiring segregated seating on city buses in Miami are unconstitutional. U.S. District Judge Emmett Choate based his ruling on the recent Supreme Court decision banning segregated buses in Montgomery, Alabama. Miami city officials have 10 days in which to file an answer.

The United States Court of Appeals ruled today that Congress may inquire into the political beliefs of witnesses, if the question "is regarded by Congress as having value in the exercise of legislative duty." The court rejected the contention of Lloyd Barenblatt, a former teacher, that Congress...through its committees...lacks authority to require a witness to answer questions as to his beliefs and associations. Barenblatt refused in 1954, to tell the House Committee on Un-American Activities whether he was a member of the Communist Party. He was later convicted of contempt of Congress and sentenced to serve six months in jail.

The Court of Appeals also affirmed the contempt of Congress conviction of New York attorney Harry Sacher. In 1955, Sacher refused to tell Senate investigators whether he was a Communist on grounds that compulsory disclosure of his thoughts and beliefs was "incompatible with the dignity of the individual." He denied membership in any organization which, to his mind, advocated violent overthrow of the government. The court today held that Sacher's willingness to testify about political associations "in the colors of his own beliefs" tended to cast doubt on the genuineness of his protest. Sacher said he will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The House Merchant Marine Committee today released a report on the sinking' of the Andrea Doria last summer off Nantucket Light. The report...prepared by marine experts...says the collision between the Stockholm and the Andrea Doria "would have been prevented, if the information provided by radar had been properly used." The deport disclaims any intention of fixing responsibility for the accident. But it suggests the Doria might not have sunk if its builders had met safety requirements "by a wider margin". "There obviously is need," the report states, for searching international study of the case", with the view of possible revision of current international standards.

The Post Office Department said today that it is "considering" raising the postage rate on letters from three to five cents.

Reports from Hungary say the former Stalinist premier...Ernoe Geroe, is about to be removed from the ruling presidential council. Budapest Radio does not say why, but Geroe is highly unpopular with the Hungarian people. It was he who called in Soviet tanks to crush the November revolt.

Some refugees were fired on today as they tried to cross the Hungarian frontier. One of the refugees...a 50-year-old woman...was killed. Whether the border guards who fired the shots were Hungarian or Russian, is not known.

A delegation of East German leaders arrived in Moscow today to discuss political and economic problems. Premier Grotewohl told Soviet officials who greeted him the bond between Russia and East Germany "cannot be broken." The actual talks are expected to start tomorrow.

In India today, the leaders of Prime Minister Nehru's Congress Party drafted a resolution calling for a new approach to world problems. This new approach, it said, should be based - "not on threats or use of armed forces in other countries, but on recognition that each country must have freedom to live its own life." The resolution...to be submitted to the Congress Party convention... calls specifically for the withdrawal of "foreign forces" from Hungary.

With the opening of the Eighty-fifth Congress, the American people are turning over a new leaf in dealing with their national affairs. But a study of its legislative program will quickly dispose of the idea that the new leaf will show anything basically new. There has been a national election, in the course of which the electorate is presumed to have examined issues and come to conclusions about them. But judged from the present program of the new congress, all that has been decided is to go on as before, discuss the same subjects and the same remedies.

Aside from the question whether the Democrats would be able to organize the Senate, the opening of Congress today was on the dull side, and the outlook for any brightening is not very good. There will be the eventful appearance of President Eisenhower to present the new Middle East policy, but this policy should be called belated rather than new. Otherwise Congress prepares to go through much of what it has gone through before, with its own forces in about the same balance.

There will be an early attack by northern congressmen on the filibuster, with effective southern resistance to it, so that the outlook for civil rights legislation of any potency does not seem much better than in the last session. Events in Hungary will undoubtedly gain congressional approval for entry of an increased number of Hungarian refugees. But the fitht to re-write the McCarran-Walter immigration act faces the same obstruction as before.

The vast fiscal problems of the nation are not going to receive much attention. The Administration will ask temporary extension of the debt limit.

The defense budget will be about two billion dollars more this year than last. This assures bi-partisan support, since it was mainly Democrats who were disturbed about the safety of cutting military expenditure last year. Democrats may fight again for a larger air force, and there probably will be controversy over plans to reduce the number of men in army divisions to take account of the higher weapon power.

Farm policy, housing, health and power have become standard headings for legislation, and will again take up a full quota of time in Congress. But they will not develop a flood of new ideas. In the farm question, the Administration will try to lessen price supports and increase the allotment of acreage for corn. Housing is being hampered by high interest rates, and this will bring demands for greater federal support of the mortgage markets.

All this sounds almost boringly familiar. But the absence of fright and fever in the new Congress obviously can count as a kind of testimonial to the soundness and strength of America's political and economic condition. If there is no change, there may be no need for change. And of course it is true that with business and employment at a peak we are blessed among all nations.

But there is one item on the Congressional program that might well give a conscientious Congressman fright and fever. That is what is being done about education. The forecast of the school program for this session is only of rival Administration and Democratic programs for federal aid for school construction.

The shortage of school buildings is only part of the plight of education. We are not going to be able to put all the upcoming American youngsters into school rooms. But worse than that, we shall not have enough teachers to teach them, and many of the teachers we have are not capable of preparing them for life in the world of tomorrow. Our colleges already cannot cope with the student crowds that knock at their doors, and many of them are financially incapable of caring adequately for those they take in. Our scientific and technical training not only is failing to supply us enough experts to staff our own economy a few years from now, it is not foreseeing the need for technical personnel we must send abroad if we are to keep the leadership of the world.

This may not be a crisis as of today, but nothing seems more sure than that it will be a crisis tomorrow. And one thing that is making it sure is the indifference of Congress. This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcement

MURROW: Congress has reconvened. And even in a routine session, a certain amount of firworks is to be expected. John Adams explained this a long time ago when he said, "Every man in Congress is a great man -- an orator, a critic, a statesman. Therefore every man upon every question must show his oratory, his criticism, and his political abilities."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 4, 1957

This is the news:

A move to make it easier to cut off filibusters failed tonight in the Senate. A motion to adopt new rules... that would make it easier to pass civil rights legislation... was tabled by a vote of 55 to 38. Twenty-eight Republicans and 27 Democrats voted to kill the proposal. Seventeen Republicans joined 21 Democrats in voting to go ahead with the rules change. Southern members argued that the Senate is a continuing body... and that its rules carry over from year to year. Vice President Nixon expressed the view that the majority of a newly constituted Senate should have the power to adopt new rules... that consequently, in his opinion, one section of Rule 22 governing Senate debate is unconstitutional. Thus he supported the group of northern and western senators favoring change. But his support was not enough. (I should like to discuss this whole question further in a few minutes).

Tomorrow, President Eisenhower will go before a joint session of Congress, to present his plan for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. / Mr. Eisenhower will ask for standby authority to use troops, if necessary, and for approval of a program of economic aid. / The House Foreign Affairs Committee will begin public hearings on the Administration proposals on Monday. / The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will also conduct hearings, and a vote is not expected on the floor of either chamber for about two weeks. Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee warned today, that failure to approve the new Administration plan would weaken the President's hand in foreign affairs "not only in the Middle East, but everywhere." Mr. Eisenhower's address will be carried by all networks, including CBS Radio, at 12:30 p.m. tomorrow, Eastern Standard Time. And the Voice of America will broadcast the message overseas.

The new Administration policy came under strong attack today in the Soviet press. The government newspaper Izvestia called the new proposals "a gross interference in the internal affairs of the Arab countries", and charged that, in practice, they would "undermine United Nations efforts in the Middle East." And the Moscow radio said... in broadcasts beamed to the Middle East... that America is trying to impose "a protectorate" over the Arab countries. "What right," it asked the Arabs, "do American diplomats have to call you a vacuum?"

→

Red China's official newspaper calls the American plan "a vicious scheme for colonialist aggression."

In Belgrade, a Yugoslav spokesman today criticized the policy as "a further complication in an already delicate situation." Talk of filling a vacuum, he said, denies Arabs the right to be masters on their own soil and increases the possibility of conflict between the great powers." On the subject of relations with Russia, he conceded differences exist. But, he said, there is "no foundation" for the Chinese Communist statement... of December 28... that Yugoslavia is breaking away from the Soviet bloc.

Formal talks between Soviet and East German leaders got underway today in the Kremlin. The East Germans are negotiating principally for economic aid.

Reports from Washington say the Eisenhower Administration will soon allow Poland to buy surplus farm products... with dollars... at world market prices. Commerce Department action lifting export restrictions for Poland is reported due.

President Koerner of Austria died in Vienna today of a stroke. Theodore Koerner, a socialist, had been president of Austria since 1951. He was 83 years of age.

A United Nations official said... here in New York today... that Egypt and the United Nations have reached an agreement for full clearance of the Suez Canal. Andrew Cordier, executive assistant to Secretary General Hammarskjold, said the agreement will be formally signed by Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi... and Hammarskjold... as soon as the document is received at United Nations headquarters. Terms of the agreement, he said, will be announced next week. Egyptian sources said today that they will refuse to discuss any over-all settlement with France.

The United Nations commander, General Burns, conferred today with the Israeli chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan. The conference took place in the Egyptian town of El Arish... and concerned "technical procedures for further withdrawal of Israeli troops in the Sinai." Neither Burns nor Dayan would tell reporters what... if anything... was said about Israel's refusal to let Egypt reoccupy the Strait of Aqaba or the Gaza Strip.

→

Two American oil companies---the Humble Oil & Refining Company and the Continental Oil Company---today raised the price of gasoline by a cent a gallon. The action by Humble affects the price of its gasoline in Texas. Continental operates in Texas and New Mexico. The increases are blamed on increased demand for crude oil due to the Suez crisis.

The executives of the controversial Democratic advisory committee met today in Washington. National Chairman Butler said afterward that Democratic congressional leaders have agreed to attend another session tomorrow. House Speaker Rayburn and Senate Leader Johnson have refused... until now... to have anything to do with the new advisory committee on grounds they could not be responsible to a non-Congressional group. They will not meet with the committee tomorrow as members. Butler says they will attend simply to set up a procedure for consultation.

The F.B.I. today arrested Irving Potash, convicted Communist leader, because he illegally re-entered the country. Potash was arrested in Bronxville, New York. He had been deported to Poland in March, 1955.

Edward R. Murrow: January 4, 1957 7:45 PM

There was more than meets the eye in the Senate's six-hour debate on the rules and the continuance of the right to filibuster. There was more even than the fate of civil rights legislation, which will continue to be at the mercy of the Southern minority in the Senate. What was under consideration - and what was not done - was to find a better balance between the majority and minorities in our Democracy. This is no problem unique to us. It troubles all Democracies. For Democracy cannot be simply a system of majority rule. If there is to be freedom the rights of minorities also have to be protected. The difficulty is in knowing where to draw the line.

As it is drawn in the Senate, and safeguarded by the celebrated Rule Twenty-two, the minority has a virtual veto over the majority. It is true that debate can be stopped if two-thirds of the senators show up and vote to stop it. But one third of the Senate, plus one member, do have complete and final veto power. That not only is minority rule, it is entrenched minority rule. There is no appeal from it in Congress. The only way to curb this power is to rewrite the rule. Since Rule Twenty-two authorizes a filibuster against any attempt to change rule

Twenty-two, the only way for the majority to get out of the clutches of the Rule is to sweep aside all the rules. This it can do by deciding that the Senate is free to write new rules at the beginning of any new session.

A majority vote today could have decided that the Senate is not a continuing body, hence it is free to write new rules. But there was no majority for it. And since the majority did not choose to throw out all rules so as to get rid of Rule Twenty-two, it is undeniable that that rule stays in force by majority assent. In other words, the majority confirmed the minority in its complete and final veto. This hardly solves the problem of drawing the line more liberally between majority and minority dictatorship. It ducks a solution of it.

The majority of the Senate seemed pleased with today's procedure. A deal had been worked out that permitted what resembled a genuine six-hour debate. ~~It saved Vice President Nixon from having to rule on whether the Senate is a continuing body, and then it put the campaign to modify Rule Twenty-two into the deep freeze.~~ This had been adroitly contrived by Senator Johnson as majority leader with the help of Minority Leader Knowland. It was a good example of how the Senate can be run in harmony when faced with implacable discord. There is one way to avoid trouble - - bury it.

Southern Senators could argue that tradition is on their side and unlimited debate has prevailed in the Senate through most of our history. After 1806 it was in effect until 1917. The first resort to the cloture--that is, the shutting off of a filibuster, came when isolationists tried to talk Wilson's policies to death in 1917. The rule then adopted was that debate could be stopped by a two thirds vote of senators present and voting. But this was tightened up in 1949 when President Truman proposed to push for civil rights legislation. Cloture was to be possible only on a vote of two thirds of the entire membership of the Senate, and the filibuster was authorized against attempts to curb the filibuster.

Many Northern Senators would settle now for cloture rule adopted in the Wilson Administration. That is, they would be content if two thirds of Senators present and voting could stop a filibuster, instead of two thirds of the total membership. That would be drawing the line between majority and minority power a little more liberally. But since President Eisenhower will push for legislation in the field of race relationships, the South will not allow Rule Twenty-two to be liberalized at all. And it was able to enlist Senator Knowland's decisive influence to this end.

It can be asked if this has strengthened our Democracy, or increased our effectiveness in the world. This is a time when racial equality is a big factor in world affairs. What the United States does to promote racial equality, affects its influence as a world leader. It happens that the anti-segregation rulings of the Supreme Court have substantially increased our influence. The action of the Senate today certainly did not further increase it. It probably reduced it.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Administration is putting together a plan for blocking Soviet penetration of the Middle East... and tomorrow it will be outlined by President Eisenhower before a joint session of Congress. David Burnham once gave a piece of sound advice. "Make big plans," he said. "Little plans have no magic to stir men's blood." And he might have added, they usually don't work.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

THIS IS THE NEWS:

A move to make it easier to cut off filibusters failed tonight in the Senate. A motion to adopt new rules.. that would make it easier to pass civil rights legislation...was tabled by a vote of 55 to 38. Twenty-eight Republicans and 27 Democrats voted to kill the proposal. Seventeen Republicans joined 21 Democrats in voting to go ahead with the rules change. Southern members argued that the Senate is a continuing body...and that its rules carry over from year to year. Vice President Nixon expressed the view that the majority of a newly constituted Senate should have the power to adopt new rules...that consequently, in his opinion, one section of Rule 22 governing Senate debate is unconstitutional. Thus he supported the group of northern and western senators favoring change. But his support was not enough. (I should like to discuss this whole question further in a few minutes).

Tomorrow, President Eisenhower will go before a joint session of Congress to present his plan for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower will ask for standby authority to use troops, if necessary, and for approval of a program of economic aid. The House Foreign Affairs Committee will begin public hearings on the Administration proposals on Monday. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will also conduct hearings, and a vote is not expected on the floor of either chamber for about two weeks. Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee warned today that failure to approve the new Administration plan would weaken the President's hand in foreign affairs "not only in the Middle East but everywhere." Mr. Eisenhower's address will be carried by all networks, including CBS Radio, at 12:30 p.m. tosorrow, Eastern Standard Time. And the Voice of America will broadcast the message overseas.

The new Administration policy came uhder strong attack today in the Soviet press. The government newspaper Izvestia called the new proposals "a gross interference in the internal affairs of the Arab countries" and charged that, in practice, they would "undermine United Nations efforts in the Middle East." And the Moscow radio said... n broadcasts beamed to the Middle East...that America is trying to impose "a protectorate" over the Arab countries. "What right," it asked the Arabs, "do American diplomats have to call you a vacuum?"

Red China's official newspaper calls the American plan "a vicious scheme for colonialist aggression."

In Belgrade, a Yugoslav spokesman today criticized the policy as "a further complication in an already delicate situation." Talk of filling a vacuum, he said, denies Arabs the right to be masters on their own soil and increases the possibility of conflict between the great powers." On the subject of relations with Russia, he conceded differences exist. But, he said, there is "no foundation" for the Chinese Communist statement...of December 28...that' Yugoslavia is breaking away from the Soviet bloc.

Formal talks between Soviet and East German leaders got underway today in the Kremlin. The East Germans are negotiating principally for economic aid.

Reports from Washington say the Eisenhower Administration will soon allow Poland to buy surplus farm products...with dollars...at world market prices. Commerce Department action lifting export restrictions for Poland is reported due.

President Koerner of Austria died in Vienna today of a stroke. Theodore Koerner, a socialist, had been president of Austria since 1951. He was 83 years of age.

A United Nations official said...here in New York today...that Egypt and the United Nations have reached an agreement for full clearance of the Suez Canal. Andrew Cordier, executive assistant to Secretary General Hammarskjold, said the agreement will be formally signed by Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi...

and Hammarskjold..as soon as the document is received at United Nations headquarters. Terms of the agreement, he said, will be announced next week. Egyptian sources said today that they will refuse to discuss any over-all settlement with France.'

The United Natidns commander, General Burns, conferred today with the Israeli chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan. The conference took place in the Egyptian town of El Arish...and concerned"technical rocedures for further withdrawal of Israeli troops in the Sinai." Neither Burns nor Dayan would tell reporters what...if anything...was said about Israel's refusal to let Egypt reoccupy the Strait of Aqaba or the Gaza Strip.

Two American oil companies - the Humble Oil and Refining Company and the Continental Oil Company - today raised the price of gasoline by a cent a gallon. The action by Humble affects the price of its gasoline in Texas. Continental operates in Texas and New Mexico. The increases are blamed on increased demand for crude oil due to the Suez crisis.

The executives of the controversial Democratic advisory committee met today in Washington. National Chairman Butler said afterward that Democratic congressional leaders have agreed to attend another session tomorrow. House Speaker Rayburn and Senate Leader Johnson have refused...until now...to have anything to do with the new advisory committee on grounds they could not be responsible to a non-Congressional group. They will not meet with the committee tomorrow as members. Butler said they will attend simply to set up a procedure for consultation.

The FBI today arrested Irving Potash, convicted Communist leader, because he illegally re-entered the country. Potash was arrested in Bronxville, New York. He had been deported to Poland in March, 1955.

There was more than meets the eye in the Senate's six-hour debate on the rules and the continuance of the right to filibuster. There was more even than the fate of civil rights legislation, which will continue to be at the mercy of the Southern minority in the Senate. What was under consideration - and what was not done - was to find a better balance between the majority and minorities in our Democracy. This is no problem unique to us. It troubles all Democracies. For Democracy cannot be simply a system of majority rule. If there is to be freedom, the rights of minorities also have to be protected. The difficulty is in knowing where to draw the line.

As it is drawn in the Senate, and safeguarded by the celebrated Rule Twenty-two, the minority has a virtual veto over the majority. It is true that debate can be stopped if two-thirds of the senators show up and vote to stop it. But one third of the Senate, plus one member, do have complete and final veto power. That not only is minority rule, it is entrenched minority rule. There is no appeal from it in Congress. The only way to curb this power is to rewrite the rule. Since Rule Twenty-two authorizes a filibuster against any attempt to change rule twenty-two, the only way for the majority to get out of the clutches of the Rule is to sweep aside all the rules. This it can do by deciding that the Senate is free to write new rules at the beginning of any new session.

A majority vote today could have decided that the Senate is not a continuing body, ehnce it is free to write new rules. But there was no majority for it. And since the majority did not choose to throw out all rules so as to get rid of Rule Twenty-two, it is undeniable that that rule stays in force by majority assent. In other words, the majority confirmed the minority in its complete and final veto. This hardly solves the problem of drawing the line more liberally between majority and minority dictatorship. It ducks a solution of it.

The majority of the Senate seemed pleased with today's procedure. A deal had been worked out that permitted what resembled a genuine six-hour debate. This had been adroitly contrived by Senator Johnson as majority leader with the help of Minority Leader Knowland. It was a good example of how the Senate can be run in harmony when faced with implacable discord. There is one way to avoid trouble -- bury it.

Southern Senators could argue that tradition is on their side and unlimited debate has prevailed in the Senate through most of our history. After 1806 it was in effect until 1917. The first resort to the cloture - that is, the shutting off of a filibuster, came when isolationists tried to talk Wilson's policies to death in 1917. The rule then adopted was that debate could be stopped by a two thirds vote of senators present and voting. But this was' tightened up in 1949 when President Truman proposed to push for civil rights legislation. Cloture was to be possible only on a vote of two thirds of the entire membership of the Senate, and the filibuster was authorized against attempts to curb the filibuster.

Many Northern Senators would settle now for cloture rule adopted in the Wilson Administration. That is, they would be content if two thirds of Senators present and voting could stop a filibuster, instead of two thirds of the total membership. That would be drawing the line between majority and minority power a little more liberally. But since President Eisenhower will push for legislation in the field of race relationships, the South will not allow Rule twenty-two to be liberalized at all. And it was able to enlist Senator Knowland's decisive influence to this end.

It can be asked if this has strengthened our Democracy or increased our effectiveness in the world. This is a time when racial equality is a big factor in world affairs. What the United States does to romote racial equality affects its influence as a world leader. It happens that the anti-segregation rulings of the Supreme Court have substantially increased our influence. The action of the Senate today certainly did not further increase it. It probably reduced it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Administration is putting together a plan for blocking Soviet penetration of the Middle East...and tomorrow it will be outlined by President Eisenhower before a joint session of Congress. David Burnham once gave a piece of sound advice. "Make big plans," he said. "Little plans have no magic to stir men's blood." And he might have added, they usually don't work. Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 7, 1957

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles today urged Congress to approve President Eisenhower's Middle East program. Mr. Dulles told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the President's request for broad military and economic authority is designed "to stop World War Three before it starts." Russia may be deterred from aggression, he said, if it realizes the attack would be met, "if need be, by the armed forces of the United States." Dulles said the Administration also recognizes the possibility of subversion... and the danger that economic conditions in a Middle East country "might make Communism seem an attractive choice." He said subversion is to be combatted through economic aid, plus the promise of American military assistance in case of attack. Congressional rejection of the Eisenhower plan, he warned, would be "quite disastrous." In answer to questions... put to him by members of the House committee... Dulles said the United States will not invade any country, in order to overthrow its Communist government. He conceded the Eisenhower program may "temporarily, at least" increase East-West tension. He predicted that the Arab states... including Egypt and Syria... ultimately will accept the program "when they appreciate its purpose." And that purpose, he said, is peace and the freedom and independence of the countries of the Middle East. Chairman Gordon of the Foreign Affairs Committee called Mr. Dulles' testimony "most impressive"... and he said the House may approve the program "sooner than expected."

Senate Republican Leader Knowland expressed confidence the proposals will be enacted---possibly in modified form. There is some sentiment, he said, for placing a time limit on any new authority granted the President. Mr. Knowland announced tonight that he will not be a candidate for re-election to the Senate in 1958. There is speculation that he may want to run for governor of California.

President Eisenhower today named former Representative James P. Richards of South Carolina to head a special mission to the Middle East to explain the new Administration policy. Richards is a Democrat... and did not seek re-election in November. He was chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee in the last Congress. In addition to going to the Middle East, Richards will serve as special assistant to the President on Middle East matters. And he will work with government officials in helping to put the new program into effect. He was sworn in this afternoon with the rank of ambassador.

The White House today announced that King Saud of Arabia will visit Washington the end of this month. The announcement said King Saud and President Eisenhower will discuss problems "of mutual interest to their two countries." News Secretary Hagerty says the visit has been under consideration for several months.

Soviet and East German officials today reached agreement... in principle... for the stationing of Russian troops in East Germany. Arrangements governing both location and movement of Soviet forces in East Germany are to be negotiated in later talks. Russia promises to help the East Germans economically and give them control over air traffic in and out of Berlin. The agreement... signed in Moscow after a week of negotiation... calls for creation of a "zone of limited armament" along the frontier between East and West Germany. And it says again that a prime obstacle to German unification is the membership of West Germany in the North Atlantic Pact.

Chinese Communist premier Chou En-lai arrived in Moscow today. At the airport, he hailed the "unbreakable" friendship between Moscow and Peiping... and claimed that the new Eisenhower policy had... in his words... "already aroused the disapproval of peace-loving states." Chou is stopping off in Moscow on his way to Warsaw and Budapest. Reportedly, he will try to smooth relations between the Communist governments of Poland and Hungary and the Kremlin. He is due back in Moscow around the middle of next week.

Here in New York today, Secretary General Hammarskjold proposed the creation of a special United Nations committee to investigate the Hungarian situation. This committee, Hammarskjold said, should have "broad powers", because of the refusal of both Russia and the puppet Hungarian government to cooperate with the fact-finding group set up by earlier U.N. resolutions. The secretary general made no reference to the reported presence in Budapest of four United Nations representatives looking into Hungary's relief needs. The United States immediately followed up Hammarskjold's recommendation. It proposed that a five-nation committee be appointed to make such an investigation, particularly among the refugees who have left Hungary. Hammarskjold would continue to press for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Hungary... and the admission of United Nations observers.

~~Two proposals for curbing filibusters were introduced today in the United States Senate. Republican Senator Knowland introduced a bill~~

Today... in the General Assembly... the Republic of Korea... called for abolition of the frontier dividing North and South Korea. It also demanded the withdrawal of Russian and Chinese Communist forces it said have reinforced the North Korean army... and urged the holding of "genuinely free elections" in North Korea.

Edward R. Murrow: January 7, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

All the world's capitals, our own included, show signs of being somewhat baffled by President Eisenhower's highly dramatized declaration on the Middle East. The capitals that want to like it, aren't quite sure what it means, and the ones that don't like it, also aren't sure, though for different reasons.

Our friends and allies are afraid we are simply saying something belatedly, and may leave it at that. They do want us to assume responsibility, but wish we would say concretely what we intend to do, now that we are more responsible. At present our objective is negative, it is to prevent something that may be remote, namely the extension of communist power in the region through overt aggression. Our friends abroad wish for a positive policy which would meet the vividly real danger of infiltration and subversion.

On the other hand, the communists don't believe we are saying what we really want, and that our quite limited purpose is simply a cloak for imperial power. So fault is found with us for saying and wanting both too little and too much. And this is due in part to our obscurity. We do not make it clear what we want. Naturally many in Washington fear that the Administration itself does not know.

One mistake in our presentation may be in speaking loosely about filling a vacuum of power in the Middle East. A vacuum is an emptiness. The Middle East certainly is not empty of power. On the contrary it is a high-pressure area. That is why it is so dangerous. It is true that some of the power there has been eliminated. The British and French exerted power in their attack on Egypt, then their power was erased partly by our own action. Now we are trying to replace that power ourselves. But that cannot be correctly called filling a vacuum.

But a greater weakness in presenting our case is that President Eisenhower and the State Department have not really defined a policy. They have done half of it. A policy consists of two parts, a purpose or idea, and then the execution of the purpose or idea. A government presumably has certain concepts that it intends to translate into realities. It states these ideas to itself, or the world, and then it provides for their execution.

As to execution, there are in general two ways to implement a policy, one is economic, one military. President Eisenhower has asserted that we are prepared to implement our policy in both ways. And Secretary Dulles repeated the assertion at the open hearings of the House Foreign Affairs Committee today. But neither of them stated in positive terms what the policy is. And that accounts for some of the disagreement in the world over what we are doing. That is why our allies think we are doing too little, and our communist rivals say we are doing too much.

A positive rather than a negative policy in the Middle East would have to deal thoroughly with the three basic problems that make the region politically volcanic. One is absence of peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. One is the rehabilitation of refugees. And one is water power. We do not know how Washington plans to deal with any of them. We have no inkling how much the Administration will ask Israel to give up to placate the Arabs, and how much it will insist on Israel receiving in elementary justice. We do not know the final formula for solving the refugee problem, though we know pretty well that if it had been handled generously and in good time, the present crisis might never have become acute. A great deal is now being said about military power and hardly a word about water power. But water power really has far more to do with the future prosperity and stability of the region than planes, tanks and guns. Adequate water power alone can take care of the rapidly growing population and provide both food and employment as needed.

To point out the elements of a positive policy is not to decry the value of preventing aggression. Obviously there must be the two ways of viewing the Middle East. One is preventive, one is creative. Disaster, if it threatens, must be averted if the good things of life are to be created. But solemn assurances of prevention are not of themselves creative. And the Middle East stands in need of much more than the assurances that communist aggression is to be prevented, such as it got from President Eisenhower on Saturday and Secretary Dulles today. The promise to use economic and military power to stop communist aggression is half a policy, but [redacted] the other half has not yet been divulged.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The fix the world is in calls for statesmanship, in the best sense of the word. James Thurber once asked his father, "Poppa, what's the difference between a statesman and a politician?" The elder Thurber thought a moment and said, "The statesman is a politician in a position to get us all into trouble... and, if we're lucky, out of it."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the News:

Secretary of State Dulles today urged Congress to approve President Eisenhower's Middle East program. Mr. Dulles told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the President's request for broad military and economic authority is designed "to stop World War Three before it starts." Russia may be deterred from aggression he said, if it realizes the attack would be met, "if need be, by the armed forces of the United States." Dulles said the Administration also recognizes the possibility of subversion..and the danger that economic conditions in a Middle East country "might make Communism seem an attractive choice." He said subversion is to be combatted through economic aid, plus the promise of American military assistance in case of attack. Congressional rejection of the Eisenhower plan, he warned, would be "quite disastrous." In answer to questions put to him by members of the House committee..Dulles said the United States will not invade any country, in order to overthrow its Communist government. He conceded the Eisenhower program may "temporarily, at least" increase East-West tension. He predicted that the Arab states.. including Egypt and Syria..u.timately will accept the program "when they appreciate its purpose." And that purpose, he said, is peace and the freedom and independence of the countries of the Middle East. Chairman Gordon of the Foreign Affairs Committee called Mr. Dulles' testimony " most impressive" and he said the House may approve the program "sooner than expected."

Senate Republican Leader Knowland expressed confidence the proposals will be enacted--possibly in modified form. There is some sentiment, he said, for placing a time limit on any new authority granted the President. Mr. Knowland announced tonight that he will not be a candidate for re-election to the Senate in 1958. There is speculation that he may want to run for governor of California.

President Eisenhower today named former Representative James P. Richards of South Carolina to head a special mission to the Middle East to explain the new Administration policy. Richards is a Democrat..and did not seek re-election in November. He was chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee in the last Congress. In addition to going to the Middle East, Richards will serve as special assistant to the President on Middle East matters. And he will work with government officials in helping to put the new program into effect. He was sworn in this afternoon with the rank of ambassador.

The White House today announced that King Saud of Arabia will visit Washington the end of thismonth. The announcement said Kind Saud and President Eisenhower will discuss problems "of mutual interest to their two countries." News Secretary Hagerty says the visit has been under consideration for several months.

Soviet and East German officials today reached agreement..in principle..for the stationing of Russian troops in East Germany. Arrangements governing both location and movement of Soviet forces nn East Germany are to be negotiated in later talks. Russia promises to help the East Germans economically and give them control over air traffic in and out of Berlin. The agreement..signed in Moscow after a week of negotiation calls for creation of a "zone of limited armament" along the frontier between East and West Germany. And it says again that a prime obstacle to German unification is the membership of West Germany in the North Atlantic Pact.

Chinese Cocmunist premier Chou En-lai arrived in Moscow today. At the airport, he hailed the "unbreakable" friendship between Moscow and Peiping..and claimed that the new Eisenhower policy had..in his words.."already aroused the disapproval of peace-loving states." Chou is stopping off in Moscow on his way to Warsaw and Budapest. Reportedly, he will try to smooth relations between the Communist governments of Poland and Hungary and the Kremlin. He is due back in Moscow around the middle of next week.

Here in New York today, Secretary General Hammarskjold proposed the creation of a special United Nations committee to investigate the Hungarian situation. This committee, Hammarskjold said, should have "broad powers", because of the refusal of both Russua and the puppet Hungarian government to cooperate with the Fact finding group set up by earlier U.N. resolutions. The secretary general made no reference to the reported presence in Budapest of four United Nations representatives looking into Hungary's relief needs. The United States immediately followed up Hammarskjold's recommendation. It proposed that a five-nation committee be appointed to make such an investigation, particularly among the refugees who have left Hungary. Hammarskjold would continue to press for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Hungary and the admission of United Nations observers.

Today in the General assembly, the Republic of Korea called for the abolition of the frontier dividing North and South Korea. It also demanded the withdrawal of Russian and Chinese Communist forces it said have reinforced the North Korean army and urged the holding of "genuinely free elections" in North Korea.

All the world's capitals, our own included, show signs of being somewhat baffled by President Eisenhower's highly dramatized declaration on the Middle East. The capitals that want to like it, aren't quite sure what it means, and the ones that don't like it, also aren't sure, though for different reasons.

Our friends and allies are afraid we are simply saying something belatedly and may leave it at that. They do want us to assume responsibility, but wish we would say concretely what we intend to do, now that we are more responsible. At present our objective is negative, it is to prevent something that may be remote, namely the extensoon of Communist power in the region through overt aggression. Our friends abroad wish for a positive policy which would meet the vividly real danger of infiltration and subversion.

On the other hand, the Communists don't believe we are saying what we really want, and that our quite limited purpose is simply a cloak for imperial power. So fault is found with us for saying and wanting both too little and too much. And this is due in part to our obscurity. We do not make it clear what we want. Naturally many in Washington fear that the Administration itself does not know.

One mistake in our presentation may be in speaking loosely about filling a vacuum of power in the Middle East. A vacuum is an emptiness. The Middle East certainly is not empty of power. On the contraty it is a high-pressure area. That is why it is so dangerous. It is true that some of the power there has been eliminated. The British and French exerted power in their attack on Egypt, then their power was erased partly by our own action. Now we are trying to replace that power ourselves. But that cannot be correctly called filling a vacuun.

But a greater weakness in presenting our case is that President Eisenhower and the State Department have not really defined a policy. They have done half of it. A policy consists of twy parts, a purpose or idea, and then the execution of the purpose or idea. A government presumably has certain concepts that it intends to translate into realities. It states these ideas to itself, or the world, and then it provides for their execution.

As to execution, there are in general two ways to implement a policy, one is economic, one military. President Eisenhower has asserted that we are prepared to implement our policy in both ways. And Secretary Dulles repeated the assertion at the open hearings of the House Foreign Affairs Committee today. But neither of them stated in positive terms what the policy is. And that accounts for some of the disagreement in the world over what we are doing. That is why our allies think we are doing too little, and our communist rivals say we are doing too much.

A positive rather than a negative policyin the Middle East would have to deal thoroughly with the three basic problems that make the region politically volcanic. One is absence of peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. One is the rehabilitation of refugees. And one is water power. We do not know how Washington plans to deal with any of them. We have no inkling how much the Administration will ask Israel to give up to placate the Arabs, and how much it will insist on Israel receiving in elementary justice. We do not know the final formula for solving the refugee problem, though we know pretty well that if it had been handled generously and in good time, the present crisis might never have become acute. A great deal is now geing said about military power and hardly a word about water power. But water power really has far more to do with the future prosperity and stability of the region than planes, tanks and guns. Adequate water power alone can take care of the rapidly growing population and provide both food and employment as needed.

To point out the elements of a positive policy is not to decry the value of preventing aggression. Obviously there must be the two ways of viewing the Middle East. One is preventive, one is creative. Disaster, if it threatens, must be averted. if the good things of life are to be created. But solemn assurances of prevention are not of themselves creative. And the Middle ast stands in need of much more than the assurances that communist aggression is to be prevented, such as it got from President Eisenhower on Saturday and Secretary Dulles today. The promise to use economic and military power to stop communist aggression is half a policy, but the other half has not yet been divulged.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for today, but first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN"

MURROW: The fix the world is in calls for statesmanship, in the best sense of the word. James Thurber once asked his father, "Poppa, what's the difference between a statesman and a politician?" The elder Thurber thought a moment and said, "The statesman is a politician in a position to get us all into trouble..and, if we're lucky, out of it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 8, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that business and excise taxes... amounting to about 3-billion dollars in revenue... must be continued for another year. The law providing these taxes is due to expire on April first. It is second on the list of "priority" legislation drawn up by the President for the 85th Congress. First on that list... announced today... is the resolution authorizing his new Middle East policy. A four-year school construction program is also high up on the list... so is civil rights.

Twenty-eight Democratic congressmen announced a legislative program of their own today. In addition to more schools and more civil rights, it calls for tax relief for small business and an increase in the minimum wage.

In the Senate, the Democratic steering committee gave Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts a seat on the Foreign Relations Committee. Kennedy edged out Senator Kefauver, who also wanted a seat on that committee. Senator Morse of Oregon was transferred from the Banking Committee to the Labor Committee.

Secretary of State Dulles today continued his testimony on the Administration's new Middle East policy before the House Foreign Affairs Committee---but behind closed doors. Dulles said this was necessary because an explanation of the program for stopping Soviet penetration in the area involves security. A member of the committee... Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio... walked out of the meeting on grounds that secrecy was unnecessary. Democratic Representative Gordon, the committee chairman, agreed with Mr. Dulles. The committee also heard testimony today from Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

Thirteen ships held up in the Suez Canal by the November hostilities today reached Port Said and the open Mediterranean. The ships... flying the flags of seven nations... were part of a southbound convoy. This week, Egyptian authorities had them turn about and head for Port Said.

Britain and France are reported agreed on a plan for holding indirect talks with Egypt... looking toward a settlement of the canal controversy. Secretary General Hammarskjold would serve as intermediary. British and French negotiators would not meet the representatives of Egypt face to face until a basis for settlement had been achieved. Egypt said again tonight that it will not enter into direct negotiations with Britain and France.

France today said it has received "uniquivocal assurances" from Hammarskjold that British and French ships will be allowed to use the canal, once it is cleared. There have been reports that Egypt might bar British and French shipping... until such time as Israeli forces evacuate the Gaza Strip. Yesterday, the British Foreign Office charged that if Egypt took such action, it would be a breach of the Convention of 1888, guaranteeing free navigation through the canal.

In Washington today, the State Department said the canal should be reopened with "complete freedom of transit for all countries." The department said it has no knowledge of the purported Egyptian position.

Unofficial reports say Israel wants assurance it will be able to use the canal... and that it is making this assurance a condition for the further withdrawal of Israeli troops in the Sinai.

Today... in Syria... 47 persons went on trial, on charges of plotting the overthrow of the government. Eighteen of the defendants... including several members of the Syrian parliament... are being tried in absentia. They are accused of trying to set up a pro-Iraqi regime.

Britain today formally protested what it called the "intrusion" of the Aden protectorate, by Yemen forces. The British note said troops from the Arab kingdom had occupied a position inside the Aden frontier. Yesterday, Yemen accused Britain of invading its territory. The Yemen legation in Bonn said today, that Yemen may (in its words) "be forced to call on volunteers from all over the world to fight the British aggression."

In Moscow, the Communist leaders of Russia and East Germany today issued a joint policy statement... calling for "unity of views and action, on the fundamental questions of building socialism." In what may have been a reference to Yugoslavia, it called on Communist parties "to rebuff resolutely mum all attempts to revise the principles of Marxism-Leninism." The East-German-Soviet policy statement spoke of the "onslaught of imperialist reaction"... calling it "a serious threat to the peace and security of the peoples of Poland, France and other European states." And it may be significant that the only East European country named was Poland.

In Washington today, the State Department said "sympathetic consideration" is being given to a Polish request for economic talks. The department emphasized, however, that no "firm" decision has been reached.

The United Nations General Assembly will meet tomorrow... in special session... to take new action on Hungary. The United States today submitted a resolution calling for establishment of a five-nation committee to investigate the Hungarian situation. The resolution already has the support of more than 20 countries, including Britain and France. It asks the General Assembly to reaffirm all its previous actions... and it calls on Russia and Hungary to cooperate, "in particular, to permit the committee and its staff to enter the territory of Hungary, and to travel freely therein." The committee would also gather evidence from Hungarian refugees.

The United States today announced that TEN Hungarian refugees have been returned to Austria. The Immigration Service said eight of them... including a family of five... were deported for making "misrepresentations" in their applications for admission to this country. The OTHER TWO refugees WERE returned to Austria on THEIR own request.

A report from Spain says the head of the Falange Party has submitted his resignation from the Franco cabinet... thus precipitating a government crisis. The report is not officially confirmed.

Edward R. Murrow: January 8, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

It may be impossible to turn the clock back in the satellites and restore simon-pure Stalinism. The Hungarian revolution, though LARGELY crushed, may have saved the subject-peoples in the Soviet system from complete suppression of freedom. That is the hope which those closely following the events in Eastern Europe have been voicing. But the optimists are not so sure today.

The ponderous communique issued in Moscow over the conference with the East German puppet leaders gave not a hint of the liberality Moscow has shown to Poland. And Bonn hears that the East Germans left for home with orders to purge universities and labor unions of all disloyal factions. Apparently the Kremlin wants the utmost done to avert a revolutionary explosion like those in Warsaw and Budapest. And if things should go badly for the Russians in Poland they don't want sympathizers in East Germany at liberty to go into action.

The only outstanding generosity shown East Germany by the Kremlin was an $85,000,000 foreign currency loan. This is to buy coal, timber and materials from the West to make up for the interrupted flow of supplies from Poland. But the loan was a necessity, a way of keeping down revolt, not a sign of better days.

Clearly the Soviet Union is shoring up its empire. The three still submissive satellites -- Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria -- sent delegates to meet with Khrushchev in Budapest ~~over the past week end.~~ LAST WEEK. They joined hands with the Hungarian puppet premier Kadar in welcoming back what may not be pure Stalinism, but certainly looks uncommonly like it. Moscow is no longer espousing the doctrine that there can be many roads to socialism. It ~~is not advertising its tolerance or claiming to have a mature understanding of the need for more freedom by members of the family.~~ ~~Nothing was done in Budapest to promote the formation of a coalition government including social democrats and small peasants.~~ ~~By now~~ The overthrown Premier Nagy, whom Moscow only recently was calling simply weak, is being harshly denounced for treason. The Hungarian uprising is attributed to Western imperialists. And the Eisenhower doctrine is drawing forth all the repulsive verbiage of the Stalin era.

Unpublished reports from Moscow stress that the men in the Kremlin are badly frightened over the possibility of further trouble in Poland. If that trouble should come, it would shake East Germany like an earthquake. A clash between the Polish and Soviet armies would be the start of a war that could lead anywhere - universal war included. If East Germany rose up, West Germany would not be able to keep out. And a clash between the Red Army and the NATO forces in West Germany might result.

The fears of the Kremlin account for the contradiction in Soviet policy. It is being quietly generous to Poland and forbiddingly stern to the other satellites. The Poles so far are being left fairly free. They can negotiate with the West on non-political subjects. They control the position and use made of the Soviet forces stationed on their soil under the Warsaw Pact.

But Hungary has been given no control over the Red Army forces in the country and has only a promise that there will be negotiations about it in time. The Soviet tanks, that have come and gone from Budapest more than once in recent days, are back again, keeping guard over the parliament building.

If Moscow is frightened about dangers in Poland, let it be said that Washington is, too. Actually there is an anomaly in Washington. All the open concern is over the Middle East, but far greater concern is felt over Eastern Europe. Washington wants it made clear that President Eisenhower and the American people are not pacifists, so the Eisenhower doctrine does have a bearing on the crisis in Eastern Europe. If Moscow understands there are circumstances under which we would fight, it is expected to be more careful not to go too far in crushing Poland. But Washington thinks it just as important to assure the Kremlin that we are not stirring up revolt in the satellites or trying to subvert governments on the Russian border.

It is announced that negotiations for American economic aid to Poland are to begin in two weeks. The Polish government asked for them three months ago and President Eisenhower promised aid two-and-a-half months ago. The delay has been partly due to technical reasons. Poland wants some of our surplus agricultural products, which cannot be supplied so long as Poland counts as a satellite. But another reason for the delay is that we do not wish to appear to be pressing our help on the Poles, which would make Moscow highly suspicious. Poland wants more than agricultural surpluses. It seeks to re-open its consulates, and is specially anxious to have its assets in this country unfrozen. It also will ask to have dock space again in New York for the liner Batory. With a free and friendly Poland all this should be possible. But Washington has to be careful that Poland is not so warmly treated that the Kremlin gets into a panic.

Jean — George Bryan

Word for Today

Soviet leaders are worried over the possibility of a new upheaval in Poland. A revolt in Poland could set off a chain-reaction [redacted] leading to global war. It could also spell the downfall of the Soviet empire. Poland has always posed a problem for the rulers of Russia. Bismarck said... nearly a hundred years ago... "Russia seems to be impregnable, but she is not. Poland is her weak spot."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that business and excise taxes..amounting to about 3-billion dollars in revenue..must be continued for another year. The law providing these taxes is due to expire on April first. It is second on the list of "priority" legislation drawn up by the President for the 85th Congress. First on that list..announced today..is the resolution authorizing his new Middle East policy. A four-year school construction program is also high up on the list...so is civil rights.

Twenty-eight Democratic congressmen announced a legislative program of their own today. In addition to more schools and more civil rights, it calls for tax relief for small business and an increase in the minimum wage.

In the Senate, the Democratic steering committee gave Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts a seat on the Foreign Relations Committee. Kennedy edged out Senator Kefauver, who also wanted a seat on that committee. Senator Morse of Oregon was transferred from the Banking Committee to the Labor Committee.

Secretary of State Dulles today continued his testimony on the Administration' new Middle East policy before the House Foreign Affairs Committee -- but behind colsed doors. Dulles said this was necessary because an explanation of the program for stopping Soviet penetration in the area involves security. A member of the committee..Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio..walked out of the meeting on grounds that secrecy was unnecessary. Democratic Representative Gordon, the committee chairman, agreed with Mr. Dulles. The committee also heard testimony today from Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

Thirteen ships, held up in the Suez Canal by the November hostilities today reached Port Said and the open Mediterranean. The ships..flying the flags of seven nations. ..were part of a southbound convoy. This week, Egyptian authroities had them turn about and head for Port Said.

Today in Syria, 47 persons went on trial on charges of plotting the overthrow of the government. Eighteen of the defendants, including several members of the Syrian parliament, are being tried in absentia. They are accused of trying to set up a pro-Iraqi regime.

Britain today formally protested what it called the "intrusion" of the Aden protectorate by Yemen forces. The British note said troops from the Arab kingdom had occupied a position inside the Adan frontier. Yesterday, Yemen accused Britain of invading its territory. The Yemen legation in Bonn said today that Yemen may ((in its words) "be forced to call on volunteers from all over the world to fight the British aggression."

In Moscow the Communist leaders of Russia and East Germany today issued a joint policy statement calling for "unity of views and action on the fundamental questions of building socialism." In what may have been a reference to Yugoslavia, it called on Communist parties "to rebuff resolutely all attempts to revise the principles of Marxism-Leninism." The East-German-Soviet policy statement spoke of the "onslaught of imperialist reaction"..calling it "a serious threat to the peace and security of the peoples of Poland, France and other European states." And it may be significant that the only East European country named was Poland.

In Washington today, the State Department said "sympathetic consideration" is being given to a Polish request for economic talks. The Department emphasized, however, that nor "firm" decision has been reached.

The United Nations General Assembly will meet tomorrow..is a special session ..to take new action in Hungary. The United States today submitted a resolution calling for establishment of a five-nation committee to investigate the Hungarian situation. The Resolution already has the support of more than 20 countries, including Britain and France. It asks the General Assembly to reaffirm all its previous actions..and it calls on Russia and Hungary to cooperate, "in particular-to permit the committee- and its staff to enter the territory of Hungary and to travel freely therein." The committee would also gather evidence from Hungarian refugees.

The United Staees today announced that ten Hungarian refugees have been returned to Austria. The Immigration Service said eight of them..including a family of five..were deported for making "misrepresentations" in their applications for admission to this country. The other two refugees were returned to Austria on their own request.

A report from Spain says the head of the Falange Party has submitted his resignation from the Franco cabinet..thus precipitating a government crisis. The report is not officially confirmed.

It may be impossible to turn the clock back in the satellites and restore simon-pure Stalinism. The Hungarian revolution, though largely crushed, may have saved the subject-peoples in the Soviet system from complete suppression of freedom. That is the hope which those closely following the events in Eastern Europe have been voicing. But the optimists are not so sure today.

The ponderous communique issued in Moscow over the conference with the East German puppet leaders gave not a hint of the liberality Moscow has shown to Poland. And Bonn hears that the East Germans left for home with orders to purge universities and labor unions of all disloyal factions. Apparently the Kremlin wants the utmost done to avert a revolutionary explosion like those in Warsaw and Budapest. And if things should go badly for the Russians in Poland they don't want sympathizers in East Germany at liberty to go into action.

The only outstanding generosity shown East Germany by the Kremlin was an $85,000,000 foreign currency loan. This is to buy coal, timber and materials from the West to make up for the interrupted flow of supplies from Poland. But the loan was a necessity, a way of keeping down revolt, not a sign of better days.

Clearly the Soviet Union is shoring up its empire. The three still submissive satellites - Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria - sent delegates to meet with Khrushchev in Budapest last week. They joined hands with the Hungarian puppet premier Kadar in welcoming back what may not be pure Stalinism, but certainly looks uncommonly like it. Moscow is no longer espousing the doctrine that there can be many roads to socialism.

The overthrown Premier Nagy, whom Moscow only recently was calling simply weak, is being harshly denounced for treason. The Hungarian uprising is attributed to Western imperialists. And the Eisenhower doctrine is drawing forth all the repulsive verbiage of the Stalin era.

Unpublished reports from Moscow stress that the men in the Kremlin are badly frightened over the possibility of further trouble in Poland. If that trouble should come, it would shake East Germany like an earthquake. A clash between the Polish and Soviet armies would be the start of a war that could lead anywhere--universal war included. If East Germany rose up, West Germany would not be able to keep out. And a clash between the Red Army and the NATO forces in West Germany might result.

The fears of the Kremlin account for the contradiction in Soviet policy . It is being quietly generous to Poland and forbiddingly stern to other satellites.

The Poles so far are being left fairly free. They can negotiate with the West on non-political subjects. They control the position and use made of the Soviet forces stationed on their soil under the Warsaw Pact.

But Hungary has been given no control over the Red Army forces in the country and has only a promise that there will be negotiations about it in time. The Soviet tanks, that have come and gone from Budapest more than once in recent days, are back again, keeping guard over the parliament building.

If Moscow is frightened about dangers in Poland, let it be said that Washington is, too. Actually there is an anomaly in Washington. All the open concern is over the Middle East, but far greater concern is felt over Eastern Europe. Washington wants it made clear that President Eisenhower and the American people are not pacificts, so the Eisenhower doctrine does nave a bearing on the crisis in Eastern Europe. If Moscow understands there are circumstances under which we would fight, it is expected to be more careful not to go too far in crushing Poland. But Washington thinks it just as important to assure the Kremlin that we are not stirring up revolt in the satellites or trying to subvert governments on the Russian border.

It is announced that negotiations for American economic aid to Poland are to begin in two weeks. The Polish government asked for them three months ago and President Eisenhower promised aid two-and-a-half months ago. The delay has been partly due to technical reasons. Poland wants some of our surplus agricultural products, which cannot be supplied so long as Poland counts as a satellite. But another reason for the delay is that we do not wish to appear to be pressing our help on the Poles which would make Moscow highly suspicious. Poland wants more than agrigultural surpluses. It seeks to re-open its consulates, and it specially anxious to have its assets in this country unfrozen. It also will ask to have dock space again in New York for the liner Batory. With a free and friendly Poland all this should be possible. But Washington has to be careful that Polnnd is not so warmly treated that the Kremlin gets into a panic.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN"

MURROW: Soviet leaders are worried over the possibility of a new upheaval in Poland. A revolt in Poland could set off a chain reaction leading to global war. It could also spell the downfall of the Soviet empire. Poland has always posed a problem for the rulers of Russia. Bismarck said, nearly a hundred years ago."Russia seems to be impregnable, but she is not. Poland is her weak spot." [illegible] a [illegible] Goodnight and goodluck. [illegible]

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 9, 1957

This is the news:

Sir Anthony Eden today resigned as British prime minister after serving in that office for 21 months. / For a first-hand report on the Eden resignation, we switch now to my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, in London.

(Tape runs 4:05
(Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

Hugh Gaitskell, the British Labour leader to whom Kendrick referred, has issued a statement in Cambridge, Massachusetts... calling for a general election. / Gaitskell said he was sorry Eden had not regained his health---then added, "But as the whole cabinet has publicly identified themselves completely with the foreign policy pursued by the late government, I consider that there ought now to be a general election, so that the country can have an opportunity of choosing a new government."

Gaitskell declined to predict the outcome of such an election, if one were held.

In Paris, French officials insisted the Eden resignation will not affect the longevity of the Mollet government.

The Socialist Party... in West Germany... claimed Eden's action will sweep the Labourites back into power. Moscow said the real reason for Eden's retirement is what it called "the Anglo-French misadventure in Egypt, as well as announcement of the so-called Eisenhower doctrine." The doctrine, it said, "further undermines the already weakened position of British imperialism in the Middle East."

In Washington, the White House issued a statement... in which President Eisenhower expressed hope Eden will soon recover, so that he may enjoy many useful years of happiness. He referred to Eden as "a staunch believer in the need for unity among the community of free nations." Mr. Eisenhower also called him "an old and good friend".

A proposed substitute for President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution was attacked today by Secretary of State Dulles. Dulles told the House

Foreign Affairs Committee the new proposal... as outlined by Speaker Rayburn... might require American use of force against attacks carried out by non-Communist countries, such as the recent Anglo-French and Israeli actions against Egypt. Dulles said the substitute also fails to take into account the desires of the Middle East countries themselves. He predicted it would be "bitterly resented". The entire substitute proposal is written in only 34 words. It says, "The United States regards as vital to her interest the preservation of the independence and integrity of the states of the Middle East... and, if necessary, will use her armed force to that end." This substutute proposal has been circulated among Democrats in Congress, but the author's identity has not been announced. House Speaker Rayburn passed the document around... but, so far, he has not endorsed it. The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee... Democratic Representative Gordon of Illinois... says the substitute proposal hit him "like a bomb out of the sky." He says he doesn't think the Eisenhower version will be radically changed.

President Eisenhower went over his State of the Union message today with members of his cabinet. The reading of that message... by the President tomorrow before a joint session of Congress... will be carried by CBS Radio at 12:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. Mr. Eisenhower reportedly will ask Congress for a record 3-billion dollars for the Welfare Department. Most of the increase would go to help build more schools. News Secretary Hagerty said today that all news media will be barred, when the President takes his oath of office in the White House on Sunday, January 20th. This does not refer, of course, to the public inaugural ceremony that will take place in Washington on the following day.

The Senate Democratic leader... Lyndon Johnson... joined Republican Senate Leader Knowland today in sponsoring a compromise proposal for curbing filibusters. The proposal... introduced originally by Knowland... would make it possible for a vote of two-thirds of the senators present to cut off debate. Under present rules, a vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership is required to ~~impose cloture~~ stop debate.

Today... in Atlanta, Georgia... a group of Negro ministers tried to test the Georgia law requiring segregated seating on city buses. When the Negroes sat in seats usually reserved for whites, the bus was taken off its run, purportedly because of mechanical failure. There was no violence. But tonight Governor Griffin put the state militia on a standby basis.

In the United Nations today, American Ambassador Lodge asked the General Assembly to approve a resolution... setting up a five-nation "watch-dog committee" to investigate the Hungarian situation. Lodge called ~~the~~ Russian action ignoring earlier United Nations resolutions on Hungary "morally indefensible". The new resolution calls for ~~[illegible]~~ collecting of evidence "wherever it is available"... and this is reference to the fact that evidence will be gathered from refugees from Hungary.

The State Department said today that the United States has expressed official concern to President Nasser, over reports telling of the mistreatment of Egyptian Jews. The American ambassador to Egypt, it said, has urged adoption of "moderate policies"

Israel today said Arab raiders crossed the frontier during the night and blew up a water pipeline near Beersheba. No casualties were reported.

Britain charged today that Yemen troops are continuing to attack villages in the British protectorate of Aden. Yemen, it said, is "encouraging these attacks to divert attention from increasing unrest at home." The Cairo radio says Yemen is appealing to the United Nations to stop what it calls "British aggression" against Yemen.

In Indonesia today, the largest Moslem party resigned from the government. The party was represented in the government by five ministers, and has been demanding removal of the premier. His government already is faced with open revolt in Sumatra... and there is some question whether it can survive. So far, in this struggle, President Sukarno has followed a neutral policy.

In Strasbourg, the European Consultative Assembly today unanimously approved plans for setting up a mutual atomic development program. Treaties to implement the program... called Euratom... are still to be written and approved. The Assembly also approved the idea of a common Western European market.

Word for Today

Sir Anthony Eden ~~made an enviable reputation as British foreign secretary. He~~ was against the appeasement policies of the Chamberlain government before the war... and he was, for years, the heir apparent to ~~the Minister~~ Churchill in the Conservative Party. But as prime minister, Eden's Record ~~was disappointing, when~~ recalling Talleyrand's observation, that "the reputation of a man is like his shadow, gigantic when it precedes him... and pigmy in its proportions, when it follows."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW NEWS -

wednesday, january 9, 1957
7L45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: This is the news. Sir Anthony Eden today resigned as British Prime Minister after serving in that office for 21 months. For a first hand report on the Eden resignation, we switch now to my colleague, Alexander Kendrick in London.

KENDRICK: The second shortest British Premiership of the century, 21 months, came to an end a few minutes before Big Ben struck seven o'clock this evening, and tonight Britain is without a Prime Minister and Sir Anthony Eden is a humble, backbench member of Parliament. He tendered his resignation to Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace in a forty-minute interview and tomorrow the Queen will summon the man who is to be his successor. The odds seem to favor Sir Anthony's Deputy during his recent Jamaica vacation, the Lord Privy Seal Richard A. Butler. Presumably Sir Anthony has so recommended.

All this means that while there will be a change of ministry in this country, there will be no change of government. No election is involved - not yet anyway. And the Conservative Party continues to command its automatic majority in the House of Commons. The Eden resignation may spur Labor in its efforts to force another election, which it has a good chance of winning. On the other hand, Sir Anthony's withdrawal should help unite the Tories who were split three ways over the Suez intervention, so they may come out of the reshuffle stronger than ever.

By chance, the leader of the opposition, Hugh Gaitskell, is visiting the United States when there has been brought about what he repeatedly demanded during the Suez debates, the resignation of Prime Minister Eden.

Four reputable physicians have certified that Sir Anthony's health was giving them cause for anxiety, and this is the official reason given for the resignation. This proves, if anything, that appearances are deceitful. When Sir Anthony and Lady Eden left London by train on Tuesday to visit Sandringham Castle, where the Queen was staying, the Prime Minister never looked better. He still had some of his West Indies tan and he smiled and waved his hand to crowds at the station. He carried a dispatch case with him and it looked like another routine trip to inform the Queen of what was going on. The Prime Minister has an audience with the monarch every week.

Even when they came back from Sandringham, the Edens looked cheerful and relaxed. This afternoon, however, the Queen returned from Sandringham, and the intuition, for which Britons are famous, came into play. She had been scheduled to stay on in the country for three more weeks. The reasoning was that she was coming back to Buckingham Palace in order to receive notice of governmental changes. But if these were of ordinary Cabinet level, she could have given her assent by telephone, as she has done in the past. The only real reason for the Queen to come back to Buckingham Palace was to receive the resignation of the Prime Minister and call in his successor. So, that two hours before the actual resignation, London, especially the city, where financial business is transacted, was filled with rumors that Eden was resigning.

Sir Anthony returned to 10 Downing Street this afternoon, and immediately called a Cabinet meeting. This, too, had been scheduled, but again, there was an unusual circumstance. Not only Cabinet Ministers, but also Ministers of non-Cabinet rank, and, in fact, the Prime Minister's entire entourage was invited. For once, the number of people going into 10 Downing Street was larger than the number of people standing outside. There was no doubt that this was a farewell meeting, and Sir Anthony confirmed it by coming out of his official residence, stepping into a car and driving off to Buckingham Palace.

Again, by British tradition, there was only one reason for him to do so. The prognosticators turned out to be absolutely right. Although medical advice may go down in the history books as the official reason for Sir Anthony's departure, a sixpence will get you ten bob in London tonight, that the Suez misadventure and the ensuing economic crisis into which this country has been plunged were primary factors.

However, Sir Anthony's resignation would seem to foreshadow no drastic change of governmental policy. His successor, whoever he may be, has, as a Cabinet member, already assumed joint responsibility for the Suez failure and, like Sir Anthony, he will have to continue to answer for it.

This is Alexander Kendrick in London; now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 9, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news

Sir Anthony Eden today resigned as British prime minister after serving in that office for 21 months. For a first-hand report on the Eden resignation, we switch now to my colleague, Alexander SKendrick, in London

KENDRICK: The second shortest British Premiership of the century, 21 months, came to an end a few minutes before Big Ben struck seven o'clock this evening, and tonight Britain is without a Prime Minister and Sir Anthony Eden is a humble, backbench member of Parliament. He tendered his resignation to Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace in a forty-minute interview and tomorrow the Queen will summon the man who is to be his successor. The odds seem to favor Sir Anthony's Deputy during his recent Jamaica vacation, the Lord Privy Seal Richard A. Butler, Presumably Sir Anthony has so recommended.

All this means that while there will be a change of ministry in this country, there will be no change of government. No election is involved - not yet anyway. And the Conservative Party continues to command its automatic majority in the House of Commons. The Eden resignation may spur Labor in its efforts to force another election, which it has a good chance of winning. On the other hand, Sir Anthony's withdrawal should help unite the Tories who were split three ways over the Suez intervention, so they may come out of the reshuffle stronger than ever.

By chance, the leader of the opposition, Hugh Gaitskell, is visiting the United States when there has been brought about what he repeatedly demanded during the Suez debates, the resignation of Prime Minister Eden.

Four reputably physicians have certified that Sir Anthony's health was giving them cause for anxiety, and this is the official reason given for the resignation. This proves, if anything, that appearances are deceitful. When Sir Anthony and Lady Eden left London by train on Tuesday to visit Sandringham Castle, where the Q ueen was staying, the Prime Minister' never looked better. He still had some of his West Indies tan and he smiled and waved his hand to crowds at the station. He carried a dispatch case with him and it looked like another routine trip to inform the Queen of what was going on. The Prime Minister has an audience with the monarch every week.

Even when they came back from Sa dringham, the Edens looked cheerful and relaxed. This afternoon, however, the Queen returned from Sandringham, and the intuition, for which Britons are famous, came into play. She had been scheduled to stay on in the country for three more weeks. The reasoning was that she was coming back to Buckingham Palace in order to receive notice of governmental changes. But if these were of ordinary Cabinet level, she could have given her assent by telephone, as she has done in the past. The only real reason for the Queen to come back to Buckingham Palace was to receive the resignation of the Prime Minister and call in his successor. So, that two hours before the actual resignation, London, especially the city, where financial business is transacted, was filled with rumors that Eden was resigning.

Sir Anthony returned to 10 Downing Street this afternoon, and immediately called a Cabinet meeting. This, too, had been scheduled,' but again, there was an unusual circumstance. Not only Cabinet Ministers, but also Ministers of non-Cabinet rank, and, in fact, the Prime Minister's entire entourage was invited. For once, the number of people going into 10 Downing Street was larger than the number of people standing outside. There was no doubt that this was a farewell meeting, and Sir Anthony confirmed it by coming out of his official residence, stepping into a car and driving off to Buckingham Palace.

Again, by British tradition, there was only one reason for him to do so. The prognosticators turned out to be absolutely right. Although medical advice may go down in the history books as the official reason for Sir Anthony's departure, a sixpence will get you ten bob in London tonight, that the Suez misadventure and the ensuing economic crisis into which this country has been plunged were primary factors.

However, Sir Anthony's resignation would seem to foreshadow no drastic change of governmental policy. His successor, whoever he may be, has, as a Cabinet member, already assumed joint responsibility for the Suez failure and, like Sir Anthony, he will have to continue to answer for it.

This is Alexander Kendrick in London; now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Hugh Gaitskell, the British Labour leader to whom Kendrick referred,' has issued a statement in Cambridge, Massachusetts...calling for a general election. Gaitskell said he was sorry Eden had not regained his health - then added, "But as the whole cabinet has publicly identified themselves completely with the foreign policy pursued by the late government, I consider that there ought now to be a general election, so that the country can have an opportunity of choosing a new government." Gaitskell declined to predict the outcome of such an election, if one were held.

In Paris, French officials insisted the Eden resignation will not affect the longevity of the Mollet government.

The Sovialist Party...in West Germany...claimed Eden's action will sweep the Labourites back into power. Moscow said the real reason for Eden's retirement is what it called "the Anglo-French misadventure in Egypt as well as announcement of the so-called Eisenhower doctrine." The doctrine, it said, "further undermines the already weakened position of British imperialism in the Middle East."

In Washington, the White House issued a statement...in which President Eisenhower expressed hope Eden will soon recover, so that he may enjoy many useful years of happiness. He referred to Eden as "a staunch believer in the need for unity among the community of free nations." Mr. Eisenhower also called him "an old and good friend".

A proposed substitute for President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution was attacked today by Secretary of State Dulles. Dulles told the House Foreign Affairs Committee the new proposal...as outlined by Speaker Rayburn...might require American use of force against attacks carried out by non-Communist countries, such as the recent Anglo-French and Israeli actions against Egypt. Dulles said the substitute also fails to take into account the desires of the Middle East countries themselves. He predicted it would be "bitterly resented". The entire substitute proposal is written in only 34 words. It sayd, "The United States regards as vital to her interest the preservation of the independence and integrity of the states of the Middle East...and, if necessary, will use her armed force to that end." This substitute proposal has been circulated among' Democrats in Congress, but the author's identity has not been announced.' House Speaker Rayburn passed the document around...but, so far, he has not endorsed it. The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee... Democratic Representative Gordon of Illinois...says the substitute proposal hit him "like a bomb out of the sky." He says he doesn't think the Eisenhower version will be radically changed.

President Eisenhower went over his State of the Union message today with members of his cabinet. The reading of that message...by the President tomorrow before a joint session of Congress...will be carried by CBS Radio at 12:30 PM Eastern Standard T me. Mr. Eisenhower reportedly will ask Congress for a record 3-billion dollars for the Welfare Department. Most of the increase would go to help build more schools. News Secretary Hagerty said today that all news media will be barred, when the President takes his oath of office in the White House on Sunday, January 20th. This does not refer, of course, to the public inaugural ceremony that will take place in Washington on the following day.

The Senate Democratic leader...Lyndon Johnson...joined Republican Senate Leader Knowland today in sponsoring a compromise proposal for curbing filibusters. The proposal...introduced originally by Knowland...would make it possible for a vote of two-thirds of the senators present to cut off debate. Under present rules, a vote of two-thirds of the senators present to cut off debate. Under present rules, a vote of two-thirds of the entire SenSenate membership is required to stop debate.

Today...in Atlanta, Georgia...a group of Negro ministers tried to test the Georgia law requiring segregated seating on city buses. When the Negroes sat in seats usually reserved for whites, the bus was taken off its run, purportadly because of mechanical failure. There was no violence. But tonight Governor Griffin put the state militia on a standby basis.

In the United Nations today, American Ambassassador Lodge asked the General Assembly to approve a resolution...setting up a five-nation "watchdog committee" to investigate the Hungarian situation. Lodge called Russian action ignoring earlier United Natidns resolutions on Hungary "morally indefensible". The new resolution calls for collecting of evidence "wherever it is available"...and this is reference to the fact that evidence will be gathered from refugees from Hungary.

The State Department said today that the United States has expressed official concern to President Nasser, over reports telling of the mistreatment of Egyptian Jews. The American ambassador to Egypt, it said, has urged adoption of "moderate policies".

Israel today said Arab raiders crossed the frontier during the night and blew up a water pipeline near Beersheba. No casualties were reported.

Britain charged today that Yemen troops are continuing to attack villages in the British protectorate of Aden. Yemen, it said, is "encouraging these attacks to divert attention from increasing unrest at home." The Cairo radio says Yemen is appealing to the United Nations to stop what it calls "British Aggression" against Yemen.

In Indonesia today, the largest Moslem party resigned from the government. The party was represented in the government by five ministers, and has been demanding removal of the premier. His government already is faced with open revolt in Sumatra...and there is some question whether it can survive. So far, in this struggle, President Sukarno has followed a neutral policy.

In Strasbourg, the European Consultative Assembly today unanimously approved plans for setting up a mutual atomic development program. Treaties to omplement the program...called Euratom...are still to be written and approved. The Assembly also approved the idea of a common Western European market.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Sir Anthony Eden was against the appeasement policies of the Chamberlain government before the war...and he was, for years, the heir apparent to Churchill in the Conservative Party. But as prime minister, Eden's record recalls Talleyrand's observation, that "the reputation of a man is like his shadow, gigantic when it precedes him...and pigmy in its proportions when it follows." Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 10, 1957

This is the news:

Harold Macmillan today succeeded Sir Anthony Eden as British prime minister. And he says he has no intention of calling a general election at this time. In a broadcast tonight to the British people, Macmillan said he is forming a government, which he will "present for the Queen's approval in a few days." He said, "We have a difficult task before us. It will need all our courage and strength... and it will need the sympathy and understanding of everyone in the country, whatever their party or beliefs." Eden resigned yesterday, pleading ill health.

(I should like to discuss this development further in a few minutes).

~~This is the news:~~

Harold Macmillan ~~today succeeded Sir Anthony Eden as British~~ prime minister. And he says he has no intention of calling a general election at this time. Macmillan had been serving in the Conservative government as chancellor of the exchequer. His mother was an American, a native of Indiana. Eden resigned yesterday, pleading ill health. (I ~~should like to discuss this development further in a few minutes~~).

President Eisenhower reported to Congress today on the state of the union. Nineteen fifty-seven, he said, finds the country enjoying "an unprecedented peak" of prosperity. But because the danger of inflation "is always present", he asked business and labor to exert self-discipline in their wage and price policies. Mr. Eisenhower said "the long slide" in farm income has been halted. But ways must be found, he said, to give farm families a fuller share of the good times.

→

(Specific farm proposals will be made in the budget message that goes to Congress next week). The President emphasized the importance of conserving water... which he said "is rapidly becoming our most precious natural resource." Regarding education, he said high priority should be given the school construction bill. "I am hopeful," he said, "that this program can be enacted on its own merits... uncomplicated by provisions dealing with the complex problems of integration." And he called again for passage of his civil rights program. ~~"I urge the people in all sections of the country," he said, "to approach the problems of integration with calm and reason, with mutual understanding and goodwill... and in the American tradition of deep respect for the orderly processes of law."~~

The President said "efficient" financial institutions are essential for the stable economic growth of the country. And he asked Congress to authorize creation of a commission "to conduct a broad national inquiry into the nature, performance and adequacy of our financial system." On the subject of Russia, Mr. Eisenhower said the existence of "a strongly armed imperialistic dictatorship" poses a continuing threat. He warned that America must not revert to isolationism. "We must be joined,"

he said, "by the capability and resolution of nations that have proved themselves dependable defenders of freedom. Isolation from them invites war." ~~The President said the United States must be militarily strong...more efficient weapons are being constantly created. "But we must not delude ourselves," he said, "that safety necessarily increases as expenditures go up." Any program that endangers our economy could defeat us."~~

Regarding disarmament, Mr. Eisenhower again argued for "open skies" inspection. And he went further. "We are willing," he said, "to enter into any reliable agreement which would reverse the trend toward ever more devastating nuclear weapons... and make feasible a lower level of armaments." He proposed full United States participation in the International Atomic Energy Agency. The President said appropriations for the United States Information Agency should be increased... and that provision must be made for the admission of more refugees from Hungary. He again asked Congress to approve his program for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. "Through it," he said, "we hope to assist in establishing a climate in which constructive and long-term solutions to basic problems of the area may be sought."

Mr. Eisenhower delivered the message in person. And members of Congress found little in it to provoke controversy or applause. ~~Senate Republican Leader Knowland called it "a thoughtful, forthright and constructive State of the Union speech." House Speaker Rayburn termed it "one of those kind of usual things."~~

Former Secretary of State Acheson testified today on President Eisenhower's new Middle East program. Acheson told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the proposals seem... to him... "shadowy and vague". He said they "leave untouched great areas in need of policy", and he proposed a substitute program that would attempt to solve the Suez Canal problem and end the conflict between Israel and the Arab States. Acheson suggested that clearing of the canal be stopped until Egypt agrees to a system of "fair management and control"... and that Arab and Israeli leaders be put on notice that the United States will use force, if necessary, to stop the border hostilities. He also proposed a larger economic aid program for all under-developed countries---not just those in the Middle East. He said the testimony by Secretary Dulles that Mr. Eisenhower would decide whether a Soviet aggression warranted all-out attack on Russia "sounds perilously like another approach to the brink."

The government of Syria declared today that maintenance of peace and security in the Middle East is "solely" the responsibility of the peoples of the area. It said, "No international Communist threat against the safety and independence of Syria exists." But, at the same time, it welcomed President Eisenhower's statement that America supports the independence of all Middle East countries.

Today in Tel Aviv, the United Nations commander... General Burns... said Israeli troops are not withdrawing from the Tiran Straits, guarding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba... although they are continuing their withdrawal elsewhere in the Sinai Peninsula.

At United Nations headquarters... here in New York... Jordan today accused Israel of massing troops along the Jordanian frontier. And it asked Secretary General Hammarskjold to investigate. ISRAEL PROMPTLY DENIED THE CHARGE.

The United Nations General Assembly voted today to create a five-nation committee to investigate the Hungarian situation. The vote was 59 to 8, with 10 abstentions. All eight votes against the proposal were cast by the Soviet bloc. Tunisia, Australia, Uruguay, Denmark and Ceylon have agreed to serve on the investigating committee, which (until it is permitted to enter Hungary) will take the testimony of Hungarian refugees.

In Atlanta, Georgia, today five Negro ministers were arrested on charges of violating the segregation laws. Yesterday they rode a city bus... sitting in seats normally used by whites. All bus service in Montgomery, Alabama has been suspended after four Negro churches were bombed during the night. The homes of two anti-segregationist leaders were also dynamited. No one was hurt.

Edward R. Murrow: January 10, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The selection of Harold MacMillan as Prime Minister of Great Britain has to be called a right-wing victory in the Conservative Party. It also has to be pointed out that "Rab" Butler, who didn't get the job, opposed the Eden policy of attacking Egypt, while MacMillan supported it. But that does not mean that Mr. MacMillan has been put in to continue a course independent of America, or that his country will now suffer a relapse into reaction. It is truer to say that the Tory right-wingers are having it both ways. They are keeping out Butler, which pleases them, but they also are promoting a reconciliation with America which they know to be necessary. And they are accepting the leadership of a man who is anything but a traditionalist.

Mr. MacMillan is better liked in Washington than Eden. He became a fairly close friend of General Eisenhower during and after the war. He and Mr. Dulles call each other Foster and Harold. Eden was no more than coldly polite to Mr. Dulles, and his presence in Washington after the Egyptian disaster was emphatically not wanted. Mr. MacMillan can come any time he wishes. An early visit is freely predicted.

The selection of Mr. MacMillan is not explained by any simple label. For one thing, he has long been a favorite of Sir Winston Churchill, who was sure he would be Prime Minister one day. Sir Winston was one of the Conservatives called for consultation by Queen Elizabeth yesterday. He also had the confidence of Lord Salisbury, whose influence in the party is second to none, and who himself would have become Prime Minister if he sat in the Commons instead of the Lords. Sir Anthony Eden himself backed MacMillan, for as leader of the party his advice to the Queen could hardly be ignored, and she would not name someone he opposed.

But there was a second factor in MacMillan's favor, other than his acceptability to both wings of the Party. It is his mastery of economic questions and the sense that Britain is plunging head-on into dangerously stormy weather. The Egyptian policy, especially the resulting oil shortage, has put the country under immediate strain. The biggest job facing a British Prime Minister is to get a life-saving budget through Parliament this Spring.

Mr. MacMillan left the Foreign Office to go to the Treasury because he was considered the ablest economic administrator in the Tory team. And up till the attack on Egypt he worked minor wonders of rehabilitation, so that the British trade account looked better than anyone had hoped. Though he believed the risk of the Egyptian attack had to be taken, he was one of the first to understand the grave economic consequences of its failure, and advocated early British withdrawal. Now he will need the undivided support of his Conservative majority to wrestle with the shortages that are slowing down production. If he makes a good showing, and the new budget is not too unpopular, his ministry may live out the allotted term of the Conservatives. But for that to happen Mr. MacMillan may have to be more than wise and courageous, he may have to be lucky. A general election has not become necessary now, but it might before the end of the year. And if it comes, the present concensus is that the Labor Party would win.

I have spoken of Mr. MacMillan's expected visit to Washington. There is another visit he probably will not make, and that is to Moscow. Sir Anthony Eden, had he remained in office, would have gone there this Spring. He promised Bulganin and Khrushchev to return their visit to England. Soviet-British relations now are tense and cold, as a result of the events in Egypt. Even so, Eden would have gone. He believes in personal diplomacy. Mr. MacMillan does not, and in the present chill between Britain and the Soviet Union, he is expected to cancel the trip.

Mr. MacMillan was in Washington last in September. No one foresaw then that by now he would be British Prime Minister, and though he was cordially received, we were too much engrossed with the election to pay much attention to the distinguished visitor. Washington news men heard him analyze British economic problems and were impressed by his candid presentation of the facts. He gave them with the lucidity expected of a good chancellor of the exchequer, and delivered them with the impromptu neatness of a veteran in the House of Commons.

What struck his audience most was to hear him advocate a free trade area in Europe to which Britain might belong, ~~something on a special basis that allowed some imperial preferences to survive~~. British conservatives have done perhaps more than anyone else to prevent the formation of a united Europe. Here was a possible Prime Minister, trying to find a way to accept it. Now that he is in power, he might - if he can weather the economic storm ahead - come one day to count as a great European as well as a great Briton.

Geo Bryan

Word for Today

In a speech in this country... two years ago... Harold Macmillan quoted a statement once made by Sir Winston Churchill, which is pertinent today as regards the relationship between Britain and the United States. "The past," Churchill said, "should be forgiven, even when it cannot be forgotten. If it cannot be forgotten, it should not set the pattern for the future."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Jan. 11, 1957

This is the news:

Democratic members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee will hold a special strategy meeting on Monday, to consider re-writing President Eisenhower's resolution on the Middle East. The meeting was called by Committee Chairman Gordon for the purpose, he said, "of discussing further procedures in the committee." It is understood, however, that a substitute resolution... being drafted by Democratic Representative Zablocki of Wisconsin... will be considered. This new resolution is being patterned after the proposals made yesterday by former Secretary of State Acheson, in testimony before the House committee. (I should like, in a few minutes, to discuss the nature of these proposals).

Republican National Chairman Hall announced today that he is resigning, effective February 1st. President Eisenhower issued a statement... expressing hope that Hall's services "will continue to be available, not only to the party but to the nation in the years ahead." Hall is expected to receive a White House appointment, after he takes a Flordia vacation. There is also speculation that he will run for New York governor in 1958.

→

~~The State Department~~ announced today that the crown prince of Iraq will visit the ~~United States early next month. King Saud of Arabia~~ already ~~has accepted an invitation to visit Washington on January~~ 30th. Both ~~Arab leaders are expected to receive a personal explanation~~ of United States policy in the Middle East.

United Nations ~~Secretary General Hammarskjold reported to the~~ General Assembly today on the progress made in clearing the Suez Canal. He confirmed that... ~~if the present schedule is maintained~~... the salvage project will be completed early ~~in May. Vessels of 10~~-thousand tons, or less, should be able to use the canal by early March.

A British spokesman... at United Nations headquarters... said today that the ground has been prepared for a new round of talks on the Suez problem. (It is not expected... in the early stages of these talks...) that representatives of Britain and France will meet the Egyptians face to face. (Egypt has insisted that it will not sit down with the British and French at the same conference table). Secretary General Hammarskjold would serve as intermediary. / It is hoped that... later... the interested parties can be brought together.

French Foreign Minister Pineau conferred with Secretary of State Dulles today in Washington. / Pineau is said to have urged the United States to use its influence on Egypt, to get negotiations started as soon as possible. An American spokesman at the United Nations said today that Israel is holding up the negotiations, by the delay in withdrawing its forces from Egyptian territory.

Egypt asked today that the United Nations General Assembly give "urgent consideration" to Israel's refusal to withdraw from certain parts of the Sinai Peninsula, and the Gaza Strip. The request was contained in a letter from Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi to the secretariat.

~~The Arab kingdom of Yemen charged today that "hundreds" of persons have been killed in recent British attacks on Yemen soil. Britain has denied invading Yemen... charging, instead, that Yemen troops have committed aggression against the British protectorate of Aden. The British say Yemen tribesmen are continuing to attack.~~

The new British prime minister... Harold Macmillan... dined privately tonight with Sir Winston Churchill. Macmillan is believed to have asked Churchill's advice on choosing a cabinet. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables me that... along with improvement in Anglo-American relations... Macmillan will work for the economic solvency of Britain and the creation of what he calls the "opportunity state". Kendrick says Macmillan accepts the welfare state as inevitable... but believes the cake should be bigger so that people can have a larger share. This is what Macmillan refers to as the "opportunity state".

Sir Anthony Eden today announced his resignation from the House of Commons. Eden gave the same reason he did on resigning the premiership -- ill health. Queen Elizabeth offered him an earldom, but he is reported to have declined the offer.

The puppet premier of Hungary... Janos Kadar... has made a secret visit to Moscow. The Moscow radio says Kadar attended a Kremlin meeting yesterday with Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai, Soviet Premier Bulganin and Communist Party Boss Khrushchev. According to their communique, they discussed "questions pertaining to the further development of fraternal relations." On these questions, it says, there was "a complete unanimity of views."

Today, the Chinese Communist premier flew to Warsaw for talks with Polish leaders. In a speech... on his arrival at the Warsaw airport... Chou En-lai called for "the strengthening of the solidarity of the socialist countries." He stressed Soviet leadership... and he condemned what he described as "imperialist-diversionist activities" in Hungary.

Hungarian militia opened fire today on a workers demonstration in Budapest. At least two workers were killed. The demonstration took place outside the Csepel iron works... apparently in protest against a mass lay-off of workers due to the fuel shortage and the Kádar government's new "get-tough" policies.

West German Chancellor Adenauer said today that thermo-nuclear weapons can no longer be considered as a means of waging war. There cannot be a "definitive" solution to world problems, he said, until the H-bomb is banned by international agreement. Adenauer made no mention of enforcement, such as by inspection. Nor did he refer to atomic weapons. Adenauer's call for prohibition of the H-bomb... without reference to enforcement...

took Washington by surprise. The State Department has declined comment, pending clarification from the American embassy in Bonn.

~~[illegible] Negro [illegible]~~

In Atlanta, Georgia, 60 Negro leaders from nine southern states concluded a two-day meeting by sending a letter to President Eisenhower on the integration problem. The letter refers to recent racial violence... and calls on the President to use the "weight of his office" to help bring about compliance with recent integration rulings. "Beyond your constitutional power as President," the letter says, "you posses and can wield immense moral power." ~~It urges Mr. Eisenhower "to point out to the people of the South the moral nature of the problem."~~

Edward R. Murrow: January 11, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Nothing could have shown more convincingly what is the Number One concern of this country than President Eisenhower's State of the Union message. It is the crisis in world power as exemplified in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower didn't say in so many words that the State of the Union must be measured first of all by what is done in the Middle East. But he did not give Congress anything more urgent to think about, and he hammered in his message on the importance of his declaration on the Middle East.

Congress finds itself in a difficult situation in facing this Number One problem. It knows that a Congressional resolution, to have fullest force in the world, must be supported by an overwhelming majority in Congress. It also knows it must not whittle down what the President asks for, and to do that would weaken, not strengthen, his leadership. But many in Congress, even though they want to strengthen the President's hand, are not sure what he is asking. So they feel the need for full examination of the crisis and the proposals to meet it.

Former Secretary Dean Acheson, testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee tried to take the curse off critical analysis by harking back to Senator Vandenburg, as one of the fathers of bi-partisanship in foreign policy. Senator Vandenburg had said, in a like situation:

"Frank co-operation and free debate are indispensible to ultimate unity. Every foreign policy must be totally debated, and the loyal opposition is under special obligation to see that this is done." ~~Senator Vandenburg took pride in what he called the Republican trademarks in every act on foreign policy carried by Congress. Mr. Acheson thought the President's program would benefit from some outstanding Democratic trademarks.~~

Mr. Acheson proved to be a severe critic of both form and content of the Eisenhower proposals. He was troubled that authority was being asked to apply American power where adequate military force for local use is not assured. He quoted General Maxwell Taylor as saying that small wars are becoming the greatest danger we are facing, and he questioned if we are equipped to cope with them. He contrasted the Taylor statement with Secretary Dulles's suggestion of attacking Soviet staging centers and lines of communication, and of leaving it to the commander-in-chief to decide whether the Soviet Union intended to begin World War Three. If he did, then all-out attack would be the answer. "This" said Mr. Acheson "sounds perilously like another approach to the brink" and he called it "reckless talk, carrying with it a vicious risk." He warned: "There can be no bluff here."

Mr. Acheson also found fault with the Eisenhower proposals because they implied unilateral action on the one hand, and too great reliance on the United Nations on the other. He pointed out that forces have to operate from bases, and said he hoped we would have allies. He called it of fundamental importance that we should concert policy with like-minded nations before taking action.

But relying on the United Nations would not do, he warned. It cannot determine United States policy, make decisions or enforce them. It is a forum, and no more than the nations that meet there. "Nothing more comes out of it" he said, "than was put into it." If we look to the United Nations to form our policy, he said, then we "have committed an unprecedented abdication of responsibility and power."

The biggest fault he found with the proposed resolution is that it is not policy at all, but merely an invitation to Congress to devise policy. Having said this, he proceeded to say what policy might be in two major problems. One is the Suez Canal settlement, the other, peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. As to Suez he said that the United States should make it impossible for Nasser to bleed Europe to death as he now can do, and this could be achieved by our providing the oil on which Europe depends, and ourselves paying the excess cost of dollar oil. That would give the canal users time to negotiate with Nasser and free them from the pressure they now are under.

A second step in the same direction would be to set up a de-militarized strip under the United Nations control, through which oil could be transported in pipelines without the canal being used at all. This, he said, would benefit both consumers and producers.

He attributed the difficulty of making peace between Israeli and Arabs wholly to fear, which he called mutual and justified. He did not lay out a long-term plan, but wanted first of all to stop raiding between the two sides. He said it is our responsibility to establish, underwrite and support, with force, an arrangement to prevent government-supported raiding. There would be complaints if we did this, he acknowledged, but thought there would be more than a chance of successful execution of such a program through appropriate international organization. The United States, he said, cannot properly abandon Israel to be overwhelmed by armed attack and its people dispersed. And it also cannot properly leave Israel free to attack her neighbors.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is disagreement in Washington over how to go about solving the problems of the Middle East. Whatever the final decision, it will represent America assuming... as best it can... the responsibilities for free-world leadership. This is always serious business. For as Charles Colton observed, "The pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Democratic members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee will hold a special strategy meeting on Monday to consider re-writing President Eisenhower's resolution on the Middle East. The meeting was called by Committee Chairman Gordon for the purpose, he said, "of discussing further procedures in the committee." It is understood, however, that a substitute resolution...being drafted by Democratic Representative Zablocki of Wisconsin...will be considered. This new resolution is being patterned after the proposals made yesterday by former Secretary of State Acheson in testimony before the House committee. (I should like, in a few minutes, to discuss the nature of these proposals.).

Republican National Chairman Hall announced today that he is resigning, effective February 1st. President Eisenhower issued a statement...expressing hope that Hall's services "will continue to be available not only to the party but to the nation in the years ahead." Hall is expected to receive a White House appointment, after he takes a Florida vacation. There is also speculation that he will run for New York governor in 1958.

A British spokesman...at United Nations headquarters...said today that the ground has been prepared for a new round of talks on the Suez problem. It is not expected...in the early stages of these talks...that representatives of Britain and France will meet the Egyptians face to face. (Egypt has insisted that it will not sit down with the British and French at the same conference table). Secretary General Hammarskjold would serve as intermediary. It is hoped that...later...the interested parties can be brought together.

French Foreign Minister Pineau conferred with Secretary of State Dulles today in Washington. Pineau is said to have urged the United States to use its influence on Egypt to get negotiations started as soon as possible. An American spokesman at the United Nations said today that Israel is holding up the negotiations, by the delay in withdrawing its forces from Egyptian territory.

Egypt asked today that the United Nations General Assembly give "urgent consideration" to Israel's refusal to withdraw from certain parts of the Sinai Peninsula and the Gaza Strip. The request was contained in a letter from' Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi to the secretariat.

The new British prime minister...Harold Macmillan...dined privately tonight with Sir Winston Churchill. Macmillan is believed to have asked Churchill's advice on choosing a cabinet.

Sir Anthony Eden today announced his resignation from the House of Commons. Eden gave the same reason he did on resigning the premiership -- ill health. Queen Elizabeth offered him an earldom, but he is reported to have declined the offer.

The puppet premier of Hungary...Janos Kadar...has made a secret visit to Moscow. The Moscow radio says Kadar attended a Kremlin meeting yesterday with Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai, Soviet Premier Bulganin, and Communist Party Boss Khrushchev. According to their communique, they discussed "questions pertaining to the further development of fraternal relations." On these questions, it says, there was "a complete unanimity of views."

Today, the Chinese Communist premier flew to Warsaw for talks with Polish leaders. In a speech...on his arrival at the Warsaw airport...Chou En-lai called for "the strengthening of the solidarity of the socialist countries." He stressed Soviet leadership...and he condemned what he described as "imperialist-diversionist activities" in Hungary.

Hungarian militia opened fire today on a workers demonstration in Budapest. At least two workers were killed. The demonstration took place outside the Csepel iron works...apparently in protest against a mass lay-off of workers due to the fuel shortage and the Kadar government's new "get-tough" policies.

West German Chancellor Adenauer said today that thermo-nuclear weapons can no longer be considered as a means of waging war. There cannot be a "definitive" solution to world problems, he said, until the H-bomb is banned by international agreement. Adenauer made no mention of endorcement, such as by inspection. Nor did he refer to atomic weapons. Adenauer's call for prohibition of the H-bomb...without reference to endorcement...took Washington by surprise. The State Department has declined comment, pending clarification form the American embassy in Bonn.

In Atlanta, Georgia, 60 Negro leaders from nine southern states concluded a two-day meeting by sending a letter to President Eisenhower on the integration problem. The letter refers to recent racial violence...and calls on the President to use the "weight of his office" to help bring about compliance with recent integration rulings. "Beyond your constitutional power as President," the letter says, "you possess and can wield immense moral power."

Nothing could have shown more convincingly what is the Number One concern of this country than President Eisenhower's State of the Union message. It is the crisis in world power as examplified in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower didn't say in so many words that the State of the Union must be measured first of all by what is done in the Middle East. But he did not give Congress anything more urgent to think about, and he hammered in his message on the importance of his declaration on the Middle East.

Congress finds itself in a difficult situation in facing this Number One problem. It knows that a Congressional resolution, to have fullest force in the world, must be supported by an overwhelming majority in Congress. It also knows it must not whittle down what the President asks for, and to do that would weaken, not strengthen, his leadership. But many in Congress, even though they want to strengthen the President's hand, are not sure what he is asking. So they feel the need for full examination of the crisis and the proposals to meet it.

Former Secretary Dean Acheson, testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee tried to take the curse off critical analysis by harking back to Senator

Vandenbrug, as one of the fathers of bi-partisanship in foreign policy. Senator Vandenburg had said, in a like situation: "Frank co-operation and free debate are indispensible to ultimate unity. Every foreign policy must be totally debated, and the loyal opposition is under special obligation to see that this is done."

Mr. Acheson proved to be a severe critic of both form and content of the Eisenhower propesals. He was troubled that authority was being asked to apply American power where adequate military force for local use is not assured. He quoted General Maxwell Taylor as saying that small wars are becoming the greatest danger we are facing, and he questioned if we are equipped to cope with them. He contrasted the Taylor statement with Secretary Dulles's suggestion of attacking Soviet staging centers and lines of communication, and of leaving it to the commander-in-chief to decide whether the Soviet Union intended to begin World War Three. If he did, then all-out attack would be the answer. "This" said Mr. Acheson "sounds perilously like another approach to the brink" and he called it "reckless talk, carrying with it a vicious risk." He warned: "There can be no bluff here."

Mr. Acheson also found fault with the Eisenhower proposals because they implied unilateral action on the one hand, and too great reliance on the United Nations on the other. He pointed out that forces have to operate from bases, and said he hoped we would have allies. He called it of fundamental importance that we should concert policy with like-minded nations before taking action.

But relying on the United Nations would not do, he warned. It cannot determine United States policy, make decisions or endorce them. It is a forum, and n more than the nations that meet there. "Nothing more comes out of it" he said, "than was put into it." If we look to the United Nations to form our policy, he said, then we "have committed an unprecedented abdication of responsibility and power."

The biggest fault he found with the proposed resolution is that it is not policy at all, but merely an invitation to Congress to devise policy. Having said this, he proceeded to say what policy might be in two major problems. One is the Suez Canal settlement, the other, peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. As to Suez he said that the United States should make it impossible for Nasser to bleed Europe to death as he now can do, and this could be achieved by our providing the oil on which Europe depends, and ourselves paying the excess cost of dollar oil. That would give the canal users time to negotiate with Nasser and free them from the pressure they now are under.

A second step in the same direction would be to set up a de-militarized strip under the United Nations control, through which oil could be transported in pipelines without the canal being used at all. This, he said, would benefit both consumers and producers.

He attributed the difficulty of making peace between Israeli and Arabs wholly to fear, which he called mutual and justified. He did not lay out a long-term plan, but wanted first of all to stop raiding between the two sides. He said it is our responsibility to establish, underwrite and support, with force, an arrangement to prevent government-supported raiding.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is disagreement in Washington over how to go about solving the problem of the Middle East. Whatever the final decision, it will represent America assuming...as best it can...the responsibilities for free-world leadership. This is always serious business. For as Charles Colton observed, "The pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 14, 1957

This is the news:

The United States today submitted a new set of disarmament proposals in the United Nations. /The American program is aimed at achieving... with proper safeguards... the step-by-step elimination of all nuclear test explosions. Before that, there would have to be an agreement... again with adequate safeguards, including inspection... under which fissionable materials would be stockpiled exclusively for peaceful purposes. /The plan would also place the testing of "space missiles" under a system of international control. /The United States made these... and other proposals... in the United Nations political committee. /Russia countered by re-introducing many of its previous proposals... and by calling for a special session of the General Assembly, to be devoted entirely to the disarmament question. In a few minutes, we will hear from my colleague, Larry Lesueur, who was at the United Nations today when this action took place.

Secretary of State Dulles warned today that the situation in the Middle East may present "the decisive test." "If the Middle East stays free," he said, we can reasonably look forward to gains for freedom throughout the world." Mr. Dulles was testifying before the Senate foreign relations and armed services committees on President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy. He said the basic principle of Congress backing up the president in standby authority... for use of armed force... was laid down first in the Truman Doctrine for Greece and Turkey in 1947. "The time has now come," he said, "when, in accordance with past practice, the President and the Congress should act together in relation to the Middle East." Dulles said a "mere resolution"... expressing concern over the Soviet threat... is not enough. He advocated action. And one form of action needed, he said, is the granting of financial aid. Otherwise, he said, anarchy may result. As for the possibility of Soviet aggression, Dulles predicted the Russians will... in his words... "take every risk they dare to take." He said that Soviet forces are stationed in areas adjacent to the Middle East "so that they could be deployed at any time with a minimum of warning." In reply to a question from Senate Democratic Leader Johnson, Mr. Dulles said the situation "poses the most serious threat we have faced over the past ten years." / If Russia secures control of the Middle East," he said, the Communists "would have their hands on the throttle of the life-blood to Western Europe, to cut off, or give, as they please."

Moscow today announced that the Supreme Soviet (which is Russia's parliament) will open a new session on February fifth. / The Supreme Soviet... at this session... is expected to take up the new budget, and a revision of the five-year plan. There are also rumors that it will see the shifting of Communist Party boss Khrushchev to the office of premier, with Premier Bulganin becoming president, replacing Voroshilov. / It is also reported that... under the shake-up,... Malenkov will take over Khruskchev's old party job. Needless to say, none of these reports is confirmed.

In Warsaw today, the Polish Titoist... Wladyslaw Gomulka... said that Poland must consolidate its strength with the Socialist bloc, headed by the Soviet Union. This is necessary, Gomulka said, because of American policies which, he claimed, are heightening world tensions. ~~Thus Gomulka agreed publicly with Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai, when Chou~~

~~appealed last week... on his arrival in Warsaw... for the "strengthening of the solidarity" of the Communist countries, under Soviet leadership.~~

In London, Queen Elizabeth today formally confirmed the ~~new~~ cabinet appointed yesterday by the new prime minister, Harold Macmillan. And the British government let it be known that it has made overtures... looking toward negotiations with the Arab kingdom of Yemen. Yemen has charged ~~aggression~~ British forces in the neighboring Aden protectorate ~~of~~ with committing aggression against its territory. The British, in turn, have repeatedly charged ~~that~~ Yemen with attacking villages in Aden.

President Eisenhower today toured some of the worst drought areas of Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico... observing at first hand the dried up river beds, half-starved cattle and abandoned farms. Mr. Eisenhower is traveling alternately by automobile and plane, talking to farmers and ranchers along the way. He will wind up the trip tomorrow with inspection stops in Arizona, Colorado and Kansas.

In Washington, the White House announced that President Eisenhower is asking Congress for an additional 26-million dollars to help meet the drought emergency. The money would be used by the Farmers Home Administration for loans for the re-financing of farm debts.

Mr. Eisenhower today nominated Douglas Dillon, the United States ambassador to France, to be deputy under-secretary of state for economic affairs. He will succeed Herbert Prochnow, who resigned in November. Dillon's successor as ambassador was not announced.

Mr. Eisenhower also asked the Senate to approve the promotion of Brigadier General Ralph Zwicker to the rank of major general. Zwicker was a key witness in the Army-McCarthy hearings in 1954. His name appeared appeared today in a list of promotions sent to the Senate.

Clifford Furnas resigned today as assistant secretary of defense for research and development. Dr. Furnas is returning to his former position as chancellor of the University of Buffalo. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation "with regret".

The Army announced today that... effective April first... national guardsmen must receive at least six months active training. The new policy has been strongly opposed by the National Guard Association. In the past, new members of the National Guard could volunteer to take six months active duty training; now it is required. ~~Major General Walsh, president of the National Guard Association, has called a conference of all state adjutants general to suggest they try to get the decision revoked.~~

Former United States senator, C. Wayland Brooks, died in Chicago today, following a heart attack. He was currently Republican national committeeman from Illinois.

Actor Humphrey Bogart died in Hollywood today of cancer. His wife, Lauren Bacall, and two children survive. He was 56 years of age.

My colleague Lanny Lesour listen to the U.N. Discussion of Disarmament today — Lanny

LeSueur jan 14 1957 7:45p

Well IT was like old times ! Ed

But Considering the deteriorating relations between this country and Russia, Really suprised no-one, that the opening debate on the world's most vital subject--arms limitation--should turn out to be the bitterest UN debate of the New year.

Speaking with noticeable restraint, America's Henry Cabot Lodge, today offered a few concessions in the previous american disarmament stand...Nevertheless, Lodge challenged Russia, with a firm restatement of american demands for an adequate system of controls and inspection, before any disarment proposals could go into effect...

But The new angles in the american plan are that certain steps could be both progressive and cumulative...In other words, we are no longer demanding the mileenium,

We no longer expect complete international control to take place over-night..

Although President Eisenhower has already mentioned it, the most sensational part of our disarmament plan, is an attempt to Head OFF weapons which have not yet been invented.. that is, man-made earth satellites and outer-space MISSILES AND SPACE platforms..

~~And also inter-continental rockets~~...This country proposes that all testing of these outer-space vehicles should first be put under international control, to make sure that their future development IS limited to peaceful purposes..

America's [redacted] proposals for arms limitation, are studded with the kind of propositions, that the rest of The world now refers in Madison avenue jargon, as "package plans." For example, we would agree to limit Hydrogen-bomb tests, and later ban them altogther, if agreement were reached to control the stock-piling of atomic materials.//

We would also agree to limit the size of the Big power's armed forces, if the nations concerned could also agree on the establishment of an inspection system.// [redacted]s [redacted]

And altho we [redacted] insist as always on an iron-clad system of international inspection, we now propose that such controls ~~system~~ against suprise attack--could be worked out progressively... But first they ~~it~~ would have to be supervised by an international agency which would [redacted] start working at the very outset of the program..

The russian attitude toward this carefully-keyed, five-point disarmament plan, may be judged by the soviet reply... Vassily Kuznetsov, immediately launched into a SLASHING attack on the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine... Interrupted three times by the committee chairman, for introducing extraneous subject, The russian only read his prepared statement faster, and branded the President's Middle East plan, as "old colonialism under a new name"... Lodge protested, called it "a smear on the United States"... But the Russian would not be shut-up, it was obvious his statement had been dictated word for word in Moscow..

There was little new in the Russian reply, as far as disarmament goes... Kuznetsov repeated the proposals made recently by Premier Bulganin, and declared they offered the only sound basis for agreement... They included Bulgainin's plan for aerial inspection over a limited zone, with emphasis on GermanY's Ruhr arsenal — and They underscored the popular call for an immediate ban ON H-Bomb tests..

But There was obvious method to the Russian diatribe against the President's PLAN — It not only Middle East bitterly provoked Arab suspicion of the Eisenhower doctrine. But also Kuznetsov proposed that a special session of the UN General Assembly be convened, to deal exclusively with general disarmament... ITs clear that the Russians still think they can make more hay among the small, neutral arab asian Nations than we can...

But since events have prooved that nobody can be sure of delivering those blocs of votes at the UN, the russian hedged a bit on throwing the whole subject of disarmament over to the 80-nation assembly.

are NOT averse to limiting atomic disarmament talks to a Big Four Summit conference.

But None of these Russian proposals are likely to be welcomed by the West. Although that invitation for everybody to get into the act, does have popular appeal, May be hard to argue against..

But one Russia idea could merit further consideration...

the restatement of Bulganin's proposal for a non-agression pact between the communist State of the Warsaw Treaty, and NATO...

This idea you'll remember was hinted at by France, two years ago, and this country

Did NOT Turn it down flatly. Now...But that was two years ago-- before Russia's troubles with Hungary and Poland. Now The Russians obviously want a non-agression pact with NATO more than ever, since it would guarantee their failing grip on the satellites..

Now Back to Ed Murrow..

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now, here is George Bryan.

E.B. White once spoke eloquently on this subject of disarmament and the United Nations. "New York City, White said, "perfectly illustrates both the dilemma and the solution... at once the perfect target and the perfect demonstration of non-violence---capital of everything, housing the deliberations by which the planes are to be stayed and their errand forestalled."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, January 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague, Larry Lesueur, listened to the UN discussion of disarmament today. Larry!

LESUEUR: It was like old times, Ed. But considering the deteriorating relations between this country and Russia, it really surprised no one that the opening debate, on the world's most vital subject, arms limitation, should turn out to be the bitterest UN debate of tne New Year. Speaking with noticeable restraint, America's Henry Cabot Lodge today offered a few concessions in the previous American disarmament stand. Nevertheless, Lodge challenged Russia with a firm restatement of American demands for an adequate system of controls and inspection before any disarmament proposals could go into effect. But the new angles in the American plan are that certain steps could be both progressive and cumulative. In other words - we are no longer demanding the millennium, we no longer expect complete international control to take place overnight.

Although President Eisenhower has already mentioned it, the most sensational part of our disarmament plan is an attempt to head off weapons which have not yet been invented; that is - man-made earth satellites and outer space missiles and space platforms. This country proposes that all testing of these out-of-space vehicles, should first be put under international control, to make sure that their future development is limited to peaceful purposes.

America's proposals for arms limitation are studded with a kind of porpositions that the rest of the world now refers to in Madison Avenue jargon as "package plans." For example - we would agree to limit hydrogen bomb tests and later ban them altogether if agreement were reached to control the stockpiling of atomic materials. We would also agree to limit the size of the big powers' armed forces if the nations concerned could also agree on the establishment of an inspection system.

And although we insist, as always, on an iron-clad system of international inspection, we now propose that such controls against surprise attack could be worked out progressively. But, first, they would have to be supervised by an international agency, which would start working at the very outset of the program.

The Russian attitude toward this carefully keyed five-point American disarmament plan may be judged by the Soviet reply. Vassili Kuznetsov immediately launched into a slashing attack on the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine. Interrupted three times by the committee chairman for introducing extraneous matter, the Russian only read his prepared statement faster and branded the President's Middle East plan as "old colonialism under a new name." Lodge protested, called it a "smear on the United States." But the Russian would not be shut up. It was obvious his statement had been dictated word-for-word in Moscow.

There was little new in the Russian reply so far as disarmament is concerned. Kuznetsov repeated the proposals made recently by Premier Bulganin and declared they offered the only sound basis for agreement. They included Bulganin's plan for aerial inspection over a limited zone, with emphasis on Germany's Ruhr arsenal, and they underscored the popular demand for an immediate ban on H-bomb tests. But there was obvious method to the Russian diatribe against the President's Middle East policy. It not only bitterly provoked Arab suspicion of the Eisenhower Doctrine, but Kuznetsov also proposed that a special session of the UN General Assembly be convened to deal exclusively with general disarmament. It's clear that the Russians still think they can make more hay among the small neutral Arab-Asian nations than we can. But (indistinct) events have proved that nobody can be sure of delivering those blocks of votes at the UN. The Russians hedged a bit on throwing the whole subject of disarmament over to the 80-nation Assembly. The Russians are not averse to limiting atomic disarmament talks to a Big Four summit conference.

But none of these Russian proposals are likely to be welcomed by the West. Although that invitation for everybody to get into the act does have popular appeal, it may be hard to argue against.

But one Russian idea could merit further consideration, the restatement of Bulganin's proposal for a non-aggression pact between the Communist states of a Warsaw treaty and NATO. This idea, you'll remember, was hinted at by France two years ago and this country did not then turn it down flatly. But that was two years ago, before Russia's troubles with Hungary and Poland. Now the Russians obviously want a non-aggression pact with NATO more than ever, since it would guarantee their grip on their satellites.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Larry Lesueur. You have covered the UN for longer than any reporter that I know. Thank you for that report tonight. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, January 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague, Larry Lesueur, listened to the UN discussion of disarmament today. Larry!

LESUEUR: It was like old times, Ed. But considering the deteriorating relations between this country and Russia, it really surprised no one that the opening debate, on the world's most vital subject, arms limitation, should turn out to be the bitterest UN debate of the New Year. Speaking with noticeable restraint, America's Henry Cabot Lodge today offered a few concessions in the previous American disarmament stand. Nevertheless, Lodge challenged Russia with a firm restatement of American demands for an adequate system of controls and inspection before any disarmament proposals could go into effect. But the new angles in the American plan are that certain steps could be both progressive and cumulative. In other words - we are no longer demanding the millennium, we no longer expect complete international control to take place overnight.

Although President Eisenhower has already mentioned it, the most sensational part of our disarmament plan is an attempt to head off weapons which have not yet been invented; that is - man-made earth satellites and outer space missiles and space platforms. This country proposes that all testing of these out-of-space vehicles, should first be put under international control, to make sure that their future development is limited to peaceful purposes.

America's proposals for arms limitation are studded with a kind of porpositions that the rest of the world now refers to in Madison Avenue jargon as "package plans." For example - we would agree to limit hydrogen bomb tests and later ban them altogether if agreement were reached to control the stockpiling of atomic materials. We would also agree to limit the size of the big powers' armed forces if the nations concerned could also agree on the establishment of an inspection system.

And although we insist, as always, on an iron-clad system of international inspection, we now propose that such controls against surprise attack could be worked out progressively. But, first, they would have to be supervised by an international agency, which would start working at the very outset of the program.

The Russian attitude toward this carefully keyed five-point American disarmament plan may be judged by the Soviet reply. Vassili Kuznetsov immediately launched into a slashing attack on the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine. Interrupted three times by the committee chairman for introducing extraneous matter, the Russian only read his prepared statement faster and branded the President's Middle East plan as "old colonialism under a new name." Lodge protested, called it a "smear on the United States." But the Russian would not be shut up. It was obvious his statement had been dictated word-for-word in Moscow.

There was little new in the Russian reply so far as disarmament is concerned. Kuznetsov repeated the proposals made recently by Premier Bulganin and declared they offered the only sound basis for agreement. They included Bulganin's plan for aerial inspection over a limited zone, with emphasis on Germany's Ruhr arsenal, and they underscored the popular demand for an immediate ban on H-bomb tests. But there was obvious method to the Russian diatribe against the President's Middle East policy. It not only bitterly provoked Arab suspicion of the Eisenhower Doctrine, but Kuznetsov also proposed that a special session of the UN General Assembly be convened to deal exclusively with general disarmament. It's clear that the Russians still think they can make more hay among the small neutral Arab-Asian nations than we can. But (indistinct) events have proved that nobody can be sure of delivering those blocks of votes at the UN. The Russians hedged a bit on throwing the whole subject of disarmament over to the 80-nation Assembly. The Russians are not averse to limiting atomic disarmament talks to a Big Four summit conference.

But none of these Russian proposals are likely to be welcomed by the West. Although that invitation for everybody to get into the act does have popular appeal, it may be hard to argue against.

But one Russian idea could merit further consideration, the restatement of Bulganin's proposal for a non-aggression pact between the Communist states of a Warsaw treaty and NATO. This idea, you'll remember, was hinted at by France two years ago and this country did not then turn it down flatly. But that was two years ago, before Russia's troubles with Hungary and Poland. Now the Russians obviously want a non-aggression pact with NATO more than ever, since it would guarantee their grip on their satellites.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Larry Lesueur. You have covered the UN for longer than any reporter that I know. Thank you for that report tonight. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States today submitted a new set of disarmament proposals in the United Nations. The American program is aimed at achieving ..with proper safeguards..the step-by-step elimination of all nuclear test explosions. Before that, there would have to be an ggreement..again with adequate safeguards, including inspection..usder which fissionable materials would be stockpiled exclusively for peaceful purposes. The plan would also place the testing of "space missiles" under a system of international control. The United States made these..and other proposals..in the United Nations political committee. Russia countered by re-introducing many of its previous proposals..and calling for a special session of the General Assembly to be devoted entirely to the disarmament question. In a few minutes, we will hear from my colleague, Larry Lesueur, who was at the United Nations today when this action took place.

Secretary of State Dulles warned today that the situation in the Middle East may present "the decisive test." "If the Middle East stays free," he said, we can reasonably look forward to gains for freedom throughout the world." Mr. Dulles was testifying before the Senate foreign relations and armed services committees on President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy. He said the basic principle of Congress backing up the president in standby authority..for use of armed force..was laid down first in the Turman Doctrine for Greece and Turkey in 1947. "The time has now come," he said, "when in accordance with past practice, the President and the Congress should act together in relation to the Middle East." Dulles said a "mere resolution"..expressing concern over the Soviet threat..is not enough. Ha advocated action. And one form of action needed, he said, is the granting of financial aid. Otherwise, he said, anarchy may result, As for the possibility of Soviet aggression, Dulles predicted the Russians will..in his words.."take every risk they dare to take." He said that Soviet forces are stationed in areas adjacent to the Middle East "so that they could be deployed at any time with a minimum of warning." In reply to a question from Senate Democratic Leader Johnson, Mr. Dulles said the situation "poses the most serious threat we have faced over the past ten years." If Russia secured control of the Middle East," he said, the Communists "would have their hands on the throttle of the life-blood to Western Europe to cut off or give as they please."

Moscow today announced that the Supreme Soviet (which is Russia's parliament) will open a new session of February fifth. The Supreme Soviet..at this session.. is expected to take up the new budget, and a revision of the five-year plan. There are also rumors that it will see the shifting of the Communist Party boss Khrushchev to the office of premier, with Premier Bulganin becoming president replacing Voroshilov. It is also reported that..under the shake-up .. Malenkov will take over Khrushchev's old party job. Needless to say, none of these reports is confirmed.

In Warsaw today, the Polish Titoist..Wladyslaw Gomulka..said that Poland must consolidate its strength with the Socialist bloc, headed by the Soviet Union. This is necessary, Gomulka said, because of American policies which, he claimed, are ' rightening world tensions.

In London, Queen Elizabeth today formally confirmed the cabinet appointed yesterday by the new prime minister, Harold Macmillan. And the British government let it be known that it has made overtures..looking toward negotiations with the Arab kingdom of Yemen. Yemen has charged British forces in the neighboring Aden protectorate with committing aggression against its territory. The British, in turn, have repeatedly charged Yemen with attacking villages in Aden.

President Eisenhower today toured some of the worst drought areas of Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico..observing at first hand the dried up river beds, half-starved cattle and abandoned farms. Mr. Eisenhower is traveling alternately by automobile and plane, talking to farmers and ranghers along the way. He will wind up the trip tomorrow with inspection stops in Arizona, Colorado and Kansas,

In Washington, the White House announced that President Eisenhower is asking Congress for an additional 26-million dollars to help meet the drought emergency. The money would be used by the Farmers Home Administration for loans for the refinancing of farm debts.

Mr. Eisenhower today nominated Douglas Dillon, the United States ambassador to France, to be deputy under-secretary of state for economic affairs. He will succeed Herbert Prochnow, who resigned nn November. Dillon's successor as ambassador was not announded.

Mr. Eisenhower also alked the Senate to approve the promotion of Brigadier General Ralph Zwicker to the rank of major general. Zwicker was a key witness in the Army McCarhty hearings in 1954. Hss name appeared in a list of promotions sent to the Senate.

Clifford Furnas resigned today as assistant secretary of defense for research and development. Dr. Furnas is returning to his former position as chancellor of the University of Buffalo. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation "with regret".

The Army announced today..that effective April first..national guardsmen must receive at least six months active training. The new policy has been strongly opposed by the National Guard Association. In the past, new members of the National Guard could volunteer to take six months of active duty training; now it it required.

Former United States senator, C Wayland Brooks, died in Chicago today, following a heart attack. He was currently Republican national committeeman from Illinois.

Actor Humphrey Bogart died in Hollywood today of cancer. His wife, Lauren Bacall, and two children survive. He was 56 years of age.

My colleague Larry LeSueur listened to the UN discussion of disarmament today---Larry.

LESUEUR: It was like old times, Ed. But considering the deteriorating relations between this country and Russia, it really surprised no one that the opening debate on the world's most vital subject, arms limitation, should turn out to be the bitterest UN debate of the New Year. Speaking with noticeable restraint, America's Henry Cabot Lodge today offered a few concessions in the previous American disarmement stand. Nevertheless, Lodge challenged Russia with a firm restatement of American demands for an adequate system of controls and inspection before any disarmament proposals could go into effect. But the new angles in the American plan are that certain steps could be both progressive and cumulative. In other words - we are no longer demanding the millennium, we no longer expect complete international control to take place overnight.

Although President Eisenhower has already mentioned it, the most sensational part of our disarmement plan is an attempt to head off weapons which have not yet been invented; that is - man-made earth satellites and outer-space missiles and space platforms. This country proposes that all testing of these out-of-space vehicles, should first be put under international control, to make sure that their future development is limited to peaceful purposes.

America's proposals for arms limitation are studded with a kind of propostions that the rest of the world now refers to in Madison Avenue jargon as"package plans." for example - we would agree to limit hydrogen bomb tests and later ban them altogether if agreement were reached to control the stockpiling of atomic materials. We would also agree to limit the size of the big powers armed forces if the nations concerned could also agree on the establishment of an inspection system.

And although we insist, as alsays, on an iron-clad system of international inspection, we now propose that such controls against surprise attack could be worked our progressively. But, first, they would have to be supervised by an intarnational agency, whcih would start working at the very outset of the program.

The Russian attitude toward this carefully keyed five-point American dis - armament plan may be judged by the Soviet reply. Vassili Kuznetsov immediately launched into a slashing attack on the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine. Interrupted three times by the committee chairman for introducing extraneous matter, the Russian only read his prepared statement faster and branded the President's Middle East plan as "old colonialism under a new name." Lodge protested, called it a "smear on the United States." But the Russian would not shut up. It was obvious his statement had been dictated word-for-word in Moscow.

There was little new in the Russian reply so far as disarmamentis concerned. Kuznetsov repeated the proposals made recently by Premier Bulganin and declared they offered the only sound basis for agreement.They included Bulganin's plan for aerial inspection over a limited zone, with emphsis on Germany's Ruhr arsenal, and they underscored the popular demand for an immediate ban on H-bomb tests. But there was obvious method to the Russian diatribe against the President's Middle East policy. It not only bitterly provoked Arab suspicion of the Eisenhower Doctrine, but Kuznetsov also proposed that a special session of the UN General Assembly be convened to deal exclusively with general disarmament. It's clear that the Russians still think they can make more hay among the small neutral Arab-Asian nations than we can. But since events have proved that nobody can be sure of delivering those blocks of votes at the UN. The Russians hedged a bit on throwing the whole subject of disarmement over to the 80-nation Assembly. The Russians are not averse to limiting atomic disaremament talks to a Big Four summit conference.

But none of these Russian proposals are likely to be welcomed by the West. Although that invitation for everybody to get into the act does have popular appeal, it may be hard to argue against.

But one Russian idea could merit further consideration the restatement of Bulganin's proposal for non-aggression pact between the Communist states of a Warsaw treaty and NATO. This idea, you'll remember, wah hinted at by France two years ago and this country did not then turn it down flatly. But that was two years ago, before Russia's troubles with Hungary and Poland. Now the Russians obviously want a non-aggression pact with NATO more than ever, since it would guarantee their grip on their satellites.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very mucy, Larry Lesueur. You have covered the UN for longer than any reporter that I know. Thank you for that report tonight. This is ED Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: E. B. White once spoke elouqently on this subject of disarmament and the United Nations. "New YOrk City" White said, "perfectly illustrates both the dilemma and the solution...at once the perfect target and the perfecr demonstration of non-violence --capital of everything, housing the diliberations by which the planes are to be stayed and their errand forestalled."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 15, 1957

This is the news:

Egypt today nationalized all British and French banks in the country. The government promised the institutions will be paid "fair compensation". (THE GOVERNMENT USES THE TERM "EGYPTIANIZED") It said other foreign banks... and insurance companies... will be nationalized within five years.

Israeli troops today evacuated the Egyptian town of El Arish, in their staged withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula. Yugoslav units of the United Nations police force moved into El Arish as the Israelis pulled out. Israel still occupies about one-fourth of the peninsula, including the heights overlooking the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba... Also the Gaza Strip.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli parliament gave Prime Minister Ben Gurion a vote of confidence today on his policy of withdrawal from the Sinai.

~~A motion of non-confidence was introduced by the extreme right Freedom Movement Party. It was rejected by a vote of 63 to 11, with eight abstentions.~~

In Tel Aviv today, an Israeli court-martial began hearing evidence in the trial of nine Israelis, charged with killing 47 Arab civilians on October 29... the day Israel invaded Egypt. The victims lived in an Israeli village near the Jordan frontier. They violated a curfew and were shot by Israeli border police. ~~members of Israel's border police. The Israeli government has deplored the incident.~~

Here in New York, the Afro-Asian group in the United Nations today drafted a resolution condemning Israel for failure to make a complete withdrawal from Egypt. The resolution calls for the evacuation of all Israeli forces within five days. It will be considered by the General Assembly on Thursday.

In the United Nations political committee, Britain today supported the American proposal for international control of space missiles... and suggested similar controls on atomic submarines. It was pointed out that... today... submarines are capable of launching missiles.

In London, the new government headed by Harold Macmillan today announced its first measures for cutting down defense spending. It cancelled orders for 100 jet fighters and reduced the program for reserve training.

On Cyprus today, British troops made a house-to-house search of the Greek section of Nicosia and made 33 arrests. Three thousand Greek Cypriots were screened in the operation, which was precipitated by recent underground attacks. A British sailor was killed yesterday in downtown Nicosia.

Today... in Washington... Secretary of State Dulles continued his testimony on behalf of President Eisenhower's Middle East proposals. Dulles warned the Senate foreign relations and armed services committees that there is "a very great likelihood" American troops would have to go into action in the Middle East if Congress fails to approve the President's program. If the program is approved, he said, the likelihood of American troops becoming involved would... in his opinion... be very small. Republican Senator Knowland said he is prepared to support the request for standby authority to commit American forces, if necessary. But Knowland said he was "greatly troubled" by the proposal for economic aid. Knowland wondered why this couldn't be handled under the regular foreign aid program. Dulles explained that the Administration is not asking for any additional money now... but merely to have restrictions lifted from funds already available. There is, he said, "an economic emergency" in the Middle East, which becomes all the more important because of the danger of Communist subversion. Democratic Senator Morse proposed an amendment to the Administration resolution, which would require the President to report "forthwith" to Congress before ordering American forces into action in the Middle East. Dulles said he thought the President would go along with this suggestion.

Reports from Budapest say that Josef Dudas, one of the leaders of the Hungarian revolt, has been sentenced to death. Dudas became virtual mayor of Budapest in November, during the short time Russian troops were out of the city. He was arrested as a "counter-revolutionary" on their return.

The Austrian government announced today that it can no longer afford to support the growing number of Hungarian refugees awaiting emigration to other countries.

Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai will wind up his visit to Poland tonight, with the signing of a joint communique with Polish leaders in Warsaw. Chou's next stop is Budapest. Radio Budapest says that Red China has granted the puppet Hungarian government a 50-million-dollar loan.

In Washington, an attache at the Soviet Embassy has been ordered out of the country "because of activities incompatible with his diplomatic status." These activities, the State Department said, include an attempt to buy classified military information.

President Eisenhower today completed his tour of six states hit by the drought. Mr. Eisenhower told the drought conference in Witchita that the Federal Government will use its full powers to cope with the situation. He will ask Congress, he said, for an additional 76-million dollars to continue and expand the present drought relief program.

Governor Shivers today appointed William Blakley, a wealthy Dallas attorney, as temporary United States senator from Texas. Shivers made the appointment as his last official act before surrendering the governorship to Senator Price Daniel, who was elected to the office in November. Blakley will take Daniel's seat in the Senate until a special election is held to name a permanent successor. Blakley is an Eisenhower Democrat. But Senate Majority Leader Johnson says "of course" he will vote with the Democrats in the Senate to insure continued Democratic control. Blakley himself refused to say how he would vote.

It would be a mistake to think that because Congress is delaying the adoption of the Eisenhower Declaration on the Middle East, the Administration is not going forward in its new role as heir to Western power and leadership in the region. Already it is crystalizing long-term plans for the area, and knows enough about what it wants not to be rushed into short-term actions that might prejudice the program as a whole.

In the last days it has turned down two Egyptian requests for economic help. It did not do so finally, but told the Egyptians it had to keep open the way for broader settlements. One was a request by Egypt to renew the purchase of a large amount of our surplus wheat. The other was to release the Egyptian assets - somewhere between forty andseventy million dollars - frozen here at the time of the Canal seizure. They were blocked to protect American investors in the Suez Company. So we told the Egyptians we should hold on to them until a Suez settlement is made.

These two actions show that the State Department is not accepting Nasser's own idea that he is the innocent victim of aggression, and deserves to become the pampered darling of the West. On the contrary, it wants Nasser, in due course, to open the Suez Canal to all, Israel included, and to give acceptable assurances that the Canal will be free from Egyptian political interference. It wants peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. It wants co-operation between Egypt and its neighbors on a regional development of the Nile River. It will not revive the limited Assuan Dam Improvement Plan. It wants a similar co-operation between Israel and its neighbors for a regional development of the Jordan River. That is, it wants the Middle Eastern countries to start working together, so as to learn how they can live together. It believes this is the only way to regional prosperity and peace.

This is not a program that Colonel Nasser's inflamed nationalism will let him sponsor at this time. But Egypt is suffering increasingly from the economic pinch due to the Suez crisis. Its merchant class is being slowly liquidated. Its biggest export assets have been pledged to the Soviet bloc for arms. It is true that a low-economy country can stand a lot of hard times, and Nasser may be able to survive his internal crisis. But he is feeling the pressure. In time he may be willing to settle for something less glorious, but more substantial, than the personal idolatry of the Arab world.

We are being quietly stern with Egypt, but we are not, for that reason, giving Israel a blank check. A crisis over Israel's occupation of the Sinai Peninsula has been at least postponed by Foreign Minister Golda Meier's announcement that Israeli troops will give up all of the peninsula except the control of the Aquaba Strait and the Gaza Strip. Mrs. Meier showed up to make the announcement after a hurried flight home. Had it not been made, the U.N. Assembly might have had to vote on a resolution tomorrow, once more calling on Israel to withdraw behind the armistice lines. The United States would have voted for such a resolution, which Israel knew. Presumably the new policy was due in part to that knowledge.

The United States believes in the freedom of shipping in the Aquaba Strait and in the international control of the Gaza Strip, which is what Israel wants, and Israel knows we do. But we have refused to give a pledge to work for them in any way that might encourage Israel to resist the U.N. majority. So we have asked Israel not to resist and to show faith - even blind faith - in our supporting the solutions we favor when the right time comes.

In a sense we are making ourselves unpopular with both Egypt and Israel on such short-term issues. As the new leader in the region this may be the price we have to pay for long-term results. It remains to be seen, of course, whether we can play our hand skillfully enough not to drive any of the Middle Eastern states into explosive action. The outcome may depend first of all on our knowing what we want in the long run. But it also depends very much on local conditions, local ambitions, local instability, and our being flexible and prompt in dealing with them.

The talk in the Congressional Committees on the President's declaration seems to some extent to have ignored such realities of the Middle East crisis. But if we are going to lead, the President needs power and strong home support. That is what Congress has been asked to give him. But there is more about the region than that it is in great danger from aggression, about which Mr. Dulles is talking most. It also is a region where economic and sociological statesmanship, rather than political and military power, has an extraordinary mission.

The Administration is presumably stressing the military threat in order to get authority to maneuver in the political and economic areas.

Su 81935
6.15

Word for Today

There is an obvious element of danger in the President's Middle East proposals... and it is difficult to see how this could be otherwise. The danger must be faced. Dr. John Hutchinson expressed this well. "Democracy is imperilled," he said, "if in a crisis men want security more than they want the burdens and struggles of freedom."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Egypt today nationalized all British and French banks in the country. The government promised the institutions will be paid "fair compensation." It said other foreign banks and insurance companies will be nationalized (the government uses the term "Egyptianized") within five years.

Israeli troops today evacuated the Egyptian town of El Arish, in their staged withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula. Yugoslav units of the United Nations police force moved into El Arish as the Israelis pulled out. Israel still occupies about one-fourth of the peninsula, including the heights overlooking the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, also the Gaza Strip.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli parliament gave Prime Minister Ben Gurion a vote of confidence today on his policy of withdrawal from the Sinai.

In Tel Aviv today, an Israeli court-martial began hearing evidence in the trial of nine Israelis, charged with killing 47 Arab civilians on October 29..the day Israel invaded Egypt. The victims lived in an Israeli village near the Jordan frontier. They violated a curfew and were shot by Israeli border police.

Here in New York, the Afro-Asian group in the United Nations today drafted a resolution condemning Israel for failure to make a complete withdrawal from Egypt. The Resolution calls for the evacuation of all Israeli forces within five days. It will be considered by the General Assembly on Thursday.

In the United Nations political committee, Britain today supported the American proposal for international control of space missiles..and suggested similar controls on atomic submarines. It was pointed out that today submarines are capable of launching missiles.

In London, the new government headed by Harold Macmillan today announced its first measures for cutting down defense spending. It cancelled orders for 100 jet fighters and reduced the program for reserve training.

On Cyprus today, British troops made a house-to-house search of the Greek section of Nicosia and made 33 arrests. Three thousand Greek Cypriots were screened in the operation, which was precipitated by recent underground attacks. A British sailor was killed yesterday in downtown Nicosia.

Today in Washington Secretary of State Dulles continued his testimony on behalf of President Eisenhower's Middle East proposals. Dulles warned the Senate foreign relations and armed services committees that there is "a very great likelihood" American troops would have to go into action in the Middle East if Congress fails to approve the President's program. If the program is approved, he said, the likelihood of American troops becoming involved would.. in his opinion..be very small. Republican Senator Knowland said he is prepared to support the request for standby authroity to commit American forces, if necessary. But KNowland said he was "greatly troubled" by the proposal for economic aid. Knowland wondered why this couldn't be handled under the regular foreign aid program. Dulles explained that the Administration is not asking for any additional money now..but merely to have restrictoons lifted from funds already available. There is, he said, "an economic emergency" in the Middle East, which becomes all the more important because of the danger of Communist subversion. Democratic Senator Morse proposed an amendment to the Administration resolution, which would require the President to report "forthwith" to Congress before ordering American forces into action in the Middle East. Dulles said he thought the President would go along with this suggestion.

Reports from Budapest say that Josef Dudas, one of the leaders of the Hungarian revolt, has been sentenced to death. Dudas became virtual mayor of Budapest in November, during the short time Russian troops wer out of the city."He was arrested as a "counter revolutioaary" on their return.

The Austrian government announced doday that it can no longer afford to support the growing number of Hungarian refugees awaiting emigration to other countries.

Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai will wind up his visit to Poland tonight, with the signing of a joint communique with Polish leaerss in Warsaw. Chou's next stop is Budapest. Radio Budapest says theat Red China has granted the puppet Hungarian government a 50-million dollar loan.

In Washington, an attache at the Soviet Embassy has been ordered out of the country "because of activities incompatible with his diplomatic status." These activities, the State Department dais, include an attempt to buy classified information.

President Eisenhower today completed his tour of six states hit by the drought. Mr. Eisenhower told the drought conference in Wichita that the Federal government will use its full powers to cope with the situation. He will ask Congress, he said, for an additional 76-million dollars to continue and expand the present drought relief. program.

Governor Shivers today appointed William Blakley, a wealthy Dallas attorney, as temporary United States senator from Texas. Shivers made the appointment as his last official act before surrendering the governorship to Senator Price Daniel, who was elected to the office in November. Blakley will take Daniel's seat in the Senate untll a special election is held to name a permanent successor. Blakley is an Eisenhower Democrat. But Senate Majority Leader Johnson says "of course" he will vote with the Democrats in the Senate to insure continued Democratic control. Blakley himself refused to say how he would vote.

It would be a mistake to think that because Congress is delaying the adoption of the Eisenhower Declaration on the Middle East, the Administration is not going forward in its new role as heir to Western power and leadership in the region. Already it is crystalizing long-term plans for the area, and knows enough about what it wants not to be rushed into short-term actions that might prejudice the program as a whole.

In the last days it has turned down the Egptian requests for economic help. It did not so so finally, but told the Egyptians it had to keep open the way for broader settlements. One was a request by Egypt to renew the purhcase of a large amount of our surplus wheat. The other was to release the Egyptian assets - somewhere between forty and seventy million dollars - frozen here at the time of the Canal seizure. They were blocked to protect American investors in the Suez Company. So we told the Egyptians we should hold on to them until a Suez settlement is made.

These two actions show that the State Department is not accepting Nasser's own idea that he is the innocent victim of aggression, and deserves to become the pampered darling of the West. On the contrary, it wants Nasser, in due course, to open the Suez Canal to all,Israel included, and to give acceptable assurances that the Canal will be free from Egyptian political interference. It wants peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. It wants co-operation between Egypt and its neighbors on a regional development of the Nile River. It will not revive the limited Assuan Dam improvement Plan. It wants a similar co-operation between Israel and its neighbors for a regional development of the Jordan River. That is, it wants the Middle Eastern countries to start working together so as to learn how they can live together. It believes this is the only way to regional prosperity and peace.

This is not a program that Colonel Nasser's inflamed nationalism will let hims sponsor at this time. But Egypt is suffering incrasingly from the ecomomic pinch due to the Suez crisis. Its merchant class is being slowly liquidated. Its biggest export assets have been pledged to the Soviet bloc for arms. It is true that a low - economy country can stand a lot of hard times, and Nasser may be able to survive his internal crisis. But he is feeling the pressure. In time he may be willing to settle for something less glorious,but more substantial, than the personal idolatry of the Arab world.

The United States believes in freedom of shipping in the Aquaba Strait, and in the international control of the Gaza Strip, which is what Israel wants, and Israel knows we do. But we have refused to give a pledge to work for them in any way that might encourage Israel to resist the U.N. majority. So we have asked Israel not to resist and to show faith - even blind faith - in our supporting the solutions we favor when the right time comes.

In a sense we are making ourselves unpopular with both Egypt and Israel on such short term issues. As the new leader in the region this may be the price we have to pay for long-term results. It remains to be seen, of course, whether we can play our hand skillfully enough not to drive any of the Middle Eastern states into explosive action. The outcome may depend first of all on our knowing what we want in the long run. But it also depends very much on local conditions, local ambitions, local instability, and our being flexible and prompt in dealing with them.

Tha talk in the Congressional Committees on the President's declaration seems to some extent to have ignored such realities if the Middle East crisis. But if we are going to lead, the President needs power and strong home support. That is what Congress has been asked to give hmm. But there is more about the region that that it is in great danger from aggression, about which Mr. Dulles is talking most. It also is a region where economic and sociological statesmanship, rathern than political and military power, has an extraordinary mission.

The Administration is presumably stressing the Military threat in order to get authority to maneuver in the political and economic areas.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is an obvious element of danger in the President's Middle East proposals..and it is difficult to see how this could be otherwise. The danger must be faced. Dr. John Hutchinson expressed this well. "Democracy is imperilled," he said, "if in a crisis men want security more than they want the burdens and struggles of freedom,"

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 16, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a budget... calling for expenditure of 71-billion, 800-million dollars in the next fiscal year. This is the largest peacetime budget in history. More than half of it (roughly 38-billion dollars) would go to the Army, Navy and Air Force. An additional 7-billion would be spent on programs related to national security, such as foreign aid.

It is a balanced budget holding no hope for tax reductions at this time.

Mr. Eisenhower wants Congress to raise postal rates by 650-million dollars a year. / Private capital, he says, must be given the chance to develop electricity from atomic energy. But he warns that the Federal Government will step in, if "reasonable" progress is not made. The President calls again for passage of a natural gas bill, exempting producers from certain price regulations. He wants 450-million dollars to get the school construction program started. And he also proposes a higher interest rate on G.I. home loans. Farmers would get direct federal payments totaling about a billion, 600-million dollars. Most of these payments would be made under the soil bank program. Another 76-million dollars would be appropriated for emergency drought relief.

→

In Congress, the budget immediately became a subject for partisan debate. Chairman Cannon... of the House Appropriations Committee... charged the Administration with fostering inflation. The budget is balanced, he said, only because of the continuation of high taxes imposed during the Korean War. Republican Representative Halleck replied... by calling Cannon a "free spender" who helped "feed the fires of inflation" for years under President Truman. Democratic Senator Byrd said the small surplus in the budget is based on what he called two "shaky" assumptions---increased revenue from income taxes and higher postal rates. Joseph Martin, Republican leader in the House, predicted Congress will approve the budget "substantially as presented". House Speaker Rayburn allowed, "In times like these you don't usually cut the budget much."

Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey told a news conference the upward trend in spending "should promptly be stopped." Humphrey said he was not criticizing the Administration---but added, "If we don't begin taking less out of this economy, I predict a depression that will make your hair curl."

The Defense Department today made public secret testimony given by Admiral Radford last week before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff was testifying on President Eisenhower's proposals for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Radford expressed the view that Congressional approval of the Eisenhower program would "practically eliminate" the chance of war. It is his "feeling", he said, that the United States has "a little greater military superiority" over Russia than it had a year ago. Only part of Radford's testimony was released.

The Senate disarmament subcommittee heard testimony today on the genetic effect of radioactive fall-out due to nuclear weapons tests. Dr. Warren Weaver... of the National Academy of Sciences... estimated that 6-thousand babies, in this generation, will be born with handicaps because of radioactive fall-out. Dr. Weaver said he believes the United States has to continue these tests... because of the world situation... but it would be wrong, he said, to imply there is no risk to the human race.

The Senate investigating subcommittee ran into opposition today in its inquiry into labor racketeering. Two officials of the Teamsters Union refused to produce their financial records, on grounds that the Senate group lacks authority to investigate union matters. They argued... through counsel... that the subcommittee was set up to investigate government operations, not private activities. Today's hearing was behind closed doors.

Today... in the United Nations... Secretary General Hammarskjold said the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt is "essential" for establishing a basis for peace in the Middle East. Israel has not withdrawn from a point dominating the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, or from the Gaza Strip. It has demanded guarantees that neither of these areas will be remilitarized by Egypt for hostile actions against Israel. The General Assembly will meet tomorrow... at the request of Egypt... to consider the situation.

Pakistan asked the Security Council today to send a United Nations police force to Kashmir, to keep order. Pakistan renewed its demand for a plebiscite in Kashmir... to decide whether it should become part of India or Pakistan... and offered to sign a non-aggression pact with India, once a plebiscite is held.

Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai flew to Budapest today after five days of talks with Polish leaders. In a communique... issued in Warsaw... Polish party boss Gomulka joined Chou En-lai in calling for increased solidarity of the Communist bloc. Gomulka also pledged support to the puppet government of Hungary. In return, Chou En-lai approved the "Polish road to socialism", adopted by Gomulka, and supported Poland's claim to former German territory along its western frontier. They both denounced American policy in the Middle and Far East.

Here in New York, Arturo Toscanini died early today in his sleep. He was 89 years old. Toscanini conducted his last concert... an all-Wagner program... in Carnegie Hall on April 4th, 1954. He will be buried in Milan.

Edward R. Murrow: January 16, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The character of a nation probably shows Most clearly in its annual budget. That being so, one may wonder why budget day in this country arouses only a perfunctory interest. Even though the budget consists of an array of fairly dull figures, there is nothing dull in what the figures reveal about the country and the men who run it.

President Eisenhower's budget tells what the government of the world's richest and most prosperous people proposes to take from its citizens and what it will do with it. It is taking more than ever was taken before in peace time, here or anywhere, nearly 72 billion dollars. And it is spending the greater part on security. That says something about our character. It says two things right away. We care about our security, and are willing to pay through the nose for it. And we care more for military defense than for everything else. The amount we allot to help reduce poverty abroad is relatively insignificant, even though this bears directly on security, and can do much to promote the peace which ultimately will reduce the cost of security.

But even the amount to be spent on foreign aid is vastly more than we plan to spend on improving education. It is axiomatic that education has enabled us to become what we are today in capability and power. It is also undeniable that our education is lagging behind our growth, and cannot be kept abreast without federal support. Not only are we behind in school buildings and the number of teachers, but also in training scientists and technicians for modern requirements. Yet as a nation we are not able, or willing, to pay what it costs to gear our education to its current responsibilities.

Perhaps it is wrong to speak of this as a peace time budget. Our leaders keep stressing that it is a time of emergency and peril. In their judgment we can afford to do only so much. We must keep abreast of new weapons whatever they cost. We have to hold our own in the rivalry for power. We must do it even if we let our education lag. Presumably the leaders think that when the emergency is past it will be time enough to assure the future America an adequate education.

To put things that way is a revelation of character. And here is the arithmetic of it: for defense, 38 billions; for economic and military foreign aid, nearly 4.4 billions; for atomic energy, 2.3 billions; for aid to states for building schools, 185 millions this year, and a billion-and-a-quarter in four years.

Citizens supply just over half of the expected revenue out of income taxes, so it should be of widest interest how the tax dollar is spent. National security takes 59 cents of it. However, that is national security in only the narrowest sense. If one adds the cost of security in the past, the budget is seen for what it really is. Most of the public debt represents the cost of past wars, and interest on the debt now takes ten cents of every tax dollar. Debt retirement takes another two cents. Veterans' benefits take seven cents. Add these together, and we have a total of about 78 cents of every tax dollar that can be put down to past wars and the prevention of future ones.

That leaves 22 cents of the tax dollar for the needs of everyday living. Agriculture takes 7 cents, and so there is 15 cents left. ~~Many people XXXX XXXXX~~ grumble ~~about the size of government and the high cost of bureaucracy~~, and maybe rightly so. ~~But outside the subject matter of past wars and future defense, the cost of government can hardly be said to be out of hand.~~ And it is in these 15 cents that the needs of education, health, and social security are to find whatever the federal government can spend on them.

The budget this year has a special political interest for a negative reason. It is not a budget of penny-pinching, aimed at tax reductions and substantial debt retirement. In other words, it is not a budget of the old Republican orthodoxy. Maybe it is a first glimpse of Eisenhower Republicanism. The orthodox Republicans who have clamored for reduction in the cost of government are now quietly sponsoring this budget. In one particular it is a great comfort to them. It provides for a surplus next year, which with the rising surplus expected at the end of June, will permit some debt retirement. This would give Mr. Eisenhower three budget surpluses in a row, which is nothing for orthodoxy to sneeze at. And if revenue expectations are met, the Administration will not have to ask to keep the maximum debt level at above 275 billions.

Secretary Humphrey, and those of the same mind in Congress, say convincingly that they hope for more orthodoxy next year. And they think some of the fat in this budget might come off through congressional action. But it will not be easy to take fat from a budget of which 78 percent goes to past and present security. Most of it would have to come out of some security item. The easiest to attack would be foreign economic aid. But the savings cannot be great, and even if they are made, this is sure to remain the largest peace-time budget ever laid before the American people. And certainly it is one of the most lopsided ones.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The President has presented his budget... and never in peacetime history has a budget been so big. Kin Hubbard once said, "There's too blamed many ways to spend money... and not enough new ways to get it." That is true. But Stephen McKenna was also right when he said, "We can always live on less, when we have more to live for."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITYH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a budget..calling for expenditure of 71-billion, 800-million dollars in the next fiscal year. This is the largest peacetime budget in history. More than half of it (roughly 38-billion dollars) would go to the Army, Navy and Air Force. An additional 7 - billion would be spent on programs related to national security, such as foreign aid,

It is a balanced budget holding no hope for tax reductions at this time.

Mr. Eisenhower wants Congress to raise postal rates by 650-million dollars a year. Pravate capital, he says, must be given the chance to develop electricity from atomic energy . But he warns that the Federal Government will step in, if "reasonable" progress is not made. The President calls again for passage of a natural gas bill, exempting producers from certain price regulations. He wants 450-million dollars to get the school construction program started. And he also proposes a higher interest rate on G.I. home loans. Farmers would get direct federal payments totaling about a billion, 600-million dollars. Most of these payments would be made under the soil bank program. Another 76-million dollars would be appropriated for emergence drought relief.

In Congress, a budget immediately became a subject for partisan debate. Chairman Cannon..of the House Appropriations Committee..charged the Administration with fostering inflation. The budget is balanced, he said, only because of the continuation of high taxes imposed during the Korean War. Republican Representatvve Halleck replied..by calling Cannon a "free spender" who helped "feed the fires if inflation" for years under President Truman. Democratic Senator Byrd said the small surplus is the budget is based on what he called two "shaky " assumptions -- increased revenue from income taxes and higher postal rates. Joseph Martin, Republican leader in the House, predicted Congress will approve the budget "substantially as presented." House speaker Rayburn allowed, "In times like these you don't usually cut the budget much."

Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey told a news conference the upward trend in spending "should be stopped." Humphrey said he was not criticizing the Administration--but added, "If we don't begin taking less out of this economy, I predict a drpression that will make your hair curl."

The Defense Department today made public secret testimony given by Admiral Radford last week before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff was testifying on President Eisenhower's proposals for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Radford expressed the view that Congressional approval of the Eisenhower program would "practically eliminate" the chance of war. It is his "feeling", he said, that the United States has "a little greater military superiority" over Russia than it had a year ago. Only part of Radford's testimony was released.

The Senate disarmament subcommittee heard testimony today on the genetic effect of radioactive fall-out due to nuclear weapons and tests. Dr. Warren Weaver..of the National Adademy of Sciences.estimated that 6-thousand babies, in this generation, will be born wtth handicaps because of radioactive fall-out. Dr. Weaver said he believes the United States has to continue these tests..because of the world situation..but it would be wrong, he said, to imply there is no risk in the human race.

The Senate investigating subcommitted ran into opposition today in its inquiry into labor racketeering. Two officials of the Teamsters Union refused to produce their financial records, on grounds that the Senate group lacks authority to investigate union matters. They argued,.through counsel.that the subcommitted was set up to investigate government operations, not private activities. Today's hearing was behind closed doors.

Today in the United Nations..Secretary General Hammarskjold said the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces frm Egypt is "essential" for establishing a basis for peace nn the Middle East. Israel has not withdrawn from a point dominating the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, or from the Gaza Strip. It has demanded guarantees that neither of these areas will be remilitarized by Egypt for hostile actions against Israel. The General Assembly will meet tomorrow..at the request of Egypt..to conisder the situation.

Pakistan asked the Security Council today to send a United Nations police force to Kashmir, to keep order. Pakistan renewed its demand for a plebiscite in Kashmir.to decide whether it should become part of India or Pakistan and offered to sign a non-aggression pact with India, once a plebiscite is held.

Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai flew to Budapest today after five days of talks with Polish leaders. In a communique..issued in Warsaw..Polish party boss Gomulka joined Chou En-lai in calling for increased solidarity of the Communist bloc. Gomulka also pledge d support to the puppet government of Hungary . In Return, Chou En-lai approved the "Polish road to socialism", a adopted to Gomulka, and supported Poland's claim to former German territory along its western frontier. They both denounced American policy in the Middle and Far East.

Here in New York, Arturo Toscanini died early today in his sleep. He was 89 years old. Toscanini conducted his last concert an all-Wagner program.. in Carnegie Hall on April 4th, 1954. He will be buried in Milan.

The character of a nation probably shows most clearly in its annual budget. That being so, one may wonder who budget day in this country arouses only a perfunctory interest. Even though the budget consists of an array of fairly dull figures, there is nothing dull in what the figures reveal about the country and the men who run it.

President Eisenhower's budget tells what the government of the world's richest and most prosperous people proposes to take from its citizens and what it will do with it. It is taking more than ever was taken before in peace time, here or anywhere, nearly 72 billion dollars. And it is spending the greater part on security. That says something about our character, It says two things right away. We care about our security, and are willing to pay through the nose for it. And we care more for military defense than for everything else. The amount we allot to help reduce poverty abroad is relatively insignificant, even though this bears directly on security, and can do much to promote the peace which ultimately will reduce the cost of security.

But even the amount to be spend on foreign aid is vastly more than we plan to spend on improving education. It is axiomatic that education has enabled us to become what we are today in capability and power. It is also undeniable that our education is lagging behind our growth, and cannot be kept abrest without federal support. Not only are we behind in school buildings and the number of teachers, but also in training scientists and technicians for moder requirements. Yet as a nation we are not able, or willing, to pay what it costs to gear our education to its current responsibilities.

Perhaps it is wrong to speak of this as a peace time budget. Our leaders keep stressing that it is a time of emergency and period.In their judgement we can afford to do only so much. We must keep abrest of new weapons whatever the cost. We have to hold our own in therivalry for power. We must do it even if we let our education lag. Presumably the leaders think that when the emergency is ast it will be time enough to assure the future America an adequate education.

To put things that way is a revalation of character. And here is the arithmatic of it: for defense, 38 billions; for economic and military foreign aid, nearly 4.4 billions; for atomic energy, 2.3 billions; for aid to states for building schools, 185 millions this year, and a billion - and - a - quarter in four years.

Citizens supply just over half of the expected revenue out of income. taxes, so it should be of widest interest how the tax dollar is spent. National security takes 59 cents of it. However, that is national security in only the narrowest sense. If one adde the cost of security in the past, the budget is seen for what it really is. Most of the public debt represents the cost of past wars, and interest on the debt not takes ten cents of every tax dollar. Debt retirement takes onother two cents. Veterans' benefits take seven cents. Add these together and we have a total of about 78 cents of every tax dollar that can be put down to past wars and the prevention of future ones.

That leaves 22 cents of the tax dollar for the needs of everyday living. Agriculture takes 7 cents, and so there is 15 cents left. It is in these 15 cents that the needs of education, health, and social security are to find what whatever the federal government can spend on them.

Secretary Humphrey and those of the same mind in Congress, say convincingly that they hope for more orthodoxy next year. And they think som of the fat in this budget might come off through congressional action. But it will not be easy to take fat from a budget of which 78 percent goes to past and present security. Most of it would have to come out of some security item. The easiest to attack would be foreign economic aid. But the savings cannot be great, and even if they are made, this is true to remain the largest peace-time budget ever laid before the American people. And certainly it is on of the most lopsided ones.

THis is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:
MURROW: The President has presented his budget..and never in peacetime history has a budget been so big. Kin Hubbard once said, "There's too blamed many ways of spend money..and not enough new ways to get it." That is true. But Stephen McKenna was also right when he said, "We can always live on less, when we have more to live for."

Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 17, 1957

This is the news:

Harold Macmillan today told the British people... in his first speech since becoming prime minister... that the life of the free world depends on the partnership between Britain and the United States. Partners, he said, are bound to have differences. "But true partnership," Macmillan said, "is based on respect. I feel certain that as the months pass, we shall draw continually closer with mutual confidence and respect." Macmillan predicted that history will justify British intervention in Egypt. ~~He reiterated that there will be no general elections, although, in his words, "the job ahead is immense."~~ Britain, he said, will bear its share of the cost of European defense---but not more. He said, "We are going to make sure that we are not spending money on things we do not need, and commitments we cannot sustain." He labeled talk of Britain as a second-class power as "nonsense". He cited Britain's record of scientific and industrial achievement. "The country expects leadership," Macmillan said, "and I shall do my utmost to give it." He expressed belief that it is the "destiny" of Britain to work more closely with countries on the Continent. "Britain is great and will stay great," he said, "provided we close our ranks, and get on with the job."

→

Here in New York today, the United Nations General Assembly debated the question of the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt. The Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi, led off the debate, by charging that... in delaying complete withdrawal... Israel is "threatening peace in the Middle East and beyond." Israel has delayed withdrawing its troops from the Gaza Strip and from a point in the Sinai Peninsula commanding the Gulf of Aqaba. The Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, told the Assembly that Israel is willing to evacuate these two areas, if United Nations forces will move in... and if assurances can be given that Egypt will not use the areas for offensive action against Israel. The Egyptians, she said, had used the Gaza Strip as a base for commando operations against Israel... and had used its position on the Gulf of Aqaba to shut out Israeli ships. The United States backed up the proposition that United Nations troops occupy these two strategic areas. At the same time, it supported an Afro-Asian demand that Israeli forces complete their withdrawal within five days. So far, no vote on this resolution has been taken.

Soviet leaders gave a Kremlin reception tonight for Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai, on the Chinese leader's return to Moscow from a series of conferences in Poland and Hungary. The festivities were marked by another statement by Communist Party Boss Khrushchev praising Stalin. Khrushchev called Stalin a "model Communist" in the fight for "the class interests of the workers." We have criticized Stalin, he said, and we will continue to criticise him. "But when it comes to defending the rights of the workers," Khrushchev said, "would to God that every Communist were able to fight as well."

In an earlier, more sober speech, Soviet Premier Bulganin denounced the Eisenhower Middle East policy as "a plan of economic and political expansion based on armed force." Bulganin said he "greatly appreciated" Red China's support of Soviet policy in Hungary. Chou En-lai also denounced the Eisenhower doctrine... and praised the "solidarity" of the Communist states.

~~Before he left Budapest, Chou signed a joint statement with Janos~~ Kadar,

the puppet premier of Hungary. The statement expressed complete accord regarding the Hungarian situation. Chou agreed that "imperialist reactionary forces" were at the root of the trouble... and he gave full approval to the tactics of the Kadar government. The statement said unity among the Communist states... led by the Soviet Union... is the "foundation" of their success.

Chou will stay in Moscow until Sunday, when he is scheduled to leave for Afghanistan.

The Communist leadership in Moscow called today for an end to "confusion" and "inefficiency" in the realm of agriculture. The party central committee appealed to the farm workers of Russia to step up production, particularly of grain. It complained... specifically... of shortcomings in the use of resources and manpower. Many collective farm managers, it said, have turned out to be "weak and without initiative".

In Washington today, General Gruenther testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in support of President Eisenhower's Middle East policy. The former NATO commander said if Russia is permitted to continue its "trouble-making" unchallenged in the Middle East, the cost to the free world would be "beyond measure." The United States, he said, must be prepared to take direct, positive action to support the Middle East countries, as the situation requires. Secretary of State Dulles is revealed to have told the House committee last week, in secret testimony, that Mr. Eusenhower would "lean over backward" to keep from using American troops in the area.

House Speaker Rayburn called a news conference today to explain his position in this Middle East debate. Rayburn had been reported as favoring the President's request for standby military authority... but as believing that the economic aid feature should be dealt with separately. Rayburn told reporters that... in his opinion... it would be "judicious" for Congress to approve the economic assistance program. "And," he said, "I don't want any two packages."

Washington has a political mystery on its hands. Republican Representative Reece, of Tennessee, received a telegram today... claiming to support Meade Alcorn, of Connecticut, for chairman of the Republican National Committee, succeeding Leonard Hall. The telegram purportedly bore the signature of Harold Stassen and said: "Let's keep the future of the party, and the country, safe from the Nixons and the Knowlands... and really clean up the mess."

Stassen immediately denied either sending... or authorizing... such a telegram. /Reece, who is a member of the Republican National Committee, said he is "of course" accepting Stassen's word. /The telegram was sent from Stamford, Connecticut. Western Union says 44 messages in the same vein were filed there last night by a person who, so far, has not been identified. These telegrams also went to prominent Republicans. And Stassen says he is starting an investigation to find out who it was.

China's Communist Premier, Chou En-Lai, is sometimes called "a round man". That means he is smooth, - no rough edges, a fixer - a negotiator.

When you talk with him, as this reporter did recently in Rangoon, you get the impression that he is merely mouthing the old Stalinist phrases without much conviction. But he long ago demonstrated that he was a flexible man, and he has recently been demonstrating that over almost half the world. He is certainly the world's travelingst premier. - leaves his desk for months on end to travel through Southeast Asia plotting and planning to increase his country's power and influence - he went to see India's Prime Minister Nehru before Nehru went to Washington and went to see him again when Nehru returned, he was on a goodwill tour when the Polish Hungarian crisis broke. - Chou En-Lai flew home for four days and then took off again. This time he was not acting as a legman for the Kremlin. He was a mediator. The vast Russian empire appeared about to become unstuck and Chou En-Lai was asked by Moscow to lend a hand. His prestige amongst the satellites is considerable. He is the premier of a nation of about six hundred million people.

Wielded great influence at the conference of Afro-Asian nations in Bandung last year. Chou is a pal of Khruschev. One of the first things Khruschev did after taking office, was to go to ~~Peiking~~ Peiping and try to heal the wounds left by Stalin's harsh highhandedness. He also offered China an enormous quantity of material for the industrialization of that country. That helped make Chou a Khrushev man dedicated to keeping him in power but it didn't put him in Khruschev's pocket. When Poland demanded a degree of independence, the Chinese Communist applauded and sent encouragement to Warsaw. When the Kremlin asked China if it would approve the use of force, to crush the Poles, China said no. That boosted Chou En-lai's stock with the Poles.

There are reports that when the Revolution broke in Hungary, Khruschev secretly flew to ~~Peiking~~ Peiping, asked China to modify her policy, pleaded for unity and the endorsement of Soviet leadership, Chou said in effect, go ahead and crush the Hungarians, then he hurried off to Moscow. He wasn't intruding, he had been asked to come, the men in the Kremlin needed him.

On this trip he has done what the Russians asked - worked for Communist unity - repeatedly endorsed Soviet leadership. Obviously what he wants is Communist unity, no matter who gets butchered in the process. With the Poles he was flexible - the mediator. The Poles had to endorse Kadar's puppet regime in Hungary, and blame all the ills of the world on American imperialism, but he let them say that Communist countries should be independent and sovereign, and shouldn't try to interfere in each other's internal affairs. This is not Stalinism - it's really a paraphrase of the Five Points agreed to between Chou En-Lai and Nehru.

It does not appear that the triple play in diplomacy - Chou to Nehru to Eisenhower-produced any happy tidings for Chou, so far as Washington policy is concerned. The viciousness of his attacks on American policy and intentions has increased and intensified since he got the word from Nehru. Both the Kremlin and Chou are using this propaganda in an effort to conceal. There has been a real earthquake in most of the Satellite countries. Khruschev remains in power, at least for the time being, a facade of unity in the Communist world has been erected, and the credit for much of this must go to the "round" man from China.

What happens in that country in the future is not only going to be enormously important to us, the Russians will have to be increasingly concerned about it too.

Thanks to Chou En-lai, a semblance of unity has been restored to the Communist world. How durable the patchwork is remains to be seen. It is bound to be tested... in time... by the people of Poland and Hungary who love freedom. And Publilius Syrus said, "It is the unity of feelings and affections that makes the strongest relationship."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Harold Macmillan today told the British people.in his first speech since becoming prime minister..that the life of the free world depends on the partnership between Britain and the United States. Partners, he said, are bound to have differences. "But true partmership," Macmillan said, "is based on respect. I feel certain that as the months pass we shall draw continually closer with mutual condidence and respect." Macmillan predicted that history will justify British intervention in Egypt. Brit in, he said, will bear its share of the cost of European defense -- but no more. He said "We are going to make sure that we are not spending money on thnngs we do not need and commitments we cannot sustain." He labled talk of Britain as a second-class power "nonsense". He cited Britain's record of scientific and industrial achievement. "The country expects leadership," Macmillan said, "and I shall do my utmost to give it." He expressed belief that it is the "destiny" of Britain to work more closely with countries in the Continent. "Britain is great and will stay great," He said "provided we close our ranks and get on with the job."

Here in New York today, the United Nations General Assembly debated the question of the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt. The Egyptian foreign minister, Mahmoud Fawzi, led off the debate by charging that..in delaying complete withdrawal.Israel is "threatening peace in the Middle East and beyond." Israel has delayed withdrawing its troops from the Gaza Strip and from a point in the Sinai Peninsula commanding the Gulf of Aqaba. The Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, told the Assembly that Israel is willing to evacuate these two areas, if United Nations forces will move in and if assurances can be given that Egypt will not use the areas for offensive action against Israel.

The Egyptians, she said, had used the Gaza strip as a base for commando operations against Israel..and had used its position on the Gulf of Aqaba to shut out Israeli ships. The United Staees backed up the propostions that . United Nations troops occupy thesetwo strategic areas. At the same time , it supported an Afro-Asian demand that Israeli forces complete their withdrawal within five days. So far, no vote on this resolution has been taken.

Soviet leaders gave a Kremlin reception tonight for Chinese Communist Premier Chou Enlai, on the Chinese leader's return to Moscow from a series of conferences in Poalnd and Hungary. The festivities were marked by another statement by Communist Party Boss Khrushchev praising Stalin. Khrushchev called Stalin a "model Communist" in the fight for "the class interests of the workers." We have criticized Stalin, he said, and we will continue to criticize him. "But when it comes to defending the rights of the workers," Khrushchev said, "would to God that every Communist were able to fight as well."

In an earlier, more sober speech, Soviet Premier Bulganin denounced the Eisenhower Middle East policy as "a plan of economic and political expansion based on armed force." Bulganin said he "greatly appreicated" Red China's support of Soviet policy in Hungary. Chou En-lai also denounced the Eisenhower doctrine..and praised the "solidarity" of the Communist states.

The Communist leadership in Moscow called today for an end to "confusion" and "inefficincy" in the realm of agriculture.The party central committee appealed to the farm workers of Russia to step up production, particularly of grain. It complained..specifically..of shortcomings in the use of resources and manpower. Many collective farm managers, it said, have turnee out to be "weak and without initiative."

In Washington today, General Gruenther testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in support of President Eisenhower's Middle East policy. The former NATO commander said if Russia is permitted to continue its "trouble making" unchallenged in the Middle East, the cost to the free world would be "beyond measure". The United States, he said, must be prepared to take direct, positive action to support the Middle East countries as the situation requires. Secretary of State Dulles is revealed to have told the House committee last week in secret testimony that Mr. Eisenhower would "lean over backward" to keep from using American troops in the area.

House Speaker Rayburn called a news conference today to explain his position in this Middle East debate. Rayburn had been reported as favoring the President's request for standby military authroity..but as believing that the enonomic aid feature should be deals with separately. Rayburn told rpporters that in his opinion..it would be "judicious" for Congress to approve the economic assistance program. "And", he said, " I do not want any two packages."

Washington has a political mystery on its hand. Republican Represetative of Tennessee received a telegram today claiming to support Meade Alcorn of Connecticut for chairman of the Republican National Committee, succeeding Loenard Hall. The telegram purportedly bore the signature of Harold Stassen and said" "Let's keep the future of the party and the countrysafe from the Nixons and the Knowlands..and really clean up the mess." Stassen immidiately denied either sending..or authorizing..such a telegram. Reece, who is a member of the Republican National Committee, said he is "of course" accepting Stassen's word. The telegram was sent from Stamford, Connecticut. Western Union says 44 messages in the same vein were filed there last night by a person who, so far, has not been identified. These telegrams also went to prominent Republic ans. And Stassen says he is starting an investigation to find out who it was.

China's Communist Premier, Chou En-lai is sometimes called "a round man". Than means he is smooth, - no rough edges, a fixer - a negotiator.

When you talk with him, as this reporter did recently in Rangoon, you get the impression that he is merely mouthing the old Stalinist phrases without much conviction. But he long ago demonstrated that he was a flexible man, and he has recently been demonstrating that, over almost half the world. He is certainly the world's travelingst premier --leaves his desk for months on end to travel through Southeast Asia plotting and planning to increase his country's power and influence - he went to see India's Premi Minister Nehru before Nehru went to Washington and went to see him again when Nehru returned, he was on a goodwill tour when the Polish Hungarian cirsis broke. Chou En-lai flew home forfour days and then took off again. This time he was not acting as a legman for the Kremlin. He was a mediator. The vast Russian empire appeared about to become unstuck and Chou En-lai was asked by Moscow to lend a hand. His prestige amongst the satellites is considerable. He is the premier of a nation of about six hundred million people - wielded great influence at the conference of Afro - Asian nations in Bandung last year. Chou is a pal of Khruschhev. One of the first things Khrussched did after taking office, was to go to Peiping and try to heal the wounds left by Stalin's harsh highhandedness. He also offered China an enormous quantity of material for the industrialization of that country. That helped make Chou a Khrushchev man dedicated to keeping him in power, but it didn't put him in Khrushchev's pocket. When Poland demadedd a degree of independence, the Chinese Communist applauded and encouragement to Warsaw. When the Kremlin asked China if it would approve the use of force, th crush the Poles, China said no. That boosted Chou En-lai's stock with the Poles.

There are reports that when the Revolution broke in Hungary Khrushchev secretly flew to Peiping asked China to modify her policy, pleaded for unity and the endorsement of Soviet leadership, Chou said in effect, go ahead crush the Hungarians, then he hurried off to Moscow. He wasn't intruding, he has been asked to come, the men in the Kremlin needed him.

On this trip he has done what the Russians asked - worked for Communist unity - repeatedly endorsed Soviet leadership. Obviously what he wants is Communist unity, no matter who gets butchered in the process. With the Poles he was flexible - the mediator. THe Poles had to endorse Kadar's puppet regime in Hungary and blame all the ills of the world on American imperialism, but th let them say that Communist countries chould be independent and sovereign and shouldn't try to interfere in each other's internal affairs. THis is not Stalimism - it's really a paraphrase of the Five Points agreed to between Chou En-lai and Nehru.

It does not appear that the triple play in diplomacy - Chou to Nehru to Eisenhower produced any happy tidings for Chou so far as Washington policy is concerned. The viciousness of his attacks on American policy and intentions has increased and intensified since he got word fromNehru. Both the Kremlin and Chou are using this propaganda in an effort to conceal. There has been s real earthquake in most of the Satellite countries. Khurshchef remains in power, at least for the time being, a facade of unity in the Communist world : has been erected, and the credit for much of this must go to the "round " man from China. What happens in that country in the future is not only going to be enormously important to us, the Russians will have to be increasingly concerned about it too.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN

MURROW:Thanks to Chou En-laim a semblance of unity has been restored to the Communist world. How durable the patchwork is remains to be seen. It is bound to be tested..in time..by the people of Poland and Hungary who love freedom. And Publilius Syrus said, "It is the unity of feelings and affections that makes the strongest relationship." Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 18, 1957

This is the news:

Three B-52 bombers landed at March Air Force Base in California today, completing the first non-stop jet flight around the world. / The strato-jets were refueled in the air, and made the 24-thousand-mile flight in the unofficial time of 45 hours and 19 minutes. That's an average speed of better than 500 miles an hour. Five B-52's made up the original formation... but two dropped out. The flight was led by Major General Archie J. Old, Jr., commander of the 15th Air Force. / And General Lemay, of the Strategic Air Command, decorated each of the 27 crewmen with the Distinguished Flying Cross. / Lemay called the flight "a demonstration of the capabilities of SAC to strike any target on the face of the earth." He said a simulated nuclear bomb-drop had been made by the aircraft at a point roughly half-way around the world, south of the Malay Peninsula.

In Washington today, a federal judge sentenced Mrs. Mary Knowles of Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania, to serve 120 days in jail for contempt of Congress. She was also fined 500 dollars. Mrs. Knowles is a librarian, employed at a library operated by the Quakers at Plymouth Meeting. She refused... in 1955... to tell the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee whether she had ever been a Communist. Judge Rizley, of the United States District Court, allowed Mrs. Knowles to post bond pending an appeal.

In another case, Judge Rizley today convicted Robert Shelton, a New York Times copyreader, of contempt of Congress. Shelton had also refused to tell the Senate committee whether he was a Communist. Both he and Mrs. Knowles based their refusal to answer on the guarantees of free speech and press under the First Amendment.

~~Here in New York, the convicted Communist leader... Irving Potash... was sentenced today to two years in federal prison for re-entering the country illegally after being deported to Poland in 1955. Potash refused to tell the court how he re-entered the United States. In addition to the prison sentence, he was ordered to pay a thousand dollar fine.~~

The executive vice president of the Teamsters Union... Einar Mohn... today refused to testify before the Senate committee investigating labor racketeering. Mohn contended that the committee lacks "proper authority" to investigate union matters... that it was set up to investigate government operations. Committee Chairman McClellan complained that teamsters president Dave Beck failed to show up at today's hearing as promised. Beck sent a telegram saying he could not come because he was ill.

The United Nations General Assembly today continued its debate on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egypt. Israel has demanded assurance that if it pulls out of the region commanding the Gulf of Aqaba... and the Gaza Strip... Egyptian forces will not move in to harass Israel. The United States has proposed that United Nations troops occupy those areas, pending a settlement. So has Australia. Today, Britain proposed that the United Nations "internationalize" the Gaza Strip. And Canada suggested that U.N. forces be deployed along a line... stretching from the Gulf of Aqaba to the Mediterranean... to prevent border incidents.

The leaders of four Arab states... Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia.. were scheduled to start a "summit" conference today in Cairo. That ~~conference... for some reason... has been postponed until tomorrow.~~

However, King Saud of Saudi Arabia did confer for two and a half hours today with President Nasser. The Associated Press reports from Cairo that Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria are willing to offer Jordan 36-million dollars a year, to take the place of the annual subsidy Jordan has been receiving from Great Britain.

In Moscow today, Soviet Premier Bulganin... and Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai... signed a communique culminating their talks. The communique said: "The governments of the Soviet Union and the Chinese Peoples Republic resolutely condemn the United States program for the Middle East." The communique promises the Middle East countries that Russia and Red China will give them any support necessary to resist the "colonial policies" of the Washington administration. If Pharaoh's as Any support necessary, "in order to avert aggression and interference in the affairs of the countries of that region." Immediately after the communique was issued, Chou En-lai left Moscow for Afghanistan.

The Hungarian government has ordered the British military attache in Budapest out of the country. He is charged, according to Radio Budapest, with taking an active part in the November revolt.

On Sunday, Poland will hold a parliamentary election... and the Russians have taken precautions, lest it set off an uprising in East Germany. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, cables me from Bonn that for the time being, the East Germans are prohibited from holding any large public meetings. Border police have been ordered to tighten their controls. And a considerable part of Russia's armed force in East Germany, Leiser tells me, has been placed on alert. Leiser based his report on intelligence sources in Berlin.

Daniel Schorr, whose base of operations is Moscow, has gone to Warsaw to cover the Polish election. For a report on how the campaign is going, we switch now to Daniel Schorr in Warsaw.

(tape runs 5:35
ends on cue: "Now back to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y.")

That was the report of my colleague, Daniel Schorr, on the parliamentary election that will be held in Poland this week-end.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

Jules Verne wrote a book about a man who went around the world in 80 days. And now three strato-jets have actually done it... non-stop... in a little more than 45 hours. This shrinking of the world through speed recalls the observation of Willis Fisher. "Men," he said, "have learned to travel faster and faster, though on errands not conspicuously improved. This, I believe, is called progress."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DANIEL SCHORR

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: My colleague, Daniel Schorr, whose base of operations is in Moscow, has gone to Warsaw to cover the Polish elections. For a report on how the campaign is going, we switch now to Daniel Schorr in Warsaw.

SCHORR: Tonight loudspeaker trucks are rolling through the cold mists of Warsaw blaring appeals to turn out Sunday and vote the full National Front ticket. Over Vodge (?) planes dropping leaflets with similar appeals. In Warsaw alone a hundred election rallies held. Everywhere billboards plastered with signs headed by a big, red 20 reminding the voters of January 20th, day of the Parliamentary elections. The same in newspapers and on radio. The campaign of Gomulka's Free party national front has a tone or urgency, of pleading that seems weird on the surface. For there is no other party campaigning, no equal time for anybody on radio, and the Communists would seem to be tilting with windmills, like the loudspeaker shouting into the mist.

In a district that can send six deputies to Parliament, there's a single ballot with ten names. Vote the whole list and you vote for the top six. Cross out a few names and you'll be voting for other Communists or Frontists further down the list. How can they lose? And so what's all the shouting about? Yet there is a reason for the urgency - two reasons. One is that the voters, fed up with Communist rule, may protest by staying home; or they may go to the polls and in his yearnings for a change, may give his vote to those at the bottom of the list, the new faces, the young people known to be anti-Russian or only lukewarm Communists. And thus he could oust the top Communists and change the complexion of the party.

This, the party leadership warns, would be a disaster. It might arouse the Russians. One voter said, "I'll vote the party list because I don't want Warsaw to be another Budapest."

The fear of the Russians is one of Gomulka's most potent arguments.
Another is fear of the Germans, the fear of losing the valuable Saarviesten ? industrial basin added from Germany after the war. At a rally the other night in a school auditorium, in a worker's quarter rebuilt from the old ghetto, I heard a party official get a big hand when he said, "For the first time in centuries, Poland has friendly relations with all her neighbors. That is with Russia, East Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Poland is sick of being a battleground for Russians and Germans and Gomulka promises peace. If the Poles thought they could be rid of the Russians, they would vote for this, but they're being warned that voting against Russia might invite Russian intervention.
If they could vote for a return to capitalism, many might do that. But they are warned that a vote against Communism might only bring a worse form of Communism. If they could vote for freedom, they certainly would, but they're told that their only chance for freedom is the gradual way that Gomulka is trying to bring it about. And so, many will heed the voice of reason and with heavy hearts, vote for the list.

But many others, after the misery and despair they've been through are not disposed to reason and they may vote their emotions. And if the vote turns out at all to be indecisive, if - it would tend to accentuate the conflict already sharp within the Communist Party. Gomulka is having trouble keeping the conflicting wings of his party in line. Much of the zeal of last October, based on the courageous way Gomulka stood up to the Russians has dissipated as he's been obliged to back and fill from October to this January. The situation is potentially explosive and if Poland goes up in smoke, it could be much worse than Hungary.

Poland has a population three times that of Hungary, a third of all the people in the satellite countries. With its industrial potential, it's much more important economically to Russia.

Its position makes it much more vital fmx from a military viewpoint. It's been said but it's worth now repeating, that Poland in 1957, like Poland in 1939, could provide the spark of a World War. But, it should also be said, that while the potential is there, an explosion is not likely.

There are three important factors tending towards stability. One is Gomulka's personal popularity. The second, the position of the Catholic Church, which is supporting the elections, which can be expected to have a calming influence on this largely Catholic people. The third factor or probable factor, is that the Russians are not really looking for trouble. They've avoided making an issue of anti-Soviet actions in Poland, such as the sacking of their Consulate in Ktettin. Russia probably does not want war any more than the West at this point.

Poland today is not free, but there are stirrings of democracy. Voters have been told that unlike 1952, they don't have to vote if they don't want to, and there is no sign that terror will be used as an instrument of election. I heard a Professor tell ~~kkx~~ a student rally the other day "We're only beginning to build democracy in this country. In the West they've had it for a hundred years or more and are still learning, so give us a chance." That's the argument of democratic polls, urging the voters to support this imperfect Communist regime. And what, asknx many voters, is the alternative? This is Daniel Schorr in Warsaw; now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - DANIEL SCHORR

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: My colleague, Daniel Schorr, whose base of operations is in Moscow, has gone to Warsaw to cover the Polish elections. For a report on how the campaign is going, we switch now to Daniel Schorr in Warsaw.

SCHORR: Tonight loudspeaker trucks are rolling through the cold mists of Warsaw blaring appeals to turn out Sunday and vote the full National Front ticket. Over Vodge (?) planes dropping leaflets with similar appeals. In Warsaw alone a hundred election rallies held. Everywhere billboards plastered with signs headed by a big, red 20 reminding the voters of January 20th, day of the Parliamentary elections. The same in newspapers and on radio. The campaign of Gomulka's Free party national front has a tone or urgency, of pleading that seems weird on the surface. For there is no other party campaigning, no equal time for anybody on radio, and the Communists would seem to be tilting with windmills, like the loudspeaker shouting into the mist.

In a district that can send six deputies to Parliament, there's a single ballot with ten names. Vote the whole list and you vote for the top six. Cross out a few names and you'll be voting for other Communists or Frontists further down the list. How can they lose? And so what's all the shouting about? Yet there is a reason for the urgency - two reasons. One is that the voters, fed up with Communist rule, may protest by staying home; or they may go to the polls and in his yearnings for a change, may give his vote to those at the bottom of the list, the new faces, the young people known to be anti-Russian or only lukewarm Communists. And thus he could oust the top Communists and change the complexion of the party.

This, the party leadership warns, would be a disaster. It might arouse the Russians. One voter said, "I'll vote the party list because I don't want Warsaw to be another Budapest." The fear of the Russians is one of Gomulka's most potent arguments. Another is fear of the Germans, the fear of losing the valuable Saarviesten ? industrial basin added from Germany after the war. At a rally the other night in a school auditorium, in a worker's quarter rebuilt from the old ghetto, I heard a party official get a big hand when he said, "For the first time in centuries, Poland has friendly relations with all her neighbors. That is with Russia, East Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Poland is sick of being a battleground for Russians and Germans and Gomulka promises peace. If the Poles thought they could be rid of the Russians, they would vote for this, but they're being warned that voting against Russia might invite Russian intervention. If they could vote for a return to capitalism, many might do that. But they are warned that a vote against Communism might only bring a worse form of Communism. If they could vote for freedom, they certainly would, but they're told that their only chance for freedom is the gradual way that Gomulka is trying to bring it about. And so, many will heed the voice of reason and with heavy hearts, vote for the list.

But many others, after the misery and despair they've been through are not disposed to reason and they may vote their emotions. And if the vote turns out at all ~~to be~~ indecisive, if - it would tend to accentuate the conflict already sharp within the Communist Party. Gomulka is having trouble keeping the conflicting wings of his party in line. Much of the zeal of last October, based on the courageous way Gomulka stood up to the Russians has dissipated as he's been obliged to back and fill from October to this January. The situation is potentially explosive and if Poland goes up in smoke, it could be much worse than Hungary.

Poland has a population three times that of Hungary, a third of all the people in the satellite countries. With its industrial potential, it's much more important economically to Russia.

Its position makes it much more vital for from a military viewpoint. It's been said but it's worth now repeating, that Poland in 1957, like Poland in 1939, could provide the spark of a World War. But, it should also be said, that while the potential is there, an explosion is not likely.

There are three important factors tending towards stability. One is Gomulka's personal popularity. The second, the position of the Catholic Church, which is supporting the elections, which can be expected to have a calming influence on this largely Catholic people. The third factor or probable factor, is that the Russians are not really looking for trouble. They've avoided making an issue of anti-Soviet actions in Poland, such as the sacking of their Consulate in Stettin. Russia probably does not want war any more than the West at this point.

Poland today is not free, but there are stirrings of democracy. Voters have been told that unlike 1952, they don't have to vote if they don't want to, and there is no sign that terror will be used as an instrument of election. I heard a Professor tell a student rally the other day "We're only beginning to build democracy in this country. In the West they've had it for a hundred years or more and are still learning, so give us a chance." That's the argument of democratic polls, urging the voters to support this imperfect Communist regime. And what, asked many voters, is the alternative? This is Daniel Schorr in Warsaw; now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Three B-52 bombers landed at March Air Force Base in California today, completing the first non-stop jet flight around the world. The strato-jets were refueled in the air and made the 24-thousand-mile flight in the unofficial time of 45 hours and 19 minutes. That's an average speed of better than 500 miles an hour. Five B-52's made up the original formation..but two dropped out. The flight was led by Major General Archie J. Old, Jr., commander of the 15th Air Force. And General Lemay of the Strategic Air Command, decorated each of the 27 crewmen with the Distinguished Flying Cross. Lemay called the flight "a demonstration of the capabilities of SAC to strike any target on the face of the earth." He said a simulated nuclear bomb-drop had been made by the aircraft at a point roughly half-way around the world, south of the Malay Peninsula.

In Washington today, a federal judge sentenced Mrs. Mary Knowles of Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania, to serve 120 days in jail for contempt of Congress. She was also fined 500 dollars. Mrs. Knowles is a librarian, employed at a library operated by the Quakers at Plymouth Meeting. She refused.. in 1955..to tell the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee whether she had ever been a Communist. Judge Rizley, of the United States District Court, allowed Drs. Knowees to post bond pending an appeal.

In another case, Judge Rizley today convicted Robert Sheldon, a New York Times copyreader, of contempt of Congress. Shelton had also refused to tell the Senate committee whether he was a Communist. Both he and Mrs. Knowles based their refusal to answer on the guarantees of free speech and press under the First Amendment.

The executive vice president of the Teamsters Unonn..Einar Mohn..today refused to testify before the Senate committee investigating labor racketeering. Mohn contended that the committee lacks "proper authority" to investigate union matters..that it was set up to investigate government operations. Committee Chairman McClelland complained that teamsters president Dave Beck failed to show up at today's hearing as promised. Beck sent a telegram saying he could not come because he was ill.

The United Nations General Assembly today continued its debate on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egypt. Israel has demanded arsurance that if it pulls out of the region commanding the Gulf a Aqaba..and the Gaza Strip..Egyptian forces will not move in to harass Israel. The United States has proposed that Uninted Nations troops occupy those areas, pending a settlement. So has Australia. Today, Britain proposed that the United Nations "internationalize" the Gaza Strip. And Canada suggested that U.N. forces be deployed along a line..stretching from the gulf of Aquaba to the Mediterranean..to prevent border incidents.

The Associated Press reports from Cairo that Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria are willing to offer Jordan 36-million dollars a year, to take the place of the annual subsidy Jordan has been recieving from Great Britain.

In Moscow today, Soviet Premier Bulganin..and Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai..signed a communique culminateing their talks. The Communique said: "The governments of the Soviet Union and the Chinese Peoples Republic resolutely condemn the United states program for the Middle East."The Communique promises the Middle East countries theat Russia and Red China will give them any support necesaary to resist the "colonial policies" of the Washington administration. It promises any support necessary "in order to avert aggression and interference in the affairs of the countries of that region." Immediately after the communique was issued, Chou En-lai left Moscow for Afghanistan.

The Hungarians government has ordered the British military attache in Budapest out of the country. He is charged, according to Radio Budapest, with taking an active part in the November revolt.

On Sunday, Poland will hold a parliamentary election..and the Russians have taken precautions, lest it set off an uprising in East Germany. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, cabled me from Bonn that for the time being, the East Germany are prohibited from holding any large public meetings. Border police have been ordered to tighten their controls. And a considerable part of Russia'a armed force in East Germany, Leiser tells me, has been placed on alert. Leiser based his report on intelligence sources in Berlin.

Daniel Schorr, whose base of operations in Moscow, has gone to Warsaw to cover the Polish electoon. For a report on how the campaign is going,we switch now to D niel Schorr in Warsaw.

SCHORR:Tonight loudspeaker trucks are rolling through the cold mists of Warsaw blaring appeals to turn out Sunday and vote the full National Front ticket. Over Vodge (?) planes dropping leaflets with similar appeals. In Warsaw alone a hundred election rallies held. Everywhere billboards plastered with signs headed by a big, red 20 reminding the voters of January 20th, day of the Parliamentary elections. The same in newspapers and on radio. The campaign of Gomulka's free party national front has a tone or urgency, of pleadint that seems wierd on the surface. For there is no other party campaigning, no equal time for anybody on radio, and theCommunists woul seem to be tilting with windmills, like the loudspeaker shouting into the mist.

In a district that can send six deputies to Parliament, there's a single ballot with ten names. Vote the whole list and you vote for the top six. Cross out a few names and you'll be voting for toher Communists or Frontists further down the list. How can they lose? And so what's all the shouting about? Yet there is a reason for the urgency - two reasons. One is that the voters fed up with Communist rule, may protest by staying home; or they may go to the polls and in his yearnings for a change, may give his vote to those at the bottom of the list, the new faces, the young people known to be anti-Russian or only lukewarm Communists. And thus he would oust the top Communists and change the complexion of the party.

This, the party leadership warns, could be a disaster. It might arouse the Russians. One voter said, "I'll vote the party list because I won't want Warsaw to be another Budapest." The fear of the Russians is one of Gomulks's most potent arguments. Another is fear of the Germans, the fear of losing the valuable Saarviesten(?) industrial basin added from Germany after the war. At a rally the other night in a school auditorium, in a worker's quarter rebuilt from the old ghetto, I heard a party official get a big hand when he waid, "For the first time in centuries, Poland has friendly relations with all her neighbors. That is with Russia, East Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Poland is sick of being a battleground for Russians and Germans and Gomulka promises peace. If the Poles thought they could be rid fo the Rusesans, they would vote for this, but they're being warned that voting against Russia might invite Russian intervention. If they could vote for a return to capitalism, many might to that. But they are warned that a vote against Communism might only bring a worse form of Communism. If they could vote for freedom, they certainly would, but they're told that their only chance for freedom is the gradual way that Gomulka is trying to bring it about. Ans so, many will heed the voice of reason and with heavy hearts, vote for the list.

But many others, after the misery and despair they've been through are not disposed to reason and they may vote their emotions. And if the vote turns out at all to be indicisive, if - it would tend to accentuate the conflict already sharp within the Communist Party. Gomulks is having trouble keeping the conflicting wings of his party in line. Much of the zeal of last October, based on the courageous way Gomulka stood up to the Russians has dissipated as he's been obliged to back and fill from October to this January. The situation is potentially explosive and if Poland goes up in smoke, it could be much worse than Hungary.

Poland has a population three times that of Hungary, a third of all the people in the satellite countries. With its industrial potential, it's much more important economically to Russia. Its position makes it much more vital from a military viewpoint. It;s been said but it's worth now repeating, that Poland in 1957, like Poland in 1939, could provide the spark of a World War. But, it should also be said, that while the potential is there, an explosion is not likely.

There are three important factors tending towards stability. One is Gomulka's personal popularity.The second, the position of the Catholic Church, which is supporting the elections, which can be expected to have a calming influence in this largely Catholic people. The third factor or probably factor, is that the Russians are not really looking for trouble. They've avoided making an issue of anti-Soviet actions in Poland such as the sacking of their Consulate in Stettin. Russia probably does not want war any more than the West at this point.

Poland today is not free, but there are stirrings of democracy. Voters have veen told that unlike 1952, they don't have to vote if they don't want to, and there is not sign that terror will be used as in instrument of election. I heard a professor tell a student rally the other day "We 're only beginning to build democracy in this country. In the West they've had it for a hundred years or more and are still learning, so give us a chance. That's the argument of democratic polls, urging the voters to support this imperfect Communist regime. Ans what, asked many voters, is the alternative?

This is Dan Schorr in Warsaw. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was the report of my colleague, Daniel Schorr, on the parliamentary election that will be held in Poland this week-end.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Jules Verne wrote a book about a man who went around the world in 80 days. And now three strato-jets have acutally done it ..non-stop..in a little lore than 45 hours. THis shrinking of the world through speed recalls the observation of Willis Fisher. "Men", he said, "have learned to travel faster and faster, though on errands not conspiciously improved. This , I believe, is called progress."

Goodnight and good luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, January 21, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. In his summary of the news and in his analysis of its meaning, Mr. Murrow frequently uses the exclusive reports of CBS News correspondents in this country and overseas. By short wave radio, by telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world, their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens.

Each of these correspondents is a specialist, with a specialist's knowledge of the country to which he has been assigned, and each of them makes a point of reporting the often unpublicized behind-the-scene events that give added significance to the news of the day. From their reports you learn not only what is happening, but why it is happening. The result is the complete authoritative coverage for which CBS is noted.

Now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. President Eisenhower took the occasion of his second inauguration today to call for the building of a peace with justice. To proclaim such a purpose, he said, is easy. To attain it, we must be aware of its full meaning and ready to pay its full price. Mr. Eisenhower said that in addition to paying the cost of national military defense, we must help build the security of others. He said we must use our skills and knowledge and, at times, our substance to help others rise from misery however far the scene of suffering may be from our shores. He promised to work for the strengthening of the United Nations. He rejected isolationalism as impossible. "No people," he said, "can live to itself alone." And the President made clear that he was speaking in both economic and military terms. "The United States," he said, "cherishes the friendship of all nations which are or would be free." He promised them we would no more buy their sovereignty than we would sell our own.

In an obvious reference to the satellite countries, Mr. Eisenhower said "We honor the aspirations of those nations which - now captive - long for freedom." But he assured Russia we have no desire to enter into military alliance with these states or - in his words - "establish any artificial imitation of our society." He also said "We honor the people of Russia." And he expressed hope that they will win more intellectual freedom and achieve a larger degree of security under law.

He called international communism "the divisive force" in the world, and he praised the heroes of Hungary. Budapest, he said, is no longer the name of a city; henceforth, it is a symbol of man's yearning to be free.

Mr. Eisenhower read his inaugural speech of about 1600 words in a little less than fifteen minutes. He spoke from the platform in front of the Capitol to a crowd estimated at between twenty and thirty thousand persons. Millions of other Americans heard the address on radio and television. They also heard the public swearing in ceremony immediately preceding the address. The oath was administered to President by Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. Vice President Nixon repeated the oath after Senator Knowland of California. This was the second time the President and Vice President had been sworn in in two days. Because the first term officially ended on January 20th, there was a private swearing in ceremony yesterday, in the East Room of the White House.

After the inaugural address the President and Vice President and their families, had luncheon in the old Supreme Court chamber in the Capitol. Then at 1:47 P.M., Eastern Standard Time, just seventeen minutes later than had been scheduled, the inaugural parade started from the Capitol, to make the long traditional march down Pennsylvania Avenue. President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon and their parties rode in the vanguard of the parade, and then watched from the special Presidential reviewing stand in front of the White House. It then took two hours and forty-eight minutes for the 47 marching units, 52 bands, and 34 floats to pass. The Armed Forces division of the parade featured super-sonic missiles. The cadets of the new Air Force academy marched in an inaugural parade for the first time. And there were two elephants, one big, one small.

Tonight attention will be centered on the four inaugural balls. CBS Radio will broadcast these social events over most of these stations, starting at 11.;0 P.M., Eastern Standard Time.

Brazil agreed today to let the United States set up a guided missile tracking station 250-miles off the Brazilian coast. In return, Brazil will receive American economic aid. It is proposed that the agreement should run for five years.

Today in the United Nations, Sweden proposed a two year moratorium on nuclear weapons' tests until the effects of atomic radiation can be more fully determined. Sweden made the proposal to the Political Committee, after Norway had submitted a three-power resolution that would have nations give advance notice of nuclear tests. The other two sponsors of the resolution are Canada and Japan.

Here in Washington today the Atomic Energy Commission announced that Russia had set off what was at least its fifth nuclear explosion in five months. The commission gave no details.

America's second atomic-powered submarine, the Sea Wolf, made its first trial run today off Groton, Connecticut. The trial was delayed three weeks because of trouble in the power plant.

Israel today handed over 499 Egyptian prisoners of war to United Nations officers at El Arish, in the Sinai Peninsula. These are the first of more than 5,000 Egyptian prisoners to be repatriated under the auspices of the International Red Cross, in return for four Israeli prisoners held by Egypt.

Today in Ankara, the four Moslem members of the Baghdad Pact, Pakistan, Turkey, Iran and Iraq, issued a communique approving President Eisenhower's proposals for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. The four countries said they noted "ith gratification" that the proposals are not designed to create spheres of influence or to enslave peoples of the Middle East.

Jordan served formal notice on Britain today that it wants to break off its treaty, under which the British have been allowed to maintain bases in Jordan.

Here in Washington today the Supreme Court granted a new hearing to 23 Hollywood actors and writers who charged that they had been blacklisted and, consequently, deprived of their liberty to work. The actors and writers had filed damage suits against major film companies and members of the House Un-American Activities Committee, suits totalling millions of dollars. They had all balked at answering questions put to them by the committee in 1951. Five of them have been identified by witnesses as Communists.

There was a time, and it was not so long ago, when a Republican President could say "the nation's business is business." Today Mr. Eisenhower said, in effect, "this nation's business is freedom" freedom for those who aspire to it and freedom for those who hope to regain it. What he said in substance was - the earth has rarely known such peril as today, and nations must choose whether to support tyranny or freedom. "No nation," he said "can longer be a fortress lone and strong and safe. Any people seeking such shelter for themselves can now build only their own prison."

The President titled his speech: "The Price of Peace." He did not say what that price would be. But he left no doubt that the price will be high. No doubt, that in his mind, at least, this nation cannot survive as an island of luxury, wealth and waste surrounded by nations and peoples whose desire for freedom is not less great than ours. But who are hungry and tired and threatened. It was a speech devoid of all belligerence, entirely lacking in easy optimism. A speech which largely ignored domestic affairs and concentrated upon generalities in the international field, restating objectives with which most Americans would probably agree. It was a middle-of-the-road speech by a man of war, dedicated to the proposition that peace is better than war.

Today's audience was not very responsive. No one amongst the senators nor the diplomats present appeared to agree or disagree violently with anything the President had to say.

This city of Washington lives, calculates and talks politics. Its primary export is waste paper. Politically speaking, it is case hardened, and there seemed to be a recognition, on that platform this morning, that Mr. Eisenhower is not a comer but a goer. He cannot - under the terms of the 22nd Amendment - succeed himself. Today he was vigorous, read well, smiled frequently during his long ordeal on the reviewing stand. But there was the certain sense that he was beginning his last term in office, a man whose military reputation is secure, but whose reputation as a successful leader of the free world coalition has still to be won.

The so-called new Eisenhower Republicanism is not by any means confined to the international arena. But it was here that the President chose to put his emphasis, because he clearly regards the threat in this area to be more immediate and crucial. There are many instances in history where men who have spent their lives studying the art of warfare, desired to be known to history as men who have achieved an assured peace. This was true of Winston Churchill - and, I suspect, that it is true of Dwight Eisenhower. But the inaugural parade should have dispelled any idea that it is part of the President's purpose to rely upon justice and good will to defend freedom. It was a parade packed with power. It was, perhaps, designed - as indeed his speech was - to reinforce the requirements of his new budget, a budget which reflects the fact that we're spending about three-fourths of our total income for past wars and future defense.

The President, in his speech today, did not claim that peace could be had in the bargain basement. He certainly implied that it would be expensive. He didn't say how expensive, probably for the very good reason that he doesn't know. But he certainly was not saying that the sum total of the cost could be measured in terms of missiles, tanks, aircrafts and carriers. It seemed to this reporter that in his first administration, Mr. Eisenhower accepted, consolidated and built into the fabric of this country many of the social and economic changes brought about by previous administrations. Internal dissension and bitterness were reduced. The inevitability of gradual change was accepted; it was accepted not only by the President but by the majority of the Republican party.

What the President tried to do today, it seems to me, was to sign, seal and deliver a renunciation of isolationism for this country. He did it in broad and sweeping terms, which aroused no frenzied enthusiasm on the part of his hearers. But he was obviously concerned lest the Korean War, the failure of the summit meeting at Geneva, the disruption of the Western alliance over Suez combined to produce a revival of isolationism in this country. And what he was saying, in effect, was that, in his opinion, there is no house room for such a policy in his second Administration.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: We've come to take aeroplanes for granted. Yet, we just can't resist the temptation to look up wonderingly at these big mechanical birds in flight. So why not put that Skywatch into the service of your country? The planes that fly overhead today are all friendly. But the day could come when an enemy could send its planes on a sneak attack, on our big cities and vital defense areas. We all hope and pray that day will never come. Yet we must remain on the alert 24-hours a day, and that's where you come in. We have an elaborate radar network for spotting planes crossing our borders, but there are unavoidable gaps in that network. To fill those gaps, our Air Defense Command has organized the Ground Observer Corps, consisting of thousands of men, women and teen-agers who give a few hours of their spare time each week to scan the skies for unidentified or suspicious planes. You can help protect American from possible sneak bombing attack by joining the Ground Observer Corps. Contat your local Civil Defense Office.

Now, here is Ed Murrow with the word for today.

MURROW: The office of the President is not easily defined. Sidney Hyman, the historian, said "The American Presidency is as much a sum of outlook and word as it is of law and deed. It is what all Presidents have said and felt about the place they held and what the President of the moment may add or alter in this legacy of the past." Good night and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time over most of these stations, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Mr. Murrow's is one of many authoritative broadcasts, brought to you each day by CBS News. Later tonight, in the full hour of special programming, many of the day's events will come in for close examination on two programs on CBS Radio: one of them, Capitol Cloakroom, will present Senator Edward J. Thye, Republican of Minnesota, who will be interviewed by sev... several CBS News correspondents on the nation's budgetary problems and on the President's Middle East resolution. On The World Tonight you'll hear a feature on the Polish elections, a penetrating analysis on Russia and her satellites, and there will also be colorful reports on the inauguration ceremonies today.

Included in this hour of CBS Radio program will also be two news spots: five minutes of news by Robert Trout and five minutes of news analysis by Eric Sevareid.

All on the CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY, 21, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower took the occasion of his second inauguration today to call for the building of a peace with justice. To proclaim such a purpose, he said, is easy. To attain it, we must be aware of its full meaning and ready to pay its full price. Mr. Eisenhower said that in addition to paying the cost of national military defense, we must help build the security of others. He said we must use our skills and knowledge and, at times, our substance to help others rise from misery however far the scene of suffering may be from our shores. He promised to work for the strengthening of the United Nations. He rejected isolationalism as impossible. "No people", he said, "can live to itself alone." And the President made clear that he was speaking in both economic and military terms. "The United States," he said, "cherishes the friendship of all nations which are or would be free." He promised them we would no more buy their sovereignty than we would sell our own.

In an obvious referenc e to the satellite countries, Mr. Eisenhower said "We honor the aspirations of those nations which - now captive - long for freedom." But he assured Russia have no desire to enter into military alliance with these states or - in his words - "establish any artificial imitation of our society." He also said "We honor the people of Russia." And he expressed hope that they will win more intellectual freedom and achieve a larger degree of security under law.

He called international communism "the divisive force" in the world, and he praised the heroes of Hungary. Budapest, he said, is no longer the name of a city; henceforth, it is a symbol of man's yearning to be free.

Mr. Eisenhower read his inaugural speech of about 1600 words in a little less than fifteen minutes. He spoke from the platform in front of the Capitol to a crowd estimated at between twenty and thirty thousand persons. Millions of other Americans heard the address on radio and television. They also heard the public swearing in ceremony immediately preceding the address. The oath was administered to President Eisenhower by Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court. Vice President Nixon repeated the oath after Senator Knowland of California. This was the second time the President and Vice President had been sworn in in two days. Because the first term officially ended on January 20th, there was a private swearing in ceremony yesterday, in the East Room of the White House.

After the inaugural address the President and Vice President and their families, had luncheon in the old Supreme Court chamber in the Capitol. Then at 1:47 PM, Eastern Standard Time, just seventeen minutes later than had been scheduled, the inaugural parade started from the Capitol, to make the long traditional march down Pennsylvania Avenue. President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon and their parties rode in the vanguard of the parade, and then watched from the special Presidential reviewing stand in front of the White House. It then took two hours and forty-eight minutes for the 47 marching units, 52 bands, and 34 floats to pass. The Armed Forces division of the parade featured super-sonic missiles. The cadets of the new Air Force academy marched in an inaugural parade for the first time. And there were two elephants, one big, one small.

Tonight attention will be centered on the four inaugural balls. CBS Radio will broadcast these social events over most of these stations, starting at 11:00 PM Eastern Standard Time.

Brazil agreed today to let the United States set up a guided missile tracking station 250 miles off the Brazilian coast. In return, Brazil will receive American economic aid. It is proposed that the agreement should run for five years.

Today in the United Nations, Sweden proposed a two year moratorium on nuclear weapons tests until the effects of atomic radiation can be more fully determined. Sweden made the proposal to the Political Committee, after Norway had submitted a three-power resolution that would have nations give advance notice of nuclear tests. The other two sponsors of the resolution are Canada and Japan.

Here in Washington today the Atomic Energy Commission announced that Russia had set off what was at least its fifth nuclear explosion in five months. The commission gave no details.

America's second atomic-powered submarine, the Sea Wolf, made its first trial run today off Groton, Connecticut. The trial was delayed three weeks because of trouble in the power plant.

Israel today handed over 499 Egy½tian prisoners of war to United Nations officers at El Arish, in the Sinai Peninsula. These are the first of more than 5,000 Egy tian prisoners to be repatriated under the auspices of the International Red Cross, in return for four Israeli prisoners held by Egypt.

Today in Ankara, the four Moslem members of the Baghdad Pact, Pakistan, Turkey, Iran and Iraq, issued a communique approving President Eisenhower's proposals for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. The four countries said they noted "with gratification" that the proposals are not designed to create spheres of influence or to enslave peoples of the Middle East.

Jordan served formal notice on Britain today that it wants to break off its treaty, under which the British have been allowed to maintain bases in Jordan.

Here in Washington today the Supreme Court granted a new hearing to 23 Hollywood actors and writers who charged that they had been blacklisted and, consequently, deprived of their liberty of work. The actors and writers had filed damage suits against major film companies and members of the House Un-American Activities Committee, suits totalling millions of dollars. They had all balked at answering questions put to them by the committee in 1951. Five of them have been identified by witnesses as Communists.

There was a time, and it was not so long ago, when a Republican President could say "the nation's business is freedom" freedom for those who aspire to it and freedom for those who hope to regain it. What he said in substance was - the earth has rarely known such peril as today, and nations must choose whether to support tyranny or freedom. "No nation," he said "can longer be a fortress lone and strong and safe. Any people seeking such shelter for themselves can now build only their own prison."

The President titled his speech: "The Price of Peace." He did not say what that price would be. But he left no doubt that the price will be high. No doubt, that in his mind, at least, this nation cannot survive as an island of luxury, wealth and waste surrounded by nations and peoples whose desire for freedom is not less great than ours. But who are hungry and tired and threatened. It was a speech devoid of all belligerence, entirely lacking in easy optimism. A speech which largely ignored domestic affairs and concentrated upon generalities in the international field, restating objectives with which most Americans would probably agree. It was a middle-of-the-road speech by a man of war, dedicated to the proposition that peace is better than war.

Today's audience was not very responsive. No one amongst the senators nor the diplomats present appeared to agree or disagree violently with anything the President had to say.

This city of Washington lives, calculates and talks politics. Its primary export is waste paper. Politically speaking, it is case hardened, and there seemed to be a recognition, on that platform this morning, that Mr. Eisenhower is not a comer but a goer. He cannot - under the terms of the 22nd Amendment - succeed himself. Today he was vigorous, read well, smiled frequently during his long ordeal on the reviewing stand. But there was the certain sense that he was beginning his last term in office, a man whose military reputation is secure, but whose reputation as a successful leader of the free world coalition has still to be won.

The so-called new Eisenhower Republicanism is not by any means confined to the international arena. But it was here that the President chose to put his emphasis, because he clearly regards the threat in this area to be more immediate and crucial. There are many instances in history where men who have spent their lives studying the art of warfare, desired to be known to history as men who have achieved an assured peace. This was true of Winston Churchill - and, I suspect, that it is true of Dwight Eisenhower. But the inaugural parade should have dispelled any idea that it is part of the President's purpose to rely upon justice and good will to defend freedom. It was a parade packed with power. It was, perhaps, designed - as indeed his speech was - to reinforce the requirements of his new budget, a budget which reflects the fact that we're spending about three-fourths of our total income for past wars and future defense.

The President, in his speech today, did not claim that peace could be had in the bargain basement. He certainly implied that it would be expensive. He didn't say how expensive, probably for the very good reason that he doesn't know. But he certainly was not saying that the sum total of the cost could be measured in terms of missiles, tanks, aircrafts and carriers. It seemed to this reporter that in his first administration, Mr. Eisenhower accepted, consolidated and built into the fabric of this country many of the social and economic changes brought about by previous administrations. Internal dissension and bitterness were reduced. The inevitability of gradual change was accepted; it was accepted not only by the President but by the majority of the Republican party.

What the President tried to do today, it seems to me, was to sign, seal and deliver a renunciation of isolationism for this country. He did it in broad and sweeping terms, which aroused no frenzied enthusiasm on the part of his hearers. But he was obviously concerned lest the Korean War, the failure of the summit meeting at Geneva, the disruption of the Western alliance over Suez combined to produce a revival of isolationism in this country. And what he was saying, in effect, was that, in his opinion, there is no house room for such a policy in his second Administration.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan,

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The office of the President is not easily defined. Sidney Hyman, the historian, said "The American Presidency is as much a sum of outlook and word as it is of law and deed. It is what all Presidents have said and felt about the place they held and what the President of the moment may add or alter in this legacy of the past." Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 22, 1957

This is the news:

Israel announced today that it has completed its evacuation of the Sinai Peninsula, except for the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The Israeli government has demanded guarantees that if it evacuates these two areas, they will not again be used by Egypt as bases against Israel. So far, these guarantees have not been given.

The United States is reported today to have urged Secretary General Hammarskjold to take "firm initiative" in posting United Nations troops in the Gaza Strip and at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Britain is said to have told Hammarskjold today that he already has ample authority to station U.N. troops in the area indefinitely, until a settlement is reached.

In the United Nations political committee today, Iraq called on the western powers to stop sending arms to Israel... in order, it said, "to avoid a future conflagration." And Cairo newspapers said today that unless Israeli forces get out of Gaza, Egypt will stop clearance work in the Suez Canal.

In Washington today, the House Foreign Affairs Committee completed its public hearings on President Eisenhower's Middle East proposals. Committee Chairman Gordon said the group should finish work on the proposals this week... and send it to the House for a vote next week. There will be no "gag", he said. The resolution will be open to amendments from the floor.

The last public witness before the House committee today was the former secretary of the Air Force, Thomas Finletter. Finletter said to refuse to give President Eisenhower standby authority to use American troops in the Middle East "might encourage the Communists to aggression." And the same, he said, applies to the provisions for economic aid. But Finletter said that... in his opinion... there should be a "broadening" of the President's proposals. The United States, he said, should make clear that, as far as the Middle East itself is concerned, we do not plan to revert to the policies of the past. He said there should be a declaration... somewhere in the resolution... that this country will seek assurance of uninterrupted use of the Suez Canal without discrimination against the shipping of any country. ~~He thought there should also be in the resolution a provision making it abundantly clear that the Congress is as opposed to Communist subversion of the Middle East countries as it is opposed to open Communist aggression.~~

A proposal that President Eisenhower made in his State of the Union message... regarding the creation of a commission to investigate the nation's financial system... ran into opposition today in the House Banking Committee. Mr. Eisenhower requested that the commission be composed of "qualified citizens." The Banking Committee voted 16 to 12... on strict party lines... to have the investigation made by Congress. [redacted]

The Republican National Committee today elected Meade Alcorn of Connecticut as its chairman, succeeding Leonard Hall. The vote for Alcorn

was unanimous, after the committee heard he was President Eisenhower's personal choice. Alcorn has served as national committeeman since 1953. He called immediately... on his election as chairman... for a stronger party organization in the South. He also called for the wresting of Congress from Democratic control in the off-year election in 1958.

The litigation between the Italian Line and the Swedish American Line... over responsibility in the sinking last summer of the Andrea Dória... was settled out of court today in London. The settlement was announced by the London Institute of Underwriters. The institute said it "should provide a basis for the prompt settlement of all claims resulting from the collision, without recourse to further litigation."

The Polish government announced tonight that 98 and four-tenths percent of the voters in Sunday's parliamentary election backed the candidates favored by Communist Party boss Gomulka. Today, on the strength of this backing, Gomulka recalled the Polish ambassador to Moscow and replaced him with a man described by dispatches from Warsaw as "a political neutral."

New York police today announced the end of their search for the "Mad Bomber." They identified him as George Metesky, aged 53, of Waterbury, Connecticut. Metesky... a blue-eyed, [redacted] man of innocent appearance... was arrested last night at his home, after police found several partially constructed bombs on the premises. Arresting officers say he readily confessed, and waived extradition to New York. Records show that in 16 years, the Mad Bomber "planted" 32 home-made bombs in theaters, railroad stations, telephone booths and other public places. Fifteen persons were injured, none of them fatally. Recently, the New York Journal-American began carrying on a public correspondence with the bomber, in its columns. In one letter to the newspaper, the [redacted] bomber revealed that he had been hurt in an accident involving the Consolidated Edison Company, in 1931. (He had borne a grudge [redacted] against the company ever since). A secretary, who had been employed by Consolidated Edison for 25 years, [redacted] recalled Metesky's case... and [redacted] informed police. Today he was brought to New York to face prosecution. HE HAS BEEN SENT TO BELLEVUE HOSPITAL FOR OBSERVATION.

Edward R. Murrow: 7.45 p.m.

The Middle East is laying some of its explosive problems on our doorstep in Washington next week. King Saud of Saudi Arabia, though coming as a monarch and a state guest will also speak for Egypt and Syria, ~~and so~~ which means for the most pro-Nasser states of the Arab world. He will be followed at once by Crown Prince Abdul Illah of Iraq, who will speak for the Moslem states of the Bagdad pact.

It is between these factions that divide the Arab world that the Eisenhower doctrine must operate if it is to succeed at all. And it is between them both and Israel that it must seek the only settlement that can bring permanent peace and prosperity to the region.

The two Arab factions already are divided in their evaluation of the Eisenhower doctrine. Reports from Cairo say that Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia last week agreed to reject the doctrine quite flatly. This, however, may be an overstatement. ~~King Saud would not be coming to Washington simply to deliver a rejection. He is coming to see what he can get. The poorest way to get something under the doctrine would be to denounce it in advance.~~

On the other hand, the Moslem states of the Bagdad pact -- Pakistan, Iraq and Turkey -- warmly endorsed the Eisenhower doctrine over the week end.

They declared that it was not devised to set up zones of influence in the Middle East. ~~It could not have been more helpful, or punctual, in putting the case for the American policy.~~

The explosive nature of the problems is illustrated by what is happening to Jordan. Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria last week agreed to take over the subsidy to Jordan heretofore paid by Britain. The British payments end in March. The three Arab countries promised to find the 36 million dollars a year needed to keep the country going.

Jordan is unable to live without the subsidy, but though it is poor and unstable, its allegiance to Nasser is an enormous factor in the conflict with Israel. It had gone over to him last Fall while continuing to take British money. Now it is body and soul on Nasser's side. This not only is a defeat for Israel, it is a setback for the West. We go into the hard task of administering the Eisenhower doctrine at a moment when Nasser has clinched his hold on one of the big assets of the region.

The only way this could have been avoided would have been for us to pick up the tab in Jordan ourselves. Actually some pro-Western elements in Jordan offered us the chance. But we had to turn it down. This subsidy is an annual contribution, and Congress doesn't go in for annual contributions to any foreign ~~recipient~~ country.

The Jordan question is extra-explosive because Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia probably can't go on carrying Jordan indefinitely. It costs too much. So Jordan may fall to pieces before the eyes of the world, and may even do so within a year.

Then what would happen? Obviously there would be a scramble to possess it. Iraq would want it. Nasser thinks he owns it anyway. If someone moved in, that would be aggression. Then the United Nations would be involved, since Jordan is a member. And we should be involved, more than any Western country.

Clearly we don't want this to happen. And if we see it is about to happen, we should do our utmost to keep Jordan afloat. We can't offer an annual subsidy, but we can give economic help. And as Jordan's chief domestic problem is its heavy contingent of refugees from Palestine, our aid might be part of a larger approach to a settlement between Israel and its neighbors. This probably is the only constructive glimpse we see in the muddle.

But it is not enough to give Washington any comfort at this time. It knows that its biggest problem is the Israeli-Arabian conflict, and with Jordan finally and formally in Nasser's grasp the price for an Israel peace is going to be higher. It will be higher first of all for Israel. But that makes it indirectly higher for us too.

If Israel has not pulled its forces out of the Gaza strip and the coast at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba by the end of this week, a U.N. resolution calling for sanctions against Israel is scheduled to come before the Assembly. So far we have voiced a desire to see U.N. forces kept in the disputed areas. But we have not committed ourselves to that unconditionally. We probably would vote for sanctions, though we should insist on their not being unilateral, that is against Israel alone. We should want Egypt punished too for raids into Israeli territory. That is, we shall try to keep up some pressure on Nasser. But even at best, it looks as though the Eisenhower doctrine will have little scope to keep Nasser from consolidating his strength, not only against Israel, but against the Eisenhower doctrine as well. When King Saud arrives, we may be able to interest him in keeping Nasser from going too fast and too far, ~~as being in Saud's interest too.~~ But that seems to be the best our leadership can hope for from the visit.

George Bryan -

and, in some respects, is bound to change.

American policy is much under discussion... [redacted]

Yet the long-range objectives do not change. Dwight D. Eisenhower would probably agree with Ulysses S. Grant, who said: "We want no more land. We do want to improve what we have... and to see our neighbors improve and grow so strong that the design of any other could not endanger them."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Israel announced today that it has completed its evacuation of the Sinai Peninsula, except for the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The Israeli government has demanded guarantees that if it evacuates these two areas, they will not again be used by Egypt as bases against Israel. So far, these guarantees have not been given.

The United States is reported today to have urged Secretary General Hammarskjold to take "firm initiantive" in posting United Nations troops in the Gaza Strip and at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Britain is said to have told Hammarskjold today that he already has ample authority to station U.N. troops in the area indavinitely, until a settlement is reached.

In the United Nations political committee today, Iraq called on the western powers to stop sending arms to Israel...in order, it said, "to avoid a future conflagration." And Cairo newspapers said today that unless Israeli forces get out of Gaza, Egypt will stop clearance work in the Suez Canal.

In Washington today, the House Foreign Affairs Committee completed its public hearings on President Eisenhower's Middle East proposals. Committee Chairman Gordon said the gooup should finish work on the proposals this week..and send it to the House for a vote next week. There will be no "gag", he said. The resolution will be open to amendments from the floor.

The last public witness before the House committee today was the former secretary of the Air Force, Thomas Finletter. Finletter said to refuse to give President Eisenhower standby authority ut use American troops in the Middle East "might encourage the Communists to aggression." But Finletter said that..in his opinoon.. there should be a "broadening" of the President's proposals. The United States, he said, should make clear that, as far as the Middle East itself is concerned, we do not plan to revert to the policies of the past. He said there should be a declaration..somewhere in the resolution..that this country will seek assurance of uninterrupted use of the Suez Canal without discrimination against the shipping of any country.

A proposal that President Eisenhower made in his state of the Union message regarding the creation of a commission to investigate the nation's financial system..ran into opposition today in the House Banking Committee. Mr. Eisenhower requested that the commission be composed of "qualified citizens" The Banking Committed voted 16 to 22..on strict party lines..to have the investigation made by Congress.

The Republican National Committee today elected Meade Alcorn of Connecticut as its chairman, succeeding LeonafdHall. The vote for Alcorn was unanimous, after the committee heard he was President Eisenhower's personal choice. Alcorn has served as national committeeman since 1953. He called immediately..on his election..as chairman..for a stronger party organization in the South. He also called for the wresting of Congress from Democratic control in the off-year election nn 1958.

The litigation between the Italian line and the Swedish American Line over responsbility in the sinking last summer of the Andrea Doria..was settled out of court today in London. The settlement was anouunced by the London Institute of Underwriters. The institute said it"should provide a basis for the prompt settlement of all claims resulting from the collision, without recourse to further litigation."

The Polish government announced toiight that 98 and four - tenths percent of the voters in Sunday's parliamentary election backed the candidates favored by Communist Party boss Gomulka. Today, on the strength of this backing, Gomulka recalled the Polish ambassador to Moscow and replaced him with a man described by dispatches from Warsaw as " a political neutral."

New York police today announced the end of their search for the "Mad Bomber". They identified himas George Metesky, aged 53, of Waterbury, Connecticut. Metesky ..a blue-eyed, man of innocent appearance.was arrested last night at his home, after police found several partially constructed bombs on the premises. Arresting officers say he readily confessed and waived extradition to New York. Records show that in 16 years, the Mad Bomber "planted" 32 home-made bombes in theaters railroad stations, telephone booths and other public places. Fifteen persons were injured, none of them fatally. Recently, the New York Journal -American began carrying on a public correspondence with the bomber. in its columns. In one letter to the newspaper, the bomber revealed that he had been hurt in an accident invovling the Consolitated Edison Company in 1931. He had borne a grudge against the company ever since. A secretary who had been employed by Consolidated Edison for 25 years, recalled Metesky's case.and informed police. Today he was brought to New York to face prosecution. He has been sent to Bellvue Hosiital for observation.

The Middle East is laying some of its explosive problems on our doorstep in Washington next week. King Saud of Saudi Arabia, though coming as a monarch, and a state guest will also speak for Egypt and Syria, which means for the most pro-Nasser states of the Arab world. He will be followed at once by Crown Prince Abdul Illah of Iraq, who will speak for the Moslem states of the Bagdad pact.

It is between these factions that divide the Arab world that the Eisenhower doctrine must operate if it is to succeed at all. And it is between them both and Israel that it must seek the only settlement that can bring permanent peace and prosperity to the region.

The two Arab factions already are divided in their evaluation of the Eisenhower doctrine. Reports from Cairo say that Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia last week agreed to reject the doctrine quite flatly. This, however may be an overstatement.

On the other hand, the Moslem states of the Baghdad pact - Pakistan, Iraq and Turkey - warmly endorsed the Eisenhower doctrine over the week end. They declared that it was not devised to set up zones of influence in the Middle East.

The explosive nature of the problems is illustrated by what is happening to Jordan. Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria last week agreed to take ofer the subsidy to Jordan heretofore paid by Britain. The British payments end in March. The three Arab countries promised to find the 36 million dollars a year needed to keep the country going.

Jordan is unable to live without the subsidy, but though it is poor and unstable its allegiance to Nasser is an enormous factor in the conflic with Israel. It had gone over to him last Fall while continuing to take British money. Now it is body and soul on Nasser's side. This not only is a defeat for Israel, it is a setback for the West. We go into the hard task of administering the Eisenhower doctrine at a moment when Nasser has clinched his hold on one of the big assets of the region.

The only way this could have been avoided would have been for us to pick up the tab in Jordan ourselves. Actually some pro-Western elements in Jordan offered us the chance but we had to turn it down. This subsidy is an annual contribution, and Congress doesn't go in for annual contributions to any foreign country.

The Jordan question is extra-explosive because Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia probably can't go on carrying Jordan indefinitely. It costs too much. So Jordan may fall to pieces before the eyes of the world, and may even do so within a year.

Then what would happen? Obviously there would be a scramble to possess it. Iraq would want it. Nasser thinks he owns it anyway. If someone moved in, that would be aggression. Then the United Nations would be involved, since Jordan is a member. And we should be involved, more than any western country.

Clearly, we con't want this to happen. And if we see it is about to happen, we should do our utmost to keep Jordan afloat. We can't offer an annual subsidy, but we can give economic help. And as Jordan's chief domestic problem is its heavy contingent of refugees from Palestine, our aid might be part of a larger approach to a settlement between Israel and its neighbors. This probably is the only constructive glimpse we see in the muddle.

But it is not enough to give Washington any comfort at this time. It knows that its biggest problem is the Israeli - Arabian conflict, and with Jordan finally and formally in Nasser's grasp the price for an Israel peace is going to be higher. It will be higher first of all for Israel. But that makes it indirectly higher for us too.

If Israel has not pulled its forces out of the Gaza strip and the coast at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba by the end of this week, an U.N. resolution calling for sanctions against Israel is scheduled to come before the Assembly. So far we have voiced a desire to see U.N. forces kept in disputed areas. But se have not committed ourselves to that unconditionally. Weprobably would vote for sanctions, though we should insist on their not being unilateral, that is against Israel alone. We should want Egypt punished too for raids into Israeli territory. That is, we shall try to keep up some pressure on Nasser. But even at best, it looks as though the Eisenhower doctrine will have little scope to keep Nasser from consolidating his strength, not only against Israel but against the Eisenhower doctrine as well. When King Saud arrives, we may be able to interest him in keeping Nasser from going too fast and too far. But that seems to be the best our leadership can hope for from the visit.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is George Bryan.

BRYAN"

MURROW:American policy is much under discussion..and in some respects, is bound to change. Yet the long-range objectives do not change. Dwight D. Eisenhower would probably agree with Ulysees S. Grant, who said" "We want no more land. We do want to improve what we have..and to see our neighbors improve and grow so strong that the design of any other could not endanger them."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 23, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that it is "vital" for Congress to give him both economic and military authority for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. /"You cannot do the things that need to be done," he said, "merely with arms. /You have got to have an understanding of human wants." /Mr. Eisenhower was speaking at his first news conference in 10 weeks -- his 100th White House news conference since he became President. A reporter asked if small nuclear weapons might be used in case of aggression in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower said he wouldn't guess as to that. /At the same time, he acknowledged that atomic weapons are now "an almost routine part of our equipment." /The President said the chief aim of his second term is to achieve better world understanding... better understanding between the free nations, and better understanding with the Russians. He was asked if he agreed with Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey, that Congress should cut his budget for the next fiscal year. (Humphrey said last week that if government spending continues at its present rate, the country will have a depression that... in Humphrey's words... "will curl your hair." The President said he had spoken with Humphrey since he made that remark, and that Humphrey hadn't been talking about the immediate future but about "long-term continuation of the spending of the order of which we are now doing." Mr. Eisenhower said that if Congress can pare the budget "to save another dollar," it is their "duty" to do it.

—>

Secretary Humphrey testified before the House Appropriations Committee today... at the request of Chairman Cannon of Missouri. The testimony was given behind closed doors. Humphrey was quoted afterward as saying he is "still alarmed at the trend of expenditures." He declined, however, to say where cuts should be made. He said the new budget "is a budget the whole executive department has agreed on." Several members of the committee accused him of doing a "flip-flop" since last week. Humphrey told reporters, "I have no idea of doing anything of the kind."

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his annual report on the nation's economy. The record prosperity of 1956, he said, should continue into the months ahead. But he warned... as he did in his State of the Union message... of the danger of inflation. The President again asked labor and industry to help hold down the cost-of-living by using restraint. "Negotiated wage increases," he said, "should be consistent with productivity. And business must recognize the broad public interest in the prices set on their products and services." Mr. Eisenhower said... in his report... that progress has been made toward a better-balanced farm economy. But use of the nation's cropland and the system of price supports, he said, must be improved. He also advocated legislation to help small business.

~~Senate Republican Leader Knowland told reporters today that President Eisenhower will soon send two special messages to Congress---one on school construction, the other on immigration.~~

~~The President today formally nominated Arthur Summerfield to continue as postmaster general. This is the only cabinet post requiring Senate confirmation for a new term.~~

The official Soviet news agency Tass warned tonight that any attempt by the United States to set up "atom bases" around Russia would lead to "most serious consequences." Tass said that other countries allowing their territory to be used for such bases must also bear responsibility for the consequences. Earlier today, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda threatened these countries... and the United States... with atomic retaliation. "It is common knowledge," Pravda said, "that the United States is far from being a monopolist either in the sphere of nuclear weapons or... even less so... in the sphere of long-range missiles." Pravda professed the "friendliest of sentiments" toward Japan, Turkey and Iran... but it told them bluntly, "Blows struck by some weapons are answered by blows struck by the same weapons."

Britain today announced the expulsion of the Hungarian military attache, stationed in London. The action was in retaliation for the expulsion last week of the British military attache from Hungary. The Kádar government had accused the British officer of aiding the anti-Communist revolt, which began three months ago today.

Intermittent rifle fire was heard in Budapest today. The sound came from the hills overlooking the city... and it was not explained. The Budapest radio says three more Hungarians have been sentenced to death for organizing resistance to the Kadar regime.

The French National Assembly today authorized the Mollet government to proceed with plans for European Union. These plans turn on two proposals---the setting up of an atomic energy pool... called Euratom... and the creation of a common market, in which customs barriers between six Western European countries would be erased.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that Israel will maintain its forces at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, until freedom of Israeli shipping through the gulf is assured. Israel, he said, also wants freedom to move ships through the Suez Canal. Ben Gurion appealed to the United Nations to demilitarize the Sinai Desert, "so as to prevent... in the future... all hostilities between Israel and Egypt." Israel, he said, will never allow Egypt to reoccupy the Gaza Strip. Ben Gurion indicated willingness for United Nations forces to move into Gaza... leaving the civil administration to Israeli authorities.

~~Here in New York today, Israel presented a memorandum to Secretary~~ General Hammarskjold... setting forth its position. The contents of the memorandum were not revealed (Hammarskjold is to make a report to the General Assembly on Friday) but they are believed to parallel Ben Gurion's statement today to the Israeli parliament.

Today... in Monaco... a proclamation was posted outside the royal palace, addressed to the inhabitants of the principality. It said: "At 9:27 on this day of the 23rd of January, of the year 1957, the Princess, my beloved wife, gave birth to a Princess who has received the names of Caroline Louise Marguerite. The Princess and the child are in good health." The proclamation was signed by Prince Rainier, husband of the former Miss Grace Kelly of Philadelphia and Hollywood.

Edward R. Murrow: January 23, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The result of the Polish election has drawn all kinds of comment. Most Poles regard it as an impressive endorsement of Gomulka and his c[redacted]s start in gaining independence from Soviet domination. But Moscow newspapers today hailed it as a defeat for Western imperialism, and Communist papers in East Germany said it demonstrated that Poland once more accepts a policy of obedience to the Kremlin.

No one is saying that Gomulka is through with his troubles. The election might have gone worse for him and didn't. He is over a hummock, but he still has to get over the hill. Getting over the hill means for him getting adequate economic help from abroad, and clearing out the pro-Stalinists from the Communist apparatus which he now heads.

Nothing in the election guaranteed that he could achieve either of these objectives. ~~The Communist party won its expected 52 percent majority in the new parliament, and his coalition won all the seats excepting 47. That 47 independents were elected is unexpected, but it is quite inconclusive.~~ Polish liberals were saying today that the election proved that Gomulka had slowed down the revolution more than necessary, and are urging him to speed it up a little. They want him to start by abolishing the censorship and permit free political discussion in the press. But this is not Gomulka's biggest problem. He has to consolidate his leadership in the Communist Party. And he has to produce somehow the aid that will get the Polish economy into high gear.

The only substantial help he can expect from abroad is from the United States. ~~Shortly before the election, he felt that he had to sign a joint statement with the Kremlin denouncing American policy. Washington understood the circumstances, and didn't hold this against him. It understands that incautious American help could produce the worst kind of tension between Warsaw and the Kremlin.~~ A Polish observer is quoted today as saying that what Poland needs from President Eisenhower is a Polish Doctrine that won't get the country into trouble. Maybe there can be such a thing. So far it has not been put on display. It would have to go much further than the loan of surplus cotton and butter from this country.

The Polish election is not easy for the free-world [redacted] to understand. It was not a free election. It was another Iron Curtain election with slight improvements. Voting was for a single list of candidates. The government chose the list, but it put down nine names for every six offices, letting the voters choose among the nine. Then it urged them not to choose, but simply to cast the unscratched ballot. The top six names were the ones the government wished to have win, and they won handsomely. Some were communists, the others were coalition candidates in the desired ratio. Only 15 percent of all the names were of independents.

It would have been quite impossible for Stalinists to beat Gomulka in such an election, but just as impossible for non-communists to beat him. It is generally assumed that the vast majority of all Poles, if they felt free to express their real desire, would vote non-communist. One reason they did not do so, was that they wished to give Gomulka time to consolidate the gains already made.

~~But if the voters could not defeat Gomulka, they could have made trouble for him by not going to the polls. They did not abstain, largely because the Roman Catholic Church advised them not to.~~ This was the first Iron Curtain election in which the Catholic church has indirectly supported a Communist-dominated regime. But this again doesn't mean what it seems to say. The church wants Polish independence to be developed peacefully, if that is humanly possible. It is determined to avoid a bloodbath like Hungary's.

As it turned out there was enough scratching of names on the official list to show what voters were thinking. As a rule Stalinists were scratched in favor of the "men of October", those who supported Gomulka in standing up to Russia. Stalinists everywhere ran behind Gomulka communists, but also behind peasants, democrats, socialists and Catholics. But that doesn't mean the Stalinists were defeated. Those on the government list came through all right. ~~The one scratched worst was a woman leader in Lodz, notorious for the warmth of her greeting of Bulganin after the Posnan riots. She got what is called a "humiliating" 79.5 percent of the vote. The woman who once led the now disbanded Stalinist youth movement got a lowly 86.7 percent. The men of October got high in the nineties.~~

But ~~these arithmetic differences~~ the detailed figures don't prove anything. What they suggest is that if Poland gets over the hill, it may change the nature of its parties. The outright communists may become a minority, and the socialists may swallow the Gomulka communists and run the country. That would give democracy, as we understand it, a chance. But to promise anything of the sort for the time being would be -- to put it mildly - utterly unrealistic.

Word for Today

The Communist "liberal" leader of Poland... Wladislaw Gomulka... has managed, so far, to walk the political tight-rope that destiny has set up for him. The recent parliamentary election... though not really free... was better than what has gone before ~~may have been enough.~~ For as Publilius Syrus said, "It is better to have a little than nothing." He also said, "Nothing can be done at once hastily and prudently." ~~"Never promise more than you can perform." Gomulka appears to have been aware of both these truths.~~

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that it is "vital" for Congress to give him both economic and military authority for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. "You cannot do the things that need to be done," he said, "merely with arms. You have to to have an understanding of human wants." Mr. Eisenhower was speaking at his first news conference in 10 weeks -- his 100th White House news conference since he became President. A reporter asked if small nuclear weapons might be used in case of aggression in the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower said he wouldn't guess as to that. At the same time, he acknowledged that atomic weapons are now "an almost routine part of our equipment." The President said the chief aim of his second term is to achieve better world understanding.. better understanding between the free nations and better understanding with the Russians. He was asked if he agreed with Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey that Congress should cut his budget for the next fiskal year. (Humphrey said last week that if government spending continues at its present rate, the country will have a depression that..in Humphrey's words..."will curl your hair." The President said he had spoked with Humphrey since he made that remark, and that Humprhrey hadn't been talking about the immediate future but about "long-term continuation of the spending of the order of which we are now doing." Mr. Eisenhower said that if Congress can pare the budget "to save another dollar," it is their "duty" to do it.

Secretary Humphrey testified before the House Appropriations Committee today . at the request of Chiarman Cannon of Missouri. The testimony was given behind closed doors. Humphrey was quoted afterward as saying he is "still alarmed at the trend of expenditures." He declined, however, to say where cuts should be made.He said the new Budget " is a budget the whole executive department has agreed on." Several members of the committee accused him of doing a "flip-flop" since last week. Humphrey told reporters, " I have no idea of doing anything of the kind."

President Eisenhower today sent Congress his annual report on the nations economy. The record prosperity of 1956, he said, should continue into the months ahead. But he warned...as he did in his State of the Union message.of the danger of inflation. The President again asked labor and industry to help hold down the cost - of - livnng by using restraind. "Negotiated wage increases," he said, "should be consistent with productivity. And business must recognize the broad public interest in the prices set on their products and services." Mr. Eisenhower said...in his report...that progress has been made toward a better-balanced farm economy. But use of the nation's cropland and the system of price supports, he said, must be improved. He also advocated legislation to help small business.

The official Soviet news agency Tass warned tonight that any attempt by the United States to set up "atom bases" around Russia would lead to "most serious consequences." Tass said that other countries allowing their countries to be used for such bases must also bear responsibility for the consequnnces. Earlier today, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda threatened these countries.. and the United States ..with atomic retaliation . "It is common knowledge," Pravda said, " that the United States is far from being a monopolist either in the sphere of nuclear weapons or...even less so...in the sphere of long-range missiles." Pravda professed the "friendliest of sentiments" toward Japan, Turkey and Iran--but it told them bluntly,"Blows struck by some weapons are answered by blows struck by the same weapons."

Britain today announced the expulsion of the Hungarian military attache, stationed in London. The action was in retaliation for the expulsion last week of the British military attache from Hungary. The Kadar government had accused the British officer of aiding the anti-Communist revolt, which began three months ago today.

Intermittent rifle fire was heard in Budapest today. The sound came from the hills overlooking the city..and it was not explained. The Budapest radio says three more Hungarians have been sentenced to death for organizing resistence to the Kadar regime.

The French National Assembly today authorized the Mollet government to proceed with plans for European Union. These plans turn on two proposals -- the setting up of an atomic energy pool -- called Euratom..and the creation of a common market, in which customs barriers between six Western European countries would be erased.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that Israel will maintain its forces at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, until freedom of Israeli shipping through the gulf is assured. Israel, he said, also wants freedom to move ships through the Suez Canal. Ben Gurion appealed to the United Nations to demilitarize the Sinai Desert, "so as to prevent .. in the future.. all hostilities between Israel and Egypt." Israel, he said, will never allow Egypt to reoccupy the Gaza Strip. Ben Gurion indicated willingness for United Nations forces to move into Gaza leaving the civil administration to Israeli authorities.

Today in Monaco..a proclamation was posted outside the royal palace, addressed to the inhabitants of the principality. It said: "At 9:27 on this day of the 23rd of January, of the year 1957, the Princess, my beloved wife, give birth to a Princess who was received the names of Caroline Louise Marguerite. The Princess and the child are in good health." The problamation was signed by Prince Rainier, husband of the former Miss Grace Kelly of Philadelphia and Hollywood.

The result of the Polish election has drawn all kinds of comment. Most Poles regard it as an impressive endorsement of Gomulka and his start in gaining independence from Soviet domination. But Moscow newspapers today hailed it as a defeat for Western imperialism, and Communist papers in East Germany said it demonstrated that Poland once more accepts a policy of obedience to the Kremlin.

No one is saying that Gomulka is through with his troubles. The election might have gone worse for him and didn't. He is over a hummock, but he still has to get over the hill. Getting over the hill means for him getting adequate economic help from abroad, and clearing out the pro-Stalinists from the Communist apparatus which he now heads.

Nothing in the election guaranteed that he could achieve either of these objectives. Polish liberals were saying today that the election proved that Gomulks had slowed down the revolution more than necessary, and are urging him to speed it up a little. They want him to start by abolishing the censorship and permit free political discussion in the press. But this isn not Gomulka's biggest problem. He has to consolidate his leadership in the Communist Party. And he has to produce somehow the aid that will get the Polish economy nnto high gear.

The only substantial help he can expect from aborad is from the United States. A Polish observer is quoted today as saying that what Poland needs from President Eisenhower is a Polish Doctrine that won't get the country into trouble. Maybe there can be such a thing. So far it has not been put on display. It would have to go much further than the loan of surplus cotton and butter from this country.

The Polish election is not easy for the free-world. to understand. It was not a free election. It was another Iron Curtain election with slight improvements. Voting was for a single list of candidates. The government chose a list, but it put down nine names for every six offices, letting the voters choose among the nine. Then it urged them not to choose, but simply to cast the unscratched ballot. The top six names were the ones the government wished to have win, and they won handsomely. Some were communists, the others were coalition candidates in the desired ratio. Only 15 percent of all the names were independents.

It would have been quite impossible for Stalinists to beat Gomulka in such an election, but just as impossible for non-communists to beat him. It is generally assumed that the vast majority of all Poles, if they felt free to express their real desire, would vote non-communist. One reason they did not do so was that they wished to give Gomulka time to consolidate the gains already made.

This was the first Iron Curtain election in which the Catholic church has indirectly supported a Communist dominated regime. But this again doesn't mean what it seems to say. The church wants Polish independence to be developed peacefully if that is humanly possible. It is determined to avoid a bloodbath like Hungary's.

As it turned out there was enough scratching of names on the official list to show what voters were thinking. As a rule Stalinists were scratched in favor of the "men of October", those who suppoted Gomulka in standing up to Russia. Stalinists everywhere ran behind Gomulks communists, but also behind peasants, democrats, socialists and Catholics. But that doesn't mean the Stalinists were defeated. Those on the government list came through all right.

But the detailed figures don't prove anything. What they suggest is that if Poland gets over the hill, it may change the nature of its parties. the outright communists may become a minority, and the socialists may swallow the Gomulka communists and run the country. That would give democracy, as we understand it, a chance. But to promist anything of the sort for the time being would be - to put it mildly - utterly unrealistic.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Communist "liberal" leader of Poland..Wladislaw Gomulka..has managed, so far, to walk the political tight-rope that destiny has set up for him. The recent parliamentary election..though not really free was better than what had bone before. For as Publilius Syrrs said, " It is better to have a little than nothing." He also said, "Nothing can be done at once hastily and prudently."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 24, 1957

This is the news:

The government announced tonight that a series of "low-yield" nuclear test explosions will be set off at the Nevada proving grounds this spring. The Atomic Energy Commission said, "The program of tests is aimed to attain new knowledge important to the defense of the United States and the free world." Such tests are necessary, it said, pending international agreement on a "safeguarded" disarmament program. The announcement indicated a major objective of the new series would be the testing of "weapons for defense against attack." This has led to speculation that atomic warheads for anti-aircraft missiles may be involved.

Air Force Secretary Quarles said today it should be "made plain" to Russian leaders that the United States will use atomic weapons in defense against "local" Communist aggression. "The best way to prevent a local war from expanding into total war," Quarles said, "is to end the local war quickly and decisively."

Yesterday, Russia warned countries adjacent to it not to allow the United States to set up "atom bases" on their territory. It threatened them with nuclear retaliation in event of war. A State Department spokesman said today that every alliance entered into by the United States is purely for collective defense. "The Soviet Union knows this," he said, "and these alliances are not going to be disrupted by attempts at intimidation."

In London today, Prime Minister Macmillan ordered a sweeping reorganization of the British armed forces to cut down military costs. Macmillan granted his defense minister, Duncan Sandys, authority "to give decisions on all matters of policy affecting the size, shape, organization and disposition of the armed forces, their equipment and supply." His goal, Macmillan said, will be a "substantial reduction" in military spending and manpower "in the light of present strategic needs." Sandys is due in Washington this week-end to confer with American military leaders.

The West German government announced today that Lieutenant General Hans Speidel will become commander of NATO forces in Central Europe. During World War Two, Speidel served Hitler on both the eastern and western fronts.

He was arrested in 1944, on suspicion of plotting against Hitler, but escaped. Recently, Speidel became Germany's first military representative at NATO headquarters. His new appointment has still to be formally announced by NATO, but there is little doubt the announcement will be made.

The Moscow radio warned Poland today against what it called "national Communism". It said (in a Polish language broadcast) that national Communism is "a craftly form of bourgeois nationalism." Communism, the Moscow radio said, must be "internationalist".

Reports reaching Vienna today said Hungarian freedom-fighters shot and killed four Communist police officers in a recent flare-up of resistance in Eastern Hungary. The partisan leader in the fight was reported captured.

The United States today accused Communist Roumania of breaking an agreement. Last fall, the United States invited the Red satellites to send observers to this country to witness the presidential election. Americans, in return, were to be allowed to witness elections in the satellite states. Four Communist countries... including Roumania... agreed to this arrangement. But recently, when the United States asked permission to observe next month's elections in Roumania, it was turned down. In reporting this today, the State Department said it could only conclude that the Roumanian government has something to hide.

→

In Congress today, a Democratic senator... Fulbright of Arkansas... called on Secretary of State Dulles to submit an official "white paper", justifying his conduct of American policy in the Middle East. Fulbright made his demand in the form of a motion, as Mr. Dulles was testifying before the joint Senate foreign relations and armed services committees. Chairman Green, of the foreign relations committee, ruled that the motion will have to be taken up at a later date. Fulbright said Mr. Dulles' HANDLING of foreign policy had been "disastrous" to America's allies. Dulles told the Senate committees that if Congress refuses to give President Eisenhower the military and economic authority he wants, it could end in "great disaster" to the United States. When Democratic senators pressed for specific information on how economic aid to the Middle East countries would be handled, Dulles said Congress will have to be willing to "trust" the President. The program will not serve its purpose, he said, "if we have to pinpoint everything we propose to do."

Dulles said it would be a mistake to "telegraph our punches" to the world, including Russia.

The Senate permanent investigating subcommittee voted a contempt of Congress citation today against Frank Brewster, president of the West Coast conference of the International Teamsters Union. Last week, Brewster refused to answer questions put to him by the committee, on grounds it lacks authority to investigate union matters. The Senate may act tomorrow on a resolution to set up a special committee to look into labor racketeering charges.

In Miami today, the International Union of Electrical Workers adopted a broad anti-racketeering code.

Today in the United Nations, Krishna Menon of India made the longest speech in the history of the world organization -- for 7 hours and 48 minutes he leveled charges against Pakistan, accusing it of making a huge military build-up which, he charged, threatens the peace. For nine years, India and Pakistan have quarreled over possession of the state of Kashmir. Menon said today that India will never seek to settle the Kashmir question by force.

Edward R. Murrow: January 24, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The United Nations is heading for a real show-down. The General Assembly told Israel to pull its troops out of the Gaza Strip and the area commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Secretary General Hammarskjold is to make his report tomorrow. Israel has already said flatly, and officially, that she will not pull out of these two areas unless there are guarantees that the Gulf will remain open to Israeli shipping, and that the Strip will not again be used for raids against her territory. No such guarantees are forthcoming. The Egyptians show no signs of being willing to talk, except to make unofficial threats about renewed hostilities, threats to stop clearing the Canal unless Israel gets out. Israel would get out if the two areas were placed under international control, but that isn't what the U.N. resolution calls for.

The position of our government seems to be that Israel must get out without any conditions, but we hope that some agreement about international control can be worked out later. The Israelis obviously don't share that hope, and apparently the Egyptians don't either. If Israel continues its refusal, sanctions may well be voted against it, and presumably we would vote for the sanctions, so would the Russians.....another example of how we can get what we want by working through the United Nations, when the Russians want the same thing; and when they don't, we can't.

If the Israeli forces should pull out, the U.N. emergency force would move in. But there is no provision permitting that U.N. force to remain in Egyptian territory. As a practical matter they would have to get out when the Egyptians WITH RUSSIAN SUPPORT, told them to.

In theory it would be possible for the United States, Britain and France to guarantee Israel access to the Gulf of Akaba. But the Israelis wouldn't be much impressed by such a guarantee, and it would leave unsolved the question of the Gaza Strip.

Israel also wants access to the Suez Canal, to which she is legally entitled, but the Egyptians show no signs of being willing to grant that. The Egyptians sound more and more bellicose, saying that if we don't get the Israelis out of Egypt, they will - which would require a military miracle. The Egyptians are doing their best to convey the impression that they have Russian backing, and some of the Cairo press has again been talking about Russian volunteers for use against Israel.

It is necessary to remember that so far as Israel was concerned, her aggression against Egypt was ended not only by the United Nations resolution, but also by a threat of destruction by the Soviet Union, and the threat of economic strangulation by the United States. It is also necessary to remember that Israel undertook the aggression after a long series of provocations which cost her more dead than she lost in the seven-day war against Egypt.

This uneasy peace is not one dictated on the field of battle. If it is to become a real peace it will probably require concessions from both sides. But the Egyptians are in no mood to compromise, particularly if they have got or can get Russian backing.

Unless Mr. Hammarskjold or our own government comes forth with some unique compromise, Israel may find herself isolated. Our new policy in the Middle East will face a most severe test; and the whole future role of the United Nations will be at stake. We are committed not to permit the extermination of Israel; her Arab NEIGHBORS are committed to do just that. The U.N. has tried to set up standards of justice in the region. It is against the Arab guerilla raids which touched off the explosion. It believes Israel should have access to the Suez Canal. It is true that the U.N. emergency force has nothing whatever to do with securing justice or an equitable settlement. It has merely the limited task of supervising the withdrawal of the invading forces - British, French and Israeli. Once that is done their mission is accomplished. But by implication at least the United Nations is committed to obtaining acceptable conduct from both Egypt and Israel. The Egyptians show no sign of compromising; the Israelis no willingness to place their reliance in anything other than hard and fast guarantees which no one appears able or willing to give.

Word for Today

[redacted] Quite understandably... in view of all that has happened... the Israelis are demanding hard and fast guarantees. For [redacted] as Daniel Webster ONCE said, "Confidence is not a thing to be produced by compulsion. Men cannot be forced into trust." [redacted] and history indicates that the same is true of nations.

Goodnight and good luck!

AND HISTORY INDICATES THAT THE SAME IS TRUE OF NATIONS.

GOODNIGHT AND GOOD LUCK!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 24, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government announced tonight that a series of "low-yield" nuclear test explosions will be set off at the Nevada proving ground this spring. The Atomic Energy Commission said, " The program of tests is aimed to attain new knowledge important to the defense of the United States and the free world." Such tests are necessary, it said, pending international agreement on a "safe-guarded disarmamant program. The announcement indicated a major objective of the new series would be the testing of "weapons for defense against attack." This has led to speculation that atomic warheads for anti-aircraft missiles may be involved.

Air Force Secretary Quarles daid today it should be "made plain" to Russian leaders that the United States will use atomic weapons in defense against "local" Communist aggression. "The best way to prevent a local war from expanding into total war," Quarles said, "is to end the local war quickly and decisively."

Yesterday Russia warned countries adjacent to it not to allow the United States to set up "atom bases" on their territory. It threatened them with nuclear retaliation in event of war. A State Department spokesman said today that every alliance entered into by the United States is purely for collective defense. "The Soviet Union knows this," he said, "and these alliances are not going to be disrupted by attempts at intimidation."

In London today, Prime Minister Macmillan ordered a sweeping reorganization of the British armed forces to cut down military costs. Macmillan granted his defense minister, Duncan Sandys, authroity "to give decisions an all matters of policy affecting the size, shape, organization and disposition of the armed forces, their equipment and supply." His goal, Macmillan said, will be a "substantial reduction" in military spending and manpower "in the light of present strategic needs." Sandys is due in Washington this week-end to confer with American militay leaders.

The West German government announced today that Lieutenant General Hans Speidel will become commander of NATO forces in Central Europe. During World War Two, Speidel served Hitler on both the eastern and western fronts. He was arrested in 1944, on suspicion of plotting against Hitler, but escaped. Recently, Speidel became Germany's first military representative at NATO headquarters. His new appointment has still to be formally announced by NATO but there is little doubt the announcement will be made.

The Moscow radio warned Poland today against what it called "national Communism." It said (in a Polish language broadcast) that national Communism is " a crafty form of bourgiois nationalism." Communism, the Moscow radio said, must be "internationalist."

Reports reaching Vienna today said Hungarian freedom - fighters shot and killed four Communist police officers in a recent flare-up of resistance in Eastern Hungary. The Partisan leader in the fight was reported captured.

The United States today accused Communist Roumania of breaking an agreement.

Last fall, the United States invited the Red satellites to send observers to this country, to witness the presidential election. Americans, in return, were to be allowed to witness elections in the satellite states. Four Communist countries..including Roumania..agreed to this arrangement. But recently, when the United States asked permission to observe next month's elections nn Roumania it was turned down. In reporting this today, the State Department said it could only condlude that the Roumanian government has something to hide.

In Congress today, a Democratic senator..Fulbright of Arkansas..called on Secretary of State Dulles to submit an official "white paper", justifying his conduct of American policy in the Middle East. Fulbright made his demand in the form of a motion, as Mr. Dulles was testifying before the joint Senate foreign relations and armed sevvices committees. Chairman Green, of the foreign relations committee, ruled that the motion will have to be taken up at a later date. Fulbright said Mr. Dulles' handling of foreign policy had been "disastrous" to America's allies. Dulles todd the Senate committees that if Congress refuses to give President Eisenhower the military and economic authority he wants, it could end in "great disaster" to the United States. When Democratic senators pressed for specific information on his economic aid to the Middle East countries would be handled, Dulles said Congress will have to be willing to "trust" the Presdient. The program will not serve its purpose, he said, "if we have to pinpoint everything we propose to do." Dulles said it would be a mistake to "telegraph our punches" to the world, including Russia.

Today in the United Nations, Krishna Menon of India made the longest speech in the history of the world organization -- for 7 hours and 48 minutes he leveled charges against Pakistan, accusing it of making a huge military build-up which, he charged, threatens the peace. For nine years, India and Pakistan have quarreled over possession of the State of Kashmir. Menon said today that India will never seek to settle the Kashmir question by force.

The United Nations is heading for a real show-down. The general Assembly told Israel to pull its troops out of the Gaza Strip and the area commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Secretary General Hammarskjodd is to make his report tomorrow. Israel has already said flatly, and officially, that she will not pull out of these two areas unless there are guarantees that the gulf will remain open ot Iaraeli shipping, and that the Strip will not again bu used for raida against her territory. No such guarantees are forthcoming. The Egyptians show no signs of being willing to talk, except to make unoffical threats about renewed hositlities, threats to stop clearing the Canal unless Israel gets out. Israel would get out if the two areas were placed under international control, but that isn't what the U.N. resolution calls for.

The position of our government seems to be that Israel must get out without any conditions, but we hope that some agreement about international control can be worked out later. The Israelis obviously don't share that hope, and apparently the Egyptians don't either. If Israel continues its refusal, sanctions may well be voted against it, and presumably we would vote for the sanctions, so would the Russians..another example of how we can get what we want by working thouugh the United Nations when the Russians want the same thing; and when they don't we can't.

If the Israeli forces should pull out, the UN.N. emergency force would move in. But there is no provision permitting the U.N. force to remain in Egyptian territory. As a practical matter, they would have to get out when the Egyptians with Russian support told them to.

In theory it would be possible for the United States, Britain and France to guarantee Israel access to the Gulf of Aqaba. But the Israelis wouldn't be much impressed by such a guarantee, and would leave unsolved the question of the Gaza Strip.

Israel also wants access to the Suez Canal, to which she is legally entitled, byt the Egyptians show no signs of being willing to grant that. The Egyptians sound more and more bellicose, saying that if we don't get the Israelis out of Egypt, they will - which would require a military miracle. The Egyptians are doing their best to convey the impression that they have Russian backing, and some of the Cairo press has again been talking about Russian volunteers for use against Israel.

It is necessary to remember that so far as Israel was concerned, her aggression against Egypt was ended not only by the United Nations resolution, but also by a threat of destruction by the Soviet Union, and the threat of economic strangulation by the United States. It is also necessary to remember that Israel undertook the aggression after a long series of provocations which cost her more dead that she lost in the seven-day war against Egypt.

This uneasy peace is not one dictated on the field of battle. If it is to become a real peace it will probably require concessions from both sides. but the Egyptians are in no mood to compromise, particularly if they have got or can get Russian backing.

Unless Mr. Hammarksjold or our own government comes forth with some unique compromise, Israel may find herself isolate.d Our new policy in the Middle East will face a most severe test; and the whole future role of the United Nations will be at stake. We are committee not to permit the extermination of Israel; and her Arab neighbors are committed to do just that. The U.N. has tried to set up standards of justice in the region. It is against the Arab guerillas raids which touched off the explosion. It believes Israel should have access to the Suez Canal. It is true that the U.N. emergency force has nothing whatever to do with securing justice or an equitable settlement. It has merely the limited task of supervising the withdrawal of the invading forces - British , French and Israeli. Once that is done their mission is accomplished. But by implication at least, the United Nations is committed to obtaining acceptable conduct from both Egypt and Israel. The Egyptians show no sign of compromising; the Israelis no willingness to place their reliance in anything other than hard and fast guarantees which no one appears able or willing to give.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Now, here is George Bryan.
BRYAN:
MURROW:Quite understandably...in view of all that has happened..the Israelis are demanding har and fast guarantees. For as Daniel Webster once said "Confidence is not thing to be produced by compulsion. Men cannot be forced into trust. And history indicates that the same is true of nations.
Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Jan. 25, 1957

This is the news:

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that Israel must obey U.N. resolutions and pull back all its forces to the line drawn up by the 1949 armistice agreement. Specifically, Hammarskjold said... in a report to the General Assembly... that Israel must withdraw completely from the Sinai Peninsula and the Gaza Strip. Israel already has evacuated the Sinai, except for the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. It has demanded guarantees that if its forces leave, Egypt will not again close the gulf to Israeli ships. Israel has refused to allow Egypt to reoccupy Gaza, on grounds that it was not... legally... Egyptian territory, and because it was used as a base of operations against Israel. This week, Israel proposed that United Nations troops occupy Gaza... and that its civilian administration be left in Israeli hands. Hammarskjold said today that such ~~mmmmmm~~ an arrangement cannot be made without Egypt's consent.

→

He said United Nations forces would move in behind the Israelis in the Gaza Strip... and on the Gulf of Aqaba... just as they have in other phases of the Israeli withdrawal. The U.N. police force, he said, cannot be used to protect any special positions or prejudice a solution. At the same time, Hammarskjold warned Egypt that it has no "belligerent rights" in the area under the armistice agreement. He advocated the deployment of United Nations forces on both sides of the demarcation line between Israel and Egypt, to prevent incidents. But at present, Hammarskjold said, he lacks authority to take such action. A resolution... giving him this authority... is expected to be submitted to the General Assembly, when it meets on Monday. An American spokesman said tonight that Hammarskjold's report contains "many helpful elements". The initial Israeli reaction is that the secretary general is making an unfortunate "legal" approach to a political problem.

Secretary of State Dulles today rejected the Democratic demand that he issue a "white paper" explaining his conduct of Middle East policy. Democratic Senator Fulbright said yesterday that Dulles' policy had been "disastrous" for America's allies. Mr. Dulles said today that a review of events leading up to the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt would

"irreparably damage" our relations with Britain and France. It would, he said, "reopen all the old wounds." Dulles was giving his final testimony before the joint Senate armed services and foreign relations committee, on behalf of President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals. Democratic Senator Morse wanted to know why the Administration had not asked Britain and France to share the burden of defending the area from Soviet aggression. Dulles suggested to Morse that he give "very serious consideration" to the present ~~mounting~~ enmity of the Arabs toward the British and French. "Personally," Dulles said, "I'd rather not have a French and British soldier beside me---one on my right and one on my left." Tonight, Dulles explained ~~that he had not meant to insult~~ (through a State Department spokesman) that he had not meant to insult British and French fighting men. He said, "As far as valor and training are concerned, there are none we value more highly as allies."

Today... in Federal Court in Washington...Robert Shelton, a copyreader for the New York Times, was sentenced to six months, and fined 500 dollars for contempt of Congress. Shelton refused, in January of last year, to tell the Senate Internal Security Committee whether he had ever been a Communist.

A bill to "modernize" the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act was introduced in Congress today by five Republican senators. The measure would increase, by about 100-thousand, the annual quota of immigrants to the United States. One of the sponsors, Ives of New York, said it would also wipe out "discriminatory and procedural injustices" in the present law. The problem of refugees from Iron Curtain countries, he said, will be dealt with separately.

Here in New York today, the F.B.I. arrested three persons on charges of conspiracy to commit espionage. They also were charged with conspiracy to act as Soviet agents without registering with the Secretary of State. The three are identified as Jack Soble, alleged leader of the spy ring, his wife Myra, and Jacob Albam. Soble and Albam were admitted to this country, from Lithuania, in the 1940's. Mrs. Soble is a native of Russia. She came to the United States 16 years ago and is a naturalized citizen. So is her husband. Each of them was held under 100-thousand dollars' bail, pending a hearing on February first. U.S. Attorney Paul Williams described Soble as "head of Soviet espionage in the United States." Both he and the F.B.I. indicated others may be involved, "including Soviet officials."

The government reports that the cost-of-living in December reached a new all-time high. Consumer prices rose an average of two-tenths of one percent. The average earnings of factory workers also set a new record in December, so that... for them... the rise in the cost-of-living was more than canceled. In one year, the consumer price index has risen almost 3 percent.

An Air Force B-47 set a record for bombers today when it flew across the country... west to east... in three hours and 47 minutes. The aircraft had the help of prevailing "jet stream" winds at 37-thousand feet.

The British government ~~today announced~~ plans for ~~developing a supersonic~~ jet airliner... ~~in the continuing battle with the United States for~~ commercial air supremacy. ~~Details were not divulged. The design~~ is said, unofficially, to call for an ~~aircraft that~~ will cut the flight ~~time between~~ New York and London to less than ~~four hours.~~

The former Japanese foreign minister... ~~Mamoru Shigemitsu...~~ died of a cerebral hemorrhage ~~today at the age of 69.~~ Shigemitsu signed the Japanese surrender on board ~~the battleship~~ Missouri ~~in Tokyo~~ Bay in 1945. ~~Last~~ month, when Japan was ~~admitted to the United Nations, he attended the General Assembly meeting, here in New York.~~

Edward R. Murrow: January 25, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Britain's Defense Minister, Duncan Sandys, is arriving in Washington next week. / His conversations may well be as fateful to the Western Alliance as any in the post-war period. / Britain's problem can be simply stated. How to defend herself in the atomic age without going bankrupt? And how to remain an Ally of the United States and still maintain any real degree of independence or freedom of maneuver. # Mr. Sandys has almost unprecedented powers to negotiate. He has been specifically authorized by Prime Minister MacMillan to decide all matters of policy affecting the size, shape, organization and disposition of the armed forces, their equipment and supply. No one since Winston Churchill, who was his own Defense Minister, has had such sweeping powers to negotiate. And under the British system, whatever Sandys agrees to his government must support.

If Britain desires to be militarily strong and independent, she cannot cut her defense budget. But the budget must be cut. Guided missiles, hydrogen bombs and supersonic bombers cannot be made with hearts of oak or the memories of past glories. The British cannot afford to create and maintain the enormous establishment required for the production of the most costly defense weapons. We can. / The cost to us is already staggering and may grow heavier, ~~but~~ But / an attempt to meet the cost would be catastrophic for Britain. We are entering the age of the guided missiles. Britain cannot afford to live like one of the great atomic powers. So they are hoping to get their guided missiles from us. There are two reasons why the British consider it natural to ask us for guided missiles and other expensive hardware - they know that we regard their survival as essential to our own - know, too, that the safety of our bases in Britain is of the utmost importance to our policy of deterrence - the defense of Europe would be nearly impossible without our access to the British Isles.

There is a secondary reason. Our atomic achievements were not exclusively American. They came of Anglo-American parentage. Sir Winston Churchill has, or had, in his private safe an agreement signed by Franklin Roosevelt providing for the pooling of British And American scientists and scientific knowledge in developing the atomic bomb. The project was to be located in this country, because it would be safer here, and because we were better able to bear the cost. This document was of course not a treaty. (Now it is only a souvenir.) But the nation which developed Radar, the de-Gaussing gear to handle magnetic mines, and which is now in some respects ahead of us in the development of jet engines, may be expected to have something to contribute to the scientific knowledge required for the development of new missiles. Mr. Sandys will not be coming as the representative of a small nation without resources, stability, experience and sanity. He will have something to offer which involves not only geography but know-how. His mission is in a sense historic, because it puts into practise Britain's decision no longer to live beyond its means, in a power world. Expenses must be cut, but a cut in defense appropriations can only be made with safety with our help.

In the global struggle Britain's strength is part of our strength, and when her strength in modern weapons is decreased, ours is too.

There is here a political and military problem of really unprecedented magnitude. For what the British want is effective and expensive arms which they cannot afford to produce, and at the same time they are determined to maintain that independence of policy, within treaty limits, which free nations always demand, and which right the British earned most recently in that year when they stood alone when, as Churchill said: "Those who were half asleep became half ready."

Our decision on this matter presumably will have to be based on how much duplication of effort there is now between the British and American defense efforts - who is ahead with what in terms of development - whether a degree of pooling is possible -- and finally whether it is in our national self-interest and that of the free world to provide Britain with the modern weapons she requests.

Prime Minister MacMillan said recently that Britain must not carry "more than her fair share of the defense burden." The question is, what is to be the test of fairness. We are already carrying a heavier load than any other member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Our military commitments stretch literally around the world, and may already exceed our capabilities.

The solution of this problem won't be found in phrases or generalities, or sentiments of good will, for the British are literally under the gun - and it isn't an oldfashioned one.

Word for Today

The United States and Great Britain have long enjoyed a partnership. ~~Each of us... in this partnership... has needed the other. It has paid well.~~ Nor, it is to be hoped, will this partnership be allowed to fall apart. For as Sir Winston Churchill said, "If the United States and England do fall apart... and wander astray from the beacon light of their destiny... there is no end or measure to the misreies and confusion which await."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1957

CBS RADIO NETWORK
7:45 - 8:00 pm, EST

This is the news:

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that Israel must obey UN resolutions and pull back all its forces to the line drawn up by the 1949 armistice agreement. Specifically, Hammarskjold said...in a report to the General Assembly...,that Israel must withdraw completely from Sinai Peninsula and the Gaza Strip. Israel already has evacuated the Sinai, except for the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. It has demanded guarantees that if its forces leave, Egypt will not again close the gulf to Israeli ships. Israel has refused to allow Egypt to reoccupy Gaza, on grounds that it was not...legally...Egyptian territory., and because it was used as a base of operations against Israel. This week, Israel proposed that United Nations troops occupy Gaza...and that its civilian administration be left in Israeli hands. Hammarskjold said today that such an arrangement cannot be made without Egypt's consent. He said United Nations forces would move in behind the Israelis in the Gaza Strip...,and on the Gulf of Aqaba...just as they have in other phases of the Israeli withdrawal. The U.N. police force, he said, cannot be used to protect any special positions or prejudice a solution. At the same time, Hammarskjold warned Egypt that it has no "belligerent rights" in the area under the armistice agreement. He advocated the deployment of United Nations forces on both sides of the demarcation line between Israel and Egypt, to prevent incidents. But at present, Hammarskjold said, he lacks authority to take such action. A resolution...,giving him this authority...is expected to be submitted to the General Assembly, when it meets on Monday. An American spokesman said tonight that Hammarskjold's report contains "many helpful elements". The initial Israeli reaction is that the secretary general is making an unfortunate "legal" approach to a political problem.

Secretary of State Dulles today rejected the Democratic demand that he issue a "white paper" explaining his conduct of Middle East policy. Democratic Senator

Fulbright said yesterday that Dulles' policy had been "disastrous" for America's allies. Mr. Dulles said today that a review of events leading up to the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt would "irreparably damage" our relations with Britain and France. It would, he said, "reopen all the old wounds." Dulles was giving his final testimony before the joint Senate armed services and foreign relations committee on behalf of President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals. Democratic Senator Morse wanted to know why the Administration had not asked Britain and France to share the burden of defending the area from Soviet aggression. Dulles suggested to Morse that he give "very serious consideration" to the present enmity of the Arabs toward the British and French. "Personally," Dulles said, "I'd rather not have a French and British soldier beside me -- one on my right and one on my left." Tonight, Dulles explained through a State Department spokesman, that he had not meant to insult British and French fighting men. He said, "As far as valor and training are concerned, there are none we value more highly as allies."

Today, in Federal Court in Washington, Robert Shelton, a copyreader for the New York Times, was senteced to six months, and fined 500 dollars for contempt of Congress. Shelton refused, in January of last year, to tell the Senate Internal Security Committee whether he had ever been a Communist,

A bill to "modernize" the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act was introduced in Congress today by five Republican senators. The measure would increase, by about 100-thousand, the annual quota of immigrants to the Unitdd States. One of the sponsors, Ives of New York, said it would also wipe out "discriminatory and procedural injustices" in the present law. The problem of refugees from Iron Curtain countries, he said, will be dealt with separately.

Here in New York today, the FBI arrested three persons on charges of conspiracy to commit espionage. They also were charged with conspiracy to act as Soviet agents without registering with the Secretary of State. The three are identified as Jack Soble, alleged leader of the spy ring, his wife Myra, and Jacob Albam. Soble and Albam were admitted to this country, from Lithuania, in the 1940's. Mrs. Soble is a native of Russia, She came to the United State 16 years ago and is a naturalized citizen. So is her husband. Each of them was held under 100-thousand dollars bail, pending a hearing on February first. U..S Attorney Paul Williams described Soble as "head of Soviet espionage in the United States." Both he and the FBI indicated others may be involved, "including Soviet officials."

The government reports that the cost-of-living in December reached a new all-time high. Consumer prices rose an average of two-tenths of one percent. The average earnings of factory workers also set a new record in December, so that for them, the rise in the cost-of-living was more than canceled. In one year, the consumer price index has risen almost 3 percent.

An Air Force B-47 set a record for bombers today when it flew across the country west to east, in three hours and 47 minutes. The aircraft had the help of prevailing "jet stream" winds at 37-thousand feet.

Britain's Defense Minister, Duncan Sandys, is arriving in Washington next week. His conversations may well be as fateful to the Western Alliance as any in the post-war period. Britain's problem can be simply stated. How to defend herself in the atomic age without going bankrupt? And how to remain an Ally of the United States and still maintain any real degree of independence or freedom of maneuver. Mr. Sandys has almost unprecedented powers to negotiate. He has been specifically authorized by Prime Minister MacMillan to decide all matters of policy affecting the size, shape, organization and disposition of the armed forces, their equipment and supply. No one since Winston Churchill, who was his own Defense Minister, has had such sweeping powers to negotiate. And under the British system, whatever Sandys agrees to his government must support.

If Britain desires to be militarily strong and independent, she cannot cut her defense budget. But the budget must be cut. Guided missiles, hydrogen bombs and supersonic bombers cannot be made with hearts of oak or the memories of past glories. The British cannot afford to create and maintain the enormous establishment required for the production of the most costly defense weapons. We can. The cost to us is already staggering and may grow heavier, but an attempt to meet the cost would be catastrophic for Britain. We are entering the age of the guided missles.

Britain cannot afford to live like one of the great atomic powers. So they are hoping to get their guided missiles from us. There are two reasons why the British consider it natural to ask us for guided missiles and other expensive hardware - they know that we regard their survival as essential to our own - know, too, that the safety of our bases in Britain is of the utmost importance to our policy of deterrence - the defense of Europe would be nearly impossible without our access to the British Isles.

There is a secondary reason. Our atomic achievements were not exclusively American. They came of Anglo-American parentage. Sir Winston Churchill has, or had, in his private safe an agreement signed by Franklyn Roosevelt, providing for the pooling of British and American scientists and scientific knowledge in developing the atomic bomb. The project was to be located in this country, because it would be safer here, and because we were better able to bear the cost. This document was of course not a treaty. Now it is only a souvenir. But the nation which developed Radar, the de-Gaussing gear to handle magnetic mines, and which is now in some respects ahead of us in the development of jet engines, may be expected to have something to contribute to the scientific knowledge required for the development of new missiles. Mr. Sandys will not be coming as the representative of a small nation without resources, stability, experience and sanity. He will have something to offer which involves not only geography but know-how. His mission is in a sense historic, because it puts into practise Britain's decision no longer to live beyond its means, in a power world. Expenses must be cut, but a cut in defense appropriations can only be made with safety with out help.

In the global struggle Britain's strength is part of our strength, and when her strength in modern weapons is decreased, ours is too.

There is here a political and military problem of really unprecedented magnitude. For what the British want is effective and expensive arms which they cannot afford to produce, and at the same time they are determined to maintain that independence of policy, within treaty limits, which free nations always demand, and which right the British earned most recently in that year when they stood alone when, as Churchill said: "Those who were half asleep became half ready."

Our decision on this matter presumably will have to be based on how much duplication of effort there is now between the British and American defense efforts who is ahead with what in terms of development -- whether a degree of pooling is possible -- and finally whether it is in our national self-interest and that of the free world to provide Britain with the modern weapons she requests.

Prime Minister MacMillan said recently that Britain must not carry "more than her fair share of the defense burden." The question is, what is to be the test of fairness. We are already carrying a heavier load than any other member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Our military commitments stretch literally around the world, and may already exceed our capabilities.

The solution of this problem won't be found in phrases or generalities, or sentiments of good will, for the British are literally under the gun -- and it isn't an old fashioned one.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: Announcments

MURROW: The United States and Great Britain have long enjoyed a partnership. It is to be hoped this partnership will not be allowed to fall apart. For as Sir Winston Churchill said, "If the United States and England do fall apart... and wander astray from the beacon light of their destiny...there is no end or measure to the miseries and confusion which await."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Jan. 28, 1957

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly today began a new round of debate on the deadlock between Egypt and Israel./ Two Arab countries opened the debate. The Sudan asked that Israel be condemned for not completing its withdrawal from Egypt./ Jordan said the assembly should consider expelling Israel from the world organization./ But Ceylon called for moderation. Israel, it said, should complete the withdrawal... and, in that way, create an atmosphere favorable for a settlement./ The United States agreed that Israel should complete its evacuation "without further delay."/ American Ambassador Lodge supported the recommendation of Secretary General Hammarskjold that United Nations troops be deployed on both sides of the 1949 armistice line. The United States, he said, regards it as "essential" that U.N. forces be stationed at the entrance to

—7

~~the entrance to~~ the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel has refused to evacuate this position because Egypt used it to bottle up Israeli shipping. Again today, in the General Assembly, Israel said it is willing to withdraw from the area but that... first... it wants guarantees against recurrence of the blockade. The Israeli spokesman... Abba Eban... again argued against Egyptian possession of Gaza. He contended the General Assembly does have the authority "for such arrangements in Gaza as are most conducive to the security and welfare of its people." Israel has proposed... repeatedly... that it be allowed to conduct the civil administration of the Gaza Strip, under the auspices of the United Nations. Prime Minister Ben Gurion said in Jerusalem today that the Gaza Strip... if allowed to develop in its present framework (with a suitable relationship with the United Nations)... "can become a pilot plant for Israel-Arab cooperation."

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles again testified on President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals -- this time, behind closed doors. The Senate armed services and foreign relations committees heard the testimony in a joint session. Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana said afterward that Mr. Dulles had "improved our understanding of the situation."

The House Rules Committee voted today to bar amendments, when the Eisenhower resolution is taken up tomorrow on the House floor. The committee vote is subject to approval by the full House.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special message urging passage of his school aid program. The program calls for expenditure of a little more than 2-billion dollars in federal funds over a period of four years. A billion, 300-million dollars of this would go for school construction... at the rate of 325-million dollars a year. States would be required to match the federal contribution after the first year. The government would also be given authority to buy 750-million dollars in bonds from school districts that are unable to obtain money to build at reasonable interest. In calling for "quick" passage, Mr. Eisenhower said it must be recognized as an emergency measure. Once the schoolroom shortage is overcome, he said, "communities must meet their future needs with their own resources."

Secretary of Defense Wilson told the House Armed Services Committee today that... under the present situation... he cannot predict any "big" cut in military spending. Wilson upheld the new order extending the active training period for National Guardsmen to six months.

Joining the National Guard during the Korean War, he said, was "a sort of scandal"... "a draft-dodging business." Wilson said, "A boy 17 to 18 and a half could enlist in the National Guard and not be drafted to fight in Korea." The president of the National Guard Association... Major General Ellard Walsh... challenged Wilson's statement. He said 37 percent of the Army national guard and 84 percent of the air guard were mobilized during the Korean fighting. "Practically all" who were mobilized, he said, got to Korea. Wilson conceded that the National Guard is no longer "a draft-dodging proposition."

The White House today announced the resignation of James B. Conant as United States ambassador to West Germany. Mr. Conant had expressed a desire to return to private life. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "deepest personal regret."

Algeria was hit today by a general strike... called by Moslem leaders in support of national independence. Arab shops in most Algerian cities were closed. The streets of Algiers are deserted tonight, with French tanks blocking the highways leading out of the city.

The representatives of six Western European countries failed today to agree on plans for a common European market. They also were unable to write a treaty for an atomic energy pool. The six countries... which had been meeting over the week-end in Brussels... called another conference for Februaty 12th. They expressed confidence that... this time... agreement would be reached.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Ben Gold, the New York labor leader convicted of filing a false non-Communist affidavit under the Taft-Hartley Act. The decision was based on a technicality. While Gold was on trial, in 1954, three members of the jury were contacted by an F.B.I. agent. The agent said he made the contact inadvertently, while working on another case. The decision for re-trial was split, 6 to 3.

The executive council of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. issued a policy statement today regarding public investigation of union affairs. Under this policy, any official of an affiliated union... who pleads the Fifth Amendment for "personal protection"... will be fired.

Edward R. Murrow: January 28, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

When a man who makes and sells automobiles decides to talk to automobile dealers, not about business - new models, expanding markets - but about foreign policy, that is news of a sort. And that is what Henry Ford II did in San Francisco today. Mr. Ford contended that foreign policy is everybody's business, and he wants more talk and discussion about it. It is essential that we have a foreign policy that looks at the long range rather than the immediate future. Only in this way can the State Department hope to avoid the difficult problem of trying to sell new solutions, to meet new crises, to an uninformed electorate.

Mr. Ford obviously feels that we have been doing too much emergency improvising. He spoke of "problems we can no longer evade". In referring to the Middle East he said: "We found ourselves urging on the United Nations a course of action that had the effect of saving the neck of a dictator whose provocative action against the vital interests of our oldest and nearest friends had brought the crisis to a head." He spoke of ~~the immediate possibility of further Soviet penetration of the Middle East, where a~~ minor shift in the ~~political sympathies of a few highly unstable governments~~ could give ~~the Soviets~~ any day now effective working ~~control of the oil and trade~~ routes of the Middle ~~East. Moscow would have monopoly control of more~~ than half of the world's resources."

The Russians are scattering new trade and mutual aid agreements, not only among the satellites, but in the Middle East, Africa, Asia and Latin America. Their propaganda mills continue to roll on a budget roughly ten times that of our Voice of America. Mr. Ford said: "Vacillation before the urgent pressure of these events can only lead from one disaster to another." He obviously does not think highly of the conduct of our foreign policy during recent months, because he said: "We can no longer afford to take a passive stand and merely react to things after they happen, in a sort of fire alarm diplomacy."

Referring again to the Middle East he said: "There has not been much as yet to indicate just what we want to do to settle the Arab refugee problem, to bring about a just and lasting settlement of Arab-Israeli disputes; and to assure the free international use of the Suez Canal. The American public is just as much in the dark about what we propose to do in these situations, as anybody else in the world." Mr. Ford was willing to grasp the tough nettle of trade with the satellites and Red China. He said: "Maybe the people of Red China are just as anxious to get rid of the yoke of Communism, as the Hungarians have demonstrated they were. Shouldn't we give them the chance, or at least some alternative to their present ties with the Kremlin?"

On the subject of Germany Mr. Ford predicted that someday, and not too far away, Germany will be united again; but under whose sponsorship will that take place - ours or the Russians?

What Mr. Ford is advocating is a consistent long-range policy, combining both trade and aid. He wants us to get rid of the childish notion that we are out to buy love or friendship. No one is going to love us for what we give them. We are much too big, too rich and powerful for anyone to love us. What we should expect is for other nations to realize our friendship is to be desired, and our antipathy to be avoided, in their own best interests.

Ford is in favor of this program, not merely because of the Soviet threat but because he thinks it is in our own best long-range business interests to strengthen the economies and raise the living standards of the people we want to do business with all over the world. He remarks that in a time of unprecedented national prosperity the high tariff people are still wagging the dog of American foreign economic policy, still asking for and getting what amounts to a subsidy from every American consumer.

Mr. Ford's speech today adds up to a strong dissent by a business man to a business man's administration of foreign policy. He said: "We have to stop defining our day-to-day actions in terms of rigid absolutes. We should be on guard against hypocrisy in determining whether or not we will deal with certain nations and their leaders on the basis of morality. The experience of the last two decades certainly ought to have taught us that there can be few absolutes in international affairs. Yesterday's implacable enemies are today's friends. Too often today's heroes are tomorrow's villains. Things do constantly change, and there's no sense in swearing that we will never take up arms in a certain cause, ~~XXXX~~ or do business with a certain country or system - because tomorrow may make liars of us."

Politicians and economists may disagree with Mr. Ford's analysis, but he has history - even recent history - on his side.

George Bryant

Word for Today

Mr. Henry Ford would like to see more initiative in America foreign policy... and less reacting to international events. In his phrase, there has been too much reaction to things after they happen. So we need to plan ahead. As Elbert Hubbard said, "We get anything we prepare for. Everything that happens is a sequence. This happened today because we did that yesterday."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly today began a new round of debate on the deadlock between Egypt and Israel. Two Arab countries opened the debate. The Sudan asked that Israel be condemned for not completing its withdrawal from Egypt. Jordan said the assembly should consider expelling Israel from the world organization. But Ceylon called for moderation. Israel, it said, should complete the withdrawal...and, in that way, create an atmosphere favorable for a settlement. The United States agreed that Israel should complete its evacuation "without further delay." American Ambassador Lodge supported the recommendation of Secretary General Hammarskjold that United Natidns troops be deployed on both sides of the 1949 armistice line. The United States, he said, regards it as "essential" that U.N. forces be stationed at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel has refused to evacuate this position because Egypt used it to bottle up Israeli shipping. Again today, in the General Assembly, Israel said it is willing to withdraw from the area but that...first...it wants guarantees against recurrence of the blockade. The Israeli spokesman...Abba Eban...again argued against Egyptian possession of Gaza. He contended the General Assembly does-have the authority "for such arrangements in Gaza as are most conducive to the security and welfare of its people." Israel has proposed...repeatedly... that it be allowed to conduct the civil administration of the Gaza Strip, under the auspices of the United Nations. Prime Minister Ben Gurion said in Jerusalem today that the Gaza Strip...if allowed to develop in' its present framework (with a suitable relationship with the United Nations)... "can become a pilot plant for Israel-Arab cooperation."

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles again testified on President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals - this time, behind closed doors. The Senate armed services and foreign relations committees heard the testimony in a joint session. Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana said afterward that Mr. Dulles had "improved our understanding of the situation."

The House Rules Committee voted today to bar amendments, when the Eisenhower resolution is taken up tomorrow on the House floor. The committee vote is subject to approval by the full House.

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special message urging passage of his school aid program. The program calls for expenditure of a little more than 2-billion dollars in federal funds over a period of four years. A billion, 300-million dollars of this would go for school construction...at the rate of 325-million dollars a year. States would be required to match the federal contribution after the first year. The government would also be given authority to buy 750-million dollars in bonds from school districts that are unable to obtain money to build at reasonable interest.

Secretary of Defense Wilson told the House Armed Services Committee today that...under the present situation...he cannot predict any "big" cut in military spending. Wilson upheld the new order extending the active training period for National Guardsmen to six months.

Joining the National Guard during the Korean War, he said, was "sort of a scandal"..."a draft'dodging business." Wilson said, "A boy 17 to 18 and a half could enlist in the National Guard and not be drafted to fight in Korea." The president of the National Guard Association...Major General Ellard Walsh...challenged Wilson's statement. He said 37 percent of the Army national guard and 84 percent of the air guard were mobilized during' the Korean fighting. "Practically all" who were mobilized, he said, got to Korea. Wilson conceded that the National Guard is no longer "a draft-dodging proposition."

The White House today announced the resignation of James B. Conant as United States ambassador to West Germany. Mr. Conant had expressed a desire to return to private life. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "deepest personal regret,"

Algeria was hit today by a general strike...called by Moslem leaders in support of national independence. Arab shops in most Algerian cities were closed. The streets of Algiers are deserted tonight, with French tanks blocking the highways leading out of the city.

The representatives of six Western European countries failed today to agree on plans for a common European market. They also were unable to write a treaty for an atomic energy pool. The six countries, which had been meeting over the weekend in Brussels...called another conference for February 12th. They expressed confidence that,..this time...agreement would be reached.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Ben Gold, the New York labor leader convicted of filing a false non-Communist affidavit under the Taft-Hartley Act. The decision was based on a technicality. While Gold was on trial, in 1954, three members of the jury were contacted by an FBI agent. The agent said he made the contact inadvertently, whfile working on another case. The decision for re-trial was split, 6 to 3.

The executive council of the AFL - CIO issued a policy statement today regarding public investigation of union affairs. Under this policy, any official of an affiliated union...who pleads the Fifth Amendment for "personal protection",..will be fired.

When a man who makes and sells automobiles decides to talk to automobile dealers, not about business - new models, expanding markets - but about foreign policy, that is news of a sort. And that is what Henry Ford II did in San Francisco today. Mr. Ford contended that foreign policy is everybody's business, and he wants more talk and discussion about it. It is essential that we have a foreign policy that looks at the long range rather than the immediate future. Only in this way can the State Department hope to avoid the difficult problem of trying to sell new solutions, to meet new crises, to an uninformed electorate.

Mr. Ford obviously feels that we have been doing too much emergency improvising. He spoke of "problems we can no longer evade". In referring to the Middle East he said: "We found ourselves urging on the United Nations a course of action that had the effect of saving the neck of a dictator, whose provocative action against the vital interests of our oldest and nearest friends had brought the crisis to a head."

The Russians are scattering new trade and mutual aid agreements, not only among the satellites, but in the Middle East, Africa, Asia and Latin America. Their propaganda mills continue to roll on a budget roughly ten times that of our Voice of America. Mr. Ford said: "Vacillation before the urgent pressure of these events can only lead from one disaster to another." He obviously does not think highly of the conduct of our foreign policy during recent months, because he said: "We can no longer afford to take a passive stand and merely react to things after they happen, in a sort of "fire alarm diplomacy."

Referring again to the Middle East he said: "There has not been much as yet to indicate just what we want to do to settle the Arab refugee problem, to bring about a just and lasting settlement of Arab-Israeli disputes; and to assure the free international use of the Suez Canal. The American public is just as much in the dark about what we propose to do in these situations, as anybody else in the world." Mr. Ford was willing to grasp the tough nettle of trade with the satellites and Red China. He said: "Maybe the people of Red China are just as anxious to get rid of the yoke of Communism as the Hungarians have demonstrated they were. Shouldn't we give them the chance, or at least some alternative to their present ties with the Kremlin?"

On the subject of Germany Mr. Ford predicted that someday, and not too far away, Germany will be united again; but under whose sponsorship will that take place - ours or the Russians?

What Mr. Ford is advocating is a consistent long-range policy, combining both trade and aid. He wants us to get rid of the childish notion that we are out to buy love or friendship. No one is going to love us for what we give them. We are much too big, too rich and powerful for anyone to love us. What we should expect is for other nations to realize our friendship is to be desired, and our antipathy to be avoided, in their own best interests.

Ford is in favor of this program, not merely because of the Soviet threat but because he thinks it is in our own best long-range business interests to strengthen the economies and raise the living standards of the people we want to do business with all over the world. He remarked that in a time of unprecedented national prosperity the high tariff people are still wagging the dog of American foreign economic policy, still asking for and getting what amounts to a subsidy from every American consumer.

Mr. Ford's speech today adds up to a strong dissent by a business man to a business man's administration of foreign policy. He said: "We have to stop defining our day-to-day actions in terms of rigid absolutes. We should be on guard against hypocrisy in determining whether or not we will deal with certain nations and their leaders on the basis of morality. The experience of the last two decades certainly ought to have taught us that there can be few absolutes in international affairs. Yesterday's implacable enemies are today's friends. Too often today's heroes are tomorrow's villains. Things do constantly change, and there's no sense in swearing that we will never take up arms in a certain cause, or do business with a certain country or system - because tomorrow may make liars of us."

Politicians and economists may disagree with Mr. Ford's analysis, but he has history - even recent history - on his side.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Henry Ford would like to see more initiative in America foreign policy...and less reacting to international events. In his phrase, there has been too much reaction to things after they happen. So we need to plan ahead. As Elbert Hubbard said, "We get anything we prepare for. Everything that happens is a sequence. This happened today because we did that yesterday."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Jan. 29, 1957

This is the news:

A review of United States policy in the Middle East was voted today by two committees of the Senate. / The vote... by the combined armed services and foreign relations committees... was unanimous. / The motion was made by Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas. / Fulbright originally called for an investigation of Middle East policy, as conducted by Secretary of State Dulles. Later, it was agreed that the study should cover the years from 1946 to the present, so as to include the Truman Administration. / It was also understood that this was not to hold up action on President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals. / Today, Mr. Dulles sent the joint committee a letter... saying he would "welcome" the investigation since, he said, he "understood" it would cover the postwar decade "and not seek to breach the confidence of friendly governments." Fulbright says he will not regard this reservation as binding, in view of the fact that Dulles' letter was not received until after the inquiry was approved.

→

President Eisenhower was a surprise guest today at a luncheon given by the Senate Republican Policy Committee on Capitol Hill. Mr. Eisenhower went out of his way at the luncheon to compliment Secretary Dulles. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire says the President called Dulles a "well-qualified, hard-working, dedicated secretary of state."

The House voted today to take up President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy without allowing amendments from the floor. The motion to bar amendments was passed, 262 to 146. Speaker Rayburn said the House will vote on the Eisenhower resolution tomorrow. And he predicted it will be approved.

The President asks... in his resolution... for standby authority to use American troops, if necessary, against Soviet aggression in the Middle East. He also requests ~~[illegible]~~ authority to extend economic aid. Today, Democratic Senator Mansfield offered a substitute proposal. It has roughly the same military features as the President's resolution... but calls for a "specific" economic aid program "to facilitate settlement of the Suez dispute and the Arab-Israeli conflict."

Debate on that conflict continued today in the United Nations General Assembly. Russia supported Arab demands that Israeli forces evacuate the Gaza Strip and their positions at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. It attacked the American proposal that United Nations troops move into these areas after the Israelis leave, calling it "a new plan of intervention in Egypt's internal affairs." Canada called for adoption of a "middle-of-the-road" policy. It advocated complete Israeli withdrawal, but proposed the stationing of U.N. troops at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba to insure free passage for Israeli ships. Like the United States, Canada also advocated the deployment of United Nations forces along the 1949 Armistice Line and in the Gaza Strip. Canada said these moves should be "followed immediately by action to settle the Arab-Israeli dispute."

~~After hearing these arguments, the assembly adjourned until later this week... when one or more resolutions dealing with the problem may be introduced.~~

King Saud of Saudi Arabia arrived in New York today on board the liner Constitution. At the entrance to the harbor he was transferred... with his entourage... to an American warship and received a 21-gun salute. New York City officials boycotted his arrival. Mayor Wagner said he was ignoring the event because of Saud's anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic policies. Governor Harriman said nothing, but stayed away. The king was greeted on behalf of the United States government by our United Nations ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge. He was guest-of-honor at a luncheon at United Nations headquarters... and spoke briefly before the General Assembly, expressing hope that nations will abandon "the policies of force." Tomorrow, he will go to Washington for talks with the President.

→

Yugoslavia announced tonight that Marshal Tito is turning down an invitation to visit the United States. The announcement... appearing in the official government newspaper... said Tito was not coming because of what it called "the hostile, insulting campaign against Yugoslavia in a section of the American press." The announcement said Tito had received a proposal to visit the United States, "which surely was guided by the belief that such a visit would be useful to both sides." So far, there has been no comment from the White House. But the State Department says it is "speechless". House Majority Leader McCormack calls the Yugoslav announcement "quite a victory". McCormack is one of more than a hundred congressmen who have signed a petition opposing a Tito visit on the ground that he is "detestable in the eyes of the American people."

Russia and Czechoslovakia today signed a joint communique... calling for a strengthening of the Warsaw Pact. This is necessary, they claimed, because of the refusal of the West to scrap NATO and accept Russia's disarmament proposals. The communique marked the end of a three-day meeting of Soviet and Czech leaders in Moscow.

The United States Army today announced a new guided missile, the Lacrosse. It described the Lacrosse as "a deadly accurate missile for close tactical support of ground troops in the field."

Edward R. Murrow: January 29, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

It seems that most roads these days lead either to Washington or to Moscow. King Saud of Saudi Arabia arrives in Washington tomorrow. / Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia isn't coming NOW. / The controversy that has swirled about these two visits illustrates one of the problems of leadership in a world that is dominated by power. Judging by some of the statements made by law makers in Washington, the question was whether Saud or Tito is a more respectable, presentable, and agreeable man. This is the kind of emotional inconsistency which makes the conduct of foreign policy difficult in a democracy. As a matter of fact the conduct of neither man is exactly what American parents would urge their children to emulate.

Both men are important to us; both have received our aid in generous quantity. We need them, and they need us.

King Saud is the first foreign visitor whom President Eisenhower will meet at the Washington airport. This rare honor, however, is no signal of personal affection or admiration on the part of the President. / This unusual treatment is being accorded, because we want King Saud's aid and comfort in the highly explosive area of the Middle East. / He is one of the most powerful figures in the Arab world, and with our help he may become even more powerful. But King Saud is not coming here because of his affection for the President, or because Saudi Arabians love Americans, or know or care what we stand for. He is here for the same reason that we invited him - out of self-interest. Saudi Arabia has lost about a third of its income through the Suez crisis, and needs help. King Saud can speak in a certain sense for himself, Egypt, Syria and Jordan, and he wants to influence the so-called Eisenhower doctrine in favor of the Arab states. He is an Ally and sponsor of Nasser in Egypt. He in common with his allies has sworn to destroy Israel. His partnership with Nasser is costing him a lot of money. Washington may not be able to influence him to influence Nasser, but it obviously thinks it's worth a big try.

King Saud's morals - whether, for example, he is more moral than Tito - have nothing to do with power politics. Saudi Arabia is a feudal state - Christians are not allowed to worship publicly - even Americans are unable to employ Jews in the country. There are probably about a million slaves there - maybe one person out of seven can sign his own name. King Saud is the most absolute of absolute monarchs. His reign is a combination of Cadillacs, air-conditioning, cruelty and medievalism. However, he controls one-sixth of the total oil reserves of the world. In terms of his personal life and political practises he stands for everything we oppose. And yet he is receiving this extraordinary welcome in Washington because he needs us and we think we need him.

In the past we have felt the same way about Tito. He has received massive aid from this country. The objections to him are that he is a Communist, a Dictator, a persecutor of Catholics, and the author of many deplorable actions. We helped him to break free from Kremlin control. We have been helping him ever since. He has contributed to the decline of the Kremlin's control of its satellites. And that is one of the substantial gains in our favor in recent years. There is no reason to think that Tito is going to make himself over into our image; even less reason to think that Saud will do so. But whatever emerges from the conversations in Washington with King Saud - whatever he promises or whatever we agree to - nothing fundamental will be solved in the Middle East unless one condition is met: if Saud continues to demand the destruction of Israel - if he continues to support Nasser's position - then the final result will be collision in one form or another. This will be true, no matter what we promise or what Saud promises. There is some reason to believe that Saud is worried about Nasser's prominence and leadership. The unity of the Arab world is largely a myth, but it is united in its determination to destroy Israel. So long as that state of affairs continues, there is no peace. So with Saud, who has come, and Tito who isn't coming, we are obliged in the light of our own self-interest to deal with individuals and political philosophies with which we have nothing in common. The alternative is to deal only with those nations who share our political philosophy and regard for the rights of individuals. And unfortunately for us there aren't enough of such nations about. And our relations with those who do share our aspirations have been sorely strained. The restoration of that relationship, specifically with Britain and France, would seem to be more urgent than the bribing, placating or mollifying of either Arab leaders or Tito.

Word for Today

King Saud is welcome in Washington because, it is believed, something is to be gained by the visit. And if Tito ever comes to this country, it will be for the same practical reason. Theodore Parker once said, "Politics is the science of exigencies." This is especially true of power politics. And Benjamin Franklin said, "There is a time to wink as well as to see."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A review of United States policy in the Middle East was voted today by two committees of the Senate. The vote...by the combined armed services and foreign relations committees...was unanimous. The motion was made by Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas. Fulbright originally called for an investigation of the Middle East policy as conducted by Secretary of State Dulles. Later, it was agreed that the study should cover the years from 1946 to the present, so as to include the Truman Administration. It was also understood that this was not to hold up action on President Eisenhower's new Middle East proposals. Today, Mr. Dulles sent the joint committee a letter...saying te would "welcome" the investigation since, he said, he "understood" it would cover the postwar decade "and not seek to breach the confidence of friendly governments." Fulbright says he will not regard this reservation as binding, in view of the fact that Dulles' letter was not received until after the inquire was approved.

President Eisenhower was a surprise guest today at a luncheon given by the Senate Republican Policy Committee on Capitol Hill. Mr. Eisenhower went out of his way at the luncheon to compliment Secretary Dulles. Senator Bridges of New Hampshire says the President called Dulles a "well-qualified, hard-working, dedicated secretary of state."

The House voted today to take up President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy without allowing amendments from the floor. The motion to bar amendments was passed 262 to 146. Speaker Rayburn said the House will vote on the Eisenhower resolution tomorrow. And he predicted it will be approved.

The president asks...in his resolution...for standby authroity to use American troops, if necessary, against Soviet aggression in the Middle East.

He also requests authority to extend economic aid. Today, Democratic Senator Mansfield offered a substitute proposal. It has roughly the same military features as the President's resolution..but calls for a "specific" economic aid program "to facilitate settlement of the Suez dispute and the Arab -Israeli conflict."

Debate on that conflict cottinued today in the United Nations General Assembly. Russia supported Arab demands that Israeli forces evacuate the Gaza Strip and their position at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. It attacked the American proposal that United Nations troops move into these areas after the Israelis leave, calling it "a new plan of intervention in Egypt's internal affairs." Canada called for adoption of a "middle-of-the-road" policy. It advocated complete Israeli withdrawal, but proposed the stationing of U.N. troops at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba to insure free passage for Israeli ships. Like the United States, Canada also advotated the deployment of the United Nations forces along the 1949 Armistice Line in the Gaza Strip. Canada said these moves should be "followed immediately by action to settle the Arab- Israeli dispute."

King Saud of Saudi Arabia arrived in New York today on board the liner Constitution. At the entrance to the harbor he was transferred..with his entourage..to an American warship and received a 21-gun salute. New York City officials boycotted his arrival. Mayor Wagner said he was ignoring the event because of Suad's Anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic policies. Governor Harriman said nothing, but stayed away. The king was greeted on behalf of the United States government by our United Nations ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge. He was guest-of honor at a luncheon at United Nations headquarters..and spoke briefly before the General Assembly, expressing hope that nations will abandon "the policies of force." Tomorrow, he will go to Washington for talks with the President.

Yugoslavia announced tonight that Marshal Tito is turning down an invitation to visit the United States. The announcement..appearing in the official government newspaper..said Tito was not coming because of what it called "the hostile, insulting campaign against Yugoslavia in a section of the American press." The announcement said Tito had received a proposal to visit the United States, "which surely was guided by the belief that such a visit would be useful to both sides." So far, there has been no comment from the White House. But the State Department says it is "speechless." House Majority Leader McCormack calls the Yugoslav announcement "quite a victory." McCormack is one of more than a hundred congressmen who have signed a petition opposing a Tito visit on the ground that he is "detestable in the eyes of the American people."

Russia and Czechoslovakia today signed a joint communique calling for a strengthening of the Warsaw Pact. This is necessary, they claimed, because of the refusal of the West to scrap NATO and accept Russia's disarmament proposals. The communique marked the end of a three-day meeting of Soviet and Czech leaders. in Moscow.

The United States Army today announced a new guided missile, the Lacrosse. It described the Lacrosse as "a deadly accurate missile for close tactical support of ground troops in the field."

It seems that most roads these days lead either to Washington or to Moscow King Saud of Saudi Arabia arrives in Washington tomorrow. Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia isn't coming now. The controversy that has swirled about these two visits illustrates one of the problems of leadership in a world that is dominated by power. Judging by some of the statements made by the law makers in Washington, the question was whether Saud or Tito is a more respectable, presentable and agreeable man. This is the kind of emotional inconsistency which makes the conduct of foreign policy difficult in a democracy. As a matter of fact the conduct of neither man is exactly what American parents would urge their children to emulate.

Both men are important to us; both have reveived our aid in generous quantity. We need them and they need us.

King Saud is the first foreign visitor whom President Eisenhower will meet at the Washington airport. This rare honor, however, is no signal of personal affection or admiration on the part of the President. This unusual treatment is being accorded because we want King Saud's aid and comfort in the highly explosive area of the Middle East. He is one of the most powerful figures in the Arab world, and with our help he may even become even more powerful. But King Saud is not coming here because of his affection for the President, or because Saudi Arabians love Americans or know or care what we stand for. He is here for the same reason that we invited him - out of self - interest. Saudi Arabia has lost about a third of its income through the Suez crisis, and needs help. King Saud can speak in a certain sense for himself, Egypt, Syria and Jordan, and he wants to influence the so-called Eisenhower doctrine in favor of the Arab states. He is an Ally and sponsor of Nasser in Egypt. He in common with his allies has sworn to destroy Israel. His partnership with Nasser is costing him a lot of money. Washington may not be able to influence him to influence Nasser, but it obviously thinks it's worth a big try.

King Suad's morals - whether, for example, he is more moral than Tito - have nothing to do with power politics. Saudi Arabia is a fudal state - Christians are not allowed to worship publicly - even Americans are unable to employ Jews in the country. There are probably about a million slaves there - maybe one person out of seven can sign his own name. King Saud is the most absolute of absolute monarchs, His reigh is a combinatinn of Cadillacs, air-conditionin, cruelty and medievalism. However, he controls one-sixth of the total oil reserves of the world. In terms of his personal life and political practices he stands for everything we oppose. And yet he is reveiving this extraordinary welcome in Washington because he needs us and we think we need him.

In the past we have felt the same way about Tito. He has received massive aid from this country. The objections to him are that he is a Communist, a Dictator, a persecutor of Catholics, and the author of many deplorable actions. We helped him to break free from Kremlin control. We have been helping him ever since. He has contributed to the decline of the Kremlin's control of its satellites. And that is one of the substantial gains in our favor in recent years. There is no reason to think that Tito is going to make himself over into our image; even less reason to think that Saud will do so. But whatever emerges from the conversations in Washington with King Saud - whatever he promises or whatever we agree to - nothing fundamental will be solved in the Middle East unless one condition is met: if Saud continues to demand the destruction of Israel - if he continues to support Nasser's position - then the final result will be collision in one form or another. This will be true no matter what we promise or what Saud promises. There is some reason to believe that Saud is worrred about Nasser's prominence and leadership. The unity of the Arab world is largely a myth, tut it is united in its determination to destroy Israel. So long as that state of affairs continues, there is no peace. So with Saud, two has come, and Tito who isn't coming, we are obliged in the light of our own self' interest to deal with individuals and political pholosophies with which we have nothing in common. The alternative is to deal only with those nations who share our political philosophy and regard for the rights of individuals. And unfortunately for us there aren't enough of such nations about. And our relations with those who do share our aspirations have been sorely strained. The restoration of that relaitonship, specifically with Britain and France, would seem to be more urgent than the bribing, placating or mollifying of either Arab leaders or Tito.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with he Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW;:King Saud is welcome in Washington because, it is believed, something is to gained by the visit. And if Tito ever comes to this country, it will be for the same practical reason. Theodore Parker once said, "Politics is the science of exigencies." This is expecially true of power politics. And Benjamin Franklin said, "There is a time to wink as well as to see."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Jan. 30, 1957

This is the news:

King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, arrived in Washington today for a state visit. President Eisenhower greeted the king at National Airport as "a great leader of the Arab people". The President said, "We look forward with great expectation to discussing problems with you that are important to both our countries." Saud is in Washington for three days of talks. The first session was held at the White House this afternoon. And tonight the king will be guest of honor at a formal state dinner.

Mr. Eisenhower told a news conference this morning that he is "obliged" to any head of state who comes to talk to him. "You don't promote peace," he said, "by talking only to people with whom you agree." The President "deplored" any discourtesy to such a visitor. He did not refer to Mayor Wagner of New York City by name. Yesterday, when

—>

King Saud arrived in New York, Wagner boycotted the welcoming ceremonies on grounds that Saud is anti-Jewish, anti-Catholic and favors slavery. The President's remarks applied not only to King Saud... but to Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia. The official Yugoslav newspaper Borba said yesterday that Tito could not accept an invitation to visit the United States at this time because of what it called "the hostile, insulting campaign against Tito in a section of the American press." It also referred to the petition against the visit being circulated in Congress. A Yugoslav spokesman said today, in Belgrade, that the proposed visit has not been canceled. He said the matter is still under study by the two governments.

President Eisenhower said... at his news conference... that he thought Defense Secretary Wilson's statement casting aspersion on the National Guard had been "very unwise". Wilson said on Monday that the National Guard during the Korean War had been "a sort of scandal"... "a draft-dodging business." He made the statement in supporting a new order requiring six months active duty training for National Guardsmen. Today, President Eisenhower also supported the six-month training program... but said, "These men have not been slackers, when they entered military service according to law."

Mr. Eisenhower defended Secratary of State Dulles from Democratic attack. Even with the benefit of hindsight, he said, the attackers have not been able to come up with any "constructive" proposals. He said Mr. Dulles never acted without his advance approval. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that in any review of Middle East policy, he would refuse to divulge his correspondence with the leaders of foreign governments. Such action, he said, would be "a betrayal of confidence". Such a review of Middle East policy since 1946 has been voted by the Senate armed services and foreign relations committees.

The House today approved President Eisenhower's new policy for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. The vote was 355 to 61. The measure ~~would give the President authority to use American troops, if necessary, to resist Soviet aggression against any Middle East country that asks for help. It would also give the President authority to spend an additional 200-million dollars in economic aid before June 30th. Within this period, no single Middle East country could receive aid amounting to more than 30-million dollars.~~ The measure now goes to the Senate.

The Senate today authorized the establishment of a special eight-man committee with broad powers to investigate alleged racketeering "in the field of labor-management relations." The committee was allowed 350-thousand dollars for expenses.

The chief of naval operations... Admiral Arleigh Burke... told the House Armed Services Committee today that since World War Two Russia has built more warships of all types than the rest of the world combined. The Soviet navy, he said, has grown to the extent that it "poses a serious threat to our control of the seas today." Admiral Burke said that... by about 1970... the United States Navy expects to be operating what will be, essentially, a nuclear-powered fleet.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced progress today in both its military and civilian nuclear development programs. The A.E.C. said... in its semi-annual report... that the United States is expanding its facilities for weapons production and research. It said "new design principles" stemming from last year's H-bomb tests "will lead to more efficient weapons that can be more efficiently employed." The tests also yielded important information relating to reduction of radio-active fallout.

—7

The commission reported "a notable advance" toward nuclear propulsion of aircraft, in ground tests at the Idaho reactor station. / And "satisfactory" progress, it said, has been made in the last six months in its experimental program to develop economical atomic power. The commission stressed the safeguards taken against radiation in the various nuclear power plants. And it said the United States and Britain are exchanging information in their effort to "tame" the H-bomb for industrial use.

The United Nations General Assembly today adopted a resolution calling on South Africa to "revise" its racial policies. The vote was 56 to 5, with 12 abstentions.

Russia has ordered the expulsion of two assistant military attaches serving the American Embassy in Moscow. It accused the attaches of "engaging in activities imcompatible with their diplomatic status." / The action was in retaliation for the recent expulsion of two Soviet officials from the United States.

Here in New York, a grand jury today indicted George Metesky, the confessed "Mad Bomber", on 47 counts. The counts range from "damaging a building by explosives" to attempted murder. / If convicted on all 47 counts,

→

Metesky could be sentenced to prison for 815 years. He is presently undergoing a series of mental tests in Bellevue Hospital.

The flood waters in West Virginia are beginning to recede. But most of Williamson, West Virginia... a town of 9-thousand population... is still under water. In Hazard, Kentucky, the flooded Kentucky River has caused damage estimated at 5-million dollars. Five deaths are reported -- three in Kentucky and two in West Virginia. And thousands of persons have been routed from their homes.

Edward R. Murrow: January 30, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

One of the curious facts about this country is that we have not been told just how strong we are in the world of power. Without adequate power in the nuclear age, our future is dark indeed. But without knowledge about how strong we really are, the future cannot be made bright.

Three questions about our Military Power are elementary. How strong are we in relation to the Soviet Union? If we are stronger today, are we going to be able to maintain our superiority? If not, in what way are we failing? These are the big questions studied by the subcommittee of the Armed Services committee, of which Senator Symington was chairman. Its report is now out. One can hardly think of bigger questions, and the report answers them bluntly.

We are somewhat stronger than the Soviet Union today, we are not maintaining our relative strength, and our present plans will not keep us ahead. The majority report was signed by Senators Symington, Jackson and Ervin. A minority report by Senator Saltonstall does not attempt seriously to refute the conclusions of the majority.

The report might be called the first comprehensive effort yet made, to tell the public what our status is in the world of power. As such it may well count as one of the most vital statements to have come from Washington in a long time.

Here is a simplified summary of the conclusions of the majority: In another war we have to rely on the forces we have on hand. We cannot fight as in the past by mobilizing after the war begins. General Curtis LeMay told the committee: "I do not think any bomber will come out of the door after war starts."

We now have a strong strategic force, but its strength is declining relatively. The Soviet Union has on hand more modern fighting aircraft than we, and is producing more. It is able to turn a new design into an aircraft on hand quicker than we can. We do not have enough long-range jet bombers, and we have no program to produce enough.

Our skilled manpower is not large enough to properly maintain our aircraft and so to prevent accidents. It is not enough for us to keep up a proper alert against possible attack. We do not have enough jet tankers, or a program to make enough of them, though we could quite well do so. No comfort should be taken from our having naval air power to supplement our strategic striking power. The committee says it cannot be overcome in this way "significantly".

Obviously strategic air power depends on bases. Our base structure is found inadequate, both at home and abroad. It is not enough to enable us to maintain an alert status, or to disperse aircraft as essential for security.

Our overseas base structure is deteriorating, which makes it all the more important to have an adequate base structure on this continent. The report calls the existing deficiency on this continent increasingly dangerous.

Many of our research and development programs are duplicated, and even triplicated, and handicapped by dollar limitations. This has been the case in developing and producing guided missiles. Over-riding priority for ballistic missiles was delayed. Important scientific break-throughs have been retarded.

This is in contrast to Soviet progress in the same fields. "The Soviets", says the report, "exceed the United States in the rate of technicological development, training facilities, in speed of prototype development, in the training of scientists and engineers and in many other phases of aircraft production."

Our naval planning also is found deficient. We not only are found vulnerable to submarine attack on our shipping, but "particularly vulnerable to submarine missile attack on military and civilian targets within our heartland." One can conjure up inconceivable disasters from such a sentence. The report concludes that our vulnerability to sudden attack has increased and will continue to increase, and complains that an adequate warning system has not yet been developed.

These are the factors affecting all-out war. But the report points out that our defense planning has to deal with limited war too. Because we have vacillated between a policy of emphasizing and de-emphasizing limited war, we have not sufficiently prepared for both kinds of war. [Consequently we do not have airlift capacity to assure mobility to the army and enable it to fulfil its overseas commitments. We are not planning an adequate airlift.]

The committee says that this country has the capacity to produce and maintain its airpower, and hence its security, without overburdening taxpayers. Indeed it is better able to do so than the Soviet Union. But it says that the Defense Department, has not used the capacity available. And it states flatly that "financial considerations have often been placed ahead of defense requirements."

The hour is late for the nation to be getting this information. Whether it has come too late will be shown by what is now done about it.

George Bryan

Word for Today

It would appear that the United States should look to its defenses. One difficulty ~~mm~~ is that we have vascillated between emphasis on preparation for all-out war... and preparation for war on a limited scale. Its an area where the Layman is confused. ~~Consequently, we have achieved adequate preparation for neither.~~ Benjamin Franklin warned of this predicament when he said, "He that pursues two horses at once does not catch one... and lets the other go."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, arrived in Washington today for a state visit. President Eisenhower greeted the king at National Airport as "a great leader of the Arab people." The President said, "We look forward with great expectation to discussing problems with you that are important to both our countries." Saud is in Washington for three days of talks. The first session was held at the White House this afternoon. And tonight the king will be guest of honor at a formal state dinner.

Mr. Eisenhower told a news conference this morning that he is "obliged" to any head of state who comes to talk to him. "You don't promote peace," he said, "by talking only to people whih whom you agree." The President "deplored" any discourtesy to such a visitor. He did not refer to Mayor Wagner of New York City by name. Yesterday, when King Saud arrived in New Yor, Wagner boycotted the welcoming ceremonies on grounds that Saud is anti- Jewish, anti-Catholic and favors slavery. The President's remarks applied not only to King Saud..but to Marhslal Tito of Yugoslavia. The official Yugoslav newspaper Borba said yesterday that Tito could not accept an invitation to visit the United States at this time because of what it called"the hostile, insulting campaign against Tito in a section of the American press." It also referred to the petition against the visit being circulated in Congress. A Yugoslav spokesman said today, in Belgrade, that the proposed visit has not been canceled. He said the matter is still under study by the two governments.

President Essenhower said...at his news conference..that he thought Defense Secretary Wilson's statement casting asperison on the National Guard had been "very unwise". Wilson said on Monday that the National Guard during the Korean War had been "a sort of scandal"... " a draft-dodging business." He made the statement in supporting a new order requiring six months active duty training for National Guardsmen. Today, President Eisenhower also supported the six-month training program..but said, "These men have not been slackers, when they entered military service according to law."

Mr. Eisenhower defended Secretary of State Dulles fromDemocratic attack. Even with the benefit of hindsight, he said, the attackers have not been able to come up with any "constructive " proposals. He said Mr. Dulles never acted without his advance approval. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that in any review of Middle East policy, we would refuse to divulge his correspondence with the leaders of foreign governments. Such action, he said, would be a betrayal of confidence." Such a review of Middle East policy since 1946 has been voted by the Senate armed services and foreign relations committees.

The House today approved President Eisenhower's new policy for blocking Soviet penetration in the Middle East. The vote was 355 yo 61. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The Senate today authorized the establishment of a special eight-man committed with broad powers to investigate alleged racketeering "in the field of labor-management relations." The committee was allowed 350-thousand dollars for expenses.

The chief of nabal operations..Admiral Arleigh Burke..told the House Armed Services Committee today that since World War Two Russia has build more warships of all types than the rest of the world combined. The Soviet navy, he said, has grown to the extend that it "poses a serious threat to our control of the seas today." Admiral Burke said that by about 1970..the United States Navy expects to be operating what will be, essentially, a nuclear-powered fleet.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced progress today on both its military and civilian nuclear developomentprograms. The A.E.C. said..in its semi-annual report..that the United States is expanding its facilities for weapons and production and research. It said "new design principles" stemming from last year's H-bomb tests "will lead to more efficient weapons that can be more efficiently employed." The tests also yielded important information relating to reduction of radio-active fallout. The commission reported "a notable advance" toward nuclear propulsion of aircraft, in ground tests at the Idaho reactor station. And "satisfactory" progress, it said, has been made in the last six months in its experimental program to develop economical atomic power. The commission stressed the safeguards taken against radiation in the various nuclear power plants. And it said the United States and Britain are exchanging information in their effort to "tame" the H-bomb for industrial use.

The United Nations General Assembly today adopted a resolution calling on South Africa to "revise" its racial polices. The vote was 56 to 5 , with 12 abstentions. Russia has ordered the expuslion of two assistant military attaches serving the American Embassy in Moscow. It accused the attaches of "engaging in activities incompatible with their diplomatic status." The action was in retaliation for the recent expulsion of two Soviet officials from the United States.

Here in New York, a grand jury today indicted George Metesky, the confessed "Mad Bomber" on 47 counts The counts range from "damaging a building by explosives" to attempted murder. If conficted on all 47 couts, Metesky could be sentenced to prison for 815 years. He is presently undergoing a series of mental tests in Bellvue Hospital.

The flood waters in West Virgnnia are beginning to recede... But most of Williamson, West Virginia... a town of 9 thousand population .. is still under water . In Hazard, Kentucky, the flooded Kentucky River has caused damage estimated at 5 - million dollars. Five deaths are reported -- three in Kentucky and two in West Virginia. Add thousands of persons have been routed from their homes.

Three questions about our military power are elementary. How strong are we in relation to the Soviet Union? If we are stronger today, are we going to be able to maintain our superiority? If not, in what way are we failing?

These are the big questions studied by the subcommittee of the Armed Services committee of which Senator Symington was chairman. Its report is now out. One can hardly think of bigger questions, and the report answers them bluntly.

We are somethat stronger than the Soviet Union today we are not maintaining our relative strength, and our present plans will not keep us ahead. The majority report was signed by Senators Symington, Jackson and Ervin. A minority report by Senator Saltonstall does not attempt seriously to refute the conclusions of the majority.

Here is a simplified summary of the colclusions of the majority: In another war we have to rely on the forces we have on hand. We cannot fight as in the past, by mobilizing after the war begins. General Curtis LeMay told the committee: "I do not think any bomber will come out of the door after war starts."

We now have a strong strategic force, but its strength is declining relatively. The Soviet Union has on hand more modern fighting aircraft than we, and is producing more. It is able to turn a new designi nto an aircraft on hand quicker than we can. We do not have enough long-range jet bombers, and we have no program to rroduce enough.

Obviously strategic air power depends on bases. Our base structure is found inadequate both at home and abroad. It is not enough to enable us to maintain an alert status, or to disperse aircraft as essential for security. Our overseas base structure is deteriorating which aakes it all the more important to have adequate base structure on this continent. The report calls the existing deficiency on this continent increasingly dangerous.

Many or our research and development programs are duplicated, and even triplicated, and handicapped by dollar limitations. This has been the case in developing and producing guided missiles. Over-riding priority for ballistic missiles was delayed. Important scientific break - throughs have been retarded.

This is in contrast to Soviet progress in the same fields. " The Soviets", says the report, "exceed the United States in the rate of technilogical development, training facilities, in speed of prototype development, in training of scientists and engineers and in many other phases of aircraft production."

Our naval planning also is found deficient. We not only are found vulnerable to submarine attack on our shipping, but "particularly vulnerable to submarine missile attack on military and civilian targets within our heartland." One can conjure up inconceivable disasters from such a sentence. The report concludes that our vulnerability to sudden attack has increased and will continue to incrasee, and complainsthat an adequate warning system has not yet been developed.

These are the factors affecting all-out war. But the report points out that our defense planning has to deal with limited war too. Because we have vacillated between a policy of emphasizing and de-emphasizing limited war, we have now sufficiently prepared for both kinds of war. Consequently we do not have airlift capacity to assure mobility to the army and enable it to fulfill its overseas commitments. We are not planning an adequate airlift. The committee says that this country has the capacity to proudce and maintain its airpower and hence its security, without overburdening tax payers. Indeed it is better able to do so than the Soviet Union. But it says that the Defense Department has not used the capacity available . And it states flatly that " financial considerations have often been placed ahead of defense requirements."

The hour is late for the nation to be getting this information. Whether it has come too late will be shown by what is now done abut it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moemnt with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: It would appear that the United States should look to its defenses. One difficulty is that we have vascillated between emphasis on preparation for all - out war and preparation for war on a limited scale . It's an area where the layman is confused Benjamin Franklin warned of this predicament when he said, " He that pursues two horses at once does not catch one..and lets the other go."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Jan. 31, 1957

This is the news:

In California today, two aircraft... an F-89 jet ~~interceptor~~ Fighter, and a DC-7B transport... collided as they were flying over the San Fernando Valley. The transport went into a spin, then exploded. All four crewmen were killed. The flaming main section of the aircraft landed outside the junior high school at Pacoima (PAH-COY-MAH), near Van Nuys. The debris killed three boys playing in the schoolyard and injured more than 40 others. "They fell," a teacher said, "as though they were hit by a scythe." The radarman in the jet aircraft baled out, but had to be hospitalized because of burns. The body of the pilot was found in the wreckage of his plane in a nearby canypn. Both aircraft were on test flights. Visibility when they collided is said to have been perfect.

President Eisenhower today accepted the retirement of Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed. The retirement is effective February 25th. A Democrat, Reed was appointed to the court by President Roosevelt in 1938. In expressing his desire to resign, he pointed out that he had served 19 years... and that he was 72 years of age. Later, he told reporters, "The strain of close concentration on important cases no longer seems wise." The law entitles him to retire at full pay. Mr. Eisenhower praised the associate justice for his "long and splendid record in public service." If the President appoints a Republican to fill the vacancy, the Supreme Court would be composed of four Republicans and five Democrats. Immediate speculation as to a successor is centering around former Governor Dewey, the retiring Republican national chairman, Leonard Hall, and Attorney General Brownell.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to revise the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. He also requested legislation for granting asylum... in this country... to persons who flee from Communist tyranny. He said America's position of leadership demands this be done "in partnership with other nations of the free world." The President urged in his special message that Hungarian refugees already admitted on parole status be allowed the right of permanent residence. But he would have the legislation apply... not only to Hungarians... but to all who, in the future, may seek sanctuary here from oppression. Mr. Eisenhower called for revision of those provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act which, he said, either operate inequitably or are outmoded. He noted that the present quota system... based on national origins... was set up in 1924. The economic growth of the country since then, he said, "justifies" admitting an additional 65-thousand immigrants a year. And he proposed that unused immigration quotas be redistributed. This would permit additional immigration from the Southern European countries. The President also proposed... as he did last year... that fingerprinting of visitors to the United States be discontinued. Democratic Representative Walter, co-author of the present immigration law, took immediate exception to Mr. Eisenhower's proposals. They would allow, he said, for the admission of "over 200-thousand people annually in excess of the number of immigrants we receive at this time." Walter said the country doesn't have the educational facilities... or the housing... or the jobs... to accommodate them.

The new NATO commander, General Norstad, told a news conference in Washington today that Europe can be defended "only on the basis of the use of atomic weapons." Norstad said there is... in his opinion... a need for "rather broad distribution of atomic capabilities" in support of NATO forces. And this can be done, he said, without relinquishing American "ownership" of the atomic devices involved.

The Navy today announced the awarding of contracts to two companies for the construction of three new atomic subs. The Ingalls Shipbuilding Corporation of Mississippi will build two of the submarines at a total contract price of 41-million dollars. The Electric Boat Division of the General Dynamics Corporation will build the other submarine at a cost of 25-million, 800-thousand dollars.

General MacArthur has declined an invitation to testify on President Eisenhower's new Middle East program. MacArthur turned down the invitation to appear before the joint Senate armed services and foreign relations committee because, he said, of his "complete severance from governmental affairs for the past five years."

Secretary of State Dulles conferred for more than two hours today with King Saud of Saudi Arabia, on the Middle East problem. In the morning, Saud laid a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery.

In Egypt, President Nasser carried out his threat... and formally "Egyptianized" all foreign banks and insurance companies in the country. By "Egyptianized", Nasser means replacing officers of the companies with Egyptians. Two American firms are affected -- a branch of the First National City Bank of New York and the American Foreign Insurance Association.

The British Foreign Office said today that negotiations to scrap the Anglo-Jordan Treaty will start on Monday. The talks, it said, will be held in Amman. Under the treaty, Britain gave Jordan an annual subsidy of 30-million dollars. In return, the British were allowed to maintain bases in Jordan. Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria have promised to give Jordan 36-million dollars a year to make up for the loss of revenue from Britain.

~~Soviet Premier Bulganin... and Communist Party Boss Khrushchev... today accepted an invitation to visit Finland in the spring. The Finnish premier is currently on a goodwill visit in Moscow.~~

President Eisenhower has designated portions of Kentucky and West Virginia as "major disaster areas", as a result of floods which have caused 12 deaths and left thousands of persons homeless. Property damage is estimated in the millions of dollars.

Edward R. Murrow: January 31, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The stay in Washington of British Defense Minister Duncan Sandys has been almost startlingly quiet in contrast with the fanfare accompanying the visit of King Saud. That no doubt is natural. The treatment given an outsider whom we hope to enlist or influence in our favor would not be the same as for an established and invaluable ally with whom serious differences have developed.

Actually the talks with Mr. Sandys about a co-ordinated weapons program have gone well, and a communique about them is expected after a final conversation at the Pentagon tomorrow afternoon. But nothing could be more mistaken than to assume that because talks with the British have finally been possible on the ministerial level, the gap between American and British policy in the Middle East has closed. Both allies hope they will be closed. But it doesn't mix metaphors to point out that a gap is not something that can be swept under the rug.

Washington is hearing rumors of an early Eisenhower-MacMillan meeting in Bermuda, also of an Eisenhower-MacMillan-Mollet meeting also in Bermuda. But this is still in the rumor stage. And there are reasons to believe that British leaders consider it premature for Mr. MacMillan to meet the President before the British and Americans have agreed on an assessment of the Middle Eastern situation. They consider such a joint assessment vital. They know it will take time to achieve it, even months and possibly longer. But they think it would be futile for Mr. MacMillan and President Eisenhower to try to plan anything if they do not agree in advance on the nature of the crisis for which they are planning.

The British go back to the Berlin blockade for an analogy to the present crisis. They thought the Berlin blockade was the first Soviet step in an effort to take all Germany. Washington thought so too, hence joint measures could be taken to stop the Soviet Union. Now the British think the Suez situation is the first step to make the Soviet Union the master of the Middle East, which would put European and British economies at Russia's mercy. They believe there will be no international control of the canal. When traffic is restored they think the Russians will be able to turn it on or off just as they tried to do in Berlin.

In asking a joint assessment, the British will only be inflexible on two propositions. One is that Nasser already has rounded the bend and is a complete Soviet satellite. If this is admitted they are willing to make concessions toward any arrangement to deal with him. And the other is that they refuse to be part of a policy that says Nasser must stay. They are ready to drop their insistence that he must go, but that is as far as they will yield.

C.B.S. News in London reports an authoritative British review of the Suez crisis, that puts events in a somewhat different light from past interpretations. It now is denied that Soviet threats - to introduce volunteers in Egypt or use rockets against England - led Sir Anthony Eden to call off military operations. [~~After the Bulganin-Khrushchev visit in London last April they discounted altogether the Soviet threat of war. They were as much as told that the Russians would infiltrate as much as they could, but only to the edge of war. "Edgemanship" is the current phrase for it.~~]

What caused Eden's retreat was primarily the pressure of America. This took the form of a direct threat of oil sanctions, an implied threat that the United States would do nothing to support the pound sterling, and that it would even vote against an Export-Import bank loan. Secretary Humphrey is identified in London, as the man who made the threats.

The present British view is, that the first step to follow a joint assessment of the crisis, would be American military aid to the Bhagdad pact countries, especially Iran and Iraq. That would be meeting the Soviet menace where it could be met first. But London is afraid that Washington hesitates to give Nasser the label he deserves.

In the past fortnight Nasser was asked who would support his government in the future, and replied, the United States. When it was suggested that the United States might refuse, he said he would confiscate American property assets in Egypt, and then use this to persuade the Russians to support him. This colloquy was duly passed on to the United States.

It should be added that the British take little stock in the usefulness at this time of the United Nations. They feel that the present voting set-up prevents any decision being made on its merits. They feel that the future is up to the leadership of the United States. They will co-operate with it - want to co-operate with it - but not if the United States decides Nasser must be upheld at all cost. They think that chaos in Egypt would be preferable to Nasser, and whatever would follow his elimination would not be as Soviet-influenced as the Nasser regime.

Word for Today

The British would like to reach agreement with the United States on the Nature of the Problem, before their prime minister meets the President. An earlier meeting, they feel, would be premature. Thomas Fuller said... 300 years ago... "The wise baker doesn't set the loaf in till the oven's hot." That is what the British are saying today in different words.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1957
7:45 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

In California today, two aircraft...an F-89 jet fighter and a DC-7B transport...collided as they were flying over the San Fernando Valley. The transport went into a spin, then exploded. All four crewmen were killed. The flaming main section of the aircraft landed outside the junior high school at Pacoima, near Van Nuys. The debris killed three boys playing in the schoolyard and injured more than 40 others. "They fell," a teacher said, "as though they were hit by a scythe." The radarman in the jet aircraft baled out, but had to be hospitalized because of burns. The body of the pilot was found in the wreckage of his plane in a nearby canyon. Both aircraft were on test flights. Visibility when they collided is said to have been perfect.

President Eisenhower today accepted the retirement of Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed. The retirement is effective February 25th. A Democrat, Reed was appointed to the court by President Roosevelt in 1938. In expressing his desire to resign, he pointed out that he had served 19 years...and that he was 72 years of age. Later, he told reporters, "The strain of close concentration on important cases no longer seems wise." The law entitles him to retire at full pay. Mr. Eisenhower praised the associate justice for his "long and splended record in public service." If the President appoints a Republican to fill the vacancy,the Supreme Court would be composed of four Republicans and five Democrats. Immediate speculation as to a successor is centering around former Governor Dewey, the retiring Republican national chairman, Leonard Hall, and attorney General Brownell.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to revise the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. He also requested legislation for granting asylum,..in this country...to persons who flee from Communist tyranny. He said America's position of leadership demands this be done "in partnership with other nations of the free world." The President urged in his special message that Hungarian refugees already admitted on parole status be allowed the right of permanent residence. But he would have the legislation apply...not only to Hungarians...but to all who, in the future, may seek sanctuary here from oppression. Mr. Eisenhower called for revision of those provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act which, he said, either operate inequitably or are outmoded. He noted that the present quota system... based on national origins...was set up in 1924. The economic growth of the country since then, he said, "justifies" admitting an additional 65-thousand immigrants a year. And he proposed that unused immigration quotas be redistributed. This would pdrmit additional immigration from the Southern European countries. The President also proposed.,.as he did last year...that fingerprinting of visitors to the United States be discontinued. Democratic Representative Walter, co-author of the present immigration law, took immediate exception of Mr. Eisenhower's proposals. They would allow, he said, for the admission of "over 200-thousand people annually in excess of the number of immigrants we receive at this time." Walter said the country doesn't have the educational facilities...or the housing...or the jobs...to accommodate them.

The new NATO commander, General Norstad, told a news conference in Washington today that Europe can be defended "only on the basis of the use of atomic weapons." Norstad said there is...in his opinion...a need for "rather broad distribution of atomic capabilities" in support of NATO forces. And this can be done, he said, without relinquishing American "ownership" of the atomic devices involved.

The Navy today announced the awarding of contracts to two companies for the construction of three new atomic subs. The Ingalls Ship building Corporation of Mississippi will build two of the submarines at a total contract price of 41 million dollars. The Electric Boat Division of the General Dynamics Corporation will build the other submarine at a cost of 25-million, 800 thousand dollars.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred for more than two hours today with King Saud of Saudi Arabia, on the Middle East problem. In the morning, Saud laid a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery.

In Egypt, President Nasser carried out his threat..and formally "Egyptianized " all foreign banks and insurance companies in the country. By "Egyptianized" Nasser means replacing officers of the companies with Egyptians. Two American firms are affected -- A branch of the First National City Bank of New York and the American Foreign Insurance Association.

The British Foreign Office said today that negotiations to scrap the Anglo-Jordan Treaty will start on Monday. The talks , is said, will be held in Amman, Under the treaty, Britain gave Jordan an annual subsidy of 30-million dollars. In return, The British were allowed to maintiin bases in Jordan. Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria have promised to give Jordan 36-million dollars a year to make up the loss of revenue from Britain.

President Eisenhower has designated portions of Kentucky and West Virginia as "major disaster areas", as a result of floods which have caused 12 deaths and left thousands of persons homeless. Property damage is estimated in the millions of dollars.

The stay in Washington of British Defense Minister Duncan Sandys has been almost startingly quiet in contrast with the fanfare accompanying the visit of King Saud. That no doubt is natural. The treatment given an outsider whom we hope to enlist or influence in our favor would not be the same as for an established and invaluable ally with whom serious differences have developed.

Actually the talks with Mr. Sandys about a co-ordinated weapons program have gone well, and a communique about them is expected after a final conversation at the Pentagon tomorrow afternoon. But nothing could be more mistaken than to assume that because talks with the British have finally been possible on the ministerial level, the gap between American and British policy in the Middle East has closed. Both allies hope they will be closed. But it doesn't mix metaphors to point out that a gap is not something that can be swept under the rug.

Washington is hearing rumors of an early Eisenhower-Macmillan meeting in Bermuda, also of an Eisenhower - Macmillan Mollet meeting also in Bermuda. But this is still in the rumor stage. And there are reasons to believe that British leaders consider it premature for MacMillan to meet the President before the British and Americans have agreed on an assessment of the Middle Eastern situation. They consider such a joint assessment essential. They know it will take time to achieve it, even months and possible longer. But they think it would be futile. for Mr. MacMillan and President Eisenhower to try to plan anything if they do not agree in advance on the nature of the crisis for which they are planning.

The British go back to Berlin blockade for an anology to the present crisis. They thought the Berlin blockade was the first Soviet step in an effort to take all Germany. Washington thought so too, hence joint measures could be taken to stop the Soviet Union. Now the British think the Suez situation is the first step to make the Soviet Union the master of the Middle East, which would put European and British economies at Russia's mercy. They believe there will be no international control of the canal. When traffic is restored they think the Russians will be able to turn it on or off just as they tried ot do in Berlin.

In asking a joint assessment, the British will only be inflexible on two propositions. One is that Nasser already has rounded the bend and is a complete Soviet satellite. If this is admitted, they are willing to make concessions toward any arrangement to deal with him. And the other is that they refuse to be part of a policy that says Nasser must stay. They are ready to drop tehir insistence that he must go, but that is as far as they will yield.

C.B.S. News in London reports an authoritative British review of the Suez crisis that puts events in a somewhat different light from past interpretations. It now is denied that Soviet threats - to introduce volunteers in Egypt or use rockets against England - led Sir Anthony Eden to call off military operations.

What caused Eden's retreat was primarily the pressure of America. This took the form of a direct threat of oil sanctions, and implied threat that the United States would do nothing to support the pound sterling, and that it would even vote against an Export-Import bank loan. Secretary Humphrey is identified in London as the man who made the threats.

The present British view is that the first step to follow a joint assessment of the cirisi would be American military aid to the Bhagdad pact countries, especially Iran and Iraq. That would be meeting the Soviet menace where it could be met first. But London is afraid that Washington hesitates to give Nasser the label he deserves.

In the last fortnight Nasser was asked who would support his government in the future, and replied, the United States. When it was suggested that the United States might refuse, he said he would confiscate American property assets in Egypt, and then use this to persuade the Russians to support him. This colloquy was duly passed on to the United States.

It should be added that the British take little stock in the usefulness at this time of the United Nations. They feel that the present voting set up prevents any decision being made on its merits. They feel that the future is up to the leadership of the United States. They will co-operate with it - want to cooperate with it - but not if the United States decided Nasser must be upheld at all cost. They think that chaos in Egypt could be preferable to Nasser, and whatever would follow his elimination would not be as Soviet- influenced as the Nasser regime.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The British would like to reach agreement with the United States on the nature of the problem, before their prime minister meets the President. An earlier meeting, they feel, would be premature. Thomas Fuller said...300 years ago.."The wise baker doesn't set the loaf in till the oven's hot." That is what the British are saying today in different words.

Goodnight and good luck.